It’s really very easy. As long as we still have access to hormonal birth control, women can control the means of production as a bargaining position. I know, it’s not as good as having actual rights, but if conservatives are going to complain about falling birth rates, we may as well leverage the demand.'

Boys to Men: How male mentoring is changing the lives of boys

Matt · 5 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California's Boys to Men program currently operates in thirty schools in California and is expanding. Teachers and administrators have been very supportive of the program that began operating in 1996. Primarily relying on volunteers (adult mentors who must pass a criminal background check) and donations, the program does have some staff trainers who teach the adult male mentors listening and other skills. They even have a training session called "Reclaiming Your Teenage Fire." The trainings emphasize three main precepts — Listen, Accept, and Encourage.
...
Boys to Men concentrates on one hour weekly sessions at schools with teenage boys, and they also have three day retreats during non-school days that features camping, surfing, and other outdoor activities that reward skills. Leadership skills, for example, are rewarded with football games and fishing trips.

Peer group-activities are a hallmark of the program. With an emphasis on boys learning from themselves, teaching each other, and encouraging good habits and healthy emotions, boys learn to take ownership of themselves and be actively engaged with helping others.'

CN: Ministers criticize Université Laval job posting as excluding white men

Mastodon · 7 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several ministers in the Coalition Avenir Québec government expressed outrage on Wednesday at a job posting at Université Laval that they felt was extreme and even discriminatory because it excluded white men.

The posting in question, published by the university in September for a Canada Research Chair in the biology department, was first criticized by comedian and former Parti Québécois leadership candidate Guy Nantel on social media.

The posting said that only candidates who self-identify as women, Indigenous people, people with disabilities or visible minorities would be selected. “Université Laval can’t accept other types of candidate profiles while representation targets are not met, in accordance with the CRC program.”

“Encouraging the hiring or awarding of research funds for under-represented groups with equal qualifications, yes,” deputy premier Geneviève Guilbault said on her Facebook page. “But explicitly excluding competent people because they’re not part of a visible minority or they’re men is overblown for the Quebec government.”

Duckworth overstates specifics of gender pay gap study

Mastodon · 7 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'U.S. Sen. Tammy Duckworth claims the gender pay gap is bad for white women doing the same job as men and it's even worse for "women of color."

The Illinois Democrat in a recent tweet said it takes 2.5 months longer for white women to earn the same amount of money that men make in the same jobs in a year. She also said the gender pay gap is even worse for Black, Latina, Asian American and Native women.

...

Duckworth is not the first to make the mistake of over-hyping the specifics of Equal Pay Day.

Former U.S. President Barack Obama was rated Mostly False by PolitiFact when he said in 2012 that "women are paid 77 cents on the dollar for doing the same work as men." In 2014, he was found Mostly True after adjusting to say that "women make 77 cents for every dollar a man earns."'

The most disadvantaged group in Britain? White working-class men

Mastodon · 7 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm not sure what to think about the BBC's announcement that it wants a quarter of its staff to be from working-class backgrounds by 2027. On the one hand, I'm against hiring quotas of any kind and think every position should be filled by the person best qualified for the job. But on the other, if the BBC is going to have diversity targets – and fighting against them seems futile at this point – then this one seems better than most.

The rationale for this quota, according to the BBC, is it wants its staff to 'better reflect UK society', but I'm not sure it will achieve that. The problem lies in the way the BBC has defined 'working-class'.
...
No, if the BBC's aim is to diversify the political attitudes and cultural taste of its staff, it should go the whole hog and stipulate that only white British working-class applicants – defined by a combination of household income when they were growing up and their parents' education – are capable of meeting this target. They are the truly under-represented group among the BBC's staff, as they are in all the professions, not least because they're less likely to go to university than almost any other demographic. According to a report by the House of Commons Education Committee last year, the proportion of white British pupils eligible for free school meals participating in higher education by the age of 19 in 2018-19 was 16 per cent, the lowest of any ethnic group apart from travellers of Irish heritage and Gypsy/Roma.'

Mother says school did nothing over son being bullied, because not in 'protected class'

Mastodon · 7 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mother of an 8th grade boy in the Weber School District said she is not trying to stoke racial division, but she is tired of seeing her son being bullied at school, and feels school administrators are falling short of addressing it, because her son is not in a 'protected class.'

"He's been pushed, he's been kicked, he's been slammed against the wall," said Kim Byram. "He's had food thrown at him."

And just last week, according to Byram, five boys surrounded her son.

"He was shoved to the ground and called a fat, f---ing n-word," she said.

...

Byram, her husband and son met with administrators from Wahlquist Junior High and the Weber District, saying they were told in that meeting the district was limited in its response.

"It was basically (stated) he's not in a protected class," she said, asserting the district noted her son is white and privileged.'

Women Achieve Gains In STEM Fields

Mastodon · 8 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Based on data from the Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (IPEDS), women represented 45% of students majoring in STEM fields in 2020, up from 40% in 2010 and 34% in 1994.

IPEDS has tracked fall enrollment by major field of study and gender since 1994. The four STEM-related fields include engineering, biological sciences, mathematics and physical sciences.

The Research Science Institute (RSI), the most prestigious summer STEM program for high school students, reports that female students will outnumber male students for the first time in 2022, representing 55% of accepted U.S. students, up from 22% in 1984.

The trends in STEM enrollment fall short of overall college enrollment by gender, but women are catching up.

According to the National Center for Education Statistics, female students represented 58 percent of total undergraduate enrollment in fall 2020. According to the National Student Clearinghouse, 59.5% of college students were female as of spring 2021.'

Michael J Malone: Blaming men for so-called toxic masculinity is nothing more than lazy sexism

Mastodon · 8 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IT'S another day in social media land, and another day full of the use of the term toxic masculinity. A term that originated in the 1980s as a way to describe that part of the male psyche that is abusive has become so commonplace that many have come to view it as confirmation that masculinity itself is toxic.

Is this fair, or helpful? Or is it, dare I say the word, sexist?

Whatever it is, it's a poor attempt to explain bad male behaviour: that violent and sexist men are proof that masculinity itself is toxic – when in fact people working in the mental health field, as I do with clinical hypnotherapy, know that violence is usually rooted in trauma, not masculinity.'

Boys 'at Greater Risk' Than Girls of Falling Behind in School: Report

Mastodon · 8 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male students are "at greater risk" of falling behind in school or dropping out than female students in many countries around the globe, according to a United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) report released on Thursday.

Female students generally encounter more barriers to accessing education than male students, the report from the Paris-based UNESCO said. But male students "face increasing challenges" to completing their education, with poverty and child labor both serving as contributing factors in some regions that can pull boys off their educational paths.

Jeremy Booth, the director of communications at the nonprofit Childhood Education International (CEI), told Newsweek there have "rightfully" been increased efforts over the last several years to provide greater access to education for female students.'

$1M donation aims to grow Girls STEM Pathway program at Space Center Houston

Mastodon · 8 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Space Center Houston received a boost for its STEM program that the donor hopes will help shrink the gender gap.

Space Center Houston offers a number of programs to get kids excited about science, technology, engineering, and math, also known as STEM.

The Girls STEM Pathway program at Space Center Houston was on full display Wednesday, which gave about 30 students from Bayside Intermediate a hands-on feel for what working in a STEM career could be like.
...
One place where girls learn about STEM got a boost Wednesday. Dhaval Jadav donated $1 million to Space Center Houston. The majority of workers the Alliantgroup co-founder employs are women. A big reason why he donated was to help get more females into STEM.

"Females are just better," Jadav said. "Us men, we have egos, we want to win. Females are always looking at solutions."'

Yale students to gain access to anonymous sexual assault reporting service

Mastodon · 8 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All Yale students will gain access to a new anonymous sexual assault reporting system on April 14 following years of advocacy from student group Yale Law Women.

The service, Callisto, is a third-party organization which uses encrypted technology to allow people to identify others harmed by the same perpetrator and to come forward together. Any student can access the network with their Yale email. With the system, people can detail any incident they wish to report, learn if others have had a similar experience with the same offender and explore a range of options for next steps. The platform is entirely private; Yale University staff and Callisto workers will not have access to the submissions.
...
The two student groups also requested that the University alert claimants if there are multiple accusations against the person they are accusing. Their report argued that Yale needed a technology that allows people to make anonymous, sealed allegations and be alerted if another person accuses the same offender. Students may be more likely to speak out against a professor if they know others had a similar experience, the report reads.'

Bay City Woman Charged After False Rape Report

Mastodon · 8 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Woman from Bay City has received probation after lying to police and falsely accusing a man of rape.

24-year-old Emily Larner was originally charged with a False-report felony, which was reduced to 6 months probation after her guilty plea.

In June of 2020, police in Bay City responded to the area of South Jefferson and 18th streets after Larner called 911 to report she had been kicked out of he mother's house.

Larner told officers she had been in a fight with her mother, was walking around outside without shoes, and needed a ride to male friend's house.

She went on to say she and the man laid in bed, where investigators learned the two had consensual sex.

The man asked her to leave after learning she had willingly given him an STI.

Larner confessed to police that she was not raped and that the allegation was made because she was scared by the prospect of the man calling the police on her.'

Florida Fights Fatherlessness 2022 - Is Your State Next?

Matt · 9 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Florida has passed two bills that will help bring fathers back into the home and push for shared parenting. Both are directly connected to many of our societal woes. Warren Farrell offers an op-ed applauding the legislation and giving a succinct and powerful summation of the difficulties we face without fathers in the home and the benefits and blessings when dad is there. Fatherlessness is our number 1 problem.

Meeting The Enemy: A feminist comes to terms with the Men's Rights movement

Matt · 9 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

By facing long-held assumptions, one woman reevaluates her own gender biases. Documentary Filmmaker, The Red Pill

Cassie Jaye founded Jaye Bird Productions in 2008, which has since produced a collection of documentary films that have been praised for being thought-provoking, entertaining and respectful in representing multiple competing views within each film. Jaye is known for tackling complex and often controversial subject matters. Her latest film is The Red Pill. Prior to “The Red Pill”, Jaye’s most notable films were the award winning feature documentaries “Daddy I Do” (which examined the Abstinence-Only Movement versus Comprehensive Sex Education) and “The Right to Love: An American Family” (which followed one family’s activism fighting for same-sex marriage rights in California). Both films showed that Jaye’s interview style is to allow people to share their views honestly, openly and candidly while allowing audiences to come to their own conclusions.

What 7 experts want included in Biden's new Title IX regulation

Mastodon · 9 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One provision that I would like to see is to only require schools to provide notice to an accused perpetrator upon bringing sexual misconduct charges rather than upon a mere formal complaint being filed, as currently required by the Trump-era rules.

The current Title IX rules not only give notice to an accused student before an investigation begins, which is not best practice for sexual offenses, but also give the accused an opportunity to prepare a defense days before ever being questioned. There is already a risk of retaliation against victims upon making a report and there are many offenders willing to engage in evidence destruction and witness tampering to avoid accountability out there, so the current Title IX rule has been damaging to schools' ability to meaningfully investigate and protect survivors on campus.'

Why Canadian universities are blocking able-bodied white men from some positions

Mastodon · 9 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People should not be barred from jobs because of their skin colour, or their gender. We call that “discrimination” — and it’s generally considered a bad thing. It’s also bad that universities across Canada are refusing to hire white men for various research positions, simply because they’re white, male and don’t claim to have any disabilities.
...
I wish I was exaggerating. Being not white, male or able-bodied was a requirement for the University of British Columbia’s 2022 research chair job postings in food science and quantum computing. A mathematics department job posting for a research chair in computational cell biology specifically says that the “selection will be restricted to members of the following designated groups: women, visible minorities (members of groups that are racially categorized), persons with disabilities and Indigenous peoples.”'

Five Million Men Are Still Missing From the U.S. Workforce

Mastodon · 11 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After the wild ride of the past two years, employment among Americans in their prime working years, usually defined as age 25 through 54, is edging close to where it was before the pandemic. But for prime-age men—an estimated 86.1% of whom had jobs in March, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, vs. 86.5% in February 2020—that's still quite low by historical standards. In the 1950s and '60s, the prime-age male employment rate averaged 93.8%. If it were that high today, 4.9 million more men would have jobs.

About three-quarters of today's nonemployed prime-age men are not in the labor force—that is, they're not actively looking for work. Some are in school and others taking care of kids, but most appear to be missing from the labor force for less benign reasons that researchers put a lot of effort into understanding in the 2010s. Explanations fell into three main baskets: First, there are fewer job opportunities for the less educated, and for the growing numbers of formerly incarcerated men (those still behind bars aren't counted in labor statistics). Second, health problems, including the opioid epidemic, have taken a toll. Finally, men may have less interest in work, for proposed reasons ranging from changing marriage prospects to increased reliance on disability insurance and other government programs to the improved quality of video games.'

How To Attract Men Into ‘Pink Collar’ Jobs

Mastodon · 11 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While discussions around discrimination often, and rightly, focus on groups with a long history of poor treatment in the workplace, research from the University of Oslo highlights that men can suffer from discrimination in the workplace too, especially when they're applying for roles in female-dominated occupations.
...
"If men applied for typical 'female' jobs, they were significantly less likely to be invited for an interview or asked to provide further information about themselves," the researchers explain. "If male-dominated occupations related to the industrial society keep vanishing, and gender-neutral occupations are growing in size, then we would expect gender stereotypes to become less important over time."'

Gov. DeSantis signs bill addressing 'fatherhood crisis'

Matt · 12 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As state leaders take on what they are calling a “fatherhood crisis” in Florida, Gov. Ron DeSantis on Monday signed a bill that will provide about $70 million to bolster programs aimed at equipping dads with parenting resources and helping foster youth.

The measure (HB 7065) received bipartisan support during the 2022 legislative session, passing unanimously in the House and Senate.

...

DeSantis said the measure will have “huge ramifications” for helping young Floridians reach their potential.

“If you look over the last many decades, one of the worst social trends has been the decline of fatherhood. And we do have, in many instances, a fatherhood crisis in this country. The fact of the matter is when you take kids who do not have a father present during their upbringing, the chance of them dropping out of school, getting involved in trouble with the law, having other difficulties, increases dramatically,” DeSantis, the father of three young children, said during a press conference in Tampa on Monday.'

WNBA Players Union President Says Gender Pay Gap Helped Lead To Brittney Griner's Arrest

Mastodon · 12 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ogwumike and Roberts talked about how problems of gender inequality helped to land Griner in her current situation.

"It's disappointing that the question of it being a gender issue is top of mind now, when it comes to this type of circumstance," she said. "The reality is, she's over there because of a gender issue — pay inequity."

The highest-paid player in the WNBA earns $228,000 a year, while some top NBA players make more than $1 million, according to ABC News.

It's not unheard of for WNBA players to travel overseas during the offseason to earn some extra money. "We go over there to supplement our incomes," said Ogwumike, who herself previously played in Russia for four years, China for two years and Poland for one.'

Women’s Scholarships And Awards Eliminated To Be Fair To Men

Mastodon · 15 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women’s scholarships, leadership programs, awards and even gym hours are being eliminated or canceled by universities because they discriminate against men. Complaints are being filed with the Department of Education (DOE) about programs and funding for women at universities across the country, and the DOE is taking action. One of the latest targets is the Marilyn C. Davis scholarship at the University of California, Santa Cruz (UCSC).
...

Eliminating a women’s program, award or scholarship isn’t the only solution for a university facing a Title IX complaint. Instead, the university can offer a similar program for men. Perry explains, “At Eastern Michigan University, they had a Digital Divas program for high school girls interested in computer science. And so I challenged that program as a violation of Title IX, and they started a Digital Dudes program. Then they had one for boys and one for girls.” Another alternative for maintaining girls’ STEM summer camps at universities is allowing boys to participate in the same program alongside the girls.
...
Last year, Biden signed an executive order stating, “It is the policy of my Administration that all students should be guaranteed an educational environment free from discrimination on the basis of sex.” It’s unlikely he was referring to eliminating scholarships and awards for women, but that seems to be an unintended effect of enforcing these codes.'

U.K. shouldn't pair female Ukrainian refugees with lone male hosts, the U.N. says

Mastodon · 15 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.N.'s refugee agency is raising concerns about the United Kingdom's Homes for Ukraine program, in which anyone can apply to host a refugee for a period of at least six months.

Citing "increasing reports of Ukrainian women feeling at risk from their sponsors," the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees is urging U.K. officials to refine the application and matching process.
...
"UNHCR believes that a more appropriate matching process could be put in place by ensuring that women and women with children are matched with families or couples, rather than with single men," the agency said in a Wednesday statement. "Matching done without the appropriate oversight may lead to increasing the risks women may face, in addition to the trauma of displacement, family separation and violence already experienced."'

UK: Teenage boys should be taught about incel culture, teachers say

Mastodon · 16 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A study in October 2021, suggested that there was a 6.3 per cent chance of being suggested an incel-related video by YouTube within five 'hops' of a non-incel related video,' she said on Saturday.

'Given the amount of time our young people spend on social media, this is 6.3 per cent too much.

'Clearly this shows the dangers of failing to support and improve the mental wellbeing of boys within schools.

'Language and stereotyping attitudes such as 'cry like a girl' or 'fight like a boy' means that boys as well as girls still struggle to express their own difficulties with their mental wellbeing or feel like they need to suffer in silence.'

The motion calls for Nasuwt to lobby government to make misogyny a hate crime and also calls for more mental health support for boys in schools.'

UK: Manet masterpiece given 'Misogyny' alert over 'male gaze'

Mastodon · 16 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Courtauld Gallery has been criticised for introducing a 'woke' new label on a Manet masterpiece to warn viewers of the 'unsettling' presence of a man.

The London gallery, which holds the UK's most prestigious collection of Impressionist paintings, reviewed its labelling as part of a £57million refurbishment.

Édouard Manet's 1882 work A Bar at the Folies-Bergère is one of the paintings that has received a new label.

The work depicts a barmaid at the famous Parisian cabaret club staring at the viewer and a male customer who can be seen in a mirrored image behind her.

The new information panel both in the gallery and online states that the female subject's 'enigmatic expression is unsettling, especially as she appears to be interacting with a male customer'.

Speaking to The Telegraph, art historian Ruth Millington branded the interpretation a 'woke attempt to call out misogyny' which 'unwittingly centres the male gaze' by shifting the viewer's attention to the man.'

How Do Women and Girls Experience the Worst of War?

Mastodon · 16 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'War, conflict, and crises introduce women and girls to a very real fear: that their safety and human rights will be the last priority amid the violence. The current war in Ukraine is widely expected to hurt women and girls more than any other population, both in the short and long term.

This is because the same has been true of almost all wars and conflicts in history; it is also something we've seen in violence that is currently ongoing in other parts of the world such as the Sahel, Tigray, and Afghanistan.

Simply because of their gender, women and girls caught in the middle of war experience sexual violence, physical and verbal abuse, and barriers in accessing resources and having their human rights met; this is of course all on top of being directly exposed to conflict on the front lines and facing life-threatening conditions.'

‘Decisive steps’ needed to keep boys in school – UNESCO report

Mastodon · 16 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leave no child behind: Global report on boys’ disengagement from education, sheds light on the factors driving boys’ disengagement from the classroom.

The report highlights a global phenomenon: Harsh discipline, corporal punishment, and other forms of violence at school; gendered norms and expectations; and other factors, are preventing boys from achieving academically, while increasing absenteeism and dropouts.'

NY teacher performs sex act on Zoom call, is fired, but re-appears in school

Mastodon · 16 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents and students at Manhattan's Columbia Secondary School for Math, Science, and Engineering were in shock to see the return of a Spanish teacher who was resigned from the school for 'sucking a man's nipple' during a Zoom lesson.

Amanda Fletcher, 38, was kicked out of the elite school in October 2020 after the New York City Department of Education officials found she 'engaged in an inappropriate sex act' while instructing her class over Zoom.

During the Zoom call, Fletcher 'appeared to suck the nipple of an unidentified topless male' while 'gyrating' or 'rocking back and forth,' the New York Post reported.

Fletcher, a tenured teacher, had appealed the decision and DOE officials said she had been reassigned to a 'district office' following her exit from the school.

While Fletcher settled misconduct charges by agreeing to 'irrevocably resign' on July 1, 2022, she reappeared at the school on March 7, startling students and parents alike.'

Email Regarding Student Use of ‘Internal Lists’ Sparks Dialogue on Forms of Accountability and Safety Surrounding Sexual Violence

Mastodon · 16 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Student discourse around formal and informal mechanisms of accountability for sexual violence on campus escalated after Dean McLoughlin’s March 23 email to the student body on “internal lists” which he said are “being used to deny benefits of membership, entry or participation in activities or events, and to isolate and hold the listed students accountable without a fair and impartial judicial process.” Discussion in response to the communication from McLoughlin — Colgate’s Vice President and Dean of the College — sparked a multitude of emotions from students who feel informal student accountability provides a survivor-centric form of justice the school’s official procedures lack, though many pointed out the potential and actual harms of the use of these internal lists.

In an interview with the Maroon-News, McLoughlin defined “internal lists” as ones “either curated, managed, disseminated or used for an individual student,” further noting their origin as a means to combat or limit sexual assault and violence on campus in specific spaces. Additionally, he stated that his email was not a product of one “precipitating event,” but rather due to the frequency and prevalence of reports made by students and administrative deans regarding the use – or misuse – of these lists.'

Harry Styles brought out Shania Twain at Coachella and said she taught him that 'men are trash'

Matt · 17 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Before the latter song, Styles praised Twain for teaching him "how to sing" as a child, and thanked the country-pop star for giving him special memories with his mother.
...
He also said Twain taught him that "men are trash," a phrase that promptly began trending on Twitter.

In response, Twain said she felt "a bit starstruck" by Styles, adding, "It's kind of a dream, and very surreal, to be sitting here right now singing this song with you. I think I'm just in love."'

Johnny Depp, Men's Rights Hero

Mastodon · 20 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But for large swaths of the manosphere, the Depp trial isn't merely a fascinating look into the complicated nature of domestic violence and volatile relationships. Instead, many observers who are obsessed with the loss of "men's rights" and blame feminism for worsening their lives are portraying Depp's fight as an existential moment for men as a whole. In their eyes, Depp isn't merely a target of assumptions and false narratives — he is the vanguard in the war against women who hate men and pretend to be victims.

In that way, Depp is being weaponized by the manosphere, most notably by "men's rights activists," in order to paint a picture of how American society chooses to "believe women" even when they're liars. His trial fits neatly into a tapestry of claims that men are under attack, woven alongside clumsy narratives about false rape accusations and mothers lying to block children from their fathers. No wonder there's an energized web of right-wing YouTubers, influencers and social media posters who are following the trial live, leveraging the drama for clout while proselytizing on the injustice of mass misandry in the post-#MeToo age.'

Allegations Must Be Verified Before Outrage

Mastodon · 20 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Like many students at Wooster, I too spend (probably unhealthily) more than a small amount of time on Yik Yak messaging boards. And usually, it's harmless – albeit not always positive – content. However, over the last few months, I have noticed a disturbing trend that has been the topic du jour of Wooster Yik Yak: discussing apparent sexual assault allegations against Wooster students, even going so far as to name names and make statements such as "[…]don't forget [name] is also a sexual assaulter.", "Name drop all assaulters!! Bully them off campus!!", "[A]ctually bullying is okay if it's aimed towards sexual assaulters!" and "Put a sticky note with some unique marking, and stick them on every abuser's door that you know."

And these accusations come with absolutely no statements of proof, seeming completely unverified. Some students claim that a Title IX claim against a student is proof of guilt. Let me be clear: although a student may even have a Title IX claim against them, this does not mean that they are automatically guilty; almost all allegations of this nature constitute one person's word against another's. This apparently common practice of explicitly stating names and advocating for direct, possibly belligerent, action to be taken in response to these accusations, is a blight on how assertions of this magnitude ought to be treated, and how the student body should act while these claims are outstanding.

Clemson student awarded $5.3 million in defamation lawsuit

Mastodon · 20 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Defendants have filed a post-trial brief in a recent $5.3 million verdict in a defamation and civil conspiracy suit filed by a former Clemson University student who was accused of sexual misconduct in 2015.

Following a trial in late March, Andrew Pampu was awarded $5.3 million in damages against former Clemson students Erin Wingo, Colin Gahagan and Erin Wingo's father, David Wingo, according to a press release from Warshaw Burstein LLP, the law firm that handled Pampu's case.

The week-long trial included 10 witnesses disputing Erin Wingo's claim that she was too intoxicated to consent to sex, according to the news release.

Erin Wingo was ordered to pay $700,000 in actual damages and $450,000 in punitive damages, David Wingo ordered to pay $230,000 in actual damages and Gahagan to pay $700,000 in actual damages and $220,000 in punitive damages for defamation. For civil conspiracy, Erin Wingo was ordered to pay $2,000,000, while Gahagan was ordered to pay $1,000,000 in actual damages, according to Pampu's attorney, Kimberly C. Lau.'

Women-only free food distribution set for May 19 in Aurora

Mastodon · 22 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Aurora Area Interfaith Food Pantry will distribute food and household products to women only on Thursday, May 19, from 2 to 3 p.m. at Vineyard Aurora Church, 505 E. Galena Blvd. in Aurora. Admission and parking are free. Identification and registration are not required.

Food items, diapers, formula, baby food and feminine hygiene products are among items to be distributed.

A drive-through pop-up pantry open to all is scheduled for Saturday, May 7, from 10 a.m. to noon at Restoration Church, 1460 W. Indian Trail Road in Aurora.'

Twitch accused of double standards for allowing sexist stream titles against men

Mastodon · 22 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amazon-owned Twitch is the world's top streaming site, but often finds itself in controversy. From DMCA issues, mysterious indefinite bans, and waves of hate raids, the platform is no stranger to drama.

In recent years, Twitch has made an effort to decrease harassment, enforced strict policies about what its content creators can say on and off the site, and has implemented filters to combat abuse.

However, it seems that in an effort to prevent hate speech, the site is being accused of sexism for censoring negative comments about women while allowing the same phrase about men.'

UK: Teachers vote to press Government for compulsory lessons about sexism

Mastodon · 22 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teachers have debated how to tackle the growing problem of “incel” culture in schools, as seven in 10 said they have experienced misogyny at work.

At the NASUWT teaching union’s annual conference in Birmingham, teachers voted to lobby the Government to recognise misogyny as a hate crime, and for it to be compulsory for schools to teach pupils about sexism.

The motion originally called for the union to consider the incel movement – which stands for “involuntary celibate”, whose followers promote hatred of women online – to be recognised as an extremist group.'

Scotland: Proposals for new Bill to tackle misogyny

Mastodon · 22 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Plans for future legislation are part of the Scottish Government's official response to the independent working group on misogyny.

A new Bill to tackle misogyny is being considered by Scottish Ministers as part of these proposals.

Chaired by Baroness Kennedy QC, the group's report recommended a number of new offences to criminalise specific forms of misogynistic conduct – including stirring up hatred against women and public sexual harassment of women.

The Scottish Government has accepted the recommendations are pivotal in challenging misogyny and will develop draft legislative provisions for public consultation.

The timing of a final Bill will be considered as part of the Scottish Government's future legislative programme.

Cabinet Secretary for Justice and Veterans Keith Brown said:

"The independent report rightly recognises the need to address misogyny and makes a compelling case for creating new laws to tackle this unacceptable conduct.'

David Mamet slammed over claim that many male teachers are ‘inclined’ to be pedophiles

Mastodon · 22 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'David Mamet found himself in hot water after claiming that many male teachers are “inclined” to be pedophiles.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright’s hot take has prompted widespread criticism as he declared that “we have to take back control.”

Speaking on Fox News Sunday, Mamet gave his two cents on the subject of community control of education, after Florida passed a so-called “Don’t Say Gay” bill, which bans sexual orientation or gender from being taught to children under 10.

“We have to take back control,” Mamet said. “If there’s no community control of the schools, what we have is kids being not only indoctrinated but groomed in a very real sense by people who are, whether they know it or not, sexual predators.

“Are they abusing the kids physically? No, I don’t think so. But they’re abusing them mentally and using sex to do so,” he added.

“This has always been the problem with education – teachers are inclined, typically men because men are predators, to pedophilia,” the 74-year-old said.'

A members-only club for female executives is coming to San Francisco with the help of Google's cash

Mastodon · 24 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As companies see a record number of women leaving their jobs in "the Great Resignation," Google parent Alphabet is putting money behind an initiative that could help them stay.

Launched in 2019, Chief is a membership-based company for female executives that's designed to provide meetups with curated groups of peers, mentorship and fireside chats with people like former first lady Michelle Obama.
...
Chief expanded nationally at the beginning of the year. There are some 60,000 women on the waitlist, but Childers and Kaplan say they should be able to start vetting applicants more quickly now that the company has more money to hire people and build out the technology.'

Women praise first ‘strictly no men allowed’ nightclub to come to Dublin

Mastodon · 24 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first “strictly no men allowed” nightclub is on its way to Dublin.

Lick Events have successfully hosted a “girls only” night for years as a way to provide a safe space for women and transgender people to drink, dance and have a good time with their gal pals.

The organiser started the event because she had a bad experience with men “grabbing me or being inappropriate” and she just “got sick of it”.'

What Is Toxic Femininity? Twitter Accused the Kardashians and Amber Heard

Mastodon · 24 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although toxic masculinity remains a hot topic, Amber Heard and The Kardashians' alleged acts have caused more and more discussions surrounding toxic femininity. But what exactly does the term mean?

VeryWellMind defines toxic femininity as "any thoughts, actions, or behaviors by women that benefit or defer to others, usually males, at the expense of a woman's independence, agency, full range of emotions, and emotional and mental well-being."

However, the term has broadened over the years. Toxic femininity also suggests that women who are guilty of it are potentially looking out for themselves over other women.'

Canadian college's tenure track position open only for 'women, transgender, non-binary, or two-spirit' people

Mastodon · 25 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Waterloo announced an opening for a tenure track position last month that is only available to "qualified individuals who self-identify as women, transgender, non-binary, or two-spirit."

The university's Faculty of Environment is seeking applicants with experience in geography, earth science, environmental science, or sustainability to join as the Natural Science and Engineering Research Council Tier 2 Canada Research Chair.

Applicants are asked to fill out a self-identification form to ensure that they fall into one of the four categories that the job is open for, in order to "address the underrepresentation of individuals from equity deserving groups among our Canada Research Chairs."'

Google Makes Push for 'Inclusive Language' With Writing Feature

Mastodon · 25 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Google is making a push for "inclusive language" with a new writing feature that is designed to guide users away from words it considers politically incorrect.

Introduced this month, Google Docs users will encounter a pop-up warning if they type in words or phrases deemed noninclusive, such as "landlord," "mankind," "policeman," or "housewife," the New York Post reports.

Users will be informed that their word selections "may not be inclusive to all readers" and will be directed to more inclusive suggestions.'

UK: Taxpayers' money 'spent decolonising museums' because history written by 'white men'

Mastodon · 25 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Millions of pounds have been given by Arts Council England to advisory body Museum Development England, according to The Telegraph, with help needed with "equality and inclusion".

Guidance given by Museum Development to attraction bosses is said to show there can be "racist narratives" and "implicit racism" in museums because the history they cover has been mainly written by "white men".

The material was reportedly shared as part of new equity and inclusion training programme for managers.

The guidance says: "History is written by the winners and in Europe and the British Empire, the winners tend to have been white, wealthy, able-bodied men.

"There is a call to 'decolonise' museums to address their implicit racism (and sexism and ableism).'

Enrollment plummets at Washington’s colleges, especially among men

Mastodon · 25 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Community and technical colleges experienced a combined 24% drop between fall 2019 and fall 2021. Public four-year institutions saw a collective drop in undergraduates of nearly 7% during that time period, with some schools’ losses double or even triple that. Roughly 60,000 fewer students, in all, enrolled.

What happened, of course, was COVID-19, though education leaders are still untangling the reasons the pandemic kept students away. As colleges scramble for ways to boost their numbers, they are facing hard truths about higher education in this state — namely, lukewarm enthusiasm and a gender gap that has women outnumbering men at virtually every institution. At Lower Columbia College in Longview, for instance, the share of male students fell from 31% to 28% during the first year of the pandemic.'

'Get rid of toxic masculinity out of policing': New Bellevue police chief recruits women, numbers are up

Mastodon · 26 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Bellevue Chief's blunt talk of police problems includes a phrase not many men utter.

"We've got to get rid of this toxic masculinity out of policing," Clary said.

Toxic masculinity came to mind when he heard departments would not hire women over fears sexual harassment claims would go up.

"Masculinity is one piece of the puzzle but in policing I would argue, historically, it's been-- allowed to take too much of the space," said Clary.'

Twitter exec suggests Elon Musk, other critics are misogynists

Mastodon · 27 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A top Twitter executive has suggested that many of the platform's critics — including soon-to-be owner Elon Musk, who ripped the firm's top female lawyer over her censorship of the New York Post — are merely misogynists.

Lara Cohen, Twitter's global head of partners, went on the attack hours after Musk singled out the site's lead lawyer, Vijaya Gadde, over what he called the "obviously incredibly inappropriate" ban of The Post's exclusive reporting on Hunter Biden's shady business dealings.

She also shared messages of support for Leslie Berland, the company's chief marketing officer who was caught in leaked audio suggesting that Musk's plans for free speech put them in "a very difficult position."'

Biden’s Disinformation Chief Nina Jankowicz: Online Mockery of Kamala Harris a Threat to Democracy and National Security

Mastodon · 29 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“Platforms and governments aren’t doing enough,” she wrote on social media. “It’s time to act. Our national security and democracy are at stake.”

Jankowicz argued that Congress should create new laws to block mockery of women online, citing the volume of “gender disinformation” used to criticize Harris.

“Congress should reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) and include provisions against online gender-based harassment,” Jankowicz wrote in a WIRED article highlighting the “abusive content” sent on social media to women in public life.'

Johnny Depp Deserves an Apology: The Missing Equality Between Men's and Women's Allegations of Abuse

Mastodon · 29 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amber Heard is the poster child of court misogyny. Her allegations of domestic abuse towards Johnny Depp, which he countered with abusive records and allegations of his own, cumulated in a lawsuit from each of them against the other. As Johnny Depp v. Amber Heard progresses in court, the media coverage of the events discussed by both parties reveal a troubling picture of what it means to be a battered man in America, evident in both the public's reaction and Heard's own flippancy.

When Heard first released her assault accusations, the public burst into outrage (and rightfully so: no woman should have to tolerate abuse from a partner, and there was not yet evidence to discredit her). She was asked to endorse and speak at women's empowerment events and was hailed as a brave survivor coming forward to share her truth. Johnny Depp suffered an inverse fate—he lost his role in the Fantastic Beasts series, was assailed on social media, and grew into a pariah among his Hollywood counterparts, who were quick to cut their association with him. As his side of the story surfaced, painting Heard as the abuser, Depp was still held at arm's length by his contemporaries while Heard was celebrated for her courage. Very few of his associates publicly announced support for him in the same manner that occurred for his former partner. The lack of enthusiasm to entertain Depp's perspective from the beginning highlights a glaring issue in how the public views perpetrators and victims: that women can be victims without further interrogation, but men who speak up should be questioned.'

Biden Disinformation Chief Nina Jankowicz Sang About Sex Fantasy with Dead Harry Potter

Mastodon · 30 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jankowicz, the radical left-winger heading up the Department of Homeland Security's Disinformation Governance Board, or "Ministry of Truth," was apparently a huge Harry Potter fan — enough to create a band with her friend Lauren Fairweather in the 2000s. According to Spotify, the albums came out in 2007 and 2008, meaning Jankowicz was presumably 18 when the first album dropped.

Videos have begun to circulate on social media, purportedly featuring the voice of Jankowicz and her bandmate belting out questionable lyrics. However, a brief search on the music streaming platform on Spotify shows a variety of releases from the duo, with lyrics featuring the two singing out fantasies including dead child sex with Harry Potter and secretly catching "peep shows" in bathrooms.

In one such tune, titled, "Prefects Are Hot," the duo makes it clear that they call her "Moaning Myrtle" — the ghost girl haunting the lavatory — "for a reason," continuing to sing about spying on naked children in bathrooms, as "bathrooms are great places for peep shows."'

Not OK: Average man rates his mental health just 6 out of 10, feels down 3 times a week

Matt · 30 April 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Millions of men may be putting up a brave front, but they're not doing as well as you may think. A new survey finds the average man feels down three times a week. The poll of 2,000 men also finds the average respondent only rates their mental health a six out of 10.

However, those as young as 18 say it's closer to five out of 10.

Dealing with a physical health condition (26%), poor eating habits (20%), and pressures at work (20%) are among the reasons men say they're struggling with their mental well-being over the last 12 months. Others claim not being in a relationship, lifestyle changes such as the breakdown of a marriage, and scrolling through social media can affect their general well-being as well.'

UK: Woman avoids jail for 'wicked' false rape claim against innocent man

Mastodon · 1 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Bangor woman who made a "wicked" false claim that she'd been raped in a shopping centre avoided an immediate jail term.

Chantelle Clarke, from Pinehill Road, appeared at Downpatrick Crown Court sitting in Belfast, where she was handed a 12-month prison sentence which was suspended for two years.

It emerged the man she claimed raped her in the toilets of the Flagship Shopping Centre in Bangor had "suffered dreadfully" as a result of her lies - including having to move house.

A barrister for 22-year old Clarke said she had expressed remorse for the consequences of her actions and the impact it had has on the man she falsely accused.'

White male athletes should kneel for abortion rights — it's not like they'd get blackballed

Mastodon · 5 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If men can drop to one knee to propose to a woman, white male athletes that claim to care about women's rights shouldn't have a problem doing it again for abortion rights.

According to Politico, for the first time in which anyone can remember, a draft decision from the Supreme Court has been leaked, as the court that Trump and his hateful followers packed while he was in office (one seat stolen I might add) is reportedly set to overturn Roe v. Wade, sending a woman's right to choose back to the states. Despite the Orgasm Gap, men in this country love trying to control and govern women's bodies, as if the statistics haven't already proven that so many of them don't know what to do with a woman's body.

Every time something bad happens to women in this country, the most powerful group of individuals — who it seems like never have to face the consequences of their actions — go to their canned responses in situations like this.
...
But, in a country in which sports have been intertwined with politics and culture for decades, the white male athlete is a member of society that can reach levels of success that are often above reproach — making them unfireable. There's a reason why top-flight white quarterbacks, hockey, baseball, and college basketball players can reach a certain level of celebrity and fame that's only allowed for them. This is why we should be challenging them to kneel for abortion rights. Because, as they love to tell us, they have mothers, wives, and daughters, too.'

“Kill All Men”: Modern Feminism and its Current Rhetoric

Mastodon · 7 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There’s still so much to be done, but if we zeroed in on modern feminism, there’s almost a willful ignorance of real world issues: men suck, and women are awesome. For decades now, modern feminism has climbed higher and higher into its own ivory tower. Mini-movements like #killallmen, rejecting masculinity, and misandry have come to represent the face of modern feminism, and all the momentum for real gender progress has been lost.

The momentum of feminism has fizzled out, as it only appeals to women; but how will radicalizing women about their oppression change anything, if the world is still a man’s world?

Most women understand the irony behind #killallmen. They understand it is a satirical statement, a witty reference to the long standing history of femicide and an expression of their annoyance with the inescapable patriarchal system. But this is easily misinterpreted. More and more, modern feminism is being met with backlash from “men’s rights” groups, who believe that misandry is consuming popular culture. By championing movements like #killallmen, feminism alienates men, limiting itself from any further expansion.'

Military Drafts Loom Over Europe Thanks to Russia

Matt · 7 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Europe's first war between more-or-less peer powers in over 70 years upsets a lot of assumptions. Not least of them is the belief, or maybe just hope, that the brief and pleasant interlude of relative peace among powerful nations was here to stay. In broad terms, as I've written elsewhere, much of the world is back on a war footing, expanding military budgets and cementing defensive alliances. But renewed fears also offer governments that fear international dangers or just want an excuse to regiment their societies an opportunity to revive the unfortunate and previously fading practice of conscription.
...
In the United States, some lawmakers tout mandatory service for all as a pathway to equity, which it might be if by "equity" you mean "shared loss of freedom."

"By reforming the Selective Service to be gender-neutral based registration, we draw on the talents of our entire nation in the time of a national emergency," Rep. Chrissy Houlahan (D–Pa.) insisted last year of language that was, thankfully, later stripped from the National Defense Authorization Act.

But touchy-feely justifications for forcing people to serve the state are a hard sell. Claims that conscription will break down barriers don't square well with threats to place those who refuse behind bars. Old-fashioned defenses against predatory neighbors, on the other hand, more effectively play on people's fears. And too many officials, either frightened of cross-border dangers or simply aware of the opportunities they present, are taking advantage of the situation.'

Assaulting our Boys: The Campaign to Demonize Masculinity

Matt · 7 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has become increasingly clear that there is an assault on masculinity. The assault is more than the sum of toxic terms and ideological narratives aimed at undermining a particular sex. The actions are exercised in policy exploitations that clearly violate equal protections and undermine the ability of boys and men to contribute fully to society.

...

Those supporting boys and men have become persona non grata in the halls of the political, academic, and media institutions that chose a conscripted, ideological narrative as profound as any goose-stepping militant looking to tear down patriarchal structures. In colleges across the country, post modernism, deconstructionism, Marxism, and new historicism became entrenched in the most elite and even most frivolous schools across the country and now harbor a new identity politic dedicated to undermining the hopes of the greatest civil rights leaders who dreamed of a nation where the content of one's character would win out over the color of one's skin and nature of one's sex. In the world of academia, identity is in and character is out.'

Feminist author: Stay-at-home moms breed ‘worse, more sexist’ men

Mastodon · 8 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Controversial feminist author Jill Filipovic is preaching the “overwhelmingly negative consequences” of stay-at-home moms — and social media watchdogs are coming for her.

Filipovic, 38, detailed her stance that these mothers create “worse, more sexist” men — and women who are “psychologically and emotionally worse off” — in a now-viral Twitter thread published on Tuesday.
...
Filipovic noted that families that are set up in a more traditional sense — a k a, per her thread, the “carer/earner nuclear family model” — is a historical oddity “that is tremendously isolating and often financially devastating for the carer (almost always a woman).”

“It also reinforces the gendered division of labor, which ripples out to all women,” she continued. She then recommended a “robust social welfare state” instead of “paying mothers a small stipend.”'

Believe all women? Even Amber Heard? The Johnny Depp lawsuit raises questions about our approach to assault allegations

Mastodon · 9 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yes, of course, allegations of abuse, be they sexual or otherwise, should be taken incredibly seriously. However, the reflexive call to “believe women” requires a complete suspension of critical thinking. Moreover, the call asks us to assume that the person accused, almost always a man, is guilty. It also asks us to assume, implicitly or otherwise, that all the accusers (usually women) are honest.

Which brings us back to Heard. There is reason to believe that she has been less than honest, and there’s reason to believe that she has lied about Depp.'

Why do people blindly support Johnny Depp? I'll tell you why

Mastodon · 9 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Exception:

'"If she was scared to death, why didn't she leave?" asked everyone's favourite Hollywood heartthrob-turned-bad-boy Johnny Depp in court.

He was talking, of course, about his ex-wife Amber Heard, who he is suing for libel in the US over an article she wrote for the Washington Post in 2018. During her testimony, the actress has accused Depp of physical and sexual abuse.

If Depp's phrase feels familiar, that's because it is: survivors, families of victims and domestic abuse campaigners have worked tirelessly to stop society using such victim-blaming tropes. Instead of asking a woman why she didn't escape abuse, ask the man why he abused her in the first place. That would be a good place to start.'

Judge: California's women on boards law is unconstitutional

Mastodon · 16 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Los Angeles judge has ruled that California's landmark law requiring women on corporate boards is unconstitutional.

Superior Court Judge Maureen Duffy-Lewis said the law that would have required boards have up to three female directors by this year violated the right to equal treatment. The ruling was dated Friday.

The conservative legal group Judicial Watch had challenged the law, claiming it was illegal to use taxpayer funds to enforce a law that violates the equal protection clause of the California Constitution by mandating a gender-based quota.

David Levine, a law professor at the University of California Hastings College of the Law, said he was not surprised by the verdict. Under state and federal law "mandating a quota like this was never going to fly," Levine said.'

Wisconsin Middle Schoolers Sued for Sexual Harassment for Not Using Preferred Pronouns

Mastodon · 16 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the Wisconsin Institute for Law and Liberty (WILL) — which is representing the defendants — the three eighth grade boys are being sued under Title IX for using “incorrect pronouns” in their Kiel Area School District.

“The District’s position appears to be that once a student informs others of alternate, preferred pronouns, any subsequent ‘mispronouning’ automatically constitutes punishable sexual harassment under Title IX,” a press release from WILL stated, explaining that the boys were simply using the “biologically correct” pronouns.

“The mere use of biologically correct pronouns not only does not constitute sexual harassment under Title IX or the District’s own policy, it is also speech protected by the First Amendment,” a WILL letter to administrators states.'

Latest office politics row sees exam chiefs telling male civil servants they must stop 'hepeating' women's ideas and declaring them as their own

Mastodon · 17 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You may – or may not – have come to terms with such workplace sins as 'mansplaining' or 'microaggressions'.

But now there's a new offence in the minefield of office politics: 'hepeating'.

The term has been coined to describe the act of a man hijacking an idea previously suggested by a woman – then getting all the credit for it. And now civil servants have been warned not to do it.

The portmanteau of 'he' and 'repeating' appears to have been invented in 2017 by friends of American physics professor Nicole Gugliucci, whose tweet defining the term went viral.

Although the word has yet to make it into the Oxford English Dictionary, staff working for exam regulator Ofqual have introduced it in an internal handbook.

The 28-page book, obtained by The Mail on Sunday under Freedom of Information legislation, describes 'hepeating' as 'a situation where a man repeats a woman's comments or ideas and then is praised for them as if they were his own'.'

UK: Sex education curriculum must address 'toxic masculinity', say students

Mastodon · 17 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The relationship and sexual education (RSE) school curriculum must address "toxic masculinity", the term used to describe how certain masculine traits cause harm to men, women, and others.

The Irish Second-Level Students' Union (ISSU) told the Oireachtas committee on gender equality on Thursday that the current RSE curriculum is outdated and too focused on biology over consent.

David Byrne, a researcher from the Technological University Dublin (TU Dublin), told the committee that toxic masculinity is still evident in the classroom for certain male-dominated subjects.

"I think beginning in primary, or even before that but beginning with education, we need to teach boys to not be that way," he said.'

Walk to End Violence Against Women and Children returns to Victoria Thursday

Mastodon · 17 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eleven years in, the Indigenous-led Moose Hide Campaign continues its mission to end violence against women and children, and this Thursday (May 12) the Greater Victoria community is invited to participate in a morning filled with discussion followed by an afternoon walk to the legislature.

The day, usually marked in February but delayed due to the omicron variant wave, serves as a call to action for men and boys across the country to make a pledge to adopt healthy masculinity and do their part to make everyone feel safe and welcome.
...
Men and boys are encouraged to not only tune into virtual events before joining the walk, but also to commit to fasting that day. Stevenson said fasting is an effective way to deepen resolve and commitment to the campaign's goals.'

Violent Crime and Racial Motivations

Matt · 19 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In four events over the last year, at least 26 people were killed and at least 70 injured in events some have linked to racist motivations. Payton Gendron, Ahmad Al Aliwi Alissa, Frank James, and Darrell Brooks Jr. have been accused and/or already prosecuted for the killing and injuring of innocent people.

As the nation mourns another mass shooting in the city of Buffalo, the media and policy makers need to proceed with a certain caution and avoid inciting the type of responses that only fires-up political rhetoric and incites further violence instead of encouraging a level-headed focus on mental health.

While many are looking at racially motivated reasons for the rampages by Gendron in Buffalo (NY), Al Aliwi Alissa in Boulder, Colorado, James in New York City, and Brooks Jr. in Waukesha, Wisconsin, too few are spending time in sustained talks and actions regarding the mental illness associated with these crises.'

U.S. Women's Soccer 'Equal Pay' Agreement Includes Men's Team Now Subsidizing Their Pay

Matt · 19 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In what is being called an "equal pay" agreement between the U.S. Soccer Federation and the U.S. men's and women's national teams, the men's team will soon begin subsidizing the women's team's bonuses with their own international prize money.

The landmark agreement was reached after years litigation between U.S. Soccer and members of the U.S. Women's National Team (USWNT), who claimed they were unfairly paid differently than the U.S. Men's National Team (USMNT). The women made this claim even though each team had their own separate collective bargaining agreement about their pay structure.

To achieve "equal pay," according to The New York Times, "U.S. Soccer will distribute millions of extra dollars to its best players through a complicated calculus of increased match bonuses, pooled prize money and new revenue-sharing agreements that will give each team a slice of the tens of millions of dollars in commercial revenues that U.S. Soccer receives each year from sponsors, broadcasters and other partners."'

Woman charged in war vet’s murder gets time served after plea deal

Mastodon · 19 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who was charged in an Afghanistan War veteran’s murder caught a lucky break Thursday, striking a plea deal that let her off on time served after Manhattan prosecutors claimed they couldn’t prove their case.

Mary Saunders, 41, pleaded guilty to a downgraded charge of second-degree assault for her role in the 2018 stabbing death of Hason Correa in Harlem.

At the time, authorities alleged Saunders had tried to hold the 35-year-old married dad down as her two brothers repeatedly stabbed him in front of his father Wesley Correa.

But in court Thursday, Assistant District Attorney Dafna Yoran said Saunders only kicked and tried to punch the victim, and that those “did not appear to cause any damage.”'

Distinguished Gentleman's Ride raises awareness for men's mental health, prostate cancer

Matt · 23 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost 200 bikers dressed in their finest clothes headed downtown on their vintage motorbikes to take part in Austin's Distinguished Gentleman's Ride Sunday afternoon.
...
The Distinguished Gentleman's Ride takes place on the same day every year in cities across the world to raise money and awareness for men's mental health and prostate cancer research.

"There's not a lot for raising awareness for men's prostate cancer and mental health goes hand in hand with that because it's kind of a big deal and we're happy to be able to contribute funds, raise awareness and have this lovely event," she said.'

Our greatest public-health crisis? The angry young American male

Matt · 26 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Here we go. She's not even trying to hide it. Young maleness = dangerously violent. The generalizations are scarcely challenged. I wonder what exactly she propose? Curfews for males under 25? No guns sold to males under 25? Why stop there? No talk of mental health issues and where they may come from (e.g. no father at home). Excerpt:

'We are continuing to create, more than twenty years after Columbine, young male mass shooters who target schoolchildren.

Only in America. No other country suffers this sickness but us. America, land of milk and honey. Born here and you're born on third base. Yet we are cultivating a cohort — young men hellbent on killing our children.
...
The Lone Wolf is no more, not since the Internet. Now any disaffected young man can become, with anonymous encouragement and advice, a killing machine.

Among the most recent violent subcultures to coalesce online are the so-called incels, the portmanteau for "involuntary celibates," deemed a specific threat by the U.S. Secret Service in a study published last March.
...
The membrane between the virtual world and the physical one has all but collapsed. Online threats and perseverating over violent actions, especially by young men — these need to be treated as real.

After 9/11, the Department of Homeland Security began tracking online chatter to disrupt planned terror attacks, as did the FBI, which began proactively working up profiles of future terrorists.

Why can't the same be done here?'

Amber Heard on trial: Johnny Depp's defamation case is radicalizing young men

Mastodon · 26 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anti-feminism makes good bait to pull young men deeper into authoritarian — and even fascist — politics.

Polling demonstrates that a distressingly large number of young men long for old-fashioned gender roles. A 2018 poll by Perry Undem, for instance, found that while most teenage girls wanted equality in the workplace and in the home, the majority of teenage boys preferred men to dominate in the workplace while women are stuck at home caring for the family. As feminist Jessica Valenti noted in a 2020 article, male support for female equality has actually gone down in recent years. Not only are young married men still foisting the majority of domestic duties on their wives, but the percentage of men who openly long to have a housewife rose from 17% in 1994 to a whopping 45% in 2014. In reaction, increasing numbers of women are turning their noses up to marriage, preferring to be single rather than be with men who don't respect them.

The reason men want inequality is, quite obviously, entirely selfish. Men reject gender equality because, duh, it sounds nice having a full-time unpaid servant and emotional support system at home, all for your benefit. But no one wants to believe they're a selfish jerk, especially to someone you're supposed to love, such as a real or even hypothetical wife. So a lot of men are open to narratives, however silly, about how it's feminists who are the bad guys. They long to hear that it's men who are the victims of a conspiracy of "selfish" women who supposedly use false accusations and other shady tactics. It's not true, of course, but we live in times where facts are increasingly discarded if they cut against a will to believe. Once you've got these guys on board with lies painting feminism as a conspiracy against men, it's a short jump to convincing them feminism is also a conspiracy against the white race.'

School Shooting in Uvalde, Texas

Matt · 26 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'School shooters are almost always male, mentally ill, fatherless, and lost souls with little purpose, what Dr. Warren Farrell called, the “purpose void.” Despite our well established knowledge of these things, shooters continue to rear their heads again and again with ever increasing loss of lives. Since 2000, there has been approximately 367 school-shooting, related incidents. One school incident involved a child 6-years-of-age.

Another incident involved a woman who accidentally set off her gun in a school gymnasium while reaching into her purse for her cell-phone. Though the later example is truly uncommon, the former is not. The overwhelming majority of school shooters are male, and most of them likely have some form of mental illness and other contributing social dynamics that lead to unconscionable acts of violence that seem to come from some long immoral urge, a sickness of the mind born from illness or excessive suppressed affliction.
...
There is no denying the overwhelming number of these shooters are boys and men who are likely suffering from some form of mental illness. As discussed in an article after the Buffalo shooting, at least 70% of mass shooters have some form of mental illness. However, the overwhelming majority of boys and men are not committing any form of violent crime but boys and men are clearly impacted by mental health in very different ways, including suicide, alcohol, and drug overdose deaths. These too are manifestations of a type of self-harm. These are not comparable to school shootings, but many school shooters acting out their rage are often carrying out a form of communal and self harm simultaneously. This in no way excuses the act of the shooter. It does, however, give us pause to consider the ever increasing mental health issues and fractured family structures that allow for boys and men susceptible to violence to actualize it, something we are also witnessing with the increase in homicides. (School shootings are only one portion of the homicide problem as the nation has seen a marked rise in homicide deaths over the last two years.)'

AOC called out for divisive comments about patriarchy and masculinity after Texas school shooting

Mastodon · 27 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Rochester, New York police chief La'ron Singletary pushed back on Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, D-N.Y., for her "characterizations and accusations" while law enforcement continues the investigation of the Uvalde school shooter. On "Fox & Friends First" Friday, Singletary urged politicians to find "viable solutions" instead of spreading divisive rhetoric. Ocasio-Cortez called out America's "patriarchal society" and masculinity "rooted in the subjugation of other people" on the day after the attack.'

UK: It's very bad time to be a man

Mastodon · 27 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yes, that's how it feels to be a man in today's increasingly hostile climate. The inflated outrage over misogyny in Parliament feeds into the simplistic and inaccurate stereotyping of men as universal perpetrators, and women as perpetual victims. It feels as if the issue has been hyped up as part of the current campaign to make misogyny a criminal offence.

Male MPs - with an old fashioned sense of chivalry and shame - will no doubt want to 'do the right thing' by their offended female colleagues, to do that would be to improve their own behaviour. However we should also consider the equally unpleasant reality of 'misandry' - the dislike of, or contempt for men, and prejudice against men.

Let's look at the facts.

The paradox of Parliament is that while there is a Minister for Women, there is no Minister for Men co-ordinating a response to the male suicide epidemic, or giving men's health issues meaningful representation in the House.'

Appeals court allows expelled DU student to sue over allegedly unfair sexual misconduct inquiry

Mastodon · 27 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male student who the University of Denver expelled for sexual misconduct may sue the school for its alleged failure to conduct a fair and impartial investigation, the state's second-highest court ruled on Thursday.

"John Doe," as the student is identified in court documents, claimed that DU investigators refused to interview his witnesses, did not question his accuser's motivations and overlooked inconsistencies in the alleged victim's statements. Because the university's procedures at the time promised that sexual misconduct investigations would be "thorough, impartial and fair," Doe sued the school for breach of contract after believing its investigation into his case failed to live up to that standard.'

Men abducted en masse in Chechnya and sent to fight against Ukraine

Matt · 27 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several Chechen human rights organisations, as well as bloggers, are talking about appeals from Chechen residents regarding men being abducted to be sent as "volunteers" to the war against Ukraine.

According to human rights activists, the abducted men are forced to sign a contract under threat of spending an indefinite time in secret prisons.

In particular, the opposition movement 1ADAT reports on hundreds of people being abducted from different regions of Chechnya. According to the representative of the movement, 100 people are being held in one of the illegal prisons, and 30 in the other. These data are reported by men who witnessed such "mobilizations".'

Consequences of intimate partner violence for male victims: findings from Norway

Matt · 28 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most of the men have suffered a variety of psychological problems both during and after the relationship, such as insomnia, difficulties in concentration, and a deep sense of insecurity and unease. Some struggle with trauma and social anxiety.

The men who experienced a pattern of violence over a longer period of time describe more serious health complaints than those who got out of the relationship relatively early on. Five men said they had gone so low psychologically that they played with the idea of ending their own lives. Three actually attempted suicide.'

No matter who 'wins' the Johnny Depp-Amber Heard trial, America has lost

Mastodon · 28 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wagatwe Wanjuki, an anti-violence advocate who helps communities prevent and respond to sexual abuse, believes that the trial's reception is a symptom of a culture that still needs to be educated on the complicated realities of intimate partner violence. "We need to show and encourage a better way to talk about abuse, abusers and victims," she said. "We do not teach people what domestic violence is, so most are ill-equipped to talk about abuse with the proper care and education needed to avoid upholding a culture of abuse."

...

To an outsider, Heard and Depp's relationship seems tumultuous, volatile and at times even violent. But calling their dynamic "mutual abuse" — as it was during the trial — perpetuates the same kind of stereotypes that keep abusers in control. "It's dangerous because it doesn't exist," Wanjuki said about the term. "At the core of an abusive relationship is a power imbalance that is created and sustained by a pattern of domination and control. Spreading this term is a gift to abusers, because it distorts the true nature of the relationship by minimizing what they've done."'

Teacher's assistant sentenced to 30 days in jail for sexual assault

Mastodon · 29 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former teacher's assistant at a private Monroe County school has been sentenced to jail for having inappropriate sexual contact with a student.

Marissa Lee Beadle, a former teacher's assistant at State Line Christian School on Lewis Ave. in Temperance, was sentenced to serve 30 days in the Monroe County Jail, with the possibility of the a 90-day period being served in a boot camp program designed to prevent similar behavior. Beadle will then serve five years' probation with sex offender treatment and was ordered to not have any contact with the victim or the family of the victim.
...
According to the Monroe County Prosecutor's Office, Beadle was a 20-year-old teacher's assistant at the school when she engaged in inappropriate contact with a then-13-year-old student.'

We overlook a significant factor in mass shootings: fatherlessness

Matt · 29 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We do everything possible to find the root cause of a broken man showing such disregard for life — yet we consistently overlook a significant contributing factor: fatherlessness.
...
The world can at times be harsh for young men, but your father is supposed to be your source of security, a builder of confidence and a teacher for how to regulate your emotions in stressful situations. Most crucial, the father is the son's purpose compass as he helps guide him throughout the trials of adolescence towards purposeful adulthood.

But what happens when there is no father in a child's life? What happens to those boys when their compass is nowhere to be found? They all too often become lost boys and grow into lost men.'

The Divorce Monster Has Its Claws in Both Parties

Matt · 29 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DeSantis has impeccable credentials as a defiant conservative. The fact that even he was hoodwinked demonstrates how conservatives are outmaneuvered on many issues, especially the family. The bill exemplifies how Republicans are routinely fooled into enacting Democrats' measures. In fact, it lays the groundwork for understanding how they invited the extreme left to seize control of the U.S. government two years ago.

The bill can do nothing for either fatherhood or the family. It is modeled on useless programs devised by the Clinton administration based on the distorted research of liberal house intellectuals like David Popenoe and especially David Blankenhorn and his federally funded Institute for American Values. Blankenhorn describes himself as a liberal Democrat. His background is in Saul Alinsky community organizing (quasi-communism). Yet for years he dominated family advocacy groups like the Family Research Council and Heritage Foundation before endorsing the redefinition of marriage.'

Australia: New domestic violence campaign portrays boys as potential abusers

Mastodon · 31 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The harrowing reality of abuse is being used in a new domestic violence campaign aimed at making dads take action.

The Hidden Face campaign focuses on the children of domestic violence households and puts the onus on men to stop the next generation becoming abusers.

Billboards depicting sentiments such as, "I'm going to be just like you when I grow up dad", will be displayed around the Mackay region for the next year.

Others include, "I'm going to marry a man just like you" and "I'm going to remember what I learn from you dad".'

Suicide takes more military lives than combat, especially among women

Matt · 31 May 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Military suicides have been a serious problem for decades. Yet it has defied MSM coverage -- until it becomes a problem for women, too. Excerpt:

'Suicide has been the main killer of U.S. personnel since the Sept. 11 attacks. More than 30,000 of them have died by their own hands since, during a period that saw about 7,000 service members die in combat or training exercises, according to a project from Brown University.

Suicide in the military community is at its highest rate since 1938, according to a Department of Defense report released last month.

Increasingly, those killed are women.

In 2020, they accounted for 7% of military suicides - up from 4% a decade earlier, according to Department of Defense numbers. About one in six servicemembers is female.

The reports break down the deaths by gender, age and branch, but they hardly address the dramatic increase among women.

Deana's story was featured in 22 Too Many, a project honoring the estimated 22 military suicides that happen every day.'

Amber Heard ‘heartbroken’ by Johnny Depp verdict: It’s a ‘setback’ for women

Mastodon · 1 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amber Heard has released her first statement since a jury found Wednesday that she defamed her ex-husband, Johnny Depp.

The actress, 36, described the verdict as a “setback” for women in the post-#MeToo era.

“The disappointment I feel today is beyond words. I’m heartbroken that the mountain of evidence still was not enough to stand up to the disproportionate power, influence and sway of my ex-husband,” Heard said.'

‘Men Always Win’: Survivors ‘Sickened’ by the Amber Heard Verdict

Mastodon · 1 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“This is basically the end of MeToo,” Dr. Jessica Taylor, a psychologist, forensic psychology Ph.D., and author of two books on misogyny and abuse, tells Rolling Stone. “It’s the death of the whole movement.”

As the verdict came in, sexual assault survivors expressed their disappointment with the decision, even if they were not surprised by it. “I don’t think it’s unexpected. But it’s horrible,” says one survivor, who herself faced a defamation claim after coming forward against her own abuser (and requested her name be withheld for legal reasons). She says the claim was dropped, but that watching Heard be dragged through the mud during the trial brought back memories of her own experience, which she says was traumatic and led her to consider suicide.

“I feel really glad to think my case didn’t go ahead. And stupid to think I could have won it,” she says. “Men always win.”'

Washington Post's Jennifer Rubin: GOP is the party of ‘White grievance’ and ‘toxic masculinity’

Mastodon · 2 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington Post columnist Jennifer Rubin cast Republicans as the party of "White grievance" and "toxic masculinity" in the aftermath of the Uvalde, Texas school shooting.

On Sunday, Rubin described President Biden as a man "renowned for his expressions of empathy," but admitted his soft language appears "increasingly inadequate" and "counterproductive" in U.S. politics.

"Now is the time for precise language. 'Forces' are not the problem; one political movement encased within the Republican Party is. "Ultra-MAGA" ideas are not the problem; Republicans spouting anti-American ideas that threaten functional democracy," Rubin wrote.'

Where are the men of courage? They're gone thanks to 'toxic masculinity'

Mastodon · 2 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So. We vilify action men, brand chivalry and valor "toxic masculinity," stamp on the manly virtues that made civilization possible.

Then we are shocked when armed cops stand around outside a classroom while children are slaughtered, or when straphangers watch passively as a woman is assaulted on the subway.

What's the answer?

Democrats cynically demonize Republicans over guns as a motivator for their base. Republicans fall back on hardening security to prevent more school shootings.

But little Robb Elementary School in Uvalde, Texas, where an 18-year-old gunman murdered 19 small children and two of their teachers last week, was already pretty hardened.'

The Myth of Toxic Masculinity

Mastodon · 3 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The lead article in APA's flagship journal this month (Di Bianca & Mahalik, 2022) calls for a redefining of masculinity from what it calls "hegemonic masculinity" (meaning toxic masculinity) to something more, well, feminine.

Oppression and violence are blamed on toxic masculinity, and boys, according to the article, should be raised in "relationships of empathy, mutuality, and empowerment." No, they don't mean sports teams, dojos, or the military, although it's unclear why not, since those organizations certainly provide relationships of that sort. What they mean is that boys should be less, you know, boyish.

...

When people talk about toxic masculinity, they don't mean masculinity at all. Usually, they mean paranoia, sociopathy, malignant narcissism, or some form of self-righteous vindictiveness. These are as common in women as in men, although in men, these ills are more likely to be expressed as physical violence (though still at a low rate). But to blame the violence on the maleness rather than, say, the paranoia of the perpetrator is like blaming robbery and murder on the race of the perpetrator. When faced with the image of a school shooter, if you hate men, you see a man. If you like men, you see a paranoid person. If you hate Black people and look at violent crime data (a disproportionate number of robberies and murders are committed by Black people), you see race when you look at perpetrators rather than rage.'

India: Rape Should Be Gender-Neutral Offence: Kerala HC on Breach of Promise to Marry

Mastodon · 3 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Kerala high court orally remarked that the offence of rape that arises out of a false promise to marry should be “gender-neutral”, noting that a woman cannot be prosecuted if she tricks a man with such a promise.

According to LiveLaw, Justice A. Muhamed Mustaque made the observation while adjudicating the child custody battle of a divorced couple.

During the hearing, the woman’s advocate said that the man had once been accused in a rape case. The man’s counsel said the allegation was based on “unsubstantiated accusations of sex under a false promise of marriage”, according to LiveLaw.

This is when Justice Mustaque expressed his concern that Section 376 (punishment for rape) of the Indian Penal Code (IPC) is not gender-neutral. He said,

“Section 376 is not a gender-neutral provision. If a woman tricks a man under false promise of marriage, she can’t be prosecuted. But a man can be prosecuted for the same offence. What kind of law is this? It should be gender-neutral.”'

New Zealand: Woman has sex with brother; files false rape complaint

Mastodon · 3 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Waikato woman who had consensual sex with her brother then laid a false rape complaint with police.

That saw the woman's brother, aged in his 40s, spend seven months in custody, and her last year charged with attempting to pervert the course of justice and two charges of incest.

She was sentenced on those charges in the Hamilton District Court, narrowly avoiding jail time.

The woman sat tearful, shaking uncontrollably in the dock before Judge Philip Crayton, unaware if she would be put behind bars or not.'

MSNBC guest: ‘White Men’ are the biggest ‘threat’ to women’s ‘liberty as citizens,’ ‘right to vote’

Mastodon · 5 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She minced no words, telling the MSNBC host that "White men" are the biggest threat facing women today:

"103 years after the passage of the 19th amendment in the Senate, the challenge and, frankly, the threat is the White men who have had a monopoly on our society, our democracy, and our country, who continue to block our access to the ballot and our liberty as citizens, as women and everything that comes with it."

Haines said men have "always enjoyed" those "same freedoms" without ever having to "earn" them through amendments to the Constitution. "And while it’s fine for people to share something when you don’t think it’s going to cost you anything. When people feel like they are losing something that belongs to them, particularly power, everybody else watch out," Haines stated, implying that White men will do a lot to maintain their grip on power.'

Police response to Uvalde shooting says much about masculinity — and not the toxic kind

Mastodon · 5 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's hard not to feel that our decades of eschewing gender roles and their associated characteristics in pursuit of equality have had some undesirable effects.

When the natural inclination to protect and defend, for example, has been repeatedly disparaged as dangerous and "toxic," it becomes less difficult to imagine why a group of highly-trained armed men would still favor crowd control over pursuit of an active shooter.

The incentives just aren't there.

But even if you don't accept the premise that the decline in masculinity has something to do with the tepid police response, its failure is plainly apparent, and more culturally devastating, as it relates to the shooter. We know that the common thread that links so many mass shooters is the crisis of fatherlessness.'

Why so many young Democratic men think feminism has done more harm than good

Mastodon · 6 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Southern Poverty Law Center last week released a poll with Tulchin Research in which they asked men of different age groups and party affiliations if they believe feminism has “done more harm than good.” Not surprisingly, of younger (under the age of 50) Republican men, 62% agreed. But of younger Democratic men, 46% agreed, 41% disagreed and 13% stated they didn’t know.

When asked if men should be represented and valued more in our society, a whopping 60% of younger Democratic men agreed, which was not far off from the 65% of younger Republican men.
...
The perceived feminist push toward relationship domination has in turn made many men afraid of long-term commitments. They may be scared to procreate in fear of a family-court system that could prevent a relationship with their children instead of fostering it. They’ve become pessimistically focused on a 50% divorce rate that is initiated by women 70% of the time. In the end, we have two sexes who are increasingly fearful of each other.'

EU agrees ‘landmark’ 40% quota for women on corporate boards

Mastodon · 7 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The EU has agreed that companies will face mandatory quotas to ensure women have at least 40% of seats on corporate boards.

After 10 years of stalemate over the proposals, EU lawmakers hailed a “landmark” deal for gender equality. As well as the legally binding target, companies could also be fined for failing to recruit enough women to their non-executive boards and see board appointments cancelled for non-compliance with the law.

From 30 June 2026 large companies operating in the EU will have to ensure a share of 40% of the “underrepresented sex” – usually women – among non-executive directors. The EU has also set a 33% target for women in all senior roles, including non-executive directors and directors, such as chief executive and chief operating officer.'

I Reported Sexual Harassment by My Boss. A Week Later, I Was Suspended.

Matt · 7 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shani began sexually harassing me days after I started this job. On October 22, 2020, after learning I was bisexual, she told me I was a “unicorn” and that she found me attractive. Weeks later, on November 20, she came to my house at night, attempted to get me inebriated (I do not drink), told me she had feelings for me, and asked me to sleep with her. When I rejected her repeated advances, Shani used the power she holds over me at the PAB to punish me.

In many ways, the retaliation and harassment I faced was standard for people who resist their boss’s advances. Shani humiliated and ridiculed me at work. She hugged and touched me without my consent. She told me intimate details about the sex lives of mutual friends and spread rumors about my sexual preferences with others. Whenever I tried to draw boundaries and maintain a professional relationship, Shani would threaten me for not “acting like her friend” while reminding me of her romantic feelings toward me. What made this particularly awful, however, was the way it worked to exploit or distort my sexual orientation — for example, when Shani ordered me to end a romantic relationship I had with a woman while encouraging me to date men.'

Trellix CEO: Cybersecurity Has Too Many 'Straight White Men'

Mastodon · 7 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a serious problem with the homogenized nature of cybersecurity professionals, Trellix CEO Bryan Palma said during his keynote at the RSA Conference.

An overwhelming majority of individuals in the cybersecurity field identify as straight, white, and male, according to a recent Trellix-commissioned survey conducted by a market research firm.

This clear lack of diversity is holding the industry back in two main ways. “First, we are turning away great people and doing our industry a significant disservice by failing to cultivate a more inclusive environment,” Palma explained. “We are all better when we benefit from the diverse perspectives of others.”

And secondly, that homogenization is bad for business. “I learned this decades ago from Indra Nooyi, the former PepsiCo CEO: we do not look like our customers. And our lack of diversity restricts our ingenuity, innovation, and ability to recruit the next generation of talent,” Palma said.'

Geico ordered to pay Missouri woman $5.2 million after she contracted STD in a car

Matt · 9 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Missouri woman was awarded $5.2 million in a settlement from insurance company GEICO after contracting a sexually transmitted disease from her partner in his vehicle, which was insured by the company, court documents show. The Missouri Court of Appeals upheld that award this week.

The woman, a Jackson County resident, said she contracted Human papillomavirus (HPV) from her partner, according to court documents. On Tuesday, the Missouri Court of Appeals filed an opinion confirming the initial Jackson County Circuit Court arbitration award finding against GEICO.

In February 2021, the woman -- anonymously identified in documents as M.O. -- submitted a petition to GEICO directly. She alleged that her sexual partner negligently caused or "contributed to cause to be infected with HPV by not taking proper precautions and neglecting to inform and/or disclose his diagnosis," according to court documents, and that his "insurance policy provided coverage for her injuries and losses."'

Middle-aged white men a ‘pariah’ in television and film, says Christopher Eccleston

Mastodon · 11 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am a "pariah" as a middle-aged white male, Christopher Eccleston has said, as he reveals his acting work is drying up.

The actor, best known for reviving the role of Doctor Who, starred in successful films and series earlier in his career, including Jude the Obscure and Our Friends in the North.

But the British star now feels like a “failure” for being unable to secure similar work.

Eccleston has said that his age, sex and skin colour have now made him a “pariah” in the entertainment industry, leaving his career plagued by uncertainty.

“I'm white, I'm middle-aged, I'm male, and I'm straight,” said the 58-year-old actor. “We are the new pariah in the industry.

...

Eccleston is nevertheless returning to BBC Two on Friday night in My Name Is Leon, based on the novel of the same name by Kit de Waal. The story follows the story of a mixed-race child who is separated from his younger, white half-brother in the care system.'

Talking to boys about being a boy

Mastodon · 11 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since my sons were born, I've tried to speak openly about gender. I've taught both of them, now ages 5 and 9, how to spot the ways the world holds girls and women back. I've also taught them about gender norms in toys and clothes, and why it is OK for both boys and girls to break them.

I thought I was being proactive in my approach until recently – when I realized there was a large, hiding-in-plain-sight, missing piece in everything we discussed. We never once spoke directly about masculinity or dug into what it means to be a boy or a man.

A big reason for this failure was inadequate vocabulary. Parents and caregivers to girls can rely on the word "feminism" should they want to frame girlhood as both positive and dynamic. Calling one's daughter a "feminist" allows for change and progress without limiting girls or criticizing femininity.

With boys, there was no such term until recently. The closest runner-up was the phrase "toxic masculinity," which refers to the parts of the male identity that are bad for men, boys and everyone else. These behaviors include things such as suppressing emotions or resorting to violence for self-expression.

The problem is my boys and their friends are lovely, sweet and not at all toxic. Why would I start a conversation with my boys about "boyness" on such a critical note? Doing so might result in silencing or shaming my sons for behaviors or traits they don't have.'

An Imagined Rebuttal to Amber Heard's 2018 Washington Post Column

sbond2000 · 12 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following the ACLU's example, and in the interest of gender equity, I have taken the liberty of ghost-writing an "imagined rebuttal" to Heard's column with Mr. Depp as the "author". This rebuttal deconstructs their article, paragraph by paragraph, and provides a more balanced and truthful examination for each.

Note that Mr. Depp doesn't know me from Adam and has no prior knowledge of this effort. I'm simply doing it as a public service to him and to fair-minded men and women everywhere. Also note that in keeping with Heard's assertion that the Post article "wasn't about Depp because it didn't name him", in his rebuttal, Depp only refers to "the defendant" (wink-wink).'

Intact 2022: 16th Int'l Conference on Child Genital Cutting

DanBollinger · 12 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Official Page for Registration and Reservations

"The issue of genital cutting/mutilation of newborns and children was brought to the forefront of discussion in 1989 in Anaheim, California. During the three-day event, genital cutting was addressed by experts from many disciplines including history, religion, medicine, anthropology, psychology, law, and ethics. Since then, these symposia have convened biennially (when possible)."

Google pays out $118 million to female staff who earned less than their male colleagues to settle lawsuit

Mastodon · 13 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Google has agreed to pay $118 million to more than 15,500 employees to settle a longstanding lawsuit over gender discrimination and equitable pay, court documents show.

The settlement covers female employees in 236 job titles in California since September 14, 2013, the plaintiffs' legal firms Lieff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein and Altshuler Berzon said in a press release.'

In major victory, Colorado court finds that accused students at private universities are entitled to fair hearings

Mastodon · 13 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month, Colorado's intermediate court held that private universities in the state owe a duty of care to students when addressing claims of sexual misconduct. The Colorado Court of Appeals' ruling, reversing a lower court's judgment in favor of the University of Denver, a private university, is a welcome decision that other state courts should follow.

Highlighting DU's deficient process, the court noted "the burden and detriment of an unfair investigation and adjudication is borne almost entirely" by the accused. As a result, the court held that DU has a duty to adopt and apply fair procedures when investigating and adjudicating claims of sexual misconduct.

This is important because a constitutional right to due process only applies at public institutions because they are state actors.'

This Title IX Bill Would Undermine Due Process Rights for New Jersey College Students

Mastodon · 13 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill introduced last month in the New Jersey Senate could threaten the due process rights of students who are accused of Title IX violations. S.B. 2469 would require that employees at public colleges and universities who are involved in adjudicating, receiving reports of, or providing services to victims of alleged sexual violence undergo a "victim-centered" training. This training would also be required for students employed as resident advisors, or dorm supervisors.
...
However, some of those "providing services" to victims are also meant to be impartial investigators of serious allegations, such as university employees involved in adjudicating allegations of sexual assault. Giving "victim-centered" training to those employees raises the question of whether a victim-centered approach also allows for an impartial examination of the evidence and testimony for and against a student accused of sexual assault.'

Research into falling sperm counts finds 'alarming' levels of chemicals in male urine samples

Matt · 13 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scientists searching for the causes of falling sperm counts are getting a clearer picture of the role played by chemical pollutants - and it's not a pretty one.

A study of urine samples from nearly 100 male volunteers has uncovered "alarming" levels of endocrine disruptors known to reduce human fertility.

Cocktails of chemicals such as bisphenols and dioxins, which are believed to interfere with hormones and affect sperm quality, were present at levels up to 100 times those considered safe.

The median exposure to these chemicals was 17 times the levels deemed acceptable.'

A Proclamation on World Elder Abuse Awareness Day, 2022

Mastodon · 15 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Elder abuse takes many forms, such as financial, emotional, physical, and sexual harm, including intimate partner violence in later life. It often comes in the form of neglect, abandonment, or exploitation. It is estimated that approximately 1 in 10 elderly Americans are abused annually. However, many of those who are abused suffer in silence, and many cases are never reported or brought to light. In the past few years, while the pandemic isolated all of us to different extents, it especially exacerbated the isolation felt by too many older adults. All of us have a role to play in preventing elder abuse and ensuring that our Nation's seniors are able to age with dignity. With a majority of elder abuse victims being women, my Administration is focused particularly on improving our support for all women and preventing and addressing gender-based violence that impacts older adults both domestically and abroad.'

The Ends of Men

Matt · 16 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. MRAs have been refuted by feminists and others when they have asserted that there is indeed a subset of feminism that wants to see "the Final Solution" to the "man problem": our very existence. If there is no such trend in feminism, then why are there literally dozens of books depicting men as disappeared and a "better world" arising from it? Excerpt:

'"When the men disappeared, it felt like nothing," reflects Jane Pearson in the first line of Sandra Newman's new novel The Men. But more than a hundred years of literary history tell us that what follows will not be nothing. The Men was the subject of online debate earlier this year when Newman announced its premise on Twitter: "everyone with a Y chromosome suddenly, mysteriously disappears."

Indeed, Newman's characters walk through all the familiar beats of the "all men vanish or die" plot: the disaster in workplaces dominated by males, like operating rooms and oil refineries; the grief and fear and occasional guilty excitement of the women who are left over; the emergence of factions; the interesting adjustments such remnants might make in their sexual relationships in a post-hetero world. Newman's not pretending she's new to this territory; in her acknowledgments, she thanks Joanna Russ, Alice Sheldon (who wrote as James Tiptree Jr.), Charlotte Perkins Gilman, and Sheri Tepper, lauding them as writers who explored the idea that "there should be no men." But there have been so many more. Recently, I read more than 20 of these books—thousands of pages of worlds erased of the unfairer sex. Often, the theme felt exhausted and repetitive, though sometimes, when I found myself immersed in a book that did something new with this idea and my husband interrupted me to ask where he put his wallet, I got it. Why is this plot so durable? And, after all these years, has it finally lost its bite?'

Twitter bans boost of "In His Words" article

Matt · 16 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Really, no surprise coming from Twitter. Excerpt:

'A May 4th article that addressed the demonizing of masculinity in America (Assaulting our Boys: The Campaign to Demonize Masculinity) must have struck a nerve. Within 24 hours, it had several thousand views. I decided to boost the article, that looked at the lack of attention on boys and men as an assault on masculinity, on social media to increase its visibility. Twitter did not allow the boosting of the article, asserting it violated the company's usage policy. I appealed and asked for an explanation, receiving the following message.

[Image]

...
Twitter listed (in the email above) some examples of what constitutes a violation of political content policy, even though the content did not violate any of the examples. This approach is not new to social media sites aimed at tilting public awareness toward particular narratives and away from other concerns or points of view. Our attempt to share the Boy Gender-Gaps and the Male Gender-Gaps that exist happened as Twitter employees were upset about the Musk takeover: I wondered if the potential Twitter acquisition by Musk contributed to a frustrated employee backlash, at least in the short term, to marginalize groups it deems not in its particular scope.'

FACT SHEET: Presidential Memorandum Establishing the White House Task Force to Address Online Harassment and Abuse

Mastodon · 16 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, President Biden will sign a Presidential Memorandum establishing the White House Task Force to Address Online Harassment and Abuse, responding to the need for government leadership to address online harms, which disproportionately affect women, girls, people of color, and LGBTQI+ individuals. Vice President Harris will launch the Task Force by hosting a survivor and expert roundtable this afternoon. The tragic events in Buffalo and Uvalde have underscored a fact known all too well by many Americans: the internet can fuel hate, misogyny, and abuse with spillover effects that threaten our communities and safety offline.'

Privileges confirmed for straight white men working in STEM

Mastodon · 17 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study that considered multiple aspects including sexual identity and disabilities confirms a long-held belief: White, heterosexual men without disabilities are privileged in STEM careers.

The University of Michigan study of 25,300 professionals in science, technology, engineering and math shows that this segment experiences better treatment and rewards than members of 31 other categories by gender, race, LGBTQ+ status and disability status.

Straight, nondisabled white men experience more social inclusion, professional respect and career opportunities, and have higher salaries and persistence intentions, the research showed. Study author Erin Cech said these advantages act as premiums, meaning they cannot be attributed to things like education level, job commitment, family responsibilities and human capital.
...
The findings show the importance of encouraging white men to recognize the privileges they may have access to, and commit to serving as allies to fight for change at the organizational and structural level, Cech said.

“It is everyone’s responsibility – advantaged and disadvantaged alike – to fight for more equitable climates and practices in STEM,” she said.'

"Be the Change" fighting "casual misogyny"

Mastodon · 17 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the years, the cupcake tables that sat centre-stage at International Women's Day events started to get on Jasmin Bedir's nerves.

So in 2021, the Innocean Australia CEO launched not-for-profit Fck The Cupcakes (FTC), calling on as many members of the public and corporate supporters as possible to help her in her efforts to "fight endemic misogyny" and make some tangible change.

Now, the initiative has launched a new campaign titled 'Be The Change', and this time the target is casual misogyny.

Speaking to 9Honey, Be The Change spokesperson Rod Prosser, who is also the Chief Sales Officer of Network 10, explained the focus of the campaign.

"'Be The Change' puts a spotlight on casual misogyny, which we think is one of the most important problems to correct in the fight to break the bias," says Prosser.

"We know that so many men have 'unconscious bias' against women, and also don't see themselves as part of the problem, because they don't realise how their own behaviour can be harmful."'

Kamala Harris' Online Harassment Task Force Is a Bad Idea

Mastodon · 17 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The White House created a new task force on Thursday to combat online harassment, abuse, and sexual violence. The initiative was unveiled by Vice President Kamala Harris, who gave little indication that she understands the difference between preventing violence and deterring harassment, the latter of which is outside the government's purview.

"For far too many people, the internet is a place of fear," said Harris. "This affects all of us if it affects any one of us."

Online harassment is indeed a frustrating and pervasive problem; contrary to the White House's framing that harassers primarily target women and minorities, people of all backgrounds contend with it if they spend any significant time online. A Pew survey from 2017 found that 44 percent of men said they had experienced online harassment, compared with 37 percent of women.

Like the disinformation board that preceded it, the White House's new task force seems incredibly misguided. At the very least, its mission should be narrowed to focus on speech that does in some cases fall outside of First Amendment protection: actual threats of violence, revenge porn (which is illegal in some states), and the like.'

Why I Need Men's Rights

Matt · 17 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

I came across this on Reddit and thought it bore repeating here:

I asked why I need Men's Rights; well, this is why:

I need men's rights because when she changed her mind the next day, I went to jail for 5 years;

I need men's rights because I was the victim of abuse but nobody believed me;

I need men's rights because I am less likely to go to college, and if I do, I will make less money than my female contemporaries;

I need men's rights because the president sees the shrinking number of men in colleges across America as "a great success";

I need men's rights because people question if I am a predator when I am alone with my child;

I need men's rights because a man's appearance, height, and weight has a greater affect on his income than it does for a woman;

I need men's rights because saying "it's impossible to discriminate against men in our society" allows people to discriminate with impunity;

I need men's rights because traditionally masculine characteristics are virtues not flaws;

I need men's rights because the likelihood of my death coming by suicide is four times higher than it is for women, though I receive little support;

I need men's rights because it is not considered bigoted or sexist to deny me a male safe space at my college by those who have possessed their own safe spaces for decades;

I need men's rights because it is assumed that a meeting of men in a male safe space is automatically going to devolve into hateful sexism and violence;

I need men's rights because broad gender-wide slurs against men are socially accepted;

I need men's rights because my life, career, reputation and connection with my family can be easily destroyed by a single, false and anonymously whispered accusation;

I need men's rights because when women stumble blame rests on society, but when men stumble it is their fault;

I need men's rights because in my physically demanding career, I am expected to do much more work for "equal" pay;

I need men's rights because it is fine to call me a "dick", a "cock", or a "prick" on the street or on television; a woman must never be called a "cunt";

I need men's rights because talk-shows think it's funny if I am wounded or sexually mutilated by a woman;

I need men's rights because while the rape of a woman is properly regarded as a crime, the rape of a man is funny;

I need men's rights because mutilation of male infants is considered normal – and those arguing for the protection of male infants from mutilation are regularly slandered as anti-semites and bigots;

I need men's rights because my sexuality is routinely characterized as violent pathology, rather than as a natural part of my human identity;

I need men's rights because women assume it's my fault if I am assaulted by a woman;

I need men's rights because people think it is irresponsible to have me work around children;

I need men's rights because I have the right to the same sexual sovereignty given to women;

I need men's rights because I believe that the feminist idea that a woman in the United States is equally oppressed as a woman in Afghanistan or Saudi Arabia in cruel and insulting;

I need men's rights because I should not be ashamed of my sexuality;

I need men's rights because women who find me unattractive will shame me can call me creepy for politely interacting with them, and they will be praised for this cruelty;

I need men's rights because I was sexually harassed by several drunk women twice my age and everyone at the party thought it was funny;

I need men's rights because my size and strength is commonly used to pretend that I am violent, which I am not;

I need men's rights because if I am small or weak doesnt mean I have a Napoleon complex;

I need men's rights because the type of car I drive does not give you the right to shame me or belittle me;

I need men's rights because I have the right to associate with other men without legal action forcing me to allow women, too;

I need men's rights because if I am assaulted by my spouse, and I attempt to seek help, I risk arrest, imprisonment and life-long censure – even if I do not defend myself, even I am seriously injured while she is untouched;

I need men's rights because I earned my accomplishments; they were not given to me by a fictitious masculine conspiracy;

I need men's rights because I have a right to be a father for my own children;

I need men's rights because, as a man, I am much more likely to be physically assaulted than a woman;

I need men's rights because I will be chastised as a coward, and a failed man if I do not sacrifice my life to save a woman in a time of crisis;

I need men's rights because laws exist that demand harsher penalties for men for the same crime;

I need men's rights because I have no lobbying voice in congress;

I need men's rights because, as a man, I am more than 9 times more likely to be killed at work than a woman;

I need men's rights because I am more likely to die young, and much less money is being spent on my health problems;

I need men's rights because, if I am killed in an accident, people will care less than if a woman or a child is killed. News readers make this clear every time they utter the phrase "women and children";

I need men's rights because society believes that my life is worth less than a woman's;

I need the men's rights movement, because I am a human being.

And finally, I need the men's rights movement, because when I attempt to address any of these issues, my co-workers, my government, my media, my peers, my family, and the larger society I am a part of rises in unanimous voice to condemn me as a monster – simply for claiming my humanity.

Mental ill health drives worklessness among UK young men, research finds

Matt · 17 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The rise of mental ill health is driving increasing numbers of young men in the UK into long-term worklessness, according to an analysis warning against a “vicious cycle” barring young people from the workforce.

Research by the Resolution Foundation think-tank, published on Monday, found rates of economic inactivity — where a workless person is not looking for work — had risen from 5 to 9 per cent among men aged 18 to 24 between 1995 and 2021. For women, the figure fell from 18 per cent to 10 per cent over the same period.

The foundation found that the doubling of worklessness among young men was driven by issues with mental health. Worklessness among the group because of illness or disability more than doubled, from 46,000 to 91,000, between 2006 and 2021, with the sharpest rise due to mental health problems'

NBC's TODAY.com marks Father's Day with abortion advocacy

Mastodon · 18 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NBC's TODAY show website honored Father’s Day weekend this year with story about how abortion helped eight different dads "become the fathers they are today."

TODAY.com reporter Danielle Campoamor opened by stressing the urgency of her own piece, writing, "Eight dads are sharing how abortion has helped them become the fathers they are today, on what experts believe will likely be the last Father's Day before the Supreme Court issues a ruling that would overturn Roe v Wade."

After recounting a few details about the Supreme Court draft opinion leak on abortion and how the court is "poised to overturn Roe v Wade," Campoamor explained that TODAY put out a call on social media "asking fathers to share how abortion shaped their lives."'

UK troops in trouble for consensual orgy

Matt · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Basically, they had a consensual gang-bang. So what? The UK military says it could be seen as a denigration of women. Hardly, esp. when entirely consensual. Reverse the sexes: would it be considered a denigration of men? Excerpt:

'Hundreds of British paratroopers were banned from a NATO deployment after videos surfaced of an orgy with a civilian woman in the barracks that had some soldiers watching on, according to reports.

Eight paratroopers serving in the UK's 16 Air Assault Brigade were under police investigation over a video of them having sex with a civilian woman who had been snuck into the Merville barracks in Colchester, it was revealed earlier this month.

The woman had been snuck into the barracks as many as 31 times over the past five months, according to The Times of London.'

Masculinity overdue for a reckoning after mass shootings, child advocates say

Mastodon · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Days after the school shooting in Uvalde, Texas, staffers at Men as Peacemakers, a Minnesota group that works with students to break down gender stereotypes and reduce violence, checked in with participants to see how they were feeling.

The students, who were mostly white, mirroring the state's demographics, talked about lockdown drills they had practiced in school, but their responses were not very emotional, said Serrano Robinson, the group's youth restorative program coordinator.

The mass shooting at Robb Elementary School on May 24 that left 19 children and two teachers dead "sadly seemed kind of normal" to them, he said.

As civic leaders and politicians look for ways to stop mass shootings, advocates across the country from organizations like Men as Peacemakers say their work is vital to overcoming the toxic masculinity that research has found to be at the root of many mass shootings and other acts of violence perpetrated by men.

Research suggests such programs can be key to encouraging healthier emotional expression in young people, breaking down gender stereotypes and ultimately reducing violence.'

Opinion: Father's Day call to help stop the sexual assault of our nation’s children

Mastodon · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dads, we are failing our children.

As men and fathers, we participate in institutions every day that perpetuate a culture of rape. And once a sexual assault occurs, we are often — however unintentionally — a part of the machine that shames survivors, forces them into silence, and isolates them from their communities.
...
Please, fathers, consider whether you are building that safe space in your own home. And, when a child comes to you saying that they were assaulted, believe them. Doing this is hard work. Loving your child in the way they need, combatting sexual aggression, and supporting and believing survivors is hard because we’re all carrying so much baggage.'

Should We Cancel Father's Day?

Mastodon · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some Woke activists suggested that Mother's Day be called "Birthing Persons Day." After all, some "pregnant persons" identify as men (or non-women) and don't like being in a place called a "maternity ward." If the birthing person's pronouns are "he/him," that person might identify as the child's father though not contributing the paternal genetic material. Should "he" get a Father's Day card?

What should we call the person who contributes the paternal material? In Aldous Huxley's Brave New World, family words like "mother" and "father" are viewed as obscenities. We're not quite there yet, as babies can't yet be grown in a bottle and decanted, but we can try to make progress in our language.

What would be the equivalent term for father? "Sperm donor" is even less personal than "birthing person." The child will never call him "Daddy" and will have great difficulty finding out who he is. He might have been picked from a catalog, with anonymity promised. He probably does not know of his child's existence.

In 2017, there was a proposal to rename Father's Day "Special Person's Day." Or perhaps we should follow the precedent of President's Day, which replaced Washington's Birthday and Lincoln's Birthday. We want to obliterate the memory of Washington's defeating the British Empire and becoming the Father of Our Country, or of Lincoln's abolition of slavery and desire to unite our country. Just lump them in with others who managed, by whatever means, to get inaugurated as president, no matter their effect on our nation.

How about Parent's Day? Or Caregiver's Day, or better yet Caretaker's or Custodian's Day? Such persons might not be special. They might not have a name or face, being interchangeable at a bureaucrat's whim. They might be of any one of 50 or more genders. Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DIE, no, DEI) is invading the family as well as the school, the workplace, and the church.

The family itself is perceived to be the problem, and radicals are targeting it for extinction.'

India: "No One Informed Me": Case Against Odisha MLA For Missing His Own Wedding

Matt · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A case was filed against BJD MLA Bijay Shankar Das on Saturday after he failed to turn up for his own wedding, police said.

The case was filed against Bijay Shankar Das, the legislator of Tirtol, at the Jagatsinghpur Sadar police station based on the complaint of a woman who alleged that he cheated her as he did not turn up at the marriage registrar's office on Friday, they said.

...

The couple applied at the marriage registrar's office on May 17. Though the woman along with her family reached there for the wedding formalities on Friday after the stipulated 30 days, the MLA failed to turn up, as per the FIR.

Bijay Shankar Das, 30, said he has not denied getting married to her.

...

"Another 60 days are there for the registration of the marriage. Therefore, I did not turn up. I was not informed by her or anyone else to go to the marriage registrar's office," he told reporters.'

America's crisis is a lack of fathers

Matt · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As our country commemorates Father's Day this weekend, it is important that we recognize the millions of children throughout our nation who are growing up without their fathers. Data from the United States Census Bureau shows that nearly 18.5 million children grow up without their fathers, which has in return led to the United States owning the title of the world's leader in fatherlessness.

We know that fatherhood is essential to the development of our children, and the increased involvement of fathers in the home leads to better results on a wide variety of outcomes. From economic prosperity, increased academic performance, to improved social mobility; fathers in their respective homes continue to be a key indicator of success for all children across racial, ethnic, and socio-economic groups. That is why we have joined forces to introduce a resolution into the U.S. House of Representatives that promotes fatherhood and its proven benefit to society.

There is little doubt that America is experiencing an unprecedented fatherless crisis. Approximately 80% of single-parent homes are led by single mothers; therefore, leading to nearly 25% of our youth growing up without a father in the home.'

UK: MPs to scrutinise sexism in educational settings and music industry as Committee broadens work on Violence Against Women and Girls

Mastodon · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Committee Member Jackie Doyle-Price will be chairing a Sub-Committee of MPs from the Women and Equalities Committee who will meet in addition to the usual Committee meetings to focus exclusively on the topic of attitudes to women and girls in educational settings. The inquiry will scrutinise how attitudes in educational settings, from early years to university, affect women and girls throughout their lives. MPs will explore the prevalence of misogyny within the education system- including reports of widespread sexual harassment within schools and lad culture within universities, the ways in which it presents itself, and how far Government initiatives such as updated Sex and Relationships Education address the issues.'

Canada: National campaign documenting online hate against women, pushing for change

Mastodon · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Canada moves to introduce legislation to better address an ever-growing volume of online hate, a national non-profit is working to ensure the disproportionate impact on women and gender-diverse people is known.

Informed Opinions launched its Toxic Hush campaign this month, with some initial and disturbing findings from an ongoing survey documenting online harassment and hate.
...
Shari Graydon is the director of Informed Opinions, which works to amplify the voices of women and gender-diverse people. She said while online hate is increasing across the board, it is particularly bad for women with intersectional identities.
...
“The current scenario means many women don’t have freedom of speech because others are exercising hate speech that shuts them down, makes them fear, makes them go offline, makes them decline profile-raising opportunities.”'

Chief, a private club for executive women, to open in downtown San Francisco this year

Mastodon · 19 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Another new private club is opening in San Francisco, this time exclusively for female executives. Chief, a private membership network for women, will open up a multilevel space in Jackson Square, as first reported by the San Francisco Business Times.

The space at 735 Montgomery St. was originally slated to debut sometime in 2020 but was delayed because of the pandemic. The space reportedly includes a bar, a lounge space, meeting rooms, private phone booths and a mothers' room. Chief confirmed to SFGATE that they hope to launch the clubhouse before the end of the year.
...
Carolyn Childers and Lindsay Kaplan founded the network in 2017, and backers of the company include Alphabet's investment arm CapitalG. It already operates clubhouses in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago. Membership with Chief doesn't come cheap — women at the vice presidential level would pay of $5,800 annually and C-Suite executives would pay $7,900.'

5 Ways Biden's New Title IX Rules Will Eviscerate Due Process on Campus

Mastodon · 23 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, on the 50th anniversary of Title IX's implementation, the federal law that prohibits sex-based discrimination in education is getting a radical overhaul that will gut critical due process protections for students accused of sexual misconduct.

Education Secretary Miguel Cardona touted the new proposals as necessary revisions to Trump-era rules that reasserted the need for colleges and universities to treat both parties to a sexual misconduct dispute fairly and equally. The Biden administration has apparently embraced the idea—one promoted by many progressive victims' advocacy groups—that the rules propagated by previous Education Secretary Betsy DeVos made it too difficult to file sexual misconduct claims; Cardona's proposals would substantially revert Title IX compliance to the Obama-era standards, under which hundreds of students allege that they were wrongfully expelled from college following adjudication procedures that were manifestly unfair.

...

KC Johnson, a professor of history at Brooklyn College and expert on campus Title IX procedures, says that the resurrection of the single-investigator model is the most alarming aspect of the new rules.

"The possibility of wrongful findings, almost always biased against the accused, dramatically increases under such a procedural regime," he says.'

Title IX Didn't Make College Sports Equal, It Made Them Contentious

Mastodon · 25 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX initially meant educational institutions had to provide both sexes with opportunities "substantially proportionate to their respective enrollments." And a 1992 court decision determined that noncompliant schools could face lawsuits, as well as being cut off from federal funding.

But when implemented, Title IX effectively turned into a form of affirmative action for women in sports—an unsustainable quota-like system. It's proven difficult for schools to equally allocate resources—scholarships, equipment, arenas, and budgets—across genders and sports, which has caused schools to take the easy way out by slashing male programs. Especially given that football, a huge moneymaker on college campuses, doesn't have a female equivalent in size or impact.'

Commentary on the overturning of Roe v. Wade

Matt · 25 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

With Roe v. Wade overturned, to not mention it hereon is like ignoring the proverbial 800-lb. gorilla. So I won't.

One man's opinion on the recent decision made by SCOTUS: Strictly speaking it is a Constitutionalist/Constructionist decision. However getting the Con'n updated by amendment is nigh onto impossible even when a lot of ppl think it ought to be. So modernist judges use contemporary standards to find rights that are not explicitly acknowledged in the Con'n by interpreting it as if it had just been written w/ today's standards in view. In short, in the matter of individuals' rights discussed in a federalizing document, to me, there is no right answer, as both approaches to interpreting the Con'n are arguably valid. Thus the matter is political in nature since legality itself supplies no solutions. Yes indeed, it becomes a matter of just who is on SCOTUS when the matter comes before the Court.

As pertains men's rights: there are two major schools of thought, IMO. The first is that men should support abortion rights because that opens the door to men eventually getting "paper abortion" rights. Currently that's not even on the radar screen. But maybe one day. The second is that so long as women won't support "paper abortion" rights for men, why should men care if women have abortion rights? Surrounding these two positions though are non-sex-specific schools of thought, namely the pro-life and pro-choice positions. Where you stand is up to you.

As for ppl who suggest/assert that men should not or don't have a right to an opinion because they don't have uterii, I respond that such a statement may be right or it may be wrong. It doesn't really matter, because men DO have opinions on abortion, and men vote. So feminists or in general pro-choicers, ironically even male ones, may WISH men had no opinions about abortion, but we do. And, we vote, like it or not.

Finally I'd just like to say to those decrying the loss of their supposed bodily autonomy in states where abortion is now or soon will be illegal: Welcome to the world of men. Our bodily autonomy was vacated here in the US back in 1792. Subsequent Acts have fully fleshed out the definition of what it means to be in "the militia", and it includes all men of military age. Yes indeed, welcome to our world.

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Militia_Acts_of_1792
https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Militia_Act_of_1903

Expect the Title IX Inquisition

Mastodon · 29 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, on the 50th anniversary of the passage of Title IX—the federal law banning sex-based discrimination in education—the Biden administration announced sweeping proposed regulations to address how colleges and universities adjudicate sexual misconduct allegations. The move wasn't very surprising: During the 2020 campaign, Joe Biden had sharply criticized the existing regulations developed by former Education Secretary Betsy DeVos, which require colleges to conduct live hearings with cross-examination in campus Title IX cases.

Thursday's announcement did, however, represent a further escalation in a policy and legal debate that has spanned more than a decade. Beginning in 2011, the Obama administration had expressed concern that far too many students, especially female undergraduates, were sexually assaulted while in college—which was undeniably true, though specific numbers remain a point of contention. It then argued that universities too often swept these allegations under the rug—which was sometimes true, especially when cases involved allegations against powerful university employees and high-profile athletes. In response, the administration issued guidance documents threatening to withhold federal funds unless universities changed their adjudication procedures by lowering the standard of proof for sexual misconduct allegations and by allowing accusers to appeal not-guilty findings.'

New Louisiana law strengthens due process protections in college disciplinary procedures

Mastodon · 29 June 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new Louisiana law, which Gov. John Bel Edwards, a Democrat, signed on June 15, contains similarities to the DeVos regulation.

For one, public colleges must offer students or student organizations the chance to make opening and closing statements during disciplinary panels, and give them the power to cross-examine witnesses.

These proceedings also can't be marred by conflicts of interest, the law states. To ensure that, college officials cannot take on certain multiple roles in disciplinary cases — for instance, an investigator and adjudicator can't be the same person.

If students or student-run groups are found to have violated a college's rules, they must be able to appeal to an administrator or entity that did not make the initial decision.'

Landmark report calls for affirmative consent laws in Queensland

Mastodon · 1 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A major review has called for Queensland to adopt affirmative consent laws among sweeping reforms to the handling of victims of sexual assault and violence in the state's criminal justice system.

The long-awaited final report of the Women's Safety and Justice Taskforce includes 188 recommendations to improve experiences with the justice system.

They include calls for the state government to carry out a "comprehensive" community education campaign to address "rape myths" and for Queensland to adopt affirmative consent laws.'

Boris Johnson blames Ukraine war on Putin's 'toxic masculinity'

Mastodon · 1 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boris Johnson blamed Russia's war in Ukraine on "toxic masculinity" just days after Vladimir Putin defended his penchant for bare-chested photographs.

The UK prime minister called the invasion a "crazy macho war" after Putin said Johnson would look "disgusting" if he attempted to flex his flesh like the Russian strongman.

"If you want a perfect example of toxic masculinity, it's what he's doing in Ukraine," Johnson told a German television outlet Wednesday.

"You need more women in positions of power. If Putin was a woman — which he obviously isn't — but if he were, I really don't think he would have embarked on a crazy macho war of invasion and violence in the way that he has."'

European Queens Waged More Wars Than Kings:

https://www.thecut.com/2016/01/european-queens-waged-more-wars-than-kings.html

Beyond ‘male privilege’. An interview with Rick Bradford (aka Will Collins), author of The Empathy Gap.

Matt · 1 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It would be easy to make the mistake of thinking men’s issues have become a more acceptable area of discourse over the last nine years, but this might be because we operate within a very small bubble. Where it matters – in Government, education, academia, the arts, and the entertainment and corporate worlds – things are on a one-way ratchet. Lip service may be paid now and then, but in policy and legislation there continues to be a monopoly on sympathy and concern for just one sex. Most men, including myself, would be quite content to tolerate even very high levels of disadvantage if that were compensated by commensurate respect. But it is the withdrawal of all respect for men and its replacement with bottomless vilification that renders the situation of men now entirely unacceptable.

...

It continues to surprise me that most people seem not to be aware of how uncomfortable men feel when subject to female disapproval. The origin of this is, I suspect, the ceding of moral authority from man to woman in the pair bond. Being disapproved of by a moral authority is bound to be discomforting. But – unless this is simply my ignorance – the ceding of moral authority as an aspect of the human pair bond seems also to lack widespread appreciation.'

Why do so many incompetent men become leaders?

Matt · 2 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

This TEDx talk is over three years old. The speaker denounces male leaders in general and pushes for more female leaders because the guys are just so incompetent.

I would love to know what MANN readers think of this talk. Some breakdown/analysis/critical deconstruction, if necessary. Comments are open, as always.

Bodega Bullying

Matt · 2 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The author asks if the subject's sex (and race) weren't the key factors in him being targeted. What's your opinion of the situation? Excerpt:

'There are many cancellable offenses in the land of the free. Expressing the wrong opinion on a multitude of issues – from immigration policy, to drag shows for children, to whether Kyle Rittenhouse deserves life in prison – is a surefire way to find yourself vilified and, quite often, unemployed. What's worse is that the borders of wrongthink continue to expand, rendering it difficult to know which opinions result in life ruination. Such was the lesson Griffin Green learned when he made the grave mistake of having the 'wrong' opinion on bodegas, of all things.

However, Green's disdain for bodegas was far from the only reason he faced a torrent of online hate, which culminated in his firing. Griffin Green was ultimately guilty of being an insufficiently woke white guy.'

Dilbert Creator Slammed for His Solution to 'Dangerous Young Man Problem'

Mastodon · 7 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dilbert creator Scott Adams has sparked outrage after suggesting that families could be forced to "kill" young men unless society adopts his "solution" to the "danger" they pose to themselves or others.

Adams argued that "society" forced parents to choose between murdering their own "broken" teenage sons or risking additional deaths in a series of tweets on Wednesday. The veteran cartoonist, also known as an outspoken supporter of former President Donald Trump, said that this week's deadly mass shooting in Highland Park, Illinois, and fentanyl overdoses among young men were "teaching us the same lesson." Adams said that he was "qualified" to weigh in on the matter due to his 18-year-old stepson dying of a fentanyl overdose in 2018.'

HHS gives NYU $40,000 to study why children 'favor Whiteness and maleness'

Mastodon · 7 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has awarded over $40,000 to New York University (NYU) researchers to conduct a study on why children "favor Whiteness and maleness over other identities."

The project titled, "Societal assumptions regarding typical personhood and their effects on reasoning development," seeks to uncover the developmental processes by which children "acquire the belief that White males represent the default person – a pattern rooted in the ideologies of androcentrism (centering the experiences of men) and ethnocentrism (centering the experiences of White people) prevalent in the United States," according to the grant summary on USASpending.gov.'

"There’s an antifeminist backlash silencing women – more and more literally"

Mastodon · 7 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Defamation suits are becoming a routine tool of retaliation and revenge for men accused of sexual and domestic abuse – and a growing threat to women’s ability to safely and freely speak about their own lives. The advocacy group Know Your IX, which lobbies on behalf of student survivors of sexual violence, says that 23% of students who make Title IX complaints are threatened with defamation suits by their alleged abusers.

Depp is just one of a growing number of high-profile men who have retaliated with lawsuits against the women who have accused them of violence, or the journalists who have investigated these accusations. Depp now shares this litigious distinction with his friend, the musician Marilyn Manson, and with the Barstool Sports executive Dave Portnoy. These lawsuits are not meant to determine whether a man should be punished for his abuse of women. They are meant to determine whether women should be punished for speaking about it.'

The Unintended Downside Of Title IX For Women

Mastodon · 11 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX hasn't only changed the gender makeup of college coaching, but it has recently also hindered programs aimed at attracting women into STEM fields. Women are typically underrepresented in high-paying fields like engineering or computer science, so many universities offer special scholarships or programs to attract women into these fields.

For the same reasons that universities can't offer sports to men only under Title IX, they can't offer awards or programs solely for women. So programs aimed at helping women are being called out as discriminatory against men. As a result, the Department of Education is investigating and shuttering not just women's scholarships and awards at universities but leadership programs and even gym hours reserved for women as well. These programs discriminate against men according to Title IX.

Like so many laws aimed at helping a particular group, there are unintended side effects of Title IX. Title IX's fiftieth anniversary should certainly be celebrated, but we should be aware of the law's downsides as well.'

Ohio bill would allow civil lawsuit over unintended pregnancy

Mastodon · 14 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Senate Bill 262 states that if the impregnator is found guilty in the civil suit, then they could face fines of at least $5,000. With the “Heartbeat Bill” in effect, there are no considerations for rape or incest, but Maharath said at least with SB 262, the father would have to take financial responsibility.

“When I’m thinking ‘unintentional,’ and this would be an interpretation the courts would have to decide, I’m thinking of those types of situations,” said Maharath.

The mother would have up to five years after conception to sue.

Marahath said these civil cases would be handled comparably to child support cases — with proof of paternity being a component. If the guilty party cannot pay the fine, then Maharath said she envisions it being handled within the court.'

UK: Darlington woman jailed for making false rape allegation

Mastodon · 14 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who falsely branded her neighbour a rapist when she alleged he had attacked her in a tent in her garden has been jailed.

Jade Wass reported her vulnerable neighbour to the police in July 2020 when she claimed the man, known only as Mr X, had raped her - an allegation that left the man feeling 'suicidal'.

Teesside Crown Court heard how the 26-year-old kept up her story for months before police finally decided that she has lied about the alleged attack.

Richard Bennett, prosecuting, said the man, who has a medical condition causing significant sight loss, was held in custody for more than 15 hours while police questioned him about the false allegations.
...
Judge Howard Crowson jailed Wass for two years after hearing the impact the allegation had on the man and other victims of sex crimes.

He said: “Deliberately false claims are extremely rare. False allegations have a tendency to give unjustified credence to the false claims that sex offenders are that they too are victims of false allegations.”

Wass was also made subject of an indefinite restraining order to protect the victim.'

"TV’s Best New Show Is a Study of Masculinity in Crisis"

Matt · 17 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Read this. If the show depicted instead a restaurant staffed entirely by women except for one man under the same circumstances, would the writer speak of "femininity in crisis"? Would such a show, these days, even get made? Excerpt:

'Throughout its eight episodes, The Bear is preoccupied with masculinity, and almost anthropological in its analysis of the ways in which men and male-dominated cultures are set up to fail. What if, it seems to wonder, the qualities required for people to thrive in hierarchies—kitchens, boardrooms, small-time criminal subsets—are also poisoning those worlds from within?

...

Edebiri, in turn, shows flashes of Sydney’s anguish beneath her intentional, workaholic surface. She cares as much about food and the art of cooking as Carmy does, but doesn’t believe they have to be tainted with what she describes as “a toxic hierarchical shit show.” In the third episode, she confronts him after a brutal shift, but her words and tone are tightly modulated. She wants to provoke change, not anger.'

India: Woman Willingly Staying With Man Can't File Rape Case If Relationship 'Turns Sour', Says Supreme Court

Matt · 17 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court ruled on Thursday that a woman who was in a relationship with a man and willingly stayed with him could not later file a rape case if the relationship turned sour. With the observation, the Bench of Justices Hemant Gupta and Vikram Nath granted anticipatory bail to one Ansaar Mohammad, who was accused of rape, unnatural offences, and criminal intimidation, according to reports.

“The complainant has willingly been staying with the appellant and had the relationship. Therefore, now if the relationship is not working out, the same cannot be a ground for lodging an FIR for the offence under Section 376(2)(n) IPC," the order said, a report by the Bar and Bench stated.'

Women more at risk from heatwaves than men, experts suggest

Mastodon · 18 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Females may be more vulnerable to extreme high temperatures such as the heatwave gripping the UK than males, experts have suggested.

The heatwave plan for England states that those at high risk include the over-75s, babies, young children, people with severe physical or mental illness and females.

The document does not explain why females are on the list, but the UK Health Security Agency pointed to a study in the Netherlands that looked at mortality after various heatwaves and found elderly women are at higher risk than men. The researchers said the results were not simply down to age.'

The military-industrial complex is now run by women

Matt · 20 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here.

'The CEOs of four of the five biggest defense contractors are women. Watch Ali Velshi break down who is running Northrop Grumman, Lockheed Martin, General Dynamics, Boeing's defense wing, and weapons negotiations for the U.S.'

UK: Women's health: Plan to stop 'sexist' NHS treatment

Mastodon · 20 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Doctors in England will be given mandatory training to better treat female medical conditions under wider plans to improve women's health.

Free access to NHS fertility treatment will be expanded and there will be more funding for mobile breast cancer screening.

The government said the changes, part of its women's health strategy, were based on responses from 100,000 people.

But critics said more must be done to close the "gender gap" in NHS services.

The government opened a call for evidence in Spring 2021 to collect views on women's health from members of the public, academics, charities and campaigners.

Women in England live on average four years longer than men but spend more of their life in poor health, which can limit their ability to work and participate in day-to-day activities.'

'Women do hard things better' – HYDROVISION celebrates the sector's influential leaders

Mastodon · 20 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the Women with Hydro Vision lunch and awards programme that took place at the HYDROVISION International conference and exhibition in Denver, Colorado this week, attendees heard about the importance of women as leaders, emphasized by a powerful quote from Harvard Business Review: "Women do hard things better."

Harvard Business Review also reported that women leaders have more engaged teams, drive better job performance and save their organisations millions of dollars as a result. If you distill the key traits of strong leaders, two come to the top: wisdom and compassion.'

Tel Aviv Allowing Women-only Film Screening Despite City Pledge to End Gender Segregation

Mastodon · 20 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Tel Aviv municipality is limiting a public film screening solely to women on Wednesday based on religious considerations after pledging last year not to permit “gender segregation between women and men at events in public space.”

The municipality has recently publicized the showing of the film “Trapped in Iran” at a community center in the Neveh Ofer neighborhood of southern Tel Aviv as “for women and girls only.”'

The Boys Are Doing Just Fine (A smaller share of college-goers are male. So what?)

Mastodon · 20 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I acknowledge that men's college completion rates trail those of women. Racial and ethnic achievement gaps persist and were even exacerbated by the pandemic in some cases. These are complex issues tied to economic conditions and unjust social structures.

But so is — and has been — the story for women who only recently caught up to men in college-going numbers — and who have a long way to go in the work-force and leadership positions. Much like Ginger Rogers, today's women are doing everything the men are doing but "backward and in heels," to which I would add: "and for less pay."

In Texas, we like to say that in order to succeed, you have to pull yourself up by your bootstraps and get to work. It seems as though women are doing just that, and yet, some characterize women's enrollment outpacing men's as a crisis. Maybe we should fan the flames of some real crises, like pay equity or the closure of women's colleges. Relatively speaking, the boys are doing just fine.'

The Freakonomics Podcast on the Future of College and Men

Matt · 21 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A May 2022 Freakonomics Radio Podcast, What is the Future of College — and Does it Have Room for Men?, dovetailed quite nicely with an article I wrote in November of 2021. In When Ame Embraced Wonder Woman and forgot G.I. Joe, I addressed different cultural ethos that led to a shift in the ways we treat our nation's sons and daughters, particularly in the field of education and policy action in general.

The Freakonomics crew addressed the statistical realities of modern education while identifying individuals working to create positive change and discuss alternatives to help improve the educational outcomes boys and young men. Whether it's Dr. Ruth Simmons, (a woman who served as Presidents of Smith College, Brown University, and Prairie View A&M) recognition of the way "we treat our boys in K-12 education" or the observations of a number of others interviewed in the podcast, we see a real shift in the conversation regarding the place of boys and men in a society that needs educated men and women. Our nation is not seeing enough policy action or systemic change for boys and men in the education system, but there is more conversation.'

'Male college crisis': Male high school graduates going to college at much lower rates than women

Mastodon · 23 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nationally, it's being described as a "male college crisis," and Indiana is not immune to the trend. Male high school graduates are going to college at much lower rates than women, and that gap continues to widen.

Indiana higher education officials describe it as "a concerning gap ...This is the first time in recent history the male college-going rate has dropped to below half (46%)," in reference to the high school graduating class of 2020.

In contrast, the college going rate for Hoosier women in 2020 was 61%.

The report focused on the overall decline in college attendance, with just 53% of Indiana high school graduates going to college in 2020, a one-year decline described as “alarming” by Chris Lowery, Indiana’s new commissioner for higher education.

In a November 2021 article for Inside Higher Education, Angela Baldasare wrote, "While the exact causes of this trend line are difficult to pin down, the pressures on men to work and provide are commonly cited, as are campus climates and services not tailored to men, increased uncertainty during the pandemic, negative impacts of the pandemic on career choices, not wanting to take classes online and the lack of internet access and/or technology."'

LA’s radical gender-theory material will badly harm K-12 kids — while the adults keep getting their paychecks

Mastodon · 23 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Los Angeles Unified School District has adopted a radical gender-theory curriculum encouraging teachers to work toward the “breakdown of the gender binary,” to experiment with gender pronouns such as “they,” “ze,” and “tree” and to adopt “trans-affirming” programming to make their classrooms “queer all school year.”

I have obtained a trove of publicly accessible documents from LA Unified that illustrates the extent to which gender ideology has entered the mainstream of the nation’s second-largest school district. Since 2020, the district’s Human Relations, Diversity and Equity department (or HRDE) has created an infrastructure to translate the basic tenets of academic queer theory into K-12 pedagogy.

...

In a week-long conference last fall titled “Standing with LGBTQ+ Students, Staff, and Families,” administrators hosted workshops with presentations on “breaking the [gender] binary,” providing children with “free gender affirming clothing,” understanding “what your queer middle schooler wants you to know” and producing “counter narratives against the master narrative of mainstream white cis-heteropatriarchy society.” The narrative follows the standard academic slop: white, cisgender, heterosexual men have built a repressive social structure, divided the world into the false binary of man and woman and used this myth to oppress racial and sexual minorities.'

A divorce case to watch

Matt · 25 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The woman who allegedly broke up Elon Musk and Sergey Brin's years-long friendship grew up in poverty in the San Francisco Bay Area before becoming a lawyer and dating some of the world's richest men.

Nicole Shanahan, 37, is said to have had a brief affair with Musk at Art Basel, a multi-day art event in Miami, in December of last year, which prompted her Google co-founder husband to file for divorce in January.

Brin, who is estimated to have a net worth of $95 billion, cited 'irreconcilable differences' as the reason, but The Wall Street Journal on Sunday reported that it was Musk's dalliance with Nicole that signaled the end of their marriage.

They were both in Miami for the art festival, at a time when Shanahan and Brin were reportedly already having marital problems due to the stress of COVID-19 and raising their 4-year-old daughter.

Musk, meanwhile, had just separated from girlfriend Grimes.

Just about one month later, Brin filed for divorce - listing December 15 as their date of separation. He has also reportedly instructed his aides to take all of his investments out of Musk's many companies.

Now, sources say Shanahan is asking for $1 million in her divorce - more than what she agree to in a prenup, but a far cry from what she had as a child, when she lived off food stamps and tried to help her two unemployed parents financially.'

Dallas airport accused shooter has lengthy criminal record, claimed to be Chris Brown's wife, 'God's prophet'

Matt · 26 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If she were male, they wouldn't be reporting it like this. Excerpt:

'The accused female shooter at Dallas Love Field Airport has a lengthy criminal record and had previously told police that she was "God's prophet" and was married to R&B singer-songwriter Chris Brown.

Over the past several years, 37-year-old Portia Odufuwa has faced charges including arson, robbery, criminal trespass and false reporting in cities across North Texas.

But in many of those incidents, judges deemed her incompetent to stand trial, she was referred to either or both inpatient or outpatient mental health services, and the cases were dismissed, The Dallas Morning News has reported. And as recently as last summer, a Dallas County judge ruled she was not a danger to others.

Before she allegedly changed clothes in the airport bathroom, pulled out a gun near a ticketing counter and opened fire into the ceiling at about 11 a.m. Monday, court records show Odufuwa had allegedly pulled a gun on a hotel front desk clerk in April 2021 at a time when she was homeless.'

UK: Art company behind 'straight white men pass the power' posters given £3million of taxpayers' money

Mastodon · 28 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An art company which created posters telling straight white men to pass the power was given £3million in government funding.

The controversial posters went viral when author Douglas Murray posted a picture of one taken in Southwark, London, on Twitter.

Comments on the posters ranged from bemusement to fury at such a negative sentiment being plastered in a busy area of the capital.

One Twitter user commented: "London over years has become so detached from most of the country's sentiments, it is mental to have something like this be considered an acceptable messaging."'

Hockey Canada Announces Plan To Address 'Toxic Behaviours' With Focus On Masculinity & Consent

Mastodon · 28 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hockey Canada has released a new plan of action for tackling the "culture of silence," which includes a focus on "masculinity, consent and toxic behaviours."

The Action Plan — as the organization is calling it — has several key aspects aimed at a culture shift within Hockey.

These include adopting a new Universal Code of Conduct To Prevent and Address Maltreatment and creating a system for tracking and reporting complaints of mistreatment, abuse and harassment.
...
Hockey Canada will also be training its players, coaches, employees and volunteers about things such as consent and masculinity.

It will also be reviewing all existing training with an "independent specialist."'

Colleges, courts on collision course

Mastodon · 28 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You're accused of a serious offense. Determined to clear your name, you agree to an interview and give a voluntary statement. The evidence against you is secret, and there's no right to face your accuser. Weeks later, the same person who informed you of the allegation decides your punishment.

That farcical facsimile of justice is better suited to a corrupt autocracy than a constitutional republic, but if Catherine Lhamon has her way, it will become the norm at American colleges and universities.

Lhamon, the U.S. Department of Education's assistant secretary for civil rights, is the driving force behind new Title IX regulations currently in the notice-and-comment stage of federal rulemaking. When the proposed rules take effect, colleges will face pressure to adjudicate sexual assault and harassment claims without even a cursory pretense of fairness.'

Who needs Title IX now?

Mastodon · 28 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By numerous educational yardsticks, it is men, not women, who today lag far behind. In most academic fields — biology, communications, the arts, public administration, education, health care, psychology, English — women now earn a majority of bachelor's degrees.

"It is young men, more than young women, who are at risk and facing serious educational and work-related challenges," notes Perry. Those gender disparities carry over far beyond academics. Men are much more likely than women to end up with "a variety of measures of (a) behavioral and mental health outcomes, (b) alcoholism, drug addiction, and drug overdoses, (c) suicide, murder, violent crimes, and incarceration, and (d) homelessness."

For all that, Perry writes, it is girls and women who are favored with "a disproportionate amount of attention, resources, and financial support" at all levels of education — such as after-school and summer programs for girls, female-only scholarships and fellowships, and hundreds of women's centers and women's commissions.

Title IX, it is worth remembering, did not mandate unequal preferences for women. It mandated no unequal preferences for any person on the basis of sex. In the 50 years since Title IX was signed into law, the imbalance that so disfavored girls and women has been replaced by an imbalance that grievously disfavors boys and men. That isn't an improvement. Indeed, it's illegal.'

‘Brazen Discrimination’: Cruz Grills Biden Official Over State Dept Email Allegedly Excluding ‘Straight White Men’

Mastodon · 29 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Republican Texas Sen. Ted Cruz pressed the State Department’s chief Diversity and Inclusion officer Gina Abercrombie-Winstanley over an email allegedly excluding “straight, white men” and people of the wrong religion from being hired.

The senator argued Tuesday that the department’s Equity Action Plan, which changed hiring practices at the agency, is “nothing more than brazen discrimination.” An email from a senior department official described reports from candidates claiming to be denied a position for having a disability or for classifying as “white men, straight white men, [or] not [being] of the right religion.”

“Did you clear this guidance?” Cruz asked during the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on “diversity, equity and inclusion.”

“I’ve never seen that before,” Abercrombie-Winstanley said.'

UK: Who'll speak up for the working-class white boys who've become Britain's new oppressed minority?

Mastodon · 29 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Britain, we are often told, is a deeply racist and intolerant society, in which sinister 'power structures' hold back minority ethnic groups, while the white majority push selfishly ahead.

Yet new data flies in the face of this fashionable narrative.

Following a national drive to make undergraduate intakes more 'diverse', figures released on Thursday by the Department for Education showed that, for the first time, white young people are now proportionately the least likely of all major ethnic groups to attend our top universities.

Among Britain's Chinese families, some 40.7 per cent of their youngsters made it to Oxford, Cambridge and others in the elite Russell Group in 2020-21. The figures for Asian young people were 16 per cent. It was 10.7 per cent for black families — and just 10.5 per cent among white ones.

Of course, in some ways, this is an inspirational success story. That children from non-white backgrounds are thriving in Britain's educational system is something to celebrate.

Commendable, too, are our universities' efforts to make their student intakes more diverse. Many of these establishments are world-leading and it is right they should be open to anyone with the brains and aptitude to succeed in them.'

Canada: Supreme Court rules not wearing condom against partner's wishes could lead to sexual assault conviction

Matt · 29 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People who don't wear condoms during sex after being told to by their sexual partners can be convicted of sexual assault, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled today.

In its unanimous decision, the top court ruled that "stealthing" — the act of pretending to use a condom, or removing one prior to sex without the partner's consent — can violate the legal grounds for consensual sex.

"Sex with and without a condom are fundamentally and qualitatively distinct forms of physical touching," Justice Sheilah Martin wrote in the majority decision.'

Loss of Male Sex Chromosome Leads to Earlier Death for Men

Matt · 29 July 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The loss of the male sex chromosome as many men age causes the heart muscle to scar and can lead to deadly heart failure, new research from the University of Virginia School of Medicine shows. The finding may help explain why men die, on average, several years younger than women.

UVA researcher Kenneth Walsh, Ph.D., says the new discovery suggests that men who suffer Y chromosome loss—estimated to include 40% of 70-year-olds—may particularly benefit from an existing drug that targets dangerous tissue scarring.'

"Sad reason why Australian bong-smoking teacher supplied drugs to students"

Mastodon · 1 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A teacher who admitted to selling drugs to high school students avoided prison after she told a court she was suffering from severe mental health issues when she was filmed smoking cannabis with them.

Lauren Russell faced Sutherland Local Court on Monday after pleading guilty to supplying illegal drugs to students from Lucas Heights Community School in Sydney's south in late 2021.

The physics teacher, who was also working as the school's Year 12 Adviser at the time, walked free on Monday, ending a five-month ordeal in court.'

Yvie Jones slams 'powerful white men' in Australia and claims they are 'scared' of women and minorities

Mastodon · 2 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yvie Jones slammed 'powerful white men' in Australia during Tuesday's episode of the Two Girls One Pod podcast.

The former television personality, 49, told co-host Angie Kent they are 'scared' of women and minorities, and don't want them 'to have voices'.

'Unfortunately, a lot of people think that this country has been run quite well because it's been serving them more than well,' she said.

She continued: 'Especially powerful white men who are frightened of people of colour, native people, women. They don't want any of us to have voices.'

UK: Premier League players 'will receive mandatory sexual consent training'

Mastodon · 4 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Premier League players and staff will reportedly have to receive mandatory sexual consent training this season.

Discussions were held between the Premier League and campaign groups End Violence for Women, the Three Hijabis and Level Up back in June over the matter of confronting 'gender-based violence', and new rules are now set to be implemented.

Shaista Aziz, co-director of the Three Hijabis, has praised the Premier League for their swift action but has hit out at the FA for their lack of urgency in dealing with the issue.'

Who are Smarter – Men or Women? Know These Scientific Studies

Mastodon · 4 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men and women are seen as equal in all aspects of life. Many feminism and equality movements have strengthened the position of women in society. Gone are the days when men would dominate the opposite gender by showing their so-called masculinity. Things have changed for good. Today, many women are leading companies, living freely without worrying about the opinions of society or societal norms. Women have become more liberal and less vulnerable.

...

According to many recent studies, women are smarter than men. So, what makes them more intelligent than the opposite gender?

Some factors include having a better memory than men, being able to handle stressful situations better than them, having the quality of multitasking, etc. It is found that women are better leaders, more careful drivers, and better students than men. Some studies also state that women are more focused and frugal than men.'

Texas Teacher Gets 60 Day Prison Sentence for Sex with 6th Grader

Mastodon · 4 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week, 32-year-old Marka Bodine went before Harris County Judge George Glass who sentenced her to 60 days in prison and 10 years of probation following her guilty plea on the charge of continuous sexual abuse of a child, ABC13 reported. The sentence was postponed due to the recent birth of her child. She has until June 5, 2023, to report to jail. The underage victim was not the child's father, according to a New York Post report. The defendant was an English teacher for Tomball ISD north of Houston.

The sentence came as a surprise to the Harris County District Attorney's Office, which requested a minimum sentence of 20 years in prison, District Attorney Kim Ogg revealed in a Facebook post.'

CNN’s Bash blames wage gap for Griner arrest, claims player wouldn't have been in Russia if WNBA paid like NBA

Mastodon · 4 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CNN anchor and chief political correspondent Dana Bash claimed that the WNBA’s low pay, as compared to NBA players’ salaries, could have been a factor in the sentencing of WNBA player Brittney Griner to nine years in a Russian prison.

Bash insisted that if it weren’t for the wage gap, Griner wouldn’t have had to play in Russia to generate revenue for the league. Thus, she would have never been arrested for having cannabis oil vape cartridges at a Moscow airport.

After pleading guilty to drug possession and drug smuggling of cannabis oil last month, Phoenix Mercury player Brittney Griner was handed a nine-year prison sentence by a Russian court on Thursday. Griner was fined the equivalent of $16,400 in Russian Rubles in addition to the sentence.'

"How Women Can Work Better With Men"

Mastodon · 5 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Be The Adult
I once read somewhere that behavior is always a reflection of age or stage of development. And Dr. Robert Kegan, who studies adult human development at Harvard University, has found that most individuals are stuck at an earlier stage of development marked by hubris and pride. The behaviors of male colleagues that frustrate women are generally a reflection of that stunted adult development.

With this understanding, it's easier to be the adult, and perhaps easier still if you happen to be a parent. When you see your co-worker as a child who is acting out of line, seeking attention, or interrupting you mid-conversation, you'll instinctively know how to keep your cool, discern what the situation calls for, and respond assertively when you need to do so. You may not do anything differently to what you're already doing. But you'll do so from a place of power.'

University of Kansas offers 'Angry White Male Studies' class

Matt · 6 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Kansas is offering a course in the fall called "Angry White Male Studies" that will examine the "rise" of the "angry white male" in the United States.

The course will be offered during the Fall 2022 term with the goal of teaching about the "prominent figure" that is "the angry white male," Campus Reform reported.

"This course charts the rise of the ‘angry white male’ in America and Britain since the 1950s, exploring the deeper sources of this emotional state while evaluating recent manifestations of male anger," the course description states.
...
Questions that will be answered about angry White males in Forth's class, according to the course description, include, "Where does he come from? What's he angry about? Is his anger misplaced? Is he blaming the right people? How long has this been going on? Is he a global phenomenon? And how do we move forward?"
...
The class has drawn criticism on social media and from Kansas Republican Congressman Ron Estes who suggested in 2019 that the class could violate Title IX.'

‘Boycott Darlings’ trends as Alia Bhatt slammed for ‘mocking violence against men’

Mastodon · 7 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alia Bhatt’s film Darlings has kicked up a storm on social media, just ahead of its Netflix release on Friday, with audience upset over the alleged trivialisation of domestic violence against men in the movie’s trailer.

The 2.34-minute trailer opens with Hamza Shaikh (played by Vijay Varma), confessing his love for his wife Badrunissa, but revealing that he is leaving her. The next flurry of scenes show Hamza being held captive by Badrunissa (played by Alia Bhat), who fakes his kidnapping, and instead tortures him in revenge for the abuse he has inflicted on her.

The ‘dark comedy’ is replete with graphic scenes, where a helpless and seemingly clueless Hamza, tied to a chair, is constantly and rather brutally tortured and beaten up. There is a scene where Badrunissa says, “Enough of fielding, now is the time to bat,” before bashing Hamza’s head with a frying fan.'

How Darlings normalises domestic violence and makes a mockery out of it

India: Gurugram: Woman accused of filing nine false rape FIRs gets bail

Mastodon · 7 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman from Gurugram who is accused of filing nine false rape FIRs against at least eight boys has been granted bail by the Punjab and Haryana high court. A High Court bench headed by Justice JS Bedi observed that the accused had been in custody since December 29, 2021 and the investigation was now complete, as reported by the Hindustan Times.

However, only one of the prosecution witnesses has been examined so far, therefore, the trial is not likely to conclude in the near future. The accused had approached the court over an FIR registered on December 23, 2021, in which she was charged with extortion, blackmail, false evidence, and criminal conspiracy, reported the Hindustan Times.

The accused had registered nine rape FIRs between September 2021 and November 2021. Finally, she was arrested based on a complaint from two families whose sons had been falsely implicated by her. The case was first brought to light by documentary filmmaker and activist Deepika Narayan Bhardwaj, reported the Hindustan Times.'

The Atlantic explores what will it take to separate fatherhood from anger and violence

Mastodon · 7 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is the section in which The Atlantic talks about books, like “Raising Raffi,” journalist Keith Gessen’s memoir of his first years parenting his son, in which discipline becomes a “quicksand of confusing implications.” But rather than kick off with a book, Andrew Aoyama introduces the topic of what it will take to separate fatherhood from anger and violence by referring to the “Taken” movies:

A stomach-twisting thrill animates the Taken movies. As bullets fly across each progressively more ridiculous sequel, Liam Neeson kicks down the door to the pantheon of cultural Super Dads and asserts himself as its king. Here is a paragon of fatherhood, the films suggest; here is a dad endowed with “a very particular set” of parenting skills, a man who may struggle to connect with his daughter emotionally but can unleash a hail of violence each time she encounters a band of licentious kidnappers.

If today it’s hard to watch Taken without at least some disgust at the glorification of Neeson’s bloodshed, perhaps it’s because the traditional conception of fatherhood his character embodies has begun to fall out of step with shifting understandings of masculinity.'

Men For Total Equality

Mastodon · 7 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Men For Total Equality

Over 100 straight white male photo books were cut up to make this book

Mastodon · 8 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Scumb Manifesto" is a series of collages that Kurland made from her personal library of photobooks. In fact, she purged her photo book collection in the act of making this work. She cut up the work of 150 straight white men who have monopolized the photographic canon.
...
The title of Kurland's book plays off one of the first feminist texts written by Valerie Solanas. It was titled "Scum Manifesto," and it essentially called for, as Kurland points out in an essay in her own book, "an end to men, and the power that seeks domination, exploitation and death, and the creation of a superior, all-female society."'

Men’s Rights Activists Call For Boycott of Movie That Deprives Men of Their Right to Be Violent

Mastodon · 8 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Halt the turning of the globe: men are upset. This time, it’s over a film that portrays a woman’s revenge against domestic violence, which was intolerable to men who felt that it was actually about domestic violence against men. In calling for the boycott of a film every once in a while, passionate defenders of the men’s cause feel that real justice for male survivors of violence is served. Even as audiences were invited to suspend their disbelief to watch how a woman has the agency to enact violence back at her perpetrator, MRAs blamed feminism for their collective suspension of consciousness on the issue of violence perpetrated against men.

They felt hurt, moreover, that the film denies their agency to carry out domestic violence without any repercussions — sounding the alarm on their rights being robbed. Fortunately for them, domestic violence still remains a gendered issue in which women continue to have little agency in the real world — leaving more than adequate room for men’s rights.'

Women Only Drivers Insurance Market to See Huge Growth by 2027: Allianz, AXA, Munich Reinsurance America

Mastodon · 8 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The latest study released on the Global Women Only Drivers Insurance Market by AMA Research evaluates market size, trend, and forecast to 2027. The Women Only Drivers Insurance market study covers significant research data and proofs to be a handy resource document for managers, analysts, industry experts and other key people to have ready-to-access and self-analyzed study to help understand market trends, growth drivers, opportunities and upcoming challenges and about the competitors.

...

A women-only driver's insurance provides are easier and effective coverages, this permits women to get car insurance. Additionally, car insurance turns as an immediate release for women at the time of emergency situations including late-night hours and car breaks. Additionally, women-only driver insurance provides additional advantages over normal car insurance including hotel accommodation at odd hours and a car towing facility. Female motorists with perfect driving records frequently pay significantly more for auto insurance as compared to male drivers with undistinguishable driving records.'

Toronto woman set on fire: Violence against women and girls should be treated as a hate crime

Mastodon · 8 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, a young woman died as a result of severe burns after a man poured a flammable liquid on her and then set fire to her while she was on a bus in Toronto in June.

Police are investigating the homicide as a “hate-motivated” act; it is not yet known what police think was the motivation.

Given the victim was a woman, it has prompted many to ask: Why is violence against women not treated as a hate crime?

This question is long overdue and has now been taken on by British Columbia’s Office of the Human Rights Commissioner inquiry into hate in the pandemic. This is the first such inquiry in Canada, and one of few globally, to include a focus on gender-based violence as a form of hate.'

Woman pours gasoline over man and sets him on fire in California park

Satire: 9 Horrible Things Brought About By Toxic Masculinity

Mastodon · 9 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The wheel: It was just an excuse to frame women for running over curbs!

Running water: Seems like a technological advance, but it's just another male ploy to keep women in the kitchen where they belong. Disgusting!

Sports: NASCAR, WWE, MMA – the oppression runs so deep that even most women's sports are run by men.

Law and order: The actual institution, and probably the show too.

Open jars: This may sound positive, but men erase all the goodwill from their service by always eating the last peach.

"Eh, the spoon's probably clean enough": Men tout this as an "advancement for efficiency." Disgusting again!

Most science: Science? Who needs it? We have Dr. Fauci!

People: Men are involved in the procreation of humans. Humans are the worst. Thanks a lot, men.

Feminism: If only loving, servant-hearted leadership were more common, this blight on our society may not exist.'

Mississippi Grand Jury Declines to Indict Accuser in Emmett Till's Abduction and Killing

Mastodon · 9 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Mississippi grand jury declined to indict the white woman whose false accusations against Emmett Till led to his 1955 kidnapping and lynching.

According to the Associated Press, seven hours of testimony from investigators and witnesses was not enough to persuade the jury to charge 87-year-old Carolyn Bryant Donham, who accused the 14-year-old Black teenager of whistling at her and attempting to grab her hand and waist inside a store nearly seven decades ago, though she later recanted the accusations.

Citing a news release from Leflore County District Attorney Dewayne Richardson, the AP reports the jury concluded there was insufficient evidence to charge Donham with kidnapping and manslaughter despite the contradicting evidence she presented to investigators over the years.'

Mom FaceTimed ex to show how she’d slit his kids’ throats: cops

Mastodon · 10 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A disturbed Louisiana mom repeatedly video called her ex after slitting their two young kids’ throats — showing him his daughter “gasping for air” before she died, according to harrowing court documents of the “unspeakable” crime.

Jenee Pedesclaux, 31, first called her ex, Jermaine Roberts, to tell him she’d damaged his vehicle amid their bitter child-custody battle — and that she planned to kill herself and their kids rather than go to jail, according to court documents obtained by NOLA.com.

She then FaceTimed him three times to show how she’d stabbed their 2-year-old son, Jay’Ceon, and daughter, Paris, 4, the report said.

In the last video call, she showed him how she had slit both kids’ throats — with their daughter “gasping for air” on the bed before later being pronounced dead in a local New Orleans hospital, the outlet said.'

The West is homeless

Matt · 11 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In this sense there is a case to be made that the pre-modern woman, working in her home with her husband and family, had in some ways more agency and power than her contemporary counterpart whose life is directed from outside the home by distant commercial interests. Certainly the feminist movement, in at least some of its iterations, has been thoroughly hijacked by capitalism. The “liberation” of women has often translated into the separating of women from their self-sufficiency, as men were separated before them, and their embedding instead into the world of commerce, whether they want it or not.

My point is not that women should get back into the kitchen: it is that we all should. Modernity prised the men away from the home first, as the industrial revolution broke their cottage industries and swept them into the factories and mines, where their brute strength could be useful. Later the women, who had been mostly left to tend the home single-handedly, were subject to the same process. The needs of business were sold to both sexes as a project of “liberation” from home, family and place.

The reason this happened is clear enough. Making a home requires both men and women to sacrifice their own desires for that of the wider family — but this kind of sacrifice does not feed the monster. Only by unmooring the human being from his or her roots in community and place can the emancipated individual consumer and self-creator be born. Only by promoting the fulfilment of individual desire as the meaning of a human life, can the selflessness that we once prized as a cultural ideal be transmuted into the selfishness that capitalism needs to thrive. Liberation and profit, as ever, prove a seamless fit.'

Letter to Washington Post's Editorial Board

sbond2000 · 12 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The following letter was sent to each member of the Washington Post's Editorial Board after a recent op-ed that referenced the Post's "Democracy Dies in Darkness" slogan. The letter addresses the Post's hypocrisy using the slogan after publishing two hateful articles in 2018, "Why Can't We Hate Men?" and Amber Heard's op-ed that sparked Johnny Depp's defamation lawsuit against her.'

Elizabeth Warren: ‘Everyone’ Tells Me They Would Vote For Me If I ‘Had A Penis’

Mastodon · 12 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) recently blamed her failed 2020 presidential bid on the fact that she was born without a male appendage.

NBC News correspondent Ali Vitali is out with a new book, “Electable: Why America Hasn’t Put a Woman in the White House … Yet.” Based on an excerpt from the book in Politico, Warren and some in her campaign believe that one of the reasons is because Iowa’s Democratic voting base is filled with a bunch of sexists.

Vitali, who followed Warren along during the 2020 Iowa primary campaign, recounted that after the caucus was over, she discussed the campaign with Warren and why she did not do as well as she had hoped.

“We’d talked about the dynamics of Iowa, her competitors and the pressure she put on herself not ‘to screw this up,'” Vitali wrote.

“Everyone comes up to me and says, ‘I would vote for you, if you had a penis,'” she claimed Warren said.'

It’s time for feminists to say #MenToo

Mastodon · 12 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let me be clear: I am a committed feminist and a passionate supporter of the Enlightenment and its ideals. Indeed, I have been the beneficiary of those ideals in ways unimaginable to most people in the western world. I travelled from a genuinely patriarchal society poisoned by Islamism to a free, secular society where women, whatever issues we might still have, were equal to men under the law and able to pursue opportunities I could scarcely have dreamed of growing up.

As I have written before, however imperfect western civilisation might be, we haven’t seen anything like it anywhere else in human history. The progress we have made is dizzying. One of western civilisation’s greatest achievements is the emancipation of women. For most of human history, and still across large swaths of the world, women have been, at best, second-class citizens and, at worst, chattel. In the West today, women are freer than they ever have been. Why would a woman want to be born anywhere other than in the modern West?

But however grateful I am, I cannot pretend that the legacies of feminism and the Enlightenment are perfect. Like many women born into societies that oppressed them, I fully embraced western feminism, warts and all. But these days I am beginning to really see the warts.'

The Rise of the Anti-Feminists

Matt · 15 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Can't say I agree with everything here but it's a good piece no matter. Excerpt:

'Five years after #MeToo dominated the news, anti-feminism is on the rise. In South Korea, anti-feminist coalitions helped tip the recent presidential election; in the United States, young men are pledging allegiance to internet stars who peddle aggressive masculinity. But these discontented young men aren't maladjusted "incels." They haven't arbitrarily adopted a hateful ideology. Their grievances are intelligible and coherent, in part because young men in both countries are facing increasingly daunting prospects in education, employment, and marriage, although in somewhat different ways.

Faced with these conditions, anti-feminist men are adopting one of two strategies, either attacking the systems they deem oppressive, or internalizing the libertine ethos of the men who sit atop the pecking order. These responses will continue to spread, remaking relations between the sexes and disrupting our politics.'

UK: So Much for Privilege: White Working Class Boys to Fall Even Further Behind In Education

Mastodon · 15 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the wake of two years of on-and-off Wuhan virus lockdowns, white working-class boys are likely to be the biggest losers when it comes to education, with one expert predicting that this year's state exam results will show the demographic falling even further behind when it comes to university admissions.

White boys from working-class backgrounds already appeared systematically disadvantaged in the British education system, being 50 per cent less likely to earn strong grades in state exams compared to other equally poor children of different ethnicities, while white pupils as a whole in Britain have suffered the lowest entry rate into university institutions since 2007.

According to a report by The Times, things are likely to go from bad to worse, with the highly competitive post-lockdown rush for university places looking set to see disadvantaged young white boys fall even further behind the pack as the government battles to quash rapid grade inflation from the coronavirus era.'

Rantz: Seattle’s equity movement punishes white men to push race-based marijuana licenses

Mastodon · 16 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Seattle City Council and Mayor are upset that too many “cannabis businesses are owned primarily by White men.” They have a plan to tackle the issue in the name of “cannabis equity.”

The council says white men operate 87% of the city’s pot shops. This stat is supposedly proof of institutional racism. Consequently, the city launched a Racial Equity Toolkit (RET) to “address disproportionate ownership of Seattle cannabis businesses and redress some of the harms caused by the racially unequal enforcement of prior cannabis laws.”
...
The bill says the Mayor’s Office will “use summer legal interns to participate in and partner with ongoing regional efforts to work on expungement of cannabis convictions handed down prior to 2014.”

It will collect “demographic information about workers currently employed in Seattle’s cannabis industry” to develop new ideas to diversify the workforce and help determine how much the city should fund race-based training to help non-white Seattleites become pot shop owners.

Council Bill 120392 impacts marijuana license fees.

Business owners that are “social equity applicants” — a condescending term defined to almost exclusively apply to black people — would not have to pay for their marijuana license. This change gives “the greatest chances of success in entering the legal cannabis industry in Seattle,” according to the bill. Primarily white people will pay the $3,500 fee.'

RAF jobs boss quits amid claims 'offers to white men are paused to meet diversity targets'

Mastodon · 16 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Job offers to white male recruits of the RAF have effectively been paused to meet diversity targets, defence sources have claimed.

Women and ethnic minorities are reportedly being favoured in recruitment drives to meet 'impossible' targets, which has prompted the Head of Recruitment at the RAF to resign in protest.

The officer, a female herself, left the post amid concerns that hiring restrictions could undermine the strength of the service, according to sources.

Sources claim recruiters within the RAF have been told to temporarily pause offering roles to white male recruits in favour of women and ethnic minorities.
...
Last year, Admiral Sir Tony Radakin, Head of the armed forces, spoke publicly about the importance of striving for more diversity and that it was all about 'woeful' statistics.

'The woefulness of too few women,' he said. 'The woefulness of not reflecting the ethnic, religious and cognitive diversity of our nation."

Straight men, if you want to find love you'll need to do better

Mastodon · 19 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Couples psychologist Dr Greg Matos, who authored the article, wrote that women are "increasingly selective" because dating apps offer a vast number of options. "I hear recurring dating themes from women between the ages of 25 and 45," he wrote. "They prefer men who are emotionally available, good communicators, and share similar values."

Now, this criteria hardly sounds impossible to meet. If we boil it down, desiring a partner who can be there for you when you need them and treats you with respect is the barest of the bare minimum. If these are "new relationship standards", I dread to think how much lower the bar was before. But if this means that women are finally realising that they deserve better than toxic, narcissistic men, then more power to us.
...
The problem is not that straight women have finally realised their worth and are demanding to be treated better in a relationship. The problem is that straight men have not come to terms with their own toxic masculinity and archaic patriarchal values. They will not find their romantic lives improving until they take it upon themselves to dig deeper and find out what it means to be "emotionally available". Until they learn that being a good partner means being open with your thoughts, feelings and needs, while holding space for your significant other. And until they stop mansplaining and listen for once.'

Madonna Doesn’t Want ‘Misogynistic Men’ Directing Her Biopic, So She’s Doing It Herself

Mastodon · 19 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have a very long script that is really hard for me to make shorter,' she told Variety. 'I’ve been whittling away at it, but it’s like hacking off my limbs. I’ve had an extraordinary life, I must make an extraordinary film.' Madonna went on to explain that she felt strongly about taking the directorial reins on the movie after facing competition from male directors who wanted to control her narrative. 'It was also a preemptive strike because a lot of people were trying to make movies about me,' she said. 'Mostly misogynistic men. So I put my foot in the door and said, "No one’s going to tell my story, but me."

...

Too right, Madonna! Hollywood still has a sexism problem — especially when it comes to female movie directors. As reported in Forbes - after reaching new highs in 2020, the percentage of women directing top-grossing films declined since 2021, according to the Celluloid Ceiling Report from San Diego State University.'

India: Women's Panel Wants Shaktimaan Actor Charged For "Misogynistic" Remark

Mastodon · 19 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Veteran actor Mukesh Khanna is currently facing an intense backlash on social media after his recent video went viral where he made derogatory comments on women.

The chairperson of the Delhi Commission for Women, Swati Maliwal, has now filed a notice for the Delhi cyber cell seeking registration of an FIR against Mukesh Khanna for his misogynistic comments.

Talking about the video, a 22-second clip of the 7-minute-long video is travelling round the corner, which he shared on his YouTube channel Bheeshm International, in the video 'Shaktimaan' actor, could be seen saying in Hindi, "Those girls who ask for sex from a male are not girls, they are doing 'Dhanda' (business), because a girl from a good society will never do these type of shameless talks, and if she does then she is not from a good society, that's her 'Dhanda' (business), you don't participate in it."'

American Education in Numbers: Part 2

Matt · 19 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most of our contemporary education rhetoric has conflated race-based and sex-based outcomes for decades. Education data that uses race as a demographic without also disaggregating by sex is almost always misleading, and the policies and programs that follow the aforementioned practice are often predicated on a disproportionate understanding of educational data. This practice has done more than hurt particular groups; it has created barriers and entrenched students and their families into an endless cycle of woeful educational outcomes.
...

While much has been done to advance the education of our nation's daughters, our nation's sons have been uniformly falling behind, and it's a significant reason race alone is not a suitable measure when it comes to understanding educational outcomes. In 2020, for instance, the overall high school graduation rates from the lowest income quartile of blacks was 77.3%, compared to whites (79.3%), Hispanics (83.1%), and Asians (94.3%). Looking at the data more closely reveals that black females (80.4%) and Hispanic females (86.7%) from the lowest income quartile graduated high school at higher rates than black males (73.8%), white males (75.7%), and Hispanic males (79.4%), although the difference between Hispanic males and black females is statistically insignificant.

More telling, however, is the college participation rates in these same economic groups. Black, Hispanic, and white females are fairing much better than black, white, and Hispanic males, not simply within their own racial and ethnic groups but across nearly all racial and ethnic groups. Black females, for instance, are not simply doing better than black males; they are doing better than Hispanic and white males.'

Psychologist claims some men hate astrology because of their 'toxic masculinity'

Mastodon · 19 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While astrology might be in-vogue once again with Gen Z and millennials, women are far more likely to put their faith in the cosmos over their male counterparts.

A recent study found that 37 per cent of women believe that the answers lie within the stars, while only 20 per cent of men believe in astrology.

Psychologist Barbara Santini reckons the belief in the zodiac has shifted to being a 'feminised' pastime.

Santini reckons that some of the more macho men out there choose to reject astrology as they deem any sort of femininity a threat to their hunter/hero/warrior masculine ways.

"To most men, astrology is too girly or immature, which explains why they disagree with it or deny its validity," Santini told PopSugar.

"This creates a negative perception of astrology and the women who like it."

She added: "For some men, the refusal of astrology is linked to toxic masculinity, which does not allow them to enjoy the same things as women."'

Georgia State receives $1 million grant to support women in STEM

Mastodon · 20 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Science Foundation gave Georgia State a $1 million grant to launch a program supporting women in STEM fields. The program intends to recruit and retain female faculty in STEM, with an eye toward putting women from underrepresented backgrounds in tenured positions. The partnership with Florida International University, called ADVANCE-IMPACT, is being administered through the NSF's ADVANCE program.

The program will include faculty mentors, leadership training and policy implementation that increases diversity among the university's faculty. This seems to be the latest in a series of long steps geared toward making the diversity of the university's faculty come close to that of its students. The university began serious efforts in 2018, and speakers and activists called out STEM as an area in need of progress.'

Getting Girls Into STEM by Improving Education for Everyone

Mastodon · 20 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Based on our review of macrosystem and microsystem factors that sustain gender-STEM inequities, we make several recommendations for K-12 STEM policy and practice to optimize success for all children.
...
Classrooms be designed to promote relational and collaborative learning. Teachers should emphasize gender-inclusive classroom norms that promote positive working relations between girls and boys.

Classes should teach the history of gender inequality and bias so teachers and students can actively work to create equitable and inclusive STEM environments.

STEM should be reframed as helping students achieve communal goals through scientific collaboration. Emphasizing socially-meaningful aspects of STEM can help stimulate STEM interest in girls, because they tend to place more value on communal than dominance goals.'

PM of Finland's behavior points up double-standard

Matt · 20 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. There is a double-standard here all right; a married male PM recorded dancing erotically with three different women (none his wife) would have had to resign by now. Excerpt:

'In a leaked video, Finland's Prime Minister Sanna Marin is seen dancing and singing with friends at a private party. The 36-year-old leader poses for the camera. She sits on her knees, hands behind her head. She's entangled in a group hug. She's having a good time.

Countless similar videos are shared daily on social media by young and not-so-young people partying in Finland and all over the world. But the leak has triggered a debate among Finns about what level of reveling is appropriate for a prime minister, especially considering neighboring Russia's attack on Ukraine, which prompted long-neutral Finland and Sweden to apply for NATO membership.

Marin, who leads the center-left Social Democratic Party, has faced a barrage of questions about the party: Were there drugs? Alcohol? Was she working or on summer vacation? Was the prime minister sober enough to handle an emergency had one arisen?'

Bravely Barefoot's Laura Linmar Interview with Sean Kullman on Boys, Men, and Going Forward

Matt · 22 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The toxic term is harmful. It is linked to ideological rhetoric designed to see the worst in inherent male behavior and presence. We also see it in the term patriarchy. These terms are used to divide people and undermine the social good. The ideals of equality feminism were not meant to marginalize masculinity. But feminism has morphed into a new type of ideology that wants to promote its cause over everything else. (People like Christina Hoff Sommers and Heather MacDonald have spoken out about the ways 3rd and 4th wave feminism have become more divisive and less rooted in equality).

We've seen the history of oppressor narratives before, and it's truly ugly. There are women and men who pollute the waters of life but so many more who provide the type of spiritual, emotional, intellectual, and other forms of nourishment our children and society desperately needs. Those people need to speak up much more, and they also need far more airtime and representation in higher education.'

As Mental Health Is More Widely Acknowledged, Men Still Struggle

Matt · 22 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A growing number of men are speaking up and spreading awareness about the importance of other men prioritizing mental health.
As the importance of mental health becomes more widely accepted in the United States, men are still battling the stigma that it should not be discussed.

But that changed recently when famous MMA fighter Paddy “the Baddie” Pimblett delivered a moving public message after a fight, saying he has been struggling himself.

In his post-fight speech, Pimblett spoke about a close friend of his who had taken his life only days before the fight. He urged men to talk about their issues.

“I’d rather my mate cry on my shoulder than go to his funeral," he said.

The speech was an important message to men worldwide.'

Women Have Borne Pandemic's Economic Brunt, Australia Tells G-20

Mastodon · 23 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Australia's Finance Minister Katy Gallagher will ask the world to not waste the opportunity to improve economic and gender equality in the wake of the Covid-19 pandemic, saying women have faced greater "economic consequences" of the crisis.

Gallagher, who is also Minister for Women, will say she wants her country to become a "global leader in gender equality" in a speech to the G-20 Women's Empowerment Conference in Indonesia on Wednesday.'

Australia: Fatal crash accused bailed for fifth time

Mastodon · 24 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was almost inevitable that a catastrophic event would flow from Alisha Jane Fagan's driving, a magistrate has told her.

Despite opposition from the grieving family of Melbourne grandfather Sedat Hassan, the woman accused of killing him has been freed on bail.

It's alleged Fagan, 22, was doing at least 78km/h in a 50km/h zone when she smashed into Mr Hassan's car in Sunshine West on June 9 this year.

She denies being the driver, but DNA on the driver's airbag is a match to her with a probability of one to 100 billion, magistrate John Hardy was told.

The charge of dangerous driving causing death is the 14th matter Fagan currently has before the courts. She was on four counts of bail at the time of the crash.

Fagan has been held in custody at Melbourne's women's prison, the Dame Phyllis Frost Centre, since June.
...
She wore a rosary around her neck and cried heavily throughout the bail application on Wednesday morning.'

Campus Title IX Offices Staffed by Ideologues

Mastodon · 24 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Alexa Schewrha spoke with Teresa Manning, policy director at the National Association of Scholars, about what Title IX changes students can expect when they get back to campus this fall.

Feminist ideologues should look in the mirror if they want to know why teenage boys are obsessed with Andrew Tate

Mastodon · 24 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chauvinistic shock-merchant Andrew Tate has recently been banned from Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, and YouTube.

Tate went viral over the last few months, largely due to his odious opinions about women.
...
Given the disdain for men and boys that has permeated popular culture for the past several years, and the lack of traditionally masculine role models, it's hardly surprising adolescent boys are gravitating towards uber-macho Tate.

It's been very fashionable for a long time to blame all of society's ills on men, demonise their masculinity, and attempt to feminise them.

This is evident not only in popular culture, but in the education system.

The extremes of this attitude were seen at Brauer College in Victoria last year, when male students were forced to stand up and apologise to girls for the "behaviours of their gender", during an assembly on "rape culture".'

“You cannot send a man to do a woman’s job,” decries Maloney in new campaign ad

Mastodon · 24 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman’s place is in the House – specifically representing New York’s newly drawn 12th Congressional district, a new television ad from Democratic Rep. Carolyn Maloney asserts.

Maloney, the longtime representative who is now locked in a fierce primary with fellow incumbent Rep. Jerry Nadler to represent much of Manhattan above 14th Street, is putting out a video focusing on Maloney’s battles for women’s rights and reproductive rights for the last half century. “You cannot send a man to do a woman’s job,” Maloney says at the end of the ad, in a not-so-veiled shot at Nadler – and presumably also at Suraj Patel, who is challenging Maloney for the third time. Ashmi Sheth is also running in the primary but has raised little money compared to her opponents.'

Rep. Jerry Nadler beats Rep. Carolyn Maloney in bitter New York House primary

AUS: Nightclub bans staring without getting ‘verbal consent’ – and hires ‘safety officers’ in pink vests to police revellers

Matt · 25 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Does anyone think this policy will ever be used against female patrons? Excerpt:

'A NIGHTCLUB has banned staring without getting "verbal consent" - and hired "safety officers" in pink vests to police revellers.

The venue also asked clubbers not to turn up if their "sole purpose" for their night out is the meet someone to "pick up".

Club 77 in Sydney said managers will call the cops if clubbers stare at others without getting their consent.

And in an Instagram post, the club said "safety officers" in pink vests would enforce the new staring rules.

Club 77 said it wanted to be a "safe space" and updated its rules as it had recently "attracted some people who do not share our values and ethics when it comes to club culture".

It said: "Creating a safe space goes beyond implementing practices to deal with incidents after they have happened.'

Spain passes ‘only yes means yes’ sexual consent law

Matt · 25 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spain’s congress has passed legislation referred to as the “only yes means yes law”, drawn up in the wake of the “wolf pack” gang rape in 2016.

The legislation passed with 205 votes in favour, 141 against and 3 abstentions. MPs from the conservative People’s party and the far-right Vox voted against it.

“It’s a victorious day after many years of struggle,” said Irene Montero, the equality minister. “From now on no woman will have to prove that violence or intimidation was used for it to be recognised for what it is.”

Under the new law consent must be affirmative and cannot be assumed to have been given by default or silence.

It was drawn up after five men raped an 18-year-old woman during the 2016 bull-running festival in Pamplona. In court it was argued that video footage from the men’s phones – showing the woman immobile and with her eyes shut during the attack – was proof of consent.

One judge claimed the men should only be charged with stealing the victim’s mobile phone.

They were sentenced to nine years in prison for the lesser charge of sexual abuse but after a public outcry the charge was changed to rape and the sentence increased to 15 years.'

My boss said ‘we didn’t need another White guy.’ Say what?

Mastodon · 27 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Reader: I was chatting with one of my bosses the other day about a potential new hire. He let slip that the executive team ultimately did not extend an offer because “we didn’t need another White guy.” He literally said this out loud. I was taken aback.

To be clear, the candidate was eminently qualified, had made it through multiple rounds of interviews, and was the clear favorite among almost everyone who spoke with him. Further, it’s not like he lost out to someone else — they simply didn’t hire him, and the company started the hiring process all over again! This was a position where a person’s ethnicity/sex were completely irrelevant (it is a data analytics job).

Karla: Of course it’s illegal to make a hiring decision based solely on someone’s skin color and/or sex. Presumably your boss knows that — or perhaps he mistakenly thinks it doesn’t apply to members of the majority.

But that’s assuming your boss’s summation is objectively accurate, and not an oversimplification of a more nuanced situation. Yours would not be the first employer to relaunch a search and cast a wider net in the hope of pulling in a candidate with more “wow” factor. And if, as your boss’s comment suggests, a majority of your employer’s workforce, applicants and preferred candidates just happen to all be from one narrow demographic, your employer may be trying to ensure that no bias, overt or systemic, is limiting its choices.'

Leaked emails that PROVE the RAF is prejudiced against white male recruits

Mastodon · 27 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No one draws a crowd quite like Tom Cruise, and when the Hollywood star came to London to promote his new Top Gun movie, Her Majesty's Royal Air Force was handed a priceless PR opportunity.

Specifically, its 'Media & Comms' team was asked if they could find a real-life British fighter ace to join Cruise at one of the media events scheduled around the film's glittering premiere in Leicester Square. In late April, an RAF publicity wallah named 'Sarah' therefore emailed officials at RAF bases, looking for someone to take on the job.

And that's when things took a bizarre — and some might say sinister — turn.'

Former civil servant launches legal case claiming he was sacked for not being a feminist

Mastodon · 27 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Environment Agency manager is taking legal action against the body claiming he was a victim of discrimination for not being a feminist.

Kevin Legge, 50, says he was forced out of his job at the government agency after taking a stand on his boss' agenda to promote women over men.

He has made a claim to an employment tribunal, arguing feminism is a belief system he does not follow.

The agency denies his claim and says he was sacked for moonlighting as a counsellor during work hours.

But the agency's attempt to have the case thrown out was dismissed by Judge Martin Warren, who ordered a full hearing.'

Former Spring Hill College student accuses rape accuser of slander in counterclaim

Mastodon · 28 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Spring Hill College student acquitted of raping a fellow student has accused her of slandering him.

Vassil Kokali's lawyers made the allegation in a response to a lawsuit that accuser Audrey Cox filed in federal court earlier this year against him and the college.

Cox went public with her allegations last year, accusing Kokali of raping her in her dorm room while she was passed out. A Mobile County jury found Kokali not guilty of rape, sodomy and burglary charges in June.

The federal civil suit is separate. Cox seeks to hold Kokali responsible for rape and accused the school of depriving her of her rights under the federal law known as Title IX.

Kokali's lawyers fired back this week, denying those allegations and making a counterclaim against Cox, alleging that the Tennessee resident made "false and defamatory" statements about the Italian native. The lawyers are seeking damages for libel, slander and malicious prosecution, among other claims.'

Men’s lack of accountability is shackling women in the workforce

Mastodon · 28 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have more choice in forming relationships than men (they are more “picky”) and have better social cognition that enables them to include and exclude people from groups. As a result, many men turn to women to validate their masculinity, and, in Atwood’s words, fear women will “embarrass” them.

Men are often expected to free themselves from the expectations of their mothers—and women as a whole—at a young age. Supporting women and acknowledging personal flaws requires humility and self-correction. They often score lower on tests of empathy than women, enabling them to disregard others’ emotions, silence other sexes and avoid accountability at all costs.

While women are often taught to be honest and avoid situations that harm themselves and others, men are taught to evade responsibility. Women are taught to accept injury. When we women see a large figure in the streets at night, feel an abusive family member’s anger, or say no to a sexual encounter, we acutely feel this vulnerability.

Gender discrimination is designed to insulate men from women and protect their masculinity.'

Governor Hochul Commissions New Report on Women in the Workplace in Honor of Women's Equality Day

Mastodon · 28 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier today, Governor Kathy Hochul announced that the New York State Department of Labor will provide a report analyzing the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on women in the workplace with a particular focus on the multi-layered gender wage gap. This report will build on the findings of the 2018 Gender Wage Gap report, co-chaired by Governor Hochul and NYSDOL Commissioner Roberta Reardon, which included a number of policy and programmatic recommendations to close the wage gap.

Governor Hochul announced the new report on Women's Equality Day, a federally recognized holiday celebrating the 1920 adoption of the Nineteenth Amendment, which granted women the right to vote. The Governor also signed a proclamation declaring August 26 Women's Equality Day in the State of New York and ordered state assets illuminated purple and gold in recognition.'

When it comes to boys, it's schools who are flunking

Mastodon · 28 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So why are boys doing so much worse in school than girls?

Brueningsen points to the lack of male role models in schools. As of 2018, only 24% of all K-12 teachers were men, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

He says data from a major 2015 study shows that the typical school environment may be “more attuned to feminine-typed personalities, making it generally easier for girls to achieve better grades in school.”

He cites a 2016 report from the American Sociological Association that found that boys are punished for their rough-and-tumble tendencies and the punishment makes for a negative learning experience.

Boys are much more likely to hear common teacher criticisms, as I did, that include: “Stop fidgeting! Pay attention! Put that down! Clean that off! Your desk is a mess, Tommy!”'

Google Partners With Top Universities For This Prestigious Fellowship. Lawyers Say the Racial and Gender Quotas It's Imposing Are Illegal.

Mastodon · 30 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Google is setting strict caps on the number of white and Asian students that universities can nominate for a prestigious fellowship program, a policy legal experts say likely violates civil rights law and could threaten the federal funding of nearly every elite university in the United States.

The Google Ph.D. Fellowship, which gives promising computer scientists nearly $100,000, allows each participating university—a group that includes most elite schools—to nominate four Ph.D. students annually. "If a university chooses to nominate more than two students," Google says, "the third and fourth nominees must self-identify as a woman, Black / African descent, Hispanic / Latino / Latinx, Indigenous, and/or a person with a disability."

That criterion, which an archived webpage shows has been in place since at least April 2020, is almost certainly illegal, civil rights lawyers told the Washington Free Beacon—both for Google and the universities.

"It is illegal for Google to enter into contracts based on race under the Civil Rights Act of 1866," said Adam Mortara, the lead trial lawyer for the plaintiffs in Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard, who are pressing the Supreme Court to outlaw affirmative action. "And it is illegal for universities receiving federal funds to nominate students based on race under Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act."'

Death in Navy SEAL Training Exposes a Culture of Brutality, Cheating and Drugs

Matt · 30 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Think this'd be happening if it was all women instead of men being abused this way? Not even George S. Patton would have been fine with this. Excerpt:

'But by the middle of the course's third week — a continual gut punch of physical and mental hardship, sleep deprivation and hypothermia that the SEALs call Hell Week — the 6-foot-4-inch athlete from Manalapan, N.J., was dead-eyed with exhaustion, riddled with infection and coughing up blood from lungs that were so full of fluid that others who were there said later that he sounded like he was gargling.

The course began with 210 men. By the middle of Hell Week, 189 had quit or been brought down by injury. But Seaman Mullen kept on slogging for days, spitting blood all the while. The instructors and medics conducting the course, perhaps out of admiration for his grit, did not stop him.

And he made it. When he struggled out of the cold ocean at the end of Hell Week, SEAL leaders shook his hand, gave him a pizza and told him to get some rest. Then he went back to his barracks and laid down on the floor. A few hours later, his heart stopped beating and he died.'

Gone girl(boss): Troubled co-working space The Wing announced it's shutting down, but all anybody cares about is what will happen to its furniture

Matt · 31 August 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No surprise. Limiting your customer base to only women in need of co-working space and charging an arm and a leg for it is not a winning business formula. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday night, The Wing, the all-female co-working space founded by Audrey Gelman and Lauren Kassan in 2016, sent an email to members announcing it would be permanently closing all its locations, effective immediately.

"The operating environment since reopening our six current locations of The Wing, 14 months ago has continued to prove extremely challenging," the message read. "With the backdrop of the Covid pandemic and increasing global economic challenges, we have been unable to recover and grow the level of active membership and event activity necessary to run a financially sustainable operation."'

Air Force leaders set new goals to diversify officer corps

Mastodon · 1 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As for gender, it wants an officer applicant pool that is 64% men and 36% women. That aims to slightly even the split from the 2014 goal of 70% men to 30% women.

As of June, just 23% of active duty Air Force and Space Force officers were women, according to the Air Force Personnel Center.

...

Military officials are careful to say their diversity goals are not quotas — which are illegal — and that they will not turn away applicants for the sake of meeting a particular demographic breakdown. All recruits, regardless of gender, race or ethnicity, have to meet the same standards for entry.

“These goals are aspirational … and will not be used in any manner that undermines our merit-based processes,” the memo said.'

ANU: Women-Only Recruitment Drive To Rocket Up Gender Equality

Mastodon · 1 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The largest women-only recruitment drive in the history of Australian Astronomy and Space is underway at The Australian National University (ANU).

The Advanced Instrumentation and Technology Centre (AITC) is recruiting 10 new positions for people who identify as women to support the next generation of telescopes, small-scale space crafts and instruments for space missions. This includes the design and construction of large instruments like the 25-metre Giant Magellan Telescope.'

UK: Millions invested to support female offenders

Mastodon · 1 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women whose crimes have been fuelled by addiction, mental health issues and domestic violence will be better supported to stop reoffending thanks to new government funding.

With over 60 per cent of women in prison having experienced domestic abuse and 50 per cent having drug addictions almost £21 million will be invested in women's services to tackle the causes of female offending and cut crime.

Organisations such as Working Chance, the UK's only charity dedicated to getting women with convictions into work, support offenders who are serving a community sentence or have recently been released from prison and may be at risk of reoffending.

This tailored support, which can range from help to find a job or support with drug and alcohol abuse, can provide stability in getting their lives back on track – ultimately helping to keep the public safe.'

College Debt and the Male Burden

Matt · 2 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In order to understand the debt burden regular Americans will take-on, we must look at the populations impacted by this decision. One data point that is often conflated in the U.S. is the population of males and females. Overall, females outnumber males, but males actually outnumber females in the U.S. until approximately 45-50 years-of-age when men start falling behind. And when it comes to 18 to 24 year-olds, prime college years, the number of males outnumber the number of females.

...

Even though there are considerably more males, females outnumbered males entering college by significant margins. Both the percentage and total number of males entering college are lower. The college apparatus, for over 40 years, has benefited women more than men; preparing, enrolling, graduating, and providing more scholarships and Pell Grants for women. Billions of dollars annually.

Those who took loans will now receive an additional benefit, and this new debt burden will fall on non-college men during their initial earning years and prime earning years. It will also fall on elderly women and men we see working extra jobs at Walmart who never signed up for the personal debt.

...

Ironically, predominately male professions (construction, trucking, plumbing, and electrical) will be footing this bill while colleges continue to speak about the ills of patriarchal privilege in buildings built by men who will age and wake up one day with bad knees and painful backs.'

Humor: 1950s woman meets the future

Matt · 3 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Tweet embedded here. No Twitter acct. required. It'd be funny if it weren't so true.

Why men stay single

Matt · 4 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People often speculate they must fear commitment, have been betrayed in a prior relationship, or have some type of personality disorder. Research indicates, however, that the explanation may be far more straightforward.
...
We tend to psychoanalyze relationship-reluctant individuals as if something was “wrong” with them. What happened to them in the past? Were they abandoned in childhood? Did an ex-partner betray them? We also stereotype men as more likely to be gun-shy regarding relational intimacy or walking down the aisle.

Sometimes, relationship reluctance is indeed due to a past betrayal or broken heart. Other times, however, it is simply due to personal preference. According to research, for self-assured men, in particular, singlehood signals success and satisfaction.'

AOC's Fight for the Future

Mastodon · 7 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We'd agreed at the onset of our conversation that day to lean into difficult questions about gender—with a specific focus on what men need to be doing to combat misogyny—and so I asked the congresswoman why she believes men so often opt out. Certainly some guys are just jerks. But what about men who are more introspective? The call for men to step up and speak out is neither new nor novel, yet still seems unheard.

"I think there's plenty of well-meaning reasons why men may feel like it's not appropriate for them to talk about it," she continued. "I think sometimes the way white folks don't like to talk about race and they say, 'We just want to center the person who's most impacted, so it's not my role to do anything or take a space and speak up.' But we know that when white folks take up space and say the right thing in rooms of other white people, that is the most shifting activity that can happen, more sometimes than any protest or any person writing a letter to the editor or anything like that. And we need men to be speaking up in that way as well. But I think men, sometimes they think, I'm not a woman. This doesn't affect me the most."

But men also keep quiet, Ocasio-Cortez pointed out, because of the burdens and antiquated expectations of masculinity. Feminist writers and thinkers have raised this notion for decades, pointing out how men themselves are victimized by toxic societal constructs. "Men suffer from being under patriarchy," the congresswoman said. "They don't go to the doctor. They suffer from much higher rates of completed suicides. Even though they report lower levels of depression, that doesn't mean that they suffer from it less. Just a couple years ago the American Psychological Association released a very deep paper and a campaign about how these traditional cultural markers of masculinity—stoicism, competition, domination, dominance—are leading to mental health issues for men. There's a stigma around men being vulnerable."'

AOC predicts she won’t be president — because Americans ‘hate women’

Mastodon · 7 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez says it’s unlikely she could ever be elected president of the United States — because so many people in America “hate women” and “would never let that happen.”

The socialist-firebrand New York Democrat speculated about the possibilities of her launching a future White House bid in a wide-ranging cover interview with GQ magazine published Wednesday.

Ocasio-Cortez said while she tries to hold onto the belief that anything is possible, her experience in Congress has “given me a front-row seat to how deeply and unconsciously, as well as consciously, so many people in this country hate women.”'

The Death of 18-24 Year-Olds

Matt · 8 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although fentanyl deaths are a major factor in those 18-24 years-old, so are suicide, homicide, alcohol, and automobile deaths. Nearly 400,000 young men and nearly 135,000 young women from 18-24 years-old have died from 2001 to 2020. These deaths include all causes, and males account for 75% of those deaths.
...
Males, overall, accounted for 74% of the share of deaths in 2020 and 2001-2020. It should also be noted that females showed an increase as well and a marked increase in 23 and 24 year-olds of 28% and 24% respectively. However, males accounted for 74% of deaths in those age groups and 72% to 75% in 18-22 year olds.

Many of these deaths can be prevented with the right interventions, but too few policy makers are even aware of this data in great part because it would require a recognition of the need for male advocacy. And regardless of one's politics, it's critical the U.S. look at the challenges at the border that are leading to an influx of illegal drugs, increase in violent crime associated with drugs, greater demand on law-enforcement, homelessness, and the strain to hire law-enforcement officers at all levels. Social media must also become more aware of the enterprises on its platforms. Ed Ternan (Charlie's father) is working with SnapChat and other platforms to alleviate the problem of drug distribution via social media.'

How America’s Elites Decided Vicious Anti-White Racism Is A Good Thing

Mastodon · 8 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is a sampling of the new racism that is gaining purchase in American society even as its advocates relentlessly punish speech they deem harmful and threatening to people of color. It parallels the acceptance of anti-male rhetoric that casts masculinity as “predatory” and “toxic,” or just casually demeans males as oafish and clueless, which allows the Washington Post to give a megaphone to Northeastern University professor Suzanna Danuta Walters to ask: “Why can’t we hate men?” (Her conclusion: We can and we should.)

The escalation of this inflammatory rhetoric is reaching the highest levels of American society, as when President Biden insinuated in a fiery campaign speech last week that Donald Trump supporters are “white supremacists” and when he maligned conservative mask skeptics last year for “Neanderthal thinking.”

What strikes a casual observer is that such language would be instantly denounced if it targeted racial minorities or other protected groups. Just as remarkable is that this new rhetoric is not coming from dropouts and loners at society’s margins; it is being advanced by successful professionals who have scaled the heights of respectability and are given a platform on social media and in prestigious cultural outlets.
...
“White males have been the norm of our culture and our politics and our society and our economy for so long that unearthing the unstated assumptions that go into that is pretty hard work, and it reveals things that make us uncomfortable,” Livingston said. “So do they need to be protected? I suppose. Everybody needs some protection. But I’m not too worried about people telling me that I have no right to speak on the issue of transgender individuals.”'

White men can’t jump: Or decide what’s racist?

Mastodon · 8 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We had to re-read the quote to make sure we had it right. A Manchester Black Lives Matter leader said that Chief of Police Allen Aldenberg “is a White man; he should have no say over whether or not” something is racist.

What does Ronelle Tshiela know of the content of Chief Aldenberg’s character? Or, for that matter, what does she know about any and all White people in order to presume that they are incapable of judging something as racist?

Isn’t such a view itself racist?

Manchester NAACP president James McKim disagrees with Tshiela. He told our newspaper that he trusts Chief Aldenberg to make the right call in the matter of one of his officers sending a controversial text message to others in the department. The text contained a meme, not created by the officer, that has been described as racist or insensitive.

Is the officer racist? Insensitive? Dumb? Chief Aldenberg hasn’t said what he thinks, but the officer was suspended, took sensitivity training, and was returned to duty. He has since been promoted to sergeant.'

Media and Advertising Isn’t Doing Men Justice

Mastodon · 8 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Whilst recent years have seen a dramatic shift in society for women across the UK (and, indeed, the world), the ideology of masculinity has largely been left behind. The term ‘modern masculinity’ is frequently thrown around in today’s world, yet people struggle to define what it actually is or looks like - in many instances - simply defaulting to the clunky application of 'feminine' traits to the modern male identity to try to make sense of it. This suggests - unfairly, we would argue - that perhaps not much has changed about the representation of male identity at all.

Academic frameworks such as David and Brannon’s ‘Four Rules of Masculinity’ and Promundo’s ‘The Man Box’ show that little has overtly evolved over the years with how men might define themselves, leaving more traditional ideals of ‘maleness’ in place.

At the same time, there has been a growing anxiety about the male role within society. Over the past five years especially, events such as the #MeToo movement have led to an increased attention on male aggression and violence towards and against women. The resulting heightened and justified focus on female empowerment has resulted in a greater emphasis being placed on defining 'toxic masculinity' rather than on defining a more positive representation of 'modern masculinity' - an unhelpful situation where the multitudes, nuances and subtleties of modern masculinity are often overlooked or ignored altogether.'

Misogynistic influencers are trending right now. Defusing their message is a complex task

Mastodon · 8 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The jumble of groups and philosophies that center around ideas of toxic masculinity is commonly referred to as the "manosphere." Within lie incels (involuntary celibates), men's rights activists, pick-up artists, and the content creators that spread these ideas to the masses. Brette Steele, senior director for Preventing Targeted Violence at the McCain Institute, says men usually flock to the manosphere because they are unhappy in some way and searching for a sense of belonging, and younger audiences are drawn in by a similar need.

"Youth are searching for that sense of belonging, that kind of grounding to explain what's happening to them," she tells CNN.

"In the last few years, more youth have had to turn to communities online. We've seen a degradation of in-person social skills, and in middle school, that's when those social skills are first coming into play."'

How we boosted the number of female faculty members at our institution

Mastodon · 8 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2016, Aleks Owczarek, who was then head of the School of Mathematics and Statistics, undertook an affirmative-action strategy (also known as positive discrimination) to recruit women as faculty members. This was a controversial move, but it was prompted by a clear lack of diversity in the school. The strategy was designed as a catalyst for change. It aimed specifically to increase the number of women in faculty positions; improve the professorial pipeline; and provide female role models for students. Only women were eligible to apply for positions in areas in which women were under-represented. It ran for one recruitment round in the school, but had beneficial secondary effects.

The approach had three features. First, it was designed to attract a broad cross-section of female applicants, rather than just those in particular sub-disciplines. Second, the positions advertised were ongoing teaching and research roles (rather than limited fixed-term contracts), to ensure career continuity. Third, the strategy was not intended to be undertaken on a continuing basis, or for every hiring round in those STEM disciplines.

But was it legal? Yes. In the state of Victoria, where the university is based, the law allows a special measure for promoting equality. However, we strongly advise that recruiters check the relevant legal sanctions before embarking on something similar.'

RAF chief's regrets over drive for diversity as he insists plan to favour women and ethnic minority candidates would not have led to drop in standards

Matt · 8 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The head of the RAF has told of his regret over its plan to favour women and ethnic minority candidates over better qualified white males.

The ‘woke’ diversity drive was scrapped after the RAF’s recruitment chief refused to implement what she called an ‘unlawful’ selection policy.

Last night Chief of the Air Staff Sir Mike Wigston said the RAF had launched an inquiry into how such a controversial policy was devised and very nearly implemented.

He acknowledged for the first time the fall-out from the extraordinary row after a tense meeting with Defence Secretary Ben Wallace, and revealed that Group Captain Elizabeth Nicholl, who walked out rather than put the plan into practice, had requested the investigation.'

"Self-Made Man"

Matt · 9 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Rarely does MANN get a submission of a book or movie review. Possibly this is because there are no posts asking for them! Well time to change that. I am asking for a review of Self-Made Man by Norah Vincent. If anyone has read it and would like to review it, please submit a review. Thank-you.

Falsely Accused

Matt · 10 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For many, this day is essential, in great part, because it vindicates the innocent and spurs groups like the Innocence Project, Title IX for All, and a host of others working to ensure organizations and institutions are not violating equal protections and the essential importance of the rule of law. Falsely Accused Day, and the stories many will share, are a reminder of the importance of due process and the need to get it right.

Things fall apart and lives are ruined when the law falls prey to systematic practices that remove protections in favor of expediency and “compromised justice.”
...
Cases where people are wrongly accused of rape, homicide, and aggravated assault do not speak to the other forms of false accusations that lead to students being removed from schools, parents losing custody disputes, and people losing jobs, just to name a few.

In Heather’s MacDonald’s Diversity Delusion, she partly addresses the Title IX exploitations on college campuses that are not necessarily handled in a court of law but lead to falsely accused students, usually males, being expelled without due process and without legal protections. Some of the college ethos around Title IX is an apoplectic hysteria that only expands specific departments associated with Title IX and more crisis center staff on some of the safest places in America, college campuses. And even if a falsely accused student is not expelled, the emotional toll causes depression and impacts a student’s ability to carry on with his studies. Heather MacDonald identified a specific study that ushered in the “rape myth” culture actualized on college campuses:'

Why Are Men in Crisis? | Real Time with Bill Maher (HBO)

Mastodon · 11 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Scott Galloway and Matt Welch join Bill to discuss the factors driving young American men toward toxicity.

UK: Sexual harassment includes sitting in rooms with more male officers than women, says police chief

Matt · 11 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female police officers can suffer sexual harassment simply by being in a room with a majority of their male colleagues, a leading police chief has claimed.
...
Asked to describe what incidents she had witnessed, she said: "This is not about me, but I think sexual harassment is about sitting in rooms where you have more male officers than women. Where you're in a male-dominated environment for any woman - that's always challenging."'

Why boys and men?

Matt · 12 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have been worrying about boys and men for 25 years. That comes with the territory when you raise three boys, all now grown men. George, Bryce, Cameron: I love you beyond measure. That's why, even now, I sometimes worry about you. But my anxiety has spilled over into my day job. I work as a scholar at the Brookings Institution, focusing mostly on equality of opportunity, or the lack thereof. Until now, I have paid most attention to the divisions of social class and race. But I am increasingly worried about gender gaps, and perhaps not in the way you might expect. It has become clear to me that there are growing numbers of boys and men who are struggling in school, at work, and in the family. I used to fret about three boys and young men. Now I am worried about millions.

Even so, I have been reluctant to write this book. I have lost count of the number of people who advised against it. In the current political climate, highlighting the problems of boys and men is seen as a perilous undertaking. One friend, a newspaper columnist, said, "I never go near these issues if I can avoid it. There's nothing but pain there."'

Mom in abuse case charged with false rape accusation

Mastodon · 12 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mother who was recently arrested for allegedly abusing her infant is now facing another set of charges for falsely accusing her ex-boyfriend of rape, police say.

Kimberly Elizabeth Lander, 31, called police on Jan. 23 to report that she'd been raped by her ex-boyfriend, George Spickard, the previous night. Lander told Berwick Det. Reagan Rafferty that she'd gotten into a fight with her current boyfriend, Christopher Lindsay, and had left their house on Catherine Street around 4 p.m.

Spickard happened to be driving by, saw her walking, and picked her up, Lander allegedly told police. Spickard drove her to his house, where he strangled her and forcibly raped her, according to Lander. He then drove her to Buckhorn and dropped her off, she said.

Lander was taken to Geisinger Medical Center in Danville and evidence for a sexual assault collection was taken, court records show.'

Anonymity for men falsely accused of rape

Mastodon · 12 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

‘No man should have to go what I went through,’ said the teary John Jarratt, after a jury took 15 minutes to decide he was not guilty of an alleged rape forty years earlier. He’d been through twenty months of what he called ‘media death row’, with the worldwide press coverage traumatic for his entire family.

The accusation came from a former flatmate – Jarratt admitted he had sex with the woman, but said it was consensual. She said she’d been inspired by #MeToo and took action when the well-known Australian actor was at the peak of his career, starring in Wolf Creek II. Even after the jury tossed the case out and Jarratt successfully sued The Telegraph for reporting he had ‘got away with rape’, the incident will always be part of his history.

‘The woman who perpetrated the evil lie against me walked away scot-free,’ said Jarratt, calling for laws to be changed so that neither party is identified unless someone is convicted.'

Texas A&M diversity policies discriminate against white, Asian men - lawsuit

Mastodon · 12 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Texas A&M University has been hit with a proposed class action claiming its employment policies unlawfully discriminate against white and Asian men.

Richard Lowery, an associate professor of finance at the University of Texas at Austin, said in a complaint filed in Houston federal court on Saturday that Texas A&M's affirmative action policies bar him from getting a faculty job with the university system because he is white.

Lowery says policies adopted by the school favor women and non-Asian minorities in hiring, promotions and pay. That includes setting aside some faculty positions for members of underrepresented minority groups, according to the complaint.

"These discriminatory, illegal, and anti-meritocratic practices have been egged on by woke ideologues who populate the so-called diversity, equity, and inclusion offices at public and private universities throughout the United States," Lowery's lawyers wrote.'

Male Poverty Increases according to U.S Census Bureau Report

Matt · 15 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday, September 13, the U.S. Census Bureau released its Poverty in the United States: 2021 report. The number of males who fell below the poverty line increased by 398,000 from 2020 to 2021 while the number of females declined by 13,000. Although the percentage of females living in poverty in the report was higher by 2.1%, (12.6% to 10.5%) there are other factors that impact our understanding of poverty thresholds and eligibility for programs.

Poverty thresholds, which is the purpose of the Census Bureau report, simply measure poverty and does not determine eligibility for certain federal programs. Guidelines for eligibility is more a function of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). This difference may explain some of the reason males tend to have a harder time when it comes to eligibility, particularly when government and state agencies form councils on women in an important attempt to quantify the challenges facing them. The same agencies do not exist for boys and men, so their eligibility is often understated.'

Revolting Mother Busted For Series Of Vile Snapchat Vids

Matt · 16 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Keep your barf bag handy. Seriously, there are some graphic descriptions you may want to brace yourself for. Excerpt:

'In a series of vile Snapchat videos, a 26-year-old mother of two recorded herself engaging in sexual activity with her three-year-old son and, while breastfeeding her younger child, filmed the family dog licking her private parts, according to Florida court records.

Natalie Wagner, 26, is facing scores of felony counts in connection with 15 separate videos that investigators received last month from Snapchat following the issuance of a subpoena. Wagner, seen at right, is being held in the St. Lucie County jail in lieu of $1.2 million bond.

Until her arrest last month, Wagner shared a Port St. Lucie home with her husband and the couple's two young boys. At the time of Wagner's bust, the minors were removed from the residence by child welfare officials. A judge has barred Wagner and her spouse--who has not been charged--from having any contact with the children.'

Toxic masculinity is part of elite hockey. We need a culture shift

Mastodon · 16 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Players learn this toxic masculinity, and are rewarded for those behaviours at a very early age and from many people. Perhaps that is why my research met a great deal of resistance from sport administrators, coaches, parents, and fans. It is easier to blame "one bad apple" than to accept partial responsibility for encouraging a toxic masculine culture.

When I suggested a number of educational workshops and shifting hockey culture from toxic masculinity to a model centred around the pursuit of excellence, I often got accused of disliking hockey and sports. But trust me, nothing could be further from the truth.'

Perspective: The real reason the all-women workspace failed

Mastodon · 16 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though the company claimed that its financial troubles were due to COVID-19 — no one wants to cowork in a pandemic — the truth is that the model of women-only business environments is a scam sold to ordinary women by wealthy feminists looking to make a buck. Women operate in the same economy as men, and it's silly to pretend they can build a wall around themselves to keep out men or all the problems that supposedly come with them ("mansplaining" to name one).
...
To make matters worse, women initially weren't even allowed to have men attend meetings they were hosting in the workspace. That should have been a sign the founders were living in some kind of feminist la-la land.

The company was sued in 2018 for gender discrimination, and it revised its policies to allow men, but it still maintained the aura of female empowerment. It also faced complaints that it was inhospitable to Black and Hispanic women. While another member interviewed by the Post thought that the allegations were unfair — "In general, female-led businesses are under more of a microscope — especially a place that is preaching inclusivity" — the fact of the matter is that there is no reason a random group of women who want to rent office space would be particularly likely to get along.

These are women who each went there to make their own business work. They have no common goal and nothing to bond them together besides the experience of being a woman. Sisterhood is not as powerful as some people like to claim.'

American boys and men are suffering — and our culture doesn't know how to talk about it

Mastodon · 18 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Our men and boys are in trouble. In the U.S., nearly four times more likely than women to die by suicide. They have more emergency department visits and deaths due to overdoses. They are less likely to receive treatment for mental health issues. They have a lower rate of participation in the workforce. They are more likely to be diagnosed with ADHD and autism. They are more likely than females to drop out of high school, and the ones who do go on to college are less likely than their female peers to graduate. They are barraged with constant and conflicting messages about what it means to be a man, and the consequences of failing to live up to other people's ideas about modern masculinity can be severe. And all of this is difficult to talk about because the simultaneous culture of misogyny and the war on women's rights is so intense, it has created a zero sum game expectation around our basic humanity.

But acknowledging the crisis in males takes nothing from the ground women are fighting to gain. And accepting that gender is only one element in a social strata that is also incredibly unbalanced around race and class is the only useful way forward for all of us.'

Why boys should start school a year later than girls

Mastodon · 18 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The value of a later start, which many teachers and administrators call “the gift of time,” is an open secret in elite circles. And it’s a gift overwhelmingly given to boys. In the past few months, I’ve interviewed dozens of private-school teachers, parents, educational consultants, and admissions officers, largely in the D.C. metro area. I learned that a delayed school entry is now close to the norm for boys who would otherwise be on the young side. One former head of an elite private school who now consults with parents on school choice and admissions told me, “There are effectively two different cutoff dates for school entry: one for boys and one for girls.”

...

The reason little boys wear almost all of the red shirts is not mysterious; the fact that boys mature later than girls is one known to every parent, and certainly to every teacher. According to a Rand survey, teachers are three times more likely to delay entry for their own sons than their own daughters. The maturity gap is now demonstrated conclusively by neuroscience: Brain development follows a different trajectory for boys than it does for girls. But this fact is entirely ignored in broader education policy, even as boys fall further behind girls in the classroom.'

Biden Administration Guts Due Process Protections for Students Accused of Sexual Misconduct

Mastodon · 18 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College students investigated for sexual harassment or assault will once again be stripped of due process, thanks to new regulations released by the U.S. Department of Education in June.

The new rules, which apply to investigations under Title IX, part of a federal law that prohibits sex discrimination in education, rescind rules crafted and implemented by former Education Secretary Betsy DeVos during the Trump administration. They mark the return of the "single investigator model," which empowers a single college administrator to investigate, judge, and sanction alleged misconduct.'

Men in Russia fleeing due to conscription order

Matt · 21 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Can you blame them? Excerpt:

'Within hours of Vladimir Putin's announcement that he was introducing "partial mobilisation," to bolster his crumbling army in Ukraine, Russian men began to flee the country in huge numbers.

Russian defence minister, Sergei Shoigu followed up Putin's speech with an announcement that 300,000 reservists would be conscripted into the armed forces.

Video shot at Russia 's border with Finland showed a tailback over 20 miles long, with hundreds, perhaps thousands, of men trying to get out of the country before they were called up.'

FDNY firefighters are overwhelmingly white men. The City Council wants to change that.

Mastodon · 21 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York lawmakers announced new legislation on Monday that would require the FDNY to hire more women and minority firefighters, the latest push to diversify an agency that has been repeatedly sued for discriminating against non-white applicants.

The legislation would require the FDNY to develop and implement a plan by March 1st to ensure firefighters “reflect that of the city’s population as a whole.” Currently, more than three-quarters of firefighters are white men, and less than 1% are women.

The package would also broaden transparency requirements within the department, while mandating the FDNY survey each firehouse to identify facility upgrades needed to achieve a safe environment for a mixed-gender workforce.

The bills follow several other legislative attempts to solve the agency’s diversity problems – a threat not just to equity, but to the “fundamental safety of all New Yorkers,” according to Council Speaker Adrienne Adams.'

Amazon Studios Reportedly Scrapped a Gritty Conan the Barbarian Series, Forced it To Move To Netflix

Mastodon · 21 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amazon could have Conan the Barbarian as a hard-hitting reply to Game of Thrones before it was scrapped due to some pretty messed up issues. If the name sounds similar to you, then yes, this series was set to follow the same source material that was followed by Arnold Schwarzenegger's 1982 critically and commercially acclaimed movie. But unfortunately, the project moved to the hands of Netflix as Amazon Studios Head found Toxic Masculinity in the project.
...
"Where others saw the next Game of Thrones in Ryan Condal's Conan scripts, Jennifer Salke saw only toxic masculinity. As such Ryan Condal was fired, Conan was scrapped, and Jennifer Salke picked The Wheel of Time to be Amazon's more adult-oriented Game of Thrones replacement. Although she made sure to make it even more female-centric than it already was just to be sure there would be absolutely no toxic masculinity."'

If I mention the ‘modern male struggle’, do you roll your eyes? It’s time to stop looking away

Mastodon · 22 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We need to talk about the troubles of men.

No, really. Even if the thought of being asked to sympathise with the modern male struggle makes you roll your eyes or turn the page, it’s worth examining that irritable kneejerk reaction more closely. Progressives should be able to acknowledge some real and serious problems – boys underachieving at school, high suicide rates among middle-aged men in particular, the online radicalisation of an angry fringe drawn to violent ideologies – without making women and girls feel guilty about their achievements or pretending that feminism has somehow gone too far. But that balance can be surprisingly hard to achieve in practice, as a thoughtful new book by the former Downing Street staffer Richard Reeves makes clear.'

Russians flee to Mongolia to escape Putin’s call up as men are ‘dragged from beds in dead of night’ to fight in Ukraine

Matt · 22 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Conscription is a huge violation of men's civil rights. Yet the UN and other supposedly human rights-concerned agencies remain silent. Excerpt:

'As the fear of conscription ripples through Russia, some men have been hauled out of bed in the middle of the night and told they had four hours to pack their belongings and obey the mobilisation order.

There were reports of people cowering behind doors and refusing to accept the military summonses.

In Luchegorsk, men who refused to open doors at night were handed the summonses when they arrived at work this morning.

Some 60 men were taken to Bikin, in Khabarovsk region, and sent into the hands of the Russian military machine.

Footage showed Russians enlisted by Putin's mobilisation being taken to training camps.

One man made a last-ditch attempt to escape the enlistment office in Blagoveshchensk by leaping out of a first-floor window.'

It is exposing buried secrets – Supermodel Faith Morey writes on why every man must have a DNA test

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Supermodel/Actress Faith Morey has revealed the importance of carrying out DNA test as she narrates how paternity fraud destroyed the home of her close friend.

The mom of one who recently drooled over Olu Jacobs and Joke Silva's marriage took to Instastories to stress on the importance of DNA test, stating that her brother must do the same because of how rampant the scandal is becoming in Nigeria.

Writing further, Morey narrated how her close friend was left devastated and heartbroken last week after he discovered that his beloved 10 years old son is not his biological child.

Buttressing her point, Morey said a lot of men have been raising children that are not theirs and there is nothing as painful as that.'

Air Force Academy promotes fellowship that bans ‘cisgender' men: ‘This program isn’t for you’

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United States Air Force Academy (USAFA) in Colorado is encouraging cadets to apply for a fellowship program for "gender minorities" that specifies "cisgender" men need not apply.

The academy sent an email on Sept. 14 informing cadets that the 2023 application for the Brooke Owens Fellowship for "undergraduate women and gender minorities interested in aerospace" is due by Oct. 10.

The application on the fellowship’s website says, "If you are a cisgender man, this program isn’t for you."
...
The USAFA’s email said the Brooke Owens Fellowship is a "nine-week paid internship at a leading aerospace company" and that any undergraduate who is a "woman or gender minority" is welcome to apply.'

Trinity School staffer admits to sneaking political ‘agenda’ into NYC classroom, video shows

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Elsewhere in the secret recording, Norris suggested she has issues with some white male students on campus.

“Unfortunately, it’s the white boys who feel very entitled to express their opposite opinions and just push back,” Norris said. “There’s a huge contingent of them that are just horrible. And you’re like, ‘Are you always going to be horrible, or are you just going to be horrible right now?’ Don’t know.”

When asked if there was any saving Republican white guys, Norris responded: “I don’t know. I think they need to go. I think they’re really awful people. That’s kind of what I’m afraid of with my white students that are rich. I’m like — do you ever have to deal with this? They’re so protected by capitalism. It makes me sad.”'

The American Psychological Association Is Waging War on Men and Boys

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades, radical and intersectional feminists have assured us that it's impossible to be sexist toward men because we live in a patriarchal society. Well, the American Psychological Association (APA) is working hard to prove those feminists wrong.

A few years ago, the APA released practice guidelines for therapy with men and boys. An APA press release on the new guidelines made clear just what those guidelines amounted to: an assault on traditional men and boys.

"They draw on more than 40 years of research showing that traditional masculinity is psychologically harmful and that socializing boys to suppress their emotions causes damage," reads the press release. "The main thrust of the subsequent research is that traditional masculinity—marked by stoicism, competitiveness, dominance and aggression—is, on the whole, harmful."
...
I've just published what I believe is the first peer-reviewed assessment of the APA's guidelines for men and boys. What I found was a mess. Far from there being a slam dunk link between traditional masculinity and negative mental health or behavioral outcomes, the evidence was inconsistent and, across the board, methodologically very weak.

The authors of the guidelines are uniformly focused on the social construction of gender, ignoring biological inputs to both sex and gender identity. But even worse in my opinion, the APA's report is clearly disparaging of traditional men and their families, linking traditional, masculine values to an entire suite of negative mental and physical health outcomes—with no real scientific rationale.'

Sex addict who slept with 700 men blames high-profile feminists for the rise in misogyny because 'man-hating attitudes' drive boys to toxic ideology

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Bachelor star and recovered sex addict has taken aim at high-profile Australian feminists she believes are inadvertently causing a surge in misogyny by 'hating on' men.

Belinda 'Love' Rygier, who overcame her addiction after bedding more than 700 men, singled out Abbie Chatfield and Clementine Ford as the worst offenders in her opinion.

She even compared them to toxic influencers on the opposite side of the 'war of the sexes', including disgraced social media star Andrew Tate, whose misogyny has seen him kicked off social media platforms such as TikTok.

'I think "good on her" for her personal success. But her beliefs around feminism are actually misandry,' Ms Rygier said of Chatfield.

Rygier said Chatfield and Ford 'trigger' her with their sometimes outlandish statements about men.

Ford, a best-selling author and commentator, infamously tweeted that 'coronavirus isn't killing men fast enough' at the height of the pandemic. She later apologised following public outrage.

Chatfield also once claimed '40 per cent of men are paedophiles'.

'How [Chatfield] speaks about them. I don't follow them as they trigger me, her and Clementine Ford. How they hate on men...' Rygier said.'

Pennsylvania state lawmakers want to improve conditions for women in prison

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The bill from Rep. Lori Mizgorski (R-Allegheny) would limit how and when disciplinary tools like restraints and solitary confinement can be used. It would also guarantee visitation rights between mothers and children in most circumstances, and require prisons to offer feminine hygiene products.

...

During debate, Rep. Morgan Cephas (D-Philadelphia) said certain types of so-called “alternative punishment” like solitary confinement can amplify traumas women carry with them when entering prison.

“Many have suffered some type of physical or sexual abuse, or some type of substance abuse challenges, and they face particularly daunting obstacles when they return to society,” she said.'

If Gender Doesn’t Matter, Why do Female Politicians Say They’re Better Because They’re Women?

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is there something distinctive about women? Yes, but only when it’s convenient.

In an interview with New York Gov. Kathy Hochul earlier this week, WNYC host Brian Lehrer asked, “Is there anything you think specifically that you as a woman have brought to New York state policy that Governor (Andrew) Cuomo or any man might not have?”

Her answer was head-spinning but also completely representative of how feminists want to have it both ways.

First, of course, Hochul said she can “govern with the same strength and the toughness required to run a state as rough and tumble as New York truly is, the politics and the government.” She can go toe-to-toe with any man when it comes to getting things done but also, because she’s a woman, she has other qualifications.

“What I bring is a sense of compassion and empathy when I’m going out to settings where people … had to endure extreme tragedy. Whether it was consoling people after the subway shooting in Brooklyn or going up to Buffalo after the massacre there. … What (women) bring also is strength, but also a perspective from the point of view of a mother who has to sit there and figure out how she can afford to fill up her kids’ backpack in the next week.”
...
Indeed, if a male politician had said he was in charge of his family’s finances and so had a better understanding of whether they could afford to fill up a child’s backpack, that too would have been labeled sexist.'

Governor Wolf, First Lady Announce Opening of $2 Million Program Supporting Successful Women's Reentry

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Governor Tom Wolf and First Lady Frances Wolf today announced the opening of a brand new, $2 million Women's Reentry Services Initiative Program aimed at giving women the best possible opportunity for successful transitions back into their community following incarceration.

"More than 70% of women incarcerated in Pennsylvania's prisons are mothers. And when they reenter society, they face the everyday struggles of every mother—to balance work, family, and life—combined with the reality of integrating themselves into a society that will immediately slap a label on them for their prior mistakes," said Gov. Wolf. "We see these women, we see their struggle as they stretch themselves thin to make ends meet, let alone thrive.'

Ukraine war-induced crisis affecting women and girls disproportionately: UN report

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The policy paper developed by gender agency UN Women and the Secretary-General's Global Crisis Response Group, describes how the war has widened gender gaps in hunger, education and poverty, and has also increased gender-based violence.'

Woman Who Pretended To Be A Man Dies By Assisted Suicide Years After Realizing How Difficult It Was To Be One

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Journalist Norah Vincent and author of Self-Made Man wanted to experience life as the opposite gender so she could write about it. She was a lesbian, not transgender, but her inquisitive nature made her curious about gender and identity. In 2003, she hired a makeup artist to help her paint stubble on her face to match her short, dark hair. She worked out to build the muscles on her back, wore rectangular-framed glasses, and strapped her breasts against her chest. And with the help of a Julliard vocal coach, she was even able to train her voice to sound more manly. Norah Vincent was determined. There was no stopping her from switching genders. But what she found in living life as the opposite sex wasn't "male privilege" — instead, Vincent learned what it was like to be at an incredible disadvantage.

...

Norah's immersive journalism was anything but empowering. She felt alone and defeated as Ned. "Men are suffering," Norah said. "They have different problems than women have, but they don't have it better. They need our sympathy, they need our love, and they need each other more than anything else. They need to be together."'

Toxic masculinity is a misnomer; false masculinity is what should concern us

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems not long ago that the term “toxic masculinity” was just a controversial phrase in our society, but, although the excitement around the term seems to have died down, the term has come to identify a deep cultural divide between more progressive social reformers and advocates of a more traditional society. Some might see it as an attack on traditional masculinity, while others would say it is a necessary critique of the culture that surrounds modern masculinity.'

Defying science, American parents are turning away from male circumcision

Mastodon · 23 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision has become an increasingly fraught topic over the past few decades, as new American parents have grown uncomfortable with the idea of severing a piece of their child's body, minor though it may be. This is understandable from an ethical perspective: A newborn baby cannot consent to such an unalterable act. Anti-circumcision advocates argue that it is better to forgo the procedure in infancy and allow the child to make his own decision later on. As a result of this intuitive reasoning, rates of circumcision have fallen from about 85% in 1965 to roughly 58% in 2010, the latest year for which solid data is available.

Parents, however, also have the responsibility to do what's best for their child, even if that decision causes personal discomfort. And the evidence for the health benefits of circumcision, accumulated over decades of research, is overwhelming.'

Senate Democrats and Title IX

Mastodon · 24 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s not every day that any U.S. senator – much less 19 of them – denounce the presumption of innocence. Or describe hearings with cross-examination, hallmarks of both the criminal justice and the congressional oversight systems, as “wholly unnecessary to determine what happened in a particular incident.”

Those remarks came in a seven-page comment released from the senators in question, all of them Democrats, in response to new Title IX regulations proposed by the current administration, which already dramatically scale back procedural protections for accused students. Their ranks included respected moderates such as Amy Klobuchar and Jack Reed, as well as civil libertarians like Ron Wyden.

That many politicians are fair-weather friends of civil liberties is old news. But for students who face a campus adjudication, the consequences of this almost cavalier dismissal of basic fairness is troubling.'

Finland shuts borders with Russia as conscription age men flee Putin order

Matt · 24 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Bet they're not giving Russian women any trouble. Excerpt:

'Finland on Friday said it would "significantly restrict" the number of Russian "tourists" it will permit to cross its borders as an exodus of Russian men attempt to flee and avoid conscription.

The Finnish government said its decision was made over concerns that issuing swaths of visas to Russian men would cause "serious damage to Finland's international position."

Few details were released on the restrictions that Helsinki will now enforce, though its decision comes after other neighboring nations took steps earlier in the week to block Russian tourists from crossing their borders.'

For Suburban Texas Men, a Workout Craze With a Side of Faith

Matt · 25 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to see this. Excerpt:

'This is F3 — that's fitness, fellowship and faith — a fast-growing network of men's workouts that combine exercise with spiritually inflected camaraderie. Founded in 2011 as a free, outdoor group workout, its popularity exploded during the pandemic, expanding to some 3,400 groups across the country from 1,900, aiming to solve, as John Lambert, a.k.a. Slaughter, the network's chief executive, put it, "a problem that society at large and men definitely didn't even know they had: middle-age male loneliness."

In Katy, a booming upper-middle-class suburb just west of Houston bursting with office parks, new housing developments and the most expensive high school stadium in the nation, the F3 model has thrived. The former railroad town now has 18 workout locations, compared with four in Houston proper.

I first heard about F3 through a few acquaintances in Texas, men who spoke about their local groups with the zeal of evangelists. It reminded me of how urban women would talk about SoulCycle in the early 2000s, only these guys were suburban fathers.

Its no-frills formula inspires fervent devotion. "F3 has changed my life," Mr. Ayala said. He first attended last year, when a friend repeatedly nudged him to try it — or in F3's baroque jargon, put him in an "emotional headlock." He was hooked immediately. About a year ago, he got an F3 tattoo on his chest.'

A Women’s College Goes Coed, and ‘Chaos Ensues’

Mastodon · 25 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students at NDMU got the news that their school was going coed through a letter that arrived in their email inboxes without warning Tuesday afternoon. (This paragraph has been updated to clarify the way the students received the news.)

Malinowski, who was in the dining hall when the email came through, said that when students realized what it meant, “chaos ensued.”

“People were shouting, upset, crying,” she said. “It was just truly an astounding moment for the school to shred its history so quickly and without warning.”
...
Dozens of alumnae voiced their opposition to the move in a meeting with NDMU president Marylou Yam held over Zoom Thursday night. On alumnae Facebook groups and other social media sites, many expressed anger mixed with nostalgic remembrances of what they described as the distinct, community-centered experience of attending a women’s college.'

Are we sleepwalking into a male mental health crisis?

Matt · 25 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course, it's not only young men who are being failed by society right now. In 2021, males aged between 50 and 54 were found to have the highest suicide rate in England and Wales. Kriss Hall, founder of a non-profit tackling mental health issues in hospitality called The Burnt Chef Project, also suggests that traditionally male-dominated industries foster stress and anxiety. "Within hospitality, and certainly within the male arena of this, you're under a lot of pressure and you've got to ensure you're not the weak link," he explains. "You don't want to be the one to sink the ship, especially when everyone has high levels of stress."

...

Over the past decade, Hall's scheme has supported and trained thousands of individuals across hundreds of countries. As part of its recent Workplace Stress Guide, surveying 673 people working across the hospitality sector (almost a sixth of whom were men), 69.44 per cent of male workers claimed that unrealistic time pressures had impacted their wellbeing. Ultimately, says Hall, we'll only be able to create safe spaces for men to seek solace and open up if we focus on company-wide culture, and not solely a few bad eggs.'

Fresh accusations of violence against women divide France's left

Matt · 27 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Look at the so-called standards being applied here. A break-up that was difficult for the woman now is as bad as violence against her? Really, if these are the standards this poitical party adopts, no male pol in it is safe. Excerpt:

'Another head has rolled on the French left. Julien Bayou is no longer co-president of the green group in France's National Assembly or national secretary of the Green party, where he's been an important figure since 2013, after being accused of psychological abuse against his former partner.

The Green party — Europe Écologie les Verts (EELV) — is torn over the affair, which comes right after a rift formed within the broader left-wing alliance — led by far-left leader Jean-Luc Mélenchon's France Unbowed — over another controversy surrounding violence against women.
...
In July, Le Figaro reported that Bayou's ex-girlfriend had filed a complaint to the Greens' internal team which deals with violence against women, after what he called a "painful and difficult breakup." His job only appeared to be on the line, however, after Sandrine Rousseau, a fellow Green and influential MP, re-upped the matter on France 5 last week.

Rousseau suggested Bayou had exhibited "behavior which could break women's psychological health" and said that Bayou's former partner had later attempted suicide. The party subsequently suspended Bayou from his role as co-president of the group, and he has now stepped down as secretary as well.'

UK's Royal Air Force admits skewed hiring in favour of women, ethnic minorities

Mastodon · 27 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'UK's Royal Air Force (RAF) has admitted that it made "mistakes" following allegations that it had prioritised the hiring of ethnic minorities and female candidates over white men in a bid to achieve "impossible" diversity targets.

The claims came to light last month after Sky News leaked an email from an officer of RAF's recruitment department, expressing concern over the skewed hiring process.

The unnamed officer reportedly told her superior officer that she was not willing to allocate slots on training courses based purely on a specific gender or ethnicity.

The officer later resigned after she refused to follow the recruitment process, saying that the fighting strength of the RAF would be weakened by meeting “impossible” diversity targets, reports Sky News.'

Russians Are Terrified and Have Nowhere to Turn

Matt · 27 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the days since Vladimir Putin announced a “partial mobilization,” clearing the way for hundreds of thousands of men to be conscripted into his failing war effort, we’ve fielded tens of thousands of messages like these. Some were plaintive; others were defiant. Some were simply defeated. Along with Russians desperately trying to board flights, crossing borders or attacking recruitment centers, they testified to the same desire: to avoid the draft.

The truth is, they probably can’t. While presented as a limited measure affecting only those who previously served in the army, in practice, the government has free rein to conscript as many people as it wants. The initial number of 300,000, for example, already seems an enormous undercount. In the face of a monstrous regime hellbent on war and widespread international isolation, Russians are caught in a disaster. And judging from the response so far, they are terrified.'

The Russian men fleeing mobilization, and leaving everything behind

Matt · 28 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The emerging scale of the exodus — more than 180,000 Russians have fled just to three neighboring countries, with the full tally likely much higher — has raised questions about the Kremlin's ability to sustain its war effort. As more Russians cross the border, escaping the restrictions imposed by Putin's government, they are providing a glimpse of alienation and unease spreading back home.

Many have fled to Kazakhstan, according to the country's Interior Ministry, which said nearly 100,000 Russians had entered the country since Putin announced the call-up on Sept. 21. At least 10,000 have crossed into Georgia each day — double the amount before the mobilization, according to authorities there.

...

The government, he said, was enlisting men "en masse." Neighbors and friends had been called up. "I had no choice. I can't go to war and kill people in Ukraine. And if I stayed, there was no other option." He and his wife decided he should leave on the day Putin announced the mobilization.

"In one day, I quit my job, took the money from the bank, took my wife and the baby to my parents. My entire life is breaking apart," he said.'

UK: ‘Much bigger’ woman cleared of forcing man to have sex with her after telling jurors she’s ‘too lazy’ to get on top

Mastodon · 29 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imogen Brooke, who weighed 24 stone at the time, allegedly pinned the man down after a date at her home in Southampton.

The 30-year-old was then accused of engaging in non-consensual sex with the man, who was left "staring at the wall" after the 15-minute ordeal.

Brooke sobbed and thanked jurors as she was today cleared of causing a person to engage in sexual activity without consent.

The panel took one hour to find the student not guilty following a four-day trial.

Brooke today today told jurors she would not have been able to tug the man over onto his back in bed because "I'm not Superwoman".'

The Crisis of Men and Boys

Matt · 30 September 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you've been paying attention to the social trends, you probably have some inkling that boys and men are struggling, in the U.S. and across the globe.

They are struggling in the classroom. American girls are 14 percentage points more likely to be "school ready" than boys at age 5, controlling for parental characteristics. By high school two-thirds of the students in the top 10 percent of the class, ranked by G.P.A., are girls, while roughly two-thirds of the students at the lowest decile are boys. In 2020, at the 16 top American law schools, not a single one of the flagship law reviews had a man as editor in chief.'

Why American boys are failing at school—and men are losing in life

Mastodon · 2 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In New York, boys are now lagging behind girls in math and a full grade level behind in English. Similar patterns can be seen across the nation. Boys graduate high school at about the same rate as poor students, while girls account for two out of three high schoolers in the top 10% ranked by GPA. One in four black boys repeat a grade, and 60% of students on college campuses are now women.

When almost one in four boys (23%) are categorized as having a “developmental disability,” it is fair to wonder if it is the boys — or the system — that is not functioning properly.

As many boys struggle through school, many men are also having a hard time in the labor market. The jobs men used to get without much formal education are disappearing: Fewer than one in ten jobs now require what the Bureau of Labor Statistics describes as “heavy work,” requiring “occasionally lifting or carrying 51-100 pounds or frequently lifting or carrying 26-50 pounds.”

Even before COVID cratered the economy in 2020, nine million men of prime working age were not employed. (Economists define the “prime” years as beginning at the age of 25 and ending, unnervingly, at 54.) Among men with just a high school education, one in three are not working. That’s 10 million men, a reserve army of labor five times the size of the People’s Liberation Army of China.'

Justice Department Announces $21.72 Million to Reduce Sexual and Domestic Violence on Campus, Support Children and Youth and Engage Men and Boys as Allies

Mastodon · 2 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Justice Department announced today nearly $22 million in upcoming grant awards to address and prevent sexual assault, domestic violence, dating violence, and stalking on college campuses, provide services to youth victims and children exposed to such violence and engage men and boys as allies.

Specifically, the Office on Violence Against Women (OVW) will award $10,688,200 through 36 grants to address and prevent domestic violence and sexual assault on college campuses through the Grants to Reduce Sexual Assault, Domestic Violence, Dating Violence and Stalking on Campus Program (Campus). In addition, the Consolidated Youth and Engaging Men Grant Program (CYEM) will award $11,031,653 through 25 grants to implement programming that encourages men and boys to be role models and change agents in their communities working toward the goal of eliminating sexual and domestic violence.

“Studies show that approximately one in five women surveyed have been victimized by sexual assault while in college,” said Associate Attorney General Vanita Gupta. “We need to support college campuses with the resources to create a campus culture that is not tolerant of sexual assault or dating violence. These grants will help colleges and universities develop prevention policies, offer survivor-centered services, and train campus police to meet the needs of their students. These grants also provide critical intervention services to children and young adults, in addition to engaging them to be leaders in combatting violence.”'

Woman jailed after ten false rape claims against two men

Mastodon · 2 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who made ten false rape claims against two men including one who wore an ankle tag to prove his innocence has been jailed.

Cathy Richardson, 35, from Westcliff in Essex, made the allegations between January and May 2021 but has now been sentenced to more than five years in prison.

One of the men who faced the false accusations agreed to wear an ankle tag to prove to police he was nowhere near where an assault was said to have taken place.

Essex Police condemned Richardson's actions, saying the accusations had made a "huge impact" on the men's lives and had resulted in wasted police time and resources.

The force added her false allegations had also done a "great disservice" to real victims of sexual crimes.'

Male Poverty Increases according to U.S Census Bureau Report

Matt · 2 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday, September 13, the U.S. Census Bureau released its Poverty in the United States: 2021 report. The number of males who fell below the poverty line increased by 398,000 from 2020 to 2021 while the number of females declined by 13,000. Although the percentage of females living in poverty in the report was higher by 2.1%, (12.6% to 10.5%) there are other factors that impact our understanding of poverty thresholds and eligibility for programs.

Poverty thresholds, which is the purpose of the Census Bureau report, simply measure poverty and does not determine eligibility for certain federal programs. Guidelines for eligibility is more a function of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). This difference may explain some of the reason males tend to have a harder time when it comes to eligibility, particularly when government and state agencies form councils on women in an important attempt to quantify the challenges facing them. The same agencies do not exist for boys and men, so their eligibility is often understated.'

UK: Lack of urgency in tackling male suicide, report claims

Matt · 2 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Government has shown “a lack of urgency” in its approach to tackling male suicide, according to a cross-party report.

The All-Party Parliamentary Group (APPG) on Issues Affecting Men and Boys has concluded the current political and public policy approach to the biggest killer of men under 50 is “not working”.

The group has called for an overarching Men’s Health Strategy to be introduced, which includes a “clear” male suicide prevention strategy as a central foundation, to tackle the significant rate of suicide among men.

More than 4,700 men in England, Wales and Scotland took their own lives in 2021, and male suicide claims on average 13 lives a day in the UK.'

How a Change in Domestic Violence Law Is Impacting Hollywood Divorces

Mastodon · 4 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In September 2020, Gov. Gavin Newsom signed several bills intended to enhance protections for survivors of abuse. One of them, which was enacted in part because of an increase in isolation-related domestic violence amid the pandemic, allows a party to request a restraining order in response to not only things like assault, battery, destruction of property and harassment but also if someone is destroying “the mental or emotional calm of the other party.”

...

Royce says she’s already seen it weaponized in custody battles. California generally favors a 50-50 split, but a domestic violence claim could help the alleged victim secure sole custody. One of Royce’s clients, a director, was threatened with a false claim, she says. “The #MeToo movement put him on a heightened alert,” says Royce. “He doesn’t want to fight it because it would be publicized. Even though it’s all false, he feels he has to succumb.”'

New book examines gender on legal response to domestic violence

Mastodon · 4 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Gender and Domestic Violence: Contemporary Legal Practice and Intervention Reforms", a new book edited and authored by Brenda Russell, professor of psychology at Penn State Berks, and John Hamel, licensed clinical social worker, practitioner, researcher, and editor-in-chief of the journal Partner Abuse, presents empirical research findings and reform recommendations for prosecutors, criminal defense attorneys, policymakers, and intervention providers with the aim of rectifying shortcomings in legal and law enforcement responses to domestic violence.

Domestic violence, otherwise known more recently as intimate partner violence (IPV), is a significant social and public health problem in the United States and worldwide. Early research on domestic violence focused on female victimization, as this was essential to bring recognition to the plight of many women who were exploited and abused by men.

...

According to Russell and Hamel, the causes and dynamics of domestic violence include an exaggerated focus on males as perpetrators and females as victims. Over time, this has resulted in a heavy-handed law enforcement response that compromises the rights of criminal defendants without necessarily reducing violence. The book confronts the notion that certain beliefs shared among victim advocates, legal actors, and other stakeholders have led to the use of ineffective and potentially harmful one-size-fits-all intervention policies that can jeopardize defendant due process and victim safety.

“There is a shared belief that DV or IPV is bound by gender and is primarily a crime against woman,” said Russell. “Unfortunately, this shared belief has deeply affected legal decision-making and practices.”'

Study links in utero ‘forever chemical’ exposure to low sperm count and mobility

Matt · 5 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new peer-reviewed Danish study finds that a mother’s exposure to toxic PFAS “forever chemicals” during early pregnancy can lead to lower sperm count and quality later in her child’s life.

PFAS – per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances – are known to disrupt hormones and fetal development, and future “reproductive capacity” is largely defined as testicles develop in utero during the first trimester of a pregnancy, said study co-author Sandra Søgaard Tøttenborg of the Copenhagen University hospital.

...

PFAS are a class of about 12,000 chemicals typically used to make thousands of products resistant to water, stains and heat. They are called “forever chemicals” because they accumulate in humans and the environment and do not naturally break down. A growing body of evidence links them to serious health problems such as cancer, birth defects, liver disease, kidney disease and decreased immunity.

The study, published on Wednesday in Environmental Health Perspectives, examined semen characteristics and reproductive hormones in 864 young Danish men born to women who provided blood samples during their pregnancies’ first trimesters between 1996 and 2002.'

Climate change is a threat multiplier for women and girls: UN expert

Mastodon · 5 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Climate change and environmental degradation are escalating the risk and prevalence of violence against women and girls across the world, a UN expert warned.

“Climate change is the most consequential threat multiplier for women and girls, with far-reaching impacts on new and existing forms of gendered inequities,” said Reem Alsalem, UN Special Rapporteur on violence against women and girls, its causes and consequences, in a report to the General Assembly on Tuesday.

“The cumulative and gendered consequences of climate change and environmental degradation breach all aspects of the rights of women and girls,” the expert said. “Climate change is not only an ecological crisis, but fundamentally a question of justice, prosperity and gender equality, and intrinsically linked to and influenced by structural inequality and discrimination.”'

Women Are Better at Leading Countries Than Men, Survey Respondents Say

Mastodon · 5 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women serve as elected heads of state or government in only 28 countries, according to the U.N. But a survey suggests the global public might happily welcome many more.

About 70% of queried respondents believe that countries led by women tend to be better managed, according to a U.S. News survey involving more than 17,000 people from 36 countries. Another 90% believe that women deserve equal rights.

...

The question of whether or not countries led by women tend to be better managed was somewhat more divisive. Of the nearly 70% who said they agreed with this statement, 32% said they agreed “slightly” and only 15% said they agreed “strongly.” Seventy-six percent of women agreed that countries led by women are better managed, compared with 62% of men.'

Olivia Wilde And Jason Sudeikis's Break-Up Inspired Opposite Ideas About Gender Roles

Mastodon · 5 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wilde called Jordan Peterson "a pseudo-intellectual" and "incel hero," who inspired the film's villain. Both these claims have rightly been discredited, but Wilde reveals a fundamental misunderstanding of Peterson's appeal by claiming he "legitimizes" incels. Peterson explicitly warns against resentment and complacency. Rather, his teaching to young men could be summarized in 4 words: Grow the hell up! Peterson appeals to young men because he presents a positive vision for masculine aspiration, a preferable alternative to Wilde's world, where men are either oppressors or betas. Harry Styles manages to — between his work on camera and on the press circuit — be both.

...

Men can be oppressors as they are in her film. These 1950s-era men are sloppily categorized as complete villains to be opposed at all costs. And then, there are the real-life men of 2022 who she dates and directs, fops like Chris Pine and Harry Styles. These men are so emasculated that they are, at best, fun diversions and otherwise irrelevant. Wilde's advice to men seems to be: Shut the hell up. Judging from his interview, Styles is well-suited to such a calling.'

Jonathan Franzen: Critics Right To Suspect 'White Male Authors'

Mastodon · 6 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jonathan Franzen, a writer beloved by millions of readers, likes coming to Europe where he doesn't face "the baggage" his public persona carries back in the United States.

Novels such as "The Corrections" and "Freedom" have made him one of the foremost literary authors of his generation in the United States, and his most recent, "Crossroads", is seen by some critics as his greatest achievement yet.

But in his home country, his success has been blighted by a somewhat cranky public image that has seen him painted as the epitome of the privileged white man -- someone even set up the web address "ciswhitemale.com" to go straight to Franzen's Facebook page.

At 63, he is patient with his critics.

"America was created by white men. It's still run by white men to the advantage of white men," he told AFP. "If you're a white male writer, you're automatically under suspicion, you're part of the power structure.

"For younger people, especially in these highly political times, I'm wrong until proven right. Anything I do. And I understand that and I accept that. I'm not bitter about it, because I have had enormous privileges simply by being white and middle class in the US."'

Are Men Failing Society?

Mastodon · 7 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a lot of talk about how men are failing women in society. And of course, this idea is being voiced mostly by women. After the reversal of Roe v Wade, many women took to microphones and blogs to proclaim that men had failed to protect a woman's most basic right. Society has declared that men are not upholding their roles to protect or provide for women.

This is a general attitude fogging up the atmosphere about men that I think deserves some clearing. I think we must acknowledge that the reason men are not "there" for women is that women have said they don't need a man, don't want a man, and can do everything by themselves.

I often think feminism is at the center of this confusion and conflict between the sexes. Feminism insisted that women and men are not really all that different. That women are just as strong and independent as men. There are even some pockets of society that believe that a woman can become a man (and that a man can become a woman). In the last 3 decades, popular notions have circulated convincing women that men are the enemy: Men are predators. Men are rapists. Men are misogynists. Men are toxic. Men abandon their children. Blah blah blah.'

Clarifying the American Psychological Association's Guidelines for Boys and Men

Mastodon · 7 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To address the ongoing controversy about American Psychological Association's Practice Guidelines for Boys and Men, we want to clarify what these guidelines are, and what they are not.

...

Boys and men in the U. S. are not faring very well these days, according to a large number of indicators in educational and vocational attainment, health, mental health, and creating social problems such as gun violence. Psychological research strongly suggests that a big part of all of these problems is that young boys, in elementary school and even earlier, are made to feel that conforming to masculine norms is obligatory, and that they should feel ashamed of themselves if they violate these norms This gender role socialization process has been well-documented, and the long-lasting effects show up when adult men are asked to reveal their "top secret"—the thing they have never told anyone and never would. It turns out that many of these shameful secrets reflect their own violation of masculine norms when they were boys. The APA Practice Guidelines for Men and Boys provides guidance to psychologists to help them understand the gender role socialization of boys and its consequences and provides tools to help boys and men who want to overcome the lingering effects of their socialization to do so.'

"Men Without Work" review

Matt · 7 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Review here. From 2017 but still entirely relevant. Excerpt:

'Nicholas Eberstadt has become one of our highest-impact socioeconomic and demographic analysts, rivaling his American Enterprise Institute colleague Charles Murray. In Men without Work, he alerts us to a new “invisible national crisis.” This is the flight of some 10 million American men in their prime ages (between 25 and 54) from the work force, and indeed from all the commitments and responsibilities of civilized society. He documents an “immense army” of rootless “idlers,” tending toward obesity, popping pills (mainly prescription painkillers, but also, in alarming numbers, harder drugs), immersed in TV for an average of 21.7 hours a week and video games for 6.7 hours, and stickily keyboarding on an oily surf of terabytes of porn, all while their baby-boom elders retire, often on disability, and, as of this August, 337,000 manufacturing jobs go unfilled.
...

Every mainstream TV channel and magazine from Fortune to Wired joins the fray in a siege of affirmative-action journalism, pretending that the leading young inventors and entrepreneurs in America and the world are mostly female and that even Silicon Valley is somehow defective in gender diversity. Wired says the new Steve Jobs is a twelve-year-old girl in Mexico. Ellen Pao becomes a luminous cover attraction with absurd claims of discrimination against women at Kleiner Perkins, long the world’s most successful venture-capital firm (twelve out of 50 Kleiner partners are women). The explicit purpose of all this agitprop is to overthrow the “privileges of the patriarchy,” to break the grip of the “nuclear family,” to unseat the presumption of male breadwinners, to relieve women of their responsibility to bear and raise children, to liberate wives from bondage in bad marriages, and to shatter “glass ceilings” galore in a world where childbearing is mostly a “choice” rather than necessary for survival.
...
If you want a feminist culture that abolishes the “patriarchy” and denies all canonical male roles; that banishes carbon fuels, new chemicals, and the manufacturing they enable; that represses disruptive entrepreneurial behavior; and that enforces preferential representation of women throughout the commanding heights of the economy, you cannot at the same time have most men eagerly supporting the plan. Without most men on board, the nation will not be able to defend itself or produce new technology and enterprise. Without women bearing children and raising them in families, the nation will not be able to reproduce itself.

Eberstadt is thus pointing to a fatal flaw — a sexual suicide in an American polity where women outvote men and prefer socialism and stasis over progress and prosperity, where they choose dependency on government over collaboration with husbands and family. But this “choice” is so unnatural and ultimately self-defeating that it may well be reaching its morbid pinnacle today in a feminist bubble. Watch for an explosive reversal in coming years.'

Trainer Accused of Sexually Abusing High School Football Players, Targeting Low-Income Teens

Matt · 8 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. One to watch. Excerpt:

'The daughter of a California high school football coaching icon has been accused of sexually abusing several football players between 2002 and 2006, when she was the trainer for the team.

A recently-filed lawsuit obtained by PEOPLE alleges Tiffany Strauss-Gordon abused six varsity football players while she was the trainer at Colton High School.

Strauss-Gordon is the daughter of the late Harold Strauss, who, for years, served as the head coach for the school's Yellowjackets football team.

Strauss-Gordon, who has not been criminally charged, began working for the district around 2001. She was most recently the athletic director at Grand Terrace High School.

The Los Angeles Times reports that school officials in Grand Terrace confirmed Strauss-Gordon was on a leave of absence.

The lawsuit further alleges that Strauss, other players, their parents, and officials at Colton High School were all aware of the "special treatment" Strauss-Gordon is alleged to have extended to the team's star players, but looked the other way. PEOPLE reached out to the school and did not immediately receive a response.'

Opinion: Andrew Tate’s success reveals feminism’s failures

Mastodon · 9 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The answer is a simple one. Feminism launched Tate into eminence. Tate was a pendulum effect that resulted from extreme, modern feminism. As feminists kept villainizing “straight, white, Christian males,” men were faced with two options: either support the feminist narrative or go against it.

Modern feminists have stressed the idea that for women to step up, men would have to step down. They villainized the concept of masculinity, claiming that it was toxic, patriarchal, and harmful. Women and men were never meant to compete against each other, yet, modern feminism has forced people to believe that men are either feminists or bigots.

...

Young men, who were desperate to break free from the shackles of constant pressure from feminists, turned to Tate as their messiah and wholeheartedly accepted anything he uttered. Tate spoke to the dissatisfaction that young men faced in a world centered around being “woke.”

Young boys were so tired of their identity being constantly berated by feminist extremism, that they gravitated to another extreme: extreme masculinity. Tate not only made men feel validated, but he empowered them by constantly insulting women.

Feminism’s habit of blaming men for all of society’s ills and attempting to feminize them has proven to be a primary reason for Tate’s success, as there has been a prominent lack of traditionally masculine role models. Thus, it comes as no surprise that adolescent boys gravitated toward the “uber-macho” Tate.'

The relations between the sexes are ending – the reason is not technology

Matt · 9 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For over two decades now the frequency of sex between men and women has been continuously dropping in young people. A study from 2020 that analyzed data collected between 2016 to 2018 has reported that 31% of guys in the age of 18 to 24, and 19% of girls of that age, did not have sex in the year preceding the study. While among guys this was a 63% increase in sexlessness from 19% in 2002 to 31% today, for girls the change was much smaller, from 15% to 19% today. That is, sexlessness is currently 63% higher in guys than in girls, while in 2002 it was 26% higher in guys; in the 1970s it was probably reversed and lower in guys than in girls, making the shift an extremely dramatic and radical one. During the period between 2002 and 2018, in men aged 25-34 there was a doubling in sexlessness from 7% to 14%, compared to a smaller rise in women from 7% to 12%, that again recapitulates the reversal of sexlessness between the sexes, from a flipping-point in 2002 when the rates where the same.

Another study, from 2017, which surveyed over 26,000 respondents in the US and assessed the change in sexlessness between 1989 and 2014, also demonstrated a decline in sex, and noted that it was the strongest in those born in the 90s.

...

When a declared goal of feminism is to end the relations and feminism then vigorously performs actions meant explicitly to achieve that until society internalizes the actions and regards them as “moral imperatives”, then feminism is what causes the decline in the relations between men and women, by banning the language humans have to communicate about sex and love and by inciting women and girls against relations with men with misrepresentation of data. Attributing the looming end of the relations, that is of love, to “technology”, while the very same technology doubled relations in groups not regulated and targeted by feminists – gays and lesbians – should be added under the dictionary definition of “gas-lighting” as the archetypal practical example.'

Ohio men not registered for military draft pay hundreds of thousands extra for college

Mastodon · 11 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nick Lombardo got a $4,500 lesson on the military draft in his Kent State tuition bill.

The 2021 graduate of a private high school in Akron neglected to sign up for the Selective Service System, as all American men are expected to on their 18th birthdays. Though a draft hasn't been called up since the Vietnam War, failing to register with selective services is grounds for felony prison time, hefty fines, denial of employment (like a job with the United States Postal Service) and — on a state-by-state basis — extra tuition or all-out bans on enrolling in public colleges and universities.

As members of Congress debate whether to abolish or expand the program, Lombardo joined the college-aged men in Ohio charged hundreds of thousands of dollars, likely millions, in extra tuition since the 1980s.'

With The Anti-Woke Backlash Against Women Escalating, Efforts To Increase Diversity Must Accelerate

Mastodon · 12 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In today's workforce, only slightly more women than men are college educated; yet, significantly fewer (33%) hold senior management roles. If women overtaking men in education bodes well for gender equality, the current gender gap in leadership positions is a reminder of how much harder women must work to get the same opportunities afforded to men.

...

Concurrently, the anti-woke capitalism movement has revealed its fangs. Under the banner of "protecting excellence," venture capitalists and businessmen have started organized actions to marginalize corporations that seek to create greater diversity. This not-too-closeted effort to ensure male primacy in boardrooms and other executive settings finds additional energy in the resurgence of the "bro" lingo and in sectors of corporate culture like tech and finance.

...

Notably, women are more likely to perform unpaid, emotional work in their jobs. They mentor and support at a higher rate. But they also manage men's emotional wobbliness, including mood changes, Machiavellian social interactions, destructive leadership behaviors and inappropriate conduct. Paradoxically, while women must often do double duty and self-regulate for themselves and their male colleagues, they are branded with the emotionally unstable label.'

UK: 'Serial liar' accused of beating herself with hammer to frame men for rape

Mastodon · 12 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors claim 21-year-old Eleanor Williams, from Barrow-in-Furness, is a "serial liar" who used false text messages and Snapchat conversations to bolster claims she had been trafficked and raped by multiple men.

Crown Prosecutor Jonathan Sandiford KC told the jury although Ms Williams was on one occasion discovered with multiple wounds on her body after going missing, the prosecution claims "the injuries had been self-inflicted with a hammer."

Ms Williams faces seven counts of perverting the course of justice. It is claimed she made false allegations of rape and violence against her between 2017 and 2020 to work colleagues, medical professionals, health workers and the police.

She is accused of faking evidence such as text messages on mobile phones and social media in which her alleged abusers and traffickers appeared to discuss or admit their supposed crimes, as well as messages in which she and other supposed victims appeared to discuss being trafficked or sexually exploited.'

The Elites Have Stopped Hiding Their Hatred of the Working Class

Mastodon · 14 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, a shocking moment of truth broke through the huge effort elites normally put into hiding their disdain for the rest of us. At an event sponsored by the libertarian Cato Institute, President of the Peterson Institute for International Economics, Adam Posen—a man who appears to be paid $450,000 a year—made clear his absolute contempt for the working class.

"The fetish for manufacturing is part of the general fetish for keeping white males of low education outside the cities in the powerful positions they are in in the U.S.," Posen said. As proof, Posen argued that no one cared when recessions hurt Black Americans.

...

Posen is not the only one to show how wokeness and elitism go hand in hand, enabling a member of the overeducated elite like Posen to arrive at the fantasy that white men without a college degree somehow have their hands on the levers of power such that anyone could be involved in "keeping" them there.

...

It turns out that when the jobs leave and people lose their livelihoods, they tend to lose their sense of meaning. Despair sets in and down the rabbit hole of addiction many people go. Men without a college degree are leading the nation in deaths of despair, but elites like Posen only see "powerful positions"!'

Russia is grabbing men off the street to fight in Ukraine

Matt · 16 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police and military officers swooped down on a Moscow business center this past week unannounced. They were looking for men to fight in Ukraine — and they seized nearly every one they saw. Some musicians, rehearsing. A courier there to deliver a parcel. A man from a Moscow service agency, very drunk, in his mid-50s, with a walking disability.

“I have no idea why they took him,” said Alexei, who, like dozens of others in the office complex, was rounded up and taken to the nearest military enlistment office, part of a harsh new phase in the Russian drive.

In cities and towns across Russia, men of fighting age are going into hiding to avoid the officials who are seizing them and sending them to fight in Ukraine.'

What Eventually Me Too Was and Is

Matt · 17 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From 2021 but still very relevant. Excerpt:

'For a particular faction in feminism, which was extremely small at the time, Me Too was from the very beginning a tool for implementing perceptions that re-define womanhood, manhood, sexuality – humanity – and not in a way that drives humanity toward a humanist vision. For them, Me Too was not primarily about providing support and encouraging law enforcement, but, a means of overt violence and intimidation for re-education, of all men and all women, as to what is a woman and what is a man, and what are the relations between them and their meaning – that is, what is human. Re-education for the purpose of creating a person who conforms with the beliefs of the group that I will refer to here as “the Gender Church”.

For years, this faction of feminism has cultivated views that were constantly drifting away from any founded thinking on humanity and human sexuality. Its origins date back to the 1960s and 1970s, and several decades ago the faction developed a belief that there are no two sexes in humanity (in the sense that men and women actually have sex-specific qualities that arise from their innate sex); that heterosexuality is an artificial fabrication and dictation by the male sex toward the female sex that needs to stop; that all violence in human society comes only from men; and that hence, all women are victims and masculinity must be rewritten or erased. Half a century ago, this group was a small and negligible minority, but the rest of feminism almost never came out against it. Perhaps feminism never objected to avoid internal controversy, or perhaps many were tempted by the feeling that the faction promoted, of freedom to be violent without accountability, because all violence will always be justified and moral since the responsibility will always be placed on men, as they are depicted in the faction’s beliefs as the only source of any human suffering. Many may have been lured by a sense of freedom to hate (as expressed in books such as “I hate men”), because any hatred will be presented as nothing but a rational response to pure evil (accordingly, a sense of supremacy will ensue). Since this faction was operating in the absence of any substantial internal or external critique, in the two-to-three decades preceding Me Too it underwent two changes: It became increasingly extremist, but at the same time also more and more dominant in the mainstream. Women adhering to concepts of this small core became influential thanks to constant advances to centers of power – in the media, in literature, academia, large feminist organizations, government offices – under the guise of classical feminism, whereas, ideologically and emotionally, the ideas they advocated for have nothing in common with humanist conceptions of human equality and of equal human rights and dignity to all, regardless of any classification.'

Stephanie Holden Smith: American feminism is a falsehood

Mastodon · 19 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American feminism is dead. May she rest in peace.

Though little was said about it due to the pandemic, the year 2020 was the 100-year mark for American women's suffrage. In a subsequent Pew Research Survey, women were asked about the impact of feminism on their lives; 41% of women said it helped them at least a little; one in 10 said feminism helped them a lot; 7% said feminism hurt them, while half said it has neither helped nor hurt them personally.

The 1970s brand of forceful feminism was a misguided movement toward unmoored sexual freedom that has now fully devolved into little more than an astroturf abortion lobbying mafia. American feminists have decided that unabated abortion rights are the only issue that matters to women that matter (liberals), and, therefore, have relegated themselves to harping in their echo chamber on the View and wearing red capes in court protests while covering for Hollywood and political elites in the false #metoo movement. American feminism is dead because it ignored the fact that most women aren't anti-male militants who want abortion on demand until birth (or after). American feminism is dead because it allowed itself to be used by political power brokers instead of standing on principle or even asking women themselves what they thought or needed. Any redeeming value the movement had left was lost when it was purchased at auction by the highest bidder, who just happened to be in the extremely lucrative business of helping sex traffickers, aiding domestic abusers and promoting sex-selective abortion until birth: Planned Parenthood.'

Where Have All the Men in Moscow Gone?

Matt · 19 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many men have been staying off the streets out of fear of being handed a draft notice. As Olya came to work last Friday, she said, she witnessed the authorities at each of the four exits of the metro station, checking documents.

Her boyfriend, who was a barber at the salon, has also fled, and the separation is taking a toll.

“Every day is hard,” acknowledged Olya, who like other women interviewed did not want her last name used, fearing retribution. “It is hard for me to know what to do. We always planned as a couple.”

She is hardly alone. While there are still plenty of men in a city of 12 million people, across the capital their presence has thinned out noticeably — in restaurants, in the hipster community and at social gatherings like dinners and parties. This is especially true among the city’s intelligentsia, who often have disposable income and passports for foreign travel.'

Andrew Tate and the West’s lost boys

Mastodon · 20 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tate himself says: “I am simply saying things that many men think, believe and feel.” I’m not sure that this is true. It’s unlikely that most his viewers are so passionately anti-feminist. But simply dismissing Tate as a misogynist or an opportunist is not good enough, even though he is both. His appeal should instead be seen as a leading indicator of some of the genuine disorientation being felt by millions of boys and men.

This male malaise is real. The symptoms can be seen in school, in the workplace and in family life. Boys have fallen far behind girls in the classroom and on college campuses. Male wages have yet to recover from the Great Recession, and men in their twenties now earn slightly less, on average, than women of the same age. In two out of five couples, the woman earns as much or more than the man. A million children are growing up without any relationship with their father. The resulting “Dad Deprivation”, as Warren Farrell, author of The Boy Crisis, puts it, has clear negative effects on education, crime, health, and employment for children — especially boys.'

The Democrats Are Losing Black Men. The Moynihan Report Explains Why

Mastodon · 20 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But while this began as a solution to certain problems within these communities, it has had the unintended effect of exacerbating them. The Democratic Party's subversion of male responsibility and authority within the home has made it increasingly antagonistic toward men and the traditional family structure. President Obama was routinely criticized by his liberal Black base whenever he promoted marriage and fatherhood in speeches to Black audiences. And since then, those progressive critics have become the official voice of the party: The 2020 Democratic party platform did not contain a single reference to the importance of marriage and the nuclear family.

The Left's detachment of parenting from marriage is not confined to elected officials. Most people associate Black Lives Matter with criminal justice reform, yet none of its 13 founding principles mention police brutality. The co-founders were clear, however, about their desire to "disrupt" the nuclear family.

The media has joined hands with activists and the Democratic Party in this regard, too. Several years ago, an MSNBC roundtable discussion featured three Black professors who dismissed people advocating marriage and responsible fatherhood as believers in the "magical Black father myth," while Hall of Fame NFL coach Tony Dungy was harshly criticized for appearing with Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis in April to promote a responsible fatherhood initiative.'

Girls routinely get better grades than boys in class - and researchers think they know why

Mastodon · 20 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This bias against boys could mean the difference between a pass and a fail, and could have wider consequences in areas such as college admission, job choice and earnings, the researchers warn.

"There is a strong correlation between having higher grades and desirable educational outcomes, such as gaining admission to good colleges or having a lower probability of dropping out of school," said Ilaria Lievore.
...
In line with previous studies, the girls performed better than the boys in the standardised tests of language, while the boys were ahead at maths.

But the teachers put the girls ahead in both subjects. The girls' average grade in language was 6.6 out of 10, while the boys got 6.2. In maths, the average for the girls was 6.3, while the boys averaged 5.9 - below the pass mark of 6.

The analysis also showed that when a boy and a girl were similarly competent at a subject, the girl would typically receive a higher grade.'

Why America Needs More Men Working in Health Care and Education

Mastodon · 20 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"I didn't know that men could be doctors," my son said to me when he was about six. We were driving home from a visit to the pediatrician. I was perplexed. But then I realized that the doctor we'd just seen was the first male physician he'd encountered.

I reassured him that men could indeed be doctors. But I was careful to add, "and nurses, of course." His observation was a powerful reminder of the feminist mantra: "you have to see it to be it." If any particular activity, including a job, is seen as being for people of the opposite sex, it is unlikely to feature in your own aspirations.

My son's elementary school had an all-female staff, so it took a while to convince him that men could be teachers, too. Role models matter. As Gloria Steinem said in 1995, "The way we get divided into our false notions of masculine and feminine is what we see as children."
...
There are three pressing reasons to get more men into HEAL. First, given the decline in traditional male occupations, men need to look to these sectors for jobs. Blue collar jobs are disappearing. There will be more STEM jobs, too—but these are much smaller occupations. STEM accounts for only about 7% of all jobs, compared to 23% in HEAL. For every STEM job created between now and 2030, there will be three new jobs in HEAL. The labor market is feminizing faster than men.'

Cheating wife made false rape claim against husband and told him: 'I want to destroy you'

Mastodon · 20 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A cheating wife made false rape claims against her husband and bombarded him with abusive messages after she vowed to “destroy” him has been spared jail.

Former town councillor Sharon Taylor’s 21-year marriage to husband David broke down after she admitted having an affair.

Mr Taylor moved out of their semi-detached home in Malvern, Worcestershire, last year but his wife sent “non-stop” abusive messages to her estranged husband that demanded he continue carrying out household chores, as she refused to accept the marriage was over.

The mother-of-two said in one message: ”I want to destroy you.”

Between March and April this year she sent him 216 messages including one branding him a “robotic Nazi”.'

Spanish drivers to be fined for shouting sexist insults

Mastodon · 20 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spain has taken a series of measures to stamp out abuse of women recently and now one city is going further by punishing those who are caught insulting female drivers.

The local government of San Fernando, in the southern region of Andalucía, has approved a new municipal regulation imposing fines of up to €100 on those caught making sexist comments aimed at drivers.

The text of the new rule states that “the act of insulting other drivers, especially because of their sexual condition, can be deemed a traffic violation” and it states that people using public spaces “should respect norms of co-existence, with particular consideration when it comes to avoiding behaviour that denigrates drivers because of their sex”.'

Andrew Reiner: How to help male students stay and succeed in college

Mastodon · 21 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The dearth of American males attending college has generated a lot of discussion. But little has been said about another crisis among young males — their struggles to remain buoyant, let alone succeed, once they're in college.

I've witnessed this firsthand. As happened last semester and semesters before that, many of my male college students, especially Black males, are falling through the cracks. Male students are showing up to in-person — and even Zoom — class meetings less frequently, and they're struggling to complete assignments.
...
An uncomfortable truth is that some colleges and universities are not as male-friendly as they would like to believe. Anecdotal evidence abounds of male students feeling disconnected from college classrooms and cultures. Recently, I gave a talk at a two-year college about how males' academic and mental health struggles, as well as the alienation they feel, are impacting their academic performance. I was met with this: "Men have had the spotlight for far too long," one self-described gender studies professor boomed to round applause. "Why are we putting it on them yet again?"'

West Hollywood’s Community Safety and Well-Being Strategy Excludes straight white men under 55 years old

Mastodon · 21 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The only class of people who are not allowed to be in the focus group are straight white men under the age of 55.

From the City of West Hollywood website:
...
To facilitate engagement and amplify the voices of these groups in West Hollywood, the project team will be hosting 7 focus group sessions in-person and virtually in late October – early November 2022 for the following community groups:

- Black, Indigenous and People of Color (BIPOC)
- LGBTQ+ community members
- People with special needs and/or disabilities
- Russian-speaking community members
- Seniors (Ages 55+)
- Transgender, Non-binary, and Gender Non-Conforming community members
- Women

...
The only group excluded from the community safety and well being study is straight white men. West Hollywood Prides itself on being ‘inclusive’, but its policies exclude white men under the age of 55 in its community safety and well being strategy."'

Arizona Governor Candidate Kari Lake: 'There's No Such Thing as Toxic Masculinity'

Mastodon · 21 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kari Lake, a former local news anchor and current Republican nominee for governor in Arizona, insisted that “there’s no such thing as toxic masculinity” and that the term is a “bunch of BS” at an event called Black Voices for Kari Lake on Monday, The New Republic reported. At the event, hosted by former NFL player Jack Brewer and where“Power” by Kanye West reportedly played as Lake walked on stage, the candidate also made a number of racist dog whistles about Black families, absent fathers, and the necessity of “strong fathers” for “strong women.” (The comments notably echoed those of Georgia Republican Senate candidate Herschel Walker, who as we all know isn’t exactly Father of the Year.)

It’s pretty funny to hear a Republican candidate in a state grappling with a near-total abortion ban deny the existence of toxic masculinity, while her party embraces candidates like Herschel Walker, who once held a gun to his wife’s head, and campaigns with incel king Jordan Peterson and platforms Andrew Tate. Just look around, ma’am!'

Chief just opened a private club for female execs in SF

Mastodon · 21 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chief finally has a clubhouse in San Francisco, but don't call it a coworking space. The 8,600 square feet do include conference rooms, one-person Zoom rooms, and open-plan seating, but it also has a bar, lounge seating, and — like Chief's other clubhouses in New York, L.A., and Chicago — a piano.

"To me, what the piano represents is 'this is not a coworking space,'" Chief co-founder Lindsay Kaplan told me on a tour of the clubhouse in advance of its official opening Thursday. "This is a place where you can sit back and take meetings in a very laid-back manner."

Unlike the Wing, the women-focused coworking space and club that shut down this summer after a six-year run, Kaplan and co-founder and CEO Carolyn Childers are still much more interested in building and supporting Chief's network than boosting its physical amenities.'

Fans slam Laurence Fox for using his sons as 'weapons' after he accused his ex-wife Billie Piper of doing the exact same thing in raging Twitter attack

Matt · 21 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Stay quiet, get clobbered. Speak up, and get clobbered. For men in such positions, it's no-win. Excerpt:

'Fans have slammed Laurence Fox for using his children as 'weapons' by sharing a raging Twitter post where he accused his ex-wife Billie Piper of doing the same thing.

The actor, 44, took to Twitter on Thursday evening to share a fuming post, where he claimed his ex-wife Billie, 40, has used his two sons as 'weapons' against him.

But Twitter users were quick to hit back at Laurence and angrily accused him of being a 'complete hypocrite' as they claimed he was doing exactly what he accused Billie of.
...
But Twitter users were quick to hit back at his allegations and accused him of using his children as 'weapons' - which he accused Billie of - by sharing the ranting post.
...
Billie's representatives declined to comment when contacted by MailOnline.

Laurence and Billie divorced in 2016 after nine years of marriage on the grounds of Laurence's 'unreasonable behaviour'.

At the time of their split, they stated their intention to 'co-parent their children with the utmost mutual respect for each other'.'

British OnlyFans model Abigail White found guilty in stabbing death of ex after breakup

Matt · 22 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Exceptional. In most cases, she walks away either found not guilty or gets a suspended sentence. Excerpt:

'British OnlyFans model Abigail White, who went by Mitzee Lewis online and styled herself as "Fake Barbie," was sentenced to life in prison Friday for fatally stabbing her ex-boyfriend in late March.

The Bristol Crown Court found the 23-year-old woman guilty of stabbing her ex-boyfriend, Bradley Lewis, 22, in the heart at their South Gloucestershire home hours after he broke up with her.

White, who reportedly made $54,000 a year on OnlyFans, called an ambulance minutes after the stabbing on March 25, but lied and told authorities Lewis stabbed himself.

"I did not stab Bradley," White told police after she was arrested on suspicion of murder, the New York Post reported.'

The Boys Feminism Left Behind

Mastodon · 22 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If feminists paid more attention to the education of boys, they could help stop the trend to pathologize typically boy behavior. This means opposing the application of the label “toxic masculinity” for any behavior that the user disapproves of. It also means recognizing that there are some differences between males and females that are not just socially determined, but biologically based.

Schools are increasingly structured in ways that frustrate boys. We expect young children to sit still and be quiet—which is harder on boys. We cut back on physical activity and push academics to ever earlier grades, meaning that slower maturing boys start failing in school early. We have eliminated much of the hands-on learning opportunities, such as shop, that used to be standard.

Given the rate boys are diagnosed with various behavioral disorders, it’s fair to wonder if it’s the educational institutions, rather than the boys, that are not functioning properly. Feminism has succeeded without destroying the idea that there are inherent female traits. The same courtesy should be extended to males.'

No man's land

Mastodon · 22 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When a gender gap disfavors women, we hear about it. But in his new book, Richard Reeves shows that today, a lot of gender gaps disfavor men. A scholar from the Brookings Institution, Reeves has written a book about how one of the two human sexes is struggling and needs special attention from the government. It's called Of Boys and Men — and it's impossible to pigeonhole ideologically.

The tome is too pro-male to fit in with today's Left, too friendly with "social justice" concepts to belong on the Right, too big-government to be libertarian, and too interesting and unpredictable to qualify as centrist. Reeves's goal seems to be to force everyone to confront their blind spots while grabbing attention with a "made for cable news interviews" proposal:

Boys, Reeves says, should be "redshirted" in school by default. That is, unless their parents opted out, boys would get an extra "dose" of pre-K while girls of the same age were in kindergarten and then start kindergarten alongside girls one year younger than them.'

He's known as Chile's greatest poet, but feminists say Pablo Neruda is canceled

Mastodon · 22 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. "Posthumous feminist cancellation". Excerpt:

'There's a steady stream of fans visiting the museum that once was the home of Pablo Neruda, widely considered Chile's greatest poet. It's located on massive black cliffs overlooking the Pacific Ocean. It's also the spot where Neruda is buried.

The poet died 49 years ago, yet his reputation remains a work in progress.

Neruda has always been a polarizing figure in Chile, mainly for his left-wing politics. But now he is being called out by Chile's growing feminist movement as a male chauvinist and sexual predator.

"He's been canceled," says Lieta Vivaldi, a human rights activist and member of Chile's Feminist Lawyers Association.'

Women-are-wonderful effect

Matt · 23 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Referenced from another article, I thought I'd just mention it here on MANN. Excerpt:

'The women-are-wonderful effect is the phenomenon found in psychological and sociological research which suggests that people associate more positive attributes with women compared to men. This bias reflects an emotional bias toward women as a general case. The phrase was coined by Alice Eagly and Antonio Mladinic in 1994 after finding that both male and female participants tend to assign positive traits to women, with female participants showing a far more pronounced bias. Positive traits were assigned to men by participants of both genders, but to a far lesser degree.

The authors supposed that the positive general evaluation of women might derive from the association between women and nurturing characteristics. This bias has been cited as an example of benevolent sexism.
...
This research found that while both women and men have more favorable views of women, women's in-group biases were 4.5 times stronger than those of men. And only women (not men) showed cognitive balance among in-group bias, identity, and self-esteem, revealing that men lack a mechanism that bolsters automatic preference for their own gender.

Other experiments in this study found people showed automatic preference for their mothers over their fathers, or associated the male gender with violence or aggression. Rudman and Goodwin's suggested that maternal bonding and male intimidation influences gender attitudes.'

"Tom Brady And The Selfishness Of Conventional Masculinity"

Mastodon · 24 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Lesson: Commit to career and family, and you'll get screwed in the end. Remember this. Excerpt:

'Brady embodies a trope as old as the patriarchy: the honorable provider who clocks in even when he doesn't feel like it, gives his fullest effort every second, and rises up the ranks of his industry, securing his family's financial well-being. He bears this burden for his loved ones, he will tell you, and he appreciates their unyielding support because after a long day of providing, a man needs a warm embrace to come home to. Winning the Super Bowl "meant a lot for my family," Brady says in Tom vs. Time, "knowing what all my family put into it." He is, in his telling, a martyr for a righteous cause. As long as he thrives at work, pays the bills, and refrains from any abusive behavior, he fulfills the obligations of being A Good Man.'

Blame Qatar's Illiberal Migrant Labor Laws for Its Mounting World Cup Death Toll

Matt · 25 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. These men are modern-day slaves. Excerpt:

'Since FIFA awarded Qatar the hosting rights in December 2010, more than 6,500 migrant workers are known to have died in Qatar, according to a February 2021 Guardian report. That combined number came from the governments of Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka. The true total may be much higher, since large numbers of Kenyans and Filipinos also are working in Qatar.

Most of these workers died while building the vast infrastructure the country needed to host the roughly 1.5 million foreign fans who are expected to attend the World Cup in November and December. In 2015, when the migrant worker death toll was at least 1,200, the BBC reported that workers were building "subways, hotels, and even an entire city…not to mention an airport, numerous roads, a new sewerage system in central Doha and 20 skyscrapers."
...
While workers should be free to take on dangerous jobs, it is difficult for Qatar's migrant workers to leave if they find conditions unbearable due to strict laws around labor mobility. Many pay hundreds or thousands of dollars in fees to recruitment agents just to get their jobs and never manage to pay off their debts after years of work.

Mohammad Shahid Miah, for example, paid more than $4,000 in recruitment fees to land a construction job in Qatar in 2017. In September 2020, he died of electrocution when rainwater came into contact with exposed wires in his worker housing. According to The Guardian, "the debt has now been passed on to his distraught and impoverished parents" in Bangladesh.

Qatar instituted some labor reforms in 2018 regarding permission to leave the country or switch jobs. But according to Human Rights Watch, "employers still wield tremendous control over migrant workers' lives…leaving workers debt-burdened and in constant fear of retaliation." It wasn't until January 2020 that the government allowed most migrant workers to leave without permission from their employers.'

Australia: New funding to promote healthy masculinity among young men

Mastodon · 28 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Youth Minister Dave Kelly today announced $90,000 funding over three years for a peer-to-peer program to be rolled out in Western Australian classrooms coaching high school boys how to embrace healthy masculinity and positive attitudes towards women.

The MAN UP program aims to change the attitude, approach, behaviours and language around modern masculinity, enabling young men to embrace positive ideas over toxic ones at an earlier age.

...

Education workshops will be run for boys in years 7 to 12 and will focus on mental health and well-being with an emphasis on transforming boys into confident, purpose-driven, emotionally capable men.

"Mental health issues in men can stem from a toxic concept of masculinity that requires men to 'man up' or 'toughen up', to keep their emotions and vulnerability tightly controlled and hidden at all times.'

Spain: To prison for laughing on Twitter at the fatal victims of sexist violence

Matt · 28 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. While what the accused said was not desirable talk, plenty worse is said about men daily by feminists and out and out man-haters. Yet nothing happens to them. If misogyny is a crime in Spain and other places, why also is not misandry? This aside from free speech issues. Excerpt:

'A Twitter user will enter prison for laughing at the fatal victims of gender violence . The Supreme Court has decided to increase his sentence for a crime of incitement to hatred up to two and a half years in prison, which implies his compulsory entry into prison even if he has no criminal record.

According to the sentence, the accused Berenguer Jordi Moya wrote these messages on his Twitter account, under the nickname "Beren", between 2015 and 2016: "53 murdered by sexist gender violence so far this year, few seem to me with the whores that are loose", he said for example in one. "Let's see if we double that figure in 2016, thank you," he said in another, commenting on the number of women killed in crimes of sexist violence.

For these messages, and others, for example, laughing at the murdered young Sevillian Marta del Castillo in 2009 and also speaking of terrorism, the Prosecutor's Office requested four years in prison and the National Court imposed a total of two, which did not imply his mandatory entry. in a penitentiary center: now it has been the Supreme Court that has decided to uphold an appeal from the Public Ministry and increase his sentence to two and a half years, which will take him to jail.'

Men Need Restoration, Not Leftist Ridicule, To Fix Our Modern Masculinity Crisis

Mastodon · 28 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although liberals seem to view masculine suffering as more of a joke, if not justified, retribution for having to live under “the patriarchy,” America is witnessing unprecedented problems for its men. As Hawley said in a speech last year, “American men are working less, they are getting married in fewer numbers, they’re fathering fewer children, they’re suffering more anxiety and depression, they’re engaging in more substance abuse.” The percentage of men pursuing degrees in higher education is precipitously declining. According to a study released by the Brookings Institution earlier this year, only 41 percent of students currently enrolled in college are men. That decrease, which has been going on for years, seems likely to continue. The percentage of men graduating from college is also declining.

...

The left’s response to the masculinity crisis is one of contempt and derision. If men are suffering, it’s their own fault. “Aren’t men still disproportionately represented in C-Suites?” they rhetorically ask, forgetting that the vast majority of American men are not executives at million-dollar firms. Because our technocratic elites are insulated by their own wealthy, credentialed circles, they are ignorant and callous towards the dilemmas of millions of men, as evidenced by their sneering attacks on male defenders like Jordan Peterson.

The Washington Post’s print edition recently featured an extended story about a single mother raising her son in Wyoming’s “cowboy country” that had been featured on their website last month. It is, admittedly, a very sad tale of betrayal, domestic abuse, sexual exploitation, and social exclusion. “Men just take and take and take and take. That’s what they are taught,” the jaded woman tells the WaPo reporter.

This is where the left feels most comfortable: identifying and foregrounding stories that blame men for what ails society. There is, of course, truth here: There are plenty of losers and dirtbags out there who mistreat and exploit women. Feminist-influenced liberal elites have decided that men mistreat women because of their biology and traditional societal norms embolden this behavior. Men don’t need to reclaim chivalry and honor; they simply need to be more like women (though, ironically, these ideologues also claim women need to be more like men).'

Chelsea Clinton Calls For Tucker Carlson & ‘White Men’ To Be Held Accountable For Antisemitism After Kanye

Mastodon · 29 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chelsea Clinton called for even more accountability for “white men” sharing antisemitic remarks after Kanye West was dropped from a number of partnerships during an interview on The View on Friday, October 28. The former first daughter specifically accused right-wing commentator Tucker Carlson of spreading antisemitism, when asked about her reaction to the rapper’s recent comments.

Even though Chelsea said that it was good to see Kanye face consequences, she accused the Fox News personality of sharing antisemitism. “While I can be grateful that there is accountability for the dangerous antisemitic rhetoric that Kanye has trafficked in and amplified, Tucker Carlson and a lot of white men are also trafficking in a lot of really dangerous antisemitism, and they need to be held accountable too,” she said.

The Anti-Defamation League has accused Tucker of antisemitism through their “Stop Hate For Profit” campaign. The ADL called on tech companies to deplatform the commentator and other extremists for sharing the antisemitic “Great Replacement Theory” in a May report. “The Stop Hate for Profit coalition calls on technology companies to deplatform Tucker Carlson and other repeat perpetrators spreading the ‘Great Replacement’ theory because of their significant role mainstreaming ideologies that normalize hate, foment fear and buoy extremists,” they wrote.'

No Boys Allowed? New CyberStart Canada Program Will Cater Only to Girls and Non-Binary Students

Mastodon · 30 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The program, which is funded by Canadian taxpayers via Public Safety Canada's Cyber Security Cooperation Program, will initially provide services and education to 700 girls and non-binary students from Ontario, Alberta, and British Columbia in 2022-23 in what is being described as a “gamified environment,” and then throughout Canada the following year.

According to the eligibility requirements listed on the program’s website, “Priority in 2022 will be given to students in Ontario, Alberta or British Columbia who self-identify as girls or non-binary. Students must be over the age of 13 to participate.”

"In addition to sparking interest in cybersecurity as a career, CyberStart Canada will focus on educating young women and girls on topics such as cyber respect and kindness, safe communication, and digital citizenship," according to Marco Mendicino, Minister of Public Safety. "CyberStart Canada will also be a key resource for teachers and educators, allowing them to bring cybersecurity into and outside of their classrooms, without needing any prior knowledge of cybersecurity or computer science."'

Why 60 years of feminism has not made women any happier

Mastodon · 30 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So how's that working out now? The American Family Survey recently asked: "All things considered, has feminism benefited American families?"

Only a little more than half (58.6%) of respondents said yes. What's interesting, though, is the people who said yes also tend to be among the least happy and fulfilled. In survey after survey, it turns out that people who espouse a secular worldview, people who identify as liberals, and people who never attend religious services report the lowest levels of personal satisfaction, but they also report the highest levels of support for feminist ideals. Indeed, as feminism's influence has grown over the past half century, women have become less happy.
...
In 1963, Betty Friedan was writing about "the problem that had no name." But women's problems in the 21st century can absolutely be named. More often, they are trying to raise children on their own, which can be exhausting even with financial resources. They are sexually liberated, but that often means they are going from one relationship to another without any sense of financial security or emotional stability. And while many are no doubt fulfilled in their careers, a lot of them actually enjoy raising children, but they can't spend the bulk of their time doing this, thanks to financial exigencies and society's expectations.'

Men are embracing ‘positive masculinity’ and say it’s working – despite the backlash

Mastodon · 30 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This month, Australian men have been asked to embrace “healthy masculinity” in the National Plan to End Violence Against Women, and to move into female-dominated industries (in a report by Bankwest Curtin Economic Centre and the Workplace Gender Equality Agency) to help close the gender pay gap.

Men have learned they may be “forced” to use or lose parental leave in a bid to get them to do a bigger share of domestic work, boosting women’s economic participation.'

Australia: ‘Untapped resource’: PM says equality for women will be centre of budget

Mastodon · 30 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prime Minister Anthony Albanese says equality for women will be “at the centre” of the October 25 budget, announcing an eight-week increase to the Commonwealth’s parental leave scheme to deliver parents a total of six months’ paid leave.

Albanese called on more companies to increase their paid parental leave schemes, saying the Commonwealth’s scheme was a “baseline” and the private sector should still do more.

“Equality for women is at the heart of our vision for a fair go at work,” Albanese said in his speech to Labor members.

“And equality for women will be at the centre of our first budget in a fortnight’s time.

“The full and equal and respectful participation of women in our economy is our nation’s greatest untapped resource.”'

Calling all men: this is what we can do to help women feel safe exercising in the dark

Mastodon · 31 October 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So this is my call to arms: Sport England's This Girl Can campaign has set out some steps for men, to guide them on how to make women feel safer when they are getting active outdoors this autumn and winter. First, keep your distance: the closer you are, the more threatening you seem. If you're walking or running behind a woman, pause to give her some space, or cross the road so you aren't behind her any more. Understand that women's wariness and suspicion is not personal, so don't be offended. Women have no way of knowing you are not a threat.

Never make comments, even if you think it's a compliment. It's intimidating to a woman on her own. Stay quiet. If you see friends or family members making disrespectful comments to a woman, challenge them and explain why it's not OK. We need to break the cycle of misogyny that contributes to women feeling unsafe. Show younger men what it looks like to listen to women. Talk to them about what harassment is. Help them understand why a comment they think may be harmless can terrorise women. If you notice a woman being harassed, show your support – it can be as simple as standing between a woman and the harasser.'

UK: Woman cleared of forcing man into sex after saying she's too 'lazy' to get on top

Matt · 4 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imogen Brooke, 31, was said to have yanked her alleged victim onto his back and straddled him when they got into bed at her flat in Southampton.

The port city's crown court heard she weighed 24 stone at the time and was 'quite a lot bigger and stronger than him and he couldn't move her'.

She was also accused of giving the man a love bite that 'looked like he had been strangled', telling him during the alleged attack: 'You may be saying no but your dick is saying yes.'

But Brooke was found not guilty of causing a person to engage in sexual activity without consent after insisting the pair had just kissed before her date fell asleep.'

Netflix's 'Killer Sally' details why Sally McNeil shot her bodybuilding champ husband

Matt · 4 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Looks to me like an unvarnished effort to give her a pass all because she's a she. Excerpt:

'On Valentine's Day 1995, bodybuilder and former Marine Sally McNeil shot her husband Ray McNeil to death - and 27 years later, she is telling her story.

The mother of two is the subject of Netflix's three-part docuseries "Killer Sally," which examines the salacious crime that gripped both the bodybuilding community and the nation. It features new interviews with McNeil and her children, those who knew the couple, as well as investigators associated with the case.

Director and Oscar nominee Nanette Burstein told Fox News Digital that McNeil's story "is just as relevant today as it was in the '90s."'

California professor erupts on 'Christian,' 'White men' on PBS: They will cause a 'civil war'

Mastodon · 4 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Author and University of California San Diego Professor Barbara F. Walter warned that "Christian," "White men" are primed to start a civil war in America.

Walter, the author of a book titled, "How Civil Wars Start," made her claims on PBS's "Amanpour and Company" Tuesday evening.

She cited observations of over 200 civil wars to decode that these "Christian" White males are the powder keg from which conflict will explode, because they were once "dominant and are in decline."
...
Getting to her point about White Christian men, the professor declared, "We've seen a significant rise in violent extremism since 2008. Some of it's been on the left, but the vast majority of it has been on the far-right. And it's been perpetrated almost exclusively by White men."'

Boys at the Crossroads: navigating masculinity, anger and incel culture

Mastodon · 4 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys at the Crossroads: Insights and Innovations in Young Masculinities, a multidisciplinary conference event, was held by Bristol Young Men's Network, alongside University of Bristol researchers and several other organisations, to discuss the impacts of masculinity, violence and mental health on boys and young men. Encouraging critical and practical responses to young men's experiences, the event focused on approaches to tackling male violence and toxic masculine norms that impact people of all cultures, ages and genders.

...

The conversation centred on the dichotomy between masculinity and mental health faced by many young men during their formative years: on one hand, anger is presented as the only legitimate 'manly' expression of emotion, permitting a much-needed release without seeming weak or vulnerable. Yet the issue that anger exists within a culture of shame, also problematised and penalised, was voiced throughout the event. Let's Get Angry! Highlighted that this conflict can lead to a cyclical repression of emotions until eventually, Pandora's box bursts open.'

Men are struggling. A new book explores why and what to do about it

Mastodon · 4 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Friday's jobs numbers from the Labor Department showed a continuing worrisome trend among men: A smaller and smaller share of them are working.

Consider men of so-called prime-working age, 25 to 54.

Sixty years ago, close to 97% of men in that group were working or looking for work. Since then, there's been a steady decline. In October, the number was 88.5%, a slight dip from the previous two months.

In a new book, Brookings Institution scholar Richard V. Reeves sounds the alarm about the struggles of men, both in the economy and in society, pleading with policymakers and society at large to pay attention to what's going on and intervene.'

Bigotry Is On The Rise On College Campuses

Matt · 5 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many would agree that sexism and racism remain serious and, in some cases a growing concern. However, those being discriminated against are not the ones that feminists and other alleged advocates for equal rights have traditionally focused their attentions and efforts on. Instead, the group being victimized is straight white men.

There is plenty of evidence to suggest that males are being mistreated—and yet, for some strange reason, many seem to find this totally acceptable. Ironically, one such example includes a ban on straight white men at the United Kingdom's equality conference of the University and College Union, reported by the Daily Mail in June 2016. But this was not an isolated event. Reports suggest that such developments are commonplace, for instance, on college campuses in the U.K., U.S. and elsewhere.

Simply put, white heterosexual men are blameworthy and deserve to be excluded.'

Amazon commits $53 million to fast-track innovations by female climate tech entrepreneurs

Mastodon · 5 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amazon and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) are launching a public-private partnership to address the gender inequities that exist for women in the climate finance ecosystem and to support female entrepreneurs with the resources they need to accelerate climate change innovations.

Amazon will commit a total of $53 million to help accelerate women's climate innovation, including $3 million toward the USAID partnership, and $50 million for Amazon to invest directly in climate tech companies run by women.'

Richard Reeves: Of Boys and Men | Real Time with Bill Maher

Mastodon · 5 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Brooking Institution Fellow and author Richard Reeves joins Bill to discuss the struggles facing modern males and what can be done about it.

Wikipedia on Reeves: https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Richard_Reeves_(British_author)

Standoff as Italy stops male migrants from disembarking rescue ship

Matt · 6 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A migrant rescue ship is refusing to leave an Italian port after authorities prevented 35 men from disembarking.

Children and people with medical issues were allowed to leave the Humanity 1 in Sicily after it spent two weeks requesting port access.

Two other rescue boats remain at sea.

The new Italian Prime Minister, Giorgia Meloni, has promised to crack down on migrants travelling across the Mediterranean from North Africa.

Italy is one of the main entry points into Europe and since the start of the year 85,000 migrants have arrived on boats, according to the UN.'

Social Isolation: A Modern Plague

Matt · 6 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not an MRA issue per se, more a men's issue. I am sure some percentage of women experience such feelings but I conjecture men have it in greater numbers. Your mental health is very important. It's hard to live life happily much less have the energy to fight feminist excess if you feel lonely/depressed/isolated. There's nothing wrong with seeking out friendships and activity partners deliberately for just the sake of it. Excerpt:

'The best research confirms it: Americans are now perilously isolated. In a recent comprehensive study by scientists at Duke University, researchers have observed a sharp decline in social connectedness over the past 20 years.

Remarkably, 25% of Americans have no meaningful social support at all - not a single person they can confide in. And over half of all Americans report having no close confidants or friends outside their immediate family. The situation today is much worse today than it was when similar data were gathered in 1985. (At that time, only 10% of Americans were completely alone).
...
But we're truly not designed to live like this. For the great majority of human history, people resided in small, intimate hunter-gatherer communities. And anthropologists who spend time with modern-day hunter-gatherer bands report that social isolation and loneliness are largely unknown among them: group members spend the bulk of their time - virtually all day, every day - in the company of friends and loved ones.'

Introducing the ‘manscuse’ – a new blight for women

Mastodon · 6 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The phrases “mansplaining”, “manspreading” and “manterruption” all highlight men’s problematic behaviour towards women. These new terms describe institutionalised sexism in action: men patronisingly explaining my own work to me, or taking up personal space on the Underground, or interrupting my talk. By naming the behaviour, we can readily identify with it and call it out.

...

In most cases, manscuses are peddled out to minimise the abuse he inflicted and render her trauma invisible. She’s told: he didn’t mean it, it was in the heat of the moment, it was just a slap, he saw red mist, he was jealous, he’s a good person really, he has mental health problems, he was abused as a child, he’s been really stressed at work. But do you know what? A man or woman can be all of these things and surprisingly very many don’t feel compelled to rape, sexually assault, abuse or control another person. Reducing male violence to an “excuse” means that the perpetrator’s behaviour is normalised and they are rarely held accountable for their choice to abuse.'

Francis the Feminist: Pope calls fight for women's rights a 'continuous struggle' and condemns male chauvinism as anti-hijab protests sweep Islamic Iran

Matt · 7 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No comment. If I start, I'll end up writing a 10-page essay. Excerpt:

'Pope Francis said on Sunday the fight for women's rights was a 'continuous struggle', and condemned male chauvinism as deadly for humanity and female genital mutilation as a crime that must be stopped.

Speaking to reporters on the plane returning from a four-day trip to predominantly Muslim Bahrain, he also praised women he has appointed to managerial jobs in the Vatican, saying they had improved things there.

He made no mention of campaigns to let women move on beyond that and become clergy - the pope and his predecessors have said the question of women priests is closed.

Francis was responding to a question about women protesting in Iran but turned to the topic of women's rights in general.'

Nashville woman gets probation for shooting homeless man who asked her to lower music, move car

Mastodon · 7 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman convicted of shooting a homeless man who asked her to move her Porsche and allegedly threatened her was sentenced to no jail time in connection with the crime, according to a local affiliate report.

Katie Quackenbush was ordered on Thursday to serve 11 months and 29 days probation for the Aug. 26, 2017, shooting death of Gerald Melton, 54, on Nashville's famed Music Row, police and FOX 17 Nashville reported. Quackenbush had originally been charged with attempted murder for the early morning shooting, but was instead found guilty of misdemeanor reckless endangerment, the outlet reported.

Melton was initially critically wounded, but survived his injuries. The woman fled the area and later told police she was defending herself when he threatened her life, according to the report.'

There is no ‘war on men’ – we now know feminism is good for boys

Mastodon · 8 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A narrative has emerged over the last decade in popular culture and politics that portrays men and boys (particularly white, heterosexual ones) as in “crisis”, victimised by feminism and social justice movements, and now “left behind” or suffering so-called “reverse discrimination”. From the misogynistic memes that swirled around the Johnny Depp and Amber Heard trial, to the male MPs attempting to debunk the “bad press” men have been getting, to the description of #MeToo as a “witch-hunt” on flagship radio programmes, this argument has been steadily building up steam.

However, The State of UK Boys report released today by the Global Boyhood Initiative shows that, instead of being victimised by feminism, boys are facing an entirely different crisis. Violence and being “tough” is normalised as a natural part of being a man, which encourages boys to see violence (particularly male-on-male violence) as an inevitable part of growing up. The study, which comprised a literature review alongside interviews with experts, also found that these kinds of stereotypes are present from birth, with families, schools and peer groups all playing their part.

Instead of reinforcing these stereotypes, the report’s authors suggest, all children would benefit from a feminist approach to learning (something that will come as no surprise to many feminists, who have been arguing for this for decades). For example, boys would benefit from learning about the problems with gender stereotypes, and also from a destigmatisation of close friendships between boys, which are often discouraged by homophobic ideals of masculinity. Encouraging male friendships, the study finds, would provide opportunities for boys to learn reciprocity, empathy and intimacy.'

Glasgow set to become the UK's first 'feminist city'

Mastodon · 8 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On October 27, Glasgow City Council unanimously backed a motion stating that women should be at the heart of all aspect of city planning, becoming the first city in the UK to embrace 'feminist urbanism'.

Feminist urbanism advocates for a type of urban planning that promotes inclusivity and puts the needs of women, non-binary and genderfluid people at the forefront of the way we think of the urban landscape. Because, perhaps unsurprisingly, our cities are far from being gender-neutral.

Scholars of feminist urbanism argue that men have historically been in charge of designing the cities we live in, and they did so thinking of their own needs and habits, often overlooking or sidelining issues of safety and accessibility affecting women and sexual and gender minorities.'

1 in 6 hiring managers have been told to stop hiring white men, survey finds

Mastodon · 9 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent survey of 1,000 hiring managers in the United States found that one in six, or about 16%, have been told to stop hiring white men.

Additionally, 14% of hiring managers said they have also been told to deprioritize hiring white women.

The survey, published by Resume Builder and Pollfish on Wednesday, found that 52% of hiring managers believe their company practices “reverse discrimination” – passing over members of racial and gender majorities in order to meet diversity benchmarks.

In addition, the survey found that 48% of hiring managers have been asked to prioritize diversity over qualifications, and 53% believe their job will be in danger if they don’t hire enough diverse employees.'

Boys need to talk more about feelings and fight inequality, report says

Mastodon · 9 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A report – The State of UK Boys – has been published to mark the launch of the US initiative in the UK, pulling together findings from a range of academic research over the past 20 years – with insights from 15 researchers in the field of gender, masculinities and boyhood.

One of the report authors and fellow of Equimundo, David Bartlett, said: “How boys and men behave makes an enormous difference to the lives of girls and women, and individuals of all gender identities, in all areas of their lives.

“From sexual harassment and gender-based violence, to the gender pay gap and relationship breakdown, the attitudes and behaviour of boys and men are hugely influential.

“So, we need to raise a generation of boys who are able to build and sustain healthy, respectful, caring relationships with people of all genders, and not be influenced by restrictive gender stereotypes.”

The 35-page report claims that, as ideas of gender and boyhood are changing to be more fluid, traditional notions of masculinity such as physical, sexual and intellectual prowess – as well as heterosexuality – still dominate.

It states that children understand “real violence” as involving men and struggle to perceive or name other acts as being violent, such as violence between peers or siblings or emotional or sexual violence in schools or homes.'

UK: Mayor’s ‘allyship training’ to empower young Londoners to take a stand and help prevent violence against women and girls

Mastodon · 9 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, has today announced that a new ‘allyship training’ package will be available to every secondary school in London to educate and empower young Londoners to take a stand and help prevent violence against women and girls (VAWG).

Lessons on building healthy relationships, calling out sexism and discussions on attitudes and behaviours towards women and girls will feature in interactive workshops funded by the Mayor in the capital’s secondary schools. This ‘allyship training’ is part of the Mayor’s wide ranging public health approach to ending the epidemic of VAWG.'

Scotland: Is it time for a "feminist" foreign policy?

Mastodon · 9 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism apparently has an answer for every problem. As long as you don't ask for a precise definition of what a female is.

Nicola Sturgeon, First Minister of Scotland and leader of the Scottish National Party since 2014, has announced that she would be pursing a "feminist foreign policy" henceforth.
...
Silly constitutional barriers aside, Sturgeon is certain that feminist foreign policy will lead the way towards a brighter future for the world. She, along with her SNP colleagues, don't quite know what that means yet, but we are all waiting with bated breath to find out.'

Most top universities have inadequate due process protections as Title IX changes loom, report finds

Mastodon · 10 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new report reveals that most of the top colleges and universities in the United States have inadequate protections for students accused of wrongdoing as proposed changes to the federal government's interpretation of a longstanding law raise concerns.

The nonpartisan Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression released its fifth annual report titled "Spotlight on Due Process" Tuesday, examining the procedures in place to protect students accused of sexual assault and violating other policies at colleges and universities in the U.S.

The report examined the disciplinary policies of the 53 top American colleges and universities as ranked by U.S. News & World Report in 2017. It found that 44 out of 53 schools studied received a grade of "F" or "D" for at least one of its disciplinary policies based on the presence of safeguards for students facing allegations of wrongdoing.'

Why Smart Men Should Not Fear Gender Parity

Mastodon · 10 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In short, smart men have nothing to fear about gender parity - on the contrary, they should embrace it. That said, it is understandable that those who managed to become the status quo because of privilege, nepotism, or deception rather than actual merit, may worry about gender party, or any other intervention that reduces the gap between talent and achievement. To anyone who got to the top without deserving it (which tends to exclude both competent women and men) meritocracy is a threat.

In this post I have deliberately avoided any reference to the moral or social justice case for gender parity. Not because it doesn't matter (it does), or because I don't care about it (I do), but because it is clear to me that many people are simply not motivated enough by this argument. So perhaps appealing to their instrumental, pragmatic, and selfish interests is a better way to open their eyes.'

#MeToo Gestapo Targets Warren Beatty with 49-Year-Old Accusation

Mastodon · 10 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kristina Charlotte Hirsch filed a lawsuit against Beatty this week seeking damages with the claim Beatty “used his role, status, and power as a well-known Hollywood Star to gain access to, groom, manipulate, exploit, and coerce sexual contact from her over the course of several months.”

Hirsch is seeking “exemplary and punitive damages for psychological, mental and emotional distress” and says she still suffers from “issues of trust and control.”

This is what happens when you remove the statute of limitations, which is what the fascists in California have done. These days, a woman can come out of nowhere and hurl rocks at an 85-year-old man with a wife and children, knowing it’s impossible for him to have any kind of due process.'

A sex war is coming

Mastodon · 10 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If 21st-century politics is shaping up as class war, the American midterm elections have concretised a troubling facet of this political landscape: this class war is also a sex war.

Writing about the dynamic as a feminist is uncomfortable in the extreme because it's difficult to do so without being accused of misogyny. This is not least because among the very online Right, there really is more than a tinge of misogyny to the term most commonly used to denote progressive-leaning Virtual women: AWFLs.

Coined by Right-wing commentator Scott Greer, AWFL stands for "affluent white female liberals", and generally connotes not just the demographic but its perceived characteristic worldview — a mixture of progressive moral piety, self-righteousness, hypocrisy and unexamined class snobbery.

Whether or not you agree with this hostile evaluation, the AWFL class has been growing in relative power and influence for some decades. This is for wholly non-conspiratorial reasons: very simply, technological advancements have delivered new opportunities for well-qualified knowledge workers of both sexes, even as the same changes have automated and de-industrialised away the physically more arduous work previously performed mostly by working-class men. This virtualisation of work has, overall, benefited women much more than men.

Accordingly, women have seized the opportunity. American colleges have been majority-female since the late Seventies, and today, women outnumber men at undergraduate level in most colleges, with the disparity as large as 60%-40% in some elite institutions. And this has turned out a steadily compounding supermajority of knowledge-class women, which forms an increasingly heavy-hitting part of the rising Virtual elite.'

Why Does No One Want To Help Men's Issues?

Mastodon · 11 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Richard Reeves explains why men's issues are so unpopular to campaign for. Are men's and women's rights a zero-sum game? Does Richard Reeves think that you can improve men's lives without hurting women ?

Russian mothers are turning deadbeat fathers over to Putin's military draft: 'My ex-husband died as a person a long time ago'

Mastodon · 11 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Russian mothers abandoned by their idle husbands have found the silver lining to Vladimir Putin's military draft: turning their exes in for the draft to receive financial compensation.

Russian President Vladimir Putin's failing war in Ukraine gave rise to a "partial military mobilization" in which 300,000 new conscripts were called upon to fight. The draft sparked outrage and fear — evidenced by insurmountable protests and Russians attempting to flee the country.

But Russian investigative outlet Verstka reported dozens of women have come together in a ruse to get their exes into the military by giving enlistment offices personal data belonging to the men who abandoned them and their children. There's even an online community in which at least 70 of the women are sharing their experiences and discussing the plot, according to Verstka.'

Jewish Father and Victim of Domestic Violence Seeks Legal Help against Bias and Unfair Legal Treatment For Child Custody

Mastodon · 11 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Maxim Konstantinovski, a Jewish programmer and father, is fighting for the parental rights of Jewish fathers after experiencing domestic violence, discrimination, anti-Semitism, and unfair legal treatment during his three-year child custody battle in New Jersey. A court-appointed tool, OurFamilyWizard, also seems to have been weaponized to direct continuous harassment against him throughout the process.

In his statement, “It is unbelievable that in the U.S. in 2022, Jewish fathers are still being treated by the legal system as second-class citizens. I have repeatedly suffered anti-Semitic attacks and non-stop harassment from my ex-wife, which the court has allowed to take place on a court-ordered communication tool. As a Jewish father in a custody battle, my parental and religious rights and the best interests of my son are considered less important than my ex-wife's interests throughout the process.”'

Auckland Feminists Demand Cancellation of Jordan Peterson Event

Mastodon · 11 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Auckland Feminist Action (AFA) is calling on Auckland Council for the immediate cancellation of Jordan Peterson's “12 More Rules for Life” event at Spark Arena on the 19th November 2022.

Peterson is a well known figure in the "Manosphere", a group of alt-right communities centred around violent misogyny, transphobia, and white supremacy.

This is especially concerning in light of the rise of extremism and disinformation happening in Aotearoa in recent times.

"By giving Peterson a platform on this scale, the Council is complicit in the radicalisation of young men in Aotearoa." says Dave (they/them pronouns), a member of AFA.

“He appeals to vulnerable guys who are still working out what it means to be a man. Some of his fans just like his books on a superficial level but the stuff his hardcore fans say is honestly quite concerning to me as a transgender person.”'

How Feminism Is Stifling Our Sons

Matt · 11 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. In places, I wanted to barf. But the overall gist of the article is what's important. Excerpt:

'And it made me think—as the mother of a seven-year-old girl, I had been so consumed with female empowerment in the fight for gender equality that I had overlooked my son. At just three years old, he was already picking up on the saturation of the media's "girl power" messaging, and was now confused about his own role in the world.

After all, how can we advocate for inclusion if we're not considering their portrayal in the media too? Are advertisements and corporate brands actually encouraging equality, or perpetuating harmful gender stereotypes when it comes to boys?

These questions took me back to a story I wrote last year about men, boys and gender stereotypes; and how the emotional needs of boys in today's younger generations are being ignored. It's no surprise that along with being harmful to girls, gender stereotypes put boys' self-confidence at risk too. Studies from the past two decades confirm that our focus on girls can leave boys behind in regards to education and well-being. The truth is, boys actually need more emotional support than girls.'

‘Game-changing’ gender quotas introduced by Australian research agency

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an attempt to achieve gender equity, Australia’s leading health and medical research funding organization plans to award half of its research grants for its largest funding programme to women and non-binary applicants, starting next year.

The National Health and Medical Research Council (NHMRC) announced the move last week. It will apply to researchers at the mid-career and senior level applying for the agency’s investigator grants, which fund research and salaries. Grants will also be fixed at Aus$400,000 (US$252,000) each a year for five years. Many countries struggle to achieve gender equity in research funding, and the NHRMC will be one of the first agencies to introduce gender quotas at this scale, say researchers.'

UVa Police Department to hire 30% more women by 2030

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Virginia Police Department is making good on its promise to increase the presence of female officers on the force by 2030.

Women currently account for about 29% of UPD employees—42 of 141 total—putting the department on track to reach its 30x30 goal on time.

Earlier this year, the department enrolled in the national 30x30 initiative, a consortium of police leaders and researchers who are committed to improving the representation and experiences of women in policing agencies.'

The 2019 National Institute of Justice special report states that women in law enforcement face common barriers including discrimination and harassment in a male-dominated industry, sexism, oblique physical assessments and a lack of professional support in the workplace and opportunity.

Research from 30x30 shows that women in law enforcement use less moderate and excessive force; are named in fewer complaints and lawsuits; are perceived by communities as more honest and compassionate than male officers; make fewer discretionary arrests and see better rehabilitative outcomes for crime victims with particular care for sexual assault victims.

Transforming the Supply Chain Industry With Gender Diversity

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt;

'In recent years, we have seen supply chain organizations make major changes to become more flexible and resilient to combat the numerous delays, shortages, and bottlenecks the industry has faced. The changes being implemented are bringing more diverse perspectives to the table. In turn, this has enabled companies to challenge legacy-focused mindsets, adapt to the shifting regulatory mandates in the industry, adjust to trends quicker, and embrace innovative automation technologies.

As a woman in the field, I know women have skills that position them to make viable changes in the supply chain. Women supply chain managers and leaders at major organizations, such as Stericycle, UPS, and Johnson & Johnson, are likely to implement more balanced solutions by leading with cooperation, collaboration, and empathy.

Women think about complex, dynamic supply chain ecosystems intuitively, determining the best ways to align them successfully. It has also been said that women have persevered and performed far better than their male counterparts during the Great Resignation. Part of the reason for this is women's inclusive nature.'

Grants to boost Gender Equality and Diversity in Australian Politics

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Minister for Women, Senator the Hon Katy Gallagher has announced $5 million over five years to boost gender equality and diversity in Australian politics.

The Women's Leadership and Development Program's (WLDP) Women in Public Office grants will fund projects that support women in Australia to prepare for and enter public office at local, state and federal levels. The grant round acknowledges and seeks to overcome the unique challenges and barriers women face in running for public office.

"There are undeniable benefits from having more women in public office," the Minister said.

"More women in public office and sitting at the decision-making table, irrespective of which political party they are a member of, improves policy outcomes for the broader community, and also has a positive impact on the culture within Parliament House."'

European Council approves directive promoting gender equality

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Monday 17th October 2022, the European Council gave its final approval on EU rules to promote a more balanced gender representation on the boards of listed companies.

The “Women on Boards” Directive was agreed to by the Council of Ministers on Monday 17 October 2022 following a 10 year delay. The European Council finally agreed to take action to ensure the application of equal opportunities and treatment of men and women in matters of employment, which will directly seek to advantage the under-represented sex, which in most instances is women.

The effect of this directive seeks to increase the presence of women among top management positions and on corporate boards.

The directive will now be subject to a vote by European Parliament, which is expected to occur before the end of 2022 and will then need to be transposed into national law. Member states have two years following the entry into force of the directive to adopt the required national measures. The directive will enter into force on the 20th day following its publication in the Official Journal of the European Union.'

AU: Social Services Minister tells National Press Club of government's pledge to end domestic violence within 'one generation'

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Social Services Minister Amanda Rishworth says it's time to "stop shying away" from evidence that shows men are overwhelmingly the perpetrators of domestic, family, and sexual violence.

"The evidence shows there is a clear, gendered nature to family, domestic and sexual violence," she said.

"Ninety-five per cent of people who have experienced physical or sexual violence name a man as the perpetrator.
...
According to ABS data, one in three women have experienced physical or sexual violence, or both, at the hands of a man they know.

Research from 2017 also shows women accounted for three quarters of the people who experienced intimate partner violence since the age of 15, compared to men who accounted for one quarter.'

Court Adopts Narrow Approach to Pseudonymity in Title IX Wrongful-Discipline Cases

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On May 13, 2016, Doe was expelled from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) following a Title IX proceeding involving accusations made against him by his ex-girlfriend, Jane Doe, of nonconsensual contact and forced sexual intercourse, and sexual harassment. On December 16, 2021, Doe sued MIT in this court for breach of contract, promissory estoppel, and denial of basic due process. According to Doe's Complaint, MIT's Title IX investigation had been compromised by a "[r]adical feminist anti-male bias on the MIT campus [that] guided the investigation report's conclusions …. MIT presumed the female complainant's story to be true (which it wasn't), and presumed John Doe not to be truthful (which wasn't the case) in order to avoid being found responsible."

Doe moved to proceed under a pseudonym on the same day. This court denied his motion, finding that his generalized expression of fear of future harm if self-identified as an alleged perpetrator of sexual assault, was too speculative to outweigh the court's historical concern for transparency and constitutional presumption favoring public access to judicial records….'

Woman lied that husband raped her because he refused to help around the house

Mastodon · 12 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sharon Taylor, 61, vowed to ‘destroy’ her husband David following the collapse of their 21-year marriage.

He moved out of their semi-detached home in Malvern, Worcestershire, last year after she admitted having an affair.

A court heard Taylor then bombarded her estranged husband with abusive ‘non-stop’ messages demanding he continue to carry out household chores.'

UK: Tech giants will be punished for ‘legal but harmful’ content

Mastodon · 13 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tech giants will be punished for sexism and racism on their platforms despite moves to water down laws on “legal but harmful” content, says the minister who helped draft the new plans.

Damian Collins, who was the digital minister responsible for the bill until last month, said companies would be held to account for “legal but harmful” sexist and racist content through their terms and conditions of service.

This would mean that if they failed to deliver what they promised in their terms of service in protecting people from such abuse, they could face punishment by the regulator Ofcom, which has powers to impose fines worth up to 10 per cent of global turnover.

The crackdown - part of the online safety bill - will remain in the proposed law despite moves by the Government to strip out specific clauses spelling out the legal and harmful content from which adults should be protected.'

Gettysburg College postpones event for people tired of ‘white cis men’

Mastodon · 14 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gettysburg College has postponed a painting and writing event hosted by its Gender Sexuality and Resource Center for people who are “Tired of white cis men.”

The private Pennsylvania college offered the event as part of a peace and justice, or “P&J,” senior project but has since postponed it after it was shared online.

The event, originally scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 12, told people to “come paint and write about” how they are tired of straight white men.

The pieces from the event would then be displayed in the school’s dining hall for the campus to view.

One anonymous Gettysburg alumnus told Fox News Digital that he was “pretty upset” by the event and that “as a white, cis male, the fact that basically people are being allowed to discriminate based on sexuality and race is not something that was ever in the Gettysburg that was taught to me.”
...
This is not the first incident of its kind to occur at a college campus in America. In 2019, Yale student Isis Davis-Marks wrote an op-ed that pledged to monitor and collect dirt on white men on campus in order to undermine them in potential future confirmation hearings later in life.

“I’m watching you, white boy,” the student wrote.'

Did You Know Single Men Cannot Enter This Theme Park?

Mastodon · 15 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Comedian Jeff Dye (@thejeffdye) recently posted a TikTok sharing his experience when trying to visit LEGOLAND during his tour. The comedian started the story by asking the audience, “Did you know you can’t go to LEGOLAND if you’re just one man?” before commenting that he found that out the hard way.

Jeff then commented that while on tour in Kansas City, he had twelve hours to kill before a show when he found out that the state has a LEGOLAND, which made him get a car service to go to the Park. However, the experience was nothing like he would’ve expected.

“I walked right up; I go ‘one for LEGOLAND.’ And he goes ‘nope,’” said the comedian before saying that the theme park employee explained that if you don’t have kids or family with you, you’re not allowed to enter the Park. “We don’t let just men into LEGOLAND,” were the words the comedian used.

When Jeff asked why this rule was being enforced, he said the employee explained, “Because here at LEGOLAND, we’re trying to reduce kidnapping.” This surprised the comedian, who said, “one, rude, I’m not a kidnapper, two, what do you mean reduce?” wondering how many kids were being kidnapped at LEGOLAND for them to say “reduce” and jokingly commenting how the Park was aware that some kids could get kidnapped, but that they couldn’t get rid of all of it.'

Humans could face reproductive crisis as sperm count declines, study finds

Matt · 16 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Humans could face a reproductive crisis if action is not taken to tackle a drop in sperm count, researchers have warned after finding the rate of decline is accelerating.

A study published in the journal Human Reproduction Update, based on 153 estimates from men who were probably unaware of their fertility, suggests that the average sperm concentration fell from an estimated 101.2m per ml to 49.0m per ml between 1973 and 2018 – a drop of 51.6%. Total sperm counts fell by 62.3% during the same period.

Research by the same team, reported in 2017, found that sperm concentration had more than halved in the last 40 years. However, at the time a lack of data for other parts of the world meant the findings were focused on a region encompassing Europe, North America and Australia. The latest study includes more recent data from 53 countries.

Declines in sperm concentration were seen not only in the region previously studied, but in Central and South America, Africa and Asia.'

UK: Mother gets suspended sentence for child cruelty

Mastodon · 16 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who pushed her son's face against a bath with such force that his nose started bleeding has been given a suspended sentence.

The woman, who is in her 40s but cannot be identified for legal reasons, had earlier pleaded guilty to three counts of child cruelty between 2013 and 2015.

The judge said "cruelty to children in any shape or form cannot be tolerated".

The defendant's daughter said her mother "kicked and punched her and her brother", said the prosecuting counsel.

The children, who were all under 10 years of age at the time of the offences, disclosed how their mother had used a shoe and a rubber spatula to smack them on their hands and bare backsides.

Imposing an eight-month sentence but suspending it for three years, the judge said he was taking account of the fact the woman had already spent three months on remand and had admitted her guilt.'

Feminist Groups Finally Speak Out In Support Of Amber Heard

Mastodon · 17 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 130 national women's organizations and prominent feminist experts released an open letter on Wednesday morning in support of actor Amber Heard, who lost a defamation suit earlier this year to ex-husband Johnny Depp after she publicly identified herself as a survivor of intimate partner violence.

"The vilification of Ms. Heard and ongoing online harassment of her and those who have voiced support for her have been unprecedented in both vitriol and scale," reads the letter, signed by several national gender justice organizations including the National Women's Law Center, the Feminist Majority Foundation and the Women's March Foundation. Gloria Steinem, as well as other prominent feminists and experts in the domestic violence field, signed the letter in support of Heard.'

Julia Fox Shows Support for Amber Heard After Johnny Depp Trial Verdict: 'None of Us Are Safe'

Mastodon · 17 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the trial, Fox commented on Instagram that Heard "never had the power in the relationship to be abusive to him."

"Did she hit him? Yes. Was it abuse? No," she continued in the comment. "You need to have power to be able to abuse it. She was 25. He clearly was always way more powerful including physically and financially."'

Painting of old white men smoking cigars taken down after female scholar complains

Mastodon · 20 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A painting of old white men smoking cigars by acclaimed contemporary Dutch painter Rein Dool has been taken down at Leiden University in the Netherlands, reportedly the result of a complaint by a female grad student.

Dutch News reported that the painting, which depicts university board members from the mid-1970s, “was taken off the wall following a remark by political scientist Elina Zorina on Twitter, suggesting the painting needed an ‘ironic or critical’ explanatory note.”

Zorina is listed on the university’s website as a PhD candidate at the Institute of Political Science.

The painting’s removal was documented by Joanne van der Leun, a professor of criminology and dean of Leiden Law School.

It “remains in the room facing the wall while a decision is taken about what to do with it. The university has also said the removal was not done officially,” Dutch News reported.

The removal of the painting prompted plenty of pushback.'

Feminism 2.0: The emergence of misandry as a social movement

Mastodon · 20 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, there has been a marked increase in misandry—the hatred or dislike of men—in so-called "Feminist 2.0" circles. This trend is concerning for several reasons, not the least of which is that it threatens to undermine the progress that the feminist movement has made. But what is Feminist 2.0?

Feminist 2.0 is a term used to describe a form of feminism that began in the early 2000s and is characterized by its focus on social media and online organizing. One of the critical goals of Feminist 2.0 is to bring about gender equality through the use of digital technologies.

However, there has been a growing trend within Feminist 2.0 circles of what can only be described as misandry—the hatred or dislike of men. This trend manifests itself in several ways, including but not limited to the following:

- Blaming men for society's ills, regardless of evidence to the contrary.
- Making sweeping generalizations about men as a whole.
- Engaging in character assassination against individual men.
- Creating an echo chamber where only one perspective is allowed.'

Why is Eventbrite censoring feminists?

Mastodon · 20 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Not according to the US ticketing giant, Eventbrite which this week deleted the link to the event, and began issuing refunds, claiming the book launch event could promote ‘hateful views’.

Defending Women’s Spaces is a book about the threat to feminism posed by gender ideology. But according to Eventbrite’s trust and safety team, the event is in danger of violating its policy on ‘Hateful, Dangerous, or Violent Content’. Eventbrite have been contacted for comment.

There is nothing hateful, dangerous or violent about promoting female only spaces. What is hateful are the things that men do to women and girls that create the need for single sex services.

When women flee for their lives in the middle of the night to escape fatal domestic violence, they need a women-only domestic violence refuge.'

Are Michelle Obama and Meghan Markle true feminists... or did they just marry well?

Mastodon · 20 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Given that Michelle Obama sold 14 million copies of her book Becoming, inevitably she now has a new literary offering.

The Light We Carry is supposedly a guide for all women, everywhere, in their 'ongoing journey to "becoming"'. We must embrace our true potential, she suggests, despite being thwarted by prejudice and, yes, dastardly men.

Michelle offers such sage reflections as 'fear can keep us safe, but fear can keep us stuck'. Eh? 'We practise, we learn, learn and practise, we make mistakes then start over again,' she writes. If we 'recognise our light, we become empowered by it'. She also hails the joys of knitting to find lasting peace.
...
The point is that Michelle's personal fortune of about $70 million has not been built on her uniqueness, nor her wisdom, but on the fact she is Mrs Barack Obama. She is famous, and is only given such platforms, because she was married to a President.'

Black boys show ‘genius every single day but schools suck the life out of them’ says leading Black education expert

Matt · 20 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The panel shared powerful insights about the challenges Black boys and their parents and caregivers face in trying to better Black children’s educational outcomes. Howard, who researches issues tied to race, culture, access and educational opportunity for minoritized student populations, said during the panel Black boys have been among the most “scrutinized, analyzed and criticized subjects in research for centuries.” Black boys are “adultified” and are often presumed to be bigger, older and more aggressive than they are, he said.

Black boys make up 8% of preschoolers but one third of all “babies” who are suspended from preschool, said Howard, who is the author of several best-selling books, including "Why Race & Culture Matters in Schools" and "All Students Must Thrive."'

'White men' demonstrating against violence towards women are accused of 'stealing' the occasion from UN anti-abuse day

Mastodon · 21 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"White men' demonstrating against violence towards women on the United Nations' anti-abuse day have been slammed by a campaigner for 'stealing' the occasion and 'erasing an event connected to Hispanic women'.

White Ribbon Day, a protest day created by men to promote ending male violence towards women, is held on November 25.

It was formed by a group of pro-feminist men in Ontario in 1991 after Marc Lépine shot dead 14 female students at the École Polytechnique in Montreal on December 6, 1989.

But the date is also home to the UN International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women - born out a day of protest for the Mirabal sisters, who were murdered in the Dominican Republic in 1960.

Karen Ingala-Smith, chief executive of domestic violence charity Nia, said: 'That was honouring women of colour, so we've got a bunch of white Canadian men stealing the day, and erasing an event connected to Hispanic women.'

A docu-film that portrays sufferings of men falsely accused of rape

Mastodon · 22 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The suffering that men undergo when they are falsely charged in rape and dowry cases is the central theme of a documentary film, ‘India’s sons: A tale of false rape case survivors’, which was released on www.indiassons.com on Saturday.

The release was timed for the the International Men’s Day, observed on November 19 every year. The documentary aims to start a dialogue over misuse of rape laws and reveal “the unsaid truth” behind India's tag of a rape capital.

Several topics like consensual sex being labelled as rape by women to collect money and gain false sympathy and registering false dowry cases were debated in an online conference to mark the day.'

Cornell Earns an “A” in FIRE’s Due Process Ratings

Mastodon · 22 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression (FIRE) conducts an annual rating of 53 major colleges in terms of the due process rights provided to students. In the 2022 rankings, Cornell University was the only one to receive an “A” rating.

The report grades each college’s judicial procedures based upon ten different rights provided to accused students. Because most campuses, including Cornell, have different procedures for Title IX sexual assault violations, non-Title IX Policy 6.4 (covering discrimination and harassment not based upon sex) violations and other non-academic misconduct, a separate grade is assigned to each. Cornell won an “A” for the Student Code of Conduct procedures and “B” for Cornell’s Policy 6.4 procedures.

FIRE reported, “For the first time in the history of FIRE’s Spotlight on Campus Due Process report, a single policy, at Cornell University, received an A grade. This means that the policy provides more than 8 of the 10 elements that FIRE considers critical to a fair procedure. Of the other 154 policies rated at the 53 schools in this report, not one earns higher than a B.”'

World cup: Women prepare for increased domestic abuse

Mastodon · 22 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many people in relationships with abusive partners dread major footballing competitions like the world cup. This is because they're linked to an increase in incidents of domestic abuse.

Research by the University of Lancaster shows violent domestic abuse incidents increase by 38% when England loses football matches. Rates are also 26% higher when the team wins or draws.

Domestic abuse consists of a pattern of coercive and controlling behaviours, where one partner seeks to hold power and control over the other's life. It is a gendered form of abuse, predominantly perpetrated by men against women, which can combine emotional, verbal, psychological, financial, sexual or physical forms of violence.

The severity of domestic abuse can range from consistently critical comments and verbal belittling to physical violence, strangulation and rape.'

Julia Fox Says Men ‘Shouldn’t Even Be Allowed To Have Penises’, Describes How She Would Kill Them

Matt · 22 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Julia Fox revealed she doesn’t think men should have penises and got into a conversation about how she would kill off members of the opposite sex during an upcoming interview on Showtime’s “Ziwe,” to be aired Sunday at 11 p.m.

...

Fox said she would contemplate dating women because of the negative feelings she seems to have toward men. “They all, like, are equally horrible, to be honest. All men,” Fox said in the interview.

Fox then talked about the way she would kill men, saying in the interview she would make it appear to be an overdose. Interviewer Ziwe asked if she was “pro-women killing men.”

...

Fox went on to compare a penis to “a weapon of mass destruction.” Fox then appeared to stun Ziwe by saying if she was president, she would give every woman a gun and none to men. “I think it equals the playing field,” Fox said. “I think we wouldn’t get f—ed with so much,” Fox said.'

No charges against school girl who ‘joked’ about rape

Matt · 25 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Claims and allegations about the high school girl who allegedly joked about being raped by Grade 11 pupil Bafana Sithole should not be used as leverage to charge her, Mpumalanga police said.

Sithole died by suicide on the school premises last week after he was allegedly accused of raping a fellow pupil.

It is alleged that the girl, who cannot be named or revealed as she is a minor, allegedly later claimed that she did not mean what she said about the rape incident.

Mpumalanga SAPS spokesperson Brigadier Selvy Mohlala said there was still no solid evidence for the SAPS to arrest or charge the schoolgirl.

"In the hands of the police, no one has submitted a statement formally to say that the girl is sorry and that she falsely accused Sithole of such. If there is no one to take ownership, then we cannot say the girl falsely accused the deceased," he said.'

Scholar identifies alarming trends among US men

Matt · 26 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. On CNN no less!

Why most men don’t have enough close friends

Matt · 29 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Less than half of men report being satisfied with their friendships, and only about 1 in 5 said they had received emotional support from a friend in the last week, compared with 4 in 10 women, according to a 2021 survey from the Survey Center on American Life.

The falling off of friendships between men begins around middle and late adolescence and grows starker in adulthood, said Judy Yi-Chung Chu, who teaches a class on boys’ psychological development at Stanford University in California. And those who do maintain friendships with other men say they tend to have lower levels of emotional intimacy than women report.

“Boys don’t start emotionally disconnected; they become emotionally disconnected,” said Dr. Niobe Way, a researcher and a professor of applied psychology at New York University.

All humans have the innate capacity and desire for close, emotionally intimate connections with others. We need these relationships for survival as babies and then to thrive as we get older, Chu said.'

Women tech execs rejoice as female-only leadership club opens in San Francisco

Mastodon · 30 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 8,600 square-foot space features a full-service bar with specialty coffee, open lounge space, meeting rooms, private call booths and a Mothers Room. All the artwork in Chief's clubhouses comes from the women-led company Uprise Art, founded by member Tze Chun.

Over 300 members attended the launch event at the San Francisco clubhouse. Members flew in for the clubhouse opening night in late October. Some arrived straight from the airport. "So exciting!" one woman rolling a suitcase said as she greeted Childers and Kaplan with hugs. "I've f-----g earned this," Kaplan recalled another saying.'

Boys’ clubs under siege

Mastodon · 30 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why do so many women have it in for male cyclists? All the jokes about unsightly middle-aged men in Lycra, complaints about tight clothing revealing everything it shouldn’t… It seems there’s growing female irritation with blokes getting up at the crack of dawn, gathering in large packs to go through their paces, and sitting around in coffee shops having a manly chat. How dare they have so much fun?

I’m wondering if this is just one more activity that traditionally attracts men – a boys’ club – which women resent and want to take over. It reminds me of covetous children. Haven’t we all witnessed kids who have no interest in a toy or activity until it attracts the attention of another child, particularly a sibling? Then the battle is on, as the first child seeks what the other one has.

Women seem endlessly to covet things that give men a thrill. They love to take over activities previously reserved for males – determined that men shouldn’t be allowed to enjoy anything that was traditionally their territory. Everywhere there are women making the case that men should be forced to share their toys.'

Meet 'Kanika the sociopath', the woman who believes she's the antidote to toxic masculinity with her 'dark feminine' advice

Mastodon · 30 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one video, Batra says her dating advice is to remain emotionally detached by seeing multiple people at the same time because "if you have lots of options, you have all the power."

"Don't accept a walk with a coffee as a date," she says. "The more money he's spending on you, the less he's spending on other women."

Batra told Insider her genre of advice is known as harnessing "dark feminine" energy, which encompasses being dominant and assertive, while leaning into womanhood.

"Women love it, they absolutely love it," Batra said. "You wouldn't understand how many messages I have right now saying, 'Can you get revenge on my ex for me?', 'Can you teach me how to do this?', 'Can you teach me how to disconnect from people?'"

After witnessing a boom of toxic masculinity on the internet, Batra decided she wanted to be the antidote. She referenced characters such as Andrew Tate, a podcaster an businessman who grew a massive following of young men with misogynistic ideas about the role of women in society before he was de-platformed (Elon Musk has recently welcomed him back onto Twitter), and the "Fresh & Fit" podcast hosted by Walter Weekes and Myron Gaines, which has a similar effect.'

Women need to stop shaming men for being ‘too masculine’

Mastodon · 30 November 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you ask many single women to truly describe what they’re looking for in a mate, “masculine” is likely to be on the list. And yet, for many progressive women — especially those on the feminist left — any form of typical masculinity is seen as undesirable.

...

This reframing of typical male behavior as toxic has seeped into everyday life. Approach a woman at a bar and men risk getting called a creep. Act chivalrous on a date, and she may end up branding you sexist. Be lustful with a woman and she can, as was the 2018 case of actor Aziz Ansari, accuse you of sexual assault. Why develop into the type of masculine man women want, when masculinity itself is now so heavily pathologized?'

Fatherhood changes men’s brains, according to before-and-after MRI scans

Matt · 1 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The time fathers devote to child care every week has tripled over the past 50 years in the United States. The increase in fathers’ involvement in child rearing is even steeper in countries that have expanded paid paternity leave or created incentives for fathers to take leave, such as Germany, Spain, Sweden and Iceland. And a growing body of research finds that children with engaged fathers do better on a range of outcomes, including physical health and cognitive performance.
...
As with practicing any new skill, the experience of caring for an infant might leave a mark on the brains of new parents. This is what neuroscientists call experience-induced brain plasticity – like the brain changes that occur when you learn a new language or master a new musical instrument.

A sparse but growing body of research is observing this type of plasticity in fathers who experience the cognitive, physical and emotional demands of caring for a newborn without going through pregnancy. In terms of brain function, for instance, gay male fathers who are primary caregivers show stronger connections between parenting brain regions when viewing their infants, compared with secondary male caregivers.'

The Intersections of America

Matt · 1 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These types of articles are important as our parents, educators, and policy makers look to close gaps and improve essential student skills, and I would encourage the Times and others to actually dig a little deeper. Discussions on “student groups” that do not disaggregate information by sex often miss the largest group of students struggling to close the achievement gap in reading and college participation, boys.
...
Discussing race and marginalizing sex is not unique to data collection, particularly in areas where boys and men are most impacted. In a recent GIBM report on the Status of Boys and Men in Washington State, GIBM learned that 2021 data and 2022 preliminary data on overdose deaths by sex was not readily available on the Washington State Department of Health (WA DOH) website, even as males historically represent the largest percentage of deaths by a significant margin. ...
...

This sort of reporting often goes unnoticed, in part, because institutions, public and private, at nearly all levels of discussion continue to avoid the elephant in the room. The modern male is struggling, the reasons matter, and it’s incredibly important to do something about it.'

Stanford University Under Investigation For Sex Bias—Against Men

Mastodon · 1 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stanford University is being investigated by the Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights (OCR) for bias against men. According to the complaint filed with the OCR, the elite school offers several programs to support women and no equivalents for men. The Stanford women's programs are just the latest in a long list of university-based women's initiatives under fire for violating regulations that prohibit sex discrimination.

The original claim against Stanford included complaints regarding 27 Stanford programs that Moore and Pekgoz believed violated Title IX. This month, the Office of Civil Rights officially opened an investigation into five of these programs: Stanford's Women in Business, Women in Stanford Law, Stanford Women in Design, Stanford Society of Women Engineers and the Gabilan Provost's Discretionary Fund.

Pekgoz and Moore claimed that the four organizations are illegal because their names imply they exclude men, all their members are women, and Stanford offers no similar support programs for men. Their beef with the provost's fund is that it supports the hiring and retention of female faculty, but not male faculty, in the sciences and engineering. Stanford University did not respond to requests for comment about the allegations.'

Woman accused of false rape claim hurt herself with hammer, court told

Mastodon · 1 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A young woman accused of lying about being raped and trafficked by a grooming gang probably “self-inflicted” injuries using a hammer she bought from Tesco, a court heard.

Eleanor Williams, 21, was found in a field in Barrow-in-Furness on 19 May 2020 covered in bruises, with a black eye and with a fingertip almost severed.

She posted photographs of her injuries on Facebook, alongside lengthy claims of being sexually exploited and taken to “parties” across the north of England to have sex with Asian men, Preston crown court heard.

But police believe she made up the claims and she is now on trial accused of perverting the course of justice.'

Avatar director James Cameron says testosterone is a 'toxin' men must terminate from their system

Mastodon · 3 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'James Cameron, writer and director of such films as the Terminator, Terminator 2, True Lies, Aliens, and Titanic said that earlier in his career he and his work were poisoned by the "toxin" that is testosterone while promoting his environmental activist agitprop Avatar sequel, due out in December.

According to the Hollywood Reporter, Cameron said, "A lot of things I did earlier, I wouldn’t do — career-wise and just risks that you take as a wild, testosterone-poisoned young man. I always think of (testosterone) as a toxin that you have to slowly work out of your system."'

UK: The “Toxic Male Gaze”: Should men staring at women be illegal?

Matt · 3 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this year it was reported that “A senior police officer has urged everyone who witnesses "intense staring" on the London Underground to report it, amid concerns it could be an early sign of unhealthy sexual behaviour… Posters have now been place in tube [train] stations across the capital stating: "Intrusive staring of a sexual nature is sexual harassment and is not tolerated"”.

It should go without saying that sexual harassment of any kind should be discouraged. However, we don’t all agree on what constitutes sexual harassment. In addition, the specific issue of intense/intrusive staring is in many ways subjective, so raises a lot of questions. I guess when thinking about how we are looking, and being looked at, on public transport, we should start with the question of how do we know when intense starting is of a sexual nature? And can women be charged with ‘sexual staring’ too?'

Young Australian men struggling with their mental health feel they have no one to count on

Matt · 3 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two in five young Australian men have not sought help or support when struggling with their mental health, admitting they feel they have no one they can count on, “unnerving” new research shows.

The survey by men’s health charity Movember exposes the startling state of the nation’s mental health crisis, with more than half the 1008 respondents, all aged 18 to 30, also stating they feel “pressure around being a man” and anxiety about the future.

Two-thirds said they felt society didn’t understand young men.'

UK: Woman found guilty of groping, sexual assault, of man at game

Matt · 4 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Occasionally, there's some justice. Excerpt:

'A football mad woman is facing jail after being found guilty of sexually assaulting a rival fan before a Premier League game.

Manchester City fan Jemma Whiteside, 40, was convicted of grabbing a man's genitals and twerking on him before kick-off of her team's game against Everton earlier this year.

The mother-of-six was also heard shouting: “I am going to fk him later, and I don't even know his name.”'

Man Dies Because of Mandatory Domestic Violence Arrest Policies

charlie · 5 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Police arrested and jailed him for alleged domestic abuse. He was suspended from his job as a principal and found his life was ruined. Excerpt:

'An elementary school principal who jumped to his death from a Disneyland multi-story parking lot two days before he was due in court on child endangerment charges left a suicide note on Facebook blaming his wife for endangering his career by calling 911 when they argued in front of her daughters.

Chris Christensen, 51, the principal of William T. Newland Elementary School in Huntington Beach, took his own life in front of Anaheim parkgoers - including children - who'd gathered to watch the annual Candlelight Ceremony.'

‘Shark Week’ blasted for ‘overwhelmingly’ featuring ‘White men' as shark experts in Washington Post report

Mastodon · 6 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Washington Post published a report Monday slamming Discovery Channel’s "Shark Week" programming for featuring too many White males as shark experts and continuing to peddle "negative messages" about sharks.

The report highlighted a study done by the Public Library of Science led by Allegheny College biology professor Lisa Whitenack. The project observed that "Discovery’s programming emphasized negative messages about sharks, lacked useful messaging about shark conservation and overwhelmingly featured White men as experts — including several with the same name."
...
Shiffman implied that this may be due to discrimination on the part of Discovery Channel. He said, "When there are hundreds of people of color interested who work in this field, [and] when my field is more than half women, maybe it’s not an accident anymore that they’re only featuring White men."'

UK: My son was killed by his fiancée but we can save others by opening more refuges

Matt · 7 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mum whose son was stabbed to death by his fiancée is calling for more refuges to open for male victims of domestic violence.

Jose Linnane, 67, screamed "like an animal" when police told her her son Simon Gilchrist had been murdered at his flat in York in 2004.

The 23-year-old's abusive fiancée Caroline Mawhood stabbed him in the heart after she came home from a night of drinking.

Mrs Linnane is now desperately trying to prevent further deaths by calling for new refuges to open.

London does not have a single refuge for male victims of domestic violence, according to the charity ManKind.

Mrs Linnane, from York, told the Mirror: "It makes me spit feathers there's not a single refuge for men in London.'

Senators introduce legislation to bolster Title IX protections

Mastodon · 7 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sens. Bob Casey (D-Pa.) and Mazie Hirono (D-Hawaii) will introduce new anti-harassment legislation Thursday that aims to strengthen Title IX protections for student survivors of sexual assault or harassment.
...
Casey and Hirono's SAFER Act would amend Title IX and other statutes prohibiting sex-based discrimination to remove "unreasonably burdensome" standards for private harassment lawsuits seeking damages.

"So many students who endure sexual harassment or assault experience isolation, fear, and difficulty focusing on their education as they process a traumatic ordeal," Casey said Thursday in a statement to The Hill. "To add insult to injury, students who report their experiences face an uphill battle to seek justice."'

My Husband Is Too Much of a Feminist When It Comes to Raising Our Daughters.

Mastodon · 8 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My husband of 15 years has had a pretty hard time with not having great men in his life. His father used to hit him, his siblings, and his mother. His sister and her toddler were killed by her boyfriend. And his high school girlfriend killed herself after admitting to my husband that her grandfather had been raping her for years. When we first met, I loved dating a man who was so involved in women's issues but now I feel it is too much. I'm a woman who has had great male role models in my life, my dad, my brother, my uncle, my teachers, my granddads, etc. I know how amazing men are and how much good they can do.

Our two girls are currently enrolled in a single-gender private school ($20,000 a year each) while our boys are enrolled in our local public school (we live in a great area and the public school is state of the art, I would be happy to send all four kids there). So my husband is spending $40,000 a year on private school. Then on top of that is sports. Our husband won't let the boys play sports. He says all-boy sports clubs are a cesspool of bad behavior. So our sons do piano lessons, after-school dance lessons (ballet and jazz), and art club—just like our daughters. Our daughters picked them and now they all do it. The boys don't seem to really mind the art, music, and dance lessons, but I would love them to be given free choice like the girls.

...

A: Your husband has seen a lot of really awful stuff and is coming from a good place. But as much as he's thought about the kind of man he wants to be, how has he missed how controlling and domineering he's being as he single-handedly makes decisions for the family, without the input of his wife? Modeling this dynamic for your children is reinforcing the patriarchy much more than, say, soccer lessons would. A great way to reject traditional masculinity would be to…wait for it…listen to the views of the woman who should be leading the family along with him. Tell him that. Also please urge him to do less research and more therapy. He's dealt with many painful experiences, and it would be better for everyone if he could heal to a point where he is excited about the possibilities of raising wonderful sons rather than terrified of raising bad ones.'

Women Sue Elon Musk's Twitter Alleging Discriminatory Layoffs

Mastodon · 9 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two women who lost their jobs at Twitter when billionaire Elon Musk took over are suing the company in federal court, claiming that last month's abrupt mass layoffs disproportionately affected female employees.

The discrimination lawsuit is the latest in a series of legal challenges over Musk's decimation of Twitter's workforce through mass layoffs and firings.

Days after the world's richest man bought the social media platform for $44 billion, the company told about half of employees on Nov. 4 that they no longer had a job but would get three months severance. The lawsuit filed in a San Francisco federal court this week alleges that 57% of female employees were laid off, compared to fewer than half of men, despite Twitter employing more men overall before the layoffs.
...
The lawsuit alleges that also disproportionately harmed women, "who are more often caregivers for children and other family members, and thus not able to comply with such demands."'

Why have so many American men given up on work?

Matt · 10 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many men in the U.S. leave the labor force when their earnings decline compared with their better-paid peers, new research shows. The study found that more men drop out when workers' relative earnings fall.

The findings, from the Federal Reserve of Boston, help explain a trend economists have been puzzling over for decades: Why so many men have given up on the idea of holding down a job. Roughly one in nine men ages 25 to 54, an individual's prime working years, are out of the labor market today; that compared to one in 50 in the mid-1950s.'

The fall of man in American culture

Mastodon · 11 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'1. The feminist movement was a two-edged sword. As it sought to liberate women, it did so at the expense of men as it attacked so-called toxic masculinity. Along the way, it eviscerated the vital role of men as fathers, heads of households, providers and protectors.

Specifically, society at large encouraged men to get in touch with their “feminine-side” as they abandoned their traditional roles in family and society in deference to the ability of women to supplant them as equals.

2. The attack on men, became a war on boys. Even though nearly all scientific literature indicates that boys and girls mature at different rates and are stimulated by different things, mothers in the home and teachers in schools began to push back against the things that little boys are made of, including boundless rambunctious energy.

In the 1960s, with the dispensing of drugs like Ritalin, hyperactive young boys were diagnosed as having attention deficit disorders at twice the rate of girls and were deleteriously drugged accordingly.'

Pennsylvania school board rejects 'cis, white male' for board president

Mastodon · 11 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A school board in Pennsylvania had voted 8-1 this week against allowing one of their colleagues, Gregory D'Elia, to become the president of the board because he is a "cis, white male."

"I believe that Mr. D'Elia would make an excellent president," Upper Moreland School Board member Jennifer Solot said during the vote on Tuesday in Willow Grove, Pennsylvania. "However, I feel that electing the only cis, white male president of this district sends the wrong message to our community — a message that is contrary to what we as a board have been trying to accomplish."
...
Byrnes then conceded that she would vote for Stainback. Rose Huber also hesitated, but after a long pause, she also voted for Stainback. In the 8-1 vote, D'Elia was the only one to vote for himself.

D'Elia, the "cis, white male" school board member, was supported by the Upper Moreland Democrats when he ran in 2019.

The father of three children attended Penn State and received a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering in 2005. According to a 2019 candidate questionnaire, he holds four U.S. patents and "headed design and installation on guy lines on the new One World Trade Center."'

Part 2. The Intersection of Race and Sex in America

Matt · 11 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Washington State Department of Health (WA DOH) decided to publish race-based overdose-death data prior to sex-based data, even as requested data shows 70-74% of WA overdose deaths were male in 2021 and preliminary 2022 data. The decision to prioritize the most current overdose-death data by race and not sex on the WA DOH website is a policy, priority decision in the same manner that the NCES reported drops in reading, prioritizing the narrative of one group while minimizing the narrative of a more marginalized group. As of December 9, 2022 the current overdose-death data in Washington State does not include overdose deaths by sex for 2021 and preliminary deaths for 2022.

While Americans battled the COVID pandemic, the Biden administration established the White House Gender Policy Council specifically for girls and women in 2021, even as males were the majority of Covid deaths, 70% of opioid deaths, 80% of suicide deaths, and lost employment at the same rate as women; just to identify a few areas of concern. The White House Gender Policy Council was an extension of Obama's White House Council on Women and Girls, established in 2009, and a Clinton initiative decades earlier. There are decades of programs for girls and women, but the same cannot be said for boys and men.'

Australia: Girls now out-performing boys in nearly every HSC subject

Mastodon · 12 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls are outperforming boys in most Higher School Certificate subjects and doing almost as well in the historically male strongholds of mathematics and physics, leaving chemistry as one of the few subjects in which the top bands are dominated by boys.

Girls' particularly strong performance in English renewed concerns about the subject's mandatory inclusion in students' Australian Tertiary Admission Rank, amid concerns it disadvantages boys.

Ahead of the release of Higher School Certificate results, NSW Education Standards Authority data from 2019 to 2021, obtained by the Herald, shows the trend of boys falling behind in key areas earlier in high school continues into senior years.'

Framing men as the ‘villains’ gets women no closer to better romantic relationships

Mastodon · 12 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The villain is always a man. It is usually a man in a relationship with a woman, although sometimes it is a man dating a man. Nevertheless: man = villain. The victim is his romantic interest. They recount his behaviour, with the benefit of hindsight, and detail upsetting incidents, usually ones where they felt slighted in some way. These are typically imparted in the register now employed to describe a harm, which combines sombre, stark delivery with therapeutic jargon. The harm is not anything as easily categorisable as outright abuse, or sexual assault. It is a hurt, perhaps one of many, that have added up to create an ultimately “bad relationship”.

...

The flip side of this, of course, are the sweeping generalities we see presented in popular media, regarding the way men are and how they act in romantic relationships. Men, we are told, are out to intentionally suppress, humiliate and belittle those they are involved with because: patriarchy. There is little interrogation of how these patterns of behaviour operate, or why they might exist in the first place.

Instead, they are presented as fixed and irredeemable elements of masculinity, which is synonymous with patriarchy. All hurt inflicted by a man is abuse on some level, these narratives imply, and all men will hurt you; ergo all men are abusive by nature.'

Pennsylvania school board member to resign over statement rejecting 'cis White male' for president

Mastodon · 12 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania school board member who refused to vote for "the only cis White male" on the board to serve as president has decided to resign from her position at the start of 2023.

Upper Moreland School District board member Jennifer Solot made the comments during an open school board meeting on Dec. 6, just before a vote was held to appoint a new board president.'

Repeal Title IX

Mastodon · 12 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In short, Title IX has now become not only a weapon but a blank check for radicals in the federal government and on campus, who see the law as an opportunity to impose the latest progressive politics. As R. Shep Melnick observed in a 2018 survey: “Title IX initially focused on what happens in the classroom. That focus soon shifted to the playing field, then shifted again to bedrooms and bathrooms.” Title IX is now an instrument of “the much more ambitious project of changing the way we think about sex differences, gender roles, and sexuality in general.” And this ambitious project does not rely on persuasion. Dear Colleague letters and other mechanisms of bureaucratic maneuvering create a lawless system of coercion that tramples the basic rights of individuals and punishes dissent.'

Supreme Court not hearing appeal in Title IX case

Mastodon · 12 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court will "not hear an appeal" from Michigan State that "could have impacted how Title IX, the federal law that bans sexual discrimination in education, is applied to college athletics programs." The decision means that, for now, the case is "back in the hands of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and U.S. District Judge Hala Jarbou in Michigan." The case stems from MSU's decision in October 2020 to "eliminate its men's and women's swimming and diving teams at the end of the 2020-21 season."

Eleven members of the women's team "filed suit in January 2021 seeking reinstatement of the women's team." They alleged that MSU's decision would result in the school "violating the law's requirement that schools provide equitable sports-participation opportunities for men and women." At issue was "how to determine whether a school has met the most commonly used benchmark of whether it is providing equitable participation opportunities: Men and women being afforded athletic opportunities in a manner that is substantially proportionate to the school's male and female enrollments"'

University of Houston hosts anti-masculinity lecture

Mastodon · 13 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Houston Law Center recently hosted a lecture titled “The Jurisprudence of Masculinity.”

Keynote speaker and NYU law professor Melissa Murray defined the jurisprudence of masculinity as “a jurisprudence that prioritizes and protects rights that are coded and understood as male, as well as the men who would exercise those rights,” arguing that the Roberts Court has exemplified this jurisprudence.
...
Campus Reform has found, however, that women are often prioritized over men, putting into question Murray's case.

In custody battles, "women are awarded child custody in nearly 90 percent of all cases," according to Emy A. Cordano, Attorney at Law. This is because "women have always been considered superior parents," says Cordano.

But such preference towards women is not isolated to the courts. Universities perpetuate the preference towards women.

Stanford University, for example, is under investigation for discriminating against men, as Campus Reform recently reported.'

UK: Street harassment to be banned in crackdown, government says

Mastodon · 13 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The government will now back legislation tabled by former business secretary Greg Clark.

Mr Clark said the intention of the bill is "to reinforce a change in the culture that establishes that it is completely unacceptable to abuse women in the streets".

During a debate in the House of Commons, Mr Clark said: "Public sexual harassment can affect men and boys, but we should be clear that it disproportionately affects women and girls."

The backbencher's bill aims to criminalise:

- Deliberately walking closely behind someone as they walk home at night
- Making obscene or aggressive comments towards a person
- Making obscene or offensive gestures towards a person
- Obstructing a person's path
- Driving or riding a vehicle slowly near to a person making a journey

As it stands, the bill will also introduce harsher sentences - increasing the maximum sentences from six months to two years.

Campaigners have also called for wolf-whistling and staring intently to be criminalised.

Pelosi told Obama Dems lost House in 2010 because White men 'get in a mood' when they don't have jobs

Mastodon · 14 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On the phone with Obama, Pelosi said Democrats shouldn't consider their wipeout as a referendum on health care reform. Instead, she blamed White males upset with high unemployment rates for Democratic losses.

"Our members have said they don't regret their health care bill right across the board. Even if we never passed health care reform, we were still going to lose this election because of 9.5% unemployment. ‘Cause it wasn’t about that, it was about jobs," Pelosi assured the president.

"The White male thing is just — that's a dominant thing. When they don't have a job, they get in a mood," she said. "And, um, so we'll have to make some decisions in our caucus about how we go forward."'

Mount Holyoke grad deprogrammed from women-only woke culture

Mastodon · 14 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the time she graduated from the school, which charges $60,000 a year in tuition, in 2015, Rockwell said, she'd been "brainwashed" into believing she had been a lifelong victim of patriarchal oppression and had a duty to fight on behalf of other victims: women, people of color and LBGTQ folks.

"I left school very anxious, very nervous, very depressed and sad," Rockwell said. "I saw everything through the lens of oppression and bias and victimhood. I came to the school as someone who saw everyone equally. I left looking for injustice wherever I could and automatically assuming that all white men were sexist. My thoughts were no longer my own."

Rockwell said she also developed a drinking problem at college and turned on her mother, Melinda Rockwell, whom she had once considered her best friend. Melinda said Rockwell wrote a "horrible manifesto" right after graduation, accusing her mom of treating her like a "wind-up toy" and a "doll" and never loving her.
...
"The entire culture there revolved around hating men and being a lesbian," Loomer, author of "Loomered: How I Became the Most Banned Woman in the World," told The Post. "Mount Holyoke and all the Seven Sisters [schools, including historically women's colleges Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Smith, Radcliffe, Vassar and Wellesley] were designed to be these elite institutions for women at a time when places like Harvard just took men. But they're no longer places for ideas and debate and a well-rounded education. They're centers for indoctrination. If you send your kid there you're signing them up to hate the patriarchy and white people and the founding stock of our country. It's a bastardization of higher education for the sake of weaponizing naive young women for the sake of advancing a toxic agenda."'

UK: Police applicant is told ‘we’re only hiring women and minorities’

Mastodon · 14 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Potential recruits to West Yorkshire Police are being turned down because they aren’t women or ethnic minorities, a Kirklees councillor has claimed.

Cllr Mark Thompson, (Con, Birstall), spoke out after a white man who applied for a job was unable to have his application progressed as he didn’t belong to a minority group. The prospective recruit was told that his application would be held until Police Officer recruitment is open for everyone.

At Kirklees Council’s last full council meeting, West Yorkshire Mayor Tracy Brabin who has responsibility for police matters heard the councillor’s concerns.'

LUX Creates Bold New Workplace Training Designed to Stop Everyday Sexism in the Workplace

Mastodon · 14 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With a mission to power women with the strength to express their femininity without fear of everyday sexist judgments, Unilever's global beauty brand LUX takes another leap forward in fighting everyday sexism at the workplace. This month LUX has launched the Allies e-learning programme - a free global training resource for companies to rally colleagues to come together and stand against everyday sexism.

Everyday sexism exists regardless of profession, country, or cultural background. This is even more prevalent and ingrained in developing and emerging countries. Despite greater advocacy for gender equality since the #MeToo movement took off, sexism and sexual harassment continue to be persistent issues that plague society today. LUX's 'Finding Strength in Beauty' 2021 whitepaper supported this view and discovered that women regularly face up to 17 types of judgements, 70% of which are appearance-related with even 26% worried about being seen as overly successful at work.'

Men Engage in “Chivalrous Sexism” when Donating to Women in Need

Mastodon · 14 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study by Tel Aviv and Ben-Gurion Universities reveals a phenomenon of “chivalrous sexism” towards women in need. According to the study, about 2 out of 3 men (62%) would be willing to help a woman in distress whose house burned down – but fewer men (45%) would donate money to a woman whose business burned down. On the other hand, when the researchers examined the willingness of men to donate to other men, the trend that emerged was the opposite – according to which most men preferred to donate to men whose business was burned thus maintaining the male hegemony.

The researchers explain the differences by the fact that men tend to help women out of ‘chivalrous sexism’: helping a ‘damsel in distress’ is part of a men’s gender role, which is why a man will open the door for a woman or pull over to help her change a flat tire. But this help depends on the context: men help women if it does not challenge the male hegemony, in other words, if their help will empower women, then men will be less willing to help them.'

New study links Dark Triad personality traits to anti-feminist attitudes

Mastodon · 15 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research provides evidence that Dark Triad personality traits are associated with anti-feminist attitudes. The findings have been published in the journal Personality and Individual Differences.

The “Dark Triad” refers to a cluster of related but distinct personality traits, comprised of Machiavellianism, narcissism, and psychopathy. Machiavellians are characterized by their manipulation of others or the exploitation of situations for their own advantage. Narcissists typically demonstrate a need for admiration, an inflated sense of self-importance, and a strong belief in their own superiority. Meanwhile, psychopathic individuals exhibit a high degree of impulsive along with a lack of empathy and remorse.

Lead author Melanie D. Douglass and her colleagues sought to better understand whether these maladaptive traits impact attitudes towards feminism. For their study, they recruited a sample of 343 individuals aged between 18 and 54 years of age from the United Kingdom.'

WA father discovers son’s paternity, two years after death

Mastodon · 15 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Western Australian father has shared the devastating moment when he learnt he was not biologically related to his 20-year-old son two years after his death.

Around 23 years ago, Mick Reynolds became a dad after a woman he was seeing, Melissa Hernaman fell pregnant.

During this time he shared custody of Lochie, lived with Ms Hernaman until Lochie was seven and contributed to expenses and paid $400 a week in child support until the child turned 18.

Now 43, Mr Reynolds told A Current Affair he paid Ms Hernaman just under $110,000, something he says he had “no worries” doing.

...

However, Mr Reynolds’ says his case also highlights the issue of paternity fraud and the lack of emotional and financial support for victims.'

When Father Established Paternity He Did Not Get a Second Chance to Contest Baby's Adoption

Mastodon · 15 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attempts by the father of a newborn baby to prevent a couple from adopting the baby failed because the father waited too long after the adoption petition was filed to act, the Supreme Court of Ohio ruled today.

The Supreme Court ruled that men not married to the child's birth mother who are claiming to be fathers of children must follow the procedures in the putative father registry law or relinquish their rights to object to an adoption. Establishing paternity after an adoption petition has been filed, but before a hearing on the petition, does not restore the rights of a father who did not register as a putative father, the Court added.'

As more men leave the workforce, women are stepping in to fill those jobs

Mastodon · 15 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the height of the pandemic, 22 million jobs were lost. The data showed that the total number was skewed more towards women than men, since so many women assumed caretaker roles at home when daycare centers and schools closed during lockdowns. Since then, men and women have gained back all the jobs lost.

And of the 263,000 jobs added to the US economy last month, 61.6% of those are held by women, according to the National Women's Law Center. More women between the ages of 30-44 are joining the workforce in recent months — and at a higher percentage than before the pandemic.

"The fears of a 'she-cession' turned out largely to be unfounded," said Reeves of the idea that mostly women would be negatively impacted by pandemic-related job losses. "The women are returning to the labor market, and we've actually seen quite a big increase in the share of women in management roles and senior management roles."

Women are also stepping in to roles in more male-dominated industries, like construction. Ava Sedaghat joined the construction industry about two years ago as a project engineer in New York City.'

Female enrollment and legal employment are rising, but is representation improving?

Mastodon · 15 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New data shows that female enrollment in law schools and employment after law school is rising but some believe there is still room for more representation in the law field.

Female enrollment has increased while male enrollment has declined, according to AccessLex Institute's latest Legal Education Data Deck.

"Prior to 2000, male and female J.D. enrollment primarily moved inversely, with male enrollment falling as female enrollment increased. After 2000 they moved in tandem until female enrollment surpassed male enrollment for the first time in 2017," stated the deck.

This is the result of a larger trend of declining male enrollment in higher education, said Tiffane Cochran, Vice President of Research at AccessLex. Female college attainment has been outpacing male college attainment for some time now.

According to a recent report from the National Student Clearinghouse, 59.5% of college students enrolled in 2020-2021 were women and 40.5% were men.'

Barcelona invests for masculinity workshops

Mastodon · 16 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'Questioning our preconceived notions about gender can be crucial to overcoming bias. Last year, a Centre for New Masculinities opened in Barcelona, Spain aiming to break down old - and often harmful - models of manhood.'

The Unseen Faces of the Men’s Rights Movement

Mastodon · 16 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Peter is a gay, British writer who supports the Labour Party and grew up in a stable, middle-class household — and he’s an active member of the men’s rights movement.

Now in his late twenties, Peter began sympathizing with the movement as an adolescent after experiencing what he sees as the education system’s disparate treatment of boys and girls.

“In school I saw a lot of double standards in the ways men and boys were treated socially,” Peter told National Review. He found that boys were often disciplined unfairly while administrators and teachers turned a blind eye to the misbehavior of girls.'

“Why Is the Men’s $400 Million” – Megan Rapinoe Hits Back at the Massive Prize Money for the FIFA World Cup

Mastodon · 16 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While talking about the prize money of the FIFA World Cup she said: “It is a little bit of a complicated issue and it is a little bit more nuance than you know at times we would even express it so I will concede on that. But it is also like ok, why is the men’s 400 million and why is the women’s 400 million?”

She added” ” It’s so frustrating because the investment peace is just like astronomically different and so until that is equal like I don’t wanna talk about you know whether it’s TV rights or sponsorship dollars or anything like that. And I actually think the Women’s National team is a really amazing example of this. Like considering that we haven’t been paid as much and as much attention and effort haven’t been put towards you know from our own federation or sponsors or TVship rights and we are still successful”.

From all these statements, it’s clear that Rapinoe believes that paying both men’s and women’s soccer teams the same is not fair. According to her the women’s soccer team should be paid more as they have achieved a lot more in comparison to the men’s team.'

UN to investigate use of ‘parental alienation’ tactic in custody cases

Mastodon · 16 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The UN special rapporteur on violence against women and girls is to investigate how family courts around the world approach “parental alienation” (PA) and how this may lead to the double victimisation of those who have suffered domestic abuse.

There is no single agreed definition of parental alienation but a generally accepted description is a child’s rejection of one parent as a result of psychological manipulation by their preferred parent.

Reem Alsalem will examine what is behind an increase in allegations of PA in highly acrimonious child custody cases, in particular when used to counter claims of domestic abuse.

Alsalem claims the majority of parents accused of “alienating” their child while alleging abuse are women. In some cases, mothers who have been accused of alienation have had their children permanently removed from their care or faced imprisonment.'

Longtime Tennessee domestic violence leader is out following critical federal investigation

Mastodon · 16 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The longtime leader of the Tennessee Coalition to End Domestic and Sexual Violence has left the organization. The change comes less than a week after WPLN News and the Tennessee Lookout reported on federal findings of whistleblower retaliation at the nonprofit.

Kathy Walsh was executive director of the Coalition for more than three decades, where she helped build its reputation as the leading voice for domestic and sexual violence victims in the state. As a registered lobbyist, she has also helped shape many pieces of legislation.

But a report by investigators from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, finalized in September, concluded that Walsh was involved in forcing out an employee who blew the whistle on the potential misuse of federal grant funds in 2019.'

Well, actually: Mansplaining is a problem in the workplace

Mastodon · 17 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Organizations should not dismiss mansplaining as a product of social media rudeness or as a passing fad. Instead, mansplaining should be understood as an issue related to selective incivility where individuals are targeted based on their identity and made to feel like they do not belong.

Once identified as a form of incivility, mansplaining can and should be addressed in the workplace. Interventions that are effective at counteracting incivility might also be effective at mitigating mansplaining.'

Joe Rogan on the masculinty crisis

Mastodon · 18 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Joe Rogan and Mark Boal discuss the so-called masculinity crisis with today's men. Is it really just the media feeding us an idea with the content they put out like news, movies, shows, etc.? Men dont agree with these things and that's why the masculine ideas have become so popular; it is going to backfire against them as we are seeing now.

Boys and learning differences during the pandemic

Matt · 19 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While it's certainly true we must be vigilant regarding the outcomes of our nation's daughters, selective narratives can give incomplete impressions. NAEP made a point of identifying declines in male and female math scores and added that "a greater score decline for female students in 2022 contributed to the widening of the gender gap" in math. While there was an average 6-point gap in math for 4th grade girls and a 2-point gap in math for 8th grade girls, there was an average 7-point gap for 4th grade boys and a 9-point gap for 8th grade boys in reading. This boy gender-gap in reading was not identified in the discussion of the report, and this speaks to the ways our institutions think and report on the outcomes of males and females.

Additionally, girls 2019 average math scores pre-pandemic were equal to or higher than boys 2022 scores post-pandemic. Conversely, this was not the case for boys in reading, where boys pre-pandemic average scores for 4th and 8th grades were lower than girls post-pandemic scores by margins greater than the gender-gap identified in NAEP's discussion of 4th grade mathematics. In general, institutions do not use the term "gaps" when discussing outcomes of boys and men.'

The State of Our Sons: A Townhall

Matt · 21 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Ticket info here. Description:

'Learn more about the challenges boys and men face in this first ever townhall on the status of boys and men in California and the nation. More than ever, boys need stable families and a community of caring people to guide them toward happy and healthy lives. We can begin to understand the challenges of boys and men by using verifiable and reliable data to look for solutions that lead to successful, measurable outcomes. Join Sean Kullman, Warren Farrell (Internationally acclaimed author), and the Board of the Global Initiative for Boys and Men for this unique townhall. Learn more at gibm.us.'

Chris Murphy introduces bill to strengthen Title IX, promote gender equity in sports

Mastodon · 22 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'U.S. Sen. Chris Murphy introduced legislation on Tuesday that aims to promote gender equity in college and K-12 sports

The bill, known as "Fair Play for Women Act," is focused on fairness and equity in participation opportunities and institutional support for women's and girls' sports programs to ensure transparency and public reporting of data by college and K-12 athletic programs.

It would also hold athletic programs and associations more accountable for Title IX violations and discriminatory treatment, and improve education of Title IX rights among athletes, staff, and stakeholders.
...
The Democrat-backed bill would empower the Secretary of Education to issue fines to schools whose athletic departments are out of gender-equity compliance. This bill is being co-sponsored by Reps. Alma Adams (D-N.C.), Lori Trahan (D-Mass.) and Suzanne Bonamici (D-Ore.).

“Our bill would ensure sports programs for women and girls finally get the support they’re entitled to, increase transparency and accountability of schools and athletic associations, and make sure athletes are aware of their Title IX rights and how to exercise them. I’m proud to be working with Representatives Adams, Trahan, and Bonamici on this important piece of legislation to fulfill the promise of Title IX in college and K-12 athletics,” Murphy said.'

Woman avoids jail for falsely accusing man of rape - and even lied to his family

Mastodon · 22 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman dodged jail after she blackmailed a man for cash, falsely accusing him of rape.

Chelsea Orton left her victim relying on antidepressants after he suffered abuse following her lies.

The 22-year-old confessed to blackmailing the man, who cannot be named, out of £200 between July and August 2019.

Orton went as far as telling the man's family about the rape lie to try and back up her story.

But the mum-of-one was finally caught out when her victim built up the courage to report her to the police.

Orton, from Nuneaton, Warwickshire, admitted to blackmail and was slapped with an 18-month prison sentence, suspended for 12 months at Warwick Crown Court.'

Female teachers given ‘toolkit’ letters to combat harassment

Mastodon · 22 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Archive accessible link here. Excerpt:

'Female teachers have been issued with template warning letters to send to colleagues who make jokes about women or put their arm around them, in an attempt to tackle sexism in schools.

The National Education Union published the sample letter in a toolkit of resources to be used as part of the union’s ‘It’s Not OK’ campaign against sexual harassment and sexism.

The letter is aimed at teachers who want to take an “informal” approach to an incident of harassment, and its aim is to stop “first instances of sexual or sexist behaviour quickly without the need to use formal procedures”.

Teachers are encouraged to send the letter to call out colleagues who act inappropriately, suggesting the wording: “I am writing to ask that you stop…making broad criticisms about women/ intimidating me/ putting your arm around me/ touching me/ telling ‘jokes’ about women/ contacting me outside work on non-work issues/ using ‘sexist’ language in front of me/ making humiliating remarks about my appearance/ belittling older women workers/ making coarse sexual remarks.”

It suggests teachers say they find the behaviour “offensive/undignified/ intimidating/ hostile/ degrading/ humiliating”.'

So much for equality: Men are less likely to become elementary teachers or nurses because of gender bias, report finds

charlie · 22 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender discrimination is preventing men from becoming elementary teachers and nurses, experts warn.

They say that while women's struggle to get into science, tech and engineering roles has been well-publicized, professional discrimination against males has not.

Biases against men in early education and healthcare are thought to be linked to a perception that women are more caring and less dangerous.

Two new studies published by the American Psychological Association today sought to gauge the impact of those stereotypes.'

UK: Woman calls for men's shelters after son murdered by fiancée

Matt · 22 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mum whose son was stabbed to death by his fiancée is calling for more refuges to open for male victims of domestic violence.

Jose Linnane, 67, screamed "like an animal" when police told her her son Simon Gilchrist had been murdered at his flat in York in 2004.

The 23-year-old's abusive fiancée Caroline Mawhood stabbed him in the heart after she came home from a night of drinking.

Mrs Linnane is now desperately trying to prevent further deaths by calling for new refuges to open.

London does not have a single refuge for male victims of domestic violence, according to the charity ManKind.

Mrs Linnane, from York, told the Mirror: "It makes me spit feathers there's not a single refuge for men in London.'

Woman spared jail for groping man who asked for her to be sentenced like a man

Matt · 22 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who drunkenly groped a man has been spared jail despite the victim urging she be tried like a man.

Mum-of-six Jemma Whiteside, 40, sexually assaulted the man at Everton's game against Manchester City at Goodison Park, Liverpool, on February 26.

A court heard how she grabbed the man's genitals, 'rubbed' up against him and said: 'I'm going to fk him and I don't even know his name.'

The 'shocked and upset' victim said in a police report: 'It should not matter whether the assault was by a man or a woman, it should be treated the same."

Over 100k Russian men killed in war

Matt · 23 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If it were 100k women, it would have been stopped long ago. Male disposability is one of many issues around equality that feminism ignores. Excerpt:

'VLADIMIR Putin has the blood of 100,000 Russian soldiers on his hands as the grim milestone was reached today 10 months after Russia's doomed invasion.

But experts have said that Mad Vlad will be happy to send one million Russians to the slaughter in his desperate bid to achieve victory in Ukraine.

Ukrainian officials have been keeping a close tally on the war's death toll - and today claimed Putin has a grand total of 100,400 men.

With the war reaching day 302, that means Vlad has lost an average of 332 soldiers a day since February.

It is a military failure of incredible scale, with poorly trained and poorly equipped soldiers being sent to their deaths in muddy trenches.

Putin's military death toll is already more than six times higher than the Soviets lost in Afghanistan, and 20 times higher than US casualties in Iraq.'

Profs: 'white male privilege' to blame for STEM gender gap

Mastodon · 24 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Seattle Pacific University professors contend that “white male privilege” is the primary reason that few women choose to study physics in college.

Rachel Scherr and Amy Robertson, both physics professors at Seattle Pacific, argue in the October issue of Race and Physics Teaching that physics instruction is currently unfair to women because “white male privilege pervades the discipline of physics as well as the classrooms in which physics is taught and learned.”

“Physics strongly values male-socialized traits such as independence, competition, and individual victories,” they write, adding that “objectivity and rationality themselves, the foundations of scientific ideology, are also male-socialized traits.”

The authors also assert that science has been used as a tool of racial oppression and colonization, which further hurts minorities in STEM and physics classrooms.'

Avatar 2 Is White Man's Fantasy of Indigenous Resistance

Mastodon · 24 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you want to see a white man's version of an Indigenous futurism film, however, then the local multiplex showing Avatar: The Way of Water is the way to go.

That said, the plot of what some call Avatar 2 is simple enough: the earth is dying, humans need resources, and this requires a complete takeover of the planet Pandora, which also requires the "taming" of the Indigenous inhabitants, the Na'vi.'

Profs fear engineering exam may be ‘biased’ against women

Mastodon · 26 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Kansas State University professors have discovered that women in engineering are 11.6 percent less likely to pass the field’s professional license exam, which they suggest may partly be due to “biases in the exam itself.”

To obtain a license, engineers must pass the Principles and Practice of Engineering (PE) exam after four years of field experience. Taken by a few thousand people each year, the eight-hour exam is typically considered the “gateway” to a long-term engineering career.

But a new study casts concern over whether the exam is fair for female engineers. Led by Julia Keen and Anna Salvatorelli, the study finds that women taking the exam nationally are 11.6 percent less likely to pass, and that the disparity is even worse in certain states.
...
Lead author Julia Keen says she was motivated to investigate after earning her PhD in Engineering and seeing many of her peers leave the field.

Though Keen notes that women’s decision to leave engineering is influenced by many factors, during her dissertation research, she discovered that the PE exam repeatedly came up as a roadblock for women.'

Women-only: This Texas resale marketplace hopes to make selling safe

Mastodon · 26 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Allhers, an online platform based in Austin, Texas, says it's devoted to providing women a safe place to buy and re-sell products — by eliminating men from the equation.

Becca Butler, one of the founders of Allhers, said she frequently moved around from childhood into adulthood. When she moved from Los Angeles to Austin, she joined a women-only discussion group and decided to list some furniture she was selling.

"It sold immediately," she said.

Further, her experience selling in this group was much more pleasant than in previous instances where she sold her stuff on other platforms, such as Craigslist and Facebook Marketplace.

"Everyone Venmoed me ahead of time…No one was haggling or lowballing me," she said. "Conversations were really friendly, and it just felt a lot more fun. I wasn't worried about strangers coming over to pick up this furniture because they'd already been vetted to be in the group."

Her brother — another founder of Allhers — was thinking of ways to innovate the buy and sell space around the same time Becca had this experience. He interviewed many female consumers about their experiences on these platforms, Becca said, and realized many had negative experiences with men when buying or re-selling household items.'

The Rise Of Misandry To Promote Gynocentric Agenda

Mastodon · 26 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Human beings are created with inadequacies. Men tend to be physically stronger than women and can cope with the stressors of life more than women. Women, on the other hand, are meant to be more compassionate than men. They can better take care of the responsibilities of others without being stressed. That is why they tend to play a more significant role in the upbringing of children.
...
But unfortunately, the moral justification of this ideology puts men at a disadvantage. They consistently receive backlash as a predicament of these struggles. Those ardent advocates always consider men as oppressors, narcissists, egoists and self-centered, which causes all the misfortunes in women's lives. This makes women that are adamant about this ideology highly androgynous.

Androphobia has become part of the ideology per se because most of those promoting it display one aspect of man-hating or the other. The radical ones among them tend to even distance themselves from any intersexual relationship due to their adamant stand on ideology. Do women who do not believe in this ideology have anything to lose? Why are many women against this ideology, and some even consider it evil?'

Dartmouth $100,000,000 STEM program appears to exclude white men

Mastodon · 27 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dartmouth College's planned $100 million program to help "historically underrepresented groups in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics," is moving forward, aided by a recent gift that will cover one-fourth of the cost.

However, white male students appear to be excluded from the program, raising legal concerns. Groups included in the STEM-X initiative, according to Dartmouth, include "Black, Latinx, and Native Americans," as well as "women."

Several experts on Title IX sex discrimination and Title VI race discrimination law are concerned about the legality of the program, according to comments they made to The College Fix.

He said that Dartmouth is promoting a "false narrative" that women are underrepresented in STEM and noted "that women are overrepresented in many STEM fields including biology, health sciences, medical schools, and veterinary medicine."'

Are universities doomed?

Mastodon · 27 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nationwide undergraduate enrollment has dropped by more than 650,000 students in a single year - or over 4 percent alone from spring 2021 to 2022, and some 14% in the last decade. Yet the U.S. population still increases by about 2 million people a year.

Men account for about 71% of the current shortfall of students. Women number almost 60% of all college students - an all-time high.

Monotonous professors hector students about "toxic masculinity," as "gender" studies proliferate. If the plan was to drive males off campus, universities have succeeded beyond their wildest expectations.

Stanford's published 2025 class profile claims a student body of "23% white." Fewer than half of the class is male. Stanford mysteriously does not release the numbers of those successfully admitted without SAT tests - but recently conceded it rejects about 70% of those with perfect SAT scores.'

Unconstitutional ‘SAFER Act’ violates the First Amendment, undermines academic freedom, and seeks to upend decades of anti-discrimination law

Mastodon · 27 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this month, Senators Bob Casey and Mazie Hirono and Representatives Jahana Hayes and Debbie Dingell introduced the “Students’ Access to Freedom and Educational Rights Act of 2022” (the “SAFER Act”; S. 5158/H.R. 9387) in their respective chambers of Congress.

If enacted, the SAFER Act would amend federal anti-discrimination laws in ways that would upend decades of legal precedent and threaten the civil liberties of students and faculty alike.

While there are numerous problems with the legislation, three of them stand out above the others.

The SAFER Act seeks to define sexual harassment in a way that would violate long-standing Supreme Court precedent and the First Amendment. The Supreme Court articulated a definition of discriminatory harassment in the educational context in a 1999 case, Davis v. Monroe County Board of Education. In an opinion authored by Justice Sandra Day O’Connor and joined by Justices Stevens, Souter, Ginsburg, and Breyer, the Court defined discriminatory harassment as conduct that is “so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive, and that so undermines and detracts from the victims’ educational experience, that the victim-students are effectively denied equal access to an institution’s resources and opportunities.”

This speech-protective standard recognizes that federal anti-discrimination laws like Title IX must work in concert with the First Amendment. Courts have effectively used this standard to find in support of both students alleging that institutions failed to prevent prohibited harassment, and students alleging that their school violated the First Amendment by not adhering to this standard. Davis is still binding precedent, and it still protects students from both discriminatory harassment and censorship.'

'Toxic masculinity' may be caused by an actual, infectious, brain-altering parasite

Mastodon · 28 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Suspicious. Jealous. Quicker to make an immediate judgment. Less willing to listen to others. Guys who were ready to break the rules if it helped them personally. Sound familiar? Other factors, such as self-control and even “clothes tidiness” were found to be decreased by infection. Here’s another one: Infected men scored significantly lower than uninfected men when it came to establishing relationships with women.

It is very hard not to draw a line between these results and guys like Nick Fuentes screaming about “replacement theory” and fretting over declining sperm counts while claiming that relationships between men and women “are gay.”

If you think this behavior only manifests at the polls, or in the desire to throw on a white hood, think again. One study showed that “Toxoplasma-infected subjects have a 2.65 times higher risk of traffic accidents than Toxoplasma-free subjects.” It would be extremely interesting to have results of these tests on people involved in mass shootings. While they’re at it, they could test corporate CEOs.

What did T. gondii infection do to women? Almost the opposite.'

Change the law to make it fairer for fathers

Mastodon · 28 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 1970s, Ruth Bader Ginsburg famously used “Appendix E” — a list of hundreds of laws that discriminated on the basis of sex — as a playbook for dismantling gender discrimination. Almost all the statutory language that explicitly treated men and women differently has since been struck from the law books. Yet New York State has failed to remove a blatant example of gender discrimination from our Domestic Relations Law.

Gov. Hochul has a bill on her desk that would remedy that. It is aptly named the Parental Equity Act (S6389/A7347).

The bill fixes a law that dates back to the time when children of unmarried parents were considered “illegitimate” and makes unmarried fathers’ parental rights categorically contingent on providing financial support, ignoring the many other important ways fathers support their children. Fathers, of course, just like mothers, provide love and emotional support, as well as the full range of daily parental care — cooking for, bathing, and dressing children, taking them to school, helping them with homework, and more.'

"The misogyny here is not even thinly veiled" - Tennis fans slam Stefanos Tsitsipas for harsh words against 'modern feminism'

Mastodon · 30 December 2022 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stefanos Tsitsipas recently shared some very strong views against feminism, expressing his belief that "modern feminism disparages men." The Greek tennis star also stated that equality should be practiced irrespective of gender, race, religion or background, and that modern feminism had gone away from equality.

Tsitsipas has since faced a lot of flak for his comments, which were made in response to similar views from entrepreneur Iman Gadzhi shared on the social media blogging site Twitter. Tsitsipas is currently in off-season mode after his 2022 season ended with a group-stage exit at the ATP Finals.'

Army approves reduced physical fitness standards for women, older soldiers

Mastodon · 1 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following a three-year review, the Army has scrapped plans to use the same physical fitness test for all soldiers, choosing instead to have some reduced standards to allow women and older soldiers to pass, the service announced Wednesday.

The decision follows a RAND-led study that found men were more easily passing the new, more difficult Army Combat Fitness Test (ACFT) compared to women and older soldiers, who were “failing at noticeably higher rates.” That six-event test developed in 2019 was an expansion from the three events — pushups, situps and a run — soldiers had done prior.

“This test is an essential part of maintaining the readiness of the Army as we transform into the Army of 2030,” Army Secretary Christine Wormuth said in a statement announcing the changes. “The revisions to the ACFT are based on data and analysis, including an independent assessment required by Congress. We will continue to assess our implementation of the test to ensure it is fair and achieves our goal of strengthening the Army’s fitness culture.”

The Army first changed its fitness test to include dead lifts, power throws, pushups, planks, a run and a sprint-drag-carry event, as well as a leg tuck that was eventually eliminated.'

Child Support Changes in Minnesota

charlie · 1 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With too many parents condemned to poverty because of burdensome child support payments, Minnesota has overhauled the rules for how those payments are calculated.

Starting next week, the minimum per-child payment for noncustodial parents will drop and the calculated payments will be lower if the custodial parent has a higher income, among other changes.

"We want people to be successful, and we want people to meet the expectation that's being set for them," said Shaneen Moore, deputy assistant commissioner at the Department of Human Services (DHS). Its child support unit and county offices serve about 220,000 children in Minnesota and collected and distributed more than $550 million in payments in 2021.'

New Jersey woman charged with murder in Christmas Day shooting of husband

Matt · 1 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Her attorneys say she's innocent even though she said she shot him. This'll be one to watch. Excerpt:

'A New Jersey woman has been charged with murder, accused of fatally shooting her husband, a figure in local Republican politics, on Christmas Day.

Hamilton Township police responded to a residence in the 5200 block of Mays Landing Somers Point Road on Sunday for a report of an injured man, the Atlantic County Prosecutor's Office said in a release.

Officers found David B. Wigglesworth suffering from an apparent gunshot wound. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

His wife, Marylue Wigglesworth, 51, had called 911 saying she had been in a fight and told responding officers she shot her husband, The Press of Atlantic City newspaper reported, citing the arrest affidavit.

She was arrested in connection with his death and booked into the Atlantic County Justice Facility.

An autopsy determined that Wigglesworth died of a single gunshot wound and that the manner of his death was a homicide, prosecutors said.
...
Her attorneys, Jonathan E. Diego and Melissa Rosenblum, said in a statement: “A tragedy occurred on Christmas evening. Ms. Wigglesworth is innocent of the charge against her. … The facts of that heart-rending evening will unfold in a court of law, not the court of public opinion.”'

Texas Supreme Court rules against father seeking to prevent 'chemical castration' of his son

Mastodon · 2 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jeffrey Younger has lost his court case to prevent his ex-wife from taking their son to California, where he could be medically transitioned. Younger has been trying to stop this from happening for years, and said that he has now reached the end of the line.

He wanted the courts to stop his ex-wife from taking the children to California and to protect his boys from medical mutilation at the hands of their mother, who is a pediatrician. The courts prevented him from forcing the mother to bring the boys back from California. Younger has accused her of using the children to help advertise her "inclusive," "gender affirming" practice.

"The Supreme Court of Texas denied my Mandamus, effectively terminating my parental rights. My children are now subject to being chemically castrated in California. Texas is an empire of child abuse, led by Texas judges," he said.'

Admin Announcement: New SSL Cert Installed

Matt · 2 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

I just renewed our SSL cert., so if you get a new cert. message/warning on your browser when hitting the site, go ahead and accept it. Thank you.

DV and the LGBTQ+ Community

Matt · 2 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. By casting DV as exclusively a men vs. women issue, not only do feminists ignore male DV victims in heterosexual rel'ps but they also totally ignore the DV in homosexual rel'ps for both sexes. Excerpt:

'• Around 44% of lesbian and 61% of bisexual women have experienced forms of rape and physical violence by an intimate partner as compared to 35% of straight women.

• 26% of gay men and 37% of bisexual men have experienced forms of rape and physical violence by an intimate partner compared to 29% of straight men.
...
Behind these statistics are real people with real experiences of abuse. LGBTQIA+ individuals face unique challenges in their journey towards safety and stability. Taylor Brown and Jody L. Herman from the UCLA School of Williams Institute list out just some of the challenges that include:

• Legal jurisdictions of domestic violence that only refer to heterosexual couples'

DAVIA: Domestic Abuse and Violence International Alliance

Matt · 2 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The highly publicized trial of Johnny Depp and Amber Heard, and the global public response to the trial, reveal there is no other topic of public debate in which the claims of gender activists:

- Diverge so dramatically from the findings of hundreds of research studies, which show that men and women engage in domestic violence at similar rates.
- Are so implausible and easily discredited, such as the claim that COVID lockdown policies resulted in a “shadow pandemic of violence” against women.
- Serve to negatively stereotype men and promote policies that violate men’s civil rights, such as the right to due process and the presumption of innocence.

This state of affairs has arisen from a gender ideology that ascribes domestic violence to the existence of “patriarchy.” Gloria Steinem, for example, once insisted that “Patriarchy requires violence, or the subliminal threat of violence, in order to maintain itself.”'

ASU publishes 'black male privilege checklist'

Mastodon · 2 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Arizona State University has published on its official website a "checklist" to address "Black Male Privilege."

ASU's “Project Humanities” initiative "facilitates critical conversations among diverse communities through talking, listening, and connecting" by exploring "shared ideas and experiences." The initiative lists several "initiatives," including one called "Privilege and Bias."

According to the university, the initiative "hosted 2-hour workshops that explored everyday manifestations of privilege." The page lists several different events from 2014, and says "These workshops have now evolved to be Humanity 101 in the Workplace: Lessons in Privilege and Bias."
...
Project Humanities has similar privilege checklists for able-bodied individuals, heterosexuals, thin individuals, and Christians. It also lists “pandemic” privileges, such as living in a house or having health insurance.'

Faux Feminism: Denying Positive Masculinities

Matt · 4 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I awkwardly used the leading feminist theory to discuss my findings from the first-ever account of the experiences of openly gay male athletes in high school and colleges at the turn of the millennia. Here, I found gay men accepted, on their teams, not stigmatized. I questioned how homophobic heterosexual men could be, or as hyper-masculine as gender scholars claimed, if they were unbothered by the sexuality of their teammates.

This research was followed by multiple studies showing sympathy, not antipathy, toward gay males on the part of straight males in sport. In short, I was showing that whereas homosexuality was stigmatized among adolescent males in the 1980s and 1990s, it was homophobia that was stigmatized in the new millennia.
...
Inclusive Masculinity: The Changing Nature of Masculinities, my book exploring the way modern young men really were, was a shot across the feminist bow to the stakeholders of feminist gender studies. Stuck between his kinship with me and my blasphemous results, my mentor's endorsement of the book principally described it as "hopeful," a subtle way of casting doubt onto the multiple studies that informed it.
...
I struggled to publish for a few years, until I employed a new strategy. Rather than writing an article and submitting it solely, I wrote several, saved them up, and shot-gunned them to the journals all at once. Not even the most stalwart gatekeeper had enough spare time to review five articles.

My strategy and my persistence paid off. My articles began to be reviewed not by gatekeepers, but by graduate students. They found my theory reflected their own experiences. I began to publish, both inside and outside the canon of journals from which the feminist politics of masculinity are at play. Over the next decade I produced a dozen PhD students, and dozens of further studies in multiple countries showing that young straight men had left homophobia behind. Thus, a rift in masculinity scholars was born between those wedded to an ideology that views heterosexual men with disdain and those vested in a more impartial, data-driven social-scientific study of men.'

Belarus Sign Calls For 'All Male Citizens' To Attend Enlistment Office

Matt · 5 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The digital text in Russian rolling across the screen says, "all male citizens from 18 to 60 years old must come to an enlistment office or village executive committee to clarify their data."
...
Although Belarusian authorities announced that there were no plans for mobilization, the process of military eligibility check-ups in the country began in October 2022, Liubakova told Newsweek. This entailed Belarusian men being summoned to military registration and enlistment offices via letters or phone calls.'

Man in Chicago divorce case jailed like criminal while dangerous suspects run free: lawsuit

Matt · 5 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One year ago, the governor of Illinois signed into law the SAFE-T Act, eliminating cash bail for all dangerous criminals in the state. And while the law has yet to go into effect amid suits from 65 counties, it will never apply to a former options trader. He claims in a lawsuit that he has spent the last six months in “solitary confinement” in a Cook County jail — over a divorce case.

Steve Fanady, 58, has been held on a $10 million bond for indirect civil contempt in a dispute over stock ownership, stemming from a 14-year-old divorce case, after a county judge ordered him jailed in June. He is the only long-term civil detainee in Cook County Jail.

...

According to the Fanadys and a federal lawsuit filed by Fanady himself, Fanady, who is handicapped due to two hip replacements, has been sleeping on a dining table alone in an isolated dormitory cell, infested with rats and roaches, hadn’t showered in at least 17 weeks, and has been denied basic medical and mental health care.

...

The Sheriff’s Office told the Post that it “strongly denies that Mr. Fanady was mistreated, tortured, denied appropriate medical or mental health care, or subjected to inhumane conditions while in custody. It claimed that it does not utilize solitary confinement and that Fanady was housed separate from other individuals pursuant to state law and at the request of his attorney. The Sheriff’s Office also said that Fanady had “regular contact with staff each day” and “had access to a telephone and television.

Recently, private lawyers for Cook County Sheriff Tom Dart argued in court against allowing Fanady, who has never been convicted of any crime, out of jail on electronic monitoring.'

Gender diversity on corporate boards can improve organizational performance

Mastodon · 7 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women were more prepared for board meetings and follow-up more with management. Women also asked more questions and were more likely to ask difficult questions. One of the female board member told us:

“Women are less shy about asking questions… Women are much more ready than male colleagues [for a meeting]… They read the material, they are serious and prepared and they have the capacity to have the courage of their opinions.”

Women also sought out consensus more often and thought more about other stakeholders, including employees and clients, than men did. One female board member said:

“There is a sensitivity at the level of women, they will be [more sensitive] to subjects more than men, like the concerns of employees, users of services, single-parent families.”'

Second charity refuses £10k raised for woman guilty of false rape claims

Mastodon · 8 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A second charity has decided to “politely decline” £10,000 originally raised for Eleanor Williams, who was convicted this week of perverting the course of justice by lying about being raped and trafficked.

Women’s Community Matters (WCM) in Barrow in Furness, Williams’ home town, was one of two charities that were to split £20,000 crowdfunded for Williams if she did not use it to bring her alleged abusers to justice.

Williams’ grandmother, the Cumbria county councillor Anne Burns, is a trustee of WCM. WCM offered extensive help and support to Williams when she claimed to have been sexually exploited, with her case worker called to give evidence for the prosecution at her trial.

On Friday, Rhona Teale, the chair of trustees, said: “Women’s Community Matters board of trustees met this morning to consider the offer of a donation from [the] fundraising campaign. The board unanimously concluded they would like to politely decline.”'

Moscow to mobilize 500,000 new conscripts, Kyiv military intelligence says

Matt · 8 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ukrainian intelligence officials are warning that the Kremlin plans a new mobilization wave for up to 500,000 men to fight in Ukraine starting in mid-January.

The new conscription drive, which would be larger than last autumn's Russian draft of 300,000, would include a push in big cities, including some strategic industrial centers in Russia, Andriy Cherniak, an official with the Main Military Intelligence Directorate of the Ukrainian Defense Ministry, told POLITICO on Saturday.

Russian President Vladimir Putin in December said a suggested new conscription wave would be pointless as currently only 150,000 previously mobilized soldiers have been deployed in the invasion of Ukraine. The rest are still training or serving in the Russian rear.'

Stomping on Your Husband's Balls Does Not Make Him More of a Man

Matt · 9 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to see it. Excerpt:

'The women's movement has spawned a generation of females who are running the world. They're taking over. They're telling their men what to do and they're stomping on their balls and then complaining about the fact that they're hooked up to a weak man. You can't call your dude a half-man if you're the one who castrated him in the first place. It isn't cool, and it isn't fair.
...
What I'm arguing for is this: We women want to be treated with respect. We want to be treated as equals. So we should do the same for men. Women treat men like they're children. We need to stop that. The boat has tipped far enough. Everyone deserves respect. Men. Women. Children. And if you want a man to treat you like a goddess, it would help a lot if you treat him well. Otherwise, we women are creating the boy-men who demand their toys and then complaining that they're always watching porn and never growing up. If you want a man, it doesn't hurt to treat your partner like he already is one.'

Transmaxxing: the Incel-To-Transwoman Pipeline

Matt · 10 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Dunno what to make of this article. Is it just an entire sh*tpost or is it identifying a discernible albeit marginal trend among modern young men? Disturbing in its implications in either case. Excerpt:

'Imagine you’re a depressed young man in a developed country. Maybe you work long hours for low pay, maybe you’re unemployed. When you were in school, you didn’t fit in with other boys; girls acted like you weren’t even there. You spend most of your free time playing video games and shitposting with online friends you’ve never met in real life. You rarely have sex without paying for it. You consider suicide regularly. To the left, you’re a threat: a woman-hating incel with latent violent tendencies. To the right, you’re a degenerate: a porn-addicted, weak “virgin” who struggles to impose himself on the world.

So where do you go from here? Do you ingratiate yourself with SJWs, or with the chads? Do you succumb to the temptation to commit suicide?

For some men, the solution to the despair of living as an isolated, unhappy male is straightforward: become a woman. ...'

California Legislative Women's Caucus calls for removal of Dana White as UFC president

Mastodon · 10 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The California Legislative Women's Caucus on Monday called for the removal of Dana White as UFC president in a public letter addressed to the head of the promotion's parent company.

The letter, sent to Endeavor CEO Ari Emanuel, comes after video surfaced last week of White slapping his wife, Anne, at a nightclub in Mexico on New Year's Eve.

The political women's advocacy group, which according to its website consists of 18 state senators and 33 assemblywomen, posted a copy of the letter online. The letter asks Emanuel for "the immediate removal of Mr. White as President of the UFC."
...
In the video, White, 53, can be seen saying something to Anne, at which point she slaps him in the face. White then slaps her back before the two are quickly separated.'

Texas medical schools accused of bias against white, Asian men

Mastodon · 11 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A lawsuit filed Tuesday accuses six state-run medical schools in Texas of violating federal anti-discrimination laws by giving preferences to female and non-Asian minority applicants.

The lawsuit by George Stewart, a white man who was denied admission to the schools, is the latest challenge to affirmative action policies that are commonly used by U.S. schools to boost enrollment of Black, Hispanic and female students.

...

According to the lawsuit, Stewart in 2021 obtained enrollment data for the six schools after he was denied admission.

Stewart alleged that the data revealed that Black, Hispanic and female students at the schools had significantly lower grade-point averages or test scores than white, Asian and male students. Stewart said in the complaint that the data showed that the schools gave preferences to female and non-Asian minority applicants.

Stewart accused the schools of violating federal laws prohibiting race and sex discrimination in federally funded educational programs.'

Boys are graded more harshly than girls. Why?

Mastodon · 11 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across all ages and nearly all areas of education, boys are under-performing girls.

“Girls are about a year ahead of boys in terms of reading ability in OECD nations, in contrast to a wafer-thin and shrinking advantage for boys in maths. Boys are 50 percent more likely than girls to fail at all three key school subjects: maths, reading, and science,” Richard Reeves, a senior fellow in Economic Studies and the Director of the Future of the Middle Class Initiative, wrote in his recent book Why the Modern Male is Struggling,

According to a 2018 Brookings Institution report, about 88% of American girls graduated high school on time, compared with 82% of boys. In 2020, six out of ten college students were women. Once on campus, they graduate at higher rates, receiving more associate’s, bachelor’s, master’s, and doctoral degrees in the process. As evidenced by declining college enrollment in the U.S., a drop for which men account for 71%, the gender disparity is continuing to worsen.'

Are Women Better CEOs? New ETF Bets on Female Leadership

Mastodon · 11 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hypatia Capital Management, an asset management firm focused on female leadership and investors, is placing a big bet on the success of companies led by women.

The actively managed Hypatia Women CEO ETF (WCEO), launched Monday, aims to invest at least 80% of its assets in U.S. companies that are led by a female CEO and up to 20% in companies whose executive chairperson is a female, according to the prospectus.

The ETF will also follow the Hypatia Women CEO Index, an index that tracks companies with female CEOs and market capitalizations of at least $500 million.'

Women work harder than men: An anthropological study reveals why

Mastodon · 11 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Our first finding was that women worked much harder than men, and contributed most of the fruits of this labor to their families. This was evidenced both by their own reports of how much they worked and by their activity trackers.

Women walked on average just over 12,000 steps per day, while men walked just over 9,000 steps. So men also worked hard, but less so than women. They spent more time in leisure or social activities, or just hanging around and resting.

This may be partly because women are, on average, physically weaker than men, and may thus have reduced bargaining power. But we also found that individuals (be they male or female) who disperse at marriage to live away from their kin have higher workloads than those who stay with their natal families.

So if you are female and move away from home at marriage (as most women do throughout the world), you suffer not just in terms of missing your own family but also in terms of workload. When both sexes disperse and no one lives with their natal families, both sexes work hard (as there is little help from kin)—but the woman still works harder. According to our study, perfect sex equality in workload only occurs in instances where men disperse and women do not.'

Men are 'bad in bed' and struggle to help ladies orgasm, study says

Mastodon · 11 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many women can often find it hard to reach orgasm in the bedroom.

And, according to a new survey, that's down to men.

Sex toy company Lovehoney have labelled fellas "bad in bed" – as they've found evidence that women find it much easier to have an orgasm during sex with other women compared to men.'

‘I went downhill’: man falsely accused of rape on becoming a hate figure

Mastodon · 13 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Trengove spent his 19th birthday in prison, serving 10 weeks on remand before police realised the evidence against him didn’t stack up. The girl Trengove actually had sex with on 9 March gave police a selfie she had taken in the back of the police van, while suspicion grew that far from being a particularly unlucky victim of multiple rapes, Eleanor Williams was in fact a fantasist making one false allegation after the other with the help of social media.

Not only did she create fake profiles to frame Trengove and some of her other victims, she started up explicit conversations with innocent men – on Tinder, Snapchat or the intimate photo sharing site OnlyFans, where she had an account – and renamed them in her phone so that it looked as though their penis photos and propositions were coming from those she falsely accused.

Out of jail, Trengove was a free man but an outcast in Barrow. “I was barred from everywhere. I was called a rapist, a nonce.” Within a few months he moved away. “I thought it would end but the first day we moved in I had someone shout rapist at me. It was clear then that no matter where I went, someone would always know.”'

Part 3. Intersections of America How Children Learn: C.A.R.E. and the Brain

Matt · 13 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Part 3, we explore practices to helping boys thrive in school. Successful educational approaches are overlooked at the highest levels of the educational system and in policy actions while certain smaller grassroots efforts are finding success. Thousands of schools across the country are navigating educational landscapes with limited awareness of the ways brain function impacts learning.

In order for students to find success when it comes to mastering skills, it's important to understand the cognitive awareness and cognitive readiness of students when it comes to things like decision making, behavior, and the best approaches to stimulating the brain. Cognitive awareness and cognitive readiness apply to students and teachers, who are attempting to stimulate the brains of students whose networks in connectivity are more front to back (males) or left to right (females). Understanding the brain that tends to function more in each separate hemisphere and the brain that functions across both hemispheres to a greater degree partly explains the reason boys and girls learn differently. This, of course, is not an absolute, but certainly true in the majority of boys and girls.'

NHL Reverses Course After DeSantis Admin Warns About ‘Discrimination’ Event Permitting Only Non-Whites, Non-Males

Mastodon · 14 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After Gov. Ron DeSantis’ office issued a warning Friday for the National Hockey League’s advertisement in Fort Lauderdale for “discrimination,” the NHL reversed course.

The NHL will reportedly now open its job fair to all individuals ages 18 and older after previously limiting it to certain genders and ethnicities, Fox News Digital first reported.

In a now-deleted job fair post on LinkedIn, the NHL had said it was only permitting those who meet the following qualifications:

Participants must be 18 years of age or older, based in the U.S., and identify as female, Black, Asian/Pacific Islander, Hispanic/Latino, Indigenous, LGBTQIA+, and/or a person with a disability. Veterans are also welcome and encouraged to attend.

In a statement to Fox News Digital, the NHL said the “original wording of the LinkedIn post associated with the event was not accurate.”'

Aus: Victims of sexual assault in NSW can now report their experience online

Matt · 14 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Anonymous sex assault reporting to police: What could possibly go wrong? Excerpt:

'Police are hoping to see an increase in reports of sexual assault following the launch of a new reporting tool that enables victims to record their experiences and provide information to police via an anonymous online portal.

The Sexual Assault Reporting Option, also known as SARO, allows victims to report a sexual assault without any obligation to participate in further lines of inquiry.

While the anonymous option has been in place since 2012, the new online version was unveiled in 12 languages on Friday, making it more accessible to victims.

The new system, accessed through a community portal on the NSW Police website, replaces the old process that required victims to download, print out and complete 14-page document, then email it back to the State Crime Command's sex crimes squad.'

Women need more sleep because fighting the patriarchy is exhausting

Mastodon · 16 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Its title alone is intriguing enough to encourage the public to check out what this exhibition is about. Women Need More Sleep Because Fighting the Patriarchy is Exhausting is what the new showcase at Common Room, Prozak is called and it features the work, experiences and thoughts of four local women.

...

The visual arts exhibition will host a series of parallel events that invite women and men, occasionally only women, to discuss, reflect and share their views and experiences. Saturday is the first parallel activity and it is an open discussion at 7pm between four women from different professional backgrounds. The 12 Feats of a Working Women talk will address the challenges and obstacles these women face, moderated by Katerina Gennari.'

'I was out of the country and I'm not physically capable - but a rape allegation is ruining my life'

Mastodon · 16 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former military police officer claims he has been driven to the brink of taking his own life after being falsely accused of rape three times. Paul Nugent, 59, from Heywood, has made official complaints to Greater Manchester Police's Professional Standards Branch over what he claims is Rochdale division's failure to bring charges against his accuser for making the allegation and, he says, 'ignoring' evidence which would have established his innocence.

GMP spokesperson said the force has received 'nine contacts' from Mr Nugent, some of which were 'repeats' of previously reported complaints or appeals, and that the majority have now been closed with no misconduct found.
...
Instead, he says, he has spent 50 hours in police custody as a result of the accusation, and has battled for two years to clear his name amid the 'stigma' of being a rape suspect. Mr Nugent claims he told police about medical evidence which showed he suffers from Peyronies Disease, which he says renders him physically incapable of rape, but that officers ignored the evidence.'

UK: Charities hail domestic abuse campaign for shift from victim to perpetrator focus

Mastodon · 16 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chair of the Scottish Women's Convention and long-time women's rights advocate Agnes Tolmie praised the fresh approach.

She said: "This advert by Police Scotland is to be welcomed. Whilst women have to be aware of male controlling behaviour, this advert has put the responsibility for it firmly at the door of men.

"For too long, women have had to endure not only the problems of controlling behaviours of men, but have had to try and resolve it on their own. It's time men joined in to tackle this destructive behaviour.'

Connecticut Law Would Axe Fitness Requirements for Female Firefighters

Mastodon · 19 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Connecticut Democrats are working to lower the physical fitness requirements for female firefighters, saying that less onerous standards will make fire departments "more diverse."

A law introduced earlier this month in the Connecticut State Assembly would let women skip the Candidate Physical Ability Test, a timed gauntlet used by fire departments across the country. The test, which only 10 to 15 percent of women pass, requires candidates to complete intense physical tasks while wearing a 50 pound vest. It's designed to simulate the experience of navigating a fire in heavy gear—and to weed out those unable to do so.

The law, introduced by five Democratic lawmakers, would offer women an alternative test based on "revised physical standards," with the goal of ensuring that "additional female candidates" qualify for firefighter positions, text from the bill states.'

The Only Private Club for Women Executives Just Opened in SF

Mastodon · 20 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The organization's popularity speaks to the critical void the club is filling by creating a support network for women senior executives, striking at the heart of how complicated it can be to work as a female leader.

"It's lonely at the top, and it only gets lonelier as a woman," said Kaplan, who now works as the organization's chief brand officer.

The membership numbers around 20,000 and includes women with C-suite credentials in a broad range of industries—from NASA to Nike and Harvard to Walmart.

The organization is not only diverse in terms of industry—35% of Chief members identify as BIPOC, which is nearly double the number of women of color in executive leadership overall. Chief also welcomes people who identify as trans or nonbinary.'

Male menopause: The silent epidemic

Matt · 20 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now doctors want to draw attention to a 'silent epidemic' that affects men with extremely low testosterone levels — the male menopause.

Like with women, the term is used to describe the period in an adult man's life when his hormone levels crash, causing a host of symptoms that shatter sufferers' confidence or are outright debilitating — including erectile dysfunction, depression, anxiety and rapid fat gain.

...

Dr Bob Berookhim, a urologist in New York City and the Director of Male Fertility and Microsurgery at Lenox Hill Hospital, told DailyMail.com: 'In men, declining testosterone levels tend to occur more slowly and can present at any age, and most men are less likely to present with a sudden onset of low testosterone symptoms.

'I think the name hurts the chances for men to come in for care. The term may be considered emasculating to some, and these symptoms are often and uncomfortable for men to talk about at baseline.

'That being said, when patients do come in and I've diagnosed them I call it "Manopause" to get a smile out of them!"

UK unions call in cancer expert over fears of asbestos risk to female teachers

Mastodon · 21 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The threat of asbestos-related cancer to female teachers is to be examined after possible signs of an elevated risk of fatal illness.

Trade unions are to work with one of the country's leading cancer experts on a study of the exposure women in their late-40s to mid-60s may have had to the material inside school buildings. It comes after researchers detected a possible increase in mesothelioma deaths among the group that could be statistically significant.

Official data has already shown that female former teachers born from 1935 to 1954, working when asbestos was still being installed in schools, have a 40% increased rate of mesothelioma, a cancer related to asbestos exposure that affects the lining of lungs. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) reported more than 5,000 asbestos-related deaths in 2019 across the population as a whole, including from cancers like mesothelioma.'

Australia: Grants to strengthen women in STEM careers

Mastodon · 21 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Australian Government has announced $15.9 million in new grants for 17 successful projects that are supporting more women to study and build careers in science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM).

This latest round of Women in STEM and Entrepreneurship (WiSE) grants provide between $500,000 and $1 million to expand successful projects that have increased awareness of STEM education and improved opportunities for girls or women to build skills and succeed in STEM careers.

Minister for Industry and Science Ed Husic said the Albanese Government is committed to supporting more women into STEM careers, and to encouraging girls to study STEM subjects.

“We want to make sure that more women find lasting, rewarding and successful careers in STEM fields, regardless of their background,” Minister Husic said.'

OK Lawmaker files ‘Save Men’s Sports Act’

Mastodon · 21 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week an Oklahoma lawmaker filed the “Save Men’s Sports Act.”

“Unfortunately, a lot of these sports events are being used as political activism, and it’s very disruptive to the classroom. It’s very disruptive to the sports program,” said State Sen. Shane Jett, R-Shawnee. “Keep your culture wars outside of the classroom.”

Senate Bill 1007 states, “Athletic teams designated for ‘males’, ‘men’, or ‘boys’ shall not be open to students of the female sex.”

The measure comes about a year after Governor Kevin Stitt signed the “Save Women’s Sports Act” into law, barring anyone born a male from competing on a women’s sports team.'

A terrible loss for women, and another win for toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 22 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ardern's departure is a sore loss for women and girls who had taken heart from seeing a woman run a country with agility, intelligence and humanity, her ethics intact after five-and-a-half years in the job.

It is a terrible blow to women's rights at a time when the backlash against feminism — no, make that against women — has been brutal and will get worse. Women should never underestimate how much they are hated. Every week, rage and violence against women has been rising like sea levels. Toxic masculinity reigns.'

Circumcision linked to ACEs and violent households, says new study

DanBollinger · 23 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children from dysfunctional households experience a proportionally greater number of adverse experiences than other children. One such common event is male child genital cutting, or circumcision. This study surveyed five-hundred randomly selected circumcised and intact men concerning their experiences before 18 years of age using the 10-item Adverse Childhood Experiences checklist (ACE). The cumulative scores for men with circumcised penises (2.83) were higher on average compared to those for men with intact penises (2.44). In this cohort, male child genital cutting was more common in dysfunctional, violent households.'

California's First Lady Produces 'Gender Justice' Films, Sells to State Public Schools

Mastodon · 23 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California Governor Gavin Newsom and his wife, "First Partner" Jennifer Siebel Newsom, have quite a money-making scheme going on: "He runs the state and she's a nonprofit founder, entrepreneur, and filmmaker," Open the Books reports.

"While her husband attends to state business, Siebel Newsom engages in her passion: advancing 'gender justice' through her charitable nonprofit The Representation Project. According to tax documents the organization is 'committed to building a thriving and inclusive society through films, education, and social activism.'"

Jennifer Siebel Newsom solicited state vendors and the governor's campaign donors for large gifts to her charity, The Representation Project.

Siebel Newsom, through her non-profit The Representation Project, has released four films advocating gender justice. The films are leased for screenings to individuals, corporations, and schools, and come with their own lesson plans. Schools spend between $49-$599 to screen these movies to children.'

Education in the spotlight as watchdog warns of sexist ‘backlash’ sweeping France

Mastodon · 25 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'France’s equality watchdog has called for an “emergency plan” to combat widespread sexism that is affecting youths in particular, amid concern that the country’s education system is failing to foster gender equality from a young and vulnerable age. While online exposure to pornography is cause for particular alarm, experts say the sexist “backlash” is also evidence that feminist themes have made important inroads, stirring vibrant – if often acrimonious – debates.

Five years into the #MeToo movement, and almost six years after President Emmanuel Macron declared gender equality the “Grand Cause” of his first mandate, France’s main equality watchdog has offered a scathing assessment of the country’s progress on the matter.

According to the High Council for Equality between Women and Men (HCE), sexism is far from retreating in France. In fact, some of its most violent manifestations are getting worse, the council warned in its annual report this week, noting that French society remains “highly sexist at every level” and that “younger generations are the most affected”.'

To resolve Title IX complaint, Northwood University to open women-only awards, scholarships to all

Mastodon · 25 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A settlement between Northwood University and the U.S. Department of Education Office of Civil Rights will end an award program currently limited to women, as well as a woman-only scholarship program. Men will no longer be excluded.

The resolution of the Title IX case will bring changes to an award program that dates back to 1970, predating the Title IX law of 1972.

As a result of the settlement, Northwood University faces a Jan. 30 deadline to make its Distinguished Women Award and Distinguished Women Endowed Scholarship open to all people, regardless of sex. By Feb. 13, it must send updated promotional materials to the Office of Civil Rights, to prove compliance.

Both the award and the scholarships will be made “open to all eligible persons, regardless of sex,” per the settlement, which was signed by Northwood on Jan. 23.'

UK menopause law change rejected as it ‘could discriminate against men’

Mastodon · 26 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Proposals to change UK legislation to protect the rights of women experiencing menopause have been in part rejected by the government due to fears such a move would discriminate against men.

The cross-party women and equalities committee last July published a report focusing on menopause and the workplace, which included a recommendation to make menopause a “protected characteristic” under the Equality Act.

Protected characteristics are a specific set of characteristics that it is illegal to discriminate against, and include age, disability and race among others.

But in its official response to the report, published on Tuesday, the government rejected the proposal, warning of “unintended consequences which may inadvertently create new forms of discrimination, for example, discrimination risks towards men suffering from long-term medical conditions”.'

Why I worry about my sons' maturity, not their masculinity

Mastodon · 28 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There seems to be broad agreement across the political spectrum that America has a masculinity problem. For many on the left, men who do not profess sufficiently progressive politics are presumptively "toxic." For many in the center and on the right, the educational system's ostensible war on boys and the cultural left's alleged attack on that so-called "toxic masculinity" are in part to blame for the purposelessness and malaise currently afflicting so many males.

While it's true that many American boys and men today are struggling (doing less well than girls in school; failing to launch careers or start families; and succumbing to alarming rates of depression, anxiety, drug addiction and suicide), this crisis is not actually about the partial rebranding of masculinity as toxic.

It is, in fact, about the total rebranding of adulthood as offensive.

The zeitgeist at present is best understood as society-wide infantilization. We defer to subjective fantasy even when it collides with objective reality. We privilege identity over biology, narrative over fact and feeling over virtue.

This rejection of maturity disproportionately impacts boys and men such that the current "masculinity crisis" appears to exist for two related reasons.'

You asked: How was Scott Yenor able to speak at Eagle High School?

Mastodon · 28 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students from Eagle High School pushed back at guest speaker Boise State Professor Scott Yenor during their Thursday school lunch hour for talking about "the effect that feminism has had on our society."

Yenor is a controversial figure in the Treasure Valley -- he has previously received criticism for calling women, "more medicated, meddlesome, and quarrelsome" than they "need to be" and saying "more successful men will mean more happy citizenry and a stronger nation." Yenor said, during a National Conservatism Conference in Orlando, Florida, in 2021 -- that society needs to prepare women to become mothers, not to want careers.

Yenor, a political science professor, also consistently retweets far-right blogs criticizing LGBTQ+ people, women and sex education.

Yenor was invited by the TurningPointUSA group formed by students at Eagle High School on Thursday to speak about feminism during their lunch hour. TurningPoint USA is an organization founded by Charlie Kirk that encourages conservative activism among younger generations. Their website includes anti-trans rhetoric, among other articles about "leftist hypocrisy" and how the "LGBTQ Nation is coming for our children."'

Google exec fired after female boss groped him at drunken bash, suit says

Matt · 28 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Google executive claims he was booted by the tech giant for rejecting a high-ranking female boss' grabby advances at a posh company dinner.

Ryan Olohan, 48, accuses Google and one of its top executives, Tiffany Miller, of firing him after Miller groped him at a Chelsea restaurant in December 2019 and told him she knew he liked Asian women — which Miller is, according to a blockbuster federal lawsuit filed Nov. 30 in Manhattan.
...
The HR rep "openly admitted … that if the complaint was 'in reverse' — a female accusing a white male of harassment — the complaint would certainly be escalated," according to the lawsuit. x

Olohan claims Miller began retaliating against him after he made the complaint by criticizing him and reporting him to human resources for "microaggressions," although the complaint does not specify what Miller accused him of.'

Haverford College Senior Sues School Over What He Says Was a False Rape Rumor

Mastodon · 28 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A senior at the Main Line's prestigious Haverford College is suing the school after he says he was the target of a false rape rumor on campus.

The student, who has filed the lawsuit in Philadelphia's federal court under the pseudonym John Doe, says his problems at Haverford College began in February 2022, when he was a junior. According to the lawsuit, that is when a "false and vicious rumor" began to circulate on campus that he had raped a female student. He claims he never had any physical contact with the student in question.

The rumor spread on social media among students and in the tight-knit group of players on one of Haverford College's varsity sports teams, where the accused was co-captain. He alleges that other players on the team, including another co-captain, took the rumor to the coach in an effort to get him kicked off of the team. The other captains of the team soon confronted him directly with the accusation but, says the suit, "They provided no specificity whatsoever with regard to the identity of the purported victim, the date, the timeframe, the place, the context, or any other detail" about the alleged assault, which he denied to them. The players later told him in writing that they didn't want him on the team.'

New feminist chemistry class teaches that science is racist

Mastodon · 29 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent article published in the Journal of Chemical Education describes the development of a Feminism and Science course at East Carolina University (ECU) that was offered at the university. The course, the authors argue, should serve as a "model" for other educators to learn from, "present[ing] this work as an example of a transformative pedagogical model to dismantle White supremacy in Chemistry."

The article, titled “A Special Topic Class in Chemistry on Feminism and Science as a Tool to Disrupt the Dysconcious Racism in STEM," argues for a pedagogical framework based on “Critical Race Theory and intersectional feminism."

One of their goals “was to shine light, through this process, [on] how scientific epistemology and culture have strong links with capitalism, enslavement, colonization, and exploitation of female-bodied folks.”

Students also learned the definitions of terms such as diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) and systemic racism.'

Debunking The Narrative: 7 Ways Women Are Actually Doing Better Than Men Right Now In Our Society

Mastodon · 29 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'1. Women Excel in Education

2. Women Live Longer and Are Healthier

3. 20-Something Women Outearn Their Male Counterparts

4. Women Are Less Likely to Commit a Crime—and Have a Crime Committed Against Them

5. Women Suffer Less from Drug Addiction and Suicide

6. Women Make the Majority of the Financial Decisions

7. Women Rarely Die on the Job

Women are also favored by mainstream culture. Most of the films and TV shows are geared toward women, our culture encourages women to engage in degenerate behavior (having an OnlyFans account, participating in porn, having multiple sexual partners) while chastising men for simply being masculine. Couple that with all of the above statistics, and it's clear to see that our society caters mostly to women. Men are actually the ones who need help, and if we want to secure a bright future for our country, we need to start paying attention to what men need rather than continuously pushing a victimhood narrative that paints women as oppressed.'

Dad's six-month turmoil after 'false rape allegations' made in bitter custody battle

Mastodon · 29 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A dad who says he was falsely accused of raping his ex-partner during a child custody battle feels he is a 'victim in a broken system'.

The man, who asked to remain nameless, has told of the "most difficult six months of his life" after he was arrested and investigated on suspicion of rape and assault. He says his entire life was turned upside down and fears the stress could have tragic consequences for others in a similar position.

His current partner, who has been with him throughout the bitter custody battle, was called to her local police station and informed of the allegations, which she was already aware of, under Clare's Law. Also known as the Domestic Violence Disclosure Scheme (DVDS), it allows anyone to ask police about a partner - this can also be done by a member of the public who can ask about a close friend or family member's partner.'

‘Some of the more extreme expressions of feminism have been harmful both to women and to men,’ says Bishop Doran

Mastodon · 30 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Catholic Bishop of Elphin, Dr Kevin Doran, has questioned if “toxic masculinity” is linked to “aggressive feminism” as he called for “gentleness” between the sexes.

In his homily on Sunday, the Sligo-based prelate suggested that “some of the more extreme expressions of feminism have been harmful both to women and to men.”

Toxic masculinity, Dr Doran said, meant that characteristics which are traditionally associated with masculinity, “good things like strength and courage and honour, can sometimes become distorted and exaggerated in such a way that young men feel that it is ok to be violent and rude and to treat women disrespectfully”.
...
Asking what caused toxic masculinity, he stated, “I may be wrong, but I wonder if ‘toxic masculinity’ might be, in some way related to aggressive feminism, like two sides of the same coin.”'

Left's equity push has 'deeply demoralized' men and the consequences are 'huge': Douglas Murray

Mastodon · 30 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DOUGLAS MURRAY: Even the left is starting to concede there's a problem with young men in particular. Their way of doing it is to say, 'it's more complex than these right-wingers are saying.' It is quite complex, and it's also quite straightforward. Young men, particularly in America, have been for a generation now deeply demoralized… They have grown up in this culture which everyone from politicians to Gillette and major firms have said, ‘Men are the problem. Masculinity is the problem. That nothing will be right in America or equal until absolutely everything is fair between the sexes.' And the problem that they always encounter with this is there are certain high-profile professions which women have been underrepresented in and minorities have been underrepresented. And the answer to this is not a zero-sum game…

College removes photos of white males from entrance to prove commitment to diversity

Mastodon · 31 January 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Texas A&M's School of Medicine removed photos of graduating seniors who are white males, which were prominently displayed at the entrance of the school, as an example of the university's commitment to diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI).

The school indicated such in a survey completed last year for the Association of American Medical Colleges, a nonprofit accrediting organization. The survey responses, which touted the school's commitment to DEI, were obtained via a Freedom of Information Act request by the medical watchdog group Do No Harm, which passed along the completed survey to The National Desk (TND).

In the survey, the school cited the fact that it removed "predominantly white male photos of graduating class prominently displayed on the entrance" as an example of promoting inclusive communications and branding.

The survey detailed other institutional commitments to DEI that the school has made, including DEI trainings for faculty, the creation of a "holistic admissions program," and salary reviews based on "diversity."

When reached for comment a spokesperson for Texas A&M expressed regret about how the survey response, "unintentionally did not provide the appropriate level of context."'

Is there a place in the American heart for the white male?

Matt · 1 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Identity politics plays a critical role in the way the left and the right address social issues, and it has seemed more amplified than usual, even as data is telling us to slow down and take a more in depth look.

Mentioning the challenges of white males in America must make some people cringe until you learn over 305,000 white males committed suicide from 2010 to 2020, more than 190,000 have died from alcohol induced causes unrelated to suicide, another 264,000 have died from accidental poisoning and exposure to noxious substances, according to data from the Centers for Disease Control's Wonder Database. And the list goes on.

Although some legislators are sympathetic, most know a narrative that addresses white males as part of a larger discussion on boys and men is unpopular and unlikely to gain traction in the mainstream media, educational institutions, and with policymakers.

White males are only second to Native American/Alaska Native males when it comes to suicide deaths per 100,000. White males and Native American/Alaska Natives are 2.7 to 2.9 times as likely as black males and Hispanic males to commit suicide and nearly 12x to 13x as likely as black females.'

The media only celebrates masculinity when feminized like 'The Rock in a tutu': Dr. Phil guest

Mastodon · 1 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Author Rollo Tomassi talked to Dr. Phil on Friday about how an entire generation of young men or "lost boys" are neglected and demonized for being males.

Dr. Phil's recent episode titled "The Demise of Guys" discussed how young men in America are facing an existential crisis of what it means to be a man, with many seeking masculine self-help gurus online. Debate raged over what constitutes "toxic masculinity" and what qualifies as demonizing masculinity itself.

Dr. Phil asked Tomassi about past statements, "What do you mean when you say media celebrates masculinity as equally acting feminine?"

"That's the only time that the mainstream media will ever celebrate masculinity is when you see The Rock in a tutu," Tomassi responded. "Whenever you see men behaving conventionally feminine, that's when the media decides to celebrate them. But yet when a guy is acting in a conventionally masculine way, we do not celebrate that, they find some way to demonize that."'

RAF chief admits mistakes over 'discrimination' against white men

Mastodon · 1 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Air Chief Marshal Sir Mike Wigston, appearing before a committee of MPs on Wednesday for the first time since the scandal broke last year, said it had been wrong for "stretching aspirational" goals - that he set to improve diversity in the RAF - to end up as "unattainable" recruitment targets for his recruitment teams.

"That put intolerable stress on them and that was a failing of the organisation - where an aspirational goal becomes an individual's target," he said.'

The Future of Hogan Lovells—and Maybe Big Law—Is Female

Mastodon · 1 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I find most of Big Law's efforts promoting gender equality to be lame, but Hogan Lovells' new partnership class got my attention: It is 58% women.

What's thrilling is that women at Hogan not only beat the odds—the 2,800-lawyer firm only made 38 partners—but also came up on top. It sure is nice to see more firms announcing new partnership classes that are close to 50% women. But it's much more satisfying when women cream men at their game.

...

For women, it's also critical to support them when they are mid-level associates, a time when many leave. "The important thing is making sure they're engaged in the work, that at the mid-level point they can see a path," Shaw said.

And to keep the partnership pipeline pumped with women and diverse candidates, Hogan has a program called "Momentum" that provides training and support for senior associates who show promise for partnership. "Our DEI provides the support to ensure that there's stickiness to keep them," Shaw said.'

Australia: "Police arrest hundreds in new war on domestic violence"

Minuteman · 2 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

"Sometimes, the only thing a predator understands is a bigger predator". More proof that if you're a normal heterosexual male, ozzie cops aren't your friends (and why it will take them 40 minutes to respond if someone is breaking into your home). Video here. Description:

'Hundreds of alleged domestic violence offenders have been arrested in sweeping raids across New South Wales. The multi-agency Operation Amarok One, with officers from every police district in the state and specialised domestic violence teams, ran from last Tuesday to Friday. A Current Affair's Simon Bouda got a look inside the operation. (Broadcast 31 Jan, 2023)

If you or someone you know is impacted by sexual assault, domestic or family violence, call...'

Journalists reject objectivity as an 'outmoded,' 'failed concept:' 'World view of middle-aged white men'

Mastodon · 3 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new report featured dozens of journalists and media experts who widely reject the concept of "objectivity," which was once a longstanding principle in the news industry.

The lengthy piece, titled "Beyond Objectivity," published last week by Arizona State University's Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Mass Communication put a spotlight on what it deems a "generational shift" when it comes to objectivity.

"[W]hen misunderstood, journalistic ‘objectivity’ or ‘balance’ can lead to so-called ‘bothsides-ism’ – a dangerous trap when covering issues like climate change or the intensifying assault on democracy," co-authors Leonard Downie Jr. and Andrew Heyward wrote in the report's introduction.
...
"If the term objectivity means the world view of middle-aged white men, it has become attacked as a word that is used to keep the status quo," Buzbee said.'

Progressivism, at war with masculinity

Mastodon · 3 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The cultural battle is fundamental for the left, and that's why it's been very concerned lately about the recent rise of all kinds of thinkers, creators, and influencers who reclaim the concept of masculinity.

Jordan Peterson —from academia— and Andrew Tate —from gyms and social media— are perhaps the two perfect examples to demonstrate how much this male reaction to the insistent Marxist gender ideology of recent years encompasses.

The left is aware of the danger of reinforcing the classic concept of masculinity that goes against the Marxist New —deconstructed— Man. That is why, in the cultural battle, they are working hard to destroy the likes of Jordan Peterson and Andrew Tate.'

The Tragic Disconnect Between Men And Women – No Sex, No Babies, Lots Of Loneliness, Shrinking Populations

Mastodon · 3 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The news is full of seemingly disparate themes that urgently need connecting. The first is the nerdy macro-economics of demographics. China is shrinking for the first time in 60 years. South Korea's birthrate is plummeting towards levels never seen before while that of the US is at a hundred-year low. The second strand is the toxic masculinity seeping across the planet, from the Tates and the Trumps, to the beleaguered backlash from women-repressing regimes in Iran and Afghanistan, and the general rise of gender-based violence across the world. The third is the crescendo of mental health and loneliness among the young. What's the connection between demographics, toxic masculinity and epidemic levels of loneliness? Women.

The link between the three is the rising independence of women -personally, professionally and politically - and the lack of a parallel rise in inspiring leaders and pathways for young men. If we can't balance opportunity – and connection – between men and women, it's not just our couples that will suffer, but also our countries and collective destinies.'

UK: Online misogyny set to be outlawed

Mastodon · 3 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Misogynistic abuse should be banned online, the Government believes.

Michelle Donelan, the Culture Secretary, is understood to believe the Online Safety Bill has the power to stamp out attacks on women on the internet.

The plans to crack down on online misogyny come as leading Tory peers including Baroness Morgan, a former culture secretary, are pushing for the law to go further to include a legally-enforced code of practice requiring social media firms to prevent online violence and abuse against women and girls.

Under the new Online Safety Bill, which is currently being finalised, social media firms will be required by law to abide by their terms and conditions, which generally bar misogynistic abuse.

Failure to enforce the terms and conditions will result in fines, and their services could be blocked by Ofcom, the online watchdog.

Further measures require big social media platforms to provide users with optional online tools that would allow women to screen out misogynistic abuse.

However, a group of Tory peers including Baroness Morgan, Baroness Bertin, a former aide to David Cameron, and Baroness Newlove, a former victims' commissioner, plan to put forward an amendment that would see the law go further.

It would give Ofcom the power to fine social media companies up to 10 per cent of their global turnover if they failed to abide by a code outlawing online misogyny.'

I heard my son make a sexist comment, so I canceled his birthday

Mastodon · 3 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A furious mom overheard her teenage son make a sexist comment in front of his friends – and has decided to punish him in a controversial way.

His birthday party was coming up, so she thought it would be the perfect occasion to teach him a lesson.

Without a second thought, she canceled it. But when she posted about the incident in an online parenting forum, the internet encouraged her to reconsider her decision, telling her it was “overkill.”
...
“They’re asking him about his bisexuality, things like when did he come out, when did he first date a guy, what were the differences between guys and girls,” the mom continued.
...
Eventually, they asked him what his preference is and he said, “Naturally, I don’t have a preference. I’m attracted to guys and girls the same, but after dating girls and guys, I can say women aren’t worth the trouble.”'

Reporter Posts Private Email From Candace Owens Threatening Him With Sexual Innuendo Over Negative Story

Mastodon · 4 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A prominent reporter said Candace Owens threatened him with sexual innuendo over a 2016 story that cast her as a conspiracy theorist.

Writer and author Jesse Singal said on Twitter that after he penned a New York magazine piece about Owens in 2016, she reached out to Singal and his editor at the time, then-New York editor Adam Moss, to claim she did not “feel safe” and threaten him with baseless allegations of sexual misconduct.'

Trending in the markets: ETFs led by women, focused on women

Matt · 5 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Because nothing says "profitable" more than the sex of the head of the company! Excerpt:

'Empowering women to thrive in leadership positions continues to be at the forefront of American businesses. This trend continues to expand to all facets of the U.S. economy, including investing and asset management.

One standout is Hypatia Capital, which has been focused on investing in women in leadership since 2007. At the helm is Patricia Lizarraga, managing partner of Hypatia Capital, based in New York. According to Lizarraga, the naming of the firm is based on a trailblazing female.

...

"WCEO is, as far as we know, the only ETF investing in women CEOs as an investment strategy, and specifically isolating the Female Factor: 118 holdings include all publicly traded American companies with a female CEO, small to mega-cap. Industry neutral, equally weighted," Lizarraga tells FOX Business.'

'Toxic masculinity' fear, media portrayal as 'fools' contributing to men leaving workforce: Mikhaila Peterson

Matt · 5 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Host of the "The Mikhaila Peterson Podcast" and daughter of Jordan Peterson, Mikhaila Peterson, joined "Fox & Friends Weekend" on Saturday morning to share the factors contributing to the decline in men participating in the workforce. Peterson stressed that the media's portrayal of men, and the relationship between men and women play a role in the decline.

According to a Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) report, over 7 million men, ages 25 to 54, have left the workforce in 2022.

"I think there's a number of reasons," she said. "I think the increase in mental illness plays a role. So 50% of people will be diagnosed with a mental illness at some point in their lifetime, and that's going to contribute to men dropping out of the workforce."'

Don Gale: For better government, Utah should elect more women

Mastodon · 6 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Utah voters should elect more women to the Legislature and other government positions – not to achieve some sort of gender equality but because women would surely do a better job of serving the state and its citizens. Consider what has happened already at a Utah Legislature dominated by self-serving males.
...
Surely, female legislators would be more concerned about the wishes of their constituents.
...
Surely, thoughtful women would care more about the democratic future of the state and its residents.
...
Surely, women would be more considerate about troubled young people and their need for identity.
...
In response, voters must vote for lawmakers who care about their constituents, who believe in democracy, who have compassion for youth, and who are well-informed about issues.

That means voters must elect more women.'

Toxic masculinity fuels dangerous driving like drink, French advert says

Mastodon · 11 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A road safety awareness campaign in France is tackling the role of gendered behaviour behind the wheel, warning for the first time that toxic masculinity could be as important a contributing factor to road deaths as speed, alcohol, drugs and fatigue.

The campaign's video – released for the web, TV cinemas on Wednesday – shows men at the births of their sons and seeks to portray them as thoughtful and sensitive in contrast with the revved-up virility of macho stereotypes.

"Speed, alcohol, drugs, fatigue … what if we need to add masculinity?" asked the French road safety body of the list of factors that typically lead to road accidents.'

Why MeToo fallout is wrecking the lives of schoolboys

Mastodon · 11 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys are being damaged by “an excessive cultural shift” against them triggered by the #MeToo and Everyone’s Invited movements that has left many lost, insecure and traumatised, according to top child experts.

Julie Lynn-Evans, a psychotherapist with 35 years’ experience, says the two movements involving girls and women speaking out about sexual harassment have led to a “dangerous” backlash against boys. Many have done nothing wrong.

While her clients during lockdown were mostly teenage girls with eating disorders, or who were self-harming, they are now “exclusively” boys who have been ostracised, punished or even expelled for behaviour that she describes as little more than clumsy “teenage fumbling”.'

The Navy Quietly Reshuffled The Super Bowl Flyover Team To All-Female Aviators

Mastodon · 12 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Navy quietly ditched a team of aviators scheduled to conduct a traditional flyover before Super Bowl LVII and replaced it with a group of all female aviators, Military.com reported Friday.

A final roster first announced Thursday on Good Morning America featured 11 female pilots and flight officers out of a total of 16 aviators, seven of which are scheduled to perform the spectacle kicking off Sunday's big game, according to Military.com. However, the original group of 15 flight officers featured three women, according to a press release dated Jan. 27, and were presented as a commemoration of 50 years of female participation in the Navy's aviation program.

...

The initial announcement, still reflected in some social media posts, shows a small number of comments deriding the apparent lack of women in a lineup that was supposed to honor female Navy aviators. Most of the initial social media posts have since been deleted, according to Military.com.'

Our boys are terrorised by false sex claims

Mastodon · 13 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thank you for raising the issue of boys being anonymously accused of sexual offences ("Boys 'branded sex predators for clumsy teenage fumbles'", News, last week). At 14, our son was accused of sexually assaulting girls at his school. He was temporarily excluded, threatened with expulsion and reported to the child protection services and the police. The names of his accusers and the details of their claims were withheld, making it impossible for him to defend himself.'

Rep. Sherrill Introduces Legislation to Improve Women's Heart Health Outcomes

Mastodon · 15 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Representative Mikie Sherrill (NJ-11) introduced the Heart Health Enhancement through Access to Research and Training (HEART) Act, legislation to expand our knowledge of cardiovascular health to better diagnose, prevent, and treat illnesses in women and ensure women's health needs are not overlooked. Heart disease and stroke are the leading causes of death for women in the United States, disproportionately affecting women of color.
...

"Our medical system needs to rethink its approach to heart disease and women's healthcare at large, from the manifestation of symptoms to pain management and treatment," said Rep. Sherrill. "Failing to recognize the prevalence and presentation of heart disease in women and the different symptoms women can experience during a heart attack leads to poor care and in the worst-case scenario preventable death. Women in NJ-11 and across the country deserve the best possible healthcare and with this legislation, doctors and healthcare professionals will be better equipped to provide it."'

Stanford denies ethics probe into female law professor accused of extreme anti-male bias

Mastodon · 15 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stanford University will not open a Title IX and ethics investigation into law Professor Michele Dauber despite a list of allegations that allege to show her repeated bias against males.

On Jan. 1, a complaint was filed against Dauber citing numerous incidents meant to prompt a probe, including the professor's denouncement of Johnny Depp's attorney Camille Vasquez.

The Stanford law professor called Vasquez on Twitter a "Pick Me Girl" and accused Vasquez of throwing all women "under the bus" for defending the actor against sexual assault allegations.

The complaint also cites tweets in which "Dauber also made lurid death threats against Johnny Depp, fantasizing about Depp's murder – and his corpse being devoured by rats."

The complaint also alleges Dauber issued "a veiled threat" against a male student online, supposedly implying Dauber "would press false sexual violence charges against him."

An online petition launched in 2022 that has more than 11,000 signatures also alleges the Stanford law professor "has abused her academic standing to threaten students with purported false sexual assault allegations."'

Former Ohio State football player Amir Riep of Colerain found not guilty of rape by a jury

Mastodon · 16 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Franklin County jury on Thursday found two former Ohio State University football players not guilty of raping a female student in 2020 at a Northwest Side apartment. Amir I. Riep and Jahsen L. Wint, both 24, were defensive players for the football team when a then-19-year-old woman in her freshman year at Ohio State accused them of raping her on Feb. 4, 2020.

The jury found them not guilty on all charges: two counts each of rape and one count each of kidnapping.

Riep and Wint broke down crying and embraced after the jury verdict was read.

Defense attorneys Dan Sabol and Sam Shamansky, who represented Riep and Wint, respectively, argued during the trial that the woman had consensual sex with both men but regretted it afterward, and accused the victim's father of pushing his daughter and authorities to pursue criminal charges.'

Court Awards Cristiano Ronaldo $300k As Compensation Over False Rape Case

Mastodon · 16 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Portuguese superstar footballer Cristiano Ronaldo was on Tuesday reimbursed over $300,000 for legal fees he spent while defending himself in a federal civil case alleging he had raped a woman in a Las Vegas hotel room in 2009.

The case was dismissed in June, after the judge found that the plaintiff's lawyer engaged in misconduct so severe that it would be impossible for Ronaldo to have a fair trial.

US District Judge Jennifer Dorsey ruled the attorney representing the accuser Kathryn Mayorga, Leslie Stovall, pay Ronaldo $334,637.50. The court found Stovall owed the money after the attorney was judged to have harmed the footballer through "bad-faith lawyering."'

‘Rich, white, anti-housing men’: Los Gatos planning commissioner censured for ‘divisive language’

Mastodon · 18 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Los Gatos Town Council censured a planning commissioner for using “divisive language” in a letter to the state, in which she said “rich, white, anti-housing men” organized the referendum on the town’s plan for future growth.

Council voted unanimously Feb. 15 to censure Commissioner Kylie Clark, an action that serves as a formal disapproval of her comments.

Clark emailed the state Department of Housing and Community Development last November to notify leaders of the referendum on the town’s 2040 General Plan, and said it was “paid for and passed by the rich, white, anti-housing men in our town.”

Members of the public complained to town staff about Clark’s email, saying it negatively impacted the town during the Housing Element process, represented the town poorly and used “racist” and “biased” language.'

Seoul removes women-only parking spaces in gender policy reversal

Matt · 19 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Korea's capital Seoul is removing women-only parking spaces, 14 years after they were introduced as a protection for women.

The women-only spots had been instated in 2009 after a spate of violent crimes in basement car parks.

But city officials say such spaces aren't necessary anymore and will be converted to family parking spots.

Critics say their removal is just the latest example of anti-feminist policies in South Korea.

Chung Eun-jung, 55, said she uses the female spaces whenever she can find one: "I feel safer when I use them, that there are not so many dangerous people close by."

"When I get in the car, I always lock the door immediately," she said, adding that she was well aware of car park crimes, often reported in the news.

Her daughter said she was upset that her mother would feel less safe.
...
But male pilot Cho Young-jae thinks the women-only spaces need to go.

"These spaces do discriminate against men", the 34-year-old said.

"Walking 100 metres more does not make you less safe and these days parking areas are covered in surveillance cameras."

The women-only car spaces, which were first introduced in Germany in the 1990s, have been controversial in South Korea.

As some are longer and wider, critics argued they reinforced the stereotype that women find it more difficult to park. The actual reason they are bigger is because it was assumed that women, who take on most of the childcare in South Korea, would appreciate the extra space to get their children in and out of the car.

The city government plans to start converting the spaces at the end of March.'

A feminist cafe that charged 18% more to men disappears due to lack of customers

Matt · 19 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A feminist cafe in Sydney (Australia), aimed at vegan lesbians and that created controversy for establish a "tax on men" charging them 18% more, will close this Sunday.

The cafe, called Handsome Her, opened its doors in the summer of 2017 and has not lasted two years. It was aimed especially at feminists, lesbians and vegans, and its opening sparked controversy in Australia by charging 18% more to male clients, citing the "wage gap" myth, a thesis formulated by leftist feminism that, on the basis of a statistical manipulation, it affirms that women charge less than men for doing the same jobs: the umpteenth attempt to make them feel oppressed by men. In an ad located at the entrance of the premises, in addition to reporting that "tax on men", the local also established that women had preference at the time of sitting.'

Jordan Peterson, dozens of academics attack Ivy League anti-male bias

Mastodon · 20 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jordan Peterson, a Canadian psychology professor signed onto a Title IX legal complaint against Ivy League school Cornell University claiming anti-male bias.

University of Southern California Ph.D. student Kursat Christoff Pekgoz filed the complaint and more than 185 professors, scholars, and activists signed onto it. The complaint alleges instances of anti-male bias by Cornell, according to documents obtained by Campus Reform.

The 28-page-long document, which was sent to the Department of Justice and the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights, includes a “List of Exclusionary Programs” at Cornell. Pekgoz claims these programs discriminate against men. The complaint is predicated mainly on the fact that there are no male-only programs at Cornell, compared to a significant number of university-sponsored female-only programs.'

Female scholars more likely than male counterparts to be elected to prestigious US scientific societies, finds study

Mastodon · 20 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female researchers in mathematics, psychology and economics are 3–15 times more likely to be elected as members of the US National Academy of Sciences (NAS) or the American Academy of Arts and Sciences than are male counterparts who have similar publication and citation records, a study finds.

The paper finds that since 2019, female researchers have comprised around 40% of new members in both prestigious academies1. Historically, across disciplines in each academy, there have been substantially fewer female researchers than male ones. Before the 1980s, female members comprised less than 10% of total academy membership across all scientific fields.

Lead author David Card, an economist at the University of California, Berkeley, says that the boost does not seem to be due to an analogous increase in the number of potentially qualified female candidates for membership.

In a statement to Nature, NAS president Marcia McNutt says that the NAS does not reserve a set number of places in each year's election for female scientists or other under-represented researchers. Instead, she says that reforms to the NAS-membership nomination process have encouraged inclusion of a more-diverse group of scientists.'

Most young men are single. Most young women are not.

Matt · 22 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What's remarkable about this article is its non-anti-male tone, and the fact it actually got printed. Excerpt:

'More than 60 percent of young men are single, nearly twice the rate of unattached young women, signaling a larger breakdown in the social, romantic and sexual life of the American male.

Men in their 20s are more likely than women in their 20s to be romantically uninvolved, sexually dormant, friendless and lonely. They stand at the vanguard of an epidemic of declining marriage, sexuality and relationships that afflicts all of young America.
...
Scholars say the new era of gender parity has reshaped relationship dynamics, empowering young women and, in many cases, removing young men from the equation.

“Women don’t need to be in long-term relationships. They don’t need to be married. They’d rather go to brunch with friends than have a horrible date,” said Greg Matos, a couple and family psychologist in Los Angeles, who recently penned a viral article titled “What’s Behind the Rise of Lonely, Single Men.”'

Male, pale and stale?

Mastodon · 23 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You must have sympathy for the progressive straight white male. He lives in a paradox. On one hand, he is told he has all the privilege the world can offer him. On the other it is demanded that because he has such privilege, he must be silent and make space for others. Whilst he is blamed for most of the injustice in society, he has no way to abdicate his privilege.

He can donate to a progressive cause, post an anti-sexist infographic to his Instagram story, support minority-owned businesses or even chain his whole family together and go on an anti-racism pilgrimage to score BLM brownie points, but it still will not be enough. He can self-flagellate all day long but there is no way for him to receive salvation from the progressive mob.'

ISIS Women Accused of Turning Boys as Young as 13 Into a Human Stud Farm

Matt · 23 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two boys have come forward to claim they were victims in a twisted plot run by ISIS women that forced at least 10 young teenagers to try to impregnate dozens of women held in a detention center.

“We are being forced to have sex with the ISIS women, to impregnate them,” Ahmet, 13, and Hamid, 14, told a guard at Camp al Hol in northeast Syria, according to Syrian Defense Force officials. “Can you get us out of here?”
...
While some of these women want nothing more to do with ISIS, others continue in their violent dedication to the Caliphate—insisting on carrying on ISIS’s distorted Islamic dictates, punishing women who renounce ISIS—and working hard to indoctrinate children whose countries continue to refuse to repatriate them. Some of these ISIS diehard women have refused voluntary repatriation, with their countries of origin allowing them to also refuse repatriation for their children.

Housing boys who reach puberty can be difficult in the camps, and some were being transferred to detention facilities. Under a new policy, the boys will now be transferred to rehabilitation centers.'

Who are America's Uninsured?

Matt · 25 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For those Americans with health insurance, private insurance remains the leading source of coverage, accounting for nearly 70% of the insured 64-years-of-age and under according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services National Health Statistics Reports. The remaining number of insured gain their coverage through public sources, such as the military. 12.6% of Americans are uninsured.
...
One's sex and education level are highly correlated with the uninsured. Those without a high school degree, for instance, are more likely to be uninsured (36.9%) then they are to be have private insurance (30.7%). Those with a high school diploma or GED are in a much stronger position, with 57.2% holding private insurance and 18% being uninsured.

Males remain at the top of the list when it comes to those less likely to graduate high school, earn a GED, matriculate to and graduate from a two or four year college, and carry health insurance.
...
Information compiled by the Boys and Men's Well-Being Index (BamIndex.org) shows there is a male health-insurance-deficit for those 20 to 64 years-of-age, approximately 3.3 million fewer uninsured males nationwide. Further analysis indicates that the problem begins early, as those 20-29 are the ones least likely to carry insurance as a percent of their population.'

Why Are So Many Young Men Single And Sexless?

Matt · 25 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Predictably, it puts everything on men. No mention of feminism and how it's affected men's choices. Excerpt:

'A recent Pew Research study suggests a tectonic shift in the dating and sex life of men. The study found that among men under 30 years old, over 60 percent are single, almost double that of women in the same age bracket.

Not only are more young men single but their opportunities for developing a relational and sexual repertoire have all but vanished, as levels of sexual intimacy across genders appear to have hit a 30-year low (Lei & South, 2021).
...
As young women continued to pursue intimate relationships less intently post-pandemic, men could have increased their relationship skills to close the effort gap. They could have confronted their relative avoidance and challenged the gender norms that made them so anxious about intimacy.'

Eton teacher who was sacked for refusing to take down YouTube lecture questioning 'toxic masculinity' warns Andrew Tate has tapped into 'malaise'

Mastodon · 25 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Eton teacher who was sacked in 2021 over a controversial video which appeared to argue against toxic masculinity has said influencer Andrew Tate has tapped into young men's 'malaise' due to current teaching.

Will Knowland, 37, was removed from his role at the prestigious £46,000-a-year Berkshire school and referred to the Teaching Regulation Agency (TRA) after refusing to take down a lecture challenging the theory of 'toxic masculinity' from YouTube.

The English teacher, now an online tutor, made the video for his students called The Patriarchy Paradox, which claimed that women would revert to a primitive life without men and stated that 'male aggression is a biological fact'.'

Marilyn Manson Accuser Recants Rape Allegations, Says Evan Rachel Wood ‘Pressured’ Her

Mastodon · 25 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An ex-girlfriend of Marilyn Manson, who had alleged the rock star sexually abused her, has now walked back the claims, saying the rape allegations were “false.”

Ashley Morgan Smithline has filed a declaration of support defending Manson and renouncing past accusations she’d made against the embattled musician, NBC News reported. The declaration, which is part of a 2022 defamation lawsuit against actor and Manson accuser, Evan Rachel Wood, was filed in Los Angeles Superior Court on Thursday.

Manson, whose real name is Brian Warner, has long denied the allegations made by Wood and other alleged victims.'

UK: Bodmin mum-of-eight made false rape claim to get partner's attention

Mastodon · 25 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mum of eight has been jailed for making an entirely false rape claim against someone she barely knew. Amee Bettison, 29, also pursued the lie made initially to get the attention of her partner.

Bettison, of Pool Street in Bodmin, appeared at Truro Crown Court for sentence having pleaded guilty to attempting to pervert the course of justice.

Prosecuting the case, Ed Bailey described how on October 13 2016 a Mr Roberts contacted the police to report this his former partner, Bettison, had been raped by a local 28-year-old.'

"Australia's rental crisis hits women particularly hard"

Minuteman · 28 February 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The hundreds of homeless men in any major Australian city, can continue to rot in the gutter. Link here. Video description:

' Rental property vacancies are at record lows, so competition is so fierce it can be a game of life and death. It is becoming particularly hard for women of all ages and in all circumstances.'

Germany announces new "feminist foreign policy"

Matt · 1 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Germany's centre-left government on Wednesday announced new feminist guidelines to shape its diplomacy and development work including the creation of a new role for an "ambassador for feminist foreign policy".

Germany will lobby to ensure women's concerns are more in focus worldwide, that women are better represented and that the country's generous development funds are allocated more to projects that tackle gender inequality, according to the guidelines.

Given Germany's clout as Europe's biggest economy and a key diplomatic actor, the move gives fresh momentum to the feminist foreign policy movement, which was pioneered by a leftist Swedish government in 2014.

Such a policy has been embraced in recent years by other countries like Canada, France, Mexico and Spain - although Sweden abandoned it last year after a shift to a right-wing government.'

Colorado woman faces no jail time for statutory rape, pregnancy by 13-year-old boy: report

Matt · 4 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year-old woman who admitted to having sex with a 13-year-old boy and getting pregnant with his child will serve no jail time, according to reports.

"I feel like if she was a man, and he was a little girl, it would definitely be different," the victim's mother said. "They would be seeking more. I feel like because he is not a woman, they are not. They are having compassion for her."

The Fountain Police Department in Colorado arrested Andrea Serrano in June 2022 on felony charges of sexual assault on a child by one in a position of trust and sexual assault on a child.

Serrano allegedly admitted to police that she had sex with the teenager, who remains unidentified due to his age, and they detained her in El Paso County Criminal Justice Center while her case has remained ongoing.'

The Mysterious ‘Sisterhood’ Tearing Families Apart

Matt · 4 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Be on the lookout, guys. Excerpt:

'Jason and Jennifer Veras had been together since high school. “We were a loving family. We were a happy family. We barely had any issues throughout our 23 years in a relationship,” Jason said. “Until she brought Liana Shanti into our family.”

Everything changed soon after Jennifer started following a mysterious online guru who has built a following of women around the world, teaching them to cut ties with their “family cult” and to save their children from a ruling class of evil reptilian creatures who created the COVID-19 “scamdemic”—a Luciferian plot to harvest innocent souls.

...

Jennifer came home, took the boys, and left. Jason said Jennifer didn’t tell him where they were going or how long they would be gone. He soon found out that Jennifer had sent a letter to her mother saying she no longer wanted a relationship, and that she had filed a restraining order against Jason—citing his angry text messages—and obtained full custody of their children.

...

Jason was shocked by how quickly his family had imploded. His sister, Beverly Veras, suggested it may have something to do with the online spiritual community Jennifer had told her about months earlier. Beverly told him to look up Liana Shanti.

Jason started researching Liana online. He read her websites and looked up her Instagram account and Facebook group. He saw Liana had thousands of followers, and many of those women were posting about the same spiritual and health beliefs that his wife had recently adopted. As Jason learned more about Liana, he grew more worried about his kids.'

Spain announces law promoting gender parity in politics and business

Matt · 4 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez on Saturday announced a gender equality law that will require more equal representation of women and men in politics, business and other spheres of public life.

The Equal Representation Law will apply gender parity measures to electoral lists, the boards of directors of big companies and governing boards of professional associations.

Sanchez made the announcement during a Socialist party rally ahead of International Women's Day on March 8. It will be approved during Tuesday's cabinet meeting before going for debate in parliament.'

Millions of men have dropped out of the workforce, leaving companies struggling to fill jobs

Matt · 5 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A large number of American men of prime working age — between 25 and 54 years old — are not working or even looking for work, resulting in a major hole in the American economy.

In 1953, 98% of men in that age range had a job or were looking for one. That number has fallen ever since. Today, 7.2 million men have essentially dropped out of the workforce.

It's "a matter of our national identity," said Mike Rowe, the host of "Dirty Jobs" on Discovery. "I think it's a giant issue. ... And by the time we realize how big an issue it is, we're going to have a hard time turning the temperature down."'

NYPD lowers fitness standard by scrapping timed, 1.5-mile run for new recruits — sparking brass squabbles

Mastodon · 5 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The NYPD has again lowered its requirement for police recruits, scrapping a timed, 1.5-mile run in the police academy, the department's head of training told The Post.

The controversial move — which training Chief Juanita Holmes said will help more women applicants make the cut — sparked an intra-agency battle between Holmes and NYPD Commissioner Keechant Sewell that Mayor Eric Adams had to settle.

The internal squabble boiled over just months after The Post reported in July that the NYPD dramatically relaxed the police fitness test amid a record wave of retirements.'

Disinformation Campaigns Against Women Are a National Security Threat, New Study Finds

Mastodon · 5 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attacks portraying women in politics as promiscuous or having an unconventional sexual past are often common and effective tactics employed by political opponents. But Lucina Di Meco, co-founder of the online campaign, “#ShePersisted,” said that Baerbock’s example also revealed two other phenomena at play, which she has written about in a new study called “Monetizing Misogyny.” Not only does gendered disinformation lead to the backsliding of women’s rights and democracy as a whole, but the study found that gendered disinformation also becomes a national security threat when foreign actors use it to exploit divisions in society.

Although the term “gendered disinformation” doesn’t have a standard definition, Di Meco, a leading gender equality expert, has described it as the spread of deceptive or inaccurate information or images used against women in public life. A study conducted by Demos in 2020 noted that gendered disinformation isn’t just false information—it also uses “highly emotive and value-laden content to try to undermine its targets,” and ”seeks impact primarily at the political level, though can also cause serious harm at the personal level,” leading to hate campaigns that come with terrifying, and sometimes lethal, consequences for women in politics.'

Lana Del Rey Threatens To Pull Out of Glastonbury After Festival Draws Criticism For Lineup

Mastodon · 5 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It appears that Lana Del Rey has a possibility of NOT performing at the Glastonbury Festival in 2023.

The "Summertime Sadness" will perform on The Other Stage on Saturday afternoon of the festival, which runs from June 21 to June 25. The singer, though, threatened to back out of her main position.

Once the event organizers revealed the lineup for this year, the outcry against the music festival raged on.

Together with Arctic Monkeys and Guns N Roses, Sir Elton John will headline the event.

The revelation, however, sparked outrage among music enthusiasts, who accused the top-billed musicians of lacking diversity because the performers are all white males.

Lana Del Rey has also taken issue with the announcement, claiming that her name was buried on the seventh line of names.

The "Blue Jeans" singer turned to social mediato criticize the Glastonbury news and appeared to threaten to cancel her appearance.

"Well, I'm headlining the 2nd stage. But since there was no consideration for announcing that we'll see."

To make things worse, an insider revealed to The Sun how the 38-year-old singer is "disappointed."

They went on to say, "She was proud to be doing a headline slot, but on the announcement graphic her name is buried among lesser-known artists."

"She feels let down being presented as an afterthought lagging behind the all-male trio."'

Recruiting more male nurses would help ease shortfalls, but stigma persists

Mastodon · 5 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a man in a female-centric career, Lee Frederick — a licensed practical nurse in Parksville — is regularly mistaken for a doctor.

Worse, when people find out he's not a physician, he's sometimes labelled "just a nurse."

That's something that might change, he says, if more men were encouraged to enter the profession.

"I think we should be doing more recruitment at the high school level, going to high school fairs," says Frederick, who works in long-term care.

Only about 10 per cent of the B.C. Nurses' Union's 48,000 members are men — close to 5,000.'

The feminization of the American university is all but complete

Matt · 7 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mirroring the feminization of the bureaucracy is the feminization of the student body. Females earned 58 percent of all B.A.s in the 2019–2020 academic year; if present trends continue, they will soon constitute two-thirds of all B.A.s. At least 60 percent of all master's degrees, and 54 percent of all Ph.D.s, now go to females.

Female students and administrators often exist in a co-dependent relationship, united by the concepts of victim identity and of trauma. For university females, there is not, apparently, strength in numbers. The more females' ranks increase, the more we hear about a mass nervous breakdown on campus. Female students disproportionately patronize the burgeoning university wellness centers, massage therapies, relaxation oases, calming corners, and healing circles. Another newly installed female college president, Dartmouth's Sian Leah Beilock, claims that the two "most pressing challenges of our time" are the "mental crisis among young people" and climate change. College institutions "really have a part to play in how we support students" suffering from that mental health crisis, Beilock tweeted recently. (A psychologist, Beilock specializes in improving female success in science by combatting performance anxiety, making her another overdetermined choice for university president.)'

A World Without Men The women of South Korea’s 4B movement aren’t fighting the patriarchy — they’re leaving it behind entirely

Mastodon · 8 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For Youngmi and many others who subscribe to its basic premises, 4B, or “practicing bihon,” is the only path by which a Korean woman today can live autonomously. In their view, Korean men are essentially beyond redemption, and Korean culture, on the whole, is hopelessly patriarchal — often downright misogynistic. A 2016 survey by the Ministry of Gender Equality and Family found the incidence of intimate-partner violence at 41.5 percent, significantly higher than the global average of 30 percent. While 4B’s adherents may hope to change society — through demonstrations and online activism, and by modeling an alternative lifestyle to other women — they are not trying to change the men whom they view as their oppressors. It is too soon to tell whether this movement can survive and thrive over the long haul. But its ideas and actions have already affected the country’s online discourse, its politics, and most of all, individual women’s lives.

“Practicing bihon means you’re eliminating the risks that come from heterosexual marriage or dating,” Yeowon, a 26-year-old office worker, told me on a café terrace in the seaside southern city of Busan. We talked over coffee and pastries, along with Yeowon’s girlfriend and another of their friends, all of them wearing wide black pants and black sweaters and sporting cropped short haircuts. Those risks Yeowon alluded to might seem familiar — trading career for child-rearing and housework, as well as the threat of physical violence — but in Korea, Yeowon said, marriage presents an existential threat.'

Hillary Clinton: Ukraine conflict shows climate change primarily affects women

Mastodon · 8 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said Wednesday that women and children are the "primary victims of conflict and climate change" and that the war in Ukraine "shows us that."

"Women and children are the primary victims of conflict and of climate change and there is no place that unfortunately, tragically, shows us that more dramatically than Ukraine today," Clinton told the crowd at the Forbes 30/50 Summit in Abu Dhabi.

...

During her opening remarks, Clinton said that women have been "dramatically set back" by the COVID-19 pandemic and by "organized pushback to the advancement of women."

"So I think the bottom line is we have a lot of work to do. And we can't take any of the progress that has been made for granted, because as you said, Mika, with the Dobbs decision and other kinds of organized institutional pushback, we're seeing a lot of what we did take for granted in terms of rights and opportunities at risk," Clinton said.'

‘Power trip’: Why more women than ever are cheating on their husbands

Mastodon · 8 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Opinion Research Center’s General Social Survey found that American wives were 40% more likely to cheat on their spouses in 2010 than in 1990, while the percentage of husbands who cheated stayed the same. But are women really cheating more — or are they just finally talking about it?

Piazza told The Post that she really does think more women are having affairs compared to 30 or 40 years ago, largely because of “privilege.”

“There are so many more women in the workforce and making their own money,” the host explained. “When you’re less financially dependent on your husband, you’re less afraid of possibly losing your husband or ruining your marriage. You’re more willing to take chances to take risks.”

She also noted that technology has made conducting an affair much easier. Now, women can search for one-night-stands on their phone.'

Spain: Man ordered to pay ex-wife $215K for unpaid domestic labor

Mastodon · 8 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man in Spain has been ordered by a court to pay his ex-wife $215,000 for 25 years of unpaid domestic labor.

The record divorce settlement was calculated by Judge Laura Ruiz Alaminos, based on the annual minimum wage throughout the couple's marriage, inews reports.

The man must also pay his ex-wife, Ivana Moral, a monthly "pension" of $527, as well as $422 and $633 to his 20-year-old and 14-year-old daughters respectively.

Moral said she and her daughters were "left with nothing" when the couple, who married in 1995, divorced in 2020.'

UK: John Lewis's female boss admits it is difficult to find men who will work for her

Matt · 11 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Gee, wonder why? Excerpt:

'Dame Sharon White admitted that she has found it 'quite hard to recruit men' at the John Lewis Partnership as she faces a backlash for hiring and promoting women at the business.

...

Baroness Morrissey, former chairman of stockbroker AJ Bell, said 'any move away from a macho culture needs to be very subtle' to not dissuade men from joining a firm.

'Otherwise men might surmise quite sensibly that the environment won't be good for their careers,' she said.'

Australia: Teacher, 31, who had secret sex with 'vulnerable' student, 16, avoids jail

Mastodon · 11 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female teacher has avoided jail despite admitting to having sex with her 16-year-old student in the backseat of her car.

Monique Ooms, 31, from Maffra in Victoria, Australia, pleaded guilty to four counts of sexual penetration of a child under her supervision and care at Latrobe Valley County Court.

Judge John Smallwood said he wouldn't send her to jail despite her having faced a maximum sentence of 10 years inside.

The court previously heard how the teen had snuck out in the middle of the night to sleep with the teacher.

The lad was in a "vulnerable situation emotionally" after losing a close friend in a car crash a week prior.

Judge Smallwood - who admitted to never having dealt with a similar case - made a number of odd comments, saying he didn't know if the child had been harmed by her predatory behaviour.'

Gen Z, Millennials think women's rights have gone too far, according to new survey

Mastodon · 12 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A surprising number of people in younger generations believe that women's rights have gone too far, with a new survey revealing gender equality progress could be at risk of stalling.

New research conducted by Ipsos UK and the Global Institute for Women's Leadership at King's College London found that over half of people in younger generations believe the push for equality is now negatively impacting men and that they are being expected to do "too much" to support progress.

The survey collated the responses from more than 22,500 people aged 16-74 across 32 countries, including approximately 1000 people from Australia.

According to the results, 52 percent of Gen Z and 53 percent of Millennials agree that "we have gone so far in promoting women's equality that we are discriminating against men".

This is compared to 46 percent of Gen X and 40 percent of Baby Boomers.'

Clips of Justin Bieber Being Repeatedly Sexualized as a Teen Are Going Viral on TikTok

Mastodon · 12 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Clips of Justin Bieber being repeatedly disrespected and sexualized as a kid have resurfaced on TikTok, and they show just how toxic the culture was.

User @kendallrae111 stitched together a number of videos from when Bieber was a teenager, all of which show adults either touching the singer inappropriately or asking him intrusive sexual questions. Every clip also shows Bieber setting clear boundaries and having them ignored.

The first clip is of Jenny McCarthy kissing and groping Bieber as he walks on stage. When he steps up to the mic, he says, "Wow. I feel violated right now."

McCarthy was asked about the incident afterwards and told Entertainment Tonight, "I just got to neck Justin Bieber and grab his butt. It was a little cougar scary, but I took the opportunity and the window, considering I'll never get to do it again, and kind of molested him."

Not usually something you proudly admit to, but OK.

The second shows Katy Perry grabbing Bieber's butt, as a voiceover says she "apparently wanted to know what a Bieber butt felt like."'

Netherlands: Atheneum Halle allows girls to take lessons sitting and boys standing

Matt · 12 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Excerpt:

'During the first lesson, the students of the Atheneum in Halle were told that the boys had to stand and that the girls could sit. That immediately caused a buzz during math class. Because Lisa was allowed to sit down while her neighbor Thomas had to solve his exercises standing up. It was striking that the boys in particular asked questions about why they were not allowed to sit down, while the girls had less difficulty with this.

When the working group that had devised the action entered the classroom with chocolates exclusively for the girls, a discussion started. "Why does one get privileges and the other doesn't? What did we do wrong to be treated differently?" the boys wondered. "And what if we are not a boy or a girl, but transgender?".'

‘Nothing anywhere that’s ever positive about masculinity’: Kids look to Andrew Tate

Mastodon · 14 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Sky News host Paul Murray says it doesn’t surprise him that young kids look to Andrew Tate to “build themselves up” because there is “virtually nothing anywhere that’s ever positive about masculinity”.

“So you end up going off the beaten track into places like YouTube and somebody who gives you the confidence that the rest of the culture isn’t giving you becomes more attractive,” Mr Murray said.

“It doesn’t surprise me that people want to find somebody who tells how to build themselves up as opposed to what to be sorry for.”'

Married California 'Teacher of the Year' had student's pic in wallet as charges mount: DA

Matt · 15 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A married California "teacher of the year," who has been accused of sexually abusing a former student, "was obsessive, possessive, controlling and dangerous," prosecutors said in court.

Jacqueline Ma, a 34-year-old sixth-grade teacher at Lincoln Acres Elementary School in National City, was arrested twice in a week after police found more evidence against her, which was presented Monday in the Superior Court South County Division in Chula Vista.

Investigators found a picture of the 13-year-old victim's picture in her wallet, jewelry with his initials, love letters in her classroom and text exchanges that showed Ma became frustrated that the victim didn't message her back quick enough, prosecutors alleged.

She also allegedly sent explicit images to the student and coerced him to send videos back to her, according to prosecutors, who said the inappropriate behavior began when the victim was 12.'

Stanford employee Jennifer Gries lied about rapes to get revenge on coworker: DA

Mastodon · 16 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Stanford employee who claimed she was brutally raped on campus twice by a coworker was charged with lying as part of a revenge scheme that also put some cash in her pockets.

Jennifer Gries, 25, faces felony perjury and other charges for the sham accusations, the Santa Clara District Attorney announced Wednesday.

The Housing Services employee allegedly smeared her coworker because she felt he gave her “false intention” and “turned her friends against her,” according to court documents obtained by The Post.

“Evidence shows that the Gries made up the stories due to being angry at a co-worker,” the DA’s office said in a release.'

Australia: Positive masculinity program at Brighton Grammar School aims to create respectful men

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For more than a decade, an all-boys school in Melbourne's leafy south-east has worked to create a program to develop its students into "respectful men".

Brighton Grammar School's positive masculinity program, +M, has been developed with mental health experts and was designed to shape perceptions of manhood.
...
Dr Englar-Carlson said there were a lot of buzzwords around masculinity, but the movement was focused around "healthy and adaptive" elements that needed to be cultivated in boys.

"I want to understand how we can help men be healthier and happier, and essentially improve the lives of everyone around them, including himself," Dr Englar-Carlson said.

He said it was a challenging space to work in as society tended to gravitate to what men were doing wrong.'

Sexual politics is damaging young men

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The polling company YouGov found that just 8 per cent of people have positive views of white men in their twenties, by far the lowest of any ethnicity or age group. Males are routinely presented as inherently dangerous, aggressive and animalistic, incapable of controlling their own instincts. You can see it on public transport, where government adverts announce that staring is sexual harassment. Us blokes can't even be trusted to use our eyes properly.

Teenage boys are routinely disciplined by their schools for even the most minor infractions of an insurgent sexual politics. A friend's son at a smart English day school was recently hauled up for the crime of unprompted communication with a girl. The boy had sent a message introducing himself to a student from another school. There was, according to the friend, no sexual element to the message. It was a simple greeting. No matter. That kind of behaviour is unacceptable.

...

A cottage industry of 'toxic masculinity' tutors has emerged following the Everyone's Invited scandal, a wave of anonymous allegations of sexual impropriety at Britain's top private schools that began in 2020. One such company is Beyond Equality, which sells its services to hundreds of UK schools, putting on workshops in which they tell boys to strip themselves of the 'restrictive, burdensome armour' of masculinity. The reason, they say, is to create 'communities that are safe for everyone' and to put a stop to 'gender-based violence'. The implication is clear: men need to be reprogrammed.

'Boys are now seen as potential perverts,' explains one female former teacher, who quit the profession last year. 'There was this obsession with the victimisation of women. I thought we had been getting somewhere with sex and relationships, teaching the children to treat people with respect, but that has been totally set back."

What Daughters Should Know About Dad Psychology

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He wants to love you unconditionally, but your father can't toss aside the shock-collar of patriarchal operant conditioning. The rules of manhood have become second nature for him. Now, when he looks at you, he sees an insufferable little girl version of himself. He feels an unconscious jolt of social rejection. That's why he's overprotective of you, but not your brothers. He has spent decades policing and imprisoning the supposedly feminine parts of himself, the things he considers weak and fragile. But he lets the supposedly masculine parts roam free. Leftover boyhood trauma distorts his parenting decisions. Please remember, it's not you he hates, it's all the things about himself that he's been trained to hide away.

Unfortunately, we have very few protocols for deprogramming masculinity. Most of us end up supporting misogyny even when we try to fight it. Here's an example: You know those social media videos of #girldads getting makeovers from their daughters? Those memes depend on people understanding the don't-be-a-girl rules of manhood. We all mistakenly assume that it's a great sacrifice for a man to be painted with lipstick, blush, and eyeshadow. So, we click "like" to commend Dad for taking a high-stakes risk. Our sentimentality feels like resistance—a celebration of disrupted gender norms—but it's just concealer, masking the blemishes of patriarchal masculinity. The truth is that even those proud #girldads hate femininity, and the rest of us are all complicit in the online virality that rewards them for it.
...
It's tragic that you've had to contend with the lingering effects of your father's boyhood trauma. As a result, you've probably internalized many of his narrow-minded ideas about femininity. I bet you've felt your own electric shocks, tremors of shame tingling up your spine, when he refused to walk down the grocery store tampon aisle. You've likely wondered if your body is as ghastly as the look on Dad's face when he cringes at the mention of menstruation. I assure you it's not; you're perfect.'

UK: The bar is truly in hell if you think an all-female The Apprentice final is ‘woke sexism’

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fans of The Apprentice are outraged because this is now the sixth time in a row where it is an all-female final. Yes, men are kicking off about it and I’ve got some serious second-hand embarrassment seeing their angry tweets.
...
I can guarantee you there wouldn’t be “uproar” from women if it was a final full of men because, and I cannot stress this enough, we wouldn’t care. At what point do we accept women winning The Apprentice isn’t tick box and they’re actually the better and more suited candidate?
...
If you can’t see the female contestants were better then you’re an idiot and your thoughts only prove exactly why we need female winners on our TV screens.'

Eleanor Williams: False rape claims have 'caused harm' to survivors

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sammy Woodhouse, who was abused in Rotherham from the age of 14, said it had set progress back "a long way".

Williams, of Barrow, Cumbria, was given an eight-and-a-half year sentence on Tuesday after lying about being raped and trafficked for sex.

The 22-year-old was convicted of perverting the course of justice.

Her Facebook post in May 2020 showing injuries she said had been inflicted by groomers was shared more than 100,000 times and sparked protests in her home town.

A trial at Preston Crown Court heard she inflicted the wounds herself using a hammer she had bought from Tesco.

Three men Williams falsely accused of rape over a three-year period tried to take their own lives.'

Woman Arrested for False Rape Claim

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thanks to a collaboration with a law enforcement agency in South Dakota, the Hillsborough County Sheriff's Office has arrested a woman for falsifying a sexual assault claim. Renee Dawn Skoglund, 30, was taken into custody in Sioux Falls, SD, on Friday, March 10, after wrongfully reporting sexual battery in Hillsborough County.

"This case is truly disheartening," said Sheriff Chad Chronister." There are far too many victims faced with this type of trauma. This woman took advantage of our 911 emergency line and diverted attention from actual victims who need the viable resources available in these investigative scenarios."'

Father, 22, who attempted suicide after Eleanor Williams falsely accused him of rape tells of his fury that people still take her side

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A young father who was driven to attempt suicide after fantasist Eleanor Williams falsely accused him of rape says he is 'destroyed' by the fact that there are 'still believers on her side' despite her being thrown in jail.

Jordan Trengove spent 73 days in prison in a sex offenders wing after Williams, then 19, claimed he drugged and raped her after they met in a nightclub in March 2019. She further alleged he came to her flat, threatened her with a knife and attacked her.

Angry locals who believed her lies targeted Mr Trengove, 22, by smashing his window and spray painting the word 'rapist' across his home.'

April 4 is Foreskin Appreciation Day

DanBollinger · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Often Maligned and Mocked by Americans, Foreskin Will Have Its Day, April 4!

Not surprisingly, Americans know little about the male foreskin, the highly sensitive sheath of muscle, nerves, and blood that provides sexual stimulation and protects the head of the penis. As a result, many people mistakenly believe the foreskin is merely excess, unnecessary skin.

But intact (not circumcised) men and intactivists who are fighting to end routine male child circumcision vehemently disagree. Now, uncut men, cut men who wish they weren't, and everyone who appreciates foreskin can rejoice! Intact America is raising public awareness and appreciation of the foreskin with a day-long celebration: Foreskin Day on 4/4, April 4th—the FOREth Day of April.

When your male colleague is 'mansplaining,' here's what to do

Mastodon · 17 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Meanwhile, according to the study, women are actively avoiding certain male co-workers in order to avoid mansplaining, which in itself may “impact productively, limit professional networks and inhibit career progression.”

According to a recent article in The HR Digest, a trade publication for human resource professionals, the best way to deal with a mansplainer in the office is to speak up. Most of the time, the article states, these male co-workers have no idea what they’re doing wrong.

“You can start by telling them what they are doing,” the article suggests. “You can say, ‘Mr. A., you are mansplaining to me.’ Then, from this point, we are pretty sure he might not have an idea of the meaning of what you just said. Go ahead and educate him.”'

Canadian General Sues Trudeau Govt for Millions After Sex Assault Acquittal

Mastodon · 18 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Major General Fortin filed his lawsuit on Wednesday at the Ontario Superior Court of Justice, alleging that the Trudeau government acted in a “reprehensible, extreme, flagrant and high-handed” manner in 2021.

Fortin was charged with sexual assault in August of 2021 as a result of allegations from 1988 when he was enrolled in the Canadian military college, but he was acquitted of the charges in December of last year, the National Post newspaper reports.

The lawsuit claims that Fortin was defamed and accuses government officials of disclosing private information inappropriately as well as negligence in their investigation, breaching confidence and conspiracy to cause damage to him.'

Women cops ‘insulted,’ ‘offended’ by NYPD lowering academy standards

Mastodon · 18 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female cops are “insulted” by the NYPD’s efforts to boost gender equity — by lowering standards during rookie tryouts, including scrapping the timed 1.5-mile run.

The controversial shift — which former training Chief Juanita Holmes said would help more women applicants make the grade — sparked fireworks between Holmes and Police Commissioner Keechant Sewell, who sources said wanted to keep the run.

Holmes was abruptly shifted to lead the city Probation Department on March 9.

The run “will no longer be part of the final evaluation of officers” an NYPD spokesperson confirmed on Friday.

“I’m offended,” huffed one female cop on patrol Friday. “We were in the academy when it was on the fence whether or not [the run] was going to be canceled and we had to pass it to get through the academy. … If those females don’t want to put in that effort to pass the mile and a half run, I don’t think they should be cops.”'

The demonisation of our sons: Browbeaten by toxic masculinity crusaders invited into schools, boys are feeling cowed and worthless

Mastodon · 19 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Masculinity has been in crisis for as long as anyone can remember. The usual explanation is that post-industrial society doesn't much care for brawn.

We're all office-dwellers now, mutely churning out spreadsheets for other spreadsheet producers.

The theory makes sense as far as it goes. But something else has changed much more recently: a rejection of the very concept of masculinity.

The polling company YouGov found that just eight per cent of people have positive views of white men in their 20s, by far the lowest of any ethnicity or age group.

Males are routinely presented as inherently dangerous, aggressive and animalistic, incapable of controlling their own instincts.

You can see it on public transport, where government advertisements announce that staring is sexual harassment.

We blokes can't even be trusted to use our eyes properly. Teenage boys are routinely disciplined by their schools for even the most minor infractions of an insurgent sexual politics.

A friend's son at a smart English day school was recently hauled up for the crime of unprompted communication with a girl.'

Equal Pay Day: Fact or Fabrication? – by Don Mathis

Don14 · 22 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

'Equal Pay Day' is March 14 this year. But ever since its founding in 1996, this event is based on erroneous assumptions. It is meant to illustrate the gap between men's and women's wages. But is there really such a gap? And is it based on discrimination?

The idea to select a Tuesday as Equal Pay Day was to represent how far into the work week women must work to earn what men earned the previous week. A date in March was selected which would mark the month when a woman's earnings catch up to what her male counterpart earned in the previous year.

According to statistics from a women's committee on pay equity, women now earn 81.6 cents for every dollar men earn. A few years ago, it was 77 cents; a few years before that, it was 74 cents. Maybe 'Equal Pay Day' should be on a Monday in February.

The first time I heard that women earn less than men, I nearly choked on my food (served by a waitress who earns more than I do) at a café (owned by a woman who earns more than I do) before returning to work (for a woman who earns more than I do).

What is implied — but not stated — in the '81 cent mantra' is that such inequality is due to discrimination. This is an erroneous assumption.

The first assumption is that the statement is based on straight wages. It is not! Men do earn more than women but it is based on a number of factors.
* Men, on average, work more hours (even in cases where both report full-time employment, the average man works six hours more per week than the average woman).
* Their job entails more hazardous assignments (92% of workplace deaths occur to men, even more for battlefield fatalities).
* They are more apt to move overseas or to an undesirable location (off-shore work, anyone?).
* Men often accept more-technical jobs with less people contact (most engineers are men, same with accountants).

Judging from the job choices they make, women are more likely to balance income with a desire for safety, fulfillment, flexibility, potential for personal growth, and proximity-to-home. These are not bad things.

The 'Equal Pay Day' folks have re-defined earnings as payment for the same hours for the same work. But this contains erroneous assumptions as well.

Many women have gaps in their employment that were spent in giving care for their children. In my personal experience, I subjugated my career to be a stay-at-home dad. When I re-entered the workforce, I did not expect to earn as much as my friends who stayed on the job. No discrimination here. Not every woman takes time off from work — but enough do such that it skewers the statistics.

When I did re-enter the workforce, I accepted a job that entailed 30 hours a week so I could pick up my son from school and spend time with him on weekends. My co-worker who worked 40 hours a week — and was always available for overtime — received promotions more than me.

Again, there was no prejudice. Even though two people may do the same job, the person with more experience often receives the larger salary.

Statistics offered by the pay gap people will lump the salaries of all medical doctors together. This erroneous assumption falls apart when one realizes that male physicians are more likely than women to pursue higher-stress specialties with unpredictable hours, thus enjoying greater pay.

The 'Occupy Protests' brought to light an interesting observation. The top one percent of the population control 42 percent of our country's wealth. Because the vast majority of this one percent are men, their earnings skew the statistics for women all the way down the line. Chances are, you and I will never be in the one percent, but their earnings can cause a lot of erroneous assumptions.

Yet, the 'Equal Pay' folks insist on believing women are at a disadvantage in the ordinary workplace. Erroneous assumption again!

According to a 2010 Time magazine article, "in 147 out of 150 of the biggest cities in the U.S., the median full-time salaries of young women are 8% higher than those of the guys in their peer group."

It is much the same in the United Kingdom. In 2011, the Independent reported that "women aged between 22 and 29 in employment are now earning more on average per hour than men of the same age."

Dr. Warren Farrell (former board member of the New York National Organization for Women), arrived at the same conclusion in his book, "Why Men Earn More" – "women earn more when they work equal hours at the same job with the same size of responsibility for the same length of time with equal productivity, etc."

An oft-repeated argument against such 'politically incorrect' beliefs is the charge of a hatred of women. But just as patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel, the first defense of a misandrist is to pull out the 'misogynist' label.

It is not sexist to recognize the truth. Who exhibits the greater bias: the one who believes women are poor helpless creatures who need governmental favoritism, or the one who believes women are whole and strong and able to be treated equally in any situation?

Name-calling is not the only propaganda technique used by the 'Equal Pay' party. The adage, 'If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth,' has been bouncing around since the days of the Nazi Party. Perhaps some people have come to believe discrimination is the cause of income disparity because it has been repeated so loudly for so long.

The pay gap contingent will have none of these facts. They insist that all things being equal, women make less than men and it's because of prejudice.

The erroneous assumption is apparent when considering self-employed women. In his article, "Men Don't Have it Easy Either," Marty Nemko finds that working women who have no boss (they own their own business) "earn only 49% of what the average male business owner earns."

A Rochester Institute of Technology study may explain this. It was found that money was the primary motivator for only 29 percent of women versus 76 percent of men. According to Nemko, "Women put a premium on shorter work weeks, proximity to home, fulfillment, autonomy, and safety."

More females than males finish high school. More women than men enter — and finish — college. Why is this not reflected in wages? The correlation between education and earnings is not a myth. What is a myth is the erroneous assumption that men earn more than women due to prejudice.

If women earned less than men for the same work, why would anyone hire a man? "Ah, ha," the pay gappers may exclaim, "this accounts for the he-cession." Well, no. That is another erroneous assumption. The majority of jobs that were lost in the recession were in the 'high-dollar' blue-collar industries like construction; jobs that most women avoid.

The Equal Pay Act was passed in 1963 to abolish wage disparity based on sex. So why do we need additional governmental regulation? If a woman believes she earns less than a man due to discrimination, she can take it to federal court.

Where are these women who earn 81 cents for every dollar a man earns anyway? One could save 19 cents on the dollar if he or she sought treatment from a female dentist. Want to cut your legal expenses? Hire a woman lawyer! Think how much taxpayers are saving for enlisting all those women soldiers. And Americans save money for every woman politician. The taxpayer must be saving millions!

No, this is an erroneous assumption. Just as the gender pay gap is an erroneous assumption.

Australia: The coercive control con job

Matt · 22 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a book called Coercive Control: The Entrapment of Women in Personal Life, it was argued that the domestic violence industry was running into problems because of mounting evidence that men and women are equally violent. The book took ideas that had been floating around in the domestic violence industry about patterns of 'patriarchal terrorism' and invented a brand-new form of domestic 'violence' called 'coercive control'. This idea claimed men started to use 'coercive control' to control their relationships after society moved on from the systematic, widespread 'wife torture' of the past, due to women's liberation eroding men's sex-based patriarchal privilege.

Even though everyone knows that both men and women use controlling behaviours, it was argued that people should 'take on faith' that 'the pattern of intimidation, isolation, and control … is unique to men's abuse of women'.

Worse, this was being promoted as a new criminal offence, which made these laws a far more effective weapon to use against men than the old violence protections orders used for domestic violence. On the basis of the flimsiest evidence describing behaviours that can't even be properly defined, and that victims may not even see as a problem, men would be sent to prison.'

Hollywood Blacklisted ‘Rick & Morty’ Creator – Then the DA Dropped the Case

Mastodon · 23 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is everything wrong with modern-day America in a nutshell.

The #MeToo McCarthyism marches on…

I know nothing about anyone or anything involved in this case. Before this situation blew up in January, I had never heard of Justin Roiland. What’s more, I’ve never watched a frame of Rick and Morty. Roiland might be the biggest left-wing jerk in Hollywood. He might hate Christians and wish Trump supporters dead. He might be a transvestite Satanist. I don’t care about any of that because that has nothing to do with the injustice here.

Justin Roiland’s career, reputation, and income were wiped in a few days over an allegation.

Although the allegation had not seen the inside of a courtroom, Hollywood still annihilated this man and everything he’d worked for.'

NH Supreme Court overturns former state Sen. Woodburn's domestic violence conviction

Mastodon · 23 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The New Hampshire Supreme Court has overturned the conviction of former state Sen. Jeffrey Woodburn, who was found guilty on domestic violence charges stemming from an altercation with his then-girlfriend following a Christmas party in 2017.

In a 3-0 opinion released Thursday, the justices found that a lower court judge's refusal to allow the jury to consider Woodburn's self-defense claim was improper.

Writing for the court, Justice James Bassett said that "because the record contains some evidence supporting a rational finding that the defendant acted in self-defense, the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury on that theory of defense was unreasonable."

Woodburn's case will now be sent back to a lower court for a new trial, where he will be allowed to present his self-defense arguments.'

Australia: Female teacher spared jail by judge who said she wasn't a "predator"

Matt · 25 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female teacher who admitted to having sex with her 16-year-old student in the backseat of her car has avoided jail after the judge deemed she was not a predator.

Monique Ooms, 31, of Maffra, was sentenced on Friday by County Court of Victoria Judge John Smallwood to a four year community corrections order, with 300 hours of community work for the crime.

She pleaded guilty this month in Victoria's Latrobe Valley County Court to four counts of sexual penetration of a child under her supervision and care.

Over 30 minutes, Judge Smallwood outlined the contributions to society Ooms had contributed and the hardship she had endured in the community after being outed as a child sex offender.

The court heard Ooms had been abused in the street by strangers and was sacked from her jobs at a pharmacy and the local pub.

Her local Country Fire Association had given her the boot and the footy club no longer wanted a bar of her.

Ooms had faced a maximum penalty of 10 years in jail.

The court heard Ooms' young victim - who was just a few weeks short of turning 17 - had snuck out in the dead of night to have sex with his then school teacher.'

Video Game Writer Chris Avellone’s Accusers Issue Public Statement Retracting Allegations Of Misconduct

Matt · 25 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Back in June of 2021 I reported on video game writer Chris Avellone’s libel lawsuit against two women who had accused Avellone of sexual assault on Twitter. Avellone publicly denied the accusations and announced he was taking both women to court over their statements.

Now, nearly two years later, the case has been settled. Avellone’s accusers, Karissa Barrows and Kelly Bristol, have signed a joint statement retracting their previous claims on social media and clearing Avellone of any wrongdoing. A seven-figure payment to Avellone is part of a confidential settlement between the parties according to Avellone's lawyers.

...

“Mr. Avellone never sexually abused either of us. We have no knowledge that he has ever sexually abused any women. We have no knowledge that Mr. Avellone has ever misused corporate funds. Anything we have previously said or written about Mr. Avellone to the contrary was not our intent. We wanted to support women in the industry. In so doing, our words have been misinterpreted to suggest specific allegations of misconduct that were neither expressed nor intended. We are passionate about the safety, security and agency of women, minorities, LGBTQIA+ persons, and every other community that has seen persecution in the video game industry. We believe Mr. Avellone shares a desire to protect and uplift those communities. We believe that he deserves a full return to the industry and support him in those endeavors.”

- Karissa Barrows, Kelly Rae Bristol'

Marama Davidson: “I am the prevention violence Minister, and I know who causes violence in the world, and it’s white cis men’.

Mastodon · 26 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marama Davidson yesterday said, “I am the prevention violence Minister, and I know who causes violence in the world, and it’s white cis men’.

Clearly the Minister misspoke and she didn’t actually mean that her Ministerial position has led her to believe that all white cis men cause all the violence in the world.

The irony of stating white cis men cause the violence in the world only to be run over by a Māori Destiny Church Biker an hour later is too great.'

Wikipedia on Marama Davidson

Women leaders make work better. Here’s the science behind how to promote them

Mastodon · 26 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When more women are empowered to lead, everyone benefits. Decades of studies show women leaders help increase productivity, enhance collaboration, inspire organizational dedication, and improve fairness.

Despite these benefits, only 10% of Fortune 500 companies are led by women. How can businesses create more opportunities for women in leadership spaces using psychological science?

Industrial/organizational (I/O) psychologists offer a host of evidence-backed strategies for helping close the gender gap. These include earlier identification of leadership potential, training for men and others already in power to serve as allies, and formal mentoring and sponsorship programs.

“Even in 2023, women still face challenges to their authority and success that are greater than those faced by their male counterparts,” said Alice Eagly, PhD, a professor of psychology emerita at Northwestern University and pioneer in researching women’s leadership. “However, despite these difficulties, women are slowly rising in political leadership and in corporate and educational leadership.”'

Governor Hochul Announces Initiative to Improve Food Benefit Access for Women, Infants and Children

Mastodon · 26 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Governor Kathy Hochul today announced a new client feedback initiative that will improve understanding of the challenges New Yorkers face enrolling in the Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children, also known as WIC. Announced as part of Governor Hochul's 2023 State of the State address, the New York State Department of Health will partner with Code for America to pilot a live, online chat program that will help the agency gather client feedback to improve the WIC program and enrollment statewide.'

Stanford Goes All In On “Diversity”, 2023 Surgical Team Includes Zero White Men

Mastodon · 26 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stanford University announced its 2023 Surgical Residency Intern Class earlier this month.

The new class will start their residency programs at Stanford’s School of Medicine in June 2023. The Ivy League school made the announcement on Twitter.

One Twitter user, @EndWokeness, pointed out the surprising amount of women and nonwhite individuals that are entering the prestigious school’s residency program.

“Stanford’s 2023 surgical team: 92% women (US: 50% women) 69% nonwhite (US: 38% nonwhite) 0% white men (US: 30% white men),” the Twitter user wrote, suggesting the university may be accepting candidates based off of their race or gender.'

UK: Concerns about harassment have ‘morphed into institutional misandry’, MP says

Mastodon · 26 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Concerns about sexual harassment have “morphed into an institutional misandry”, a Conservative former minister said.

Senior Tory MP Sir Christopher Chope warned that the public debate about harassment was having a damaging impact on the mental health of men and boys, as a Bill aimed at creating a specific offence of sexual harassment cleared the Commons.

The Protection from Sex-based Harassment in Public Bill received an unopposed third reading from MPs, and will now face scrutiny in the House of Lords.

Warning about the impact of the public discussion around sexual harassment, Christchurch MP Sir Christopher said: “There seems to be an inability to hold two notions in our heads, that sexual assault is bad and that treating men as inherent sex pests is also bad.

“A reasonable worry about assault appears to have morphed into an institutional misandry.”

He added: “There is a lack of recognition that, as with all crimes, the proportion of perpetrators is vanishingly small, the awful behaviour of few is leading to the mistreatment of all.

“The consequences of all this, and let’s be extremely careful with language that we use, is that the situation which is already bad in relation to the mental health issues of boys and young men is going to get even worse.”'

National Party leader Christopher Luxon demands Marama Davidson apologise to cis white men

Mastodon · 28 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'National is demanding Marama Davidson apologise to cis white men over her comments from Saturday. Prime Minister Chris Hipkins says he considers the matter closed.

Davidson clarified her comments on Monday after criticism over her comments about cis white men committing violence, saying she should have been clearer but had just been hit by a motorcycle and was being followed down the street by far-right network Counterspin Media.

She had initially said as prevention of sexual and family violence minister, she knew it was white cis men who caused violence. Her clarification said violence happened in every community and was unacceptable in any, but women were overwhelmingly more likely to be victims of family and sexual violence.'

Male domestic abuse campaigner says schools should share the blame for Andrew Tate's popularity because boys are 'unfairly treated by society'

Mastodon · 29 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A masculinity activist has warned schools that they are partially responsible for the popularity of misogynistic 'influencer' Andrew Tate.

The 36-year-old, accused of human trafficking, rape and forming an organised crime group to exploit victims, has been detained in a Romanian prison since December 29.

Speaking to The Times, Mark Brooks, a co-founder of the Men and Boys Coalition, said Tate's toxic masculinity was popular because boys are 'unfairly treated by society' and warned schools are not addressing problems adequately.

Mr Brooks warned of a lack of male teachers and whether the institutions were 'actually boy friendly'.

This comes as a new YouGov survey about what it means 'to be a man' found that almost a third of young men thought society did not care about them.'

Kennedy introduces bill to ensure due process for college students in school proceedings

Mastodon · 29 March 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sen. John Kennedy (R-La.), a member of the Senate Judiciary committee, introduced the Ensuring Fairness for Students Act to codify due process in Title IX proceedings for students who are accused of sexual assault or harassment on school campuses. The bill would require schools to investigate and adjudicate formal complaints.

“The Biden White House wants to roll back fair proceedings on school campuses by making students guilty until proven innocent. That is not justice. Students’ rights don’t end where schools begin, and this bill makes sure that these serious investigations pursue justice without bias,” said Kennedy.'

Former U. Md. student cleared of sex assault claims sues school, 2 ex-members of campus advocacy group

Matt · 1 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A two-and-a-half-year drama has moved from a local campus disciplinary panel to a federal court room.

It involves a former University of Maryland student accused and later exonerated of a sexual assault accusation who has now filed a civil lawsuit against the school, two Title IX coordinators and two former students who were part of a campus sexual assault advocacy group. The suit is asking for at least $1 million in damages.

According to the lawsuit, on Oct. 27, 2020, a student referred to in the suit as “Jane Roe” accused two students — including the plaintiff in this case who uses the pseudonym of “John Doe” — of sexually assaulting her.

After an investigation and a hearing conducted by the University of Maryland’s Office of Civil Rights and Sexual Misconduct on Sept. 1, 2021, the hearing officer found “Roe” lacked credibility and found both “Doe” and his friend “Jacob Poe” were not responsible for the two claims that she made, according to “Doe’s” suit. The man referred to now as “Jacob Poe” makes no other appearance in this case.'

‘A Joke That's Gone Wrong': Frisco Mother Tries to Clear Son's Name Amid ‘TikTok Joke' Punishment

Mastodon · 2 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Broom says she’s especially outraged over what happened next. Students, including Jordan, returned to Cobb MS the following week. Broom says she met with the school’s other assistant principal who had not been at school for several days.

“She reopened [the case] because she can, is what she said,” said Broom.

This assistant principal reportedly handed Jordan a more severe punishment: 45 days at an alternative school.

“That is not him and I don’t know what she heard or why she decided to say that’s what she heard, but we’re talking about Jordan,” she said.

Her son, she says, is a jokester and a good kid who always makes people laugh.'

Former OSU football players acquitted of rape charges based on 'consent video' of crying female filmed immediately after incident

Mastodon · 2 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two former football players from The Ohio State University (OSU) were acquitted on rape and kidnapping charges last month based upon a "consent video." The defendants claim they were advised by school officials to film such videos to absolve them of potential rape allegations.

On February 4, 2020, a 19-year-old female OSU student visited the apartment of a fellow OSU student and football player, Amir Reip. When the case was initially reported to Columbus police, the female—whose identity has not been revealed in news coverage—stated that she engaged in consensual sex with Reip but withdrew consent in the middle of the activity.

The key piece of evidence for the jury's acquittal was a video filmed immediately after the sexual activity concluded. The woman, pictured naked and crying, states in the video that the encounter was consensual, but she later told police that she only said this so Reip and Wint would eventually let her leave the premises.

Both defendants testified that OSU officials had instructed them and other football players to protect themselves against sexual assault allegations by filming videos of their partners describing the consensual nature of their activities.'

AOC slammed over video bashing straight men hours after Nashville shooting

Mastodon · 3 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) is facing backlash for engaging in a “culture war” with a video bashing straight men in the wake of the Nashville school shooting.

On Monday, Ocasio-Cortez blasted “straight men” as the sexual predators that society should be concerned about in the defense of drag queen shows.

“Many of these disgusting and insinuating attacks on trans and LGBTQ people are actually projections of what predatory cisgender and often straight men do when left alone in the presence of women or sometimes horribly children,” Ocasio-Cortez said in an Instagram video. “Don’t get it twisted because a lot of people attacking drag are projecting.”'

Why teenage boys need kindness, not harsher discipline

Mastodon · 3 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a secondary school teacher of nearly 20 years experience, I've seen many ways in which toxic masculinity can manifest itself in the classroom.

I should be angry with the boys whose behaviour brings to life the cultural menace that is toxic masculinity. But I'm not. Working with these boys generates a sensation deeper than anger.

It's a heavy and stomach-turning combination of feeling disgusted, threatened and disempowered by boys living out adopted values that are simply not their own. These young people have been damaged by our contemporary culture and they need our help.

At its best, toxic masculinity in schools looks like behaviours we've explained away for decades by saying, "it's just boys being boys". Offensive things, like penises drawn on desks, using loud and aggressive voices, derailing class discussions with sexualised and suggestive comments directed at both teachers and other students, and contributing to a classroom culture that makes it difficult for anyone to learn.

From my experience, school-based toxic masculinity can also look like boys dominating the classroom with physical intimidation that causes girls to withdraw from learning. It's behaviours that make others, particularly girls, not want to climb the tree, put up their hand to answer a question, play sport, select STEM-based subjects or sit at the back of the bus. It's behaviour that tells the girls, and everyone else, that we matter more than you.'

School superintendent candidate says job offer was rescinded after calling two females 'ladies' in email

Matt · 3 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An incoming Massachusetts school superintendent revealed that his job offer was rescinded prior to his start date after he addressed two women on the school's committee as "ladies" in an email.

Vito Perrone was offered the position as the head of Easthampton Schools on March 23, but was notified that the job offer had been withdrawn over his choice of salutation in an email to the chairperson and executive assistant, both female, who reportedly interpreted his "ladies" greeting as a "microaggression," the Daily Hampshire Gazette reported.'

UK: Probation service needs more men to tackle masculinity issues, chief says

Mastodon · 4 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More male probation officers are needed to tackle masculinity issues, the new chief says.

Kim Thornden-Edwards chief probation officer for England and Wales, said employing more men could help tackle violent criminals such as domestic abusers.

Personnel in the service, which oversees 240,000 convicts and offenders According to her, 75 percent of women serving sentences outside prison are “stuck” for 30 years.

“Maybe it would be good for a woman to lead a domestic violence case, but it would also be good for a man to address these issues of masculinity and power from a male perspective.”'

ChatGPT Falsely Accused Jonathan Turley of Sexual Harassment

Mastodon · 5 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fox News contributor and George Washington University law professor Jonathan Turley is raising the alarm about the dangers of artificial intelligence's (AI) political bias and false claims after he was wrongly accused of sexual harassment by ChatGPT. AI could be a real threat to free speech, he said.

...

Turley wrote an April 3 piece for USA Today titled, "ChatGPT falsely accused me of sexually harassing my students. Can we really trust AI?" Turley wrote, "What is most striking is that this false accusation was not just generated by AI but ostensibly based on a Washington Post article that never existed." [Emphasis added]. AI seemingly generated false accusations for two other law professors, too, Turley added.

Turley aptly noted that, "The use of AI and algorithms can give censorship a false patina of science and objectivity." But, as he put it, "AI and AI algorithms are no less biased and flawed than the people who program them."'

Malta: Femicide law to be tested in constitutional challenge claiming it is discriminatory

Mastodon · 6 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lawyers representing the first man to be accused of the new offence of femicide, after shooting his wife dead last year, are questioning its constitutionality.

This emerges from an application to the First Hall of the Civil Court in its constitutional jurisdiction, which was filed this morning on behalf of Roderick Cassar.

Cassar, 42, from Qrendi is currently the subject of criminal proceedings, in which he is accused of fatally shooting his wife, Bernice Cassar, from close range at the Corradino industrial estate in Paola, not far from her workplace.
...
"Why is the murder of a woman, committed under one of the circumstances mentioned in Article 211A [rendering it wilful femicide], is taken to be worse than the murder of a man carried out in identical circumstances." The same was argued about the harsher punishment.'

The war on ‘toxic masculinity’ makes struggling boys, men prey for Andrew Tate

Mastodon · 6 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The answer may be that boys have been left to fail.

Although our society has been rightfully concerned with the advancement of girls and women over the past several decades, we’ve simultaneously ignored glaring warning signs that something is wrong with boys.

On educational, economic and health metrics alike, they’ve been falling further and further behind women.

As parents, partners and friends, we should all be coming together to discuss why our young men and boys are struggling.

But, instead, we find ourselves embroiled in a culture war over toxic masculinity that leaves no one speaking to boys’ plights.

In fact, they’re being beaten over the head with overtly anti-male rhetoric that asserts just about any of society’s ills can be blamed on men.

Headlines like “Toxic Masculinity Is Killing Us” and “Toxic Masculinity Is Costing Us About $15.7 Billion Every Single Year” and book titles like “How to Date Men When You Hate Men” are countless.

Even Scientific American joined the conversation in 2019 with an article entitled “How to Fight Toxic Masculinity,” and the American Psychological Association has declared that “traditional masculinity is psychologically harmful.”'

Spain approves draft law for gender quotas in business and politics

Mastodon · 6 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The draft law requires political parties to field an equal number of male and female candidates during elections, whether national or municipal. Women now make up 43% of Spain's congress and 40% of its senate.

Parties that lead central government will have to appoint a cabinet that includes at least 40% of each gender. The Socialist-led government counts 14 women among its 23 cabinet ministers, slightly more than 60%.

Publicly listed companies will have until mid-2024 to ensure corporate boards include at least 40% of the "underrepresented sex", said Calviño. Companies with more than 250 workers and annual turnover that exceeds €50m will have until 2026 to do the same.'

Florida woman found with 24 pipe bombs pleads guilty to avoid jail, focus on mental health

Mastodon · 6 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Florida woman who was found with 24 homemade pipe bombs and a hit list pleaded guilty Wednesday to avoid prison, and will instead receive mental health treatment.

Michelle Kolts pleaded guilty in a Tampa courtroom to reduce charges following her 2019 arrest. She was originally charged with 24 counts of making, possessing and discharging a destructive device.

"Twenty-four months of community control followed by 15 years probation," prosecutor Lindsey Hodges said, Fox Tampa reported.

Authorities found 24 homemade bombs in Kolts' bedroom in the home she shared with her parents in October 2019. The devices were filled with nails, screws, and pellets, along with materials to make more bombs, and books about terrorist bombings. Also found was a hit list.

Kolts was arrested on charges that could have landed her in prison for 100 years. However, in 2019, she was found unfit to stand trial following years of mental health evaluations and treatment. She was eventually diagnosed with schizophrenia.

Her mental health treatment will include counseling at an in-house facility. There will be no record of a criminal conviction as well.

"She's not going to suffer the stigma of a conviction on any of those counts as long as she stays crime free and abides by the terms of her probation," Kolts' attorney, Barry Taracks, said.'

Michigan Dem's job listing 'strongly' encourages everybody but straight White men to apply

Mastodon · 7 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Michigan Democrat member of Congress sent out a job listing "strongly" encouraging everyone but straight White men to apply.

The office of Rep. Hillary Scholten, D-Mich., put out a job listing recently for the senior communications director role in her office that would play an integral role in her office's operations.

Scholten's listing for the job with a salary between $85,000 and $120,000 goes on to "strongly" encourages people of varying personal characteristics to apply — except for straight White men.

"We strongly encourage women (and all individuals who do not identify as male), people of color, LGBTQIA+ individuals, people with disabilities, veterans, and members of other underrepresented communities to apply," the listing reads.'

Ironically, the listing also includes a "notice" at the bottom claiming all "applicants will be considered without regard to race, color, religion, sex (including marital or parental status), sexual orientation, gender identity, disability, age, or national origin."

Single-Sex Spaces for Me, But Not for Thee

Mastodon · 9 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There has been a good deal of talk lately about women's spaces being invaded by biologically male persons identifying as women. Some women's campaigners claim that the trans phenomenon constitutes an attack on womanhood itself, an attempt to "erase" women and replace them with men who perform womanhood. Some even call it a new form of patriarchy.

But well before women had their single-sex spaces threatened, something similar had already happened to men. Beginning in the 1970s, men's spaces were usurped, their maleness was denigrated, and policies and laws forced changes in male behavior that turned many workplaces into feminized fiefdoms in which men held their jobs only so long as women allowed them to. The very idea of an exclusively male workspace or club—especially if it was a space for socializing (not so much if it was a sewer, oil field, or shop floor in which men did unpleasant, dangerous work)—came to be seen as dangerous. In light of the recent furor over single-sex spaces for women, it is useful to consider the source of some men's justifiable apathy and resentment.'

As number of women rises in higher ed, free speech declines on campuses: survey

Mastodon · 10 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the number of women in higher education continues to rise, free speech on college campuses declines, said Professor Samuel Abrams, a social scientist at Sarah Lawrence College.

Abrams determined the trend by analyzing the results of a nationwide survey of faculty conducted by the Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression, pointing out that compared to male counterparts, female scholars are more likely to agree with suppressing and punishing unpopular speech.

“Fifty-one percent of women professors reported that they could envision shouting down a speaker to prevent them from speaking on campus as being acceptable, compared to just 39 percent of men,” Abrams wrote in a March 24 piece for the American Enterprise Institute, where he serves as a senior fellow.

For white male professors who refuse diversity training, almost half of female professors “believe their male counterparts should face some sort of sanction,” he wrote.

“Thirty percent of female professors believe [the male] professors should be removed from the classroom until they comply. Seventeen percent of female professors believe that these male professors should be suspended until they comply. Two percent of female faculty even believe that their white male counterparts should be fired,” Abrams wrote.

In comparison, only 26 percent of male faculty think the professors should be punished, he wrote.'

Penn State Gender Equity Center hosts activist with history of racist, antisemitic comments

Mastodon · 10 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Penn State University's Gender Equity Center recently hosted a far-left race activist who has a history of racially insensitive and antisemitic comments.

The Daily Collegian reports Feminista Jones (pictured), an "educator, feminist writer, public speaker, community activist, and retired social worker" according to her website, spoke about how "preventions demand equity" for Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

Jones told her April 3 audience that the "standard of masculinity put forth by white men" is responsible for males' desire to control women and hence "elevated rates of sexual violence."'

The Meaning Of The “Sex War” – by Wyndham Lewis (1926)

Matt · 11 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Book excerpt here. No text excerpt is possible because images are used to render the text.

Massachusetts now discriminates against white males who want to start a non-profit

Mastodon · 12 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Massachusetts, you can start a non-profit with a board that is 100% women and/or designated minority members, but the board can't be more than 49% white male.

For nearly a decade, my brother and I have helped thousands of cats and dogs return home. With the help of our followers, I used the New Bedford Guide and New Bedford Pet Detective Facebook pages to reunite missing pets with their owners. I feel we've done a lot of good for the community and decided to look into starting a non-profit to raise funds to boost the posts on Facebook and potentially add a paid person to assist. We've never taken a penny and have dedicated countless of hours to the cause.

After two minutes of research and to my surprise, white males can't be the majority of a new non-profit in Massachusetts. To start a non-profit, we'd have to give up complete control of the cause to other people because we are white men.'

Rep. Katie Porter scalded ex-husband's scalp with potatoes: documents

Mastodon · 13 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The former husband of Rep. Katie Porter said the California Democrat frequently abused him verbally and threw "toys, books and other objects" at him during their marriage — even pouring scalding-hot mashed potatoes on his head during a fight, according to divorce records.

Matthew Hoffman, who filed for divorce from Porter in 2013, said in a request for a restraining order dated April 30 of that year that he was "routinely" called a "f—ing idiot" and "f—ing incompetent" by his rage-prone spouse, who also shattered a glass coffee pot on their kitchen counter in March 2012 when she felt their house wasn't clean enough.

"She would not let me have a cell phone because she said, 'You're too f—ing dumb to operate it,'" Hoffman said of Porter, 49, who has also been accused of ridiculing former members of her staff.

...

In 2006, Hoffman said, Porter took issue with how Hoffman was preparing mashed potatoes for dinner, asking him: "Can't you read the f—ing instructions!" Then, her ex-husband said, Porter raised a "ceramic bowl of steaming hot potatoes and dumped it on my head, burning my scalp."'

Putin signs a tough new military draft law, banning conscripts from fleeing Russia

Matt · 14 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On a basic level, the new law makes it very difficult for Russians — mostly men but also women with specialized skills — to avoid being drafted or conscripted.

Until now, military recruitment officers have had to go in person to deliver a paper summons to a draftee's home or workplace.

That system will now be supplanted by electronic notifications — i.e. emails — issued through systems including the web portals that Russians use to pay their utility bills, taxes and other services.

The electronic notification will be binding from the moment the government hits send.

And with the new law, draftees are immediately banned from leaving the country.

Those who fail to show up at a recruitment office promptly will soon face a raft of new restrictions related to banking, selling property and even gaining access to a driver's license.

Already before the reform, people who refused orders to serve in the military have faced a possible prison sentence of up to 10 years.'

At least 6 female teachers arrested for sexual misconduct with students over two days across US

Mastodon · 15 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At least six female teachers were arrested in a span of two days this week for having sex with students — including a Kentucky staffer who allegedly had trysts with a pair of 16-year-old boys.

Ellen Shell, 38, of Danville, was arraigned in Garrard County District Court on Thursday after prosecutors said she had sex with the teens on two separate occasions in July and August of last year.

Shell worked as a teacher's aide at Woodlawn Elementary School and was employed at Lancaster Elementary School prior to that, according to WTKR.

...

The bust was just one of at least six recent cases of female teachers engaging in sexual misconduct with their teen charges in recent days, according to reports from across the country.'

‘Wealthy White Men’ Most Likely to 'Repeatedly Violate the Rights of Others,' University of Texas Psych Quiz States

Mastodon · 17 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A University of Texas psychology professor is apologizing to her students after including a question on a quiz that stated "wealthy white men" are "most likely to repeatedly violate the rights of others."

The quiz was a part of Professor Kirsten Bradbury’s Personality Psychology course and asked students which demographic is most likely to be diagnosed with Antisocial Personality Disorder.

After stipulating the disease itself is "a racist diagnosis in the way that it has been applied," Bradbury’s quiz stated: "Neither race nor gender is determinative in Antisocial Personality Disorder. However, if we must go there, which sociodemographic group is most likely to repeatedly violate the rights of others in a pattern of behavior that includes violence, deceit, irresponsibility, and a lack of remorse?" The answer: wealthy white men.
...

Bradbury was the recipient in 2017 of the University of Texas Board of Regents’s highest teaching honor, which comes with a $25,000 cash prize. Her biography on the university’s website indicates that her academic interests include "parenting stress," "firearms and firearm safety," and "firearm-related parenting."'

Feminists don’t believe in feminism either

Mastodon · 17 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist activist Gloria Steinem may not have coined the phrase, “A woman needs a man like a fish needs a bicycle,” but she did popularize it. And Brookings Institution scholar Richard Reeves correctly identifies the sentiment as “the goal of that wave of the women’s movement.” But just how independent of men do most women really want to be?

As Reeves recounts on a recent podcast promoting his new book Of Boys and Men, even feminists want men to support them.

Reeves’s admission came after Progress Network podcast co-host Emma Varvaloucas noted that women aren't really readapting to a world where most childless women actually earn more than the average man.

“There was this stat in your book that was really striking,” Varvaloucas said. “I think it was something like 80% of women, and please correct me if I’m wrong, still want a partner that makes more money than them. So it’s actually — the renegotiation is not completely happening on both sides. And I’m not sure if women are also really doing as much renegotiation as they think they are doing.”

Reeves agreed, citing research from Harvard University’s Claudia Goldin showing that those women with the most options, women that make the most money and have the most advanced degrees, are also more likely to exit the workforce when they become mothers to care for their children if they have a husband who can support them.'

Boys have been left devastated by the woke attitude to masculinity

Mastodon · 17 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Society is in danger of demonising boys and young men. They are lambasted in schools by toxic masculinity crusaders and denigrated in popular culture. This environment is having a crushing impact. According to the Health Department, suicide is the biggest cause of death in men under the age of 50 and around three-quarters of deaths from suicides each year are men. Research from Future Dads last year showed that around a third of young men felt left behind by society.

Commentary routinely seems to present boys as inherently bad. The impression is given that parents cannot be trusted to raise them as good citizens, leading to the worrying conclusion that outside organisations should do the job for them. But some organisations which come into schools and talk to boys have developed a habit of telling them to move away from “toxic” masculinity. That, in my view, feeds into a sense of uneasiness.

There urgently needs to be more public and parental scrutiny of this type of content. We need to know exactly what is being said to boys in educational settings. I remain hopeful that the Government’s review on Relationship, Health and Sex Education (RHSE) will lead to firmer guidance on bringing external groups into schools, but it may also need to reinstate a right for parents to first view, and then withdraw their children from workshops that they deem harmful and oppressive to their children.'

A silent crisis in men’s health gets worse

Matt · 18 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A silent crisis in men’s health is shortening the life spans of fathers, husbands, brothers and sons.

For years, the conventional wisdom has been that a lack of sex-specific health research mainly hurts women and gender minorities. While those concerns are real, a closer look at longevity data tells a more complicated story.

Across the life span — from infancy to the teen years, midlife and old age — the risk of death at every age is higher for boys and men than for girls and women.

...

The topic of men’s health simply hasn’t caught on as something that advocates, corporate sponsors and politicians want to get behind. While the pink-ribbon has been elevated to iconic status to signal breast cancer awareness, nothing in men’s health has achieved the same level of attention.

“There is an empathy gap,” Henry said. “There are people who shrug and say, ‘Yes, men die younger. That’s the way the world is.’ It doesn’t need to be that way. If we devote attention and resources, we can change the outcomes for men.”'

Houston Rescuers Prove the Lie of ‘Toxic Masculinity’

Mastodon · 18 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men. We are just the worst, with our toxic masculinity and patriarchal privilege. We are the source of literally all of the world’s problems, from war, income inequality, and “rape culture” to the misogynistic microaggressions of “mansplaining” and “manspreading.” If we are ever to create a nonviolent, truly gender-equal world, we must rip away the false, culturally constructed façade of masculinity. We must free ourselves from the strictures of macho posturing, embrace vulnerability, and redefine what it means to be strong.

That is the message being promoted incessantly today from celebrities like John Legend to the halls of academia to media outlets such as Slate, Salon, and HuffPost. Seemingly overnight, our culture has unquestioningly embraced the term “toxic masculinity.” Male nature itself is the problem, we are told, and the solution is the deconstruction of our understanding of what it means to be a man. But photos and news reports coming out of the devastation wreaked in Texas by Hurricane Harvey are putting the lie to this subversive idea.'

Arkansas SB 365 means year-round due process rights for college students

Mastodon · 18 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, Arkansas Governor Sarah Huckabee Sanders signed into law SB 365, a bill that codifies crucial due process protections before, during, and after campus disciplinary proceedings. FIRE Legislative Counsel Greg Y. Gonzalez testified in support of the bill in the Senate Education Committee.

SB 365, the Arkansas Student Due Process and Protection Act, provides an array of due process protections for students and student organizations facing suspension or expulsion. And it improves what was the status quo: Arkansas previously explicitly required a right to counsel only during an appeal of a disciplinary proceeding. This law amends that statute and provides far greater protections.'

Russian army launches campaign encouraging men to join

Matt · 21 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A wide-ranging advertising campaign appears to have been launched in Russia urging citizens to join the military.

It comes as the Russian armed forces have reportedly been suffering heavy losses and struggling to make progress in Ukraine more than a year after invading it.

The Defence Ministry in Moscow released a video appealing to Russians to give up their civilian jobs in favour of a contract with the military.

The video features a supermarket guard, a fitness instructor and a taxi driver - all apparently disillusioned with civilian life and finding fulfilment after joining the army.

The video promises a monthly salary of at least 204,000 roubles ($2,500, £2,000), four times Russia's average.'

Reference to ‘white male’ advantages booed on Oklahoma House floor

Mastodon · 25 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boos pierced an otherwise quiet afternoon in the Oklahoma House of Representatives on Monday after a relatively routine bill on small-business development turned into a debate on “reverse discrimination” and the plight of white males.

Senate Bill 119, by Sen. Michael Bergstrom, R-Adair, would somewhat broaden eligibility for the Oklahoma Supplier Diversity Initiative, a state Department of Commerce program intended to connect small businesses with potential customers, including state agencies.

It especially targets small businesses owned by minorities, women and U.S. military veterans by providing some technical assistance on applications and the like and by listing them on a website promoted to potential clients.

“Is this trying to level the playing field for all the white males who are booing?” she asked, addressing her questions to Lepak under the rules of the House. “Would you agree they’ve already enjoyed a great privilege in America as it relates to jobs?”

Olsen and Goodwin then both debated against the bill for diametrically opposed reasons. Olsen claimed that the original program, at least, is an example of “reverse discrimination,” while Goodwin said the measure itself dilutes a program intended to help women, minorities, disabled veterans and other disadvantaged groups with small businesses.'

MSU says business boot camp that excluded White males now open to all ‘irrespective’ of race, sex

Mastodon · 25 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A business boot camp at Missouri State University that excluded White males is now offering the program to everyone "irrespective of their race and/or sex" after a government watchdog organization urged the state Attorney General to investigate for discrimination.

The Spring 2023 Early-Stage Business Boot Camp was an eight-week course offered exclusively to "aspiring and/or women small business owners who have recently started or are in the idea phrase."

White males were ineligible to apply.

On Tuesday, the Equal Protection Project (EPP), filed a complaint to Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, urging him to investigate.

The group alleged that MSU was "engaging in racial- and gender-based discrimination through its sponsorship, promotion, and hosting of a small business training ‘boot camp’ that limits participation" to women and people who identify as "BIPOC" – an acronym for non-white "Black, Indigenous and Persons of Color."'

Waterloo Catholic trustee calls Christian males “threats,” concerned parents speak out

Mastodon · 25 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents as First Educators (PAFE) is calling for the resignation of a Waterloo Catholic school board trustee who publicly commented on Twitter that the “most dangerous creature on the planet is the white Christian male.”

In a now-deleted Tweet, the first-term Waterloo Catholic District School Board (WCDSB) trustee Wendy Ashby called Christian males a “threat to anyone that is not them.”

PAFE Project Director Amelia Willis says that Ashby’s comments have alarmed parents, who are concerned about the well-being of their children in the classroom.'

UK: Keir Starmer’s masculinity lessons miss the point

Mastodon · 25 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Keir Starmer has announced that under Labour, boys will be taught to respect women and girls. The National Curriculum will now include classes in “Banter: Not Even Once” and “Girls are Great, OK?”

I jest, but to what extent is Starmer’s plan to introduce discussion about the social treatment of women and girls into schools realistic? It’s a sorry sign of things when the sexes have to be taught to treat each other slightly better than a used paper bag.

Labour’s concomitant aim to halve incidents of domestic violence against women and girls within a decade is an admirable one, but telling young men, who already drag behind girls at school and college, that they need to call each other out over misogynistic comments, however jokey, seems doomed to failure. If we can’t engage in cathartic light mockery of each other and ourselves, then the only alternative seems to be to outlaw humour altogether.'

UK: Labour considers plan to educate boys to curb violence against women

Mastodon · 25 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour is considering plans to roll out education for young boys on violence against women and girls (VAWG) in an effort to tackle the epidemic.

Keir Starmer believes “prevention” is extremely important and will play a crucial role in ensuring his party achieves its mission to halve VAWG within a decade.

...

The actor Emily Atack and the Love Island star Georgia Harrison, who also spoke at the event, praised Starmer for his mission and urged the party to ensure more professionals are able to educate young men in schools on different forms of abuse.

“We must look at toxic masculinity, which is a huge issue, take the blame off the victim, stop the victim blaming and actually focus on the perpetrators,” Atack said, adding that she believed the best way to tackle this was to introduce more experts into the education system.'

UK: Labour’s ‘lessons for boys’ plan is a sinister sideshow

Mastodon · 25 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Labour party’s latest plan is for part of the school day to be set aside to make boys hear from women who have been victims of male violence and abuse. Speaking at an event in south London this week, Keir Starmer announced that he wants to see the national curriculum expanded to include compulsory lessons on the importance of respecting women. His hope is that this will help to ‘bring about cultural change’ and embolden boys to ‘call out’ friends who act in a misogynistic way. Labour hopes that rooting out inappropriate behaviour in young boys will help halve incidents of violence against women and girls within a decade.

In singling out boys, Starmer has taken the political path of least resistance. Boys have long been seen as a problem, with white, working class boys the biggest problem of all. A narrative of toxic masculinity portrays men as a danger to women, society and themselves. As boys grow up to be men, and therefore potential perpetrators of abuse, schools are expected to provide a moral prophylactic. According to Starmer, this should involve subjecting them to first-hand accounts of victims of sexual harassment and assault. As a boy, you must have your original sin firmly stamped out.'

"I Have Never Been a Feminist"

Mastodon · 26 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today's feminists have done nothing to improve the status of women in society. To the contrary, they have created greater divisions between men and women and in the general culture. Their agenda is not to empower women but to teach them how to attack those who don't support them in humiliating and discounting men.
...
The term feminism is meaningless in this world. It's time that women support both men and women in the workforce, in daily life, and in relationships, rather than spend their time emasculating men and trying to shame them. This is a time when people need to individually stay in their own lanes, but help each other to fight through the storms of adversity and conflict.'

Guest opinion: Masculinity at a crossroads over warring societal gender pressures

Mastodon · 26 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although women are currently facing gender issues and have historically received the brunt of the gender gap, very few sources talk about men's concerns outside of alpha male podcasts and misogynistic commentators. For example, if you were to walk around a campus today you would find posters, programs and panels that invite women to participate in male-dominated industries. On these campuses, banners read "Women in Law" and "Women in STEM." However, you would rarely, if ever, see a poster that said "Men in the Humanities" or "Men in Education." On the news, companies highlight their female employees and hide their male workers like a shameful scar. Professors inadvertently silence male voices on topical social issues.

School teachers commend female students on their handwriting, brilliance and behavior then turn to their male pupils and ask with venom why they can't "grow up." Meanwhile, Youtube, Twitter and TikTok are filled with dangerously aggressive, misogynistic bloggers, some of whom are engaged in criminal activity. Young men are then placed in between these two worlds pitted against each other and forced to make an impossible choice: follow those who attack them because they are men or follow those who don't support women. Who will be the role model of our teenage boys?

The strides that women have made over the last few decades are commendable and need to continue, but as women break down barriers and make progress, men and masculinity shouldn't be vilified. The battle is not against "the other" but against our individual and collective sins. Everyone should feel confident expressing their personality and gender openly regardless of how masculine or feminine they are. Each time pop culture carelessly says "Kill All Men," "Men are Trash," "Male Privilege," "Manspreading," "Mansplaining," "Toxic Masculinity" or "Patriarchy," it paints men as perpetrators of crimes against morality and gives power to the ideology feminism is trying to combat.'

'Not proven' verdict will be abolished for rape cases and defendants will face juryless trials amid sweeping justice reforms in Scotland

Matt · 28 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sweeping justice reforms will see the abolition of the controversial not proven verdict – and a plan to introduce juryless rape trials.

In the biggest shake-up of the legal system for decades, the centuries-old third option for jurors will be axed in a bid to increase Scotland's low rape conviction rate.

As part of the changes, victims will have their own 'tsar' to stand up for their rights – and a specialist sex crimes court will be set up.

Anti-rape campaigners welcomed the new Bill but the proposed legislation has sparked a backlash among lawyers and opposition politicians over the potential erosion of key cornerstones of the Scottish justice system.

Sandy Brindley, chief executive of Rape Crisis Scotland, said: 'There is a huge amount of research and evidence to suggest that these steps will not only make engaging with the justice system easier for survivors but lead to more justice being done."

Plans approved for Britain’s first women’s-only tower block

Mastodon · 29 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Planners have approved designs for what is believed to be Britain’s first women’s-only tower block.

The scheme for 102 flats to be rented to single women is to be built in west London by a housing association founded in 1920 as part of the suffragette movement.

Each home will have a deep balcony and will be designed specifically for women. Details could include slightly lower kitchen work surfaces and careful attention to ventilation to ensure comfort for menopausal women, said Women’s Pioneer Housing (WPH), the landlord.

The 15-storey tower in Ealing will offer homes for low social rents to women who face inequality, abuse and disadvantages in the housing market. Tenants are likely to include victims of domestic abuse and black and minority ethnic women who face a significant pay gap, making housing less affordable.

The person taking the tenancy must be a single woman, and men will only be able to live in the tower block if they become a tenant’s partner. The only way a tenant could be male is if they are the adult child of a female tenant and inherit the tenancy. Transgender women, including people intending to undergo gender reassignment, will be allowed, but men who cross-dress, transgender men, and anyone with a known history of male violence against women or children will not.'

Research Finds No Gender Bias in Academic Science

Mastodon · 29 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Claims of widespread gender bias in tenure-track hiring, grant funding and journal acceptances in the academic sciences are not supported by the data, a new study finds.

The paper published in Psychological Science in the Public Interest looked at two decades of research regarding biases that tenure-track women have faced since 2000. In the end, the authors determined tenure-track women in science, technology, engineering or math were at parity with men in tenure-track positions in the same fields when it comes to grant funding, journal acceptances and recommendation letters.

Women did have an advantage in the hiring process for the tenure-track jobs, though the evidence did show a bias against women in teaching evaluations and salaries. The salary gap, according to the report, was concerning but smaller than the oft-quoted statistic that women in STEM fields make 82 cents for every dollar that men earn. On average, the gap was 9 cents on the dollar, although the gap shrank to less than 4 cents when controlling for experience, type of institution and productivity, among other factors.'

UK: Toxic masculinity is so rife I'm terrified for my son's future

Mastodon · 29 April 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I knew I had to make sure he doesn't view women as inferior or feels entitled to control and demean his peers simply because of their gender.

And I know that we, as a society, should teach boys from childhood that violence against women and girls is a deadly epidemic that needs to be stopped

Labour's plans are not perfect, but they're a start.

Of course, during a teaching recruitment crisis and when funding is tighter than ever, it may feel hard to condone adding something like gender equality lessons or anti-toxic masculinity classes to the curriculum.

There will be concerns over how they will fit, what they will cost and who will even teach them.

But for me, that's exactly the point. Isn't that what caused this epidemic to run rampant in the first place?'

Liberal feminism misunderstands women by ignoring sexual difference: panel at Harvard

Mastodon · 2 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To respect women, feminism should not expect them to be more like men, according to three leading female feminist thinkers.

The three authors with unorthodox views on the topic shared their thoughts on reform at a “Rethinking Feminism” panel discussion at Harvard University on Thursday.

“Is feminism still essential? Absolutely,” Washington Post columnist Christine Emba said at the start of the event. “But let’s get clear on what it means.”

Emba, author of “Rethinking Sex: A Provocation,” said that some of the women she interviewed for her book believed that imitating men, particularly through having casual sex and “fucking like a man,” could overcome the divide between them.

However, Emba said, a feminism that benefits women would be one that values and respects difference.'

Feminist author charged after dumping drink on Rep. Matt Gaetz at Florida wine festival

Mastodon · 2 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Authorities have charged a Florida author of feminist literature with battery after she threw her drink at Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) during a wine festival over the weekend.

Selena J. Chambers, of Tallahassee, was jailed Saturday evening over the incident at the South Walton Beaches Wine and Food Festival. She was slapped with one count of battery on an elected official and one count of simple battery, according to an arrest report from the Walton County Sheriff's Office.

The 41-year-old Chambers, a Pushcart Prize-nominated writer of feminist horror stories, reportedly cursed out Gaetz and his wife before tossing her drink at the congressman. She then turned and walked away, flipping off the Florida representative.

A witness who was standing next to Gaetz told police that Chambers had been swearing loudly and was also struck with her drink after she threw it.'

The first crewed mission to Mars should be all female. Here’s why.

Mastodon · 2 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men have crewed every mission to the Moon so far, but when we finally send humans to Mars it would be wise to send only women — at least at first.

Mind you, this wouldn’t primarily be for fairness — a correction for the rampant sexism that denied American women the title of “astronaut” until Sally Ride‘s historic flight in 1983 — but rather a practical decision based on calculations as cold as deep space. Available evidence bluntly suggests that women would be more efficient and capable crewmembers on long-duration missions away from Earth.
...
Beyond physical practicality, there are psychological reasons women might be better suited to extended missions away from Earth.

“Statistics show that all-woman groups are far more likely to choose non-confrontational approaches to solve interpersonal problems, and most definitely are more likely to deal with a situation without resorting to violence, which could be a big problem on a Mars journey, where the crew must live in close quarters for 2-3 years,” Landis wrote. “Numerous sociological studies have shown that women, in general, are more cooperative, and less given to hierarchical social structures.”'

UK: Students plan protest against ‘anti feminist’ documentary screening

Mastodon · 4 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students are planning to protest the screening of Birthgap — Childless world, a documentary which blames the “pitfalls of Feminism and the modern dating-world” for “the planet’s collapsing birthrate”. The screening, hosted by a student, will be taking place at St John’s College on 12/05.

In an email sent out via the School of Biological Sciences (SBS) mailing list, the host advertised that the screening would be followed by a Q&A with the filmmaker Stephen J Shaw. In response to concerns voiced on Camfess, she criticised students as having “thrown their rattle out of the pram”. The documentary is Shaw’s first project.

The student host of the event, who has written for the Telegraph, and been featured on GB News, aims “to make students aware of the fast-approaching population collapse”. She hopes “to get high-achieving young people (who are most likely to end up unintentionally childless) to consider factoring in plans for parenthood into their career plans.”'

‘Selfish’ male bosses victims of ‘benevolent sexism’, study finds

Mastodon · 7 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Selfish male bosses are to blame for bad business performance while their female counterparts are perceived to be just victims of bad luck, according to a new academic study of gender stereotypes.

A joint study by the University of East Anglia, University of Melbourne and Monash University in Australia found that “benevolent sexism” – where women are seen as “affectionate and delicate individuals who need to be protected” – was widespread in the workplace.

Researchers added that men were more likely to give women the benefit of the doubt than their own female colleagues.

Participants in the study were divided into groups where one member was designated team leader and asked to make investment decisions.

The remainder were then asked to evaluate their performance based only on the outcome of the leader’s choices and their gender.

While men were blamed for risky behaviour and poor returns, women were more likely to be viewed as unlucky.'

Boys are struggling in schools. Maybe the one-size-fits-all education system is the problem

Mastodon · 8 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One common challenge for boys involves their energetic behavior. They receive a disproportionally higher number of punishments for perceived inattention and hyperactivity, according to a report from the American Psychological Association.

But parents question whether these punishments are justified in the face of boys' desire to move around, especially if they're required to sit at a desk for long intervals.

For example, Ivana Greco received reports from her son's kindergarten teacher that he had trouble sitting at his desk.

But once Greco began homeschooling him in second grade, she found he learned best while moving – completing worksheets on the floor, reading upside down on the couch, and jumping rope before a math lesson.

"Is part of the problem faced by boys not precisely maturity, but rather the inability of most schools to accommodate little boys' need to run, skip, and climb?" she wrote. "Many of these wiggly children are equally able to learn, including by tackling complex subjects. They don't lag in their ability to comprehend — rather, they lag in their ability to stay seated at a desk."

Dr. Leonard Sax, author of "Boys Adrift," goes further to argue schools should take more responsibility for their role in alienating boys from education altogether.'

A Boy Raised as a Girl Killed Himself 19 Years Ago Today

Mastodon · 8 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'David, born Bruce, lost his penis to a botched circumcision as an infant in 1966. After this event, his parents, Janet and Ron, though they lived in Canada, were referred to the leading “sexologist” at the time, John Money. Money was a psychologist who ran a clinic at Johns Hopkins University, where surgeons performed pediatric genital constructions. Genitals, then and now, are what we rely on to define an infant’s sex. It’s easier to "make a hole" than to "build a pole,” as one surgeon put it, so Money advised that Bruce be castrated and have his genitals modified to look as typically female as possible, then be raised as a girl, while keeping the real story secret.'

Prosecutors indicate that Bills punter whose life was ruined over rape accusation went home long before incident allegedly occurred

Mastodon · 9 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A pro football player accused of rape had his career upended and life ruined over something prosecutors now indicate he could not possibly have done.

Matt Araiza was a top punter in the NFL whose record-breaking NCAA career secured him the nickname "Punt God." Last summer, Araiza was accused along with two San Diego State University football players of gang-raping a 17-year-old at an off-campus party in 2021.

The Los Angeles Times reported that Araiza was accused of having sex with the minor outside the home and then bringing her inside, where she was allegedly repeatedly raped for over an hour.

This week, Yahoo Sports provided detail concerning a newly revealed 200-plus page transcript of a 100-minute meeting in which San Diego Deputy District Attorney Trisha Amador explained the matter to the accuser and her attorneys.

In the explanation, the SDDA concluded Araiza could not have led the girl into the alleged rape because he had left the home at 12:30 a.m., at least an hour before the incident supposedly occurred.

"He wasn’t even at the party any more," said Amador. "All I know is that at that point, suspect Araiza is gone from the party."

Extra to highlighting how Araiza was not even present, the prosecutors explained to the accuser that it was unclear whether a gang rape had even occurred in the first place, as intermittent video recordings of the incident raised the possibility she may have just had consensual sex with the other men.'

US Merchant Marine Academy official under fire for tweet on 'white, male' roots of racism, misogyny

Mastodon · 10 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A U.S. Merchant Marine Academy official is under fire for a series of racially charged tweets – including one in which he attributes misogyny and racism to "the same white, male root."

Anton Tripolskii, who was hired at the Kings Point, New York, school as its $142,595-per-year sexual assault response director, sent a June 2020 tweet that's now at the target of a scathing letter from the U.S. House's Anti-Woke Woke Caucus.

"We don’t have forces who do right by survivors of intimate partner and sexual violence because we don’t have forces who don’t abuse Brown and Black people," Tripolskii wrote in the controversial tweet. "Same forces, same reasons. Misogyny and racism grow from the same white, male root."'

Missouri Passes Presumption of Shared Parenting SB35

charlie · 13 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Bill status here. Excerpt:

'HCS/SS/SCS/SB 129 - Under this act, the Children's Division and child placing agencies shall, whenever practicable, select either a person or agency or institution governed by persons of the same religious faith as that of the child's parents or that of the child, as described in the act, when placing a child.

This provision is identical to a provision in HCS/SS/SB 198 (2023), HB 1034 (2023), and SB 621 (2023).

This act adds a rebuttable presumption when determining child custody arrangements that an award of equal or approximately equal parenting time to each parent is in the best interests of the child. Such presumption may be rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence as specified in the act, including an agreement by the parents on all issues related to custody or a finding by the court that a pattern of domestic violence has occurred. The General Assembly urges the court to enter a temporary parenting plan as soon as practicable in a manner that will best assure both parents participate in custody decisions and have frequent, continuing, and meaningful contact with their children.'

No Entry for Men: Delhi To Get 250 Women-Only Parks Soon To Offer ‘More Comfortable Space’

Matt · 14 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi: All 250 wards under the Municipal Corporation of Delhi (MCD) will soon get 'pink parks', where the entry of men will be probated. The new initiative has been chalked out by the authority to give a more 'more comfortable space' to women in the national capital.

The pre-project works have started and the MCD officials are currently identifying locations for setting up the facilities. The counsellors have been asked to find locations in their respective wards. There are 250 municipal wards under the Delhi MCD.'

Sons of Feminism

Matt · 14 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'The esteemed Janice Fiamengo on the damage that feminism has done, irreparably to men, and to relationships between men and women.'

A Proclamation on National Women’s Health Week, 2023

Mastodon · 14 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In addition, my Administration will continue its work to prevent health conditions that affect women, including heart disease and diabetes. Heart disease is the number one killer of women in this country. My Administration has a national strategy that seeks to improve access to affordable, healthy food; better integrate nutrition into the health care system; support physical activity for all; and enhance research into food and nutrition security. At the same time, experts agree it is important that women get regular checkups, preventive screenings, vaccinations, and mental health care.'

America's Manhood Crisis

Mastodon · 16 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much has been said in recent years of the divisions in American society, the dangers to our democracy, and our growing polarization. Surely it is no coincidence that these ills have proliferated while American men have struggled. As the anthropologist David Gilmore once wrote, "Manhood is the social barrier that societies must erect against entropy, human enemies, the forces of nature, time, and all the human weaknesses" that threaten social life. No menace to this nation is greater than the collapse of American manhood, the collapse of masculine strength.

To be frank, some welcome that collapse: namely, those on the American Left. In fact, they have helped drive it. In the power centers they control, places like the press, the academy, and politics, they blame masculinity for America's woes. The tribunes of elite opinion long ago decided that male strength is dangerous—toxic, leading inevitably to oppression and a hateful patriarchy. To be admitted to polite society in America today, one is supposed to confess—and I say "confess" advisedly, for the Left it is a type of religious incantation—that masculinity is an arbitrary social construct that has made the world a much more terrible place. As one liberal author summed up the conventional wisdom, "talking about 'healthy masculinity' is like talking about 'healthy cancer.'"'

Delhi to have ‘women-only’ parks where men will not be allowed

Mastodon · 16 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Delhi is all set to get a number of parks, which will be exclusive for women. The motive of this initiative is to offer more comfortable spaces to women.

As per the reports, work has already begun on identifying locations for establishing these parks in all MCD wards; these will also be known as women-only pink-parks. This was announced by Delhi Deputy Mayor Aaley Mohammad Iqbal, who added that the idea is to give a "more comfortable space" to women in the city, apart from providing several other amenities too.
...
He elaborated that his idea impressed the Chief Minister and that, later in a meeting of the civic body's horticulture department, he proposed that each ward should have at least one such park.'

Little known Florida list makes it easier to remove an unmarried birth father's rights

Mastodon · 16 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Tampa father is fighting to be a parent to his 5-year-old daughter, who was taken by an adoption agency two days after she was born without his knowledge or consent.

“I think that they took a lot from me. A lot from me. I miss my baby, my daughter growing up," Ulysess Carwise said. "She’s five now. She just had a birthday.”

From the time she was born, Carwise told the Florida Department of Children and Families he wanted his daughter. But he needed to prove he was the father and establish his rights because the child's mother, who put the baby up for adoption without his consent, weren't married.

The state's Department of Health website states, "The purpose of the registry is to permit a man alleging to be the unmarried biological father of a child to preserve his right to notice and consent in the event of an adoption."

“If you survey, let's say, 1,000 people randomly across Florida, how many do you think would know that that birth father registry exists? And I bet it's tiny, if any," the President of the National Center on Adoption and Permanencyand an adoptive father himself told the I-Team.

That lack of knowledge is among the reasons Pertman is critical of these types of father registries.

“They're ostensibly set up to ensure father's rights, you know, if you sign up, you can access and parent your own kid. In practice, that's not typically how it goes. In practice, in Florida and elsewhere, they’re more typically used to cut fathers out," Pertman said.

Carwise completed the registry but was then questioned about the timing of when he filled it out.

According to state law, the claim of paternity with Florida's registry "may be filed at any time before the child's birth, but may not be filed after the date a petition is filed for termination of parental rights."'

Louisiana advances bill to make fathers share costs of pregnancy

Mastodon · 16 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill that would allow mothers to recover half of out-of-pocket, pregnancy-related medical expenses from the father of their child cleared another hurdle Tuesday.

House Bill 5, by Rep. Lawrence “Larry” Frieman, R-Abita Springs, moved forward from the Senate Judiciary A Committee. It is one of several bills filed this session to address the realities of post-Roe v. Wade in Louisiana.

Mark Mansfield, who has practiced family law in St. Tammany Parish for more than 20 years, said he began talking about legislation like this with fellow lawyers around the time of the Supreme Court decision that triggered a near-total abortion ban in the state last summer.

“For those of those that are pregnant, we want to give them a chance to recover the expenses the same way they can do when the child is alive,” Mansfield said.

And the same way that paternity must be proved for women to receive child support, it must be proven to recover the pregnancy expenses.'

‘Bromance’ classes will fight ‘toxic masculinity’ in schools: teacher

Mastodon · 17 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An important course is missing from school education: Bromance 101.

A teacher and author argues that schools should provide “lessons in bromance” to help focus on the mental-health crisis among boys.

Matt Pinkett, an English teacher who challenges champions of “toxic masculinity,” believes that teenage boys should be exposed to good models for a “bromance” with close, strong, male friendships through characters such as Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson, or Frodo and Sam from “Lord of the Rings.”

In his new book, “Boys Do Cry: Improving Boys’ Mental Health and Wellbeing in Schools,” Pinkett expresses the importance of the “emotional openness” of male friendships — but warns that the men learned about in school literature are often not “great examples of male kindness” and most of them are “tools.”

For example, Macbeth “kills a lot of people” and Ebenezer Scrooge is “a bit of a numpty” throughout most of “A Christmas Carol.”

Pinkett compiled evidence from school staff, therapists and experts in well-being to come to this conclusion.'

‘Birthgap’ producer touted by Jordan Peterson canceled at Cambridge; film shut down, called misogynistic

Mastodon · 18 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cambridge University recently canceled a film screening of “Birthgap – Childless World” and discussion with the film’s writer, director and producer, Stephen Shaw, after protesters called his theories regarding the steep decrease in human birth rates sexist and misogynistic.

The event was scheduled for May 12 at the college’s St. John campus until administrators abruptly canceled the showing less than 48 hours before the start time.

“We are confused why anyone would want to protest about a film which simply conveys hard data on birthrate trends and contains the voices of people, mostly women, from around the world,” Shaw told The College Fix in an email.

The protesters claimed Shaw’s film echoed “misogyny,” “transphobia,” “homophobia” and “racism” and cited Shaw’s appearance on popular psychologist Jordan Peterson’s show to justify their distaste for the speaker, according to Bentley-Astor’s Twitter.'

San Diego State University says 'no findings' against Matt Araiza

Mastodon · 19 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Diego State University concluded Friday that there are no findings against former Buffalo Bills punter Matt Araiza after conducting an investigation into allegations of rape and gang rape. A criminal investigation was also conducted, with no charges filed, and a civil case remains ongoing in the matter.

"While the university cannot provide specific information related to its student disciplinary proceedings and investigations, or specific information related to student records, it can confirm that none of the former students named in the civil suit are now the subject of an active investigation," SDSU said in a statement provided to ESPN. "In addition, they are not currently enrolled, active students or affiliated with any athletics activities.

"SDSU reserves the right to reinstate investigations based on new developments."

The student conduct investigation proceeded in July 2022 after the San Diego Police Department told the university that doing so would no longer interfere with its investigation after initially asking SDSU to wait. The night of the alleged rapes was in October 2021, and the girl, who was 17 at the time, reported to the police the next day. The police went on to investigate the allegations for nine months before turning over their investigation to prosecutors on Aug. 5, 2022. The police did not recommend charges be filed.

The Bills released Araiza on Aug. 27, two days after the lawsuit was filed.

On Dec. 7, 2022, the San Diego District Attorney's office announced that Araiza and the other students listed on the civil suit, Zavier Leonard and Nowlin Ewaliko, would not face criminal charges.'

Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) Programs May Invite “Reverse Discrimination” Lawsuits

Mastodon · 21 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many companies have announced specific hiring goals in response to heightened awareness of racial and gender inequalities. But some of those goals are now being challenged as impermissible “reverse discrimination” as white male applicants are rejected in favor of persons of color or women.

Recent lawsuits have highlighted how Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) programs may conflict with federal or state EEO (equal employment opportunity) laws. A federal jury in North Carolina awarded $10 million to a white male executive of Novant Health who claimed he lost his job due to efforts to diversify top leadership positions. Similarly, an in-house lawyer with Electrolux sued, claiming he was denied a promotion to General Counsel due to a diversity initiative with an expressed preference for sex/gender as a “distinguishing and beneficial characteristic.” And a white male based his reverse discrimination claim against the city of Springfield, Illinois, on the Mayor’s statement that hiring a black colleague exemplified his administration “moving towards reflecting the city demographics.”

The Supreme Court and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have approved voluntary affirmative action efforts by private employers under limited circumstances. However, to comply with federal anti-discrimination laws, an employer’s voluntary affirmative action policy must meet all three requirements established in two Supreme Court cases: United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC v. Weber (1979), and Johnson v. Transportation Agency (1987). Specifically, affirmative action: (1) must seek to remedy “conspicuous racial [or gender] imbalances in traditionally segregated job categories;” (2) cannot “unnecessarily trammel the interests of white [or male] employees [or applicants]” by, for example, barring whites or males from employment; establishing quotas or inflexible goals; or requiring the discharge or layoff of white or male employees; and (3) must be a temporary measure designed to correct a manifest imbalance, rather than to maintain a particular racial or gender balance.'

Feminist Professor Who Vandalzied Pro-Life Table Holds Machete to Reporter's Neck

Mastodon · 23 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Hunter College professor who recently went viral for disrupting a pro-life information table held an apparent machete to a reporter's neck after he visited her apartment, the New York Post reported.

Shellyne Rodriguez, an adjunct assistant professor at the New York City campus, was videotaped cursing at students operating a Students for Life of America (SFLA) table on May 2 before knocking information cards and fetal models from the table, SFLA reported. She threatened New York Post reporter Reuven Fenton with a machete on Tuesday when he knocked on her apartment door, according to video posted by the Post.

"Get the f–k away from my door, or I'm gonna chop you up with this machete!" she reportedly yelled before opening the door and holding the blade to Fenton's neck. "Get the f–k away from my door! Get the f–k away from my door!"

Fenton and the videographer left the building after Rodriguez had retreated back inside her apartment building, according to the Post. She then followed them outside holding the machete and warned them to "get the fuck off the block."'

Punter Matt Araiza Set to Workout for New York Jets After DA's Investigation Found No Wrongdoing in Rape Case

Mastodon · 24 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Punter Matt Araiza may not have to wait long for his next opportunity in the NFL.

According to ESPN's Adam Schefter, Araiza will be working out with the New York Jets on Wednesday. Schefter got confirmation of the news from JL Sports, Araiza's sports agency.

Araiza was drafted by the Buffalo Bills in the sixth round of the 2022 NFL Draft. He was soon named in a civil suit and accused of raping a 17-year-old girl with two other football players while he was at San Diego State University. The Bills released him after the lawsuit was made public. But since then, The San Diego District Attorney's Office and an independent investigation by the university both turned up no evidence of wrongdoing by Araiza.'

Cal Poly sorority sisters accused of making false rape allegation

Mastodon · 24 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Cal Poly San Luis Obispo fraternity member filed a lawsuit last month against two sorority sisters for allegedly spreading a fabricated rape allegation.

The suit accuses Samantha Canik, a member of the Delta Gamma sorority, of alleging rape following a consensual sexual encounter. Her roommate and sorority sister, Sydney Walsh, then allegedly “involved herself in the assault on plaintiff’s reputation.”

“As a result of these baseless accusations, plaintiff has been expelled from his fraternity; shunned by former friends and classmates; and subjected to insults, humiliation, and emotional distress,” according to the suit. “Plaintiff seeks recovery for the harm to his reputation, for emotional distress, and for consequential damages according to proof.”'

We should have women-only times in Scotland's parks

Mastodon · 24 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am deeply invested in how we make society safer and was interested in recent, frankly unsurprising, research which found that women felt very unsafe in parks.

As I say, this is hardly a shocker for any woman who's found herself unexpectedly on an empty stretch of road or one with a few broken streetlights. Their recommendations are that women should be involved in the design and planning of parks, which would incorporate more lighting, lower hedges and ‘escape routes’. In Berlin, they've taken it one step further and are campaigning for a dedicated Feminist Park.

Of course, the inherent problem with this, is that it once again lays all the responsibility on the woman. We must redesign our parks. We must design our own escape routes. We must campaign to be considered in planning so our public spaces can be used equally by us. When, in fact, the impetus should be on educating men and raising our boys to not condone sexual or physical violence or threats, to not observe it soundlessly and to not perpetuate that misogyny.

In Police Scotland’s Violence Against Women and Girls Strategy 2023, I was happy to see them acknowledge, ‘Perpetrators are the sole cause of violence against women and girls. Therefore, we will continue to challenge the harmful attitudes and behaviours of men which perpetuate violence and abuse.’ And I will be waiting to see if strategy becomes action.'

UK: Police assessment places violence against women and girls on same footing as terrorism

Mastodon · 24 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police chiefs have issued the first official assessment of violence against women and girls in the UK, placing such offences on the same footing as terrorism and serious organised crime.

The 230-page intelligence document outlining the crimes that pose the greatest threats to women and girls has been shared with all forces by the National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC).

The NPCC said it hoped the assessment would help forces better understand "the influences and levers" that contribute to the crimes.'

"Average Men Aren't Enough"

Matt · 27 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Hard to believe I found this on YT but the channel host takes on female primate hypergamy, or the tendency of primate females (incl. humans) to seek to "mate up" in status. Video here.

Testosterone levels ‘plummeting’ in young men

Matt · 27 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Up-side: Hard to do much with men militarily if they have low T. I mean, most of us with it would wash out of basic, drafted or not. :) Seriously, this is a real big problem for our species but I'm inclined more to blame it on endocrine disruptor chemicals in the environment versus porn and video games. Excerpt:

'FROM London to Los Angeles, an increasing number of young men are retreating from society, isolating themselves for extended periods.

When asked about their feelings of loneliness, men are more likely to report feeling socially isolated than women.

Some have suggested that changing norms and expectations are to blame.

Others have suggested that some young men are uncomfortable with how masculinity is being reimagined, reshaped, and redefined.

This discomfort, they argue, has created a profound sense of uncertainty and unease.

But are plummeting testosterone levels playing a role in young men’s desire to separate themselves from society?'

UK: The betrayal of white working-class men

Mastodon · 28 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ironically, however, most of those lives lost in Western society were male, white and working-class; basically, those citizens assumed by the paradigm of class-denying intersectionality to be the enemy of progress. White working-class males are now recast as the establishment's salivating attack dogs; the overseers of imperialism, enforcing the bidding of their wealthier masters. Their role in securing most of our human rights — through workplace struggle in the trade unions, strikes, demonstrations, wars and riots — is to be erased from our collective consciousness.

Because some sections of the white working class bought into the reductive neoliberalism of unrestrained capitalism through the Thatcher-Reagan revolution, so the entire group was written off. In the "hierarchy of the oppressed" so beloved of intersectional theory, a (white) penis in the underpants is more important than the lack of an arse in the trousers in determining your place in the world.'

Jane Fonda Blames Men for Climate Change: ‘We Have to Arrest and Jail Those Men’

Mastodon · 28 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hollywood star Jane Fonda made the outrageous claim Friday that climate change is being caused exclusively by men, specifically white men, adding that “those men” must be arrested and jailed.

She also blamed the “patriarchy” and “racism” for global warming.

Speaking at a career retrospective at the Cannes Film Festival in France, Jane Fonda promoted her radical climate activism efforts, saying the world has “about seven, eight years” to cut fossil fuel consumption in half.

She also said “poor people of color” as well as populations in the southern hemisphere will be hit hardest by global warming.

“It is a tragedy that we have to absolutely stop. We have to arrest and jail those men — they’re all men,” she added, according to a Deadline report.'

Colorado Becomes the First State to Limit Court Use of Family Reunification Camps

Mastodon · 29 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill signed into law this week in Colorado prohibits family courts from ordering children to participate in reunification programs that isolate them from a trusted caregiver. Many of these programs purport to offer treatments for parental alienation, a psychological disorder that has been rejected by mainstream scientific circles but continues to influence custody decisions.

The new law, which takes effect immediately, also requires experts who advise the court on custody cases to have training in working with victims of domestic violence and child abuse.'

Release of the National Plan to End Gender-Based Violence: Strategies for Action

Mastodon · 29 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Improving Law Enforcement Response to Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence by Identifying and Preventing Gender Bias: The Department of Justice released updated guidance in 2022 on Improving Law Enforcement Response to Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence by Identifying and Preventing Gender Bias. This guidance is designed to help law enforcement agencies recognize, mitigate, and prevent gender bias and other bias from compromising the response to, and investigation of, sexual assault, domestic violence, and other forms of gender-based violence. The guidance provides a set of eight basic principles that – if integrated into LEAs' policies, trainings and practices – help ensure that gender bias, either intentionally or unintentionally, does not undermine efforts to keep survivors safe and hold offenders accountable.'

Remarks by President Biden at the 155th National Memorial Day Observance

Mastodon · 30 May 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Throughout history, these women and men laid down their lives, not for a place or a person or a President, but for an idea unlike any other idea in all of human history. The idea — the idea of the United States of America.

As we're reminded by the hundreds of graves here in Section 60 of Arlington and across our nation — the story of the women and men who sacrificed everything to keep democracy safe and secure during the last two decades — each of them — each of them a link in a chain of honor that stretches back to our Founding Fathers and those days. Unbreaking, unbending, not just in their duty and devotion but something even deeper: in their faith in us — their faith in us — that we will be worthy of their sacrifice.'

United Kingdom's RAF filtering out 'useless white male pilots' in diversity push: report

Mastodon · 1 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United Kingdom's Royal Air Force is being pressured to filter out "useless white male pilots" in an effort to hit diversity targets, according to leaked emails obtained by local media.

The messages seen by Sky News also show that a number of selection boards used to place new recruits were canceled if they didn't include women or minorities.

The RAF maintains its standards have not been lowered to increase the number or diverse applicants.

The military branch is also paying more than $123,000 to 31 White men who it found had been disadvantaged by the new policy. The payments contradict statements by Air Chief Marshal Wigston that the diversity push would not discriminate against White men, sources told the news station.

The leaked emails were dated between 2020 and 2021. One Jan. 19, 2021, message to a sergeant appeared to show the pressure being applied to filter out White male recruits in favor of women and minorities.'

Feminism, masculinity and finding solutions

Mastodon · 3 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thankfully, most women and men know this lack of mutuality is neither sustainable nor healthy. It's part of what led people to coin the term "toxic masculinity," a term so overused that some men are giving up on what's healthy and embracing the message of guys like Andrew Tate —an influencer presently incarcerated in Romania on charges of sex trafficking.

"But the idea that we are looking at men as a problem is actually not that far off sometimes," said Michelle Cottle on Matters of Opinion, "I mean, especially in certain more progressive corners we are so eager to make sure that women aren't left behind, that women aren't being mistreated, almost as though it is a binary like one has to kind of go along. If one is getting ahead, you have to kind of disadvantage the other."

When men give up, or when the well-being of one gender as a whole is in competition with the other, we need to seek a third way, maybe even a fourth, fifth or sixth.

To be clear, it's true that men have dominated the offices of power, the C-suites, the halls of academia, the workplace, the sports arena and the financial markets for millennia. Only in the past century has the pendulum begun to swing in the direction of women. Yet, parity is about finding equilibrium and that takes work. Men and women will thrive when they find flourishing counterparts — intellectually, creatively, spiritually, physically — in their workplaces, relationships and communities.'

Matt Walsh's "What Is A Woman?"

Matt · 3 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

I vacilated about posting this based on concerns about germaneness: How germane is the topic to the MRM? I've concluded based on some of its content that there's at least tangential relevancy if not in a couple ways, direct relevancy. After all, if the MRM in general objects to circumcision of infant (minor) males, would not it at least in part object to the drugging of minor males to defer or even entirely nullify their otherwise natural maturation in their teen years? So I've decided to post it: Matt Walsh's What Is A Woman?.

How Modern Life Is Making Us Infertile

Matt · 3 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. From 2021 but still very relevant: "A new study reveals how an alarming decline in sperm count and quality is threatening the human race."

White men trying to join the RAF were branded 'useless' by recruitment officers in leaked emails set to renew row over diversity quotas

Mastodon · 5 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'White men trying to join the RAF were branded 'useless' by recruitment officers, leaked emails have revealed.

The emails, which are set to renew a row over diversity quotas, were sent by a squadron leader in the air force's recruitment division in January 2021.

They expose the pressure that officers appeared to be under to filter out white male recruits and fast-track women and ethnic minorities.

The RAF is also reportedly paying £5,000 each to 31 white men who it found had been unfairly disadvantaged by its recruitment policy.

And some selection boards were cancelled if they did not include women or ethnic minorities, according to the leaked messages.'

Why more US men are falling victim to Japan's anti-social hikikomori trend

Mastodon · 5 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Japan, an estimated 1.5 million people — many of them young men — now live in complete isolation.

The problem has grown so severe that the Japanese have a term for it: Hikikomori, one who literally withdraws from society.

Some 6,000 miles away, the United States is experiencing its own form of hikikomori.

During a recent interview with Chris Williamson, a British podcaster based in Austin, Texas, the political economist Nicholas Eberstadt discussed the fact that 7 million men of prime working age are currently without employment and not seeking jobs.

Many of these men, said Eberstadt, spend inordinate amounts of time indoors, totally withdrawn from society.'

MSU hit with civil rights complaint alleging school's business boot camp discriminated against white males

Matt · 6 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A government watchdog organization on Friday filed a civil rights complaint against Missouri State University, alleging that the school's business boot camp program illegally discriminated against white males.

The Equal Protection Project (EPP) said it was bringing the civil rights complaint against MSU for "engaging in racial- and gender-based discrimination through its sponsorship, promotion, and hosting of a small business training 'boot camp' that limited participation to individuals who identify as 'BIOPOC' … or are female. White males, and white males alone, were excluded from eligibility."

"BIPOC" is an acronym for "Black, Indigenous and Persons of Color."

In its complaint to the Office for Civil Rights of the U.S. Department of Education, the EPP accused MSU's program of violating the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972.'

I'm a mom who flies in business class while my family stays in economy. We see it as a lesson on feminism.

Mastodon · 8 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amid the cacophony of boarding passengers, my husband waved at me, leading our two boys, ages 5 and 7, towards Economy while I turned left into Business Class. A flight attendant cast a surprised glance, undoubtedly questioning why I was sitting apart from my family.

Recent viral TikToks and articles have sparked debates about the fairness of fathers sitting solo in Business or First Class while their wives and children remain in Economy. Being inherently contrarian, I decided our family would flip the script and do just the reverse on a recent 12-hour flight from London to Mauritius.

Indeed, the setup was unconventional, but there was a method to the perceived madness. It wasn't about embracing luxury for the sake of it. Instead, it was about my boys witnessing their mom confidently relishing a different space on the plane, thereby understanding that traditional norms and expectations should not confine a woman's place. I want them to grow up understanding that women, too, can independently "turn left" onto a plane. And can do so alone.'

NASA Awards $5 Million to Women's Colleges Tackling STEM Gender Gap

Mastodon · 8 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As part of a Biden/Harris initiative, NASA will award more than $5 million in funding to seven Women's Colleges and Universities (WCUs) to research and develop strategies that increase retention of women in STEM degree programs and careers.

The agency's Minority University Research and Education Project (MUREP) created the Women's Colleges and Universities opportunity to help women overcome obstacles and barriers to working in the fields of science, technology, engineering, and math.

This award seeks to address the significant national gender gap and disparate experiences of women in STEM in the United States, both in higher education and the workforce.

"This is a very exciting first; we're making strides to close the pervasive gender gap in STEM, and Women's Colleges and Universities are well-positioned to help drive that positive change," said NASA Deputy Administrator Pam Melroy, a graduate from Wellesley College. "It's more important than ever we have brilliant, enthusiastic people entering the workforce and ready to take on the ambitious plans and challenges ahead."

Created in response to the White House Executive Order 14035 "Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, and Accessibility in the Federal Workforce," this funding opportunity asked Women's Colleges and Universities to take advantage of their expertise by developing programs that encompass academics, research, student support, college prep, career prep, mentoring, and more. NASA explores the unknown for all, and values diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility for the future STEM and agency workforce.'

UK: One in three primary schools has no male teachers, report says

Mastodon · 8 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost one in three state funded primary schools do not have any male classroom teachers, a study suggests.

Rutland in the East Midlands has the highest proportion of primary schools without any male teachers - 52.9%.

The Warwick Business School report says the proportion of schools without a male classroom teacher has increased over the last 12 months.

The report's author said they believed a lack of male teachers was bad for pupils.

Dr Joshua Fullard, assistant professor of behavioural science at Warwick Business School, said: "Worryingly, the decline in the number of male classroom teachers is getting worse.

"This has an impact on the education that children receive. There is a large body of research that shows students benefit from being educated by a teacher with certain similarities to them.'

Why So Many Young Men Are Lonely, Sexless, and Extremely Online

Matt · 8 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Interview here. This is a Spotify podcast. It requires you to subscribe for free to listen to it. It is off-linked from here. Excerpt:

'Today's episode is about the state of men in America. Last week, the nonprofit institute Equimundo published a report on the state of men and boys in America: "Many men—especially younger men—are socially disconnected, pessimistic about the future, and turning to online anger," it wrote. "They are facing higher rates of depressive symptoms, suicidal thoughts, and a sense of isolation, as seen in the agreement of 65 percent that 'no one really knows me well.'" One survey is one survey.

It doesn't do a lot of good to overreact and proclaim one set of findings the iron law of American sociology. But this report is in line with other polls and also with the analyses of experts like Richard Reeves, the Brookings scholar who wrote the book Of Boys and Men. Richard is today's returning guest. We talk about how complaining about masculinity is history's oldest trope; why this time might be different; what young men think about feminism; the effect of social media on men and why it might be different than the effect of social media on women; and what a positive version of masculinity might look like.'

Masculinity as Prison or Escape

Mastodon · 9 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A healthy masculinity acknowledges three things. First, men are distinct from women. Second, men have something essential to contribute, both to females and to society at large. And third, men can make this contribution effectively only through the cultivation of character. Unfortunately, modern culture undermines all three. As a result, there has been a rise in the popularity of a reactionary or “macho” masculinity, which fills the vacuum of hollowed-out masculinity with something harmful.

Men have been deemed not only indistinct from women but inessential to them. Gloria Steinem quipped that “a woman needs a man like a fish needs a bicycle.” Over the past 50 years, the marriage rate in the United States has declined significantly, which helps explain why nearly 40 percent of babies are now born out of wedlock. Nearly 70 percent of divorces are initiated by women. Roughly 80 percent of single-parent households are fatherless.'

Trans man goes viral after getting emotional about the ‘loneliness’ of life after gender transition

Matt · 10 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A biological female turned trans man went viral this week after posting an emotional video about the loneliness of being a man.

"Nobody told me how lonely being a man is," the influencer claimed in the two-minute video discussing having more friends when identifying as a woman.

The subject also discussed why the male suicide rate is higher than in women.

The video was first published to Instagram by James Barnes, a motivational speaker, stress management coach, and social media influencer who claimed to have transitioned from being a woman to a man eight years ago.

Barnes, who goes by "thetranscoach" on the platform, opened up about the struggles of living as a man in the clip that was shared Thursday.

Specifically, the user lamented that life as a man is much lonelier than life as a woman.'

Nine out of 10 people are biased against women, UN report finds

Mastodon · 12 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost nine out of 10 people hold “fundamental biases” against women, a new UN report has found, decrying a “decade of stagnation” that has led to a dismantling of women’s rights in many parts of the world.

Half of people globally still believe men make better political leaders than women; more than 40% believe men make better business executives than women; and 25% believe it is justified for a man to beat his wife, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) report released Monday found, reflecting the latest data from the World Values Survey.

These biases manifest in numerous ways, such as in an underrepresentation of women in leadership. In the labor market, women occupy less than a third of managerial positions, while the picture remains grim at the highest level of leadership: The share of women as heads of state or heads of government has remained around 10% since 1995, the report finds.

This gap does not reflect education levels. In the 59 countries where women are now more highly educated than men, the average gender income gap remains 39% in favor of men.

A global backlash against women’s rights and the far-reaching consequences of the Covid-19 pandemic have worsened the issue, the report notes.'

UK: Two-thirds of workers believe female leaders are better than their male counterparts

Mastodon · 12 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two-thirds of British employees believe women make better bosses than men, a survey reveals.

Female leaders were perceived as excelling men in key leadership areas such as multi-tasking and organisational skills, while 83 per cent of employees viewed female bosses as more empathetic.

A further 74 per cent viewed female bosses as having a more collaborative leadership style, with 69 per cent believing that women were more approachable and supportive in the workplace.

More than four-fifths of employees thought female bosses were better at fostering a positive work environment than men.

The only area where men were perceived as better than women was in relation to ‘innovative solutions’, with 54 per cent of respondents choosing men as more effective.'

Gov. Whitmer signs legislation establishing June 12 as Women Veterans Recognition Day

Mastodon · 12 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On the 75th anniversary of women being allowed to serve as equal members of the U.S. Armed Forces, Governor Gretchen Whitmer signed House Bill 4555 establishing Women Veterans Recognition Day on June 12 in Michigan.

Women Veterans Recognition Day honors Michigan's estimated 44,000 living women veterans and the many more who served before them.

"For 250 years, women have proudly served alongside men in our military," said Governor Whitmer. "For too long, however, they have been overlooked and underserved. Today, I am taking action to establish Women Veterans Recognition Day in Michigan, giving these courageous servicewomen the recognition and honor they have long deserved. Millions of women have put their lives on the line to serve our country and it's our responsibility to connect them with critical resources like healthcare, mental health services, and affordable housing when they leave the service. Let's keep working together to honor our women veterans and service members."'

Defense secretary passes over woman considered front-runner for Navy's top job

Mastodon · 12 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a surprise move, Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin has recommended that Adm. Samuel Paparo become the Navy's highest-ranking officer instead of a woman widely believed to have been the front-runner, several senior defense officials said.

Adm. Lisa Franchetti had been considered the leading contender for the chief's job since becoming the vice chief of naval operations, the No. 2 officer in the Navy, last fall. She would have been the first female service member to hold the job and the first female member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. A woman is running the Coast Guard, but she is not a member of the Joint Chiefs.

Paparo, the commander of Pacific Fleet, was expected to become the next commander of U.S. Indo-Pacific Command, as is common. He is one of the top operational leaders in the Navy facing the challenges against China and was expected to bring his expertise to Indo-Pacific Command at a time when China is a top Biden administration priority.

The decision to pass over Franchetti the same week that the U.S. military celebrates the 75th anniversary of women joining the armed forces may not sit well with some inside the Pentagon who were advocating for the Joint Chiefs to finally have a female officer.'

Missouri moves toward 50/50 child custody law, raising concerns about abuse victims

Mastodon · 13 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gov. Mike Parson could soon make Missouri one of the first states to establish 50/50 shared parenting time as the standard in child custody cases.

But the bill on his desk, passed in the final hour of the legislative session, did not include changes that some family law attorneys and domestic violence advocates worked on for months — and has raised concerns that it could make it more difficult for victims to escape abusive relationships and protect their children.

Joan Meier, who founded and directs the National Family Violence Law Center at George Washington University, said the 50/50 legislation could put children at risk and relies on a false premise that there is a bias against men in family court.

“We oppose these statutes because all they do is make things worse for children,” Meier said. “Because even without these statutes, things are extremely bad for children.”'

A Sad Time for Alienated Fathers

Mastodon · 13 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every June, we celebrate fathers. But it is a sad and bewildering time for those fathers who are alienated from their children due to a pathological family process known as parental alienation (PA). Millions of fathers are alienated from their children, reaching epidemic proportions. The tragic plights of these alienated fathers have rarely been covered and discussed in the mainstream media.

Recently, Josh Homme of Iron Dragons was featured in People magazine, where he revealed that he is an alienated father. According to the story, Josh was kept away away from his four children for years in a custody battle with his ex-wife, causing him great pain and despondency.

PA is a process whereby one parent sabotages and even severs a child's relationship with the other parent for no legitimate reason. PA is most likely to occur in high-conflict divorcing or divorced families. If successful, the targeted parent is rejected totally or partially by the child. This outcome is disastrous for the rejected parent and has serious long-term consequences for the alienated child, including anxiety, depression, suicidal ideation, post-traumatic stress disorder, eating disorders, substance abuse, lack of trust in relationships, poor resilience, and others. And alienated children are more likely to repeat alienation in their own adult relationships.'

Pennsylvania woman's 'heinous' messages to estranged boyfriend led to his suicide: DA

Mastodon · 14 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania woman pushed her estranged boyfriend to kill himself with a series of vicious texts and shameless video of her having sex with another man, prosecutors alleged Tuesday.

Mandie Reusch, 35, was charged in the twisted case that started two years ago when Kevin Metzger committed suicide after he received "heinous and graphic" messages from her, according to the Westmoreland County District Attorney's Office.

Metzger penned a suicide letter and posted on Facebook about the steady stream of tormenting messages before he took his own life at the age of 37, District Attorney Nicole Ziccarelli said in a statement.

"Mr. Metzger may still be here today if those messages did not influence and encourage him to take his own life," she said in a statement.

The former couple shared a child, according to reports.

Reusch repeatedly threatened to keep his child from him, according to court documents reviewed by the pennlive.com.'

Netherlands: University moves ‘smoking old white men’ painting to public area

Mastodon · 14 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leiden university has resolved a long-running dispute over where to hang a painting of “cigar smoking old white men” by moving it to a more public space in the university building.

The work, which depicts the 1974 university board, has been at the centre of a row over its relevance which has rumbled on since November last year.

It was removed after a number of female staff objected to its presence in a staff meeting room, because it represented male dominance and depicted smoking. ‘I hate the smoke, even if it’s only painted,’ law dean Joanna van der Leun said at the time.

The move divided staff, with some saying artist Rein Dool’s portrayal of the men mocks their self-importance, while others sided with Van der Leun.

Artist Rein Dool called the university’s action “stupid and sad” and said the painting was one of his best works.

The painting was then restored to its former place and a committee set up to determine its future home.

It has now been decided that instead of the work being consigned to the attic, a place will be found for it in the university’s reception room, where more people will be able to see it. Its history will be explained by an accompanying text, the committee said.'

Australia: Schools need more support to stop the spread of toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 14 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Schools are in urgent need of support to combat alarming rates of sexism, sexual harassment, intimidation and disrespect towards women and girls in Australian schools.

Our ongoing research project on the radicalisation of boys in Australian schools by misogynist influencers has so far revealed troubling insights into the spread of toxic attitudes and behaviour among boys.

The behaviour is overt, it is widespread, and it is impacting women and girls in schools.

UK schools have received advice from the Department for Education (DfE) to discourage discussion of Tate and the DfE is refusing further support for schools.

In Australia, the same behaviour is being widely experienced by teachers across both the public and independent systems and in primary and secondary settings.

This trend is being widely underreported and acknowledged, which further isolates women in schools grappling with boys' problematic behaviour.'

Nancy R. Pearcey Offers a Strategic Guide to the War on Masculinity

Mastodon · 14 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Why Can't We Hate Men?" asks a headline in the Washington Post. A trendy hashtag is #KillAllMen. Books are sold titled I Hate Men, No Good Men, and Are Men Necessary?

How did an ideology arise that condemns masculinity as dangerous and destructive?

Bestselling author Nancy Pearcey has a knack for tackling the tough issues of our day. A former agnostic, Pearcey was hailed in The Economist as "America's pre-eminent evangelical Protestant female intellectual." In The Toxic War on Masculinity: How Christianity Reconciles the Sexes (Baker Books, June 27, 2023), Pearcey takes readers on a fascinating romp through American history to discover how the secular script for masculinity turned toxic—and what action we can take to fix it.'

Australia: Brittany Higgins and the disappearing recordings

Mastodon · 15 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New documents have revealed Brittany Higgins' explanation for why the date of a key photograph of a bruise on her leg did not match the timeline of her rape claims against Bruce Lehrmann.

The papers, released by an ACT government Board of Inquiry into the police and prosecution handling of the case, also reveal Ms Higgins spoke to her then-boyfriend David Sharaz about deleting several files from her phone, which police warned her 'looks deceitful'.

Ms Higgins said those files were the audio of conversations she had recorded 'for personal records' and she 'didn't know if this was ok'.

Ms Higgins had shared with police a photograph showing an apparent large bruise on her thigh, which she said was caused by Lehrmann pinning her down as he allegedly raped her in the office of their defence minister boss Linda Reynolds.

In a legally binding statutory declaration made five days before her explosive interview with Lisa Wilkinson on The Project, Ms Higgins said the picture had been taken on April 3, 2019, 11 days after the alleged attack on March 23.

But digital forensic experts said there was no evidence of it existing on her phone until just a few weeks before the rape allegations went to air in February 2021, almost two years later, and there was no previous mention of it in her text messages.'

A New Legal Strategy in Sexual Assault Cases

Mastodon · 15 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent Title IX case at King's College in Pennsylvania has highlighted what experts say is a new legal strategy for sexual assault victims whose alleged attackers take the aggressive approach of filing a counterclaim.

The strategy hinges on the argument that a malicious Title IX counterclaim can qualify as "abuse of process," a term that traditionally refers to abuses of the legal process. But a recent report from a federal magistrate judge supports the idea that the Title IX process is quasi-judicial and can be abused just as a legal proceeding can—despite universities' frequent disclaimers that Title IX processes and legal proceedings are not one and the same.'

Del. Lewis leads Father’s Day pledge to combat domestic violence

Mastodon · 15 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Father’s Day approaches Sunday, some elected officials in Maryland are spreading a pledge to combat domestic violence.

About 40 Maryland state delegates signed their names to a Prince George’s County poster with a pledge “to never engage in any type of abuse — physical, emotional, sexual, financial or digital.”

Del. Jazz Lewis (D-Prince George’s) led the effort a few days before this year’s 90-day legislation session ended in April. Some of the signatures include Dels. Nick Allen (D-Baltimore County), Kevin Hornberger (R-Cecil), Julian Ivey (D-Prince George’s) and Stuart Schmidt (R-Anne Arundel).

“We’re going to model what it’s like to have healthy, honest relationships, and then go back to our districts, and figure out how we can build our programs that engage with followers of the community in a meaningful way,” Lewis said Tuesday during a domestic violence program in Upper Marlboro.'

Derbyshire council to spend £40,000 teaching pupils about toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 15 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Derbyshire County Council went out to tender for an “exploring masculinities” programme earlier this year and the year-long programme will be led by Devon charity Beyond Equality.

The programme the county council hired the charity for is detailed as follows: “Exploring masculinities will support pupils in secondary education setting, as well as education staff, to be able to reflect on pressures young people face regarding masculinity and produce an action plan to support embedding safe respectful behaviours in the whole setting.

“This project will serve to support students, and their school settings to reflect on the pressures they experience concerning masculinity, and develop school communities that support respectful, safe, healthy behaviour of the whole school.”'

California teacher suspended for allegedly targeting White students on basis of race, gender

Mastodon · 15 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A San Francisco school district suspended a teacher for discriminating against White male students, according to California Public Records Act documents obtained by Fox News Digital.

Nicole Noel Henares allegedly asked White male students in her high school English class to stand up and answer if they "felt like a minority" during the 2022 fall semester.

Henares' actions made the Lowell High School students feel "confused, sad and that there was no correct answer for them in that moment," they said in interviews with the district.

The teacher allegedly admitted to singling out the White male students "out of frustration and anger" in investigative interviews Oct. 14 and Nov. 10. She claimed the students dominated the class conversation, pushing her to single them out, but the students present denied this.'

Fintech Leaders Unite To Advance Gender Parity, Reverse Climate Change

Mastodon · 16 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent smoky air in New York City caused by Canadian wildfires is a stark reminder to fintech leaders of their role in addressing pressing global issues such as gender parity, financial inclusion, and climate change.

These issues are intrinsically interconnected, and fintech tools have emerged as critical catalysts for progress. All three global matters came to a head during Women's World Banking's Making Finance Work For Women Summit in Mumbai, India, which I attended last month.

Leaders worldwide gathered for two days to discuss how fintech can promote women's economic power, a critical step in the fight against climate change.
...
"Women will still be lagging behind men when your daughter's daughter's daughter's daughter's daughter is born," said Mary Ellen Iskenderian, President and CEO of Women's World Banking, during the summit. "I'm too impatient for that."'

UK: Labour women speak out as four white men win four selection races

Mastodon · 17 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour Women's Network has spoken out over the "disappointing" selection of four white men in four contests to decide party candidates's for looming parliamentary by-elections.

The affiliated group said the party remained on track to return the highest number of female Labour MPs in history however, despite abandoning all-women shortlists amid concerns over their legality.'

Our Society Reviles the Group It Most Depends On: Men. This Father's Day, Thank the Men Around You

Mastodon · 17 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the never-ending battle of the sexes, women tend to be the front line. Whether you're on the Left or the Right or dead in the center, a woman's place in society is a frequent and contested topic of conversation. But these days, men and boys are suffering in a multitude of ways. While everyone has been busy asking, "What is a woman," men began to suffer from higher rates of suicide and lower educational achievement. Maybe it's time to ask, what is a man?

Nowadays, many women and even quite a few men would answer that question using mainly negative adjectives: toxic, violent, insensitive, privileged, crude and useless. Last month, Jane Fonda said summarized this position nicely at an event Cannes during which she said, "We have to arrest and jail those men. There would be no climate crisis if there was no patriarchy." There would also be no military—which some seem to think is the point. "I really don't need to see loads useless white male pilots," a recruiter at the Royal Air Force—yes, the same organization that flew deadly missions over Europe to defeat Nazism—wrote in an email.

Negative messaging about men is now everywhere in our culture. But though it's in vogue to denounce men as toxic and useless criminals, the truth is none of us would be here enjoying the benefits of a rich, safe, and comparatively luxurious society without the often backbreaking, dangerous, dirty, and unremarked-upon labor of men. In other words, the very functioning of our society depends upon some of its most reviled members.'

Only half of the women who are outearning their husbands are taking the lead on household expenses, UBS says

Mastodon · 17 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Free registration required. Excerpt:

'More and more women are the primary earners in heterosexual relationships in the U.S., an enormous shift in household financial dynamics from even a few decades ago. But traditional thinking about money and relationships hasn't changed much, according to a new report, and that could continue to hold women back.

Around 30% of U.S. women in heterosexual couples earn more income than their spouse or partner, according to UBS's 2023 Own Your Worth report. But just half of those women breadwinners take the lead on financial responsibilities in their households, compared to 79% of men in the same position. And women who earn more are also less engaged in short- and long-term financial decisions, and feel less knowledgeable about investing than men.

Women are also much less likely than men to say financial decision-making is "natural" for them. Less than half—49%—of women primary earners in heterosexual relationships say they prefer that arrangement, compared to 87% of men breadwinners.'

Happy Fathers' Day from MANN

Matt · 18 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

For a lot of fathers, this day is rough. Many have been separated from their kids by a legal system that devalues them or considers fathers redundant, only wanting money from them. But there are also many dads out there who have a good relationship with their kids, hopefully also with mom too. To all fathers today no matter where they are at in life, MANN wishes the best day possible for you and hopes that life either gets better for you or stays good.

I was kicked out of a gym for ‘staring’ at a woman — even though I’m blind

Mastodon · 20 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toby Addison, 21, recalled the mortifying moment years prior when he was kicked out of the gym for “creepily” staring at a woman — despite the fact he cannot see — while on the “Happy Hour Podcast” earlier in June.

Addison, who shares his life as a blind person on his TikTok account, @blindtobes, said he was “minding his own business” during a workout when he heard a woman say: “Oh, do you like the view?”

“Obviously I don’t really know where I’m looking a lot of the time,” the content creator shared on the podcast. “I was just staring right ahead and unfortunately there was a woman doing some exercises.”

The psychology and counseling student was shocked when he realized she had come over to talk to him, adding that he obviously didn’t know what kind of exercises she was doing.

“I didn’t know she was talking to me at first because [I wasn’t] doing anything wrong, ” Addison, who lives in Chichester, England, admitted. “She said something along the lines of: ‘Why do you keep staring at me. Stop, don’t be so creepy.'”

Addison, who had his cane folded up nearby, said he immediately told her he was blind — but she “wasn’t having any of it.”'

OceanGate CEO wouldn’t hire ‘old white guys’ because they weren’t ‘inspirational’

Mastodon · 22 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The chief executive of OceanGate, who is among the five men aboard the company’s 6.8-metre submersible that went missing on an ill-fated dive to The Titanic, boasted that he didn’t want to hire experienced “50-year-old white guys” to pilot the vessel because they weren’t “inspirational”.

Stockton Rush, 61, made the comments in a newly resurfaced Zoom interview with technology company Teledyne Marine.

“When I started the business, one of the things you’ll find, there are other sub-operators out there, but they typically have, uh, gentlemen who are ex-military submariners, and they — you’ll see a whole bunch of 50-year-old white guys,” he said in the undated clip.'

Former Buffalo Bills punter Matt Araiza says he plans to sue for defamation over false rape allegations

Mastodon · 22 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Buffalo Bills punter Matt Araiza says he plans to sue the attorney who accused him of being involved in an alleged gang rape of a teenage girl during a college party.

Araiza was featured Tuesday on HBO's Real Sports with Bryant Gumbel in a sit down interview with Andrea Kremer to discuss the lawsuit and the allegations made against him that may have ended his career as an NFL player.

A lawsuit filed in San Diego County Superior Court last year accused Araiza and two teammates of raping a then-17-year-old girl at a Halloween party at an off-campus home where Araiza had been living.

Shortly after the allegations surfaced, the Buffalo Bills released the punter last summer.

The San Diego District Attorney's office completed its investigation in December, stating they reviewed the San Diego Police Department's investigation and had no recommendation by the police department to file criminal charges.'

With an eye on working families, Democrats launch the Congressional Dads Caucus

Mastodon · 22 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women — even those in Congress — are often the ones who take on many parenting responsibilities. Surveys conducted by the Pew Research Center prior to the COVID-19 pandemic found that women were more likely than their spouses to say they carried more of the load when it came to parenting. In another Pew survey conducted in October 2020, a few months into the pandemic, working moms were more likely than working dads to say their work-life balance had gotten harder since the start of the pandemic.

"Dads need to do our part in advancing policies that will make a difference in the lives of so many parents across the country," Gomez said.

Texas Rep. Joaquin Castro, who joined Gomez in forming the caucus, said men have a role to play in supporting policies that help working families.

"(Women legislators) deserve an extraordinary amount of credit, but they should also be able to count on male legislators to be partners in their fight from the beginning," Castro said.'

New Florida law to give more parental rights to unmarried biological fathers

Mastodon · 22 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill that passed the Florida House and Senate unanimously, coined "The Good Dad Act" is now signed into law. The focus — father's rights.

Last month, the ABC Action News I-Team shared the story of Ulysess Carwise, a Tampa father who has been fighting for custody of his now 5-year-old daughter, given up for adoption at birth by her mother without Carwise's knowledge or consent. His ongoing case highlights an often private battle unmarried fathers can face.

Because he is not married to his son's mother, legally, Jennings had no parental rights.

“My name’s on the birth certificate. I’ve been a part of his life since birth, I was there at the birth, but because she decided that she was no longer going to cooperate with me, the law was not on my side anymore," Jennings said. “The judge said that I had to serve her a petition for parenting. And I didn’t know where she was to be able to serve her."'

Yvonne Nelson cuts ties with mother over paternity fraud

Mastodon · 22 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The truth came to light through her newly released book, I Am Not Yvonne Nelson, where she shared her struggles and experiences.

One of the major revelations in the book revolves around Nelson's uncertainty regarding her biological father's identity.

She disclosed that her mother has deliberately kept his identity a secret, leaving her in the dark. This left the actress questioning her own lineage and feeling disconnected from her true roots.

The 37-year-old actress made a startling claim that her alleged father, Oko Nelson, is not her biological father.

This led her to question her entire family history and made her realise that she has been carrying the wrong last name all along.

Internet user, Sel The Bomb who delved into the book's contents disclosed that the actress had never met her father and that she is currently estranged from her mother due to this issue.

It was revealed that her mother had misled her regarding his paternity, which led her to unknowingly portray him in a negative light during interviews and public comments.

Unfortunately, Yvonne Nelson's mother only disclosed the truth about her real father when he was already ill, and by the time she attempted to apologise, he had passed away in 2017.'

UK: New domestic abuse law comes into force

Mastodon · 22 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new law to give more protection to victims of domestic abuse has come into force.

The Domestic Abuse law means courts can give greater punishments to offenders while offering more protection to victims.

Offenders could now be jailed for up to five years and be given an unlimited fine for offences including coercion and controlling behaviour.

Lisa Leventhal from the Jersey Women's Refuge said the law would support victims as well as punish offenders.

She said: "It's preventative, and it also validates survivors experiences where... they feel that they're in some kind of acceptable relationship and [are] not.'

Teachers speak out as Jordan Peterson and Andrew Tate become 'idols' for many young Australian men

Mastodon · 23 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Australian teachers have fired up over male students expressing their support for controversial social media personalities in the classroom.

One Perth teacher recently took to Reddit to ask: 'The high school I teach at has seen a huge increase in boys idolising Jordan Peterson and Andrew Tate; how are schools addressing this?'
...
Some argued that while they didn't necessarily support their views, they were filling a gap for young boys.

'Kids get bombarded with messages about woman's rights, minority's rights, LBGT rights and indigenous rights. None of these are bad, but can be overwhelming. We need to provide them something other than these guys to latch onto,' one said.

Another said: 'Some teachers have extreme views and force them on kids. If people stopped telling young boys they're the problem then they'll stop seeking people like this.'

A third added: 'With all the hate thrown at males, and all the blame on everything 'patriarchy' can you really not see why young, impressionable and vulnerable kids are looking for heroes where they can?''

Mayo Clinic professor suspended after saying testosterone improves athletic performance

Mastodon · 24 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Mayo Clinic College of Medicine professor was recently suspended — and remains under the threat of termination — after he told a news outlet his stance on trans-athletes in women's sports and plasma treatments for COVID-19.

Administrators suspended Professor Michael Joyner without pay for a week, citing his "use of idiomatic language" and comments he made in a June 2022 New York Times article as justification for the disciplinary actions, according to a March 5 disciplinary letter that recently came to light.

The memo also told him to refrain from speaking to the media unless given permission.'

Dominique Magazine

Matt · 24 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Stumbled across an online magazine today called "Dominique Magazine". It's unabashedly pro-male and fights misandry. One example article is here. Excerpt:

'In the modern era of women (and men) celebrating and championing women's liberation, independence, and ongoing quest for equality, it seems we're shifting from fighting on behalf of women to blaming every nearby man for a woman's problem.

Week after week, you will find online and in public, some women being unaccountable for their actions that were done by her hand, but despite not needing a man, not bowing down to a man, she will still find a way to blame a man for said problem.

Back in the day, the conversation on relationships centered heavily on women exercising their options of either skipping being a mother and wife to now lambasting a growing number of single men. Before, the rise of single men was embraced because of the rallying cry, 'Women are wanting more; women are in a position to want, not need a man.'

Yes, she has a car, home, business, career, degree, money, credit, and other resources that previously one had to marry to obtain. However, there are cases where women choose occupations that will, by default, have them as the more significant income earner than most men should consider to date.

As quiet as it's kept, many men welcomed the new day, the MGTOW (Men Going Their Own Way) crew led the checking out of men who didn't want fatherhood or being a husband. They want to simply live life as they please without the responsibilities of other bodies. These men are not broke basement dwellers, as some want you to believe. They are not sitting online all day berating and criticizing women, as popular belief would lead you to think. They are doing them.'

Men share harrowing stories of abuse at hands of partners at historic conference in Belfast

Matt · 25 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Psychological and emotional forms of abuse tend to cause a more negative impact and greater feelings of fear than physical aggression.
That has been the finding of many studies, and it was a key theme at Northern Ireland's first conference focusing on male victims of domestic abuse.

Dr Elizabeth Bates, a psychology lecturer at the University of Cumbria, told guests that female perpetrators used coercive control and gaslighting more often than outright violence, though it should be noted that many men have also been physically and sexually abused by female and male partners.

While most of the guests at the summit were women — possibly because they make up three-quarters of Northern Ireland's community and voluntary workforce — male victims were also in attendance.

One man who did not wish to be named described how his former partner, who he was with for a decade, took control of his finances, sleep, food and, essentially, his entire life.'

UK: ‘Bothered’ Lisa Nandy wades into Labour sexism row over all-white male candidate list

Mastodon · 26 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour frontbencher Lisa Nandy has criticised her own party for selecting five white male candidates for the upcoming by-elections forced by Tory and SNP woes.

The senior shadow cabinet member said it “certainly” bothered her Labour had gone with an all-white male slate for the crunch votes in the months ahead – insisting that “diversity matters”.

Female Labour MPs are said to be outraged at the decision, warning that it could set back the opposition’s mission to reflect the make-up of the UK population.

Asked if it “bothered” her that Labour’s candidates were all white men, Ms Nandy told BBC’s Sunday with Laura Kuenssberg: “It does. It certainly does. Diversity in politics matters.”'

Coercive control survivors are being invited to take part in new Irish study

Mastodon · 26 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women who have suffered coercive control in intimate relationships are urged to take part in a new Trinity College Dublin study on this dehumanising form of psychological abuse.

“Women often feel trapped,” said the study's lead researcher, psychologist in clinical training, Niamh Brazil.

She said: “Coercive control encompasses specific tactics that perpetrators use to enforce obedience or provoke a particular response.”

"Coercive control is typically experienced by survivors as intimidation, use of force, threats, deprivation, or exploitation.

"A key piece is that, collectively, such characteristics are experienced as a lack of freedom and entrapment."'

UN expert seeks reforms to save women, children from 'abuse' in custody battles

Mastodon · 26 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In some family court systems, for example in state judicial systems in the US, some mental health professionals contend that parental alienation is a form of emotional child abuse.

The expert's report argues that the use of the unfounded and unscientific concept is highly gendered.

While it is invoked against both fathers and mothers, it is predominantly used against mothers, the report states, with the woman being accused of turning children against the father.

The consequences of biased custody decisions can be detrimental and irreversible to those concerned leading to a continuum of violence before and after separation, the expert said.

Despite these grave consequences “parental alienation” and related pseudo concepts are embedded and endorsed in legal systems across different jurisdictions, including amongst evaluators tasked with reporting to family courts on the best interest of the child.'

The midlife crisis of Title IX

Mastodon · 26 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In resonance with how powerful men invoke due process to prevent accountability for sexual harassment, extremists complained that Obama-era guidance violated accused students' due process rights to argue for weaker Title IX protections against harassment (never mind that the guidance required fair processes and was enforced to protect accused students). Indeed, men accused of sexual assault are suing their schools, claiming "anti-male bias," dangerously suggesting that treating allegations of sexual violence seriously is an attack on men.

This much is clear: When it comes to sexual violence, the male supremacist agenda is to ensure that no one, especially men, will be held accountable for committing it. And yet male supremacists are precisely who DeVos listened to when creating her Title IX rule. As revealed through thousands of emails, they were deeply involved in creating the Trump administration's Title IX rules — rules that are still in effecttoday. It's no wonder, then, that these rules significantly weakened protections against sexual harassment, permitting schools to ignore sexual harassment and allowing survivors to be cross-examined by their rapists' parents or friends.'

UK: RAF diversity targets discriminated against white men

Mastodon · 29 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Initiatives to increase the numbers of women and people from ethnic minorities in the RAF led to illegal positive discrimination, an inquiry has found.

The head of the RAF has admitted some men were discriminated against.

The internal inquiry was sparked by the resignation of a female RAF Group Captain who told her superiors the policy penalised white men.

The inquiry found she had faced significant and unreasonable pressure to meet diversity targets.

These targets were set by the last Chief of the Air Staff, Sir Mike Wigston, to increase the proportion of women and people from ethnic minorities in the RAF.

But the unnamed senior female RAF recruitment officer told her superiors that fast tracking women and ethnic minorities was contrary to the equality act and discriminated against white men.

The RAF has also admitted its target for 40% of the force to be female and 20% from an ethnic minority background by 2030 is unrealistic.'

Straight white men ‘dangerous’ says San Francisco campaigner for slavery reparations

Mastodon · 30 June 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A member of San Francisco’s reparations committee, which has proposed paying the city’s black inhabitants millions of dollars in compensation for slavery, has described straight white men as a “danger to society” and claimed “white supremacy is ingrained in the DNA” of America.

...

In an interview with this newspaper, Ms Cunningham said “even though” straight white men were “privileged, he [sic] has a lot of s--- wrong, and I say that because even straight white men are abusive, straight white men are serial killers”.

She said: “They have the most, I watch these shows, the most serial killers. Straight white men are the ones who are shooting up schools, right?

“So they are a danger to society. Not all of them.”'

Unravelling the notion of toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 1 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steven Pinker, a Harvard professor of psychology, has expressed concerns about the oversimplification of the term ‘toxic masculinity’. He argues that repressing emotions is not inherently detrimental, and expressing emotions isn’t inherently beneficial.

He points to a vast body of research demonstrating that individuals with greater self-control, including those who suppress anger, tend to lead healthier lives in various aspects, such as academic performance and interpersonal relationships.

Similarly, British psychologist Christian Jarrett supports Pinker’s assertion that emotional self-control is linked to positive health outcomes. Jarrett critiques the APA’s stance that traditional masculinity is harmful, citing a recent APA journal article which found that young men who endorsed the masculine ideal of competitiveness, for instance, exhibited higher psychological well-being scores.

American author and philosopher Christina Hoff Sommers has also been critical of the concept of toxic masculinity. She expresses concern that the narrative around toxic masculinity negatively impacts boys’ development, causing them to feel guilty or ashamed of their inherent traits.

In their book The Boy Crisis, Farrell and Gray investigate the unique challenges faced by boys in contemporary society. The authors argue that boys are grappling with issues of identity and purpose, stemming not from an inherent toxicity of masculinity, but from the breakdown of traditional male roles and the lack of male role models.'

Caitlin Moran: what’s gone wrong for men – and the thing that can fix them

Mastodon · 1 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was the response I got on social media that made me think I’d stumbled on to something bigger than I initially thought. On Twitter a few years ago, I asked what I thought was a pretty simple question: “Men – lovely men of Twitter. Hello! The last 10 years of feminism means we’re always discussing the problems of women on here. But what are the problems of men? What do you find makes your man-life difficult?”

The responses flooded in. “Paternity leave, if you can get it, is much shorter than maternity leave.” “We have very few avenues to emotionally express ourselves. We’re supposed to fit this stereotype of being tough, and only wanting to touch if it comes with sex. But I want a hug and head pats, dammit!” “Father’s Day is so depressing. All the cards depicting golf, or whisky. I’m an acid house survivor who owns two chickens called Bez and Barry Mooncult. Society seems not to think I might have reproduced.” “Suicide is still the biggest cause of death for men under 50 [in the UK] – and yet we seem not to have a plan to address that.” “In hot weather, your balls can get so hot and sweaty they stick to the side of your thighs, like clammy bats in a cave.”

But one type of reply came up time and time again. “Is this a trick?” “Are you asking this so you can laugh at us?” “Is this a feminist trap – are you going to retweet all of these, with the reply, ‘Look at the men complaining about nothing – while women continue to endure all the true suffering’?” Boys, and men, have become so used to being the conversational whipping boy, and the punchline to jokes, that they could not believe that a feminist writer was genuinely asking them to talk about their problems.'

Men’s loneliness is a feminist Issue in Men Without Men

Mastodon · 1 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Men Without Men, Ferrara frames men’s isolation as a product and project of patriarchy, arguing that the very qualities that patriarchal masculinity emphasizes are at odds with the things men most need to thrive. Patriarchal virtues of stereotypic masculinity – like hyper-independence, stoicism, strength, control, and rationality – inhibit the forming of friendships between men. Consequently, this manifests into severe forms of social isolation, which result in increased suicide risk, depression, stress-related death, and (for men specifically) increased rates of domestic violence and incarceration.

Ferrara argues that the impact of men’s loneliness also falls on wives, girlfriends, and mothers in the form of expanded emotional and intimate labor. Ferrara’s preliminary research implies that women can often take on the roles of therapist, event planner, social concierge, and best friend for the socially isolated men in their lives. Yet many men and boys resist this pattern of isolation and paint a new vision for what types of relationships might be possible among straight men, and Ferrara will be visiting then as her book develops.'

Patriarchy vs. Matriarchy

Mastodon · 1 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is the female/feminist perspective always right just because it was allegedly ignored by Western society until recently?

It seems so, at least implicitly; for feminism itself is rarely criticized or even disagreed with by anyone other than people “on the right.” The rest of us have been cowed into submission. We dare not speak up, even in defense of our boys.

I have been aware of some of the excesses of feminism for a while now—since Rush Limbaugh bravely coined the term “feminazi.” I thought it was silly at the time, but it was a convenient and accurate descriptor for the spittle-flecked, foaming-at-the-mouth, butch abortion activist, screaming in unhinged protest against the latest feminist outrage du jour. This caricature was easy to identify and oppose, and many people of good will realized it, even if they went along with it because it was easier than speaking out and becoming the latest target of their screed.

But I have been made aware that there is a much more pernicious effect of feminism that has already transformed our society, and it’s not limited to the stereotype I mentioned above. In any case, I didn’t even realize it until now. The shouting down of “the patriarchy,” the silencing of men, and the indulging of the vicious have created what I’m calling a “therapeutic society.” Its ascendancy in American society is proportional to the rise of women supplanting men in almost every area—and it’s killing us.'

Jailed fantasist who attacked herself with a hammer received £55,000 of taxpayer cash

Mastodon · 1 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A jailed fantasist who lied about being raped and trafficked by an Asian grooming benefited from nearly £55,000 in taxpayer's money, legal aid figures reveal.

Some £54,834 went to the legal team of Eleanor Williams after she concocted a twisted web of lies accusing she had been groomed, trafficked and beaten.

Williams, 22, posted pictures on Facebook claiming to show injuries sustained at the hands of a gang - although she was later found to have inflicted these on herself.

The post, made during the Covid lockdown in May 2020, was shared more than 100,000 times online and sparked national outrage, leading to demonstrations in her hometown of Barrow-in-Furness, Cumbria.

In March she was sentenced to eight and a half years for her false rape claims.'

Florida Gov. DeSantis signs bill ending permanent alimony

Matt · 1 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Alimony shouldn't exist, period. But this is a start anyway. Excerpt:

'Gov. Ron DeSantis on Friday signed a measure that will overhaul the state's alimony laws, after three vetoes of similar bills and a decade of emotional clashes over the issue.

The measure (SB 1416) includes doing away with what is known as permanent alimony. DeSantis' approval came a year after he nixed a similar bill that sought to eliminate permanent alimony and set up a formula for alimony amounts based on the length of marriage.

The approval drew an outcry from members of the "First Wives Advocacy Group," a coalition of mostly older women who receive permanent alimony and who assert that their lives will be upended without the payments.

"On behalf of the thousands of women who our group represents, we are very disappointed in the governor's decision to sign the alimony-reform bill. We believe by signing it, he has put older women in a situation which will cause financial devastation. The so-called party of 'family values' has just contributed to erosion of the institution of marriage in Florida," Jan Killilea, a 63-year-old Boca Raton woman who founded the group a decade ago, told The News Service of Florida in a text message Friday.'

Survey Data Shows The Foreskin Regeneration Market Is Over 200 Billion Dollars

Matt · 2 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An online survey of over 10,000 circumcised men shows that the market for men willing to pay to regrow their foreskin is over 200 billion dollars in the United States and potentially between half a trillion and 2.5 trillion dollars worldwide.

An online survey conducted by the sex researcher Aella asked “If you could get your foreskin back, with full function and sensation, how much would you pay for it?” with options for $0-20,000, over $20,000, and “Wouldn't want it back.”

The survey received a total of over 19,172 responses. Of these, 47.4% were removed, since the respondents did not identify as circumcised men. The remaining votes comprised 52.6% of respondents or 10,084 votes.'

Ontario launches free trucker training program, no white males allowed

Mastodon · 4 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. They posted an updated version saying they were wrong to say white males were excluded. But based on the article content I'd say that is indeed the case. Maybe a white male can apply but will he even be considered? Excerpt:

'To help fill thousands of job vacancies in the trucking industry, the Ontario government is investing in a trucker training program where participants receive up to $1,000 for transportation and childcare reimbursement and a $400 weekly allowance.

The program will accept over 50 participants that are “women, newcomers and others from underrepresented groups.”

“This innovative program will help break down barriers to attract more women into the trucking industry,” said Premier Doug Ford, who leads the Progressive Conservative party.

“As we build Ontario, we’re going to need all hands on deck. That’s why our government is working hard to ensure that all skilled occupations are more accessible and welcoming for women and all under-represented groups.”'

Boys must be taught how to tackle toxic masculinity, MPs say

Mastodon · 6 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

"Boys must be taught how to tackle toxic masculinity, MPs say"

Sexual harassment of girls is a scourge at schools in England, say MPs

Mastodon · 6 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sexual harassment of girls is “a scourge” in England’s schools, according to MPs, who have called for a government-led strategy to focus on boys who are failing to engage with relationship and sex education.

MPs on the women and equalities committee said in a report that there should be training for all teachers to help them hold conversations with boys and young men about sexual harassment and gender-based violence, in a way that challenges prevailing gender norms and ideas of masculinity.

They have also called for relationships, sex and health education (RSHE) to be compulsory up to the age of 18 in sixth forms and colleges, warning that without it young people take their first steps in the adult world “undersupported and less equipped to navigate potentially harmful and dangerous situations”.'

Male Survivors of Abuse by Women Can Heal Without Misogyny

Mastodon · 6 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are two commonly understood reasons why we fail to comprehend women's victimization of men as abuse. The point of this post is to present a third compelling reason, then unpack the implications for professional helpers—attorneys, investigators, therapists, victim's advocates, and so on—who, in their work, may come across male survivors of abuse by women.

While this under-discussed problem warrants more visibility for many reasons, chief among them is the reality that we create more misogynists—someone with a strong hatred of, contempt for, or prejudice against women—by neglecting the healing of male survivors of abuse by women. Lacking the tools and language to unpack and articulate their pain can lead male survivors of abuse to scapegoat all women and, sometimes by extension, gender non-conforming folks, too.

Patriarchy already deprives boys and men of emotional freedom and outlets, limiting the "appropriate" range of emotional expression boys and men can engage in, at the expense of their own emotional, physical, social, and spiritual well-being. And because we socialize boys and men to externalize emotions, to perpetuate this emotional void for male survivors of abuse by women is to perpetuate their vulnerability at our own expense.'

What does Caitlin Moran know about men?

Mastodon · 8 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a brave soul that dares offer advice to the opposite sex these days. Women authors tend to stick to listing men's flaws so that female audiences can enjoy the resulting catharsis. Men are pretty much banned from making any generalisation about women, good or bad.

But Times columnist Caitlin Moran is bolder. With her new book, What About Men?, she goes where few women have gone before. Having noticed that young men seem to be in crisis, she now attempts to get inside the mind of the modern male in order to help him out.

...

Post #MeToo, one legacy of mainstream feminism seems to be the policy of shouting at all men about how terrible they are, in the hope that some of the generalised opprobrium sticks to the right candidates. At the same time, men's ordinary sexual impulses — sometimes irritating, sometimes welcome — are denigrated and treated as inevitably threatening and sinister.

...

And it would also be good if we could talk more about what is wonderful about masculinity, and toxic about femininity, without caveats or excuses. When, in the final chapter, Moran eventually gets round to the former, she makes a good stab at it — though, by her own admission, most of the things she thinks we value in men are also things we value in dogs. In fact, I would go further — they are things we value in elderly Labradors. The characteristics she celebrates — being loyal, hard-working, protective, and so on — are all very pro-social and unthreatening to women and children, and unlikely to set the imagination alight of any young man looking for his own hero's journey.'

No, Caitlin Moran: men do talk about their feelings – and birthday parties, and plaits

Mastodon · 8 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I can't know what it feels like, as a man, to watch any of this unfolding around me. But as a woman watching from the sidelines, it's been both revelatory and often moving, triggering a desire to hear more. Which brings us rather awkwardly to the writer Caitlin Moran's hotly awaited new book What About Men?, whose breezy argument that modern men just can't share their problems or their deeper feelings like women supposedly do seems to be provoking something of an unexpected backlash.

She's right, obviously, that plenty of men are struggling; that they're still disproportionately likely to be homeless or addicts or in jail or to die by suicide, that toxic masculinity is worryingly rife in schools (as parliament's women and equalities committee pointed out this week) and that too many men put off going to the doctor, especially for help with mental health. But it's quite the leap from there to arguing breezily in Esquire magazine that "men themselves don't talk about their problems, or give each other advice, at all", or that millennial dads are muddling through with "no fathering memoirs; no pub discussions about the practicalities of being a father – how to plait hair; how to arrange a turtle-themed birthday party", as if men never chatted on the school run or YouTube wasn't full of dad tutorials on ballet buns or the plethora of charities and thinktanks and men's support groups that have been springing up since the late 1990s (when the Fatherhood Institute, for example, first emerged) didn't exist.'

Stuff, the Grooming Brand Promoting Healthy Masculinity, Is the First Aussie Men's Product Stocked by Sephora

Mastodon · 8 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Founder Hunter Johnson reckons the personal care category for men has been ripe for disruption after decades of dominance from tired old brands.

"For so long it has been dominated by outdated conglomerates who perpetuate tired and toxic stereotypes that don't represent modern masculinity," he tells Broadsheet.

"We've witnessed an amazing amount of innovation and evolution in the female space, but next to nothing for men. It's a white-space opportunity to provide a positive narrative for men in a time when there aren't many."

Johnson's solution? A personal care brand that's not just good for your body, your face and your hair – but your head, too. The brand addresses toxic masculinity through its marketing campaigns, positive male role modelling and its website, which doubles as a resource centre for young men, with a blog addressing issues such as consent, first-time fatherhood and mindfulness. The products also help to fund preventative mental health programs for thousands of young men at Johnson's charity, The Man Cave, which he launched in 2014.'

Robert Downey Jr. Says ‘Oppenheimer’ Confirmed His Belief That Men Start Wars and ‘Entire Planet Should Be a Matriarchy’

Mastodon · 9 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Robert Downey, Jr. said that working on the upcoming movie Oppenheimer confirmed his belief that men start wars and the planet should be ruled by women.

The actor — who plays U.S. Atomic Energy Commission chairman Lewis Strauss in Oppenheimer — made the comments in an interview with the Associated Press, during which the giggling reporter asked a leading question about his thoughts on “patriarchy and war.”

“Men start wars and the entire planet should be a matriarchy,” he said. “But I’ve never changed position on that… This was just a triple confirmation.”

The actor is clearly wrong in his implication that only men start wars. Numerous female leaders — including Catherine the Great of Russia, Isabella I of Spain, and the Empress Dowager Cixi of China — have instigated wars or invasions throughout history.'

Men are lost. Here’s a map out of the wilderness

Mastodon · 10 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I started noticing it a few years ago. Men, especially young men, were getting weird.

It might have been the “incels” who first caught my attention, spewing self-pitying venom online, sometimes venturing out to attack the women they believed had done them wrong.

It might have been the complaints from the women around me. “Men are in their flop era,” one lamented, sick of trying to date in a pool that seemed shallower than it should be.'

"After coming out, I learned that behaviors related to toxic masculinity could happen in my relationships with women too"

Mastodon · 12 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I started dating women, I believed some misconceptions about women-loving-women, or WLW, relationships, including that dating a woman would mean stronger communication, mutual respect, and less objectification. I thought I'd be safe from the toxic dynamics I'd experienced in my relationships with men. I was wrong.

Toxic masculinity is a set of behaviors often exhibited by men and masc people that glorify dominance and strength, often to the detriment of others or those who display them. These behaviors can include objectification, sexual coercion, emotional detachment, aggression, physical and emotional abuse, manipulation, gaslighting, intimidation, and fear-mongering. They aren't exclusively perpetuated by men, nor are all traditionally masculine behaviors inherently harmful.

...

I've dated women who demonstrated manipulation, gaslighting, and controlling behaviors. But I hadn't been prepared to experience this dynamic outside of my relationships with men.'

Shadow sports minister Lucy Powell calls for misogyny to be classified as hate crime

Mastodon · 13 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shadow sports minister Lucy Powell has told Sky Sports News there needs to be a change in the law for misogyny to be classified as a hate crime so that it is treated as seriously as racism and homophobia.
...
"Women don't have the protection that they should have against this rising trend in misogyny," Powell told Sky Sports News.

"It has proliferated online. [Online influencers], really get that 'fresh meat' of young men whipped up about these issues and turning that into really horrible behaviour offline as well.

"Not only do we need to change the law but we need to have a really serious culture change here so that women can enjoy football and enjoy sport in the way that men can.

A special report from the Law Commission, a body which advises the government on how laws should be amended and modernised, suggests that making misogyny a hate crime could actually lead to a fall in prosecutions because the threshold for a successful conviction would be made that much higher.

Rape Crisis agrees, saying anything that might lead to a "two-tier" assessment of rape and sexual assault would be hugely damaging.'

Boston Police Department commits to hiring 30% women officers by 2030

Mastodon · 13 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Boston Police Department has joined more than 300 other departments across the country in signing a commitment for 30% of its officers to be women by 2030.

“With our current class recruit at around 24%, currently, we’ve made significant progress in increasing the number of women to serve in the City Boston. I’m proud about that,” Commissioner Michael Cox said at BPD headquarters Wednesday morning. “But we still have ways to go and this commitment should … make sure that we are obligated, or intentional, about making sure we bring women on our job.”

The pledge is called “30×30,” an initiative inspired by the July 2019 National Institute of Justice special report “Women in Policing: Breaking Barriers and Blazing a Path,” which found that “the percentage of women in law enforcement has remained relatively stagnant for the past few decades.”'

Sex education to be compulsory in Irish schools

Mastodon · 13 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The relationships and sexuality lessons will teach pupils about "nurturing respectful, caring and healthy relationships."

Among the topics covered will be "consent, intimacy and mutual pleasure" and how to identify abusive or violent relationships.

That will include "a particular focus on violence against women and girls."

In the Into Adulthood lessons, pupils will be taught about "allyship skills" to challenge unfair or abusive behaviour.

According to the NCCA, that involves "recognising and using one's privileged status (for example as white or male or Irish person) to support individuals from minority identity groups".'

Acquitted Yale student can sue rape accuser for defamation: court

Mastodon · 14 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Yale University student who beat back rape accusations can sue his accuser for defamation, the State of Connecticut Supreme Court ruled recently.

Saifullah Khan's lawsuit can proceed after the court ruled on June 27 that the former Yalie, who was expelled, can sue his accuser because the university's sexual assault proceedings did not resemble actual judicial procedures.

The ruling comes after the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals asked the Connecticut judiciary to weigh in on Khan's claims and the applicability of the state's "absolute immunity doctrine," which generally protects witnesses and accusers from civil action for statements made during judicial proceedings.'

Democrats and Republicans Agree Men Are in Trouble. They Disagree on What to Do About It.

Mastodon · 15 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The survey asked respondents to agree or disagree with a series of quotations from Democrats and Republicans that pointed to problems with American men and Americans' ideas about masculinity.

Most people — Democrats and Republicans — agreed that prevailing societal ideas of masculinity are flawed, that boys' and men's economic prospects are under threat and that men should spend less time watching porn and playing video games. Though there are partisan splits on some questions, majorities of Republicans and Democrats agreed with statements on the problematic state of American masculinity or a need for a more positive version of it, no matter the party of the speaker. (Respondents could see only the quotations, no attribution, in the survey.)

These results surprised both political pollsters and scholars who focus on gender.'

Defamation Ruling Could Influence Title IX Cases, Policy

Mastodon · 15 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although this will not be the first time a respondent has successfully filed a defamation suit against the student who accused them of assault, Title IX victims' rights advocates believe that the case could open the door for more such cases.

Elizabeth Tang, senior counsel at the National Women's Law Center, fears that the ruling creates a situation where victims are trapped between a rock and a hard place. If their university doesn't allow the respondent those aforementioned protections, the complainant may be sued and retraumatized during the intensive discovery process, she argued. But if the university does, the Title IX investigation itself will be retraumatizing.

"They have to weigh … which harms they're going to be willing to endure. For a lot of survivors weighing this pretty impossible choice, they're probably going to say to themselves, 'Well, it's better if I don't report at all,'" she said.

A group of 15 organizations that advocate against gender-based violence made similar points in an amicus brief that argued for the court to grant Doe immunity.'

UK: Former minister for women calls for a minister for men

Mastodon · 15 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Government should appoint a minister for men to champion men's health and positive male role models, a former minister for women has said.

Katherine Fletcher, who served as transport minister and minister for women under Liz Truss, said that it was right that men received attention in relation to certain issues as well as women.

The role of minister for women was created by Tony Blair in 1997, with Labour's Harriet Harman serving as the first person in the post.

In an interview with GB News to be broadcast on Sunday, Ms Fletcher suggested that the opposite sex would benefit from similar representation at ministerial level.'

Democrats Have a Man Problem. These Experts Have Ideas for Fixing It.

Mastodon · 16 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jackson Katz: I hear Democratic Party and progressive strategists saying, “We’re sick of talking about white men. White men are the cause of all the problems. Why are you going to spend more time on this?” And I think a lot of young white men hear this, and they hear disdain. Go to the comment sections on Breitbart: They basically say, “The left and the Democratic party hates white men.”

My plea here is that there is a way to speak to those young white men and young men of color that is inclusive, that is challenging, that is positive. It’s not that we have to replicate the aggressive traditional masculinity to appeal to them. It’s just that we have to take them seriously. When someone like Jordan Peterson sells out 10,000 people in an arena, when people like these are getting 20 million views ... they’re tapping into something real. How can we tap into it in a way that gives them actual solutions? If we can do that, we have the potential for creating multiracial, mixed-gender coalitions that can actually put in place the legislation and the policy that will help everybody. I don’t think that’s naive. I just think we have to do a better job.'

VICTOR JOECKS: Why the left won't offer a positive vision of masculinity

Mastodon · 16 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Society would have more success turning boys into men if it provided a coherent definition of the term.

Men and boys are in crisis. Pick your statistic — high school graduation rates, incarceration rates, deaths of despair, college degrees. Females do better than males and often by a wide margin. But there's scant recognition of this though it has been happening for decades.

Instead, boys hear that masculinity is toxic. In 2018, the American Psychological Association linked "traditional masculinity" with mental disorders.

The reason this is so hard for the left is that it requires acknowledging that men and women are inherently different. The vital push for equal opportunitiy morphed into a demand for equal outcomes. But if men and women have fundamental differences, they will have different priorities, interests and skills. That means equal opportunity won't produce equal outcomes.'

Why Are Girls Depressed? Look At These Men

Mastodon · 16 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A growing barrage of reports is showing girls are suffering. A CDC report earlier this year found that a majority (57%) of female high school students reported sustained sadness and hopelessness and 30% said they had seriously considered suicide in the previous 12 months. This compares to 29% and 14% respectively for male students. Everyone is wringing their hands and desperately trying to understand why.

But look at the men leading the world and dominating the headlines. They are the role models for a generation of boys hungry to prove themselves in a money- and power-adulating world. The same boys that girls are looking to as future lovers, husbands and fathers for their children. And they are horrifying images of immature, unethical and uncaring toxic masculinity gone awry.

And we are wondering why girls are depressed? Listening to these men who head up companies that influence millions – in Zuckerberg's case billions - of lives and livelihoods, through the common spaces in which our online lives are spent, is enough to put any girl off her dinner – not to mention her date.

The rise of toxic male models, teenage boys' porn-addled notions of romance which lean towards strangulation, the loss (in much of the USA) of their (grand)-mothers' hard-won rights to reproductive choice, the frog-in-the-boiling-pot era of climate warming, the rise of male autocrats around the planet - depression sounds like a very sane response to reality.'

Over-feminised schools are failing Britain’s boys

Mastodon · 16 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But for all the ambitious ideas, like the current government, it appears Labour have no plan when it comes to perhaps the most important issue in this country’s education system: the way it fails boys. Boys are falling behind in attainment. Fewer go to university. And it’s hard not to suspect that at least part of that is down to a lack of male leaders in schools to emulate, or who can empathise with their pupils.

Somewhere around 76% of school teachers are women. If girls were falling behind in male-dominated teaching environments, it’s hard not to suspect that at least some inquiries would be made about whether those environments were partly responsible. Yet the Government seems strangely uninterested in the issue.

A fascinating OECD report once found that boys were more hostile to school and likely to do fewer hours of homework than their female peers. It’s not particularly surprising, when the same research found that their teachers were consistently displaying favouritism towards female students.'

‘Social media’: the harms to women and girls

Mastodon · 19 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female politicians and journalists also experience higher incidence of online gender-based and sexual abuse and harassment than their male counterparts. This can result in self-censorship and a ‘chilling effect’, causing public figures to retreat from ‘social media’ or to restrict the topics they post about, thus inhibiting their professional and civic participation. According to many experts, gendered online violence against journalists now needs to be tackled as a multilevel, online-governance issue, rather than one of personal safety, with improved support from peers, employers and legal and political institutions.

Finally, the mainstreaming and normalisation of male-supremacist misogyny among youth poses a significant and urgent threat to women and girls on ‘social media’. Girls report that easy access to violent pornography is affecting boys’ understandings and expectations of sex.

Much of the misogyny experienced by women online originates in the ‘manosphere’, a loose network of anti-feminist and male-supremacist men’s communities, which has flourished thanks to the technological affordances of ‘social media’. The ‘manosphere’ and its asociated male and white-supremacist formations exploit these opportunities—not only to spread their gender-political beliefs but also to attack, threaten and harass women, people of colour and LGBT+ individuals. While it is difficult to determine the precise scale of this, recent research indicates that male-supremacist ideas and followings are spreading.
...
The Digital Services Act promises to improve the safety of women and girls on ‘social media’ platforms through its focus on systemic risks. Careful monitoring and evaluation will however be required to ensure it meets these goals. We recommend that a gender-based review is conducted of the act, a year from the first risk assessments, to ensure it is functioning as intended and that the ‘social media’ companies are complying with their obligations on access to data and algorithmic transparency.'

The mother and daughter's verdict that every man in this film is a bigot or a loser

Mastodon · 19 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But my main objection is that Barbie is not really a film about Barbie at all. It's one hour and 54 minutes of extended misandry, dressed up with a few fun dance routines and one or two (granted fairly decent) jokes.

It's a deeply anti-man movie, an extension of all that TikTok feminism that paints any form of masculinity — other than the most anodyne — as toxic and predatory, and frames women's liberation not as a movement based on achieving equality between the sexes but as a cultural revenge vehicle designed to write men out of the story altogether.

Every male character is either an idiot, a bigot or a sad, rather pathetic loser. If the roles were reversed, and a male director made a film about how all women were hysterical, neurotic, gold-digging witches, it would be denounced — quite rightly — as deeply offensive and sexist.'

Why “Mansplaining” Might Not Be What You Think It Is

Mastodon · 19 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“Mansplaining” is an accusation thrown around often and risks getting in the way of forming opposite-sex friendships and relationships. Typically, when someone says they’ve been a “victim of mansplaining,” it’s in the context of a man talking to a woman about a topic she already knows about. She perceives his sharing as a condescending or patronising lecture, given intentionally, perhaps in an attempt to put her down.

There are some men who do this. It’s not nice and I don’t condone it. However, I think more commonly it’s an accusation rashly levied at men by those disregarding something fundamental about male communication.

When building same-sex relationships, men often go about this in a different way from women. Male-to-male conversations can be dominated by the exchange of knowledge and recommendations about things: Statistics about sports stars, potential fixes for botched DIY jobs, motorway routes for long trips. The list goes on.'

UK: Parliament launches new inquiry into sexism and misogyny in the City

Mastodon · 20 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A parliamentary committee is renewing an inquiry into sexism and misogyny in the City after a spate of sexual harassment allegations rocked the business world.

MPs on the influential Treasury committee said the new inquiry would examine the barriers faced by women in financial services, and determine whether meaningful progress had been made since its last investigation in 2018 raised concerns over the gender pay gap, stigmas against working mothers, and an “alpha male” culture.

It will also explore what kind of role City firms, the government and regulators including the Financial Conduct Authority should play in “combating sexual harassment and misogyny”.

“We’ll be investigating if enough work has been done to build more supportive workplace cultures, how harassment and misogyny can be addressed, and the role the government and regulator should play in role modelling behaviours.'

We need more than legislation to fix Scotland's misogyny problem

Mastodon · 20 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I welcome the proposed misogyny law as a crucial step forward. However, as voiced by many women in the SWC report, legislation is but one piece of the solution. What we require is a paradigm shift – a cultural transformation that transcends laws and permeates our educational institutions, workplaces, online platforms and every corner of our society where misogyny takes root.

Men are a huge part of the solution, as this is not a fight of women against men, but a united front against a culture that hurts us all. Let us create a Scotland where women's rights, voices, and experiences are not merely added to the discourse but form its very foundation.'

MPs launch probe into whether sexist online posts are fuelling ‘escalating violence against women’

Mastodon · 20 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MPs have launched a new parliamentary inquiry into whether sexist and misogynistic posts online are a warning that real life violence against women is to follow amid fears that chances to stop dangerous men are being missed.

The Women and Equalities Committee said the focus of its new probe into the “escalation of violence against women and girls” would be whether there are “patterns of behaviour” by men that indicate an increased likelihood to progress to serious attacks on female victims.'

UK: Watchdog criticises family courts' handling of domestic abuse

Mastodon · 20 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The findings highlight concerns about unsafe contact orders in private law children's proceedings, in particular when allegations of "parental alienation" are made.

It says claims of parental alienation – a term used to describe the unwarranted rejection of a parent by a child because of manipulation by the other parent – as a counter-allegation to claims of domestic abuse are having a "chilling effect" on the ability of parents to disclose abuse in order to ensure safe contact arrangements for their children.

Jacobs said there was a feeling among victims and survivors of abuse that these counter-allegations were taken more seriously than allegations of domestic abuse.

She told the Guardian: "We tend to see counter-allegations weighted and explored in parallel. And what we really want to see is a child-centred approach and a full understanding of domestic abuse before we even consider the concept of alienation."'

UK: Overhaul of laws to protect women from domestic killers

Mastodon · 20 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The measures announced today expand on the government's ongoing work to tackle domestic abuse including:

Putting controlling or coercive behaviour on a par with physical violence, which will mean offenders sentenced to a year or more imprisonment or a suspended sentence will automatically be actively managed by the police, prison and probation services under multi-agency public protection arrangements.

Recording offenders sentenced to a year or more for controlling or coercive behaviour on the violent and sex offender register.

Trialling stricter management of domestic abusers, who could now be fitted with a tag, prevented from going within a certain distance of a victim's home, and made to attend a behaviour change programme, using domestic abuse protection notices and domestic abuse protection orders in three areas in the UK.

Adding violence against women and girls to the strategic policing requirement, which for the first time categorises violence against women and girls as a national threat and sets clear expectations about how this threat should be tackled by police forces.'

UK: Push to strengthen domestic abuse law in Guernsey

Mastodon · 20 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Committee for Home Affairs said it wanted to strengthen laws to offer greater protection to victims.

It is proposing the criminalisation of non-physical forms of domestic abuse to deal with coercive or controlling behaviour.

The committee said research around domestic abuse had changed significantly in the last 20 years.

He said: "Historically domestic abuse was looked at through the prism of violence, and as abhorrent as domestic violence is it has been recognised that domestic abuse can take many forms, such as coercion, control, intimidation, and they can result in significant harm to victims.

"We need legislation that matches our improved understanding of the impact of domestic abuse and our committee hopes the States agrees."'

Kate Emery: It’s not easy in a man’s world, men are having a rougher time of it than we think in 2023

Mastodon · 21 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is it harder to be a young man than a young woman in 2023?

Feminist icon — keep reading — Caitlin Moran has spent years being asked this question.

The first time I heard the British author bring it up I was like Pavlov’s pooch, waiting to witness one of the faces of fourth wave feminism tear it up. Men? They make more money than women (on average), hold most positions of power (overwhelmingly) and 1 in 3 of them hasn’t been abused. Plus, if they lose their temper nobody suggests they’ve got their period.

Instead I was surprised to hear Moran suggest that, in some ways, men are having a rougher time of it than we think. And last week Moran published a more detailed response to this question in her book, What About Men?'

Being An Andrew Tate Fan Is a Walking Red Flag

Mastodon · 21 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For many of us, it's not very hard to see why boys and men are in crisis. We live in a society which tends to casually and routinely denigrate manhood, commitment, marriage, and fatherhood.

Self-determination and sexual promiscuity reign. The birth rate is down, marriages are falling, and divorce is up. Being masculine in the right sense of the word is shunned. To compound the masculinity crisis we are facing, a great proportion of people are no longer able – or willing – to differentiate between male and female for fear of being seen as politically incorrect. This is well evidenced in the acceptance of and ideological takeover of transgenderism, especially among the young, many of whom accept the lie that there is no such thing as biological sex, hook, line and sinker.

The concept of traditional gender roles is frowned upon. We have, by some accounts, created a society full to the brim of weak and unmanly men who are afraid to be strong, who are afraid of their own masculinity, who are afraid to simply be good men. Some suggest that the over-policing of boys and men, brought on in part by feminism, has created many anxious, angry, insecure young men.

Feminist ideology – specifically our society's obsession with female victimisation – is one branch of the problem. But fatherlessness and a lack of good father figures, in my opinion, is the more pervasive cause of the lack of direction, the shortage of confidence, and perhaps the effeminacy of some boys and men today. It goes without saying that there is a crisis of femininity, too – yet I would argue it's harder for women to see the value of examining societal roles when men are pointing to a man who places no value on fidelity, modesty, or self-respect as an example to follow.'

UK: Mayor launches new campaign empowering men to challenge misogyny by saying ‘maaate’ to their mates when they cross the line

Mastodon · 21 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan has today launched a major new campaign to empower men and boys to say ‘Maaate’ to their mates as a means of challenging sexism and misogyny in society.

The innovative campaign aims to help men and boys confidently step-in when they witness language and behaviour towards women and girls that crosses the line.

This is part of the Mayor’s refreshed strategy to tackle violence against women and girls (VAWG) that champions a public health approach, encouraging all of society to play their part and putting the onus of responsibility on men and boys to change the way they perceive, treat and talk about women.'

India: “Rape Law Misused As A Weapon By Females Upon Differences With Male Counterpart”

Mastodon · 21 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Uttarakhand High Court has recently quashed pending criminal proceedings against a man for allegedly having sexual intercourse with a lady for decades on the false promise of marriage
...
Considering the aforementioned position of law, the Court concluded that the applicant cannot be impleaded in criminal charges especially when the complainant consented for continuing physical relationship even after the marriage of the applicant.'

Jennifer Horgan: Violence relates to men, though not all men, and men must change it

Mastodon · 21 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Another week passes and another woman is killed by a man known to her. Yet boys and men take issue with violence being presented as a problem with men.

Men cause violence. Men are responsible for violence. Men are violent.

Women have been fighting for decades to shift the responsibility of violence from the victim to the perpetrator, from women back to men. But men and boys push back against these phrases, demanding qualifying words like ‘some’ or ‘not all.’

The reaction is difficult to take when violence in society is statistically the work of men. Is the male ego so fragile, I’ve often asked myself? Why can’t a man nod his head and say: ‘Yes, it is a male problem and it is truly awful’?'

Lesbian domestic violence proves it’s not just a male problem

Mastodon · 21 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You may recall the campaign running on national television a few years ago. The ads were part of the Australian government’s campaign designed ‘to help break the cycle of violence against women and their children’.

It suggested that all of the perpetrators of domestic violence were strictly male. For example, the Albanese Labor government is presently funding a range of new initiatives through this budget to help deliver the National Plan to End Violence against Women and Children 2022-32.

But what about domestic violence against men?

I have no intention of minimising the problem of domestic violence against women and children. One must speak out loud and clear about violence against anyone regardless of age, gender, and sexual orientation.

However, it is a myth that domestic violence is all about men hurting women in heterosexual relationships. Domestic violence is also a ‘silent epidemic’ in lesbian relationships.

As the studies of lesbian violence demonstrate, women are capable of being as violent as men in intimate relationships. Violence among same-sex couples is apparently two to three times more common than among married heterosexual couples.'

UK: Street harassment: Doubts new law will change behaviour

Mastodon · 22 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new law making public sexual-based harassment a crime is being introduced, but many fear it will be unenforceable.

One charity told the BBC there was little chance of getting convictions.
...
The government-backed bill, which has been passed by the House of Commons and is now being considered by The House of Lords, could see people convicted of catcalling, stalking or other intentionally sexual behaviour, jailed for up to two years.'

UPS drivers ready to strike

Matt · 23 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If the typical UPS delivery person were female, UPS trucks would already be outfitted with air conditioning. Just sayin'. Excerpt:

'As a UPS delivery driver in Dallas, Texas, Seth Pacic is intimately familiar with the dangers of extreme heat. After a long day's work through record-breaking temperatures in summer 2011, he found himself dry heaving in the parking lot, incapable of driving home until he spent an hour and a half in the air-conditioned office.

"It was one of the worst feelings I've ever had in my entire life," he said. "I didn't feel like I fully recovered for a couple of weeks."'

Biden Admin Gives Soros-Backed Group Millions To Teach Young Puerto Ricans About 'Toxic Masculinities'

Mastodon · 24 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Biden administration gave $2 million to a George Soros-backed nonprofit to stop violent crime in Puerto Rico by teaching the island's young men about "structural racism and toxic masculinities."

President Joe Biden's Justice Department in October awarded the lucrative grant to Taller Salud, a "feminist, culturally specific nonprofit organization" in Puerto Rico. The money comes from the department's Community-Based Violence Intervention and Prevention Initiative, which aims to address crime through police alternatives. Taller Salud, which receives funding from liberal billionaire George Soros's Open Society Foundations, will use the $2 million to further implement its "community violence intervention program," which includes "public education campaigns" to address "structural racism and toxic masculinities" among Puerto Rican men between the ages of 15 and 30.'

If I made a movie that treated women the way Barbie treats men, feminists would want me executed

Mastodon · 24 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What is the patriarchy?

I bet most people reading this haven't a clue.

Even I don't really understand it, and according to radical feminists, I'm supposed to be the very personification of what it supposedly represents.

Yet it's a word that is said so relentlessly in the smash-hit new Barbie movie that it's worth knowing exactly what it means.

The literal translation, derived from the ancient Greek word "patriarkhēs," is "rule of the father" and denoted the reality at the time that men were the titular heads of most families and organizations.

But in recent times, the concept of "the patriarchy" has been hijacked and corrupted by feminazis to suggest that every aspect of life and society is dominated by powerful, privileged males over subjugated, underprivileged females.

In short: Men are evil oppressors, women are unimpeachably perfect victims, and anyone who dares challenge this notion is a disgusting misogynist.'

Harry and Meghan back 'positive masculinity' charity that 'engages men as allies in equality'

Mastodon · 25 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The royal couple's own charity, Archewell, is backing the State of the World's Fathers report by the Equimundo Center for Masculinities and Social Justice.

Washington DC-based Equimundo says it works on "promoting environments that support boys and young men to live out diverse, equitable and healthy masculinities".

The charity also "engage[s] men in gender equality" by "transforming intergenerational patterns of harm and promoting patterns of care, empathy and accountability among boys and men throughout their lives."'

South Africa: Men challenged to work on developing new forms of masculinity

Mastodon · 25 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Dominating, aggressive forms of hegemonic masculinity are not meeting the needs of men or women to live nurtured, emotive and interconnected lives. Because both women and men suffer under hegemonic masculinities, it is pivotal that men work toward gender equality and developing new forms of masculinities," Tshoaedi said.

Hegemonic masculinity is defined as a practice that legitimises men's dominant position in society, while justifying the subordination of marginalised groups and women.

Tshoaedi argued that men's involvement in gender equality will have a "humanising effect".

"The concept of 'caring masculinities' encourages men to participate in projects on gender equality. It calls for the adoption of values and characteristics of care, which negate hegemonic masculinities.

"Caring masculinities requires men to rethink ideas of power and how we use that power. It calls for using one's power to engage in resistance against patriarchal domination and control that is harmful," Tshoaedi said.'

It's Time to Talk About What It Means to Be a Man in the U.S.

Mastodon · 25 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's time to have a difficult conversation about manhood in the United States.

Young boys and men in this country are not okay, and we are all paying the price for it. Whether through mass shootings, high rates of suicide, sexual assault, and attacks against women, hate crimes, or even the insurrection on Jan. 6, 2020, some men are expressing their anger through violence and turning to despair and self-harm.

In our schools, we can incorporate programs in which boys and girls discuss and engage in discussions of what healthy, fair relationships between all of us look like. These can look like Futures Without Violence's "Coaching Boys into Men" or Equimundo's "Many Ways of Being" and many more. At home and in politics, we can support non-transferable paid parental leave for all parents, and provide tools that can help parents encourage critical thinking and honest conversations about what boys and young men see online. In our broader culture, we can hold tech platforms accountable, joining efforts by Ultraviolet and others to enforce online community standards for gaming and social media that stop promoting harassment, hate speech and misogyny.'

Ukraine war: Russia expands pool of men eligible for call-up

Matt · 25 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Russia is raising the maximum age at which men can be conscripted from 27 to 30, making more of them liable to serve in the armed forces.

The change was passed by the lower house of parliament on Tuesday.

The package of measures comes as Moscow seeks to boost troop numbers to defend territory gained in its invasion of Ukraine last year.

A senior Russian MP said the new law was written with a major conflict in mind.

"It already smells like a big war," Andrei Kartapolov, head of the Russian parliament's defence committee, told MPs.'

Experts warn of ‘devastating effect’ as traditional male roles deemed ‘toxic’ by media, Hollywood

Mastodon · 26 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Masculinity" has become a dirty word to some. The American Psychological Association has released guidelines calling traditional masculinity "harmful," and Hollywood has been open about its disdain, with movies such as last weekend's much-hyped "Barbie."

According to a recent Politico/Ipsos poll, 36% of Americans believe "entertainment and culture make it hard to feel proud to be a traditional guy." Similarly, 31% believe the Democrat Party is "hostile" to masculine values.

"It's pretty clear that the media views masculinity in only two ways: stupid or toxic," comedian Tim Young told Fox News Digital. "Like Barbieland, the concept of equality between men and women according to the media is fictional - and where there could be a chance to have everyone get along, their spin on things is to be divisive and put down men."

Riley Gaines, a former NCAA swimmer and OutKick host, has seen this trend firsthand in sports, where she says being masculine is an "undesirable trait" for many modern men who live in fear of being rejected.

"As a society, we have lost what it means to be masculine. Actually, we've deemed masculinity as bad, it's toxic," Gaines told Fox News Digital.

"They don’t want to be seen as oppressors and that’s what we’ve deemed masculinity as," Gaines added. "There is the saying, ‘Hard times create strong men, strong men create good times, good times create weak men, and weak men create hard times,’ and it’s incredibly interesting because you can see it play out throughout history."'

UK: Andrew Malkinson's rape conviction quashed after 20-year fight

Mastodon · 26 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andrew Malkinson was jailed in 2004 for the attack on a woman in Salford, serving 17 years in prison for a crime he always said he did not commit.

His case was referred to the Court of Appeal in January after new evidence pointed to another potential suspect.

Mr Malkinson, 57, said: "I was innocent and finally they listened."

"But I have been innocent all along, for each of those 20 years that came before today," he said.

"It has taken nearly 20 years to persuade my kidnappers to let me go."

Overturning his conviction, Lord Justice Holroyd said Mr Malkinson could "leave the court free and no longer be subject to the conditions of licence".

Police also apologised for what they described as a "grave miscarriage of justice".'

UK Proposes Legal Defence for Domestic Violence Victims Who Harm or Kill Their Partners

Mastodon · 26 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United Kingdom is considering sentencing reforms which would provide a legal defence to victims of domestic violence who harm or kill their perpetrators after being subjected to sustained abuse.

The proposal comes in the wake of an independent review into the adequacy of the way in which domestic violence complainants are treated in the criminal justice system, including whether current protections are sufficient to reduce the endemic problem of domestic abuse in the United Kingdom and provide justice for victims.

One of the reviews conclusions was there needs to be greater consideration of the mitigating factors and ‘special circumstances’ in cases where a victim kills their abuser after suffering prolonged and sustained abuse.

Under the proposal, a murder charge could be reduced to manslaughter despite a complainant’s intent to kill, and the definition of self-defence would be broadened to include assaults in circumstances where they are not a response to an imminent threat.

Because not all forms of domestic violence leave visible bruises, scars and broken bones, one of the significant challenges for victims is gathering enough information or proof, particularly of coercive control, or emotional and psychological abuse, to press charges.

Coercive control is not always easy to identify either – and often the perpetrator and victim are the only ones who are aware that they’re occurring within the relationship.

New South Wales Police recently introduced an app which is still in development, but which will work as a “Domestic Violence diary” enabling victims to secretly log and document incidents of violence on their phones with notes and photos and videos.

The well-intentioned app, designed by two police officers, is designed to empower victims to gather a body of evidence, but there are questions about whether such evidence would be admissible in court.

The Surveillance Devices Act 2007 (NSW) outlines that people cannot be recorded without their knowledge, even people who may be suspected of committing a crime.'

Candace Owens: The Circumcision Decision

Matt · 26 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Candace reports on the factors that drive the circumcision industry in the US.

"To Be a Man" video

charlie · 27 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

A great song on what it's like to be a man and the empathy gap towards men.

Ed.: Good remix version here.

Men have a problem – and it won't be solved by either Andrew Tate or Caitlin Moran

Mastodon · 27 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The real problem, he claims, is that masculinity cannot be discussed in such singular terms. "If we asked a football fan, a vicar, and a banker to define 'manliness', we would probably get three very different answers," he says. "When people talk about a 'crisis of masculinity', they are usually complaining that their preferred variety of masculinity seems to be losing prestige or influence relative to other forms of masculinity." Today, we have ideas of masculinity coming from all angles, whether it's in sociology, pop culture, advertising, charities, TikTok, government campaigns, or around a table in the pub. "Amid this cacophony of competing voices, it is harder than ever for any one form of masculinity to establish itself as culturally dominant," says Dr Griffin. "To some people, that looks like a crisis."'

In Biden's America, Black men and boys have little chance for success

Matt · 28 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research shows that 38% of the people in prison are Black, despite making up barely 14% of the U.S. population. The problem isn't "systemic racism," as Democrats so quickly claim. (After all, there are significantly more White Americans in prison.) The problem is fatherlessness, and it has been that way for decades.

America is suffering through an epidemic of fatherlessness. It is our nation's top domestic problem, given the residual consequences such as crime. While a lack of fathers can afflict all American households, including White households, it is a particularly severe phenomenon in the Black community.

Nearly 70% of Black kids begin their lives in households with unmarried mothers. In 1965, the percentage of Black kids born out of wedlock was 25%, a number considered so alarming at the time that it prompted then-Assistant Secretary of Labor Daniel Patrick Moynihan to publish his now-controversial report: "The Negro Family: The Case for National Action." (Today, the percentage of White children born out of wedlock is nearly 30%.)'

Dads may want to do more caretaking — but then face barriers, one study finds

Matt · 28 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Look, another "study" promulgating the Wage Gap Myth, decrying maternal "unpaid labor", and saying dads should "do more". Hey, if taking care of your family is "unpaid labor" deserving of monetary compensation, shouldn't men be paid by someone for mowing the lawn, taking out the garbage, taking the kids to school, etc. just like mom should? Sorry but this article annoys me. Why men keep having kids with women, I dunno. Excerpt:

'The concept of "providing care" could mean a myriad things beyond emotional support. It could be cooking meals for the family, cleaning the house, or taking a relative to the doctor — in other words, the unpaid labor many mothers do every day.

While progress has been made towards sharing these responsibilities in the home, there's still a long way to go.

A recent study of dads around the world — led by the nonprofit organization Equimundo, which promotes gender equality — found that while more men are doing a greater share of unpaid care work, they also faced barriers like a lack of structural support and gender stereotypes.'

Florida woman gets more than four years in prison for swindling Holocaust survivor out of millions

Matt · 28 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Four years?! If this had been a man swindling a woman under the same circumstances, he'd (rightly) be put away for at least 10 years. She's getting the Female Discount. Excerpt:

'A New York judge has sentenced a Florida woman to more than four years in prison for swindling a Holocaust survivor out of his life savings after meeting him on a dating website.

Peaches Stergo, 36, was sentenced Thursday, according to a news release from the US Attorney's Office of the Southern District of New York. She had been charged six months earlier with one count of wire fraud for bilking the 87-year-old victim out of $2.8 million.
...
According to prosecutors, Stergo used the money to live a life of luxury. She purchased a home in a gated community in Florida, took vacations at hotels such as the Ritz Carlton, and bought tens of thousands of dollars worth of designer clothing, the release stated.

In a text message to her real-life significant other after the scam was over, Stergo said she was unwilling to earn money through lawful employment, writing, "I don't want to work … it's too hard," the release stated.'

YT's Pearl interviews Paul Elam

Matt · 28 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. If you don't know who Pearl is, she's a former feminist who YT-casts on topics around the effects of feminism on society, men and men's issues, etc., from her own perspective, which is sympathetic to the MRM. She's definitely worth subscribing to.

Michigan teen freed from jail after fatally dousing father with chemical drain cleaner

Matt · 28 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Megan Imirowicz, a Michigan teen who fatally doused her father with chemical drain cleaner because he was too drunk to take her to a hair appointment, was freed from jail after spending just over 500 days behind bars.

Imirowicz was facing a life sentence in connection with death of her father, 64-year-old Konrad Imirowicz, the Oakland Press reported. Back in March 2021, Imirowicz dumped lye powder on him as he slept, resulting in severe chemical burns.'

NAACP Convention session to address healthy masculinity in the age of GenZ

Mastodon · 29 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This year the NAACP is bringing conversations around healthy masculinity to the main stage to educate young men and women on allyship and leadership.

...

“I think every man should take on as a personal declaration of manhood that it’s not just about promoting what men want, but that we make safe spaces for everybody, including primarily women because without women, we weren’t able to create anything,” he said.

"Leave men alone"

Mastodon · 29 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why won't they leave us alone? I find the chattering-class crusade against 'toxic masculinity' deeply unsettling. Not to be too blokeish about it, but it is masculinity that keeps society safe. It is muscular, mostly working-class men who make society work; who empty Caitlin Moran's trash, police the street she lives on, ensure a foreign army never crosses the borders of her nation. As Camille Paglia once said: 'The women's movement is rooted in the belief that we don't even need men. All it will take is one natural disaster to prove how wrong that is. Then, the only thing holding this culture together will be masculine men of the working class."

Douglas County homicide victim’s family speaks out

mens_issues · 30 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

An awful story that illustrates domestic violence against men. Excerpt:

'Outside the Sonesta Hotel in Park Meadows, a memorial garden to Colin Grice is being constructed.

Grice, a 57-year-old hotel manager, was found shot to death in his Highlands Ranch home last week.

His wife, 55-year-old Victorine Grice was found dead inside her Douglas County jail cell Friday morning.

Grice had been facing murder charges, and the cause of her death remains under investigation.

...

"Throughout my years as an investigator, I’ve learned that domestic violence knows no gender boundaries. It’s a haunting reality that men, too, bear the scars of abuse and often endure the torment in silence. I hope all domestic violence victims, regardless of gender, can find the strength and courage to come forward and get help before it is too late."'

Sports radio host Don Geronimo fired after sexist ‘Barbie’ comments toward female reporter

Mastodon · 30 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sports radio host Michael Sorce, who goes by the name Don Geronimo on air, was fired by WBIG-FM on Sunday following sexist remarks he made toward a female reporter at Washington Commanders training camp.

While speaking with co-host Crash Young, Geronimo made several offensive comments about WUSA9 Washington D.C. reporter Sharla McBride, including shouting, “Hi, Barbie girl” as she walked past him.

iHeartMedia is the parent company of WBIG-FM, which signed a three-year partnership with the Commanders in 2022.

“After an internal review, Don Geronimo is no longer an employee of WBIG,” iHeartMedia’s D.C. Region president Aaron Hyland said in a statement to the Washington Post. “We take matters of this nature very seriously and this behavior does not align with our core values.”'

High school boys are trending conservative

Matt · 31 July 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So-called "liberal" ideology is a bed-fellow of 4th-wave feminism which despises males and maleness. Why should it be any surprise that boys and young men instead embrace the opposite of so-called liberalism (which is as classically "liberal" as is fascism, IMO). Excerpt:

'A popular narrative suggests young people are liberal and getting more liberal. Thus, social media buzzed when a chart surfaced in spring that seemed to suggest 12th-grade boys had become overwhelmingly conservative.

As with many Reddit posts and viral tweets, the truth was more complicated. But the numbers do say this: Twelfth-grade boys are nearly twice as likely to identify as conservative versus liberal, according to a respected federal survey of American youth.

In annual surveys over the last three years, roughly one-quarter of high school seniors self-identified as conservative or “very conservative” on the Monitoring the Future survey, a scholarly endeavor that dates to the 1970s. Only 13 percent of boys identified as liberal or very liberal in those years.'

Has Academia Become More Gender-Fair for Women? Findings From an Adversarial Analysis of Gender Bias

Mastodon · 1 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These findings, Ceci said, suggest that academia now offers a largely gender-fair, and in some cases female-advantaged, environment:

Women who earn PhDs and apply for tenure-track positions are often more likely to be hired than their male peers, the authors found through a review of existing studies and their own analysis of data from the National Science Foundation.

Grants are awarded to women and men at approximately equal rates, the authors found from a meta-analysis of 39 studies including data from more than 2 million applications to 27 grant agencies.

Scientific articles where women are the first or last authors were about as likely to be accepted for publication as those written by men, according to the authors' meta-analysis of 33 articles on journal acceptance rates.

When the researchers compared the findings of nine studies that analyzed letters of recommendation written from 1990 to 2017 for the fields of psychology, physics, biology, medicine, chemistry, and geoscience, they found no gender bias. Compared to letters written for men, letters written for women after the year 2000 were no shorter, raised no more doubts about women's ability to do a job, and used no different words to describe applicants.'

When Your Rapist Is a Woman

Matt · 1 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. An older article but still very germane, it exposes the lie that women don't sexually assault others. Excerpt:

'Sexual assault is perceived as a straight issue, perpetrated by men against women. Thanks in part to the battered women's movement of the 1980s and the growing awareness of the current rape culture in the United States—from assaults on college campuses to abuse within relationships—we've been hearing a predominantly heterosexual story. But there's a scenario that, while less frequent, is no less damaging to the victims it claims: rape between women.

The issue's lack of national attention means that data is slim, but a 2005 survey by the California Coalition Against Sexual Assault (CALCASA) concluded that one in three lesbian-identified participants had been sexually assaulted by a woman, and one in four had experienced violence within a lesbian relationship. Eight years later, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) conducted the first-ever national survey of intimate partner violence by sexual orientation and discovered that lesbians (and gay men) experience equal or higher rates of partner violence than the straight-identified population.
...
... Since this scenario is rarely portrayed in the media or in educational programming, "it can be especially challenging to identify their experience as violence," she says. "Many people have a difficult time believing that a woman could be capable of inflicting violence on another person."'

UK: Parents’ anger at ‘divisive’ primary school science homework that ‘excludes white men’

Mastodon · 3 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A North London primary school that offered non-white students extra lessons urged its pupils to “challenge the myth” that scientists are “old men… with crazy white hair,” GB News can reveal.

Science homework given at Coldfall Primary School in Muswell Hill called on pupils to look for scientists from “outside of Europe and America.”

The homework recommends a list of scientists worth considering, which does not feature any white men. On its list of scientists to “avoid”, it lists Albert Einstein, Louis Pasteur and Stephen Hawking.

A parent with a pupil at the school told GB News: “This science homework has nothing to do with science at all. It was purely a means of pushing their divisive message on race, and insulting and belittling a whole group of people based on their appearance.

“Why are white men pushed off the curriculum?”'

Private school overhauls English curriculum to challenge ‘pale, male and stale’ syllabus

Mastodon · 7 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The English curriculum at a leading London private school has been overhauled to include queer readings of texts and to challenge the “pale, male and stale” syllabus.

Pupils at the £25,000-a-year Alleyn’s School in Dulwich, south London, whose alumni include Jude Law, Florence Welch and CS Forester, now study books by a broader range of authors, including the first text by a non-binary writer on the A-level curriculum.

Students must choose one coursework text by a writer of colour for A-Level and are encouraged to study queer interpretations of texts including Dracula.

The changes were made to challenge “white-centric, patriarchal and cis-gender ideologies”, said Alex Smith, the school’s head of English.'

Police in England and Wales will pilot project to shift sexism and misogyny

Mastodon · 9 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Esther Flanagan has a job on her hands. The behavioural scientist has been tasked with the seemingly impossible: to get police forces across England and Wales to “quit” misogyny and sexism, using similar tactics to those deployed in the major push to reduce smoking in the UK. But she doesn’t seem fazed.

A new initiative designed to combat entrenched sexism and misogyny in policing will use a similar approach to a big government-led push to reduce smoking in England, which resulted in a drastic fall in the number of smokers.

“Different levers were drawn on at the same time to change the same behaviour – and there’s evidence to show that that’s why it worked,” says Flanagan. “That’s exactly what we’re trying to do with sexism and misogyny. We’re going to tap into all of those levers across the system to give ourselves the best chance of shifting that behaviour.”

Officers will also be put through immersive training, where they have to act out how to confront sexism, in the same way they are trained to deal with rowdy protesters.

But the messaging of change will be as important as giving officers the tools to confront sexism, says Flanagan. While the instinct of critics – and many senior officers – may be to blast officers with messages of zero tolerance to sexism, there’s no point if it won’t work, she argues.'

‘Barbie’ and Mattel are getting ripped for ‘toxic femininity,’ but a scholar of gender and communication says that’s not even a thing

Mastodon · 9 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toxic femininity is a relatively new phrase that emerged in response to conversations about toxic masculinity.

But people who use the term often have very different motivations for doing so – from altruistic concern about the harms of sexism to indignation over men’s ostensibly dwindling power in society. Given these diverse motivations, people often employ the phrase to mean wildly different things.

Psychologists such as Meaghan Rice see toxic femininity as the inverse of toxic masculinity – a constellation of characteristics like meekness, emotionalism, passivity and self-sacrifice. Writing for “Psychology Today,” psychologist Ritch C. Savin-Williams describes toxic femininity as “internalized misogyny” that encourages women to ignore their “mental or physical needs to sustain those around them.”

In other words, toxic femininity is what many people think of as “stereotypical femininity” and is a product of patriarchal gender norms. In this formulation, toxic masculinity and toxic femininity are both fueled by sexism, and each erodes human thriving.

A different perspective regards toxic femininity not as a stereotypical notion of gendered weakness but as an inappropriate demonstration of female strength, cunning or privilege. Psychologists Shoba Sreenivasan and Linda E. Weinberger ascribe the trait to professional women who are “hostile to nurturance and cooperation, opting instead for aggression and backstabbing to get ahead.”'

Cops send strong message about husband of NY cancer doc Krystal Cascetta, who shot baby in murder-suicide

Mastodon · 9 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The husband of a New York City oncologist who fatally shot her 4-month-old daughter before turning the gun on herself was absolutely not involved in the horrible tragedy despite rumors swirling on social media, a New York State Trooper insisted on Tuesday.

Steven Nevel, a public information officer, laid to rest any online rumors that heartbroken husband and father Tim Talty had any involvement in the deaths of his 40-year-old wife Dr. Krystal Cascetta and their baby.

“The trolls on social media are dragging the husband through the mud,” Nevel told Today.com. “But I can tell you 100% unequivocally, without a doubt, that he did not do this.”

The officer reiterated that Talty — a 37-year-old entrepreneur who owns a protein bar company named after himself — was not at the couple’s $1 million home in Somers at the time of the shootings on Saturday.'

UK: White men who failed to join RAF furious after no one is sanctioned over botched diversity drive

Mastodon · 11 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'White men - derided as "useless white male pilots" - who failed in a bid to join the Royal Air Force are furious no one has been sanctioned over a botched diversity drive that broke equality legislation, and say they want their rejected applications reviewed.

Defence sources similarly expressed dismay at the lack of accountability among the RAF top brass, comparing it unfavourably with how the Army deals with soldiers who get drunk.

It can be revealed that members of a British battle group on a six-month deployment to Estonia this year have been fined a total of nearly £10,000 for alcohol-related misdemeanours - such as urinating in public, breaching a two-pint drinking limit and breaking curfew.'

Peter Schwartz: Is masculinity ‘endangered’? Are schools to blame? What the evidence actually shows.

Mastodon · 11 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While women continue to make remarkable strides in education, the economic prospects for men without a college degree have altogether collapsed. And because two-thirds of men older than 25 lack a college degree, the consequences are deep and structural.

Research strongly correlates the relationship between being raised in a two-parent household and higher educational attainment later in life. Children from two-parent families are twice as likely to graduate high school and attend and graduate college compared with those from single-parent families.

Parental education levels also matter. Children with two college-educated parents are nearly three times as likely to get a college degree compared with those whose parents lack college experience. If we focus just on single-parent homes, data indicates a significant gender gap in bachelor’s degree attainment rates between boys and girls from single-parent households.

If we want to save our endangered boys and men, rather than beating up on our schools, teachers and librarians, we should focus on family structure and early childhood development and education.'

Women tend to overestimate hostile sexism and underestimate benevolent sexism in romantic partners, study finds

Mastodon · 12 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research sheds light on biased perceptions of sexist attitudes in intimate heterosexual relationships. The study, published in the Journal of Social and Personal Relationships, found that women tend to overestimate their partners' hostile sexism while underestimating benevolent sexism. Conversely, men tend to underestimate their partners' hostile sexism and overestimate benevolent sexism.

Prior research has mainly focused on individuals' own sexist attitudes or perceptions of strangers' sexist attitudes. However, understanding how individuals perceive their intimate partners' sexist attitudes could have significant consequences for relationship dynamics and overall satisfaction.

"Sexist attitudes have really important implications for intimate relationships between men and women," explained study authors Nina Waddell, a PhD candidate, and Nickola Overall, the principal investigator at the REACH Lab at The University of Auckland.'

France launches anti-sexism beach patrols

Mastodon · 12 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marseille has launched anti-sexism beach patrols that allow women to flag if they are being harassed on a free phone app.

Women on beaches around the city can use Safer Plage, which presents them with three options: “I’m being bothered”, “I’m being harassed” or “I’m in danger”.

A pair of beach mediators is then dispatched to the trouble spot – one to reassure the woman, the other to tackle the harasser.

The app, created by several charities, was first tested at music festivals and Marseille’s Prado beach last year. After proving to be a success – the beach version was downloaded 1,346 times – it has been extended to four other beaches in the southern port city: Pointe-Rouge, Bonneveine, Les Catalans and Corbières.

The local council has spent €116,000 (£100,000) to fund the service and a local poster campaign.'

Boys aren't growing more conservative. They're just not that into politics.

Mastodon · 12 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just because young men aren't currently trending conservative doesn't mean they won't in the future, though. Some people see gender politics as a zero-sum proposition — an agenda advocating for one side invariably hinders the other. It's conceivable that a political party or agenda with a growing popularity among young women might lead some young men to believe it's not for them. There's growing belief among young men that whatever past advantages men had in American society are fast disappearing. Nearly 4 in 10 young men say women have an easier time than men getting ahead in American society today, and even more young men (45%) say there is at least some discrimination against men in American society. Roughly half as many young women believe this to be true, and even older men are less likely to agree.'

Is there an agenda behind calling masculinity toxic? Part 1

Mastodon · 14 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems to be that there is an agenda behind the whole claim of masculinity being toxic. Ironically, the too-tough and too-strong accusation has conveniently turned into a justification to shame men for displaying the personalities that women were told they needed to adopt in order to succeed in the business world. But now, there is a reversal. Women can possess them, but men are expected to change into a softer and more delicate version of themselves. Could it be that it's a clever way for women to have the more competitive edge? Just a thought.

...

While recently on vacation, I heard a clip from Jordan Peterson saying that men are the least encouraged species on the planet. Constantly criticized for not doing the right thing, they suffer from a complete lack of praise and support. I know I've certainly been guilty of that, and when I heard it, it made me realize that I had to do better.'

AUS: How do we make the justice system better for victims? This report offers some solutions

Mastodon · 14 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers heard from those who said NSW's Sexual Assault Reporting Option (SARO) also had helped when they had been unable to report their assaults to police.

The SARO is an online form that victims can complete if they do not want to speak directly to police but want them to know they have been assaulted.

The process does not constitute a complaint or trigger an investigation, but can be kept on record if the alleged perpetrator is accused of other offences.

But support during the process is still essential, according to those who were interviewed.'

Craftsman Plumbing Introduces No Mansplaining Guarantee, Setting New Standards in Customer Service and Inclusivity

Mastodon · 14 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Craftsman Plumbing introduces No Mansplaining Guarantee, ensuring respectful service for all clients. Empowers women in plumbing, offers expertise, quality service, and transparent pricing.

Craftsman Plumbing, a leading plumbing company known for its exceptional customer service and expertise, is proud to announce its groundbreaking No Mansplaining Guarantee and introduce their new CFOs, - Chief Feline Officers. In an industry where customers often face condescension and patronizing behavior, Craftsman Plumbing stands firmly against such practices and is committed to providing an inclusive and respectful experience to all clients. With this innovative initiative, Craftsman Plumbing aims to revolutionize the plumbing industry by promoting equality, respect, and top-notch service.

Here are some of the keypoints. Keypoint number 1 is Mansplaining Guarantee: Craftsman Plumbing promises that its team members will never engage in mansplaining behavior when interacting with customers. Every customer will be treated with the utmost respect and professionalism, and their questions and concerns will be addressed with empathy and understanding.'

Men in power must take lead on tackling toxic masculinity, says Humza Yousaf

Mastodon · 16 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men in positions of power must take the lead in tackling toxic masculinity, which is a root cause of gender-based abuse, Scotland's first minister has said.

Writing for the Guardian, Humza Yousaf said: "It is simply not good enough to say 'it is not all men' and wash our hands of the problem we have collectively created; every single man can, and should, play his role in making change."

Yousaf said his growing awareness had caused him to reflect on his own behaviour. "Without doubt, in my younger years I will have told a misogynistic joke at the expense of women, or not challenged behaviour that was demeaning to women."

He said becoming a father to two daughters, as well as witnessing global regression in women's rights, for example on abortion in the US and education in Afghanistan, had made him determined to use his position to "root out and tackle the toxic masculinity and male self-entitlement that leads to violence, harassment, misogyny and abuse against women".'

Emotional intelligence may be the key to reducing toxic masculinity at work

Mastodon · 16 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Studies have repeatedly shown that masculinity can be dangerously fragile.

For instance, Harvard conducted a series of studies of men and women, looking at how failing to live up to masculine and feminine stereotypes impacted their work. They found that men who experienced threats to their masculine stereotypes were more likely to engage in harmful behavior such as withholding help, mistreating coworkers, stealing company property, and lying for their own benefit. While women who experienced threats to their femininity were not happy about it, they were unlikely to act out in harmful behavior.
...
Another critical element of emotional intelligence, self-awareness, can play a crucial role in reducing male toxicity. By promoting self-reflection and introspection, emotional intelligence encourages men to recognize and confront their own biases, privileges, and harmful attitudes. It allows them to understand the impact of their actions on others and promotes personal growth.'

Exposing the agenda behind toxic masculinity – Part 2

Mastodon · 16 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Those of us who were around in the 1940s and 50s, remember a wife having dinner ready when her husband returned home from work. One television program was even named, “Father Knows Best.” Back then, men were revered, respected and honored for being the breadwinner and the leader of the family.

But that dramatically changed once feminism emerged. The moment that women felt empowered, men began to take a back seat, often being relegated to equal or lesser on the family chain. One could just as easily make the case that feminism became toxic by seeking to devalue men in a way that made them feel irrelevant and unnecessary.

Today, many women believe they are much better off without men in their lives. One article, as early as 2009, entitled, “Would a world without men really be so bad?” illustrates that very point, as it refers to men as “the master race for all our recorded history.” The writer uses the worst examples of men to blame for war and just about every other ill. Ironically, though, in the end, she says they must stay, convinced that they’re worth keeping in the event of a catastrophe.

Her fantasy narrative serves to expose her utter contempt for men and can only be looked upon as a spoof, since it provides no balance whatsoever. Women who hold such low opinions of men don’t generally exude happiness or fulfillment but are, instead, often angry and disgruntled. This is why it’s worthwhile asking whether women have really made gains.

While most women may look upon men with such resentment, the feminist movement, for whatever positive changes it advanced, has also done a lot to injure the standing of men while propping up women as their better. Their error was to focus on the toxicity of men rather than the toxicity of all humans, because women are certainly not exempt from many of the same behaviors which are blamed solely on men.'

Scotland: Misogynists like Andrew Tate hold sway over thousands of men and boys. Male leaders like me must address that

Mastodon · 16 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I remember the feeling of bewilderment the first time my older sister told me how tightly she grips her keys in her pocket if she is walking alone in the dark. Bewilderment, because as men we just don't have to think that way.

And the reason for that? It is pretty simple: men have made our communities feel far too unsafe for far too many women. As first minister of Scotland – but more importantly as a father of two girls – this is not a situation I am prepared to simply accept.

Let's be clear, this is not a situation unique to Scotland or the UK – women and girls the world over are suffering due to the actions of men. Barely a week goes by without a distressing report in the newspapers or on our television screens about a woman being the victim of harassment, stalking, abuse, violence, rape or murder.'

Sarah Harte: Men playing the victim when women succeed harms all of us

Mastodon · 16 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lately, I've noticed, and I say this as a feminist, the term 'toxic masculinity' has simply come to replace 'masculinity' in a pat and unhelpful way.

Given how new and fragile the relative gains women have made it feels like heresy to say that you may be concerned about boys. Because as a woman it's hard not to suspect that tackling any 'crisis in masculinity' would necessarily involve undermining female progress but addressing women's ongoing patriarchal reduction must involve considering men. It's basic logic.

According to a recent American Scientific article, the so-called crisis in masculinity has been around for about 300 years. Another writer opines that any sociological change provokes 'elite men' into imagining a crisis of masculinity which sounds plausible.'

United Way of North Central MA awards $90K for youth mental, behavioral health

Mastodon · 18 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'United Way of North Central Massachusetts recently awarded $90,000 in grants to eight local agencies for youth mental and behavioral health initiatives. The grants are part of a new area of work that seeks to address challenges faced by young people arising from increased isolation during and after the COVID-19 pandemic.

One pilot program funded from the grants is Males Advocating Change (MAC), a program that will engage middle school, high school and college-aged men to address male violence, particularly sexual and dating violence against women, based out of Pathways for Change, Inc, of Worcester.

“The role of MAC is to raise awareness of the myths about masculinity and play a part in building and expanding young males’ understanding of healthy, non-violent masculinity,” said Kim Dawkins, CEO at Pathways for Change. “These funds will provide critical resources needed to continue our work to engage young males and train them to be leaders in our effort to end sexual violence in North Central Massachusetts.”'

Women's soccer took one small step toward equity this World Cup. But giant leaps remain

Matt · 18 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Short version: "Equality" comes in the form of the more popular and profitable men's team having to subsidize the women's team, which is much less popular and profitable. Their goal is in a few years to lay claim to half of what men earn while only being maybe 1/10th as profitable. This is feminists' idea of "equality". This is akin to the common terms of divrorce. Further analysis in the Comments. Excerpt:

'What's a world-class soccer player worth?

If you're a woman, about one-quarter of a man, according to world soccer governing body FIFA. And that's still more equal than the sport has ever been.

As this year's Women's World Cup in Australia and New Zealand wraps up Sunday, observers say the small steps toward equity this time will need to pick up momentum if FIFA is to reach its stated goal of equal pay by 2026-27.

Laura Jane Robinson, a Canadian sports journalist and author, calls the pay discrepancy "appalling."

"I think that generally people do believe on this planet that women should be treated equitably, and I hope that these numbers are going to change very quickly," she told CBC News.'

China Is Desperate to Boost Its Low Birth Rates. It May Have to Accept the New Normal

Matt · 18 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Fascinating, these kinds of pieces. Paragraph after paragraph of talking around the actual cause of the dismal birthrate. The authors of these kinds of pieces are either willfully blind or just too scared to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but. Excerpt:

'China's fertility rate hit a record low last year, according to a new estimate reported by state-backed media earlier this week. The report cited China's Population and Development Research Center, which found that in 2022, each woman in the world's second largest economy would, on average, give birth to 1.09 babies—well short of the "replacement fertility rate" for developed countries of 2.1, at which a stable population is maintained, and an even farther cry from China's peak fertility rate of 7.5 60 years ago.

But it doesn't come as a surprise for Chinese authorities, who, facing the drastic economic consequences of an aging and shrinking population, have in the last several years been taking a number of measures to try to boost plummeting birth rates—from reversing the decadeslong one-child policy meant to stem overpopulation to providing cash incentives to have more children. But experts warn that all the attention devoted to pushing young people to conceive could be futile and that efforts may be better spent maintaining and adapting to this new normal.'

Alcohol is killing more women than ever – we need to talk about why

Mastodon · 18 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, the data: In the approximately two decades this study surveys, men and women are all drinking more, and dying of alcohol-related disease with greater frequency. While men are nearly three times more likely to die of alcohol-related causes than women, this gender disparity has recently been narrowing especially rapidly: From 2018 to 2020, women's rate of alcohol attributed deaths increased by 14.7 percent, while men's jumped by 12.5 percent.

...

...

What is clear is that women are at unique risk for alcohol-related illness, a risk that's exacerbated by the fact that many interventions are designed for men, and our deep-seated ambivalence and historical ignorance about women's relationship to alcohol is not helping. Acknowledging and addressing this public health emergency means letting go of outdated notions about women's inherent virtue and purity, along with equally shallow ideas that link women's empowerment to the consumption of alcohol. There is no one answer to this crisis, but refusing to reckon with its historical roots — or the structural factors that make alcohol so appealing — is not an option.'

Feds paid $300,000 to study why white, male physicists don't fight racism, sexism in STEM

Mastodon · 19 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'White, cis, male physicists with "good intentions" aren't doing enough to fight the racism and sexism from which they benefit, argued two education researchers in a recently published article in the International Journal of STEM Education.

Co-principal investigators Melissa Dancy of Western Michigan University and Apriel Hodari of Eureka Scientific Inc., were able to determine their findings in part thanks to a nearly $300,000 grant from the National Science Foundation.

"While white men have an extra ability to confront sexism and racism, their good intentions are insufficient. Having an impact requires them to extend significant effort to understand the role they currently play in maintaining sexism and racism," states the abstract of the article, headlined "How well-intentioned white male physicists maintain ignorance of inequity and justify inaction."'

Georgia murder-for-hire suspect called 911 on her husband after fight over private plane: bodycam

Matt · 19 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a good one: her estranged husband doesn't assent to her hitching a plane ride to meet her boyfriend so she calls 911 on him to say he was being "physical" with her. She's an ad for bachelorhood. Excerpt:

'Georgia housewife Lindsay Shiver called 911 on her estranged husband, Robert Shiver, after he barred her from using their private jet to meet her boyfriend in the Bahamas, according to police bodycam video obtained by Fox News Digital.

Five days later, the mother of three was charged alongside her Bahamian lover, Terrance Adrien Bethel, 28, and accused hitman, Faron Newbold, Jr., 26, for allegedly scheming to murder Robert Shiver.

In the July 16 bodycam footage recorded in the driveway of the couple's $2.5 million mansion in Thomasville, Georgia, Robert tells police the pair are in the middle of a divorce.

Lindsay Shiver had a weekend getaway planned with Bethel, while the former Auburn University football star was taking their three boys to the family's vacation home in the Bahamas.'

Spanish soccer chief Luis Rubiales faces criticism after giving World Cup winner Jennifer Hermoso a surprise kiss on the lips after she receives gold medal

Matt · 20 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Thought experiment: Rubiales is female. She is celebrating either the men's or women's team winning by kissing players. Now, is she in any trouble for it? Excerpt:

'Royal Spanish Football Federation (RFEF) President Luis Rubiales is facing criticism for giving Spain midfielder Jennifer Hermoso a surprise kiss on the lips after the 33-year-old received her gold medal following the team's Women's World Cup final victory over England on Sunday.

Rubiales was on stage for FIFA's awards ceremony following the final, along with other dignitaries, including soccer's world governing body president Gianni Infantino, Spain's Queen Letizia and Australian Prime Minister Anthony Albanese.

Video shows Rubiales embracing Hermoso, then putting both hands on her head before kissing her. He then pats her on the back as she walks away.'

Let men speak for men

Mastodon · 21 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have been writing about men's issues with increasing frequency. Articles in typically hostile publications have waxed sympathetic, as men's earnings and education attainment have declined, and suicides reach record highs. I don't wish to discourage this. It could indicate a coming armistice in the war of the sexes — on the eve of our supply of soldiers being depleted. Why do lay press outlets only permit men's issues to be discussed, though, when passed through the filters of feminism?

...

These women write commendably, with compassion and conviction. The gatekeeping is not their fault. What does it tell us, though, when men must petition women for permission to voice their concerns? Is this not comparable to the position of weakness from which women asked for the vote, which feminists invoke as evidence of the patriarchy?

...

An incomplete picture of masculine virility and virtue is pedalled at present by those who draw the most eyes in the Manosphere. Popular podcasts and figures like Pearl Davis fail to provide a healthy model of sexual complementarity. When accomplished patriarchs are persecuted and precluded from the public square, is it any surprise that low-resolution resentment festers elsewhere online? When male competence is castigated as evidence of conspiratorial oppression, is it surprising that men withdraw from participation in civilisation? Progressives have vilified male competence as "toxic masculinity" for a decade. How can they be mortified now, when men are attracted to the (latently homoerotic) neoclassical vitalism of Bronze Age Pervert or the Darwinian proto-warlordism of Andrew Tate? Nature abhors a vacuum. The establishment, in pushing relentless female empowerment, made one for male mentorship.'

Tech Council’s STEM leadership program for high school girls is ready to LAUNCH

Mastodon · 21 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Pittsburgh Technology Council’s LAUNCH (Learn Aspire Understand Navigate Connect Highlight) Fall 2023 cohort is ready for takeoff. Tenth and 11th-grade high school girls wanting to take a deep dive into the region’s technology ecosystem and STEM careers are invited to apply by Sept. 8.

Hosted by the Council’s nonprofit arm, Fortyx80, the leadership program runs from Sept. 29 through Nov. 7. It includes a retreat, field trips and mentoring opportunities with local women professionals in STEM industries.

Applications can be found here. There is no cost for program participation and all applicants earn a stipend upon completion.

“We’re trying to make sure (high school girls) know that there are all these opportunities in the region,” says Marie Pelloni, senior director of talent and workforce development initiatives at the council. “They are at the point where they are making decisions about their classes and their secondary form of education.”'

Protecting Traditional Masculinity: It’s not only okay to be a man, it’s necessary

Mastodon · 22 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the face of shifting societal norms and evolving gender dynamics, it is crucial to preserve and protect traditional masculinity. While some argue for the dismissal of traditional masculine qualities, we must recognize the invaluable contributions and virtues that have shaped society for centuries. Traditional masculinity provides a foundation of strength, honour, and responsibility that is worth safeguarding, as it offers a compass for men navigating the complexities of the modern world. It is not only okay for men to be men, but it is also necessary. The Western world is taking a sharp turn on this topic, and we cannot let this catch up to our society.

A Source of Strength: Traditional masculinity embodies qualities that have historically served as pillars of strength. Men have been responsible for providing for and protecting their families, communities, and nations. By honouring these responsibilities, men have forged societies that thrive on stability and resilience.

Throughout history, traditional masculinity has been intertwined with courage and resilience. Men have faced adversity head-on, displaying bravery in the face of danger and perseverance in times of hardship. These qualities have been instrumental in shaping the world we inhabit today.'

Welcome to Ireland, the ‘Woke’ Capital of Europe

Mastodon · 22 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Wokeness' was created in the United States, then swiftly exported to the rest of the Western world. In Ireland, a country with close ancestral ties to the U.S., ‘wokeness’ now reigns supreme. In fact, it’s safe to say that Ireland is the official ‘woke’ capital of Europe.

If you doubt this, let me point you in the direction of the country’s new draft curriculum for 15- to 18-year-olds. As first reported by Gript, the National Council for Curriculum and Assessment (NCCA), the Irish education ministry’s advisory council, has recommended the introduction of classes that center around white privilege, male privilege, gender identity, and sexual diversity.

Not only will Irish students be expected to learn about the “socially and culturally constructed” aspects of gender, they will also learn about the importance of “sexual diversity” and the “additional gender identities and sexual orientations that are not specifically covered by the five initials” (i.e. LGBTQ). Moreover, teenagers will be expected to develop “allyship skills,” and acquaint themselves with the “actions, behaviors, and practices used to support, advocate, and collaborate with others, in support of justice and equity.” In plain English, they will be expected to develop the “skills” needed to push ‘LGBT friendly’ narratives.

If that’s not enough, students will also learn how to recognize one’s supposedly “privileged status.” The draft specifically identifies being white and being male as two prime examples of privileged status. If you happen to be a white male, and happen to live in Ireland, you have hit the jackpot; in reality, though, you haven’t.'

Too many ‘old, white male’ college presidents, American Council on Education says

Mastodon · 22 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A progressive higher education group is facilitating strategies to replace “older, White and male” college presidents with women and people of color.

Within the next 10 years, American Council on Education leaders said they want to see schools implement new programs that promote race and gender “equity” among academic leaders, an Aug. 11 news release states.

During a two-day summit this month, the council brought together academics, administrators and education advocacy groups to brainstorm new ways to achieve that goal, the release states.'

Harmful online messages about masculinity must be countered, violence expert says

Mastodon · 23 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some boys and young men are being exposed to harmful messages about women and what it means to be a man — narratives that have to be countered before they lead to misogyny and intimate partner violence, the head of a London agency says.

Changing Ways, a non-profit that works with men who have been charged with domestic violence, as well as those trying to find non-abusive ways to resolve conflict, has just received $97,000 from the United Way to create programs that target men and boys.

"When I'm talking with teachers and with youth-based agencies, I'm hearing a really scary trend," said Tim Smuck, the agency's executive director. "A lot of our young boys, in the 12 to 17 age range, are really being influenced by this men's rights type of information that they're getting from social media. We want to work to create more male leadership, more positive, healthy, male role models. We want to have a larger conversation about what it actually means to be a healthy, positive man in 2023."

Changing Ways also has programs for women who are perpetrators of domestic violence, but men account for nine out of 10 clients the agency services.'

UK: Male nurse told to 'man up' by his female boss in front of a room full of women wins sex discrimination case

Matt · 23 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The only male member of an NHS health visitor team has won a sex discrimination case after his female boss told him to 'man up' in front of a room full of women.

Senior manager Lisa Sanchez deliberately excluded Pete Marsh when saying 'goodbye ladies' as she was leaving a meeting because of a 'growing animus' towards him, an employment tribunal ruled.

Mr Marsh - who has worked in the health service for more than 20 years - said he had grown tired of being the 'butt of jokes' about being the only man in the team.

The tribunal ruled that this culture had been tolerated by bosses including head of service Ms Sanchez, who was found to have joined in with the remarks.

Now, after his internal complaints of bullying were rejected, Mr Marsh has successfully sued the NHS for sex discrimination and is in line for compensation.'

Rubiales' behavior signals 'deep misogyny, sexism' - Rapinoe

Mastodon · 24 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'United States women's national team forward Megan Rapinoe said the kiss that Spain football federation chief Luis Rubiales planted on the lips of Women's World Cup champion Jenni Hermoso marred Spain's success and signals a "deep level of misogyny and sexism in that federation and in that man."

Spain's victory over England at the Women's World Cup was overshadowed by the forced kiss during the medal ceremony following the final. After claiming that those who criticized his kiss were "idiots and stupid people," the RFEF president was forced to apologize on Monday.

There was another picture that signals such a deep level of misogyny and sexism in that federation and in that man [Rubiales] at the final whistle, just grabbing his crotch," Rapinoe said in an interview published on Tuesday in The Atlantic.

"What kind of upside-down world are we in? On the biggest stage, where you should be celebrating, Jenni has to be physically assaulted by this guy.

"It made me think about how much we are required to endure," Rapinoe said. "Think how much that Spanish team had to shoulder: Some of the players who stood up way back last year [to protest treatment by their coach and federation] still aren't on the team.'

Women in Army SOF sidelined by ‘benevolent sexism,’ study finds

Mastodon · 24 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the “most masculine community on earth,” not only do servicewomen contend with undue interest from their male counterparts, they also encounter hostility from jealous spouses and “benevolent sexism” that can keep them off of deployments and training ops due to perceived fragility. Female soldiers, still an extreme minority in the special operations community, report that they’re called out and excluded due to their status as parents; their perception as too stern or too friendly; and even their decision to wear yoga pants, a ubiquitous activewear staple for millions of women. Those are some of the key findings from an internal study by U.S. Army Special Operations Command on barriers to service for women in the ranks.'

Women are driving the US labour market

Mastodon · 24 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Elsewhere, labour rights leaders recently won a big lawsuit requiring one of the nation's largest bus makers, New Flyer, to hire more women and minorities in places such as California and Alabama, as part of a transition to battery power funded by the Biden infrastructure bill. Building trade unions say many more women are signing up for training programmes, as employers in tight labour markets make efforts to accommodate work and childcare schedules.

While women are moving into traditionally male work, the trend is not going the other way. There's a body of social science showing that while women will take manufacturing jobs for higher wages, men — particularly white men — are less likely to move into, say, nursing, even if they would earn more there than in manual labour.'

Man-shaming is not the way to address toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 24 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I began reading the article by Humza Yousaf, Scotland's first minister, with a feeling of hope as the issue of misogyny was being tackled by such a prominent UK politician (Misogynists like Andrew Tate hold sway over thousands of men and boys. Male leaders like me must address that, 15 August). But I was disappointed by its bland virtue-signalling and lack of any real substance.

It's not enough to ask men simply to reflect. Most men are already on the side of preventing suffering by women and girls, but many are unaware how language or actions they haven't noticed may be interpreted. We do need to discuss the problems at times, to educate men and boys about the behaviours that make women feel uncomfortable, but specifics are important rather than general man-shaming.

...

Doing down men – and making it appear that "the norm" is to be misogynistic – is not helpful. People respond to positivity and examples to follow. We should be focusing on stories of men who have done the right thing, or women who have been empowered, rather than creating a culture of the guilty and the victims. This would be better for young people of all genders.'

UK: Hucknall woman blackmailed man with threats of false rape allegations

Mastodon · 24 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Terri Walters extorted a total of £413 before her victim contacted police on November 21, 2021, prosecutor Raglan Ashton told Nottingham Crown Court.

"He said he felt sick at the prospect of being reported and was intimidated by Walters who said she would turn up at his house with her ex-husband."'

Why marriages fail in 2023

Matt · 24 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A total of 689,308 divorces occurred in 2021. Approximately half of all first marriages end in divorce, with subsequent marriages failing at even higher rates. When a couple divorces, they must state grounds for divorce in court. This is the reason for ending the marriage and dictates the type of divorce being filed.

Most people choose a no-fault divorce, citing irreconcilable differences. With that in mind, irreconcilable differences are indeed a common divorce cause, with 31 percent of couples who ended their marriages reporting that incompatibility was the reason.

...

Reasons for Getting Married

- 42% of divorced respondents married for financial security.
- 44% of women married for financial reasons.
- 39% of women and men married for love and companionship, respectively.

Other reasons: commitment, convenience, medical insurance, legal reasons, societal and family pressures.'

Spanish soccer president refuses to resign despite kissing a player on the lips at Women's World Cup

Mastodon · 25 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Facing his possible removal from office, the president of the Spanish soccer federation refused to resign Friday despite the uproar he caused when he kissed a player on the lips without her consent after the Women's World Cup final.

Luis Rubiales is under immense pressure to leave his post because of his conduct after Spain's 1-0 victory over England on Sunday. Criticism has steadily mounted, with Spain's acting prime minister, players' unions, Spain's women players, and even voices from inside men's soccer saying he must go.

But Rubiales was defiant at an emergency general assembly of the federation.

"I won't resign," he declared four times in quick succession. He claimed he was a victim of a witch hunt by "false feminists."'

Spain government starts proceedings to suspend Luis Rubiales

Mastodon · 25 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spain's government has started the legal proceedings seeking to suspend president of the Spanish football federation (RFEF) Luis Rubiales after he refused to resign after a week of growing pressure following his unsolicited kiss of Spain player Jenni Hermoso.

Rubiales, 46, announced the surprise move -- after widespread reports that he planned to quit -- in a speech in which he attempted to justify his behaviour, and lashed out at critics, during an extraordinary meeting of the federation's general assembly.

"The government starts today the procedure so that Mr Rubiales has to give explanations before the Sport Court and if the Sport Court agrees, I can announce that we will suspend Mr. Rubiales from his functions," Victor Francos, head of the state-run National Sports Council told a news conference on Friday.

Earlier on Friday, Rubiales said: "Do you think this [incident] is so serious that I should go, after the best management in the history of Spanish football? Let me tell you: I'm not going to resign. I'm not going to resign. I'm not going to resign.'

I advise women to never date broke men — trolls call me a gold digger

Mastodon · 25 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Her honey's got money — but her love of his funds is making feminists freak.

Slanderous digs like "gold digger," "delusional" and "money dog," are being savagely slingshotted at a self-crowned femininity influencer who — while praising her husband for his deep pockets — virally encouraged women against dating guys without green.

But her unsolicited advice just isn't clicking with keyboard critics.

"Daily reminder to never date broke men," urged TikTok tastemaker Sofia Kralow, based in Dubai, in the on-screen text of her controversial clip.

The trending footage, which has stacked up over 1.3 million views, features the brunette being lavished with helicopter rides, designer accessories, luxury cars and wads of cash via husband Thomas Kralow, an affluent hedge fund manager and YouTuber.'

Scientists have finally decoded mysteries of the Y chromosome. Here’s why it matters

Matt · 26 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scientists have fully sequenced the Y chromosome for the first time, uncovering information that could have implications for the study of male infertility and other health problems.

The first attempt to determine the building blocks of our genetic code took place 20 years ago, but there were still significant gaps left in the sequences of all 23 pairs of human chromosomes. Those blanks were largely filled in last year by an international group of 100 scientists called the Telomere-to-Telomere (T2T) Consortium.

However, over half of the sequences within the Y chromosome, the smallest and most complicated of the 46 human chromosomes, remained unknown. Now, the same group of researchers has filled in the missing information, publishing a complete Y chromosome sequence Wednesday in the journal Nature.'

A Proclamation on Women’s Equality Day, 2023

Mastodon · 26 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Equality also means ensuring women’s economic security — and I am pleased that a majority of the record 13 million jobs we have added to our economy since I took office are held by women. We are working to ensure women have access to opportunities in sectors like manufacturing and construction, where women have long been underrepresented. I also signed an Executive Order to eliminate discriminatory pay practices and advance pay equity. I have fought for safe and healthy workplaces, including by signing into law long-overdue protections for pregnant, postpartum, and nursing workers. I signed an Executive Order with the most comprehensive set of actions ever to support caregivers and expand child- and long-term care, and we have made other historic investments in affordable child care while requiring firms that receive significant Federal dollars to ensure that high-quality child care is available so parents can actually take the new jobs that we are creating.'

Women's Equality Day 2023: Role of Men In Promoting Gender Equality

Mastodon · 26 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women's Equality Day is observed annually on August 26. The day serves as a powerful reminder of the determination that women across the globe have shown in their pursuit of equality. In the 21st century, the struggle for gender equality is not confined to women alone. Men, too, play a pivotal role in promoting and sustaining gender equality. This article delves into the significant role men can play in advancing the cause of gender equality. From redefining masculinity to being allies in the workplace and advocating for legislative changes, men have the power to reshape societal norms and contribute to a more equitable future for all.

Redefining Masculinity

Traditionally, societal norms have often placed men in rigid roles, emphasising qualities like stoicism, dominance, and aggression. This construct of masculinity not only harms men but also perpetuates gender inequalities. Men today have a unique opportunity to redefine masculinity, embracing traits like emotional intelligence, empathy, and kindness. By doing so, they can break free from stereotypes and contribute to a more balanced and equal society.'

Portland State professors take on Shakespeare: oppression, misogyny, imperialism

Mastodon · 26 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Portland, Oregon played host this summer to the Original Practice Shakespeare Festival — which “prides itself on replicating production techniques true to Shakespeare’s time.”

But OPS Fest Company Manager Beth Yocam told the Portland State University student paper PSU Vanguard there certainly are things the company can “update” and “make things land differently” than they would in the playwright’s time.

This is due to what the paper considers a “controversy” — that the playwright’s works remain “highly regarded” given their “prejudiced language and representations.”

Yocam said the OPS Fest Company “attempts to deconstruct patriarchal expectations” by casting “female or nonbinary actors for traditionally misogynistic male characters” and replacing “offensive and racist language.”'

FIFA suspends Spain soccer federation president Luis Rubiales for 90 days after World Cup win kiss

Matt · 26 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FIFA suspended Spanish soccer federation president Luis Rubiales on Saturday while its disciplinary committee investigates his conduct at the Women's World Cup final, which included kissing player Jenni Hermoso on the lips after Spain's victory.

The provisional suspension comes less than a week after Spain's 1-0 victory over England in Sydney, Australia, and a day after Rubiales refused to resign, despite intense pressure from the Spanish government, women players, soccer clubs and officials. Rubiales' conduct, which also included grabbing his crotch, has overshadowed the enormous accomplishment of Spain's first Women's World Cup title.

Hermoso has said she did not consent to the kiss, and the team's players have said they will not play any more games as long as Rubiales is in charge. It was not immediately clear how FIFA's latest intervention might affect that.'

California Supreme Court declares students accused of sexual misconduct cannot cross-examine accusers

Mastodon · 28 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court of California ruled in July that the state's private universities are not obligated to allow students accused of intimate partner violence to cross-examine their accusers.

Associate Justice Joshua Groban wrote in the Court's opinion that while universities should be giving accused students opportunities to respond to allegations prior to disciplinary action is administered, colleges need to make sure that alleged victims are not "retraumatized."

However, Ken Tashjy, a higher education attorney at Suffolk University and Campus Reform Higher Education Fellow, told Campus Reform that these possible effects can be minimized by permitting accused students to present their questions through the disciplinary hearing officer rather than directly to the alleged victim.

"Denying an accused student facing allegations of sexual violence any right to question his/her accuser is fundamentally unfair and smacks of a presumption of honesty on the part of the alleged victim and of guilt against the accused student," he stated.'

College student convicted of stabbing blind date during sex thought she was Salma Hayek's 'From Dusk Till Dawn' character

Mastodon · 29 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A college student convicted of stabbing a blind date during sex as revenge for a US drone strike that killed an Iranian commander now insists she was hallucinating amid the frenzied attack, telling The Post she believed she was Salma Hayek's character in "From Dusk Till Dawn."

Nika Nikoubin, 23, also claims she only told authorities the stabbing was retaliation for the deadly 2020 drone strike that targeted the military leader because she thought she was starring in a "Homeland" episode by the time she was interrogated.

The Texas student, who has schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, detailed her mindset to The Post on Tuesday — just weeks after a judge sentenced her to three years probation for stabbing her date, Daniel Trevino, in the neck during a rendezvous in a Las Vegas-area hotel last year.

"I was in a very manic state of mind," Nikoubin said.

"I essentially looked in the mirror and I thought, 'This actress is hot,' thinking I'm Salma Hayek from the 'Dusk Till Dawn' movie, and I was hallucinating there was a snake around my shoulders," she added, referring to Quentin Tarantino's 1996 screenplay.
...
After pleading guilty to two counts of false imprisonment with the use of a deadly weapon, the judge sentenced Nikoubin to probation and house arrest — citing her mental health struggles as the reason for avoiding prison.'

In Praise of Heroic Masculinity

Mastodon · 30 August 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The phrase toxic masculinity was coined in the 1980s by a psychologist named Shepherd Bliss. He was a central figure in what he named the “mythopoetic” manhood movement. Bliss had grown up in a punishing military household with a domineering father, and he meant the new term to connote “behavior that diminishes women, children, other men,” a way “to describe that part of the male psyche that is abusive.”
...
The opposite of toxic masculinity is heroic masculinity. It’s all around us; you depend on it for your safety, as I do. It is almost entirely taken for granted, even reviled, until trouble comes and it is ungratefully demanded by the very people who usually decry it.'

New dating trend sees men asking for refunds when they don’t see a 'return on investment’

Matt · 1 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Saw this and had to post it. Problem is really it should be assumed that on a date, you'll go Dutch. Excerpt:

'Samantha Costanza went on a fairly unremarkable date last winter. She and her date grabbed hot ciders at a Brooklyn bar. When the bill came, her date slipped the bartender his credit card.

It was only a few days later when he followed up to suggest a second date that something remarkable happened. Costanza wasn't interested in meeting up again and spent some time crafting a polite response to her paramour.

His response? A Venmo request for her half of the ciders.

“I was in complete shock,” she told CNBC. “It made it seem like the only reason he would offer to pay for my drinks was that he expected something from me.”

Costanza isn’t the only single woman to run into an awkward moment like this. A new dating trend has been popping up, where men send money requests to women after they decline a second date. Some even express they’d like their date’s share of the bill back since they didn’t get a return on their “investment.”'

Kevin Sorbo Fights Hollywood's 'Attack On Masculinity' in New Book

Mastodon · 1 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kevin Sorbo celebrates masculinity in his latest book, "The Test of Lionhood."

"For starters, I think this is long overdue—and I'm actually quite thrilled that I was asked to be part of this," Sorbo explained to Fox News. "The attack today on masculinity today is a call for us to stay vigilant right now, given what Hollywood's been doing to the movies and television."

He continued, "I'm just hoping that people wake up a little bit and realize, Let's let boys be boys and let girls be girls. And let's stop this whole thing about chopping down the men in the world."

Sorbo emphasized that everyone "has a place in this world" and that "The Test of Lionhood" is meant to show boys that "being brave, and being manly, is not a bad thing."

"They're going out there and protecting people — and they shouldn't be afraid to confront things that are dangerous," he said.'

College Gender Gap Starts Early and Extends across Races

Matt · 3 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. They ignore the 800-lb. gorilla in the room: widespread misandry on college campuses. Excerpt:

'Throughout the country, prospective college students have recently made decisions about where they intend to go to school. Increasingly, these students are more likely to be women than men. In California, 56% of undergraduates at the state's public universities and community colleges are women, as are 54% of undergraduates at nonprofit colleges and 63% at for-profit colleges. The growing college gender gap has far-reaching consequences for young men's economic prospects, especially for those from underrepresented racial/ethnic groups.

Based on current rates of enrollment and graduation, 36% of women in California will earn a bachelor's degree by the time they are in their early to mid-20s, compared to only 24% of men. This imbalance is the consequence of gender differences that start well before college. Along every step of the pathway from 9th grade to college completion, women fare better than men. Women are more likely to graduate from high school, enroll in college, transfer from a community college to a four-year college, and complete college once enrolled.'

Spain women’s soccer coach fired amid unwanted World Cup kiss fallout

Matt · 5 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Near as I can tell they simply want to replace this man with a woman. That's all it looks like. Excerpt:

'Jorge Vilda has been sacked from his role as head coach of the Spanish women’s soccer team amid the ongoing fallout over the unwanted kiss that soccer chief Luis Rubiales gave a player at the Women’s World Cup final.

The move comes as part of a major shake-up in Spanish soccer ever since Rubiales, the president of the country’s soccer federation (RFEF), forcibly kissed forward Jennifer Hermoso on August 20.

Rubiales has apologized for his actions and described the kiss as “mutual” – a claim Hermoso denied, saying she was not respected. He has been handed a 90-day suspension by FIFA, soccer’s global governing body, while disciplinary proceedings are underway.

In a statement announcing Vilda’s sacking, RFEF said he was “key to the notable growth of women’s football and leaves Spain as world champions and second in the FIFA rankings.”
...
RFEF later announced Vilda would be replaced by his deputy, Montse Tomé. She will be the first woman in charge of the women’s national team and her debut match will come on September 22 against Sweden.'

Marco Rubio Releases 40-Page Report On The Crisis Of Working, Non-Working Men

Matt · 5 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Florida Republican Sen. Marco Rubio will release a 40-page report Tuesday regarding male labor participation that details the problems men face in their role as providers and shares evidence that working-aged men are having trouble finding quality jobs and are dropping out of the labor force at high rates.

The Daily Caller first obtained a copy of the report, which is titled “The State of the Working (And Non-Working) Man.” One section of the report, headlined “Behind the Decline,” explores various explanations for men’s problems in the workforce and includes sub-sections on “Deindustrialization and the Rise of the Service Economy,” “College for All,” “Mass Immigration,” “The Welfare and Disability Trap” and “The Cultural and Technological Revolution.”

The report also features a section titled “What to Do,” in which Rubio lays out how to get men back to work as well as how to equip young men to lead.'

Jenni Hermoso files criminal complaint against Luis Rubiales over kiss

Mastodon · 6 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Spanish footballer Jenni Hermoso has filed a criminal complaint accusing Luis Rubiales, the president of the Spanish football federation, of sexual assault over the unsolicited kiss he gave her after the Women's World Cup final, the Spanish prosecutor's office has said.

The complaint comes after prosecutors at the country's top criminal court said they were investigating the incident – in which Rubiales grabbed Hermoso by the head, pulled her towards him and planted a kiss on her lips – amid concerns that there may be grounds for sexual assault charges. As part of the investigation, Hermoso was invited to file a formal complaint.

The prosecutor's office said that Hermoso's testimony, given one day earlier, would be processed "as soon as possible". Under a recently passed sexual consent law, Rubiales could face a fine or between one and four years in prison if found guilty of sexual assault, it added.'

Hockey Canada summit to tackle toxic masculinity as a root problem in sport's culture

Mastodon · 8 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sheldon Kennedy feels the weight of what will be discussed at Hockey Canada's summit in Calgary.

The two-day "Beyond The Boards Summit" on Friday and Saturday is designed to tackle one root cause identified at the heart of racism, sexism, homophobia, discrimination and exclusion in hockey.

How masculinity is defined in hockey – glorifying toughness and violence, the "bro culture", the "code of the locker room" – and how elite men's hockey dominates the sport's culture in Canada are on the agenda.

The agenda was developed based on research by Teresa Fowler, an assistant professor at Concordia University in Edmonton, who has written hockey works well for white heterosexual males and not as well for others.

"To get to the root, we have to start peeling off all of those layers," Fowler told CP. "What spills out from hypermasculinity are those things racism, homophobia.'

UK: A Tory MP wants a minister for men. How about one for white people, heterosexuals and the upper classes?

Mastodon · 9 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first thing to say about the idea of appointing a minister for men, as suggested last week by Tory MP Nick Fletcher and taken rather seriously by many, is that it is insulting.

Some people seem to have missed this, perhaps because sexism is less taboo than some other types of discrimination. So let's make it clearer. Imagine appointing a minister for any other dominant group – a minister for white people, say, or heterosexuals, or the able-bodied.

Or how about a minister for the upper classes? You could after all argue that the upper classes suffer from problems specific to their group. Psychological scars from boarding school, hunting-related spinal injuries, receding chins, emotional reticence, an over-reliance on homeopathy, persistent mockery in sketch shows, spite from leftwing columnists and more difficulty, these days, getting an entry job at the BBC. Upper-class teens, some studies show, are more vulnerable to substance abuse. Some of these problems are genetic (or hereditary), some a consequence of their idiosyncratic culture, and some a result of modern attempts to redress class inequality.'

Piers Morgan: 'If there is a Minister for Women, why is there no Minister for Men?'

Mastodon · 10 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week the Labour Party reshuffled its top tier and unveiled a shadow minister for women's health and women's mental health.

But what about men? Are there no issues with men's health and mental health? Tory MP Nick Fletcher is making waves today by campaigning for a Minister for Men.

The feminist blowback has been as swift as it is predictable. One commentator quipped that "as long as rooms of men are writing policy…every minister is already a minister for men."

This research group said there's simply no problem for men because men are rich CEOs who run the male-domimated world.

But the facts say otherwise. Nearly three quarters of adults who go missing are men. 87 per cent of rough sleepers in the UK are men.

Men are three times more likely to become alcoholics or drug addicts, men are more likely to be sectioned, most suicides are men, most prisoners are men, most people who are vilified and ostracised for sharing their opinions are men, young men are falling behind in school.

And young men are also constantly browbeaten by man-bashing movies like Barbie and phrases like "rape culture" which teach them they are evil by design.

Men are also subject to a kind sex-based shadow justice system which relies more on the court of public opinion than a court of law.

Campaigners hounded Manchester United into offloading Mason Greenwood over a charge of attempted rape, which was dropped.'

The Commodification of Hating Men

Mastodon · 10 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"I think it's healthy for women to bitch about men and complain about the way they're treated," says journalist Marie Le Conte, author of Escape: How a Generation Shaped, Destroyed and Survived the Internet. "But not only have brands ruined the internet, they are the internet. They encroach on all our conversations, identities and personalities. They just want to make money and the problem is social media has offered them such an efficient way of targeting us, what we're talking about and what we feel strongly about."

"Female rage has earnt a cultural capital that's lucrative for brands," continues Cole. "Women are more likely to spend their disposable income than men, and are also earning more money as workplace inequality evens out. This means women's trust is super valuable to brands."

Although I regularly say, "Men are trash" to my friends, I know it doesn't really achieve anything. As Sean Thor Conroe wrote in his 2022 book Fuccboi: "Like, OK, yes – dudes have been shitty for all time. But so, what, now the move was to… out-shitty them? I don't know, bro. Didn't know whether that was the move. Whether that would provide long-term satisfaction, once that hit of reactionary "clapback" power wore off."'

The Misogyny Myth

Mastodon · 10 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Toxic masculinity" and "testosterone poisoning" are widely blamed for many problems, but you don't hear much about "toxic femininity" or "estrogen poisoning." Who criticizes "femsplaining" or pretends to "believe all men"? If the patriarchy really did rule our society, the stock father character in television sitcoms would not be a "doofus dad" like Homer Simpson, and commercials wouldn't keep showing wives outsmarting their husbands. (When's the last time you saw a TV husband get something right?) Smug misandry has been box-office gold for Barbie, which delights in writing off men as hapless romantic partners, leering jerks, violent buffoons, and dimwitted tyrants who ought to let women run the world.

Numerous studies have shown that both sexes care more about harms to women than to men. Men get punished more severely than women for the same crime, and crimes against women are punished more severely than crimes against men. Institutions openly discriminate against men in hiring and promotion policies—and a majority of men as well as women favor affirmative-action programs for women.

The education establishment has obsessed for decades about the shortage of women in some science and tech disciplines, but few worry about males badly trailing by just about every other academic measure from kindergarten through graduate school. By the time boys finish high school (if they do), they're so far behind that many colleges lower admissions standards for males—a rare instance of pro-male discrimination, though it's not motivated by a desire to help men. Admissions directors do it because many women are loath to attend a college if the gender ratio is too skewed.'

Difficult conversations regarding hockey's 'toxic masculinity' continue at summit

Mastodon · 10 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The conference's main focus was toxic masculinity and how it leads to other forms of discrimination in hockey, including racism, sexism, and homophobia. Fowler also presented findings about how young minor hockey players are when they first learn to adopt the locker room "code of silence" and how Canada's pioneer and colonialist history have shaped the sport.

Hockey Canada board chair Hugh Fraser, former NHLer Sheldon Kennedy (now an advocate for safe sport), NHLPA agent Bayne Pettinger, Vancouver Canucks assistant general manager Emilie Castonguay and others shared their experiences with hockey culture and toxic masculinity.

Federal sports minister Carla Qualtrough spoke as well. Most levels of the sport, including the NHL, PWHL, IIHF, and CHL were represented at the two-day event, along with all 13 provincial and territorial governing bodies.'

NZ Rugby review reveals misogyny and 'torturous' process to reach gender quota

Mastodon · 10 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The process to get more women on the New Zealand Rugby board has been described as “tortuous” in a damning review. Its findings also reinforced how women faced “chauvinism, misogyny and racism” in the sport, a leading women’s rugby advocate says.

The review into NZ Rugby’s governance processes and structures – led by chair David Pilkington, Anne Urlwin, Whaimutu Dewes and former All Blacks captain Graham Mourie – also highlighted how some in rugby thought gender equity would be an “impediment”, that appointments of women to the board was down to “political correctness”, and qualified women were not willing to put themselves through a “barbaric” process to sit on the board. There was also a “strong resistance” to change.

Women in Rugby Aotearoa board chair Traci Houpapa said the review states “very clearly that women have been subjected to chauvinism, misogyny and racism”.

NZ Rugby was amongst 67 sports boards required to hit a 40% board gender quota by 2021, put in place by the government as part of its Women and Girls in Sport and Active Recreation Strategy.

Because of its inability to hit the target – which was described as “greatly concerning” by current board chair Dame Patsy Reddy – NZ Rugby had $280,000 in funding held back by Sport NZ.

It was repaid when the quota was finally hit this year with the appointment of seasoned board director Catherine Savage. She joined Dame Farah Palmer, Dame Patsy Reddy and Rowena Davenport in April. NZ Rugby was the last major sports board in the country to reach the quota.

The review also found some were concerned about “what they considered the ‘manipulation’ of the nominated category”, to secure appointments of women to the board.'

Spain’s Football President Finally Resigns Following Kiss Scandal

Matt · 10 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Football Federation is stepping down after weeks of pressure following his allegedly unwanted kiss with Spanish forward Jenni Hermoso, he revealed Sunday to Piers Morgan.

Luis Rubiales was suspended after kissing the soccer player on the lips following Spain’s victory in the Women’s World Cup.

Initially refusing to resign, Rubiales referred to his critics as “false feminists,” before ultimately ceding to them, announcing his resignation in an exclusive interview with Piers Morgan.

“About my resignation, yes, I’m going to do,” Rubiales told Piers Morgan “You’re going to resign?” Morgan asked. “Yes, because I cannot continue my work,” Rubalies said.

Rubiales cited his daughters, his father and conversations with friends as the reasons for his change of heart. “They say to me, ‘Luis, now you have to focus on your dignity and continue your life, because if not, probably you are going to damage people you love'” he told Morgan.'

A New Texas Start-up Wants to Save Us From Mansplaining Contractors

Mastodon · 10 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Say you have a project that needs completing, like fixing a leaky faucet, or retiling your bathroom. Matriarchy Build allows you to consult with a trustworthy expert in the field, for a fee ranging from $25 for a 10-minute consultation to $150 for a 55-minute talk. (Some consultants charge more than others.) As Soslow points out, the consultant “has no skin in the game.” They won’t be trying to upsell you, and more often than not aren’t in your city, so they aren’t pitching their services for the job. (Ainslie, who lives in Austin, is spearheading a local subscription service for in-person work, which rolled out in July.) The consultants are there to answer your questions, and tell you what questions to ask, or who else to ask. They can also give advice on how to educate yourself if you’re trying to go the DIY route.

Expertise on the platform is wide: consultants can tell you how to keep your houseplants alive, how to choose materials for a bathroom remodeling job, or how to arrange frames for a gallery wall. And because the platform is built on the concept of women helping women, the consultants probably won’t talk to you like you’re a dumb girl.'

Teacher Explains Why He Prefers Not To Use The Term 'Toxic Masculinity' & What We Should Be Saying Instead

Mastodon · 11 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"This is why I do not like or use the term 'toxic masculinity' and what term I think should replace it," Kwiatkowski began in his video.

He prefaced by admitting that he isn't personally offended by the term, even though some others are, but claimed that for him, he doesn't think the term clearly identifies the root of the problem and actually makes it harder to see and find the solution.

He explained that seeing something as toxic doesn't always mean that it is harmful, breaking down the three aspects of masculinity that are fairly common effects of the patriarchy and are considered to be the most harmful.

He acknowledged that, for the most part, people aren't usually motivated to do something because they're harmful, but do things because they're adaptive or protective to them in their environment, which Kwiatkowski said was the case during his Ph.D. research about teen boys and why they will often restrict their emotions.

With context, many young boys often feel the need to suppress certain emotions because they may not have grown up in a safe space where they were allowed to be their authentic selves.

"Some boys became self-reliant because that was a way that they could protect their younger siblings and care for them after their parents' divorce, even though they ignored their own needs in the process," he said, providing an example.'

Australia: ‘Disgraceful front page’ calls for ‘toxic masculinity’ school classes

Mastodon · 12 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here.

Sky News host Rita Panahi has criticised a recent front page from The West Australian newspaper, calling it disgraceful.

“There was an image of a young boy with the headline: 'How we stop this kid becoming a monster ... but really, what a disgraceful front page,” Ms Panahi said.

“These sort of attacks against boys and young men under the guise of tackling domestic violence are not only idiotic and damaging, but they are counterproductive.”

Toxic masculinity or toxic journalism? Reporting on teaching masculinity in schools

Mastodon · 12 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent article in 'The West Australian' headlined 'How We Stop This Kid Becoming A Monster', with the sub headline stating, 'Call for DV lessons at all schools to address menace of toxic masculinity' came to my attention on Tuesday evening. In the current cultural climate, seeing the terms ‘toxic’ and ‘masculinity’ side by side is nothing unusual. In fact, in 2018 the word ‘toxic’ was voted Word of the Year and the phrase ‘toxic masculinity’ ranked second only to ‘toxic chemicals’, which in a climate of environmental concern only further highlights the phrases popular use. However, this article was quite unique in its deplorability in suggesting the expression of ‘unhelpful’ masculinity is in itself destructive and dangerous, and insinuating that if not properly ‘stopped’ young men and boys are destined to be monsters and menaces.'

What Are Men For?

Mastodon · 13 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the most important voices on men's issues right now is Richard Reeves, the former Brookings scholar and current president of the American Institute for Boys and Men. Reeves's latest, Of Boys and Men, is, in my view, the most comprehensive review of how men declined so rapidly following the feminist waves.

Reeves published an essay yesterday on challenges plaguing the modern male. Men don't have a solid definition of "masculinity," and regardless of how it's defined, masculinity is usually perceived negatively, anyway, Reeves argues. His own understanding of manhood seems to be a good model:
...
Four out of five people think that "masculine" is a negative quality when applied to men, according to a 2018 Pew study. That's not too shocking a number, considering the status male identity has occupied for decades. Men, it's clear, need better examples of masculinity to remind them that they are not redundant — and to end the war on masculinity, for good.'

Man sparks backlash after walking through women-only train car in Japan

Mastodon · 13 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a 21-second TikTok video, which has amassed 2.2 million views, vlogger ShearingShedVlogs wanted to share what “shocked [him] as an Aussie in Japan.”

The tourist recorded himself walking onto a train carriage intended for women only, with big pink signs written in English and in Japanese. “It’s like Saudi Arabia in here,” he said, looking less than impressed.

As he walked through the car, he filmed several female passengers who appeared somewhat uncomfortable with his presence. “I am the woman inspector, checking there’s only women on this carriage,” the TikToker said in the clip.

“This ‘women-only’ carriage is the last thing I would expect to be seeing in such a free country like Japan,” he wrote in the video caption, adding that it and reminds him of something he would see “in a country with strict segregation rules.”

The controversial clip has since sparked outrage on TikTok and other social media platforms, with many blasting the tourist for being invasive and comparing women-only train cars to segregation.

“It’s not segregation it’s for women’s safety and guys like you are why they exist,” one user wrote. “You have bad manners for not respecting Japan traditions, you are embarrassing yourself,” another said.

“How dare you invade a safe space for women. Do you not even know about the sexual harassment suffered? It’s like toilets, stay out,” someone else added.'

Australia: Proposal to link lucrative government deals to gender diversity in STEM

Mastodon · 13 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Technology businesses applying for lucrative Australian government contracts should be required to have a gender diversity action plan before securing that funding, says Girl Geek Academy CEO Sarah Moran.

Ways to increase the participation of women, girls, and other underrepresented groups in the STEM (science, technology, engineering, and mathematics) fields are currently under consideration by the Diversity in STEM Review, a major government initiative led by the Department of Industry, Science, and Resources.

The long-running review published a list of draft recommendations in August, proposing more than a dozen ways to expand access to STEM education and industry access for underrepresented groups.

Key recommendations include a call for government funding bodies to formally commit to diversity in STEM programs and initiatives.

Moran's Girl Geek Academy is a social enterprise focused on building gender equity in the technology sector.

Commenting on the draft recommendations, Moran said baking gender equity into the procurement process, above and beyond the review's existing proposals, would help bridge the gap.

"We need to fix the system, not the girls: it's a billion-dollar system and the government has both the power and money to change it," Moran said in a statement.'

Is it time for female bank executive quotas?

Mastodon · 13 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female representation on the boards of European banks is increasing, but the gender balance of senior management is still lagging, DBRS Morningstar says.
...
“Most of the banks that do not meet the upcoming EU threshold are in Greece, Italy, Germany and Spain,” it said, adding that Spain and Italy have both recently passed national quotas requiring companies to have at least 40% female representation at board level by 2024 and 2026, respectively.

These kinds of quotas could be expanded to senior executive positions, given that gender diversity at that level has barely improved in recent years, it suggested.'

"Why SheraSeven is not a female Andrew Tate"

Mastodon · 13 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women manipulating men for a more comfortable life (or even just to survive) is as old as patriarchy itself, being born from the disparity between men and women's relative positions in society ('The female Andrew Tate': the new influencer dating doctrine is extreme – but I can see why it's popular, 9 August). SheraSeven's "dating doctrine" is apparently gaining popularity, and both the subject of this article and its writer, Kimberly McIntosh, rightly identify gendered power as relevant context. Men hold more privilege, money, status and agency. Women are perpetually required to adapt to and/or resist this oppression. Here, the focus is on heterosexual relationships. But there is a more sinister undercurrent that McIntosh fails to address.'

'The female Andrew Tate': the new influencer dating doctrine is extreme – but I can see why it's popular

From this article:

'Shera advises women over the age of 25 to seek out and date older, affluent men and to actively play games to get them. This includes hiding your insecurities from potential partners and using reverse psychology to manipulate men, so you can imitate intimacy without the risk that comes with true vulnerability. For example, if you're feeling jealous because a man you're dating doesn't pick up his phone, you should pretend you were calling for help with a flat tyre – but then had to get another man to step in. Once they've locked a man down, she argues, women should push for them to pay for all of their household bills and expenses. Men without money are "dusties" and not to be entertained.'

UK: Woman threatened to make false rape claim after consensual sex in 'devious' £5k blackmail plot

Mastodon · 13 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A blackmailer who threatened to make a fake rape allegation to police unless her victim forked out £5,000 has been locked up. Tahereh Ghorbanlou made her 'devious and dishonest threats' after meeting the man on a dating app.

The pair went on to have consensual sex but she later claimed she was 'injured and in pain'. Ghorbanlou then demanded cash from the man in return for her silence.

She later lied to police and claimed she had been a victim of a sex attack - but no evidence was ever found. The 34-year-old even searched the internet for 'sexual violence price' and 'sexual violence definition' after the pair's encounter.

The defendant was arrested and claimed she was the victim of sexual violence but refused to provide any written statement or sign the comments she made. She was then bailed but contacted police to make a counter-allegation of rape against the man on March 20.'

South Dakota woman admits to making false rape report after an extramarital tryst in Florida

Mastodon · 13 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A South Dakota woman pleaded guilty to making a false police report after she claimed an assailant raped her in Florida, police say.

Renee Dawn Skoglund, 30, was arrested in Sioux Falls on March 10 after reporting sexual battery in Hillsborough County two days before. She was charged with misuse of a 911 system, false report of a crime and fabricating physical evidence.

In 911 audio released by Hillsborough County Sheriff's Office, Skoglund claimed that she pulled over to the side of I-75 after having some car trouble. She then reported that a male suspect put a towel over her head, shoved her in the car and raped her while her arms and legs were tied.

Skoglund told police that a particular type of rope was used, and authorities discovered that the product was sold at nearby Walmart stores. During a thorough search of local Walmart locations, police saw surveillance video of Skoglund buying the rope.'

The Dating Pool Dropouts

Mastodon · 14 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The relationship between the sexes and our epidemic of loneliness are two topics we find ourselves continually returning to at The Free Press. Over the last few weeks, we have brought you a range of essays on these themes—from Jenny Powers on the surprising rise of phone sex operators to Rob Henderson on the decline of marriage. Kat Rosenfield introduced us to the new female pickup artists, while our high school essay finalist Isabel Hogben revealed how she discovered porn when she was just 10 years old.

Now, Free Press writer Olivia Reingold reports on the increasing number of young men dropping out of the dating pool. This is a hugely important subject, and I look forward to hearing your thoughts in the comments.
...
A lot of men are checking out," he adds. "We're just tired. We're just tired of being told that we don't measure up either physically or financially."'

Landmark summit sees London’s health partners adopt a public health approach to tackling VAWG

Mastodon · 14 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A landmark summit has been held in central London today at which London’s health partners have renewed their commitment to the Mayor of London’s public health approach to tackling violence against women and girls (VAWG).

NHS London, the new Integrated Care Boards and Directors of Public Health, together with local authority community safety and safeguarding leads have today signed up to a number of pledges to tackle misogyny, sexual harassment and violence against women and girls through their services and in health environments to help prevent VAWG across the capital.

The six core pledges are:

- Recognise all forms of violence against women and girls in everything we do - Develop strategies and policies to identify how each respective organisation tackles all VAWG in all areas of business.
- Embed action to end perpetration of VAWG - Address offender behaviour, supporting them to change, while ensuring the safety of the victim is at the heart of any action.
- Work together to actively tackle VAWG - Create a culture across all partners where all staff are confident to identify and respond to VAWG whether it’s dealing with a staff issue or supporting a patient.
- Strengthen workplace safety - Acknowledge and address the role of power dynamics within work environments and providing protection and support for staff who are experiencing or have experienced VAWG.
- Promote a collaborative learning environment - Understand the gaps in knowledge within our services and listening to experiences of colleagues to provide effective staff training focused on providing bespoke support to the needs of individual.
- Ensure an anti-misogynistic environment - Develop a shared understanding of what misogyny is, identifying structural barriers and working to address them, and through training with a focus on allyship to ensure there is no space for misogyny in the workplace.'

Why Are Women Freezing Their Eggs? Look to the Men.

Matt · 14 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. More blaming men for women's poor decision-making and "pickiness". Excerpt:

'The struggling American man is one of the few objects of bipartisan concern. Both conservatives and liberals bemoan men's underrepresentation in higher education, their greater likelihood to die a "death of despair," and the growing share of them who are not working or looking for work. But the chorus of concern rarely touches on how male decline shapes the lives of the people most likely to date or marry them—that is to say, women.

In Motherhood on Ice: The Mating Gap and Why Women Freeze Their Eggs, Marcia C. Inhorn, a medical anthropologist at Yale, tells this side of the story. Beginning in 2014, she conducted interviews with 150 American women who had frozen their eggs—most of them heterosexual women who wanted a partner they could have and raise children with. She concluded that, contrary to the commonly held notion that most professional women were freezing their eggs so they could lean into their jobs, "Egg freezing was not about their careers. It was about being single or in very unstable relationships with men who were unwilling to commit to them."'

The myth of male privilege

Mastodon · 16 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The idea that women are the less ‘privileged’ sex is a cliché that men are obliged to trot out if they’re to avoid social ostracisation or worse. But it’s a myth, as the American journalist John Tierney pointed out in a brilliant article in City Journal last week. ‘If the patriarchy really did rule our society, the stock father character in television sitcoms would not be the “doofus dad” like Homer Simpson,’ he wrote. ‘Smug misandry has been box-office gold for Barbie, which delights in writing off men as hapless romantic partners, leering jerks, violent buffoons and dim-witted tyrants who ought to let women run the world.”'

Young boys can’t learn the same way as little girls: Psychoanalyst Erica Komisar

Matt · 17 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Commentator wrote an op-ed in the WSJ detailing how schools are failing boys. I would have posted it herein except for the merciless paywall.

A man filmed himself entering a women-only train carriage in Japan, sparking backlash

Matt · 17 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The internet is calling a TikToker "disrespectful" and "rude" after he filmed himself entering a women-only train carriage in Japan and compared it to gender-based segregation that countries like Saudi Arabia mandate.

On September 5, the Australian creator Turan Spidey, who has 354,000 followers on his vlog channel @shearingshedvlogs, shared the video with a caption saying a women-only space is the "last thing" he expected to see "in such a free country like Japan."

"Reminds me of something I would see in a country with strict segregation rules," he added, alluding in his video to the Arab country.'

UK: ‘It’s a power game’: students accused in university rape hearings call in lawyers

Mastodon · 18 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents of male students accused of rape at university are starting to bring in barristers to help them avoid expulsion, the Observer has learned.

As the number of serious sexual assaults escalates across universities, experts say female students often do not want to go to the police, fearing delays and traumatising questioning, and knowing only 1% of rape cases end in conviction. Universities say increasing numbers of women are instead turning to them to investigate, leaving institutions wrestling with complex cases, including a rising trend of pornography-inspired strangulation during sex.

Prof Sir Steve West, the vice-chancellor of the University of the West of England and president of Universities UK until earlier this year, said: “As expulsion is a penalty, parents of the accused often start to raise the stakes by hiring a lawyer. It is a power game, because usually the victim has no representation, and I think it is completely unacceptable and unfair.”

West said that parents “rarely tell us that they’re going to do this in advance”, typically turning up with a lawyer to the final student conduct committee hearing. He worries that this will “drive silence”, with victims frightened of being subjected to exactly the sort of adversarial investigation they wanted to avoid by not complaining to the police.

He added: “There is a huge inequality here, which is a big issue. Barristers are not cheap, and only certain families can afford them.”'

Ireland: State seeks CEO for agency to tackle gender-based violence

Mastodon · 18 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The State is to advertise within weeks for a chief executive for its new agency to tackle domestic, sexual, and gender-based violence.

It comes as Justice Minister Helen McEntee sought Cabinet approval last week for the text of the legislation to establish the new agency, which has been promised as part of the Government's 'zero tolerance' approach to gender-based violence.

...

The Government launched its 'zero tolerance' plan last June and has changed the law in several areas such as 'revenge porn', threatening to post intimate images on social media.

Ms McEntee has also passed laws to increase the maximum sentence for assault causing harm from five years to 10 years.

She has also made changes to allow courts to prevent an accused from cross-examining the alleged victim in cases of coercive control and other gender-based crimes.'

How I Am Teaching My Small Daughters To Play Patriarchy Chicken

Mastodon · 18 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Then I read this piece in the New Statesman, and I was so happy to hear a name for the philosophy I've been passively teaching my daughters, 5 and 2, for the last year. British professor Charlotte Riley plays "Patriarchy Chicken" on her commute to work, holding to her path through streets and tube stations while oncoming men choose to move aside or run into her.

Imagine me, a grown woman, with a jumping 5-year-old on one hand and a rogue 2-year-old pulling on the other. We are broad. We take up space. And now we hold that space, especially in the face of anyone who chugs toward us expecting to have the path cleared for them. So far only one person has run into us, bumping into my daughter's child-sized shopping cart in the produce section.

My daughter said, "Watch out!" And I jumped to correct her tone, embarrassed that she seemed rude. Then I noticed that the other shopper was annoyed, not about to offer an apology, and I thought, "Why are we the rude ones in this scenario?"'

8 Shared Traits of Daughters Abandoned by Their Fathers

Matt · 18 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I speculate that girls raised without fathers generally may develop at least some of these traits. Excerpt:

'Joanne's story, while heartbreaking, is a common one among many of my clients. As a therapist who works with survivors of relational trauma, I have many clients who have experienced parental abandonment or the departure of a caregiver. This can happen for a multitude of reasons: imprisonment, death, physical separation. Sometimes the parent leaves due not to choice or fault of their own. Nevertheless, all abandonment can be devastating, especially if the child does not have the tools they need to cope and move forward.

But the most devastating losses are those in which caregivers left voluntarily. Joanne's father left at a time when she was old enough to have a bond with him yet young enough to internalize his leaving into self-blame and stunted emotional growth.'

WorldVision asks you to "Sponsor a Girl"

Matt · 19 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

The campaign page is here. First off, these people at WV are trying to help desperately poor people in the world. Nothing is wrong per se with this campaign. But what does it say about their perceptions of what appeals to possible donors? WV knows as well as anyone that of 100 children in need of help, at least 50 will be boys. So why not ask people to sponsor a boy? Answer: They think that people will be far less sympathetic with boys than girls, that's why. And studies show they're right.

I don't blame them for taking the approach most likely to get them donors. Saving girls is a cause celebre. Saving boys is... ho-hum, what? In the abstract, people care much more about females' welfare than males'. This WV campaign is just one of many instances of this phenomenon.

The contact form for WV is here. If you are inclined to, please write a politely-worded note to WV commending them on their great work to alleviate poverty, but... what of the boys? Boys who end up forced to work in slave labor conditions in mines or elsewhere, or of boys forcibly taken into the service of criminal gangs? Will there be a campaign for boys any time soon? And if not, why not? Enterprises like WV can show support for boys too without taking anything from girls and vice versa. So why not do so?

White men have ruled the sky as airline pilots, but that's finally changing

Mastodon · 20 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When you hear "this is your captain speaking" on an airline flight in the United States, more than 90% of the time, the speaker is a white male. Just 3.4% of U.S. airline pilots are Black, 2.2% are of Asian descent, and a paltry 0.5% are Hispanic or Latino. Women make up just 4.6%.

As the U.S. population trends to greater racial and ethnic diversity, airline pilots look less like their passengers. This imbalance began after World War II when the airlines feasted on the glut of 200,000 military-trained pilots who returned to civilian life.
...
Two years ago, Chicago-based United Airlines decided to make piloting careers more accessible by opening their own flight training academy, United Aviate, with the goal to train 5,000 new pilots by 2030 and an additional goal that half those pilots be women or people of color.

So far, the programs seem promising. Unite Aviate's first class, which graduated recently, included 80% women or minorities, representative of the younger workforce. These and other airline academy graduates are now working as certified flight instructors and commercial pilots to build the time needed to earn their airline transport pilot certificates, which will allow them to enter a regional airliner or another partner pipeline on their way to an eventual career with a major airline.'

Lyft’s new feature lets women and non-binary riders request their driver’s gender

Mastodon · 20 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lyft is introducing a new feature that lets women and non-binary riders choose a preference to match with drivers of the same gender.

The ride-hailing company said it was a “highly requested feature” in a blog post Tuesday, saying the new feature allows women and non-binary people to “feel that much more confident” in using Lyft and also hopefully encourage more women to sign up to be drivers to access its “flexible earning opportunities.”

The service, called “Women+ Connect,” is rolling out in the coming months. Riders can turn on the option in the Lyft app, however the company warns that it’s not a guarantee that they’ll be matched with a women or non-binary person if one of those people aren’t nearby. Both the riders and drivers will need to opt-in to the feature for it work and riders must chose a gender for it to work.

Although women encompass “nearly half” of its riders, Lyft said that just 23% of its drivers are women, the company said. The feature was also built with assistance from outside organizations, including the Human Rights Campaign and National Association of Women Law Enforcement Executives.'

This week: a woman who disposes of abusive men

Mastodon · 20 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week there's a revenge novel about a woman who disposes of abusive men. By killing them. There's a bleak dystopian novel set in Dublin, although you'd barely recognise the city. There's a family left devastated by a forest fire in Greece. There's a morality tale about engaging in a spot of wife-swapping and there's a satirical thriller about feminism gone horribly wrong.

The plot opens with protagonist Saffy accidentally murdering her stepfather at just 12 years old. There are no tears spilled, however, Saffy was constantly protecting her younger sister from him. But this taste of first blood follows Saffy into adulthood, where by day she's 'normal' enough and by night she hunts down and kills bad guys who have harmed women. She's also looking for one good man to marry and it seems she's found him, a True Crimes writer and podcaster. But he doesn't seem interested. Saffy will make him interested…

This novel is being hailed as a 'feminist satire' but it's just a very enjoyable yarn about a woman with a skewed view on fixing things, especially men. That said, Saffy's obsession is well depicted and she's a memorable character.'

SNP's juryless rape trials compared to Russia as legal expert warns of Andrew Malkinson scandals

Mastodon · 20 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Scottish Government have been accused of launching one of the "most dangerous attacks" on Scots law through their attempt to introduce juryless rape trials. And legal expert Professor Alistair Bonnington warned that wrongful convictions like that of Andrew Malkinson may frequently occur due to this.

He was jailed for rape in 2003 and only released in 2020 before it was revealed that he had been a victim of miscarriage of justice after another suspect was arrested. He received £1m in compensation from the state.

Prof Bonnington compared the potential changes in criminal trials in Scotland to something which might be seen in a dictator state like Russia, where "the case starts with the judge asking the accused: 'Why did you commit this crime?'" The plans for just one judge to be utilised in rape and serious sexual crime trials instead of a jury has been roundly criticised by lawyers and advocates.

However, the Scottish Government are pushing ahead with a pilot anyway despite all these concerns and the threats of boycott from the sector. They claim that this would be fairer for victims of sexual assaults, and could improve the conviction rate.'

UK Parliament sends letters to social media platforms demanding demonization of Russell Brand

Mastodon · 20 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The UK Parliament has sent letters to TikTok and Rumble expressing concerns that comedian Russel Brand could be profiting off the platforms.

"I am writing concerning the serious allegations regarding Russell Brand, in the context as a user of TikTok with more than 2.2 million followers on the platform," the letter to Theo Bertram, TikTok Director of Government Relations, Europe, began.

The following day after TikTok was sent the letter, Rumble received a similar letter from Dinenage, noting Brand's 1.4 million followers on the platform, and asking whether Rumble "intends to join YouTube in suspending Mr. Brand's ability to earn money on the platform."

...

In a statement, Rumble called the letter "extremely disturbing," adding that "while Rumble obviously deplores sexual assault, rape, and all serious crimes, and believes that both alleged victims and the accused are entitled to a full and serious investigation, it is vital to note that recent allegations against Russel Brand have nothing to do with content on Rumble's platform."'

Expelled Yale student says rape case that led to acquittal 'eviscerated' his life

Mastodon · 22 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Yale student from Afghanistan who was expelled after a rape case that ultimately led to acquittal told FOX News the events have "eviscerated" his life.

In 2018, Khan was acquitted of all four sexual assault charges by a New Haven, Conn., jury, and he told the local paper at the time that as the trial went on, he was essentially "alone in America" and had no real home while being faced with the allegation.

Khan had been accused of raping a female student in her dormitory on Halloween 2015. The New York Times reported at the time that the case took on political significance over whether campus assault cases should be conducted by universities or police.

The Connecticut Supreme Court recently ruled Khan can now sue his accuser for defamation regarding statements made during a school hearing, according to the New York Post.
...
"One of the craziest arguments that Yale had said was that just because a court of law says that you're not guilty doesn't mean we think you're not guilty."'

Croatia announces new bill to recognise femicide in country's criminal code

Mastodon · 22 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Croatia announced this week a new bill which will introduce femicide into the country's criminal code and impose longer prison terms for rape.

Croatia's Prime Minister Andrej Plenkovic called it "the most extensive and perhaps the most significant changes so far" aimed at tackling violence against women and children in the country.

"The proposed measures are a confirmation of what we keep repeating – the political will to fight violence against women exists. It is unquestionable, constant, ethical, and it is our value system," Plenkovic said during a meeting with representatives of institutions and citizens' associations in Zagreb on Wednesday.

The amendments to the existing laws suggested by the government will be released to the public for consultation by the end of next week. Ideally, they should come into force by January 2024.

As part of the new measure, Croatia will introduce the crime of femicide into its criminal code making it a standalone offence punishable with a prison sentence that will start from 10 years and could possibly be longer.'

Court grants Hermoso restraining order against Rubiales

Mastodon · 22 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spain's High Court on Friday imposed a restraining order to prevent former football federation chief Luis Rubiales from coming within 200 metres of forward Jenni Hermoso, as he appeared in court to be investigated for sexual assault.

Rubiales denied any wrongdoing during the hearing, which was his first court appearance since the start of the investigation into his behaviour after Spain's Women's World Cup final win in Sydney on Aug. 20.

However, Francisco de Jorge rejected a request by the prosecution that Rubiales should report to the court every two weeks to ensure he does not flee the country.'

Is Russell Brand the victim of a media witch-hunt, asks Bev Turner

Matt · 23 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, after speaking to several close sources of both media outlets and Brand himself on Saturday morning it was clear that although some of the behaviour being alleged is depraved, each instance is nothing more than ‘he said’ versus ‘she said’ through a decade-long time lapse. As usual, there is nuance.

Obviously every human being deserves the right to refuse sexual or physical invasions of any type from another.

But this current trial by media is grotesque.'

Luis Rubiales puts £1.2m home up for sale as legal costs spiral over 'kissgate' scandal

Matt · 24 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Spanish Football Federation chief Luis Rubiales has stuck his luxury Madrid apartment on the market amidst the controversy surrounding the kiss-gate scandal.

The 46-year-old resigned from his post last Sunday as RFEF president, three weeks on from Spain winning the Women's World Cup final and his controversial kiss with Jenni Hermoso. After growing pressure to step down, Rubiales confirmed the news in an interview with Piers Morgan.

Now, a week later, Rubiales has been forced to sell his £1.2million Spanish mansion as he faces mounting legal bills and an increase in financial support to his ex-wife and kids, according to The Sun. Rubiales split with his wife in 2013 and reportedly has to pay €800 per-month for each of his three daughters.'

Kenya: Woman Accuses Hubby of Overreacting after Discovering Their Child Is Not Biologically His

Mastodon · 25 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman has left people baffled after narrating that her husband was divorcing her after finding out their five-year-old child was not his biologically.

The woman who shared her frustration on Reddit, condemned her hubby for overreacting after the paternity test came out negative.

According to the unidentified distressed woman, her friend betrayed her and reported to her hubby that the child he was taking care of was not his.'

Jockey Sean Kirrane’s Surprising Kiss from Owner Jolene After Ebor Festival Win

Mastodon · 25 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ebor Festival winning jockey Sean Kirrane gets a kiss from Jolene, the owner of Live In The Dream

Young Irish jockey Sean Kirrane had the greatest success of his career winning the Group 1 Coolmore Wootton Bassett Nunthorpe Stakes with Live In The Dream at York. The 23-year-old Dubliner surprised all bettors by starting the race leader and held on to the finish to win by a length. The decisive victory in a great race was reflected in scenes of joy on the parade ground with team owners Steve and Jolene De’Lemos among those in attendance.

All the cameras captured the moment in which Jolene unexpectedly kisses rider Sean Kirrane on the mouth and with her husband a few meters away. The Dublin native was taken aback by the quick scene and had a smile on his face as he basked in his moment of glory. In the midst of the chaos over the case of Luis Rubiales and Jennifer Hermoso in the women’s World Cup, network users viralized the video.'

DeSantis says men should 'absolutely' provide child support to pregnant women

Matt · 25 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gov. Ron DeSantis (R-FL) said he thinks that men should be providing child support to pregnant women even prior to their child being born, adding to his campaign's pro-family push.

DeSantis, who is vying to be the 2024 Republican presidential nominee, was asked in an interview with Fox News about Sen. Marco Rubio's (R-FL) legislation that would allow the court to award child support payments to mothers while the child is still in the womb.

DeSantis said men should be providing child support to pregnant women, although he didn't indicate whether he supported Rubio's legislation.

"Most of these women do not want to have abortions, but they feel like they have no other options because they get no support," DeSantis said. "And that's because a lot of these men are nowhere to be found — they should absolutely be providing support; they should absolutely be held accountable."'

AI girlfriends are ruining an entire generation of men

Matt · 26 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ruining? For who? And why? If women are free to be single and fill their nights with red wine and re-runs of "Friends", men are free to do whatever the Hell they want to do without them. In this entire article, the noxious effects of Feminism are not even hinted at. What a really stupid article. Excerpt:

'The rise of virtual artificial intelligence (AI) girlfriends is enabling the silent epidemic of loneliness in an entire generation of young men. It is also having severe consequences for America's future.

How is something that seems so ridiculous — a virtual AI girlfriend — causing a future crisis among Americans? Well, with millions of users, apps have created virtual girlfriends that talk to you, love you, allow you to live out your erotic fantasies, and learn, through data, exactly what you like and what you don't like, creating the "perfect" relationship.
...
Let's look at the hard numbers. More than 60 percent of young men (ages 18-30) are single, compared to only 30 percent of women the same age. One in five men report not having a single close friend, a number that has quadrupled in the last 30 years. The amount of social engagement with friends dropped by 20 hours per month over the pandemic and is still decreasing.

These young men are lonely, and it is having real consequences. They are choosing AI girlfriends over real women, meaning they don't have relationships with real women, don't marry them and then don't have and raise babies with them. America desperately needs people to have more babies, but all the signs are pointing toward fewer relationships, fewer marriages and fewer babies. There have been 600,000 fewer births in 2023 in the U.S. relative to 15 years ago. The number of children per woman has decreased by more than 50 percent in the last 60 years.'

Men Don’t Need Their Own ‘Affirmative Action’

Mastodon · 26 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three months after the fall of race-based affirmative action, the academic world is still wrestling with questions of who does — and doesn’t — deserve a tip on the admissions scale: from athletes, legacies, children of donors, and children of faculty (who collectively comprise 30 percent of Harvard’s student body), to men.

Across the nation’s collegiate classrooms, women outnumber men three to two. Of course, this ratio does not yet reflect the growing number of students who identify outside of the gender binary. But still, it is significant — and for some admissions offices, alarming.

As a Board, we’ve decided firmly in favor of race-based affirmative action and staunchly against legacy admissions. An admissions boost for men may appear to align with our appeals to a diverse student body in our defense of race-based college admissions.

But these struggles for educational equity are not equal.

Affirmative action is primarily beneficial because it is reparative. The policy boosts opportunities for applicants that have historically faced systemic barriers to higher education and its premiums.

Men do not qualify as such applicants. Colleges like Harvard admitted only men for centuries. But even in more recent history, though fewer men have been attending college than women since the 1980s, they remain severely overrepresented in the positions of power that many leverage higher education to achieve.'

Singer Pink kicks out man condemning circumcision at her concert

Matt · 27 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While performing in San Antonio on Monday, the star had zero tolerance for a concertgoer protesting in the middle of her set.

"What does that say?" the 44-year-old asked an individual holding up his phone in a fan-recorded video. "Oh wow, you're making a whole point right now, aren't ya? Do you feel good about yourself?"
...
The man spun around and showed the audience the words on his phone. It read "CIRCUMCISION CRUEL & UNUSUAL."

"He wants all of you to read it. He came here tonight to talk about circumcision," the mother of two told the crowd.

Irritated fans yelled at the man to "shut up."
...
Security swiftly removed the man as fans booed his exit.'

UK: Law will let young people find sperm donor parents

Matt · 29 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention of this as a contract abrogation against the donor who for any number of reasons might want to go un-contacted or unidentified. Excerpt:

'People born using a sperm or egg donor in the UK, who turn 18 after Sunday, will be able to find out the identity of the donor because of a change in the law.

Matthew and Phoebe Betts have known since they were two that they were conceived by a sperm donor.
The 16-year-old twins have spent their lives wondering who he is.

When they turn 18 next year, they will be able to apply to find out his name and last-known address if they want to try to find out where they came from.
The twins know their donor dad's build, his eye and hair colour and some of his hobbies, such as photography, swimming and the guitar. They also know he has a masters degree in business.'

Tennessee teacher charged with raping 12-year-old rearrested for telling victim he'll 'regret doing this'

Matt · 30 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Tennessee elementary school teacher and mother of two charged with raping a child was rearrested Thursday for allegedly attempting to coerce her victim.

Covington Police arrested Alissa McCommon, 38, at her home Thursday and charged her with coercion of a witness, aggravated stalking and harassment. It was McCommon's second arrest in three weeks after she was charged with rape of a child on Sept. 8, 2023, police said.

McCommon, a former fourth-grade teacher, was released after posting a $25,000 bond on the condition that she could not contact the victim or any minors other than her own children. Police said she violated the terms of her release by using a previously unknown phone number to contact the boy she is accused of raping.

"The evidence indicates McCommon texted a victim, using a specific code word known to the juvenile as a code word McCommon would previously utilize to confirm that the juvenile was alone, often before sending nude photographs on SnapChat," Covington Police said in a statement.'

Duke’s female-only scholars program constitutes sex discrimination, civil rights watchdog says

Mastodon · 30 September 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Duke University is under scrutiny by the Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights after a watchdog filed a complaint alleging a campus female-only program violates federal law.

The watchdog, Mark J. Perry, claims that Duke’s female-only Alice M. Baldwin Scholars Program is a violation of Title IX as it “operates exclusively for female students and illegally excludes and discriminates against non-female students based on their sex and gender identity.”

The program, which aims to support female leaders on campus, also violates the university’s own policy on nondiscrimination, according to Perry.

Title IX does not have “unless you have good intentions” exceptions, Perry told The College Fix, saying “sex-based discrimination is still unlawful even if it advantages the ‘right’ sex for the ‘right’ reason.”'

HeForShe summit discusses gender bias in AI and how to encourage male feminist allies

Mastodon · 1 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The growth of artificial intelligence has shown the technology's potential to create new ways of working, but also to exacerbate existing inequalities and stereotypes. At UN Women's recent HeForShe Summit, leaders from the public and private sectors discussed the potential risks of AI, and the need to develop the technology safely.

At the summit, leaders discussed factors that are shaping dominant narratives around masculinity today, and offered concrete positive alternatives for men to foster allyship and leadership in the pursuit for gender equality under the call to be respectfully disruptive.'

So, What Exactly Is A False Rape Allegation?

Mastodon · 1 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Activists on social media have been quick to point out that the use of legal speech in a way that could be described as weaponising opens the door for people to accuse alleged victims of making false rape allegations.

Gina Martin, a gender equality activist, writer, speaker and author of Be The Change and No Offence, But…. explains how the use of legal language and legal maxims across social media shapes the discourse and perceptions of sexual violence against women and girls.

″”Innocent until guilty” is a common response that comes up in response to allegations of sexual violence against famous and powerful men – it was popular online during the #metoo movement too – but its usage is a problem,” she says.

Martin tells me how weaponising the legal maxim ends up doing more harm than good by quashing public discussion about allegations. “It is being used to silence discussions from mostly women and people living under misogyny.”

She continues, “Chillingly, this phrase makes it more possible for men accused of harm to skirt accountability in society, just as they do in our legal system.″'

Ava Evans hits back at GB News interview claim: ‘I never, ever said this’

Mastodon · 1 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During a debate on Sky News, Connor Tomlinson was arguing for ‘free speech’ and insisted Laurence Fox should not be removed from the TV channel over his derogatory comments about Evans after he was suspended.

In order to illustrate his point, the GB News commentator referred to a past debate he’d had with Evans.

‘Ava said women should weaponise false rape allegations in order to keep men afraid of actually committing sexual assault, and when I questioned this she implied that me and my friends would only be afraid of this if we are potential rapists.

‘She’s suffered no repercussions for that.’

He concluded: ‘Should Ava suffer consequences for that?"

“Men SHOULD Be Frightened!” Ava debates Panel on MeToo Movement’s Effect On Men

YouTube video here

UK: Sacked MoD Police officer wins sexist fitness case

Mastodon · 1 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It found the MoD indirectly discriminated against Koren Brown on the grounds of sex when she was not given the chance to formally take an alternative test.

Ms Brown said she had taken legal action in the hope this would not happen again.

The BBC understands the MoD is appealing.

The Ministry of Defence Police (MDP) is a civilian force responsible for protecting sensitive sites across the UK.

Koren Brown, originally from Dunblane, first thought about joining the police in primary school. In 2015 she applied to the MoD force and said she was "so happy" when she was successful.

All armed officers recruited after 2014 were required to reach level 7.6 in a fitness test commonly known as the "bleep test." This involves participants running back and forth between two points at increasing speed.

The tribunal said it seemed clear that women would find it more difficult than men to pass the test at the higher level because of "innate biological reasons."

It said there was a measure of agreement between two expert witnesses that those differences included lower average muscle mass, women having a higher percentage of body fat and smaller hearts and lungs.'

The descent of man

Mastodon · 2 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This belittling attitude towards men doesn't stop at the Barbie movie. Similarly to how critical race theory focuses its attention on white people instead of lifting up people of colour, critical feminist theory tears down men instead of addressing the real concerns of women. The conversation around domestic violence and sexual assault seldom seems to be about the victims but instead about unrelated males. Look no further than the "Kill All Men" hashtag going around social media after the tragic murder of Sarah Everard. Likewise, the #MeToo movement failed to develop into a support system for survivors. Instead it fuelled a toxic environment around a very sensitive subject that deserves a proper conversation.

The mainstream sentiment around men is not too dissimilar to that of the writer and self-proclaimed misandrist, Pauline Harmange, known for her 2020 best-selling book, I Hate Men. Harmange writes, "What if women have good reasons to detest men? What if anger towards men is in fact a joyful and emancipating path when it is allowed to express itself?"

This misandrist attitude hasn't remained at the fringes of radical feminist circles; it is now seen as hip and trendy. A few months ago, I decided to hold a social experiment where I asked people "are men important?" and "are women important?". Whilst the interviewees could easily say that women are important, they just as easily made jokes about men being unimportant. One man took a whole twenty-two seconds before answering the simple question. Even after giving it such consideration, he could only mumble the words: "I guess what traditionally defines men, the traditionally masculine areas of what men do, I think some of that may be important in society, but I think it's been overly prioritised in society."'

Cleveland Institute of Music professor 'enters' leave of absence following protests

Mastodon · 2 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Carlos Kalmar, principal conductor and director of the orchestral studies program at the Cleveland Institute of Music, has “entered into a leave of absence” for the remainder of the semester, according to a CIM spokesperson.

The move comes two weeks after students staged a sit-in to protest Kalmar. Many students attended rehearsal without instruments, and others sat in the audience space in support.

The conductor was investigated earlier this year -- and cleared -- following allegations of inappropriate conduct.

Student government had circulated a petition calling for his resignation. A flyer about the protests said students had “lost trust” in him and were uncomfortable under his leadership.

The school responded to the protests with a statement saying that administration was working with students “to create opportunities for discussion.” A planned Sept. 26 performance at Severance Hall, under Kalmar’s baton, was also canceled.'

Trevor Bauer reveals shocking details after settling claims with San Diego woman

Mastodon · 2 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former MLB star pitcher Trevor Bauer, who played baseball in Japan this past season, has reportedly come to a settlement after a legal battle with a San Diego woman. The woman, Lindsey Hill, accused the 2020 NL Cy Young winner of battery and sexual assault. Bauer later sued her due to defamation before she also sued him. Bauer's attorney's released a statement on the matter, a source shared with ClutchPoints.

Bauer also shared a video to social media, where he revealed shocking details about the situation and explained his decision to sue Hill. The following video, titled “Lindsey Hill's Concealed Texts Finally Exposed”, is from Bauer's YouTube account.

The following statement was made by Trevor Bauer in his video:

“‘Next victim. Star pitcher for the dodgers.' A text Lindsey Hill sent to a friend before she ever even met me. ‘What should I steal?' she asked another, in reference to visiting my house for the first time. The answer? ‘Take his money'. So how might that work? ‘I’m going to his house Wednesday,' she said. ‘I already have my hooks in. you know how I roll.' Then, after the first time we met, ‘Net worth is 51 mil,' she said. ‘Bh, you better secure the bag', was the response. But how was she going to do that? ‘Need daddy to choke me out,' she said. ‘Being an absolute whore to try to get in on his 51 million,' read another text. Then, after the second time we met, former Padres pitcher Jacob Nix told her ‘you gotta get this bag.' ‘I’ll give you 50,000,' Lindsey replied. Her AA sponsor asked her at one point, ‘do you feel a tiny bit guilty?' ‘Not really,' she replied.”'

‘Some of You Lied About Your Gender:’ Men Swamp Tech Conference for Women

Matt · 4 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good for them. Fight gender discrimination! Excerpt:

'A conference meant to provide a space for women and non-binary technologists was overrun by men — and attendees report standing in hours-long lines to talk to recruiters, being shoved and harassed, and watching men jump over escalators to cut in line ahead of other attendees. Conference organizers also said that some attendees lied about their gender when they registered for the event.

The Grace Hopper Celebration, named for the pioneering computer scientist, was hosted by AnitaB.org in Orlando, Florida last week, and “brings the research and career interests of women in computing to the forefront,” according to the website. The conference welcomes all genders, but organizers encourage men to come as allies to women and non-binary technologists. This year, people who were there reported a massive influx of male attendees at the conference, who seemingly behaved like they were in the Hunger Games for computer scientists.'

UK: Drunk dental receptionist who groped schoolboy, 13, is spared jail

Mastodon · 4 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A dental receptionist sexually assaulted a 13-year-old boy after she began chatting him up at random following a white wine binge.

Jade Berry, 27, was staggering through Rivacre Valley Country Park in Ellesmere Port, Cheshire, at 9pm when she accosted the child as he sat on a woodland bench talking with a friend about his forthcoming 14th birthday.

Berry sat between the two boys and began stroking the 13-year-old's genitals over his clothing before offering him sex and saying she would 'ride you till morning'.

As the shocked youngster and his friend got up to leave, she pulled down her trousers and exposed herself before passing out in a drunken stupor.

The two boys took videos of Berry before getting up to leave. She was identified after leaving her bank card and phone on the bench.'

Suzanne Harrington: Why isn’t misogyny a straightforward hate crime?

Mastodon · 4 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why then isn’t misogyny a straightforward hate crime?

If an individual says on television that they wouldn’t want to shag you because you’re black / brown / Jewish / Muslim / Irish, etc, they are not just being vile, but liable for prosecution.

However, say it about a woman on the basis of her womanhood, and she’s fair game.

There are no legal repercussions for the hatred of women, unless you actually rape or kill one.'

'Unconscious' sexism is killing women with cancer in 'prime of their life' as major report demands a 'feminist approach' to treating disease

Mastodon · 4 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sexism is leading to hundreds of thousands of deaths from preventable cancers every year, a new report claims.

'Unconscious' gender biases and discrimination are hindering women's access to cancer prevention, care and treatment, which is lowering their chance of survival, according to a report into gender inequalities in cancer.

A team of international researchers, who studied women and cancer in 185 countries, found 800,000 women worldwide, including 24,000 in the UK, are dying needlessly every year as a result.

The Lancet Commission criticised the narrow focus on 'women's cancers', with conversations focusing on breast and cervical forms of the disease and neglecting lung and bowel cancer — two of causes of cancer death among women globally.

They called for a 'feminist approach' to the disease to boost diagnoses and care, warning that women are dying 'in the prime of their life'.'

Author, theology professor Owen Strachan says feminism, 'wokeness' behind cultural 'war on men'

Mastodon · 4 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism and wokeness have accomplished nothing less than the destabilization of civilization.”

Owen Strachan isn’t mincing words when it comes to what he says is the dual-headed cultural assault on biblical masculinity.

Rather, for Strachan, a research professor of theology at Grace Bible Theology Seminary and author of The War on Men: Why Society Hates Them and Why We Need Them, the rise of “toxic masculinity” is actually symptomatic of larger threats.

“Feminism, paganism, and godless wokeness have attacked strong manhood relentlessly for decades now,” he told The Christian Post via email. “These evil ideologies have had a ferocious effect on the home, the church and society. They have weakened men to breaking point.

“If you weaken men, it turns out, you weaken everyone.”

Strachan says this war — a description cited both in the title and throughout the book — was started culturally with figures like the late radical feminist professor Mary Daly, who once said, “If life is to survive on this planet, there must be a decontamination of the Earth. I think this will be accompanied by an evolutionary process that will result in a drastic reduction of the population of males.”

He also cited a quote attributed to Robin Morgan, editor of Ms. Magazine: “I feel that ‘man-hating’ is an honorable and viable political act, that the oppressed have a right to class-hatred against the class that is oppressing them.”

“In recent years, boys and men have been told they are ‘toxic’ over and over again. Being an aggressive or assertive man has meant that you are a practitioner of ‘toxic masculinity,’ a phrase that is everywhere today,” he said.

And while sin has undeniably corrupted both men and women, he added, “our culture has gone well beyond this mark. It reads strong men as the major problem confronting us today.

“As such, it has effectively declared war on men.”'

Tennessee teacher busted for sex with 12-year-old claims she's pregnant: 'I'm going to raise this baby'

Mastodon · 4 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Tennessee teacher charged with having sex with her then 12-year-old student told the boy she's pregnant with his child and wants to keep the baby, according to a report.

Alissa McCommon, 38, was initially arrested late last month and had her bond revoked for communicating with her victim in texts and phone calls.

In a call to the minor played in court Tuesday the mother of two said she was ready to bring their alleged child into the world.

"I'm going to raise this baby. I can do this," she stated on the recording played in court Tuesday.
...
In addition to prior rape charges, she is now facing additional stalking, harassment and coercion raps.'

Braves legend Tom Glavine addresses Trevor Bauer saga, "I would not want to be playing any professional sport in today's world"

Mastodon · 5 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Atlanta Braves great and MLB Hall of Famer Tom Glavine spoke with OutKick's Dan Dakich on Don't @ Me With Dan Dakich and Bauer came up. Glavine's perspective on the timing and the length of the suspension was interesting, especially in light of Bauer's revelation in the video that he was never charged despite investigations by multiple law enforcement bodies and won the only court case that was brought against him:

“You can't go back in time and put in and be three years younger and play. I think there needs to be a little bit of a conversation about how we handle these things, because in the end, there is a chance that the guys that are being accused didn't do anything wrong or they get found they’re not doing anything wrong and you can't get that time back. So I'm not sitting here and suggesting that I know the answer, but I just feel for guys when they get into a situation like that, it seems like the knee jerk reaction immediately now is, oh, we have to do something because it's, it's kind of a hot topic issue, so to speak.”'

Corrupt Media Declared Trevor Bauer Guilty Until Proven Innocent — And Ruined His Life

Mastodon · 5 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's one thing for media outlets to report on allegations of sexual assault in an informative fashion. But that's clearly not what happened in Trevor Bauer's case — or any other high-profile accusations leveled within the past several years.

Since the rise of the #MeToo movement, corporate media propagandists have taken it upon themselves to become the ultimate arbiters of truth when it comes to allegations of sexual misconduct. No longer are the accused "innocent until proven guilty" or given their day in court. Instead, hack-tivist "journalists" decide whether someone deserves the benefit of the doubt.

Look no further than the confirmation of now-Justice Brett Kavanaugh. When faced with an onslaught of baseless allegations of sexual assault from more than 30 years ago, Kavanaugh was slandered and proclaimed guilty by legacy media before being able to defend himself and before the facts of each case were presented to the public.

It didn't matter that his accusers' allegations didn't hold up under scrutiny. The media deemed him guilty, so what more was there left to say?'

Media Smeared Trevor Bauer. And Now Has Little To Say

Mastodon · 5 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ken Rosenthal is among the most influential baseball writers in the industry. He now writes for The Athletic. Each organization reads what it has to say. And his stance on the matter was clear: Bauer should be out of the league over the unproven allegations.

“Dodgers’ decision to cut ties with Trevor Bauer shouldn’t have been difficult at all,” Rosenthal headlined a column last January criticizing the team for not releasing Bauer sooner.

What did Rosenthal write this week after Bauer publicized the accuser’s damning text messages?

Nothing. He didn’t write anything.

About the same can be said about ESPN. Its article Monday referenced Bauer’s video but excluded the part where Hill acknowledged her plan to make Bauer her “next victim.”

Elsewhere, Sarah Spain sent out several tweets calling for Bauer to be suspended in 2021.

“Looking at the case’s details, the extensive police report and graphic photos, there’s more than enough reason Bauer shouldn’t be on the mound Sunday,” posted Spain.

Spain has yet to find the time to comment on the text messages. And given her decreased airtime at ESPN, we know it’s not because of a lack of free time.

She and Rosenthal are just a few of many who vocalized their disgust over the allegations but not the facts.'

Kering’s Creative Directors Are Now All White Men—Sparking Criticism From Some Industry Insiders

Mastodon · 5 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Days after the longtime Alexander McQueen creative director Sarah Burton showed her last collection at Paris Fashion Week, the fashion house announced Irish designer Seán McGirr as her successor, with some industry professionals noting all creative directors under fashion conglomerate Kering are now all white men.
...

Industry insiders were quick to point out that Burton’s departure diminished the diversity of Kering’s fashion house leaders. Chloe Kennefy, who runs the blog Articles of Clothing, tweeted that Kering joins fashion companies Puig and Richemont, which owns Van Cleef, Cartier and Montblanc, as having no female creative directors. Several Instagram accounts and Sunday Times bestselling author Lorraine Candy shared a post and discussion by fashion blog 1 Granary, which posted a photo collage of all six white male creative directors and Twitter users joined in on the discussion, lamenting a seeming lack of interest in work by women and designers of color. Freya Drohan, fashion director for blog Daily Front Row, said she agrees with the discourse around the lack of diversity but is also happy to see the job go to a "young, unknown Irish designer."'

YT's Pearl addresses conservative pundits' takes on men and marriage

Matt · 6 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Had to share this latest from Pearl. Nice to hear someone addressing the perils of marriage from men's POV, especially in response to its endorsement from conservatives.

IVMF’s Women-Only Entrepreneurship Program Sees Record-Breaking Turnout in Jacksonville Event

Mastodon · 9 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Syracuse University faculty and staff members from the D’Aniello Institute for Veterans and Military Families (IVMF), recently returned from Jacksonville, Florida, where they hosted a record-breaking turnout for the 26th installment of the Veteran Women Igniting the Spirit of Entrepreneurship (V-WISE) conference. The cohort for this unique training program is exclusively composed of women who are either veterans themselves or military spouses with aspirations to launch or expand their small businesses.

V-WISE is held biannually across the United States, and while this wasn’t the first time the conference was held in Jacksonville, this cohort turned out to have the largest in-person turnout of more than 190 women actively participating in the three-day conference.'

San Antonio, TX chapter of NCFM forming

Matt · 9 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

If you live near or in San Antonio, Texas and are interested in joining a group of people for in-person meetings and events supporting men's issues, drop me a line at matt_at_mann@yahoo.com or feel free to post a reply to this story with your email address. This group will be a chapter of NCFM.org, one of the oldest men's rights organization in America.

Thank you.

Claudia Goldin wins Nobel economics prize for work on gender pay gap

Matt · 10 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Harvard professor Claudia Goldin has won the Nobel economics prize in recognition of her groundbreaking work examining wage inequality between men and women.

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said on Monday that Goldin's research "provided the first comprehensive account of women's earnings and labour market participation through the centuries" to reveal "the causes of change, as well as the main sources of the remaining gender gap".

She becomes only the third woman to win the prize, after Elinor Ostrom in 2009 and Esther Duflo in 2019. The prestigious award is worth 11m Swedish kronor (£819,000).'

Scholars to study why $365M DEI investment into STEM failed to diversify engineering

Mastodon · 10 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Science Foundation has tapped a set of scholars to study one of its programs that funneled $365 million into diversifying STEM, but appears to have had little effect in the field of engineering.

The $300,000 grant doled out by the National Science Foundation will investigate factors influencing Broadening Participation Initiatives, or BPIs, which aim to increase the participation of women and other underrepresented groups in STEM.

The grant was recently awarded to the University at Buffalo's Matilde Sánchez-Peña, an assistant professor of engineering education.

An article published by the University at Buffalo's news center highlights how Sánchez-Peña and her colleagues will use their recently awarded NSF grant to "study why, despite 20 years of investment, woman [sic] make up only 20% of engineering students and tenure-track faculty."'

University continues female-only awards despite signing legal agreement to include all genders

Mastodon · 10 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Northwood University, which has run a female-only award program since 1970, appears to be ignoring a legal agreement it signed in January to open the program to all eligible individuals regardless of sex.

Civil rights watchdog Mark J. Perry told The College Fix via email that Northwood openly defied the legal agreement with its Sept. 13 announcement of the five latest female recipients of the Distinguished Women Awards.

He added the university, a private Michigan-based institution, even expanded the awards by introducing the new Distinguished Young Women category.

Perry*, in a recent interview with The College Fix, called the situation an “unprecedented case of the president of a school signing a legally binding agreement with [the Office for Civil Rights], and then basically defying that agreement and carrying on with ‘discrimination as usual.”’
...
Perry is a retired University of Michigan Flint professor who has filed 870 federal civil rights complaints against American universities to ensure they evenly enforce Title IX and Title VI.

Perry lodged a complaint with the Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights on July 1, 2022, alleging violations of Title IX by Northwood in its female-only Distinguished Women Awards and female-only Women in Enterprise Scholarship.'

'Women in tech' conference launches investigation after alleged fake 'non-binary' men turn up

Mastodon · 10 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feathers were ruffled after a popular conference for professionals and students in the tech industry was reportedly overrun by male attendees claiming to be “non-binary” and accessing the event’s exclusive networking opportunities and career fair.

”To honor Grace Hopper’s legacy and inspire future generations of women in tech, Dr. Anita Borg and Dr. Telle Whitney founded Grace Hopper Celebration (GHC) in 1994,” according to the organization’s website.

But in the current age, the event advertises itself as “the world’s largest gathering of women and non-binary technologists.” Tickets cost $1,300, but the organization provides scholarships to “women and non-binary” students, faculty, and professionals to attend virtually.'

Why ‘toxic masculinity’ isn’t a useful term for understanding all of the ways to be a man

Mastodon · 11 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There seem to be as many interpretations of what “toxic masculinity” means as there are uses of the term.

Some believe it’s a way to criticise what they see as specific negative behaviour and attitudes often associated with men. Others, such as broadcaster Piers Morgan, claim that media interest in toxic masculinity is part of a “woke culture” that aims to emasculate men. Others believe toxic masculinity is a fundamental part of manhood.

My research into working-class young men in south Wales shows how masculinity is changing. Some men remain hostile to the notion of toxic masculinity and see the term as a vehicle for shaming men. And some are caught in a conflict between changing ideas of masculinity and traditional, unhealthy expressions of manhood. This is further complicated by the term itself.'

Lawrence Jones' new book 'American Man' defends manhood, combats liberal notion that masculinity is toxic

Mastodon · 11 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"FOX & Friends" co-host Lawrence Jones' new book, "American Man: Speaking The Truth About The War On Masculinity," aims to combat the liberal notion that masculinity is toxic, and puts a spotlight on the importance of crucial role traditional men play in a thriving society.

"When I wrote 'American Man,' the purpose was to defend manhood," Jones told Fox News Digital as he headed to the airport for an exclusive interview with Dallas Mayor Eric Johnson.

Jones, who joined "FOX & Friends" on a permanent basis last month after previously serving as the hit morning show's enterprise reporter, has spent years traveling across America for Fox News Channel, and he's noticed an alarming trend.

"Manhood is under attack right now from society," he said, adding that "American Man: Speaking The Truth About The War On Masculinity" is not an attack on women.'

October, National Domestic Violence Awareness Month, Calls for New Solutions – by Don Mathis

Don14 · 12 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

If there is anything to be learned from the Johnny Depp and Amber Heard trial, it is that it is too simplistic to assume that only men are offenders and only women are victims.

Most essays about domestic violence center around the “Man Bad, Woman Good” mindset. Rather than taking another spin on the faulty and outdated Duluth Domestic Violence Power & Control Wheel (which assumes that all victims must be female and all perpetrators must be male), it is time to examine other considerations.

There are many more issues in intimate partner violence (IPV) than power and control. Domestic violence often occurs among couples who are poor and those with less education. Some couples simply lack an ability to resolve a conflict or to avoid escalation. One or both partners may suffer from depression, anxiety, or immaturity. There are other factors.

Girls and boys raised in violent households are more prone to abusing their partner as adults. Communities with high rates of poverty, unemployment, and crime can also contribute to the possibility of violence. Add other factors such as substance abuse, relationship instability, or mental illness, and the chance of IPV explodes.

But there is another factor that may predict violence towards women. Denise Hines, PhD, has found that studies that assess both victimization and perpetration consistently show that in at least half of violent relationships, the abuse is bidirectional. The fact that most men have more upper body strength than most women may account for the fact that most of those injured in IPV are female.

Yet, most of the bi-directional and 70 percent of the one-sided violence is initiated by the woman – which strongly suggests a new approach to IPV is needed. If we want violence against women to diminish, we must convince women to stop initiating violence!

It is not right for a man to retaliate to a slap with a punch. But it is not right for a woman to slap a man, to throw things at him, or to initiate an attack with the proverbial rolling pin or frying pan.

I am not one to blame the woman for all cases of domestic violence. But I am not the one who seeks to blame the man either. Dr. Sandra Stith, a Kansas State University expert on IPV, found the biggest predictor of whether male and female college students would use violence against a partner was whether the partner was violent toward them. "It's a dramatically more important factor than anything else," Stith said.

Every male I have ever met – in every generation and in every culture – was taught that a boy should never hit a girl. A man who would beat a woman is shamed. But it is rare to find a female who was taught by her mother or father to never hit a man.

Some view IPV as a man’s problem; that only he can stop domestic violence. But the National Council Against Domestic Violence reports that 1 in 3 women and 1 in 4 men have experienced some form of physical violence by an intimate partner.

Domestic Violence Awareness Month has been going on now for three decades, yet the rates of men and women dealing with this issue show that a better solution is needed.

Until we begin offering women equitable anger management classes and allowing women to suffer the legal repercussions of their actions — and educating the public that either gender can be a perpetrator or victim — not much is going to change. We need to teach women, as well as men, that violence is not the answer.

(1) Risk Factors for Intimate Partner Violence Perpetration - https://www.cdc.gov/violenceprevention/intimatepartnerviolence/riskprotectivefactors.html
(2) Depp-Heard Trial Shines Light on Bidirectional Intimate Partner Violence - https://www.gmu.edu/news/2022-06/depp-heard-trial-shines-light-bidirectional-intimate-partner-violence

(3) Researcher Says Women's Initiation of Domestic Violence Predicts Risk to Women - https://www.glennsacks.com/column.php?id=227
(4) Differences in Frequency of Violence and Reported Injury Between Relationships With Reciprocal and Nonreciprocal Intimate Partner Violence | AJPH | Vol. 97 Issue 5 (aphapublications.org) - https://ajph.aphapublications.org/doi/full/10.2105/AJPH.2005.079020
(5) Male college students also victims of violence at girlfriends' hands - https://www.eurekalert.org/news-releases/830660
(6) National Coalition Against Domestic Violence Statistics - https://ncadv.org/STATISTICS
(7) Domestic Violence Treatment Policies Put Abused Women in Harm's Way - https://www.glennsacks.com/column.php?id=125

I took a DNA test — my son isn’t my biological child, but should I tell him?

Mastodon · 12 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The heartbroken dad started to put the pieces together, realizing there were a few red flags at the beginning of the couple’s three-year relationship.

“She told me that she was pregnant very early on in our relationship which I thought was odd,” he explained. “But she insisted that it was mine.”

His girlfriend, 27, reportedly acknowledged that she was “casually seeing people” before things got serious with the Redditor.

“She may not even know who the biological father is, so I feel like bringing it up would just cause problems,” he shrugged.'

Do ‘Women in STEM’ Programs Violate Title IX?

Mastodon · 13 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Rochester Institute of Technology has a persistent and yawning gender gap—what some have called its “infamous gender ratio.” It is nearly two-thirds male, a number that has remained relatively stable for years, sometimes raising eyebrows among prospective female applicants.

That’s why RIT introduced a slate of programs and scholarships aimed particularly—and in many cases, exclusively—at women. They include a Women in Engineering at RIT (WE@RIT) group, as well as a series of summer and after-school programs designed to encourage high school girls to apply to RIT and enter STEM fields.

Such programs have also invoked the scrutiny of civil rights investigators. Critics of single-sex initiatives have filed complaints with the Education Department’s Office for Civil Rights, arguing that they violate Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the law that prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in federally funded education. Fourteen of RIT’s programs were the subject of one such complaint, filed in 2018, and a subsequent four-year investigation that closed just last month.

The complaint was dismissed, but only after RIT opened the programs to men. Officials also closed two of the programs during the course of the investigation, though a spokesperson for RIT said that was unrelated to the probe.'

Affirmative Action for Men?

Mastodon · 15 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some of the ways colleges are trying to attract male applicants are rather pathetic. Consider New College, the small liberal arts public college in Florida that in recent years has been about 66 percent female, with gender studies majors galore. Now it's ground zero in Ron DeSantis's "war on woke." Courses on sex and gender are out, and to attract more men, the school is beefing up not male friendly majors like political science or philosophy or physics, but sports. Grades, as well as SAT and ACT scores, are lower for the new freshman class, reports the Sarasota Herald-Tribune: "Much of the drop in average scores can be attributed to incoming student-athletes who, despite scoring worse on average, have earned a disproportionate number of the school's $10,000-per-year merit-based scholarships." Merit-based scholarships for jocks! Conservatives are fine with affirmative action, as long as the beneficiaries are (white) men.'

Column: Should men pay on dates as reparations for the gender wage gap?

Mastodon · 15 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years, I split the bill on dates. As a Latina from a lineage of women whose lives had been micro-managed by family patriarchs, I thought I was breaking bad generational patterns by interacting with men as equals rather than as providers.

But recently, I started getting pushback from some of my friends. They argued that because of the persisting gender pay gap, it's actually now properly feminist to expect men to pay on first dates and contribute more financially in relationships.

One friend instructed me: "Don't even think about reaching for your purse." The thought of possibly coercing a man into paying for my dinner, however, just seemed wrong.

But many women believe that in our unequal times, it's only fair for men to pay, and not just because men still out-earn women. Women also tend to spend more on date prep, such as makeup and manicures to meet female beauty standards. Some women believe men should cover the costs of not only dates, but transportation to and from. In a viral TikTok video, L.A. resident Gabby Fe, 27, says: "I expect a man to pay for the date. Yes, the whole entire date. That includes my Uber to the date and my Uber back to my house."

She told me she sees this as compensation for women's sacrifices in relationships. It's also proof of serious interest. "I want to feel wanted," she said.

But many straight men perceive such expectations as evidence of women's low empathy for their struggles. In the U.S., men are now behind women in educational attainment and workforce participation. Amid these problems, women's expectations of free dates can seem entitled or vindictive.'

Where Have All The Good Women Gone?

Mastodon · 15 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gone was the good woman and her hallmark virtues, such as patience, loyalty, and compassion. These ideas were redefined as codependency, a kind of slavery, or only for women who were doormats. The virtues of the working woman ascended, taking center stage: self-reliance, ambition, focus, and strength. No family — no man, no child — would get in her way. Every few months, especially during award season, a new starlet comes out and thanks the universe for allowing her to get an abortion, lest her career would have been ruined by the demands of caring for a wriggling, wailing, dream crusher.'

Stealthing criminalised in Queensland under new laws

Mastodon · 15 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The act of stealthing — described as the non-consensual removal of a condom during sex – will be considered rape and attract a maximum penalty of life in prison under a suite of new laws introduced to Queensland parliament today.

One-in-three Australian women and one-in-five Australian men have been victims of the “insidious” act, according to a 2018 study by Monash University.

First reported by The Guardian, the proposed legislation will also seek to criminalise coercive control, and allow judges to inform juries of common misconceptions about sexual assault.

The Sunshine State joins Tasmania, NSW, Victoria, South Australia and the ACT in making stealthing illegal – a move that was one of 188 recommendations last year by Queensland’s Women’s Safety and Justice Taskforce.'

UK: Male maths teacher at all-girls grammar school wins £45,000 after being sacked over false accusations

Matt · 17 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male teacher at an all-girls grammar school has won almost £45,000 after he was sacked over sex assault claims which pupils allegedly later said they made up 'for fun'.

Jonathan Hawker, the former maths and computing teacher, was said to be targeted by pupils who wanted to end his career by alleging he had assaulted them by touching their thighs and massaging their shoulders.

Mr Hawker, who had been at Devonport High School for Girls in Plymouth for five years, was suspended, arrested and then fired for 'gross misconduct' – despite reports that the girls had admitted they lied about everything 'because it was fun'.

The teacher has now been awarded £44,868 after a tribunal in Bristol decided that the school had carried out a 'wholly inadequate' investigation and failed to 'provide a safe working environment for its staff, in particular the men.''

The new feminism is misandry in disguise

Mastodon · 18 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What has feminism ever done for the emotional lives of men? There is a story that says thus far, very little indeed. Its main character is a generation of so-called Lost Boys. Betrayed by a feminism which overstated their privilege and mocked their vulnerability, these boys now turn to online pornography and Andrew Tate. Feminists might complain, but isn't it sort of our fault? Certainly, there are some who feel that corrective action is needed.

A lot of the most vocal feminists of recent years are obsessed with helping men. In her 2018 book, self-styled Guilty Feminist Deborah Frances-White declares that feminism "must fight for men who are being pushed into lonely desolation by the patriarchal pressures". And in her recently published On Our Best Behaviour, Elise Loehnen tells women to spare a thought for the boys: girls might have to suppress our feelings "to function in what otherwise might be dysfunctional relationships or a dysfunctional society", but "at least we're allowed to cry".'

Professor apologizes for ‘rape’ ‘scenario’ assignment

Mastodon · 18 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Says she wanted ‘to bring rape culture and the pervasiveness of victim blaming and shaming to the class so we could have a constructive dialogue’

A University of Pittsburgh criminal justice professor has apologized for an assignment that asked students to create a “fact scenario” for an “encounter” that ends up with a man raping a woman.

“I wanted to sincerely apologize that this assignment was unsettling to some students in our class; I have used this assignment previously and it led to engaged, interactive discussion and learnings by previous students,” Professor Denise Turner wrote in an email obtained by The College Fix.
...
Peyton Gualtieri was the first student to expose the assignment on social media. Her video, as of Oct. 10, has 1.2 million views on TikTok.

Gualtieri told The Fix via email why she believes the assignment is morally wrong.

She said her professor “specifically assumes females are the only victims of sexual assault.”

“In terms of the last question she asked about suggesting 2 ways men should be taught not to rape — this is explicitly a morality situation which needs to be discussed and talked about by families. you learn this growing up – it is right from wrong…. this is like asking a [murderer] not to murder,” Gualtieri said.'

How mixed messages about masculinity impacts mental health

Mastodon · 20 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Summary:

'The term toxic masculinity, which describes the harmful behavior associated with traditional masculinity, may be taking a toll on men and their mental health. NBC's Maria Shriver sits down with three men who open up about the societal pressure and confusion men feel that can lead to isolation.'

Toxic masculinity behind huge rise in acid attacks across UK

Mastodon · 20 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'None of the policies and interventions aimed at responding to acid violence have engaged meaningfully with this fact. Proactive prevention strategies must involve sensitising men and boys to the effects of gender-based violence, including acid attacks, and incorporating them into prevention activities.

Such approaches should be prioritized—or at least simultaneously implemented—as reactive strategies such as policing acid sellers and purchasers and seeking longer jail sentences for perpetrators, which countries like Great Britain, Italy, Bangladesh and India are currently pursuing.'

Why children of married parents do better, but America is moving the other way

Mastodon · 22 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The economist Melissa Kearney has been both vilified and praised for her new book, The Two-Parent Privilege: How Americans Stopped Getting Married and Started Falling Behind.

In the book, released last month, Kearney points out a rather obvious fact: Children raised by two parents have a much higher chance of success than those raised by one. Yet she goes even further to argue that whether parents are married or not impacts their children's success.

Her argument goes against the trend in the U.S.; American children are increasingly being born and raised by single mothers. The U.S. has the world's highest rate of children living in single-parent households, according to a 2019 Pew Research Center study. Almost a quarter, or 23% of U.S. children under age 18, live with one parent and no other adults.'

Iceland’s prime minister joins women’s strike over gender inequality

Mastodon · 24 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...women across Iceland – including the prime minister – went on strike Tuesday as part of a campaign pushing for greater gender equality in the country.

It marked the seventh time that women in Iceland have gone on strike in the name of gender equality, campaign organizers said on their official website. The first strike took place on October 24, 1975.

The strike, known as the “Women’s Day Off” or “Kvennafrí” in Icelandic, was arranged to raise awareness about the “systemic” wage discrimination and gender-based violence faced by women in Iceland, according to organizers.
...
For 14 years in a row, Iceland has been ranked the best nation for gender equality by the World Economic Forum (WEP), which said the country has closed 91.2% of the gender gap.
...
Organizers called on men to show their support for women striking by “taking on additional responsibilities” in home and at work.'

I faked my death after discovering my wife paid thousands for a hitman to kill me

Matt · 24 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In this exclusive interview, the 54-year-old explains: “I had to fake my own death.

“My life is a real life soap opera after my wife agreed to pay a hit man $14,000 (£11,500) to have me murdered rather than just divorce me.

“Thankfully my Oscar-winning performance means I’m still alive and she’s behind bars.

“I can’t tell you the shock and horror I felt when I learnt about my ex’s plan.

...

At the same time Ramon discovered Lulu was starting to spread rumours he had a drinking problem and was abusive.

In 2015, Lulu surprised Ramon when she demanded a divorce.

“She served me with papers, it was ruthless and I was stunned,” Ramon admits.

“She and the kids moved to the second storey of our home while I lived on the first floor.

...

Then aged 42, she was jailed for 20 years in October 2016.

However, the day that Fabulous spoke to Ramon he exclusively revealed that Lulu has been released due to good behaviour having served just seven years of her sentence.

“She walked out of jail today,” he says. “I was shocked but I knew even in prison she’d work the system.

...

He has travelled the world lecturing and supporting male domestic violence charities.

“I am dedicating my life to helping men who are victims of violence in relationships and to show you can get through it,” he says.'

‘They’re just not enough’: Students push to improve sexual assault prevention trainings for college men

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new report from It’s On Us about engaging college men in sexual assault prevention reached similar findings. Released in September, “Engaging Men Part 2: Measuring Attitudes and Behaviors” is a study of 1,152 college men across the nation conducted in partnership with the market research firm YouGov. The report is a follow-up to a survey completed last year. The new study found that 45 percent of respondents reported that they had not received sexual assault prevention training from their higher education institution and up to a third of those who did were ill equipped to identify and intervene in potentially violent interactions or relationships. Only 34 percent of respondents received formal training about consent in school, and just under a quarter (24 percent) of men learned about dating, sex and relationships in their K-12 education, meaning they had no baseline understanding of these issues or experience with comprehensive sex ed before starting college.'

Ranbir Kapoor breaks silence on being labelled ‘red flag’ after Alia Bhatt’s lipstick remark: ‘I am on the side of people fighting toxic masculinity’

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Actor Ranbir Kapoor found himself at the centre of debates after his actor-wife Alia Bhatt revealed that he asked her to wipe off her lipstick as he likes her without it. Several people on social media even labelled him as a ‘red flag’ for dictating terms to his wife. Until recently, Ranbir and Alia refrained from addressing the controversy. But now, while interacting with his fans, Ranbir spoke on the matter. He said he doesn’t mind the negativity if it helps people fighting against toxic masculinity.

“Recently, I was reading an article about being toxic and something relating to some statement I made, and I understand. Listen, I am on your side. Whatever you are fighting against this toxic masculinity, I am on the side of people who are fighting for it. So, if they want to use me as a face, I am fine because their fight is bigger than just me feeling bad about them having an opinion on what I said,” Ranbir said. He added that he looks at a larger picture and doesn’t feel bad for himself as he believes he has “lots to feel grateful about”.'

Australia: The federal government launches three-year project to address toxic masculinity on social media

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The federal government has announced it will fund a three-year trial project tackling harmful messages of toxic masculinity on social media.

The healthy masculinities trial project will receive $3.5 million to run both face-to-face and online presentations at schools, sporting clubs and other community organisations to teach school-aged boys about respectful relationships not just with their peers, but also with themselves.

Starting with boys as young as five years old, the program aims to counteract dangerous gender stereotypes and messages of toxic masculinity circulated by online influencers like Andrew Tate.'

Raising boys to be good men. Here’s one way to do it

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are not born stoic or emotionally isolated. They are created through different peer groups, societal expectations and ideals of traditional masculinity that value hiding vulnerability over showing empathy.

This is not a genetic trait, but a learned behavior. So how do we teach our sons to grow and become more fulfilled men? How do we bring the best out in our boys, so they become the best of men?

This is the question that Dr. Shelly Flais answers in her new book, “Nurturing Boys To Be Better Men: Gender Equality Starts at Home,” which will be released on October 24. As a pediatrician and mother of three boys, she knows a lot about raising sons.

“I’m all about doing little things early that then make huge impacts down the line,” Flais said. “I look at my sons and as they grow, (I ask) what kind of future do I want for them? We’ve come a long way (in how we raise boys), but we still have so much further to go.”'

Criticizing Taylor Swift And Her Fellow Girlbosses Rouses The Fragile Feminist Ego

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All male criticism of Taylor Swift must be a manifestation of misogynist hyper-masculinity. At least that is the takeaway from Washington Post gender columnist Monica Hesse's Sept. 28 op-ed regarding the recently reported romance of Swift and tight end Travis Kelce.

Hesse quotes random representatives of the "super-alpha-fragile-istic fringe of the football side," in support of her claim, and for good measure ropes in a recent Federalist piece by Mark Hemingway on Swift's music. Hesse, who for some reason refuses to cite Hemingway by name, grossly mischaracterizes his arguments by (falsely) claiming Hemingway's complaint is only that Swift writes about breakups, heartbreak, and "how things made her feel," and that his critique is little more than the stereotypical patriarchal double standard foisted upon women.

Not that Hesse's finger-wagging at male criticism of female celebrities is all that unusual. Whether we are talking about the faltering U.S. women's soccer team, obese female musicians, or self-obsessed actresses, there is an inevitable chorus speedily rising to defend them and accuse their detractors of sexism and misogyny. Yet this reality exposes a delicious irony of the women's rights movement since its very beginning: the fragility of the feminist ego.

...

Since Mary Wollstonecraft's 1792 book, A Vindication of the Rights of Woman, a constant rallying cry has been the demand for equal treatment. "We need to see men and women as equal partners," 20th-century feminist writer Betty Friedan declared. "Women will only have true equality when men share with them the responsibility of bringing up the next generation," argued Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

But do feminists actually want equality? Feminists demand that female athletes be celebrated as amazing, unprecedented superstars whether they win or lose. Advocates for gender equality in sports don't want fair market competition based on customer preference, but to bully and coerce the sports industry to devote as much airtime as men's sports to indifferent viewers. Male soccer fans who don't like women's soccer are sexist — that was the conclusion of a 2021 study at the University of Durham in the United Kingdom. Thus the demand that "change starts with more media coverage," according to attendees at the 2022 SportsPro's OTT Summit USA.'

All-female Israeli ‘lionesses’ squad of 13 kill 100 Hamas terrorists in 14-hr gunfight to save base and families

Matt · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Someone please explain again why women aren't subject to Selective Service registration here in the US? Seems when women are sent into combat, they always out-do their male comrades. So if they're so much better at making war than men, why aren't THEY also subject to the draft? Excerpt:

'AN ALL-FEMALE Israel defence squad of just 13 killed nearly 100 Hamas terrorists in a 14-hour gunfight in the southern Gaza Strip.

Israel's Caracal Battalion led the fight against a terror attack on an army base and helped liberate a kibbutz during the onslaught of October 7.

Commander Lieutenant Colonel Or Ben-Yehuda told her unit to "stay alert" as they headed to the southern Israeli kibbutz of Sufa following reports of infiltration by heavily-armed terrorists.

She said to her 12 troops: "We are going out to eliminate terrorists. Infiltration into Israel is happening, and it's spreading.

"Stay alert. We might cross paths. We are a strong squad."

They arrived at the military base to find Hamas had raided the post and taken more than 50 Israeli military personnel hostage.'

We Have to Retire the Phrase ‘Women and Children’ in Conflicts

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amid global calls for a ceasefire in Gaza, one dominant justification is the toll that the genocide is taking on women and children — the stereotypical victims in any kind of crisis. Israel, too, is routinely invoking rhetoric -- and unverified claims -- about women and children to reinforce the impression of Hamas being "barbaric."

The phrase "women and children" -- often invoked in discussions surrounding conflicts, wars, and humanitarian crises -- might be well-intentioned; its objective is to emphasize the vulnerability of certain groups. However, it inadvertently has counterproductive consequences – reducing women to "victims," and men to "protectors" and "perpetrators."'

Comic Katherine Ryan speaks after Russell Brand scandal: 'all men are sick'

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Appearing to address the saga, Ryan said on stage: “Men are sick, that’s right, all men". She went on to joke about her credentials as a feminist comic. "What a relief for me that I finally have a son. So that when people correctly accuse me of unfairly targeting all men in my stand-up comedy, I can say, no not me, I have a little boy, a baby son, far from it" she said. "That is the perfect smokescreen for my feminist agenda. My two year old is a toxic male who plays with monster trucks day in and day out."'

Students strut in heels to raise awareness to domestic violence

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The clack of stilettos echoed throughout East Campus Oct. 21 as Delta Alpha Sigma Multicultural Sorority hosted their Walk A Mile in Her Shoes event.

At Brazos Park, participants sped down University Center Mall, looping near the Central Library before returning to the park while strapped in shiny red heels.

The event featured a special speaker and a race with obstacles, games and prizes. The event aimed to actively confront gender stereotypes and expectations, bringing awareness to domestic violence. All proceeds from the event went to SafeHaven of Tarrant County.

As a male, art education junior Emilio Infante Hernandez said with his privilege he can be a strong advocate for situations that impact women.

“To me, it means using my privilege to help a good cause, it means advocating for people like my sisters, like my mother, like my grandmother, like the amazing greek women that we have here at UTA, like my classmates who are all women,” Hernandez said.'

A Review of 'Men Who Hate Women'

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We live in a world where it's okay for men to be violent toward women—whether they be his girlfriend, wife, friend, or simply a stranger—because not all men are like that and not all men hate women. But if we as women talk about patriarchy, masculinity, or male privilege then we're immediately counterattacked by those who believe that any conversations about masculinity are an immediate attack on men themselves.

Laura Bates said it best herself, writing, "Those who speak of "toxic masculinity" are not criticizing men but rather defending them: describing an ideology and a system that pressures boys and men in our societies, in our families, to conform to unrealistic, unhealthy, and unsustainable ideals."

The core subject of this book is "The Manosphere." This is a vile group of men who get together (mainly on the internet) and systematically hate women and feminism. They seemingly enjoy sending women threats/death threats whenever something doesn't go their particular way, or, woe betide, a woman receives some recognition for something positive that they did in this world. She does a great job of describing the online radicalization process of vulnerable young boys and men in these sexist and violent spaces.'

Scots teachers 'suffering misogynistic and physical abuse' in classrooms

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teachers are being physically attacked and suffering misogynistic abuse in classrooms across Scotland. Details of attacks were heard during an emergency summit on violence in Scots schools on Wednesday

The Scottish Government met with teachers, unions, parents and child experts for the second phase of the three-part meeting, chaired by Education Secretary Jenny Gilruth. It was called after the Record highlighted a series of sickening attacks involving school children in the Our Kids ... Our Future campaign.

The panel heard first-hand accounts from teachers who said they have been assaulted while trying to break up fights, avoided rocks being thrown at them and suffered from misogynistic abuse.'

Scots teacher admits having sex with 15-year-old schoolboy in her car after she messaged him on social media

Air Force Moves to Deadlifts as Way to Determine Job Qualifications, Opening Up Positions to More Women

Mastodon · 25 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recruits will now be required to deadlift anywhere from 40 pounds to 110 pounds to qualify to join the Air Force and get certain jobs, after the service revised a more than 40-year-old test used to determine new airmen's eligibility for different career fields.

The change is part of the updated Strength Aptitude Test, which had been in place since the 1980s, to evaluate how much weight recruits can deadlift, which requires lifting a weight from the ground to a standing position. The old method tested how much weight they could clean and press, which requires picking up and hoisting a weight overhead.'

Reason Aussie men are quitting therapy in droves

Mastodon · 28 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After centuries of toxic masculinity and the notion that manliness means boys can't cry and grown men don't talk about their feelings, a therapist's client list has taken a giant gendered swing.

"I definitely think, especially since Covid, that there's been a lot more messaging around mental health, getting support and that it's OK not to be OK, and that's definitely driven an increase in men going to therapy," Stella Ladikos, therapist and founder of Meraki Mental Health Training, told news.com.au.

"In my own private practice I've been seeing a lot more guys come to therapy and at the moment most of my regular clients are actually men, which is really, really promising to see."'

Students demand reinstatement of lecturer who admitted keying a male professor's car and is accused of stalking him

Matt · 31 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students at Berkeley University are campaigning for the reinstatement of a suspended professor who was forced to take leave after she was found guilty of stalking and harassing a professor at another University of California campus.

Professor Ivonne del Valle, a tenured associate professor of colonial studies in Berkeley's department of Spanish and Portuguese, accused Professor Joshua Clover of harassing her online.

She became convinced that Clover, an English and comparative literature teacher at UC Davis, had hacked her computer in some way and manipulated her accounts.

She felt he was writing veiled insults about her colleagues on Twitter, and began writing him messages, leaving him voicemails and turning up outside his home. She stalked his mother, and forced him to move house.

Over the course of five years, the situation unraveled, and she was suspended in the fall of 2021, KQED report.'

The Link Between Facial Masculinity and Sexual Harassment

Mastodon · 31 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A compelling research literature indicates that leader behaviors can shape the prevalence of sexual harassment in a given organization. A similarly compelling research literature indicates that the prevalence of men at higher levels in an organization's hierarchy can also shape the prevalence of sexual harassment in a given organization. Too many men at the top, and leaders who tolerate sexual harassment, tend to result in more sexual harassment.

We appreciate the importance of these findings, but examined a question that moves a step beyond these findings: Can a CEO's facial masculinity affect the degree of sexual harassment in an organization? In other words, above and beyond the CEO's gender, behaviors, and even statements about sexual harassment, can their basic appearance also have an effect? This is especially relevant to new employees who have relatively little information to go on about their CEOs, but who often see images of their CEOs throughout their physical and online workspace.

To conduct this study, we first started by developing the concept and measure for what we call "presumed patriarchy." This draws from a long and ongoing conversation about patriarchy in our contemporary society.'

Complaints allege N.Y. college programs discriminate against men, white people

Matt · 31 October 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These changes are driven by an unprecedented wave of federal civil complaints filed by a small group of men against colleges and universities across the country alleging the programs or scholarships discriminate on the basis of sex or race. At least 42 colleges in New York have received such complaints, the Times Union found.

The complainants want to eliminate what they describe as anti-male, anti-white and anti-Asian bias infecting college campuses. But others argue these changes may eliminate or weaken programs that boosted historically marginalized groups and didn't harm other people.

The U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights, in its determinations, has largely decided these programs and scholarships are in conflict with federal discrimination laws and pushed schools to change their practices. Some colleges and universities have altered their scholarships or programs after a complaint is filed in order to avoid an investigation by the department.'

High mobile phone use may impact sperm count, study says

Matt · 1 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male sperm count has fallen by more than 50% globally in the last 50 years, leaving researchers scrambling to understand why. Could it be pollution, PFAS and other potential toxins in our food and water, an increase in obesity and chronic disease, or even the ever-present mobile phone?

A new study explored the role of cell phones and found men between the ages of 18 and 22 who said they used their phones more than 20 times a day had a 21% higher risk for a low overall sperm count. The men also had a 30% higher risk for a low sperm concentration, a less important measure of sperm count in a milliliter of semen. The study did not specify whether the men called or texted or used their phones to do both.'

Ex-Cardinals executive Bill Bidwill Jr. a bloody mess after wife hit him ‘a hundred times’:

Matt · 2 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Arizona Cardinals executive Bill Bidwill Jr. was covered in blood after being hit “a hundred times” by his wife, which included being struck in the head by a glass of beer, during a June 9 domestic dispute, according to police video obtained by TMZ Sports.

Bidwill Jr.’s face was bloody when cops arrived outside his home in Paradise Valley, Ariz., where he said his wife Nicole was unhappy about a carpet installation.

“She was very upset at me,” Bidwill Jr. told cops, according to TMZ Sports.

“I’m sitting on the couch, and she’s screaming at me. And I was trying to not escalate because she has a very bad temper.

“And then she started hitting me, and I just started defending myself.”'

The Misandry Problem

Mastodon · 3 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today I'm going to ask you to take misandry seriously, because Wesleyan University has a misandry problem. I know it's a tough ask, but I hope after a laugh with your friends you'll consider what I have to say, and hopefully bring along a little compassion. Although there are many other significantly more harmful forms of bigotry in American society, change is most realizable at a local level. And while not as serious as other forms of discrimination, misandry is prevalent enough in Wesleyan culture to warrant some discussion. It is common in many progressive spaces, and Wesleyan is no different. And with men making up about 46% of Wesleyan students, I believe there's good reason to address one of the most accepted forms of bigotry on our campus.

First off, misandry is sexism, discrimination, or bigotry towards men. It's okay to want to dismantle oppressive systems like the patriarchy, or hate the damage that toxic masculinity causes. But doing so by holding contempt for men is unproductive, and, equally as important, hateful. It forgets that not just men, but also women and non-binary people contribute to and perpetuate the patriarchy. We can't dismantle the patriarchy if we can't correctly identify the problem. It also forgets that toxic masculinity hurts men. I oppose toxic masculinity based on my values of egalitarianism, but also from my own selfish desire to not be confined based on my gender.

As a man, Wesleyan University is shrouded in a hostile atmosphere. For me, the prevalence of misandry is undeniable. Men are a statistical minority of students. This means that more often than not, women are the dominant gender in student culture. This means frustrations with men are often expressed through jokes. While the occasional joke from anyone is fine, these jokes eventually compound and add to the misandrist atmosphere of campus. In female-dominated spaces, it feels like almost a certainty that a man doing anything of note is talked about sexistly. It feels nearly impossible to avoid at least one comment when I'm in these spaces. I've heard too many variations on "Why would you, as a man, do [action]?" to count. I'm told to carry my friends' laundry. I'm pressured to wear a certain Halloween costume like I'm an accessory. I'm "just a man." It's confining, and I don't want to be confined by my gender. Many women and non-binary people probably relate to this feeling, because we've replicated the culture that confines them on a smaller, less damaging scale at Wesleyan. We're further normalizing conventions of toxic masculinity that we otherwise criticize.'

One-of-a-kind Florida Man Games include evading arrest, beer belly wrestling and other competitions

Matt · 4 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I just had to post this. Excerpt:

'The first-ever Florida Man Games are set for Feb. 24, 2024, in St. Augustine, Florida — and this competition is unlike most others.

The Florida Man Games originate from the bizarre news headlines that often come out of the Sunshine State.

Florida Man Games founder Pete Melfi is no stranger to these wacky headlines, as he has covered them for many years.

Melfi had a vision to convert strange, viral "Florida man" headlines into a hilarious competition, and the Florida Man Games were born.'

Why boys underperform girls in school

Mastodon · 4 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anyone who thinks this is a patriarchal society needs to look at high school graduation rates.

The Associated Press recently reported that boys have a lower graduation rate than girls nationwide. In 2018, one researcher estimated girl graduates outnumbered boy graduates by 45,000. You can see this disparity in the Clark County School District, too. For the 2021-22 school year, the female graduation rate was 84.3 percent. For males, it was just 78.5 percent.

Girls also earned 1,543 advanced diplomas, compared with 914 for boys.

One supposed expert consulted by the AP said the explanation was economic. Male dropouts, according to Beth Jarosz, a program director at research organization PRB, can earn as much as a woman with a year or two of college. Left unsaid was that the mythical gender pay gap all but disappears when adjusted for factors such as hours worked, profession and a job's dangers. That's what you would expect in a country where pay discrimination by sex has been illegal for decades.

But did you catch the implication? The cause of boys doing poorly in school is the patriarchy. Never mind that not having a high school diploma decreases average lifetime earnings and makes men more likely to wind up in jail. Seems like an odd strategy for maintaining male dominance over society.'

UK: Covid inquiry: 'Macho' culture and 'obvious sexism' in No10 'damaged Covid response', says Helen MacNamara

Mastodon · 4 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The senior civil servant who was the subject of Dominic Cummings' "violent and misogynistic" messages has said Boris Johnson let the country down by not tackling the "toxic" culture he presided over.

Helen MacNamara, who was one of the country's highest ranking female officials, told the UK Covid-19 Inquiry on Wednesday that sexism in No 10 damaged the response to the pandemic.

She also said Matt Hancock displayed "nuclear levels" of overconfidence and a questionable record on the truth while a key figure in the Covid response as health secretary.

She also expressed "profound regret" for being one of the many officials fined after lockdown-breaching parties but hit out at the culture that preceded the rule-breaking.

Ms MacNamara wrote in her evidence that the "very obvious sexist treatment" that women in No 10 and the Cabinet Office experienced hindered their work.

"The dominant culture was macho and heroic," she wrote. "It was positively unhelpful when the country needed thoughtful and reflective decision-making."

She told the west London hearing that areas of policy to suffer as a result of the macho culture were issues including domestic abuse, carers and childcare and abortions during the pandemic.'

Constantly insulting boys does not serve the sexes

Mastodon · 4 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's good to hear there are parents like Andrew Reiner who are pointing out that insulting boys constantly is not any way to bring equality (or good relations) to the sexes ("The trouble with boys isn't boys," Ideas, Oct. 22). The fact that feminists seldom condemn such behavior is one reason many young women don't call themselves feminists.

Also, teachers, of all people, should be condemning the lazy use of clichés and negative political jargon and slang, such as "toxic masculinity," as much as possible, never mind using it themselves. Defamation and scapegoating are not civilized. Nor do they promote intellectualism.

Last but not least, whether in school or in informal gatherings, it's time to realize that "old-fashioned" manners and decorum are not obsolete, for boys or girls. This applies even when it comes to writing that is printed on clothing, regardless of the age of the wearer. This would help society tremendously.

As Judith Martin (a.k.a. Miss Manners) wrote: "Miss Manners is for freedom of speech for all people, but believes that it is time that clothes shut up."'

Crisis conditions for young men

Matt · 6 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Interview here. From 8 mos. ago but still relevant commentary, from CNN no less. Discusses the crisis conditions for young men these days, touching on jobs, dating, etc.

The Missing Piece: Lessons from Ukraine for Integrating Masculinities in Women, Peace and Security

Mastodon · 6 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the key objectives of the Women, Peace and Security (WPS) agenda is to integrate a gender perspective into all peace and security efforts. Yet, discussions on gender tend to focus on issues relating to women and girls, neglecting the broader spectrum of gender dynamics. This omission is palpable in the ten resolutions adopted by the United Nations (UN) Security Council in the context of the WPS agenda, where there are only three references to men and boys.1 This limited representation fails to acknowledge the multifaceted roles that men can play in conflict situations, whether in perpetuating or resolving them.

...

While the changes to Ukraine's NAP in 2022 demonstrated a willingness to adapt quickly to changing realities, the war has brought into stark relief areas where gender and gender identity are strong determinants of one's lived experience in conflict. In February 2022, Ukraine declared martial law and banned men aged between 18 and 60 from leaving the country, as they might be called upon for mandatory military service. Women were not subject to the draft; however, a new conscription law now mandates that women with medical or pharmaceutical education register at enlistment offices.

This divergence in gender-based conscription rules has led to several noteworthy developments for men. First, civilian men who have not yet joined the military forces or received formal military training have seen their freedom of movement considerably restricted. Additionally, since a considerable number of women have been internally displaced or left the country, many men find themselves separated from their loved ones. Men also constitute a significantly higher share of casualties. As of August 2023, estimates indicate that nearly 70,000 Ukrainian soldiers have been killed, and around 120,000 have been wounded since the beginning of the conflict.'

Misidentifying Misandry: A Deeper Dive Into the Nuances of the Patriarchy

Mastodon · 7 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, a letter to the editor was published about the “misandry problem” at Wesleyan. While the letter rightfully points out the damaging effects the patriarchy has on men, as it does on people of all genders, it ignores the bigger picture of why and how we should combat toxic masculinity. It equates misandry to other forms of oppression and ignores nuances within the vast gender spectrum, which detracts from solving the problem brought up within the letter. The path to ending toxic masculinity lies in the liberation of all non-men.

At Wesleyan, jokes about men are frequent. While they may be bothersome, they cannot be equated to the sexist treatment that women receive. In fact, it is healthy that non-men feel safe enough to make these jokes at Wesleyan. It shows that our school is beginning to foster an environment where non-men can freely express themselves and gain respect. When jokes about men are made, it is often from someone holding less systemic power, who has to fight to be treated with the same amount of respect.

Jokes made about men do not have the same power and weight behind them as jokes about non-men; a joke made about a man is not going to take away his inherent systemic power. Meanwhile, there is an entire system of oppression existing behind jokes made about non-men. There is a difference between punching up and punching down. Until there is equality for all genders, jokes made about men are a way to reclaim power for marginalized people.'

U.Va. needs more classes on healthy masculinity

Mastodon · 8 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spring enrollment is here — bringing with it the stress and excitement that is planning for the academics of the upcoming semester. While the University's course offerings are near endless, there is a noticeable lack of classes focusing on healthy masculinity. There is only one class at the University covering the topic, called Men and Masculinities — the course is not even being offered next semester. While I have no doubt this class is helpful, much like how a single class on history would not be able to cover all history adequately, a single 2000-level class on the challenges men face is insufficient. The University should allocate funding to create an additional class on the most dire struggle men face — mental health.

...

We would not be the first to utilize education to address issues facing men. Stony Brook University began offering a master's program in "masculinities studies" in 2017. The idea of a degree dedicated to men and masculinity may conjure up images of problematic men's rights activists — but this could not be further from the truth. Much of the work done in these classes attempts to undo a lot of the harm caused by viewpoints that male misogynists commonly push. The program offers an entire course on toxic masculinity, an issue that affects everyone regardless of gender identity. While an entire program might not be feasible at the University, especially with the current lack of funding awarded to gender studies classes, offering a more diverse selection of classes on the subject of healthy masculinity is a great place to start.'

I use this hack to shame cheap men who want to split the bill — guys say it's 'manipulative'

Mastodon · 8 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This "100% genius" hack will get 50/50 cheapos in check.

Splitting the bill on a first date has become a topic of contention amongst singletons online with dissenting views on whether a guy should be solely responsible for picking up the tab during the inaugural outing.

But one shady dater has devised a deliciously devious trick that's sure to leave tightfisted fellas with egg on their faces.

"When a man wants to go 50/50 with you on a date, do this," began going-out guru Pearl Botts, an aspiring singer from Los Angeles, in a trending TikTok how-to, advising all the singles ladies on best practices for politely jabbing a prospective partner who expects them to pay.
...
"Wait, you wanted to just be friends?" she asked condescendingly. "I'm so confused. This entire time I thought this was a date. I'm so sorry, here's my card."

The brunette's buzzy comeback — meant to neatly place penny-pinching lover boys in the friend zone — rendered rave reviews from women who've awkwardly found themselves on the receiving end of the first date foul play.'

A Proclamation on Veterans Day, 2023

Mastodon · 9 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This Veterans Day, we honor the generations of women and men who have served and sacrificed — not for a person, a place, or a President — but for an idea unlike any other: the idea of the United States of America. For nearly 250 years, our veterans have defended the values that make us strong so that our Nation could stand as a citadel of liberty, a beacon of freedom, and a wellspring of possibilities.

...

As a Nation, we have many obligations, but we only have one truly sacred obligation: to prepare and equip the brave women and men we send into harm's way and to care for them and their loved ones when they return home. Since the beginning of my Administration, we have worked to make good on that promise, passing nearly 30 bipartisan laws to support our veterans and service members and their families, caregivers, and survivors. That includes the PACT Act — the most significant effort in our Nation's history to help millions of veterans exposed to toxic substances during their military service. Since I signed the PACT Act into law last year, more than 478,000 veterans and survivors are already receiving benefits — ensuring that veterans exposed to burn pits and other harmful substances and their loved ones get access to the care and support they need.'

Jezebel shuts down, lays off staff in ‘excruciating’ decision, parent company says

Mastodon · 9 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jezebel, the punchy feminist blog with an outsized influence on internet culture, will suspend operations and lay off its staff effective immediately, its parent company G/O Media said Thursday as it announced broader restructuring in its portfolio of digital news outlets.

Jim Spanfeller, chief executive of G/O Media, said in a memo to staff obtained by CNN that the company had tried to sell the publication, but that after talks with two dozen potential buyers, “we could not find Jez a new home.”

“As of this week we are making the very, very difficult decision to suspend publication of Jezebel,” Spanfeller said. “Few decisions over the course of my career have been as excruciating, and I want to make clear this is in NO WAY a reflection on the Jezebel editorial team.”'

Woke Britons want to ban iconic 1,500 year old hill carving over 'toxic masculinity' fears

Mastodon · 10 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Woke complainers want to ban the famous carving of the Cerne Abbas giant and its penis from a magazine cover over claims it is a symbol of “toxic masculinity”.

...

Writing on Camra’s Discourse messaging site, advertising rep John Galpin said: “It’s immature masculinity.

“It sends a message that members are little boys who make penis jokes.

“Any woman seeing that could be excused for thinking Camra is full of men waving their penises around whilst drinking beer.

“At a time when we are trying to be more inclusive it’s totally inappropriate. I for one wouldn’t want anything to do with it.”'

International Men's Day, November 19

charlie · 13 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

International Men's Day is November 19. Suicide prevention is a top priority.

Life expectancy gap between men and women in the US widened significantly during the Covid-19 pandemic

Matt · 13 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women in the United States can expect to live nearly six years longer than men, as disparities in deaths from Covid-19 and drug overdoses drive the life expectancy gap to the widest it's been in decades.

Overall, life expectancy in the US fell more than two and a half years since the start of the pandemic — down to 76.1 years in 2021, according to data from the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Life expectancies for both men and women were affected, but not equally.

...

But men have had significantly higher mortality rates from many other leading causes of death in recent years, according to a new study, and multiple converging factors are driving a wider gap.

Between 2010 and 2019, the largest drivers of the growing life expectancy gap were higher mortality rates among men for unintentional injuries, diabetes, suicide, homicide and heart disease. Some of that gap was offset by more similar mortality rates from cancer and Alzheimer's disease among men and women.

...

"The increase in overdose deaths, homicide, and suicide underscore twin crises of deaths from despair and firearm violence," the authors wrote.

The study was limited by a binary classification of gender and did not explore overlap across disease classifications and different demographic subgroups.'

How gender disparities are affecting men

Mastodon · 14 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1972, when Title IX was passed to help improve gender equality on campus, men were 13% more likely to get an undergraduate degree than women; today, according to the National Center for Education Statistics, it's women who are 15% more likely to get a degree than men.

"We have a bigger gender gap today than we did when we passed laws to help women and girls; it's just flipped," said Richard Reeves, a former Brookings Institution senior fellow. He says, no one really has been able to explain why so many men are so absent in higher education. What is known is the gender disparity starts as early as kindergarten, where girls are just generally the stronger sex in academics.

Reeves said, "If you look at high school GPA, and those who are getting the best grades in high school, two-thirds of them are girls. Those with the lowest grades, two-thirds of them are boys."'

Sabrina Carpenter’s Feminist Music Video Celebrates The Gruesome Killing Of Men

Mastodon · 14 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s not often in popular culture that mainstream feminism bares its fangs and owns up to its true nature without hiding behind the “all we want is equality” mantra. But that’s exactly what happened last week, when ex-Disney star turned mediocre pop singer Sabrina Carpenter posted the music video for her new single “Feather,” where she desecrates a Catholic church and glorifies the killing of men. Thus far, the video has garnered over 6 million views.

Feather creates a fantasy world that finds Carpenter enabling and enjoying the deaths of the men who hit on her. In the first scene, a group of men, distracted from catcalling Carpenter, are struck by a truck, to which Carpenter responds with a simple shrug.

...

The message from the music video is clear: men’s “toxic” masculinity turns them into serial sex harassers, and in this female fantasy, a satisfied Carpenter gets to watch them all die gruesome deaths.'

Study finds racial (and gender) disparities in whether US judges impose prison

Mastodon · 15 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Black and Hispanic defendants in federal court are less likely than white ones to be sentenced to probation rather than prison, a difference that largely accounts for the racial disparities in the punishments judges impose, according to a new study.

...

Women of all races received 29.2% shorter sentences on average than men and were 39.6% more likely to receive probation, the study found.'

The "Man-Hating Feminist" Is A Misleading Myth, New Study Shows

Mastodon · 17 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The idea that feminists are man-haters has a long and sticky history, but is it true? Well, not according to a massive new study conducted by an international team of researchers.

According to the study, which involved nearly 10,000 participants from various Western and non-Western cultures, feminists tend to hold positive attitudes towards men in ways that are comparable to non-feminists. This finding challenges long-held stereotypes that portray and dismiss feminists as simply anti-male.

Feminism has achieved many laudable advances for women and girls, as well as men and boys, since it became a formal political and social movement in the mid-19th century. But even in their earliest days, feminists were condemned as anti-male (misandry) advocates. This trope continues to be used to delegitimize and discredit feminists and, in many ways, has deterred some from joining the movement. In more extreme cases, such a representation has even inspired men to engage in aggressive and violent opposition.'

Survey Shows Major Decline in Gen-Z Men Identifying as Feminists Compared to Previous Generations

Mastodon · 17 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amongst baby boomers, Gen-Xers, millennials, and Gen-Z, the latter generation represented the largest divide between sexes when it came to views on feminism. 61 percent of Gen-Z women, versus just 43 percent of the generation's men, agree that they're feminists. As for millennials, a nearly equal number of men and women—52 percent and 54 percent, respectively—felt that the feminist label applied to them.'

New psychology research shows people are more willing to harm men than women for the greater good

Mastodon · 17 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent research reveals a striking gender bias in how people perceive and accept instrumental harm, which occurs when harm is inflicted on some individuals to achieve a greater good. The study, published in the Archives of Sexual Behavior, found that people tend to be more willing to accept harm to men than to women in various contexts, even when women are traditionally expected to sacrifice more.

Utilitarianism, a moral philosophy that justifies causing harm to some individuals if it leads to a greater overall good, has been the subject of much philosophical debate. It encompasses two key elements: instrumental harm and impartial beneficence. Instrumental harm allows for the harm of innocent individuals for the greater good, while impartial beneficence requires prioritizing the greater good above personal attachments and biases.'

Single motherhood: Raising children alone, by choice

Mastodon · 17 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some people think raising a child without a partner is incomplete, like someone cut a man out of your proper family portrait and now there's just a gaping hole. But what if, as in the case of Hargrove and Washington, you chose to enter this massively hard state of motherhood as the primary parent, completing your family as you see fit? Neither one of them were banking on one day marrying and having someone with which to share the load equally. They were committing to the buck stopping with them. And it's worked.'

The White House wants to close the gap on health care research for women

Mastodon · 17 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Joe Biden on Monday announced the first-ever White House Initiative on Women's Health Research, which will be led by First Lady Jill Biden and the White House Gender Policy Council. The new initiative will be chaired and coordinated by Dr. Carolyn Mazure, who recently joined the White House from the Yale School of Medicine.
...
Biden explained that earlier this year, Maria Shriver, the former first lady of California, approached her about a need for greater effort both inside and outside of government to close long-standing gaps in women's health research. To Biden, Shriver's call resonated with something she said she had long seen — that research into conditions that mostly affect women or affect women differently than men have long been underfunded and that "these gaps are even greater for communities that have historically been excluded from research, including women of color and women with disabilities."

Shriver, who joined the press call, stressed the importance of addressing "how sick women are in this country," pointing to the fact that women are two-thirds of all Alzheimer's cases, two-thirds of all multiple sclerosis cases, 80 percent of all autoimmune disease cases, and that they experience anxiety and depression at twice the rate of men.
...
The White House Initiative on Women's Health Research intends to bring in members of executive departments across the federal government to work holistically on this issue; deliver concrete recommendations on how to advance women's health research within its first 45 days; set priority areas where additional investments could have the biggest impact; and facilitate collaboration between the scientific private sector, philanthropic groups and the government to create new research initiatives.'

Having a negative perception of masculinity is linked to worse mental health, study finds

Mastodon · 19 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Holding the view that masculinity negatively impacts one's behavior is associated with lower mental well-being, according to a new study of more than 4,000 men. The findings shed light on the relationship between societal perceptions of masculinity and individual mental health, challenging previous notions that masculine attitudes are inherently harmful or detrimental. The study was published in the International Journal of Health Sciences.

For decades, masculinity has been a topic of both public and academic debate. Historically, traits like being active, dominant, and self-contained were synonymous with masculinity. However, from the 1980s, there was a notable shift. Masculinity began to be viewed through a more critical lens, often associated with negative traits like misogyny and homophobia, and linked to issues such as poor mental health and aggressive behavior.

This transition was partly fueled by sociological theories, leading to what some call a "deficit model" of masculinity – focusing primarily on its negative aspects. But how accurate is this negative portrayal, and what impact does it have on men's mental health? This was the central question guiding the researchers in this extensive study.'

US women now live six years longer than men. American life expectancy is still dire

Mastodon · 19 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"We're the United States of America, for God's sake," Joe Biden scoffed to 60 Minutes last month after he was asked if the US was capable of funding Ukraine and Israel's wars. "We're the most powerful nation … in the history of the world. The history of the world."

The most "powerful nation in the history of the world" may be very good at funding wars abroad but it's less adept at looking after its own citizens. US life expectancy has declined dramatically in recent years: it's now the shortest it's been in nearly two decades. It's particularly bad if you're male: new research by Harvard TH Chan School of Public Health and UC San Francisco has found that women in the US now outlive men by almost six years. The life expectancy gap between men and women has been widening since 2010 and is now the largest it's been since 1996.'

Why most men don’t have enough close friends

Mastodon · 19 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Friendships aren’t just about those you sit with on the school bus or play alongside on your childhood baseball team — they are a core component of the human experience, experts say.

But making and retaining deep, meaningful friendships as an adult is hard, especially for men, according to research.

Less than half of men report being satisfied with their friendships, and only about 1 in 5 said they had received emotional support from a friend in the last week, compared with 4 in 10 women, according to a 2021 survey from the Survey Center on American Life.'

How did America become a deadlier place for men?

Mastodon · 21 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much as postmodern academics and progressive political activists may deny it, there are natural differences between the sexes, and the mere fact that women live longer is not so surprising.

For one thing, men are disproportionately employed in the nation's most hazardous jobs, including as loggers, roofers, construction workers, aircraft pilots and steel workers.

And if a male propensity for risk-taking makes men more successful in certain executive and entrepreneurial roles, it also leads to more men and boys dying of misadventure and accident.

But the gap in longevity has widened by a full year since 2010, when it was at a historic minimum of 4.8 years.

Human nature hasn't changed in that time — something has changed in America to make it a deadlier place for men.'

Australia: Two women sentenced to probation after filming man being tortured in hotel room before he fell to his death

Mastodon · 21 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two women who filmed and posted online the “callous” torture of a man who later fell to his death from a fourth floor holiday unit on the Gold Coast of Australia had “complete disregard” for their involvement, a court has heard.

A 19-year-old woman and a 20-year-old woman, who cannot be named for legal reasons, were sentenced in Brisbane Supreme Court on Tuesday to one count each of torture and two counts of armed robbery in company.

The two women, who were both 16 years old at the time of the offending, had filmed about five minutes worth of a 27 minute episode where Cian John English and his friend were tortured in a View Pacific Hotel room in Surfers Paradise in the early hours of May 23, 2020.

The court heard that the now 19-year-old woman could be heard saying “this is why you don’t steal from the boys” in one of her videos.

Another video shot by the now 20-year-old showed her ordering English to clean up his own blood from the floor after he’d been assaulted.

The 20-year-old woman’s defence barrister, Angus Edwards, said his client had had a difficult childhood which led to her drug use.

“She was trying to numb the pain, particularly with Xanax which she was heavily using,” Edwards said.

The court heard the 19-year-old woman had been overheard bragging about the night English died to friends in the weeks following his death.

In his sentencing remarks, Justice Peter Applegarth said he had taken into account the two women were not charged over English’s death or had been responsible for assaulting him or his friend.

Justice Applegarth sentenced both women each to two years probation and did not record a conviction.

“As horrible your behaviour on there was and how despicable you acted after the events….. I am conscious of your remorse.”

Upon hearing their sentence, the two women were hugged by the supporters who embraced them in the courtroom.'

Discussion held at UMaine for men’s mental health awareness

Mastodon · 22 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Office of Diversity and Inclusion (ODI) held a talk on men’s mental health on Wednesday at the University of Maine. The event was held in the Multicultural Student Center and was an open discussion on men’s relationship with mental health and how participants can better understand and help their friends and male loved ones.

Jon Guzman and Casper Cowan, ODI student leaders, Director Anila Karunakar and Coordinator Taylor Matthew Ashley ran the event. The purpose of this event was to have an open discussion about what men’s mental health means to the individual and how both men and women can help to impact it positively.

A topic discussed at length was the mental health struggles of men in the LGBTQ+ community. Men who identify as other than cisgender or heterosexual are reported to have significantly higher rates of depression, anxiety and suicidal thoughts than other male-identifying persons. This is due in part to the intersectional stigma surrounding the ideology of traditional masculinity compounded with homophobia. This can be exacerbated when religion and culture are also important aspects of the person’s life.'

Here’s why Shannon Watts thinks women are better leaders than men

Mastodon · 23 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shannon Watts never imagined she would one day become an activist, much less a leading voice on run reform in America. In fact, she didn’t realize her activist calling until the age of 41, where at the time she was a stay-at-home mom who had spent 15 years in a completely different industry, public relations.

...

Indeed, when Dayani asked Watts if she should include any men on her initial team, she answered with a resounding no. “She’s like, ‘There’s a reason I started it with Moms Demand Action, women get sh done in ways that no one else does',” Dayani laughed.'

DoD Commends Release of 2023 Women, Peace, and Security Strategy and National Action Plan

Mastodon · 23 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Investing in and establishing a Gender Advisory Workforce by creating Gender Advisor positions across the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Joint Staff, the Military Departments and Services, and the Combatant Commands. These full-time Gender Advisors will promote women's meaningful participation in the U.S. military across DoD Components and in the military and security forces of partner nations.'

Military women face extra trauma. We vets deserve better treatment. (Opinion)

Mastodon · 23 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Particularly for women, transitioning from active duty to veteran is fraught with challenges. You leave what feels like another world, carrying the accolades and wounds of all your military experience with you into the civilian world. There is no longer a structured framework that you must conform to; employment and education seem uncertain. For many women, this can lead to depression and anxiety. It's hard to mold the military side of you back into a civilian. The transition is a process, and you emerge a very different civilian than who you were before active duty.'

OpenAI ditched the only 2 women on its board. So far, it's replacing them with men.

Mastodon · 23 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OpenAI's board is looking very male-heavy right now following Sam Altman's shock return.

The company said in a statement late on Tuesday that Helen Toner and Tasha McCauley, two members of the board that voted to oust Sam Altman on Friday, will step down and be replaced by a new board comprised of ex-Salesforce co-CEO Bret Taylor — the board chair, former treasury secretary Larry Summers, and Adam D'Angelo.

That makes D'Angelo, the CEO of question and answer site Quora, the only survivor of the board that oversaw OpenAI's descent into chaos — which also included Ilya Sutskever who ultimately defected to Altman's side on Monday.'

A novel prison program for pregnant women and their babies

Mastodon · 23 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Minnesota lawmakers passed the Healthy Start Act in 2021. It is believed the state is the first to allow some mothers to live outside of prison with their new babies. A handful of other states, including Indiana and Washington, have nurseries that let incarcerated mothers keep their babies with them inside prison. In most places, a woman who gives birth in jail or prison is separated from her baby within hours or days.

The Department of Corrections oversees Minnesota's program. Deputy Commissioner Safia Khan said the idea was to find ways to "prevent that separation from happening at a very critical time for the development of that newborn baby and to allow for that mother-child bond."'

Study shows that the 'manosphere' community is misusing scientific research to support its beliefs

Mastodon · 23 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Members of the "manosphere" community are misusing academic research to frame and validate their beliefs about women, according to new research led by the University of Kent's School of Anthropology and Conservation.

The research, published by Evolutionary Human Sciences, demonstrates how evolutionary studies about women's behavior (particularly sexual behavior such as infidelity) are being scrutinized by the manosphere online to justify anti-feminist and sexist beliefs. In contrast, research about male sexual behavior is being overlooked, signifying a double standard.

The manosphere is a network of websites, blogs, and online forums promoting masculinity, misogyny, and anti-feminist beliefs. Self-proclaimed misogynist influencer Andrew Tate is a known example of the manosphere community. Involuntary celibates (otherwise known as "incels") are also regarded as members of this community. Awareness of incel culture has been rising among the public in recent years.'

UK: Pupils at single-sex schools encouraged to mix more after sexual abuse campaign

Mastodon · 23 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Single-sex schools have introduced more opportunities for boys to mix with girls in academic settings following calls to tackle misogyny and sexual harassment.

A number of girls' schools have increased their collaboration with local boys' schools to ensure their pupils are not solely coming together at discos.

It comes after the Everyone's Invited movement – a campaign on sexual harassment and abuse launched in 2021 – saw some pupils accuse their schools of not tackling a "rape culture".

Earlier this year, teachers raised concerns that misogynistic views are spreading into schools as a result of social media influencers like Andrew Tate.

At the Girls' Schools Association annual conference near Cirencester in the Cotswolds this week, school leaders discussed misogyny and the influence of the "incel" culture and the "manosphere" community where they communicate.

Carl Howarth, principal of Jersey College for Girls, a private girls' school on the island, told the conference he was concerned about the "deeply sinister spread" of the "manosphere" in society.'

Chess wrongly perceived as a ‘brilliance’ game, leaving girls out: NYU study

Mastodon · 24 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fewer girls play chess competitively because their own parents and coaches hold biases about skills such as “brilliance” that they connect to male players, according to a new study out of New York University.

The researchers said their study, published last month in the Journal of Experimental Psychology, provides “the first large-scale evidence of bias against youth female players” and holds “implications” for the roles parents and mentors play in women entering other male-dominated fields, such as science and technology.'

Global women’s rights groups silent as Israeli women testify about rapes by Hamas

Matt · 24 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I also find this bizarre. I suspect it's due largely to the close affiliation feminist orgs have with Marxist groups. Such groups align with political leftists and such leftists align with Hamas, for inexplicable reasons. So feminist groups that should be screaming to high heaven remain silent. Ironic that one needs to visit an MRM site to see this issue raised. Excerpt:

'As the United Nations promotes an awareness campaign ahead of the International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women on November 25, chilling accounts from survivors and first responders who witnessed Hamas’s October 7 massacre of 1,200 Israelis paint a horrifying picture of systemic sexual assaults perpetrated against women and girls of all ages.

One survivor of the Supernova music festival, where about 360 people were slaughtered, described how she witnessed Hamas terrorists rape an Israeli girl: “As I am hiding, I see in the corner of my eye that [a terrorist] is raping her,” the witness recounted. “They bent her over and I realized they were raping her and simply passing her on to the next [terrorist].”

Yet many feminist and women’s rights organizations worldwide have remained conspicuously silent — and some are even questioning the veracity of the accusations. These denials of the sexual abuse perpetrated by Hamas have far-reaching consequences, including the deterrence of other sexual abuse victims from seeking help.'

Ohio AG’s 'don’t buy sex' statement after arrest of sex worker charged with 4 deaths outrages victim’s family

Mastodon · 25 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Ohio’s top prosecutor announced the arrest of a sex worker accused of drugging and killing four customers, he failed to consider the victims and instead shamed them, the family of one victim said.

"Don’t buy sex in Ohio — it ruins lives and could cost you yours,” Ohio Attorney General Dave Yost said last month in a news release detailing the indictment of serial killing suspect Rebecca Auborn, who was also charged with trying to kill a fifth customer.

Christyn Crockett, 41, a church administrator in the Columbus area and daughter of victim Wayne Akin, called Yost’s comments “devastating.”

"He’s not wrong,” Crockett said in her first interview about her father, a former postal worker who struggled with drug addiction yet provided a “powerful foundation” for his family. “But for the victims’ sake, it’s just so insensitive.”

Crockett’s husband, Ittai Crockett, said that Auborn’s alleged victims may have been breaking the law but that they were still people who “have family, that have grandkids; they have people that care about them.”

"It was just, like, victim-shaming,” he said.

In an interview, Yost said that Akin’s family and the other families are survivors of crime and that he recognized their trauma.'

One of Central Virginia's most arrested women back in court

Mastodon · 27 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The frequently arrested woman whose false rape allegations about a local grocery store manager cost him more than two years behind bars has been arrested again.

...

With 63 arrests, according to a state database, Steiniger is one of the most often arrested people in Central Virginia. One of her recent convictions involved the theft of a nurse's scooter from University of Virginia Medical Center. In February, Charlottesville General District Court Judge Andrew Sneathern accepted her guilty plea to that caught-on-video crime, but he assigned no active jail time and gave her a year to pay restitution to the nurse.

The most extensive criminal case involving Steiniger positioned her as the supposed victim. That was her 2012 claim that she was abducted by a local man who gave her a ride in his car. Mark Lawrence Weiner served more than two years in jail before winning release in 2015 after sworn defense evidence portrayed Steiniger as a fabulist who concocted a tale of rape inside an abandoned house to anger a boyfriend.

Five years ago, federal Judge Norman K. Moon branded Steiniger's testimony "false," but she has never been prosecuted for any crime pertaining to her allegations. Moon dismissed Weiner's wrongful prosecution suit on the basis that government employees cannot be sued.'

Korea's army of senior citizens ready for battle. 'I don't remember the rifles being so heavy'

Matt · 28 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I have another idea: draft women. Or is that too nutty an idea even if the US armed forces insists women make even better soldiers than men? Excerpt:

'Excluding the two women in the group, most of these retirees or near-retirees had undergone South Korea's compulsory military service in their youth. But the decades of rust were showing.

"I don't remember the rifles being so heavy," said 62-year-old Kang Shin-kwang.

As a young conscript four decades ago, Kang was a machine gunner stationed near the border with North Korea. But today, as the sticker pasted to his right breast indicates, he serves in the Senior Army.
...
With the Senior Army assembled behind him in military formation, co-founder Choi Young-jin, a 62-year-old university politics professor, recited the group's oath:

In light of the country's population crisis, we will prepare ourselves so that we may one day be of service in the nation's military reserves.
...
But South Korea's fertility crisis is now complicating its military prowess.

Under current law, all able-bodied South Korean men are required to serve in the military for a period of 18 to 21 months, depending on the branch.

But with South Korean women now giving birth to just 0.78 children over their lifetimes — far short of the 2.1 needed to maintain the current population — the military will soon find itself short on conscripts.

By 2040, according to the Korea Institute for Defense Analyses, a government think tank, the country's active duty force will shrink from 500,000 to 360,000, its reserve force from 3.1 to 1.6 million.'

The challenges for men in mental health and why masculinity isn't the issue

Mastodon · 28 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Speaking with Rob Whitley, PhD, who's an associate professor in the Department of Psychiatry at McGill University, it's clear why some men find it hard to take care of their mental health and get help.

The roadblocks are often due to outside factors, and the stigma around the topic is still prevalent in society.
...
The word "masculinity" can evoke negative connotations, perhaps due to its associations with the idea of toxic masculinity.

Masculinity, at its core, is a good thing, according to Whitley.

Whitley says that one of the ideas put out by the academy, not by psychiatric experts, is that one of the reasons for men's mental health issues is that some men adhere to traditional masculinity norms, and that is bad for their health.

The research shows that isn't true, according to Whitley.

"Research shows that traditional masculinity is actually good for your mental health."
...
Another problem Whitley has been engaged with is how the media interfaces with mental health, particularly the way it presents men's mental health.

Whitley says that one study he was involved in looked at mainstream media articles related to mental illness, and they found an interesting gender difference.

When looking at stories about women and mental illness, there were more "scenes of compassion and understanding and a need for more services and support."

On the other hand, when looking at stories about mental illness related to men, there were more themes of crime and violence.

"This actually matches a well-known phenomenon called the gender empathy gap."'

Contributions of men need to be recognised

Mastodon · 28 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'November 19 was International Men's Day. To men of all walks of life, you are appreciated and valued. While some may argue that there is no need for such a day, I am of the firm belief you are worthy of mention.

It is deeply troubling when the challenges faced by men, such as mental health issues and high suicide rates, are plaguing our land. Dedicating a day to raising awareness about these social ills can encourage conversations about how we can better support our men in their personal journeys.

International Men's Day has significantly provided an opportunity to challenge harmful stereotypes surrounding masculinity. Traditional gender roles place unrealistic expectations on men, forcing them to conform to certain behaviours or attitudes. This can lead to feelings of isolation or inadequacy when they are unable to meet these standards.

As the much-vaunted hegemonic masculinity is defined by tenets of strength, assertiveness, dominance, stoicism and competitiveness, there is a common misconception that men should exude these characteristics without experiencing vulnerabilities. Such imprudence, esotericism and enormity bring about some concerns, and we must ensure male-specific issues are addressed and not under-represented.'

China athletes as young as seven in military training to 'create iron army'

Matt · 28 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Compelling minors to engage in military training is child abuse. I wonder why people don't so much as flinch if the victims are boys. Excerpt:

'Hundreds of athletes as young as seven are undergoing military training in Shanghai designed to instill discipline and "good fighting ability", the Chinese city said.

The athletes will "deeply study" the Chinese military's "sense of standards and combat spirit", Shanghai's sports bureau said.

Chinese football teams have previously undergone similar training, which is largely performative and part of a wider campaign to promote Communist Party values.'

Australia: Controversy around boys schools going co-ed to address ‘toxic masculinity’

Mastodon · 29 November 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Sky News host Chris Kenny says the “single-sex school debate” has raised its head in Sydney due to some boys schools going co-ed.

“This single-sex school debate, it’s raised its head in Sydney lately because of a couple big boys school going co-ed,” Mr Kenny said.

“Controversy around that, I know the same has happened in Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane, this is a debate raging around the country.

“It’s all the boys schools that have to let girls in to address the toxic masculinity apparently.”

Mr Kenny sat down with Psychiatrist Doctor Tanveer Ahmed and Child and Adolescent Psychologist Clare Rowe to discuss the push for co-ed schools.'

Pope Francis asks theologians to ‘demasculinize’ the church

Matt · 1 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Interesting. The long-running debate over the role of women in the more conservative Chrisian churches looks like it's taking off. Personally, I have mixed feelings on the issue but don't lose sleep over it. Excerpt:

'Speaking to members of the International Theological Commission at the Vatican on Thursday (Nov. 30), Pope Francis asked theologians to “demasculinize” the church in an unscripted remark.

“There is something I don’t like about you, if you excuse my honesty,” said Pope Francis, pointing out that there were only five women among the 30-plus theologians. “We need to move forward on this! Women have a way of reflecting on theology that is different from us men,” he added.
...
The pope’s words on Thursday underlined “the need to increase the space given to women in positions of authority and decision-making in the Christian community, in order to treasure the sensibility and intelligence that is typical of the feminine genius and experience,” Coda told Religion News Service.

Women have always been important in the church, the theologian said, but “it’s time for this to become part of the culture” to address modern challenges and the “male-dominated view that still exists in the church and in society.”
...
“The church is woman,” Francis told the theologians, “and if we cannot understand what a woman is, what is the theology of women, we will never understand the church. One of the great sins we have witnessed is ‘masculinizing’ the church.”'

Feminist icon Gloria Steinem on 'lethal' desire to control wombs

Matt · 2 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ah, ol' Gloria. Still managing to ignore men's real concerns too even at 89. Never worried a day about being drafted and sent to die for political purposes, among other things. Excerpt:

'During the 1970s, Gloria Steinem was one of the main voices campaigning for women's reproductive rights.

She celebrated the US Supreme Court's 1973 ruling in the case of Roe v Wade, which granted women the constitutional right to abortion.

Nearly half a century later she witnessed the reversal of this decision - the Supreme Court's historic ruling in June last year that ended the nationwide right to abortion.

...

For Steinem and other pro-choice activists it was a stark reminder of the need to keep campaigning, to achieve changes she says she hopes to see in her lifetime.

"The most obvious and simplest [change] is that we can determine the fate of our own physical selves, so we can decide whether and when to have children, not to have children… whatever it is about our physical selves.

"That's where our difficulty begins, because we happen to have wombs and there is a desire to control wombs that is very central to authoritarian systems. Clearly, because we have a womb and men don't, the desire to control the womb is often the most lethal kind of effort."'

Society's war on men

Mastodon · 2 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We must begin to grapple with the uncomfortable fact that in today's world, simply "[b]eing male is the biggest risk factor for suicide." Many have argued that if men would be more open about their feelings the problem might be mitigated. Perhaps. But if men are biologically disinclined to talk about their feelings, then that cannot be the sole solution. If the so-called "social construct" of masculinity is actually derived from men's biology or the sex differences in cerebral anatomy, as psychologist John Barry has argued, then urging them to go against it might prove to be counterproductive.

Far too often, John Mac Ghlionn argues, we are using "a female model to treat men's mental health."

"There was a time when the American Psychological Association (APA), the organization responsible for accrediting psychologists in the U.S., appeared open to the idea of 'male-based depression,'" he noted. "Unfortunately, not long after, the 'sex is a construct' narrative started gaining traction, and the APA began denying that differences between the sexes actually exist."'

Unmarried Ontario couple had no children and no house but man must still pay support, appeal court rules

Matt · 2 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Dated but still very relevant. Short version: LTRs in Ontario are dangerous for men. Excerpt:

'A wealthy businessman will have to pay more than $50,000 a month in spousal support for 10 years to a woman with whom he had a long-term romantic relationship even though they kept separate homes and had no children together, Ontario's top court has ruled.

Under Ontario law, an unmarried couple are considered common-law spouses if they have cohabited — lived together in a conjugal relationship — continuously for at least three years. But that doesn't necessarily mean living in the same home, the court found.

"Lack of a shared residence is not determinative of the issue of cohabitation," the Appeal Court said. "There are many cases in which courts have found cohabitation where the parties stayed together only intermittently."

The decision comes in the case of Lisa Climans and Michael Latner, both of Toronto, who began a romantic relationship after meeting in October 2001. At the time, she was 38 and separated with two children, court records show. He was 46 and divorced with three children.'

Tampa woman allegedly posed as 14-year-old to molest middle schoolers

Matt · 2 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Bet she gets probation. Excerpt:

'A Florida woman pretended to be a 14-year-old homeschooled child to prey on middle schoolers for sex, police announced Friday.

Alyssa Ann Zinger, 22, was arrested last week for allegedly engaging in at least 30 sexual acts with at least one student and sending explicit videos to several more.

Zinger allegedly crafted her fake persona and communicated with her victims on social media platforms, mainly Snapchat, according to a search warrant obtained by the Tampa Bay Times.

The New York Post reported that multiple victims, who attended Wilson Middle School in Tampa's Hyde Park neighborhood, told police they believed the Zinger was their age but was homeschooled.'

Brooklyn charter schools aims to redefine masculinity with inaugural men’s summit

Mastodon · 3 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'A charter school in Brooklyn is aiming to challenge students and change the conversation about masculinity. For the first time, Brooklyn Lab Charter School is kicking off an inaugural men’s summit that will tackle educating young men on how they can become allies in issues of equality and violence. News 12’s Elly Morillo spoke with organizers on why this workshop could potentially change the narrative and stereotypes these young students may face.'

Pittsburgh's percentage of female firefighters falls well short of national average, audit shows

Mastodon · 3 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Among the issues with the physical exam was the use of a self-contained breathing apparatus (SCBA) during testing. While that is what firefighters are expected to carry while in the field, “it is both very awkward to carry and not readily available to practice with before the exam.”

It also examined how few women make it from the application process to career firefighter.

In 2021, 406 applicants to the bureau finished the written exam, 6.7% of whom were female. Of those who passed the written exam, 283 completed the physical exam — about 5.3% were women.

Of those 283, 210 made the civil service eligibility list. The other 73 either failed or chose not to continue in the process. Of the 210 who moved on, only 1.9% were women.

“Starting with 5.3% of applicants being female for the physical exam and ending with 1.9% of the female applicants making the eligibility list represents a loss of 64.2%,” the audit pointed out.'

UK motor industry unveils ambitious gender diversity targets

Mastodon · 3 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leading automotive companies in the United Kingdom have committed to ensuring that women constitute 30% of their workforce within the next six years to achieve better gender diversity across all roles and levels.

The initiative, spearheaded by the Automotive Council, whose members account for 99% of British vehicle manufacturing and half of the nation's automotive workforce, addresses the current gender disparity as women make up just under 20% of the sector's workforce.'

'Skin in the Game' Anti-Circumcision Campaign

DanBollinger · 4 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Press Release here. Excerpt:

Parents in the U.S. lack a basic understanding of the dangers of circumcision and what the surgical procedure actually entails, according to a new national survey conducted by Intact America, the nation's leading anti-circumcision group. This month, Intact America is launching a new advocacy campaign, "Skin in the Game: Circumcision Cuts Through Us All" to show how circumcision negatively impacts the lives of so many Americans.

Woman who stabbed boyfriend 108 times is a 'do-gooding, mentally well' girl ... according to psychiatrist testimony

Mastodon · 5 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is an unimaginably gruesome crime: an example of human violence at its most extreme.

In May 2018, Bryn Spejcher of Thousand Oaks, California, picked up a bread knife and stabbed her new boyfriend 108 times — killing him — before turning the blade on her dog.

The 32-year-old, who worked as an audiologist, then proceeded to stab herself — only stopping when police hit her nine times with a baton.

On Friday, Spejcher was convicted of killing her boyfriend — Chad O'Melia, then 26 — and awaits sentencing.

However, testimony from an expert witness called by the prosecution, seen exclusively by DailyMail.com, paints a vastly different picture of the perpetrator than the story would initially suggest.

Forensic psychiatrist and expert witness Dr Kris Mohandie told the jury last month that Spejcher was a 'normal' girl with 'no history of mental illness or violence' who was committed to 'doing good' in the world.
...
Spejcher was convicted of manslaughter on Friday over the death of Chad O'Melia — a sentence which carries up to four years in prison. Spejcher sobbed quietly as the jury read out its verdict in court.'

UK: Menopausal offenders could be spared jail under new sentencing guidelines

Mastodon · 5 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Menopausal female offenders could be spared jail under new sentencing guidelines for judges and magistrates.

The Sentencing Council, which advises the Government and courts, has set out new guidelines encouraging courts to consider more rehabilitative community sentences rather than sending people to jail for short terms.

The council said judges and magistrates should think more about sentences that are proven to reform offenders and think twice about jailing younger women because of the impact on children and older women because of the menopause.

The council is proposing to include guidance to magistrates and judges to consider the impact of the menopause on the behaviour of women typically aged between 45 and 55.'

STEM gender gap shows no signs of closing with Gen Z

Mastodon · 5 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender disparity in pursuing STEM careers persists among young people ranging from tweens to recent grads, new data shows.

Why it matters: Like their older counterparts, girls aren't warming to STEM, as diversity in the field is critical for representative and responsible advancements — and despite efforts designed to boost their participation.

More 12- to 26-year-old boys and men were interested in pursuing STEM careers than girls and women, who expressed a high lack of confidence in their abilities, per Gallup-Walton Family Foundation Survey data released Tuesday.'

When inequality is fatal for men

Mastodon · 5 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Whether ironically or cynically, progressives can be conservative and hidebound in their assumptions about inequality: They presume that whoever was more-than-equal in the past must still be privileged today, and so the one kind of inequality that doesn't prick the progressive conscience is whatever harms groups that were formerly better off.
...
Then again, the last thing men need is to be designated as another victim group.

Right now, the very concept of manhood is under attack from two directions: from those on the left who see masculinity as inherently "toxic" and those on the right who idolize the likes of Andrew Tate—overgrown adolescent hedonists without an ounce of self-control, let alone any traditionally manly moral responsibilities for family or others.

If life is unfair to men, the masculine remedy is not to complain about unfairness but to be tough enough, and mature enough, to endure and prosper despite inequality.'

Former orthopedic surgeon takes on Jefferson in federal court over sexual assault allegations

Mastodon · 5 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a federal civil trial this week, a former Rothman Orthopaedic Institute surgeon is claiming that Thomas Jefferson University engaged in male-gender discrimination when it investigated a female medical resident's allegations that he raped her after a booze-fueled pool party at his Main Line home.

John Abraham, an orthopedic oncology surgeon and a former Jefferson professor, says Jefferson failed to investigate his allegations that he was also a victim. He claims that Jefferson's leadership ignored his assertion that then-medical resident Jessica Phillips got him drunk at his June 2018 party and forced herself on him. Instead, Jefferson leaders told him that they believed he would be found responsible, says Abraham, who is seeking at least $5 million in damages from Jefferson for financial losses and professional harm suffered.'

Hamas raped men as well as women during October 7 attack

Matt · 5 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Israeli investigators probing the fallout of the brutal October 7 attacks have found evidence that men as well as women suffered sexual violence and rape at the hands of Hamas and Islamic Jihad attackers, activists have claimed.

Yael Sherer, a spokeswoman for Israel's Survivors of Sexual Violence advocacy group, said there was physical evidence as well as eyewitness accounts of sexual violence perpetrated against both sexes amid the attacks.

'There was sexual violence and rape in these communities in the south of Israel... we have a few living survivors - not a lot - of both genders. It didn't only happen to women, it happened to men as well,' she told BBC Radio 4.

'Aside from finding bodies of people who were murdered, a lot of the bodies were mutilated... terrorists made sure to disgrace these people and dishonor them,' she added.'

Does a cap on boys' sports mean equal treatment? Sioux Falls district officials won't say

Mastodon · 7 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since a cap on boys sports was made public last week, officials with the Sioux Falls School District have refused to answer specific questions about whether Title IX's requirement for equal treatment in sports also means capping student participation numbers.

The Sioux Falls School District and its Board of Education won't say whether board members knew about the decision to start capping boys' sports before it was brought up during public comment time at last week's board meeting.

And district officials haven't answered why the decision was made by administration instead of by the school board. They also haven't cited what policy allows the district to supersede its board in such a decision, which affects the budget board members passed in July.'

No White (ie, White Male) Faculty Allowed

Matt · 7 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not just white, but white and male. "Male" is the additional unspoken criteria. Excerpt:

'A recent internal investigation into faculty hiring at the University of Washington reveals the exhaustive efforts that universities make to discriminate against white job applicants. After the university's Department of Psychology identified a white candidate as best qualified for a tenure-track professor position in early 2023, the department's Diversity Advisory Committee pressured the hiring committee to re-rank candidates in accordance with the methodology laid out in an internal handbook titled "Promising Practices for Increasing Equity in Faculty Searches" so that a black woman would receive the job instead. This handbook, obtained by the National Association of Scholars, spells out how to exclude candidates of undesirable races and ensure that candidates of preferred races get hired.'

UK: Jail, but Only for White Men

Mastodon · 7 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In radical plans, the Sentencing Council for England and Wales (the body tasked with advising the judiciary on sentencing criminals fairly and consistently) is suggesting that judges and magistrates eschew short-term jail sentences in favour of more rehabilitative community orders. The consultation, published on Wednesday and running until February 2024, proposes a major revision to the imposition of community and custodial sentences guidelines, which date back to 2017—specifically, that unpaid work or drug treatment programmes should be handed down in lieu of prison time.

...

The report gives particular attention to women, and argues that those who are pregnant, have dependents, and are either menopausal or aged between 45-55, should be spared jail time wherever possible. To support its case, the consultation cites the impressive disparity between reoffending rates—illustrating that female criminals were markedly less likely to reoffend when cautioned (12.1%), as opposed to those who were given a custodial sentence (56.1%). Even if one were on board with such plans, women are the tip of the iceberg when it comes to the 'special cases' under consideration.'

Debunking the myth of steady male employment

Mastodon · 7 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steady employment has long been the assumed standard associated with the American man, especially by the baby boomer generation. New research is pushing back on the archetype and shedding light on the potential consequences of upholding the “breadwinner” ideology in a labor market in which reality is strikingly different.

In work recently published in Socius, researchers at Penn State and Ohio University Heritage College of Osteopathic Medicine found that only 41% of baby boomer men who were studied followed a trajectory of continuous high employment over the duration of their prime earning years. Instead, most men in the study followed less stable employment paths that included increasing unemployment, time out of work but not seeking employment due to personal reasons or periods of intermittent work.'

White knighting in the recent GOP debate

Matt · 8 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the debate, Christie furiously defended fellow GOP candidate Nikki Haley, the former U.N. ambassador, after she was attacked by Ramaswamy onstage.

'It's not me forming an alliance with Nikki Haley,' Christie told CNN's Dana Bash.

'Look, I am a truth teller, Dana. And I am going to tell the truth. If someone is insulting Nikki Haley in a way that was personal. It was nothing about issues. He said she is not smart enough to know where things on the map, that somehow his 3-year-old son is smarter than a woman who served as a two-term governor and U.N. Ambassador.'

He argued that he defended her because she is an 'accomplished woman and worked incredibly hard both in South Carolina and in the U.N.'

'And I think that Vivek does have a woman problem,' the ex-governor said. 'I do think he insults women's basic intelligence. He has done it over and over and over again. And I guess tonight I just had had enough. I had enough of listening to his garbage.'

Christie had knocked Ramaswamy's 'smart*ss Harvard mouth' and did so again during his time on CNN.'

Men now face more hiring discrimination than women

Matt · 8 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Variations of the familiar quip, “Women have to be twice as good to go half as far,” date back to the early 20th century. This sentiment was true enough in its day, but a lot has changed in the generations since. While women have not reached parity with men in all ways, men have fallen behind women — in some cases far behind — in many domains, including in grade school, all levels of higher education and academia, and “adulting” (e.g., living with parents). As college degrees translate into higher-paying jobs, women now outearn men in several US cities — a trend that will likely continue as the credential gap widens.

Meanwhile, evidence of anti-male discrimination is accumulating. Research shows that people prefer scientific findings that portray females in a positive light over science that portrays men in a positive light. People also have more sympathy for females than males, punish men more severely than women for the same infractions, and evaluate women more favorably than they do men. And when it comes to the widely feared and supposedly pernicious “implicit bias”, that too favors women.'

“A White Male Would Probably Already Be Gone”

Matt · 12 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, journalist Christopher Brunet and I broke a story examining evidence that strongly suggests that Harvard president Claudine Gay plagiarized multiple sections of her Ph.D. dissertation, according to Harvard’s own academic integrity policies. One of the scholars that Gay used material from in at least two instances was Carol Swain, who has served as a professor at Princeton and Vanderbilt. Swain is also known as one of America’s most prominent black conservatives and has published scholarly work criticizing race-based preferences and affirmative action.

This morning, I spoke with Swain, who said that she saw “a clear pattern of what one would consider plagiarism in Dr. Gay’s thesis” and called into question Gay’s continued service as Harvard’s president. The following transcript has been lightly edited for length and clarity.

...

Christopher Rufo: What are your thoughts about the Claudine Gay plagiarism accusations?

Carol Swain: What is bothering me is not just that there’s passages she didn’t put in quotation marks. When I look at her work, I feel like her whole research agenda, her whole career, was based on my work. It bothers me because I know that my work was a big deal in the early 1990s. And I started falling out of favor in 1995 when I started criticizing race-based affirmative action. I thought affirmative action should be means-tested and race-neutral. When I started putting those ideas out, that’s when I started falling out of favor and getting labeled as a conservative, even while I was a Democrat, and blacks started attacking me, calling me a “sellout.”

...

Swain: The board of trustees needs to deal with those issues. They need to apply the same standards to her as they would apply to a white person under the same circumstances.

Rufo: And under these circumstances, what do you think would happen to a white person?

Swain: A white male would probably already be gone.'

Why White Men Resist IE&D Training and Initiatives

Mastodon · 13 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"The largest demographic group I've trained in 30+ years of DE&I consulting has been white males," said Eric Ellis, president and CEO of Integrity Development in Cincinnati. "I've gained valuable insights from them, including an understanding of key factors that often make them feel excluded from DE&I conversations." These include:

- Addressing bias: "Why am I the only one expected to acknowledge my biases when everyone has them?"
- Stereotyping: Expressing frustration about being generalized as the "stereotypical white man" who doesn't value IE&D and whose career success is solely attributed to their race and gender.
- Lack of advocacy and support: Being concerned that IE&D advocates rarely stand up for them when they experience discrimination in the workplace based on their identity or characteristics.'

UK: ‘Non-diverse’ candidates are not hired without my sign off, says Aviva boss Amanda Blanc

Matt · 15 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amanda Blanc, the chief executive of Aviva, has said all senior white male recruits must get final sign-off from her as part of a diversity drive to stamp out sexism in the financial services industry.

Ms Blanc, who became Aviva’s first female chief executive in 2020, told a parliamentary committee that there was “no non-diverse hire at Aviva without it being signed off by me and the chief people officer”.

She said: “Not because I don’t trust my team but [because] I want to make sure that the process followed for that recruitment has been diverse, has been properly done and is not just a phone call to a mate saying, ‘would you like a job, pop up and we’ll fix it up for you’.”'

Genital Cutting as Gender Oppression: Time to Revisit the WHO Paradigm

Matt · 15 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In response to these concerns, scholars of genital cutting have increasingly undertaken a more comprehensive, cross-cultural and cross-sex comparative approach, particularly in the last several years. For example, in a recent publication, a large group of scholars from diverse countries, cultures, and disciplinary backgrounds highlighted the following shared aspects of non-therapeutic female, male, and intersex child genital cutting (FGC, MGC, and IGC, respectively), that seemed to them to be morally—and perhaps also legally—relevant:

they are all (1) medically unnecessary acts of (2) genital cutting that are (3) overwhelmingly performed on young children (4) on behalf of norms, beliefs, or values that may not be the child's own and which the child may not adopt when of age. Indeed, such norms, beliefs, or values are often controversial in the wider society and hence prone to reevaluation upon later reflection or exposure to other points of view (e.g., the belief that a child's body must conform to a strict gender binary; that surgery is an appropriate means of pursuing hygiene; that one's genitals must be symbolically purified before one can be fully accepted; and so on). In this, they constitute painful intrusions into the “private parts” of the most vulnerable members of society, despite being [of] contested value overall (BCBI, 2019) (p. 21).'

Narcissists may engage in feminist activism to satisfy their grandiose tendencies, study suggests

Matt · 15 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. To be fair, this may be applicable to a lot or even all cause-related movements in general. I've noticed in such groups there are those there for the gospel, then there's those there for themselves. Excerpt:

'A recent study has found that individuals with higher levels of narcissistic traits are more likely to be involved in feminist activism. This research suggests that for some, activism may serve not just as a platform for societal change, but also as a means to fulfill personal, egocentric needs. The findings have been published in Current Psychology.

The study was inspired by the idea that while many engage in activism for altruistic reasons or due to direct personal impact by the issues at hand, others might be motivated by less noble desires, such as the fulfillment of narcissistic needs. This notion aligns with the concept that activism can be used as a vehicle for individuals to achieve personal gains, such as attention, status, or fame.'

UK: Hormone-free contraceptive pill for men being trialed

Matt · 16 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pre-clinical studies have found YCT-529 is "99% effective and 100% reversible, with no side effects", according to experts at its manufacturer, YourChoice Therapeutics, based in San Francisco.

The new hormone-free drug is being tested by 16 British men, with the initial trial phase conducted by Nottingham-based drug development company, Quotient Sciences.

Men are currently limited to using condoms or having a vasectomy to prevent unwanted pregnancies, while women can choose from the pill, coil, contraceptive injection and female condoms or diaphragms.'

Froma Harrop: Blaming white men for problems is political stupidity

Mastodon · 17 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An effective way of handing elections to right-wing Republicans is to label large blocs of voters as wrong by virtue of their gender, race, ethnicity, age. Those are physical characteristics, not walking opinions.

Yet this self-destructive habit is routinely practiced by some on the left, especially the feminist left. They casually cite "white men" as the reason reproductive rights are under attack.
...
Arguing a position based on the holder's race, gender or age isn't just dumb politically. It's no argument at all.'

Young men just more interested in STEM fields, poll finds

Matt · 18 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young men are more interested in science and technology careers than young women even though both equally report receiving opportunities and encouragement to enter STEM fields, a new Gallup survey found.

The poll by Gallup and the Walton Family Foundation found that 85 percent of young men ages 12 to 26 are interested in physical science, technology, engineering, or math careers. In contrast, 63 percent of young women said the same.

“Women make up half of the total college-educated workforce in the U.S. but only 34% of the workforce in science, technology, engineering and math sectors,” according to Gallup.

The poll comes amid a wealth of programs aimed at encouraging more girls to study STEM fields and research exploring why so few do.'

Wanting to hire ‘fewer white men’ for a job is not discrimination

Mastodon · 20 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wanting to hire “fewer white men” for a job is not discrimination, a tribunal has ruled.

Chris Palmer was turned down from an £80,000 post at a financial services company, who instead opted to hire a woman, after he was told at his job interview the company wanted to hire fewer white men.

At an employment tribunal, the candidate said his failure to get the position as head of HR was based on his ethnicity and gender following the remark from Michael Jones, the managing director.

However the panel dismissed his claims – ruling it was not “indicative of an intention to discriminate” when an employer mentioned its aim to improve diversity in its workforce.'

Using Sexism & Racism to ‘Improve Diversity’

Mastodon · 20 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While it may once have been scandalous for employers to exclude white men from their recruitment process, fast forward to 2023 and most hiring panels appear to have decided it’s riskier to include them. Infuriated by the failure of equality to produce equal outcomes, our liberal culture demands a bogeyman, and in the straight, white male, it found the pantomime villain of its dreams. Whatever your grievance, the patriarchy will shoulder the blame because any alternative culprit is simply too ‘offensive’ to countenance—no matter how well the facts support their claim.

...

The premise used to inculcate and justify the war on white men is the lie of white privilege, currently being pushed in schools under the umbrella of Critical Race Theory (CRT). This lie asserts that white men are both uniquely privileged, and uniquely evil. Neither, of course, are true. In terms of privilege, Chinese and Indian workers out-earn their white British counterparts by almost £10,000 a year, while in terms of academic performance, working-class white males are the poorest performing demographic (it must be all that misogyny slowing them down). Meanwhile, even the most cursory analysis of crime in Britain demonstrates that, if anything, white men are underrepresented in criminal activity, unless one insists on pretending not to understand ‘per capita.’

DEI under siege: Why more businesses are being accused of ‘reverse discrimination’

Mastodon · 21 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He has accused Macy’s of discriminating against white men. McDonald’s and IBM, too. Even NASCAR – a mostly white sport that banned confederate flags in 2020 – is in his sights.

Some two dozen complaints have been leveled by Stephen Miller, a senior White House adviser in the Trump administration.

Emboldened by a Supreme Court ruling last summer striking down affirmative action in education, Miller and his conservative advocacy organization America First Legal have taken the position that all DEI programs are illegal, embracing “reverse discrimination,” a concept that first emerged in the 1970s as a backlash to 1960s-era civil rights laws to fix racial disparities in the workplace.'

Company's 'pattern of eliminating white males' supports reverse bias award, judges say

Mastodon · 21 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A U.S. appeals court panel on Thursday sounded likely to mostly uphold a $4 million award for a white male former healthcare executive who claimed he was fired so the company could further its diversity goals.

A three-judge 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals panel in Richmond, Virginia heard arguments in an appeal by hospital operator Novant Health Inc, which claims former senior vice president David Duvall's lack of leadership skills, and not his race or sex, led to his termination.

The appeal comes as corporate diversity initiatives are facing increased scrutiny and legal challenges, largely from conservative groups who say they amount to unlawful bias against white and male workers.

Two 4th Circuit judges at Thursday's argument signaled that Novant was unlikely to convince them to overturn the jury's finding that the company had engaged in discrimination.

Circuit Judges A. Marvin Quattlebaum and G. Steven Agee cited evidence that six other white executives were fired around the same time as Duvall, who was replaced by a Black woman, that Duvall's Black supervisor received lower performance scores than Duvall but kept his job, and that Novant could not produce any documentation to back up its stated reasons for firing him.

"The jury's entitled to look at these things and come to a reasonable conclusion ... that there's a pattern of eliminating white males in order to accommodate another group," Quattlebaum said to Novant's lawyer, Stephen Cox.

Duvall was fired in 2018 after Novant adopted a plan to make its workforce more reflective of the communities it serves. He sued in 2019, accusing the North Carolina-based of race and sex discrimination in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.'

Why Young Men Are Turning Against Feminism

Mastodon · 22 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The rising rejection of feminism among young men is almost certainly linked to growing feelings that American society has become more hostile to men. In 2019, less than one-third of young men reported that men experienced some or a lot of discrimination in American society. Only four years later, close to half (45 percent) of young men now believe men are facing gender-based discrimination. For some young men, feminism has morphed from a commitment to gender equality to an ideology aimed at punishing men. That leads to predictable results, like half of men agreeing with the statement, “These days society seems to punish men just for acting like men.”'

NYT Critic Takes Aim at Kids' Shows 'Bluey' and 'Chip Chilla' for Having 'Weirdly Present' Fathers

Mastodon · 22 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Popular kids cartoon Bluey and the Daily Wire's Chip Chilla are in the crosshairs of a New York Times writer for apparently having 'weirdly present' fathers.

You can't make this stuff up.

Critic Amanda Hess wrote a piece for the outlet headlined, "The Fantasy of the Fun TV Dad."

She pondered how Bandit, the 'exceptional' father in Bluey, has time to be a fun dad while holding a job and still having time to cheerfully do house chores, including laundry. LOL:

I don't know how he keeps house, works as an archaeologist and serves as a full-time prop artist to his daughters, but he does it all while only feigning complaint. He is not only a good father — he is a fantasy, one crafted to appeal to adults as much as to children.'

Beauty queen charged in ex-NFL hubby's Bahamas murder plot allowed to return home for holidays

Mastodon · 22 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge gave Lindsay Shiver an early Christmas gift by letting her leave the Bahamas to visit her children and family in Alabama for the holidays.

Shiver is out on bail but not allowed to leave the Bahamas, where she allegedly planned to hire a hitman to kill her husband, Robert Shiver, during a contentious divorce.

The Bahamian judge ruled Thursday that the former beauty queen could travel back to the United States, with specific conditions, despite Robert's plea during the hearing that he is "thankful to be alive" after the alleged murder plot.

Lindsay's lawyer argued his client is a "single housewife with no source of income" and is living off money stashed away by her parents, Court TV reported.'

Pearl explains why men will always lose in modern marriage

Matt · 23 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Pearl uses her whiteboard to explain why modern marriage is a losing proposition for men these days.

Nigeria: Paternity fraud: Shocking revelations as more couples embrace DNA testing

Mastodon · 23 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr Olanrewaju (surname withheld) rubbed both eyes with the back of his hands. He was not sure what he saw as the truth.

“How can four of the kids who call me father not be mine?” he wondered.

After secretly conducting a deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) test to confirm his first son’s paternity at the DCC DNA Diagnostic Centre in Osogbo, Osun State, he received the shock of his life.

Sharing his story in tears on a radion station in Ibadan, Oyo State, the 44-year-old Osun State indigene said his wife, whom he married in 2007, brought another man’s children for him to father.

The children who are 16, 12, eight, and five years old were tested after Olanrewaju discovered what he termed ‘promiscuous moves’ from his wife.'

Florida woman who raped her autistic brother-in-law and had his baby claimed she was the victim: sheriff

Mastodon · 23 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A deranged Florida woman has been charged with allegedly raping her autistic brother-in-law over the course of a decade — and giving birth to his child, according to authorities.

Amanda Rose Brooks was arrested on Dec. 7 by US Marshals in Orlando and charged with sexual battery and lying to authorities that she had been the victim of sexual assault in the Lower Keys, according to the Monroe County Sheriff's Office and arrest records.

In June 2022, Brooks, 36, reached out to the Sheriff's Office, claiming she had been repeatedly sexually assaulted by her husband and his brother, The Keys Citizen reported, citing an arrest warrant.

In addition to sharing a list of times and dates detailing assaults, Brooks gave investigators screenshots of messages with friends depicting her as the victim of abuse and claiming that she had been harassed by her husband's family for having left with her children.'

'Two-Parent Privilege' author sounds alarm on concerning marriage trend's impact on children

Matt · 23 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The marriage rate will go up when the penalty men pay for being married goes away. The implicit and explicit terms of marriage for men must change or the rate will continue to decline. Excerpt:

'One author is explaining why the ultimate privilege is being born into a two-parent household and why the decline in marriage should cause concern.

"This is something as an economic matter, not as a value-laden or moral proposition we should all be really concerned about," Melissa Kearney stressed during her appearance on Fox News Thursday.

The "Two-Parent Privilege," author and economist suggests that the decline of two-parent households is driving "class gaps in kids' opportunities, experiences and household resources."'

Fewer young men are in college, especially at 4-year schools

Matt · 23 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College enrollment among young Americans has been declining gradually over the past decade. In 2022, the total number of 18- to 24-year-olds enrolled in college was down by approximately 1.2 million from its peak in 2011.

Most of the decline is due to fewer young men pursuing college. About 1 million fewer young men are in college but only 0.2 million fewer young women. As a result, men make up 44% of young college students today, down from 47% in 2011, according to newly released U.S. Census Bureau data.

This shift is driven entirely by the falling share of men who are students at four-year colleges. Today, men represent only 42% of students ages 18 to 24 at four-year schools, down from 47% in 2011.'

Unveiling Paths: MRA, MGTOW, and Red Pill Perspectives on the System

Matt · 25 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the intricate landscape of contemporary societal discussions (the manosphere), the perspectives encapsulated by MRA, MGTOW, and the RedPill movement stand as distinct navigational markers. Each ideology signifies a unique approach to the system, representing a spectrum of viewpoints that range from reformist to revolutionary. As we delve into the intricacies of these ideologies, we invite you to explore the nuanced paths these movements advocate.'

Why So Many Young Men Are Abandoning College Degrees

Matt · 28 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention of the anti-male hostility on college campuses. Excerpt:

'A large number of men are forgoing college, leading to an alarming gap between university-educated men and women, a new study found.

The Pew Research Center discovered a large drop in male Hispanic high school graduates turning away from four-year colleges. While 42 percent were in attendance in 2011, the number fell to 33 percent in 2022.

White males had a substantial drop, as well. While 49 percent attended college in 2011, the number moved to 40 percent in 2022. The gap was significant for white high school graduates, as female white graduates were the most likely to enroll in college, at 50 percent.
...
In part, the migration of young men away from college can be explained by a growing and widespread skepticism over higher education and the high student debt it often leads to, experts said.'

56 French Stars Denounce Gerard Depardieu Rape Allegations as ‘Lynching’

Mastodon · 28 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The open letter published in Le Figaro, a conservative-leaning daily French newspaper, includes signatures from French figures like Carl Bruni, Charlotte Rampling, and Carole Bousquet – Depardieu’s former romantic partner. As many as two dozen women signed the letter, most of whom were of the actor’s generation.

“Gérard Depardieu is probably the greatest actor,” the letter stated. “We can no longer remain silent in the face of the lynching that fell upon him, in the face of the torrent of hatred that pours down on his person, without nuance, in the most complete amalgamation and in defiance of a presumption of innocence of which he would have benefited, like everyone else, if he were not the giant of cinema that he is.”

Last week, none other than French President Emmanuel Macron came to Depardieu’s aid, referring to the allegations as a “witch hunt.” He also rejected calls to strip the actor of his Legion of Honour medal.

“I am a great admirer of Gérard Depardieu,” Macron said on the French talk show C à Vous. “As president of the republic and as a citizen, I say he makes France proud.”

As noted by TheWrap, the acclaimed actor has been facing “several accusations of sexually inappropriate behavior.”'

UK: Princess Kate champions the importance of fathers in children's early years

Matt · 30 December 2023 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Princess of Wales is set to turn her attention to the importance of fathers in children's early years.

Kate has met a number of fathers' groups amid plans to raise awareness about the role men play at the beginning of youngsters' lives.

She has consulted experts in the sector to find out how best to highlight the issue, as well as how to attract more fathers to parenting groups and support their mental health.

Research by the princess's Royal Foundation Centre for Early Childhood found that only 19 per cent of the population could identify the period between pregnancy and the age of five as the most important for shaping a child's future. While one in four women did, this was matched by only 14 per cent of men.'

California woman brought guns and 'down payment' to meet 'hitman,' have husband killed in bitter divorce

Matt · 2 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A California equestrian whose bitter divorce threatened to end her lavish West Coast lifestyle pleaded guilty to a failed murder-for-hire plot targeting her wealthy, estranged husband in a surprise plea deal, according to local media.

San Diego police arrested Tatyana Remley, 42, in August after she brought three guns and a stack of money as a "down payment" to meet a man she allegedly thought she could hire to kill her husband, Mark, 58, prosecutors alleged in the criminal complaint over the summer.

That man was an undercover detective.'

'Star Wars' Director's Comment About Men Sparks Calls to Boycott

Mastodon · 4 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the video, Chinoy is asked during a Women in the World Foundation panel, "What is the balance of activating a force for change, but also trying to permeate that patriarchy, that power structure, and is that a part of the calculation of your art as well and what's been the reaction to that?"

Chinoy replies, "Oh, absolutely. I like to make men uncomfortable. I enjoy making men uncomfortable ... it is important to be able to look into the eyes of a man and say, 'I am here' and recognize that. And recognize that I am working to bring something that makes you uncomfortable, and it should make you uncomfortable because you need to change your attitude.'

Opinion: Dear Bob Iger, Star Wars Is Not A Platform For Sharmeen Obaid-Chinoy's Feminist Activism

Mastodon · 4 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The cognitive dissonance at Disney continues. In an interview with CNN, upcoming Star Wars director Sharmeen Obaid-Chinoy sounded off on the 'historical significance' of her being hired to lead the untitled "Rey film", declaring that she is "thrilled" about the project because, "We're in 2024 now, and I think it's about time that we had a woman come forward to shape the story in a galaxy far, far away."

Do you feel the excitement?

Unlikely. By all available metrics, Obaid-Chinoy is highly accomplished and talented as a filmmaker, but her interviews on this Star Wars opportunity only seem to point toward ego and using this intellectual property as a vehicle for scoring political points.

Obaid-Chinoy made this clear in 2015 in an interview on stage with Jon Stewart where she affirmed her enjoyment of "making men uncomfortable" after he noted that the "thread" in her films were men that are "a—holes."

"I enjoy making men uncomfortable," the filmmaker declared at the time, elaborating, "It is important to be able to look into the eyes of a man and say, 'I am here and recognize that I am working to bring something that makes you uncomfortable.'"

She continued, "And it should make you uncomfortable, because you need to change your attitude, and it's only when you're uncomfortable, when you're shifty, when you have to have difficult conversations, that you will perhaps look at yourself in the mirror and not like the reflection, and then say, 'Maybe there is something wrong with the way I think, or maybe there is something wrong with the way I am addressing this issue.'""

Congresswoman assaults ex-husband; he declines to press charges

Matt · 7 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. People will start taking DV against men seriously when men start taking it seriously. Excerpt:

'Republican Colorado Rep. Lauren Boebert allegedly punched her ex-husband twice Saturday night in a Colorado restaurant before she called the police, according to the Denver Post.

The congresswoman allegedly struck Jayson Boebert, her ex-husband, twice at the Miner's Claim in Slit, according to the outlet.

An investigation by the Slit Police Department is ongoing, Chief Mike Kite confirmed, according to the outlet. Police reportedly arrived at the scene after the incident, after which neither party was arrested.

"This is a sad situation for all that keeps escalating and another reason I'm moving," Boebert said in a statement from her campaign manager to the outlet. "I didn't punch Jason in the face and no one was arrested."

The Colorado Republican's ex-husband told police Sunday he and Lauren Boebert were having heated talks, the outlet reported. He reportedly does not plan to press charges.

"I don't want nothing to happen," Jayson Boebert told the outlet in a brief phone interview. "Her and I were working through a difficult conversation."

Jayson Boebert blamed himself for the Colorado couple's "devastating divorce" in September, claiming it is "far from the truth" that Lauren Boebert left him "over fame and a new lifestyle."'

Yes, men and boys are in crisis — but traditional masculinity won't help them

Mastodon · 10 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm tired of toxic masculinity. I mean, I'm tired of its existence in general, particularly in the corrosive radicalization of our boys and young men. But I'm also tired of how the phrase has become synonymous with masculinity in general. I'm tired of the ways in which the suffering of males — especially the ones who aren't white or straight or from a privileged socioeconomic background — is dismissed, marginalized and misunderstood.

And while I agree with my colleague Amanda Marcotte that "Healthy men draw their self-esteem from inside, by cultivating their own talents and good qualities," I also think that our culture is doing a terrible job of defining and encouraging that healthy masculinity.'

CBS’s O’Donnell Praises St. Paul, MN’s All-Female City Council

Mastodon · 10 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NORAH O’DONNELL: Finally, tonight, I think you'll like this story. History was made in Minnesota's capital city of St. Paul today. Or should we say, HER-story was made. St. Paul’s new city council was sworn in this afternoon, made up entirely of women. And get this: six of the seven council members are women of color, and they are all under the age of 40. Four of them are new members, and say that affordable housing and access to child care are some of their top priorities. Congratulations to them and the people of St. Paul. I am bettin’ that they get some stuff done.'

The problem with this report, obviously, is that it reduces these elected officials to skin color and genitalia (unless O’Donnell’s trying to slip a “trans woman” by us, which would be a whole other story). O’Donnell doesn’t get into the substance of these women beyond their aforementioned immutability.

And when you look past identity and go to substance, OF COURSE this is a far-left city council. A quick review of each of the candidates’ campaign websites reveals their leftist inclinations and intentions upon taking office.'

Activision Blizzard exec claims he was fired due to ‘too many old white guys’ at firm

Mastodon · 10 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A veteran Activision Blizzard executive claims the “Call of Duty” maker canned him because it had “too many old white guys,” according to a lawsuit.

James Reid Venable, 57, filed an age discrimination lawsuit in Los Angeles Superior Court last week against the company, which finalized a $69 billion merger with Microsoft last October.

The lawsuit cites alleged comments made by Activision Blizzard CEO Bobby Kotick at a leadership conference that the “problem” with the company was that “there are too many old white guys.”

Kotick resigned last month after the company agreed to pay about $54 million to settle discrimination claims brought by California’s civil rights agency on behalf of women who alleged they faced constant sexual harassment.'

Harvard Medical School ashamed of white male department heads

Mastodon · 10 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Harvard University Medical School has removed portraits of former department chairs from a lecture hall because the individuals pictured are not sufficiently diverse.

School officials confirmed Friday afternoon that the portraits of 31 medical school deans—which formerly hung in the school's Bornstein Family Amphitheater—have been "dispersed" to various lobbies and conference rooms.

All 31 individuals depicted in the portraits are men, and while one is Chinese, the other 30 are also white.'

Congresswomen gender-shame Hunter Biden

Matt · 10 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hunter Biden sat silently in a congressional hearing room Wednesday while a panel investigating his father for corruption considered a vote to hold him in contempt of Congress for failing to provide closed-door testimony to investigators about his father's involvement in his lucrative business schemes.

"You have no balls," Rep. Nancy Mace, South Carolina Republican, told Mr. Biden as he sat stone-faced in the House Oversight and Accountability Committee room.

Chairman James Comer, Kentucky Republican, said Hunter Biden broke the law by defying two congressional subpoenas to provide testimony.
...
The president's son fled the hearing room when Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene, Georgia Republican, began berating him.

As he exited, Ms. Greene said he was afraid to face "strong women" and "what a coward."'

MN Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan says St. Paul's new all-female City Council should be "the norm."

Mastodon · 11 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During Tuesday's inauguration ceremony held at the Ordway Theater, Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan told the freshmen members and incumbents, "while this is historic, it should also simply be the way it is. The norm."

Flanagan also said this group of young, diverse, women leaders is part of the reality her daughter and other young women are growing up in.

"It is my daughter's reality that a group of really smart and talented, dedicated women can get elected to lead their community," Flanagan said. "I am honored and grateful that I get to go home tonight and I get to tell Siobhan that in St. Paul, the city council is led by all women and I hope she thinks 'well why wouldn't it be?'"'

'Fatherlessness' is one of the 'true root causes' of crime in America: Jason Riley

Mastodon · 11 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new academic study is suggesting the presence of two parents in a household may play a crucial role in ensuring safer communities.

Wall Street Journal columnist Jason Riley, who recently wrote about this topic, argued on "Sunday Night in America with Trey Gowdy" that the biggest root of crime is fatherlessness.

Riley referenced the book "The Two-Parent Privilege" by economist Melissa Kearney in emphasizing the significant impact of family structure on social inequality and the lack of discussion on this issue within academia and in this country.'

Young men are accomplishing less than ever before. Experts point to 'male malaise.'

Matt · 12 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From work to education to relationships, young males across the U.S. are growing increasingly disconnected from society, leading some experts to express concern for the state of American manhood.

Fewer men under 21 were meeting five key achievement milestones in 2021 than they were in 1980, according to data from Pew Research. These include being employed full-time, being financially independent, living on their own, getting married and having a child.

Only 39% of 21-year-old men were working full-time in 2021 compared to 64% in 1980. Only 25% were financially independent from their parents compared to the earlier 42%.

The gap narrows by age 25, but is still “statistically significant,” Pew writes. By 25, 66% found full-time employment compared to 73% in 1980. Those who were financially independent at 25 made up 60% of the group, compared to 63% in the past.

Young males still trailed their predecessors in areas like living away from their parents’ homes, getting married and having a child.'

Feminist prof admits 'the goal' is to 'dismantle' the U.S.

Mastodon · 12 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An instructor whose specialties include “Indigenous feminist and queer studies” and “Diné/Navajo studies” has sparked controversy by calling to “decolonize this place,” in reference to the United States.

During a panel on Dec. 3, Melanie Yazzie, who teaches a course on “Indigenous Tribal Government and Politics at the University of Minnesota, said the “goal” is “to dismantle the settler project that is the United States.”

The discussion was hosted by Red Nation, a group Yazzie co-founded that is “dedicated to the liberation of Native peoples from capitalism and colonialism.” The event was held in Minneapolis and titled “From Minnesota to Palestine,” featuring a combination of Palestinian and Native American speakers.

According to the event page, in-person attendees were encouraged to wear masks.

Yazzie also said that she believed the U.S. is the “greatest predator empire that has ever existed.”'

Group preps to sue MIT, alleges it rejects male applicants for less-qualified female ones

Matt · 12 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of Massachusetts Institute of Technology alumni are working to prepare a lawsuit against the prestigious school that accuses its leaders of unlawfully rejecting male applicants for less-qualified female ones to advance gender parity.

The alumni have formed a nonprofit called FairAdmissions@MIT and currently seek male plaintiffs rejected by MIT despite “top SAT/ACT scores, great grades, strong recommendations, and substantial extra-curricular activities,” the group’s website states.

“This is about a return to meritocracy,” said a member of the group who asked to remain anonymous for fear of possible retaliation against him for organizing the litigation.'

The fraud and death of feminism will be complete in 2024

Mastodon · 17 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Seeing this grotesque blight on humanity return less than 80 years since the exposure of the Holocaust, can be overwhelming enough. But in addition to such inhumanity parading itself on campuses like Harvard, Columbia, NYU, MIT, and the University of Pennsylvania, another significant event in American social and political history took place in front of the House Committee on Education and the Workforce — the fraud and death of feminism and the indictment of its foundational ideology – Identity Politics.

...

What played out in front of the nation was the reality that the feminist argument that women would be better at everything simply because of their sex and life experience, was a fraud. Women, due to experiencing bias and discrimination, had a natural compassion and commitment to "making things better," we were told by our mentors. We, as women, would naturally be better leaders, better managers, better organizers, and reverse the damage men had done in every institution.

Life experience does matter, and women's experience and style is an imperative in all human endeavors, but what was left out of the argument I was plied with was how character matters. It is a trait that highlights the individual's importance. The morality and values that animate our lives and choices as Americans is the existential threat to the left's nihilistic worldview, and they know it.'

Women and children, feminists and misandry

Mastodon · 17 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have you ever gotten in trouble or received a nasty look when holding an elevator door for an ultra-feminist woman, or pausing when the elevator door opens for all the women inside to get off or for those waiting outside first to get on? If you live outside America's two Crazy Coasts, know with a certainty that this is not the era of "Ozzie and Harriet" and "Father Knows Best." Donna Reed? Howzabout crazy left Joyce Reid of MSNBC? Father Knows Best? More like: "Father Is an Idiot and Is Barred by a Restraining Order from Seeing the Kids."
...

The United States Supreme Court now has its first confirmed idiot, a woman of absolutely no distinction whatsoever, whose most famous moment in the public eye came when she could not define what a woman is. No? Truly no? In the world of Identity Politics, every woman knows precisely what a woman is if she needs a job and the employer is meeting quotas. All the gender fluidity disappears when a non-binary They/Them/Their applies for a federal grant for a "woman-owned business." Suddenly "their" manifest a crystal-clear gender, as binary as two electric plug adapters.'

Facebook lawsuit alleging women defamed Chicago man on private page brings flood of complaints from other men

Mastodon · 20 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What began as one Chicago man's attempt to get justice after multiple women allegedly defamed him on a private Facebook group called "Are We Dating The Same Guy? — Chicago" has garnered national attention.

Nikko D'Ambrosio is suing Facebook and 27 women for $75 million after they allegedly posted his photos, name and other identifying information on the Chicago version of a nationwide collection of private Facebook groups called "Are we dating the same guy?" along with complaints about his behavior.

"It didn't start off as a national issue, but it morphed into one because of how many people are out there who are victims," D'Ambrosio's attorney, Daniel Nikolic, told Fox News Digital.

"And these guys aren't running out there telling family and friends, ‘Look, I’m being defamed on this website.' Who would want to do that? So, they stay in silence and go about their day. … So, we filed this lawsuit, and now people are coming out of the woodwork."'

White men no longer want to fight for a nation that scorns them

Mastodon · 20 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let me begin by making this point as clearly as possible. There is absolutely nothing worse for the combat effectiveness of a military, than attempting to use recruiting as a social engineering program.

It was reported in this newspaper recently how the US Army has seen a dramatic fall in the number of white recruits, as the Military.com website found that the army fell 10,000 short of its 65,000 enlistment target.

Underpinning this drop was a dramatic decrease in white recruits from 44,042 in 2018, to just 25,070 in 2023, leading to the proportion of white recruits falling from 56.4 per cent of all recruits in 2018, to just 44 per cent. According to the US Census from 2022, around 59 per cent of all US citizens were from white backgrounds. The US military is 17 per cent women, so the recruiting crisis is primarily one among white men.

Clearly, something inside the US Army's recruitment system is failing, both in terms of targets being drastically missed, and a failure to recruit effectively among the nation's largest ethnic group.

The UK Armed Forces are in a similar depressing situation. Recruiting targets are consistently not met, but the main priority is not to get more people to join up – it is to get more non-white people and women to join up.'

University of Texas PhD student accused of brick assault hoax after racking up $40K from GoFundMe

Matt · 21 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. "BelieveAllWomen" indeed! Excerpt:

'A Ph.D. student in Texas was criminally charged after authorities accused her of lying about being assaulted and then raking in as much as $40,000 from a GoFundMe intended to help her recover.

Roda Osman, a student in the African and African Diaspora Studies Department at the University of Texas at Austin, was recently charged with felony-level theft by deception. In September, a friend of Osman's started a GoFundMe called "Help Roda Recover" after Osman was allegedly hit in the face with a brick.

On Saturday, Osman told Fox News Digital she's innocent and that she is "heartbroken" over the allegations.

Osman posted a video on social media where she alleged that she was assaulted by a man who asked for her phone number and was rejected. In the footage, she appeared visibly upset and pointed to a swollen part of her face.
...
According to court documents obtained by Fox News Digital, the Houston Police Department claims that Osman was in an altercation with a man when she was hit with a water bottle.

"It appeared Defendant Osman and [the man] were in the middle of a verbal argument when Defendant Osman swung her right hand while holding an unknown object and hit [the man] in the face," the documents read. "[The man] then swung his right hand while holding what appeared to be a plastic water bottle and struck Defendant in the face."

"The video footage capturing the incident did not support Defendant Osman's recorded statement."

Police also said they were contacted by a caller who accused Osman of running a fraudulent GoFundMe in 2020.

The 2020 GoFundMe was reportedly titled "Help Black Muslim Mother Pay Her Medical Bill," and claimed that Osman was "viciously assaulted by private security in Minneapolis, sustaining multiple facial contusions, a black eye and injuries to her leg. She needs an estimated $5,000 to pay for medical bills, legal fees, a new phone and more."

Osman also told Fox News Digital that she was being targeted by the "manosphere," a group of anti-feminist social media users.

"The manosphere [is] targeting me…for speaking out against a Black man because Black women are supposed to protect Black men from the justice system," she said. "But I refuse to be silenced when I have been harmed so brutally."

According to Osman's UT–Austin webpage, her interests include "Black feminist theory, ethnography, urban social movements, Black diasporic studies [and] decolonial studies." Osman told Fox News Digital that the legal situation is making it difficult for her to focus on school.'

What you need to know about the rise of antifeminists in the U.S.

Mastodon · 22 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the report, one-fifth of Americans believe that feminism is negative for society.

“The concept of feminism has a branding problem in the US in particular, and the term feminism just doesn’t speak to people in the way that it should and it’s become loaded and polarizing, said Margot Peppers, Foresight Factory’s consumer trends editor.

...

A study published in July focused on the incel community, the group of sexually or romantically frustrated men who blame women and society for their inability to form these relationships. As Reckon reported in November, one of the key elements of incel identity is antifeminism. Though this overlap exists, Peppers says it’s important to note that the two are not synonymous.

“That’s a much more extreme group. But, you know, it is a subculture that seems to give young men a sense of identity and belonging in a world where they’re not really finding that elsewhere,” Peppers told Reckon.'

Half of Spanish men feel discriminated against amid feminism backlash

Mastodon · 22 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost half of all Spanish men say feminism has gone too far and they are now discriminated against, according to findings which revealed nearly a third of women agree with them.

Spain has pivoted towards feminist-friendly policies in recent years under Pedro Sánchez, its Left-wing prime minister.

Some 44 per cent of men agreed that society had “come so far in promoting women’s equality that men are now being discriminated against”, according to the survey by Spain’s National Centre for Sociological Research.

Almost one-third of women also agreed with the statement.

The male respondents most likely to feel discriminated against were young. In the 16-24 age group, 52 per cent felt that the drive for women’s equality had gone too far.

Since 2018, governments led by Mr Sanchez have introduced a consent-based rape law and guaranteed menstrual leave from work for women with severe period pain. His cabinets have always had at least 50 per cent female participation and the government is currently preparing a law to force all management boards to have women make up at least 40 per cent of their number.'

‘Sorry, chaps, but feminism hasn’t gone nearly far enough’

Mastodon · 22 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every couple of years since the dawn of time – or at the very least, feminism – a study will be released which shows that some people think the movement has gone too far. Those people will mostly be male, but the researchers carrying out the poll will be sure to find a healthy dollop of females who have also had enough of feminism, to prove that the men they surveyed weren’t all reactionary old dinosaurs/sex-starved incels, just decent, hard-working blokes who have had enough of all this Votes for Women rubbish.

This week, it’s the turn of the red-hot blooded men of Spain to have their say. The geography of this poll is no coincidence: the country has seen a host of feminist policy introduced in the past few years, including paid menstrual leave for people suffering from extreme period pain. The study by the country’s National Centre for Sociological Research found that 44 per cent of men believe feminism has gone too far and that they are now discriminated against, with a third of women backing them up.

I wonder if one of the men questioned was Luis Rubiales, the former president of the Spanish FA, who last year caused uproar when, while celebrating the World Cup win of the women’s team, he grabbed Spain’s leading goalscorer, Jenni Hermoso, and kissed her on the lips. You’ll remember that Hermoso described the kiss as non-consensual, while Rubiales described the backlash against him as “fake feminism”. Last week, he launched an NFT (non-fungible token), claiming it was intended “to support real equality”.'

Woman, 32, who stabbed her boyfriend 100 times to death in weed-induced frenzy is sentenced to just 100 hours community service

Mastodon · 23 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A California woman who stabbed her boyfriend 100 times and killed him, before turning the knife on herself and her dog, has been handed just 100 hours of community service.

Bryn Spejcher, 32, was given the astonishingly low sentence following psychiatrists' ruling that the tragedy was '100 percent' caused by cannabis-induced psychosis, which she suffered after taking two hits of the victim's bong.

The judge ruled that Spejcher 'experienced a psychotic break from reality' and 'had no control over her actions' when she killed Chad O'Melia, then 26, on Memorial Day weekend 2018.

She will spend the 100 hours educating others on marijuana-induced psychosis - but has promised to spend the rest of her life debunking the myth that cannabis is harmless.

O'Melia's family cried when the sentence was read out at Ventura Superior Court, with the victim's father warning it gave 'everyone who smokes marijuana in this state a license to kill'.

Sentencing today, Judge Worley said: 'The task [of sentencing] is made all the more difficult by the knowledge that the decision will impact good people.'

But he added that he does not believe further incarceration is necessary.'

AOC claims Trump is so popular among Republicans because he reaffirms 'insecure men's idea of masculinity'

Mastodon · 23 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez reasoned that Donald Trump is so popular among Republicans because he reaffirms 'insecure' men and white people and their ideas on gender and race.
...
'Donald Trump is what you actually get when you want a politician to embody all of your hopes and dreams and caricature of yourselves. Donald Trump affirms insecure men's idea of masculinity. They affirm insecure people's idea of wealth,' she said on the 'I've Had It' podcast with hosts Jennifer Welch and Angie "Pumps" Sullivan, 'insecure white folks' idea of race."

5 Questions With DU’s New Associate Director of Prevention and Masculinities Engagement

Mastodon · 23 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Justin Stoeckle came to the University of Denver last October as the first associate director of prevention and masculinities engagement, which falls under the Health Promotion team within the Health and Counseling Center (HCC). The University of Denver Magazine caught up with him to find out more about his role.

Can you describe your role at DU?

I support our office's efforts in raising awareness and educating students about interpersonal violence and prevention. I also create programs and other opportunities for students to engage in the work of promoting healthy masculinities by providing space for education, reflection, community and, in turn, cultivating the next generation of inclusive leaders.

What are some examples of the programming that you offer for students?

Since this position is so new, a lot programming and events are still in the brainstorm stage. There are two events that have taken off this quarter: the DU Masculinities Project and CAMP Talks. The DU Masculinities Project is a six-week workshop series that covers topics such as mental health, inclusion and equity, healthy relationships, and leadership all through the lens of healthy masculinity. The acronym CAMP stands for the Coalition for Authentic Masculinities Promotion. CAMP Talks is an opportunity for all students to discuss various topics that impact our understanding of masculinity such as how masculinity is portrayed in media, on social media, body image and more. In the future I hope to do storytelling events, retreats and more.'

Army Reveals It Fired Female Commander in Troubled Brigade After Claims of Sexual Assaults on Male Soldiers

Matt · 24 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female Army officer was fired from command of a unit based at Joint Base Lewis-McChord amid allegations of multiple sexual assaults against several male subordinates and a pattern of sexual harassment, according to a service spokesperson.

Col. Meghann Sullivan served as commander of the 5th Brigade Engineer Battalion, 5th Security Force Assistance Brigade, at the base in Washington state. She was relieved of command Oct. 13, but this is the first time her firing has been reported.
...
Sullivan, who did not immediately return a request for comment, is still in the service and was reassigned to I Corps, based out of the same installation. She is seemingly not facing a court-martial, according to a Military.com review of the public-facing court docket. It was unclear whether she had hired an attorney.

The former commander faced allegations of assaulting at least two male subordinates and harassing several others, with some of those incidents allegedly tied to alcohol abuse, according to one source with direct knowledge of the situation. One of those instances allegedly involved forcefully kissing one of the males, and grabbing another below the belt without his consent.'

Central NY business files lawsuit accusing New York cannabis office of bias against white men

Mastodon · 27 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Central New York business owned by a white man has filed a lawsuit against New York's cannabis management agency accusing it of racial and gender bias.

The business, Valencia AG of Jamesville, claims the "social and economic equity" provisions in the state's licensing of cannabis businesses violate the U.S. Constitution's equal protection clause by giving preference to women and people of color. The lawsuit, filed this week in U.S. District Court in Syracuse, names the state's Office of Cannabis Management, its director and its board members as defendants.

Valencia was recently ranked at number 2,042 in a state cannabis office list of 2,232 potential applicants, behind many businesses who qualified under the social equity provisions. There are roughly 1,800 social equity applicants ranked higher on what was supposed to be a "randomized" list, the lawsuit notes. The agency in fact gave extra weight to social equity applicants in the process, the lawsuit says.

The lawsuit also calls attention to a provision in the cannabis office regulations that sets a goal that at least 50% of business licenses should be awarded to social equity applicants, defined primarily as minority- or women-owned companies. It also cites provisions that set lower licensing fees for those who qualify as social equity applicants.

"The defendants designed and implemented regulations and procedures that have favored and given preference to selected races and genders and have discriminated against any person who is a white man," the lawsuit says.'

Montgomery County library event reverses pricing scheme that discriminated against White men

Mastodon · 27 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Montgomery County Executive Marc Elrich has called the gender- and race-based rates charged to vendors at a county library event “illegal,” forcing the library to change the rates after The Washington Times exposed the discriminatory pricing structure.

The MoComCon event at the Germantown Library and BlackRock Center for the Arts, the county’s take on the popular Comic-Con gatherings, charged the highest vendor rates for businesses owned by White men and reserved lower rates for women and minorities.

Mr. Elrich, a Democrat, said it was the first time he had heard about the different vendor prices when asked about it at a press conference after the report in The Times.

“If they’re doing it, I can’t see how that’s not illegal,” he said. “We’re pretty clear that we don’t have different rates for different races.”'

Female university professors blame sexism for removal of women college presidents

Mastodon · 29 January 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sexism motivated the resignations of University of Pennsylvania president Elizabeth Magill and Harvard president Claudine Gay, several professors argued Sunday.

The New York Times' report "The Campus Wars Aren't About Gender … Are They?" interviewed multiple female professors and university employees on the controversies surrounding Magill and Gay as well as Sally Kornbluth following their congressional testimonies in December. At the time, the women came under fire for avoiding the question of whether calling for the genocide of Jews violated their campus codes of conduct.

"It depends on the context," Gay responded.

Though many called for their resignations following their comments, some faculty members suggested their gender was also a factor.'

Masculinity and women’s equality: study finds emerging gender divide in young people’s attitudes

Mastodon · 1 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young people’s attitudes to masculinity and women’s equality show signs of an emerging gender divide, with the views of men and women often differing more within younger, rather than older, generations, according to a new study.

The findings, from King’s College London’s Policy Institute and Global Institute for Women’s Leadership in partnership with Ipsos, shows the gender split in views is starkest among the young when it comes to how helpful the term “toxic masculinity” is, whether it’s harder to be a man than a woman today, whether feminism has done more good or harm to society, and approval of the influencer Andrew Tate.

The research – which is based on a representative survey of 3,716 people aged 16+ using the Ipsos online random probability UK KnowledgePanel – also shows that in some cases young men today are no more supportive of action on gender equality than older men, despite their generally being more socially liberal, and that young men tend to be more worried about the challenges facing men.'

UK: Urgent action required to tackle ‘endemic’ misogyny faced by women in the music industry, WEC warns

Mastodon · 1 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WEC’s ‘Misogyny in Music’ report laid bare a “boys’ club” where sexual harassment and abuse is common, and the non-reporting of such incidents is high. Victims who do speak out struggle to be believed or may find their career ends as a consequence.

Despite increases in representation, women encounter limitations in opportunity, a lack of support and persistent unequal pay; these issues are intensified for women facing intersectional barriers, particularly racial discrimination, the report found.

Female artists are routinely undervalued and undermined, endure a focus on their physical appearance in a way that men are not subjected to, and have to work far harder to get the recognition their ability merits.

Making a series of strong and wide-ranging recommendations, the cross-party committee of MPs called on ministers to take legislative steps to amend the Equality Act to ensure freelance workers have the same protections from discrimination as employees and bring into force section 14 to improve protections for people facing intersectional inequality.'

The Gen Z gender gap is widening, and the influence of manosphere podcasters can't be ignored

Mastodon · 2 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gen Z are increasingly getting further apart in their ideological opinions, polls keep showing.

While women aged 18 and 29 have gotten more liberal in their beliefs every year, young men haven't and are less likely to care about political issues or participate in protests, according to an analysis by Daniel Cox, the director of the Survey Center on American Life.

Half of young men also believe they face some kind of discrimination, and less than half identify as feminists. Only half support the #MeToo movement, compared to nearly three-quarters of women.

Sharing the data, journalist and lawyer Imani Gandy commented on the pattern, saying: "YouTube algorithms are turning young men into sociopaths."

She might have a point.'

Psychiatrist sparks backlash by urging white men to donate part of their salary to black women

Mastodon · 3 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dr Kali Nicole Hobson, an Adult and Child and Adolescent Psychiatrist in Atlanta, Georgia, has come under fire after she allegedly urged White men to donate a fraction of their salary to Black women in commemoration of Black History Month.

Black History Month is a month-long celebration of African American history and achievement, observed from February 1 to March 1. On February 2, 2024, Dr Kali Nicole Hobson took on TikTok and urged white men to donate a small portion of their salary to Black women to show they are “dedicated to equity” as Black women have historically been paid less than white men in any profession.'

‘Andrew Tate is a symptom, not the problem’: why young men are turning against feminism

Mastodon · 4 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“As soon as I mention feminism, you can feel the shift in the room; they’re shuffling in their seats.” Mike Nicholson holds workshops with teenage boys about the challenges of impending manhood. Standing up for the sisterhood, it seems, is the last thing on their minds.

When Nicholson says he is a feminist himself, “I can see them look at me, like, ‘I used to like you.’”

Once Nicholson, whose programme is called Progressive Masculinity, unpacks the fact that feminism means equal rights and opportunities for women, many of the boys with whom he works are won over.

“A lot of it is bred from misunderstanding and how the word is smeared,” he says.

But he is battling against what he calls a “dominance-based model” of masculinity. “These old-fashioned, regressive ideas are having a renaissance, through your masculinity influencers – your grifters, like Andrew Tate.”'

This epidemic is America's modern civil rights challenge

Matt · 4 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. "Our country must advocate for policies that empower fathers, support families and guide the fatherless"

New York professor caught on video holding machete to reporter's neck reportedly fired after anti-Israel rants

Matt · 4 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Remember her? Well, she can't seem to stay off the naughty list. Latest is here. Excerpt:

'A New York professor notoriously caught on camera holding a machete to a reporter's neck last year has reportedly been fired from her latest teaching gig after espousing anti-Israel views.

Shellyne Rodriguez, who was terminated last year from her position at New York City's Hunter College, was fired again – this time from her most recent role at Cooper Union in Manhattan.

"Cooper Union has fired me because of a social media post I made about 'Zionists'… effective immediately," Rodriguez, 47, wrote in a Jan. 23 email to students, according to the New York Post. Cooper Union Students for Justice in Palestine shared the email on Instagram the next day.

"This is fascism. Ya'll are learning about it in real time," Rodriguez wrote. "Stay strong, [stay] brave, stay defiant, don't bite your tongue, and drink plenty of water! Pa-lante!"'

Alabama Bill Proposes Rapists be Castrated

Mastodon · 5 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"My bill is simple," Givan said. "If there is a young girl who has been raped or there's incest involved, or a woman that has been raped, the bill would require a man, if found guilty, to have a vasectomy or some form of castration." Newsweek has contacted Givan for comment via email.

House Bill 90 also would ensure fathers pay all costs associated with an abortion unless otherwise agreed with the pregnant woman. It would also see the payment be waived if the man agrees to a vasectomy.

"In recent years, the Legislature has passed laws restricting reproduction rights in the state and the penalties have been imposed only on women. It's time for that to change," Givan said in a statement seen by Birmingham Watch. "The last time I checked a biology textbook, it takes a woman and a man to make a baby. Men in Alabama need to be held to the same level of responsibility as women."
...
As part of the bill, Givan is asking lawmakers to consider allowing abortion in cases of rape and incest, saying that a woman should be able to choose what she should do with her own body.'

The rise and fall of White men and the institutions they built

Mastodon · 6 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Forty years ago, Harvard, America's oldest university, was often ranked the best in the world. Unfortunately, it has been destroying itself at an accelerating pace, with little chance of returning to its former glory. More on this below.

Do a thought experiment. If no White man (meaning someone descended from the tribes that inhabited Europe and nearby areas for some tens of thousands of years) had ever existed with an IQ of more than 100, what would the world look like today? Western civilization is frequently traced back to those who lived in Greece about 2,500 years ago. A small number of Greek thinkers in that period had enormous and lasting influence on mathematics, science, political thought, philosophy, literature, the arts, and architecture, such as Pythagoras, Aristotle and Plato.

Without smart White men, the great engineering of ancient Rome would not exist, nor the political ideas and thoughts of Cicero and his contemporaries. The Renaissance was dominated by White men like DaVinci and Galileo, who made unmatched contributions to the sciences and the arts. The Scottish and English Enlightenment provided the institutions in which great physicists, mathematicians, engineers, political theorists and philosophers — such as Isaac Newton, John Locke, Adam Smith and Benjamin Franklin — could thrive. Without their work, no steam and internal combustion engines, and thus no steamships, railroads or airplanes would have existed until a later time.'

Southwest Promises To Discriminate Against White Men

Mastodon · 6 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Southwest Airlines is pledging to discriminate against white men when selecting job candidates for senior positions within the company.

The Dallas-based carrier said it plans on “doubling racial diversity” and “increasing gender diversity” on its “Senior Leadership team by 2025.” Southwest said it will also increase “diverse representation on the Southwest Airlines Board of Directors,” according to an internal company presentation posted on X, the social media platform formerly known as Twitter.

Not only did Southwest reveal its plans to increase “representation” and “diversity” among the company’s top-level employees, but the airline also declared that it would “openly” report on its progress.

Despite pushback over its hiring practices, the airline continues to support initiatives that further discrimination under the guise of diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI).'

FGM in Sierra Leone

Matt · 6 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Couldn't agree more. Now where's any mention of MGM? Excerpt:

'Local police tell CNN that Jalloh is believed to have died from excessive bleeding in the Bondo bush – a place where a weeks-long secret initiation and rite of passage into womanhood (and into membership of the Bondo Society) takes place. In Sierra Leone, this initiation begins with Female Genital Mutilation (FGM) or Female Genital Cutting.

Jalloh's mother and grandmother took her to the initiation, the officers say. They have now been arrested, along with the Sowei, the woman who leads the ritual and performs the crude operation.

Her father is furious. "I never wanted my daughter to go through Bondo. I am opposed to it," he says. "I was never informed about it. They just did it on their own. All I was told was about her death and her dead body."'

Over $25K raised for anti-Israel professor who pulled machete on Post reporter

Mastodon · 10 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a reward for bad behavior.

A fundraiser has collected over $25,000 for disgraced NYC art professor Shellyne Rodriguez, who was recently axed from her third teaching gig in less than a year.

The GoFundMe — whose goal is $30,000 — was launched last May after Rodriguez, 47, was fired from Hunter College and the School of Visual Arts for pulling a machete on Post reporter Reuven Fenton, who was inquiring about her viral freakout on a group of anti-abortion students.

Despite harassment, menacing, and weapons possession charges, she was hired at Cooper Union four months later.

But in January, The Post revealed last week, that Rodriguez was fired for anti-Israel statements.

Since then, donations to her have started trickling in again.

The page had pulled in $25,589 as of Friday.

"This fund is organized by a committee of fellow educators, artists and community organizers who seek to provide material support to help Shellyne recover from the impact of this persecution," the organizers, "SR Solidarity Committee," wrote on the site.'

Canada: Turns out, open hostility to white men isn't great for military recruitment

Mastodon · 10 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Like every army ever, the Canadian Armed Forces (CAF) have always been predominantly male. And, as a country with a majority of the population being of European descent, its members have been predominantly white. These facts should be uncontroversial.

But unlike every army ever, the CAF is using the identities of its historic membership to promote an ethos of guilt and shame within the institution. This isn't fixing the present recruitment crisis and it's doubtful that it ever will — but this approach has the firm support of scholarly military voices, the latest example coming to us from Paul Mitchell, a defence studies professor at the Canadian Forces College.'

Idaho's public university: State triples spending to $6M on courses about 'white fragility' and 'toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 10 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Idaho public universities have ramped up spending to $6 million on diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) efforts and teaching students about 'white fragility' and 'toxic masculinity,' a damning new report shows.

Idaho Freedom Foundation (IFF) researchers have lifted the lid on a tripling of DEI spending since 2022 at Boise State University (BSU) and three other taxpayer-funded schools across the Gem State.

Those schools now have 75 administrators dedicated to DEI, many of them earning six-figure salaries.

The top earner, Yolanda Bisbee, is an expert on tribal relations who bags $170,706 per year as chief diversity officer at the University of Idaho (UI).

'The DEI regime has been growing in Idaho's public universities,' researchers Anna Miller and Scott Yenor said in their 25-page study for the conservative think tank.

Critics say it's a form of reverse discrimination that unfairly blows back on straight, white men.

Others say DEI schemes may be well-intentioned, but seldom achieve their desired goals and often make things worse by stirring up divisions in lecture halls and offices.'

Feminist ‘Gender Justice’ Group Alarmed by Young Men Rejecting Feminism

Mastodon · 10 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A global feminist organization whose idea of “healthy manhood” is the promotion and “allyship” of feminist ideals expressed worry in its 2023 report, which revealed that fewer young American men are supportive of feminism.

Equimundo: Center for Masculinities and Social Justice was distressed to learn some of the results of its online survey of 2,022 American men between the ages of 18 and 45.

The survey found 40% of all the men showed symptoms of depression, while 44% had recent thoughts of suicide.

The group’s primary concern, however, appeared to be that the number of men who said “feminism has made America a better place” dropped by nine percentage points between the group of “elder millennials” (age 38-45), at 56%, and the 18-23 “Gen Z” group, at 47%.

Equimundo touts itself as having “worked internationally and in the US since 2011 to engage men and boys as allies in gender equality, promote healthy manhood, and prevent violence.”

The organization seeks to alter “masculine” men by “transforming intergenerational patterns of harm and promoting patterns of care, empathy and accountability among boys and men throughout their lives.”

Among the corporations and organizations funding Equimundo are the United Nations Foundation, George Soros’ Open Society Foundation, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, and Archewell – the organization founded by the Duke and Duchess of Sussex.'

Gen Z men go traditional, cover women's costs on date night: 'Equality didn't mean we should pay the same'

Mastodon · 10 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tradition is on the menu during Gen Z date night.

Despite being seen as politically progressive when it comes to gender equality, young American men are still expected to pick up the tab for the women they're wooing — and they're more than happy to do so.

A survey of 552 heterosexual college students cited in a new report by The New York Times found that Zoomer men paid for dates 90% of the time.

Gen Z women, on the other hand, paid in full for just 2% of the dates they went on, while 8% of dates were split evenly between the sexes.

"The traditional pattern is still there," professor Shanhong Luo, who conducted the research, told the publication.

The Times cited one 27-year-old woman who claimed that gender equality wasn't a reason to expect the fairer sex to split the bill.

"Gender equality didn't mean men and women should pay the same when they went out," the unidentified woman purportedly said, saying that females "earn less than men in the workplace, spend more time getting ready for outings, and pay more for reproductive care."'

Australia’s All-Boys Schools Need to Stamp Out Toxic Masculinity

Mastodon · 15 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By invoking tradition, the protesters are endorsing a culture of machismo pervasive in elite boys schools. It is these young men who will go on to hold positions of power in business, finance, politics, law and the media, cementing old boys’ networks. That is why schools must act to stamp out damaging gender views and smash the sexist stereotypes that stand in the way of gender equality. Going coed is the right move. If we demand diversity in companies and our private and public institutions, it should start in schools during adolescents’ formative years. Apart from the home, there is no better place to hold schoolboys accountable for rampant appalling behavior toward girls that is pervasive at elite boys’ schools. Learning alongside them from early on about respect would help.

Change is afoot. Some recognize that we live in different times, and there is now an increased demand for mixed-sex education. Cranbrook, attended by billionaire James Packer and Atlassian Corp. founder Mike Cannon-Brookes, is in the process of enrolling girls in stages. Barker College, the alma mater of Midnight Oil lead singer and former politician Peter Garrett, and film director Phillip Noyce (Patriot Games, Clear and Present Danger) became fully coeducational in 2022. Barker was established more than 100 years ago at a time of “different attitudes towards the roles of men and women,” its website notes, recognizing that “a more inclusive and diverse community” can help address “stereotypes that can develop in single sex environments.”'

Leaving ‘Mr. Mom’ Behind

Matt · 18 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The percentage of stay-at-home parents who are fathers has risen dramatically over the last three decades. Pew Research Center, using the Census Bureau’s Annual Social and Economic Supplement, published a report over the summer showing that almost 1 in 5 American parents who do not work for pay are fathers. From 1989 to 2021 (the latest Pew data), that represented a 63.6 percent increase — the result of both rapid growth in the share of fathers who do not work for pay and a slight decrease in the share of mothers who do not work for pay. (The share of women working is currently at an all-time high, driven by mothers of children under 5, who have generally been likeliest to stay home.)'

Protecting Our Sons: Navigating a Radical Feminist Culture

Mastodon · 19 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I dedicated 13 years of my life to public, private, and higher education. As a teacher, I continuously witnessed male disengagement with curriculum that was heavily slanted toward female students across multiple school districts.

This shouldn't be surprising given that only 23% of American K-12 teachers identified as male in 2021 (NCES, 2023) despite the fact that an estimated 51.4% of students enrolled in public schools are male (ACS 2017-2021 survey).

In addition, males are overrepresented in school punishment, dropout rates, academic delinquency and, ultimately, criminal offenses in what is commonly called the School-To-Prison Pipeline. The drop in male enrollment in higher education institutions has become known as the "Male College Crisis." While there are many reasons for male disinterest education, it would be naïve to assume that a social climate which devalues males outside the classroom would be significantly supportive of males within the classroom.

In some cases, this is the result of unconscious bias in an overwhelmingly educational female workforce. While teaching in an urban school district with a strong amount of gang pressure, I walked past an open classroom door in time to hear a teacher yell at a male student in front of his peers.

"You're just like my husband," she said. "You never listen to a word I say!"'

Michigan State’s ‘Women’s Leadership Accelerator’ likely illegal: watchdog

Mastodon · 20 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Michigan State University is facing scrutiny for its new female leadership program as a due process advocacy group says it illegally discriminates against male students.

Michigan State’s Broad College of Business launched the program recently and it is marketed to female students who want to advance their leadership skills, potentially in violation of Title IX rules on sex discrimination.

The Dashney Women’s Leadership Accelerator will offer students mentoring and experiential learning, according to the program’s website.

...

Bullion said both men and women can participate in the leadership accelerator.

But a group that advocates for civil rights protections disagrees.

The president of Stop Abusive and Violent Environments told The Fix MSU is “absolutely not” compliant with Title IX regulations.'

Pennsylvania Judge Accused of Shooting Ex-Boyfriend in the Head as He Slept

Matt · 20 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. One to watch. Excerpt:

'A suspended Pennsylvania judge allegedly shot her ex-boyfriend in his home as he slept, according to a press release from the Cumberland County District Attorney's Office.

The shooting occurred in the morning of Saturday, Feb. 10 at the Harrisburg home of the victim, Michael McCoy, after he tried to end his one-year relationship with Magisterial District Judge Sonya M. McKnight, 57, according to the press release and a police filing obtained by the Associated Press.

The bullet entered the right side of McCoy's face and exited the left side of his face, the press release states. He survived but is now blind in one eye.
McKnight is now being charged with attempted murder and aggravated assault.

After breaking up with McKnight, McCoy, 54, had attempted to get her to move out of his home numerous times, but she would not leave, according to an arrest affidavit obtained by the Associated Press NBC News, and CBS News.'

Can job postings in Canada exclude white men? Short answer: yes

Mastodon · 21 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Restrictions listed on recent postings for Canada Research Chair positions have surprised some people. It's not that someone with a biology degree might be barred from applying to teach South American history, or that an engineer might not be eligible for a position teaching English literature, but rather that skin colour and gender identity have been limiting factors.

In two recent job postings for Canada Research Chairs in computer science at the University of Waterloo, applications are restricted for those who identify as "women, transgender, gender-fluid, non-binary, or Two-spirit" in the first case, and to members "of a racialized minority" for the second.

In the past, these sorts of job postings have led to controversy, with some claiming they're examples of "reverse racism" or that they show the end of hiring based on merit and education, in favour of immutable characteristics.

But, it turns out this sort of hiring is normal for Canada Research Chairs. Actually, it's normal for a variety of industries for various reasons.'

Texas judge rules school district can restrict the length of male students’ natural hair

Matt · 23 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. They're making it about race in the press when it's really about equality under law for the sexes. In this case, girls can grow their hair out while, it seems, boys can't. Excerpt:

'A Texas judge ruled Thursday that the state’s CROWN Act does not make it unlawful for school dress codes to limit a student’s hair length.

The decision is a blow to Darryl George, a Houston-area high school student who sued the Barbers Hill Independent School District after he was suspended for months over the length of his locs hairstyle.

The George family did not make an appearance after the trial, but attorneys for the family said they intend to appeal the ruling.'

"This Penis Business: A Memoir" Chronicles the Life Events That Compelled Georganne Chapin to Make Ending Circumcision Her Life's Work

DanBollinger · 23 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'In a new memoir, "This Penis Business," written by Georganne Chapin with Echo Montgomery Garrett and published by Lucid House Publishing, Chapin explains how her unusual upbringing, travels, and life experiences honed her as a leader, a critical thinker, and an outspoken advocate of children's rights.

...

Chapin, Co-Founder and Executive Director of Intact America, Exposes the Big Business of Medical Circumcision and the Cruel Absurdity of Circumcising Baby Boys for No Medical Reason

Georganne Chapin, 72, has called out injustice throughout her life, as a child of civil rights activists, a budding anthropologist in Latin America, a CEO of a health plan for low-income individuals, and a founder of a health care quality and equity nonprofit. But it wasn't until she went to law school mid-career and studied bioethics that Chapin turned to intactivism, the human rights movement dedicated to ending routine circumcision of baby boys in the United States.'

Masculinity has been under siege for the past decade and boys are fed up with it

Mastodon · 29 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How do you solve a problem like masculinity? All that anger! All that violence! All that inherent misogyny every young boy has bubbling inside of him!

Well, according to Labour, you install male ‘influencers’ inside classrooms in the hope they can teach other boys how to behave towards women.

Bridget Phillipson, the party's education spokesman, has pledged to introduce the scheme as an answer to the post-pandemic rise in sexual harassment in British classrooms; a response, as it were, to the Andrew Tate-ification of modern man.

...

So what is the answer? Well I’d start by suggesting compassion, not anger is what is needed. And celebrating what is good about men — ambition, drive, strength (yes, I know, women have these traits, too) rather than admonishing them for what is bad.

But most of all, I think understanding that men are either feeling lost and rejected or angry as hell should be the beginning of the solution. Imposing a government-trained ‘influencer’ on them to explain why everything they’re doing is wrong is probably not.'

UK: Schools could train young male influencers to counter internet 'misogynists' like Andrew Tate as Labour warns of 'scourge' of sexual violence in classrooms

Mastodon · 29 February 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour have unveiled plans to help schools train young male influencers to combat self-proclaimed internet 'misogynists' such as Andrew Tate.

Shadow education secretary Bridget Phillipson said young male mentors within schools could provide a 'powerful counterbalance' to negative online content.

She today outlined a blueprint for how Labour would help headteachers tackle a 'scourge' of sexual harassment and sexual violence in schools.

Under Labour's plans, schools would be supported to work together and spread 'best practice' in dealing with misogyny and sexual harassment.

They would establish regional improvement teams to provide mentor training for older schoolboys to coach younger pupils in recognising and stopping misogyny.

Labour also want to embed digital literacy in the national curriculum so young people are given critical tools to deal with online hate and misinformation.

In further action, Ms Phillipson wants to empower Ofsted to conduct new annual safeguarding checks to quickly identify patterns of risky or harmful behaviour.

The party has also already committed to rolling out mental health counsellors in every school.

Ms Phillipson added: 'I have set out measures today to equip schools with the tools they need to rid our education system of these misogynistic views, teach our children right from wrong, and implement better safeguarding measures.'

One in six men, ages 16-29, say 'feminism has done more harm than good,' study shows

Mastodon · 1 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'A new study is shining light on a generational divide in attitudes towards feminism, revealing younger men's skepticism about its impact compared to women and older men— delving into perceptions of gender challenges and the contentious view of "toxic masculinity." Forbes' Maggie McGrath and Vice-Chair of the 30/50 Summit, Huma Abedin, join Mika Brzezinski to discuss the complex gender dynamics among younger generations.'

CBS Sued By ‘SEAL Team’ Writer Who Claims ‘Heterosexual, White Men Need Extra Qualifications’

Mastodon · 5 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CBS Studios and its parent company, Paramount, are being sued by an employee who claims he was discriminated against for being a heterosexual white male.

Brian Beneker, a script coordinator for the drama series “SEAL Team,” filed a lawsuit in California federal court Wednesday, per The Hollywood Reporter.

The studio employee alleged that he was repeatedly denied a staff writer job due to the company’s “illegal policy of race and sex balancing,” which promoted hiring “less qualified applicants who were members of more preferred groups.” Beneker specifically stated in the document that women, minorities, and LGTBQ individuals were given preferential consideration for open positions.

“During Season 6, (in approximately May of 2022), two female writer’s assistants, without any writing credits, were hired as staff writers,” the lawsuit says. “The first of these two hires was black. The second identified as lesbian.”

Beneker said these initiatives have “created a situation where heterosexual, white men need ‘extra’ qualifications (including military experience or previous writing credits) to be hired as staff writers when compared to their nonwhite, LGBTQ, or female peers.”'

Stop putting men down to improve female equality, says Tory MP

Mastodon · 5 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People should stop putting men down to improve female equality, a Tory MP has said in a warning about the impact of “toxic masculinity” discussions in schools.

Boys face a “negative narrative and indifference” in classrooms, with four in 10 sixth form pupils told in lessons that boys are a problem, a Westminster Hall debate heard on Tuesday.

Steve Double, the Conservative MP for Austell and Newquay, said: “I absolutely understand and agree that we have needed to address the inequality that many women have experienced in our society for a long time, and we have made huge progress on that, but we should not be putting men down as a result.

“I feel sometimes that that is what we have done, and we need to think carefully about it.”'

No More Dating: 15 Reasons Why Some Men Prefer to Be Alone

Matt · 6 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Interesting in that it lacks any psychobabble or outrageous BS from a feminist perspective. Of further interest I'd say is the last reason given; you typically don't see such candor in these kinds of things. To wit:

'There is a possibility that men have become disillusioned with the concept of love. Whether from personal experiences or observing others, this skepticism can lead to a lack of interest in pursuing romantic relationships, favoring a solitary life instead.'

German Police Carry Out Dawn Raids on Homes of Suspected ‘Misogynistic Hate Speech’ Posters

Mastodon · 7 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'German authorities carried out raids Thursday across Germany against people suspected of posting misogynistic hate speech online.

Police raided homes and interrogated 45 suspects in 11 states early in the morning, German news agency dpa reported. None of the suspects were detained.

The raids were part of the annual “combating misogyny on the internet” day of action, which began in 2022 and comes one day before International´s Women´s Day.

In Germany, sweeping slurs against women can be punishable as incitement to hatred.

In preparation for the raids, authorities screened the internet for posts that potentially broke anti-misogyny laws and attempted to identify the authors. Names were then forwarded to the public prosecutor´s offices in the states where the suspects live in order to decide whether to proceed with investigations.

Communications that are considered illegal include posts in which women are slandered and insulted in a sexualized manner, or publicly encouraged to send nude photos. The authorities also flagged posts that advocated rape or sexual assault or that distributed videos of torture or killing, dpa reported.'

Women leaders demand release of female hostages ahead of International Women's Day

Mastodon · 7 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As International Women's Day approaches on March 8, several leading Israeli women appear in a video, demanding that the 19 women held captive by Hamas be released.

Former Supreme Court president Dorit Beinisch, award-winning actor Gila Almagor and other figures including academics, journalists, activists and entertainers appear in the campaign, released Monday, calling to bring the hostages home.

"As long as they are not here, we have nothing to celebrate," state the women in the video. "All the achievements, all the successes of all of us — are meaningless when there are 19 women, like us, in the captivity of Hamas."

Hamas took 253 hostages captive on October 7 when thousands of terrrorists stormed across the border, killing some 1,200 people, most of them civilians in their homes or at the music festival.'

UK: 'I'm asking for it': Calls for law change to require 'clear yes' to sex

Mastodon · 12 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People should be required to make sure they have a “clear yes” before any sexual activity, lawyers and activists have said.

A new campaign named “I’m Asking For It” was launched on Monday, calling for the Government to enshrine “affirmative consent” into British law.

This would mean “anything less than a clear, uncoerced, and informed confirmation of consent like ‘yes’ cannot qualify as consent in the eyes of the law”.'

UK: 'Crisis in masculinity' prompts Labour to consider men's health strategy

Mastodon · 12 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour is looking at introducing a men's health strategy to address a "crisis in masculinity" that is costing lives.

The plans could see an expansion in services which offer NHS checks in "men-friendly spaces" – such as sports grounds, pubs and workplaces – alongside efforts to encourage boys and men to be more open about their mental health.

The party is examining strategies rolled out in Ireland and Australia, which have increased male life expectancy, and local schemes in the UK which have offered men health screening in football stadiums.

Shadow health secretary Wes Streeting said he felt "enraged" about failures to tackle male health issues – in particular mental health – with suicide the biggest killer of men under the age of 50.

Official data shows men's life expectancy in the UK falling at a far sharper rate than that of women. It is now at its lowest for more than a decade.

Mr Streeting told The Telegraph: "I think as a country we have been slow to wake up to the fact that I think it's quite hard to be a young man in today's society."'

Tennessee teacher accused of sexually assaulting boy, 12, allegedly harmed nearly 2 dozen other minors

Matt · 12 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Tennessee teacher arrested in September 2023 for allegedly sexually assaulting a 12-year-old boy is now facing a 23-count indictment for sexual misconduct against nearly two dozen other potential minor victims, according to police.

Alissa McCommon, a 38-year-old former elementary school teacher, was initially arrested Sept. 8 and charged with rape of a child.

"Our goal in any of these investigations is to identify any potential victims and provide medical assistance, counseling and support for their families throughout the investigation," Covington Police Chief Donna Turner said in a March 8 statement. "Without this vital intervention, the ripple effect of trauma can last for years with the victims and the family unit."

On March 5, a Tipton County grand jury handed down a 23-count indictment against McCommon "with multiple sexual misconduct offenses against minors," the Covington Police Department said in a March 8 press release.'

I research women’s role in media–and yet I recently discovered that my Gen Z son and his peers didn’t support feminism

Mastodon · 12 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, in the same week, a study from King’s College London and a Financial Times analysis of various studies exposed an unprecedented gender rift emerging within Gen Z. As a mother of two Gen Z boys who researches the role of women in media, I felt enormous sorrow and a sense of loss. If our youngest generation of women and men are diverging in their fundamental values and are polarized on important matters such as the impact of feminism, masculinity, and gender equality, how are they to build healthy, loving, long-lasting relationships in a world starved of unity and social cohesion?

Troubled with these thoughts, I came down to the kitchen on a Saturday morning to check in on my 13-year-old son and his two friends who had stayed overnight. “What do you think of feminism?” I asked spontaneously, curious to hear their thoughts over breakfast before they headed off to football. My son rebutted my question with vehemence, demanding that I not ask such “weird” questions. His negative reaction and visible discomfort puzzled me.'

Long way to go before Britain’s police forces can truly stamp out sexism, expert panel agrees

Mastodon · 13 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a long way to go before police forces in Britain can truly stamp out institutionalised sexism, an expert panel hosted by The Independent has agreed,

On 8 March, to mark International Women’s Day, The Independent brought together a panel to discuss how police forces in the UK are tackling violence against women and attempting to eradicate misogyny.

Three years on from the kidnap and murder of Sarah Everard by Met Police officer Wayne Couzens, our Virtual Event explored how Britain’s police forces have changed – if at all – and discussed what work still needs to be done.

Hosted by The Independent’s crime correspondent Amy-Clare Martin, our panel included retired police chief Susannah Fish OBE, chartered psychologist Dr Jessica Taylor, barrister Harriet Johnson and Abigail Ampofo, CEO of domestic abuse charity Refuge.

Explaining the scale of the problem, Ms Fish told our viewers: “It’s a barrel, it’s not a handful of rotten apples.”'

UK Hard Man Danny Dyer To Explore Modern Masculinity In Channel 4 Documentary

Mastodon · 14 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Danny Dyer‘s range is continuing to expand as the Football Factory star lands himself a Channel 4 documentary series exploring modern masculinity.

Danny Dyer: How To Be A Man will see the EastEnders alum delve deep into the evolving landscape of masculinity. At a time when people are labeling masculinity “toxic,” Dyer, who made his name in a string of movies playing traditional “hard men” and also hosted Danny Dyer’s Deadliest Men for Bravo, will ask people across Britain what they think it means to be a man in our society, and what the future is for the male identity.

The series from Whitworth Media will feature interviews with a politician, psychologists, a mental health expert, a fitness expert, a sex therapist, an influencer, male victims of domestic abuse, and members of the Brighton Gay Men’s Chorus to offer a range of voices and perspectives on this complex subject. Across the two episodes, Dyer will also explore gender stereotypes and male attitudes to mental health.'

Gen Z Believes Men Are Being Discriminated Against More Than Boomers

Matt · 14 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Members of the Generation Z age bracket across the globe believe men are being discriminated against more than those among the Baby Boomer generation, according to a new poll.

A poll by Ipsos conducted on International Women's Day, March 8, asked respondents across 31 countries a number of questions on women's rights and gender equality among different age groups.

The poll asked respondents whether they agree or disagree with the statement that "we have gone so far in promoting women's equality that we are discriminating against men."

According to the poll, 60 percent of Gen Z men, 57 percent of Millennial men and 43 percent of male Baby Boomers agree with this statement. In comparison, among women that agree with this statement, the poll found 40 percent for Gen Z, 44 percent of Millennials and 30 percent of Baby Boomers.

The survey also found that, 57 percent of Gen Z respondents "think when it comes to giving women equal rights with men, thing have gone far enough in my country." The poll found that 60 percent of Millennials also agree, while only 43 percent of Baby Boomers also believe that women's rights have gone too far in their respective countries.'

Why People React Less Positively to Research Favoring Men

Matt · 14 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nymphotropism in action. Excerpt:

'Research suggesting men are superior to women in certain aspects is often viewed less favorably than research showing the opposite. But why? A recent study examined this issue, finding evidence that perceived harm to women is a key factor driving negative reactions to male-favoring findings. The new study has been published in the International Journal of Psychology.

“For the last few years, my lab has been studying how people react to research on sex differences,” said study author Steve Stewart-Williams (@SteveStuWill), a professor of psychology at the University of Nottingham Malaysia.'

Making sense of the gulf between young men and women

Mastodon · 14 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men and women have different experiences, so you would expect them to have different worldviews. Nonetheless, the growing gulf between young men and women in developed countries is striking. Polling data from 20 such countries shows that, whereas two decades ago there was little difference between the share of men and women aged 18-29 who described themselves as liberal rather than conservative, the gap has grown to 25 percentage points.

Young men also seem more anti-feminist than older men, bucking the trend for each generation to be more liberal than its predecessor. Polls from 27 European countries found that men under 30 were more likely than those over 65 to agree that “advancing women’s and girls’ rights has gone too far because it threatens men’s and boys’ opportunities”. Similar results can be found in Britain, South Korea and China. Young women were likely to believe the opposite.

Unpicking what is going on is not simple. A good place to start is to note that young women are soaring ahead of their male peers academically. In the European Union fully 46% of them earn degrees, versus 35% of young men, a gap that has doubled since 2002. One consequence is that young women are more likely than men to spend their early adulthood in a cocoon of campus liberalism. Meanwhile, boys outnumber girls at the bottom end of the scholastic scale. Across rich countries, 28% of them fail to learn to read to a basic level. That is true of only 18% of girls.'

In this Ukrainian village, almost no men are left

Matt · 16 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No discussion of the mass violation of their human rights. Excerpt:

'Few men of fighting age are left in this village in southwest Ukraine, and those who remain fear they will be drafted at any moment.

Their neighbors are already hundreds of miles east in trenches on the front lines. Some have been killed or wounded. Several are missing. Others from this rural area — about 45 miles from the borders of Romania and Moldova — have fled abroad or found ways to avoid the war, either with legitimate exemptions or by hiding.'

U. Buffalo rewrites ‘minority and women’ business program after federal complaint

Mastodon · 17 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University at Buffalo opened up an entrepreneurship program to all races and both sexes following a federal civil rights complaint.

“To apply, you must own a business in the Buffalo-Niagara region,” the M&T Bank Emerging Entrepreneurs Program now states.

The public university previously required applicants to be a female or racial minority business owner in the region.'

Debunking the Myth of the Man-Hating Feminist

Mastodon · 17 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who are dedicated to viewing feminists as misandrists may never be convinced otherwise. However, since those men view their misguided perception of misandry as a justifiable excuse for threatening and abusing women, we must try to dispel these misconceptions anyway. To keep women safe, perhaps feminists who have realized that fighting systems is better than fighting individual men should engage compassionately with women who aren't there yet.

They should gently urge those women to channel their anger and outrage toward dismantling systems of oppression that can actually lead to our liberation, rather than espousing hate toward individual men, or men as a whole. It is not a matter of protecting men's egos, but rather of keeping women safe. After all, anger is a worthy, valid, and useful tool in the feminist movement. But perhaps, for our safety, it is just better reserved for the systems of power.'

UK: Documentary reveals abuse of husband by wife

Matt · 17 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But behind closed doors, Richard, 47, had been secretly suffering from what a judge would later describe as “the worst case of controlling and coercive behaviour” she had ever seen.

During her 20-year reign of terror, sadistic Sheree, 46, repeatedly threatened to go to police claiming her helpless husband was abusing her — and would even scream for help to trick neighbours into believing that was the case.

She was only jailed after a shocked friend of Richard’s saw some nanny cam footage and sent it to the police.
...
One of Sheree’s ways of exerting control was to threaten to go to the police and accuse Richard of abuse.

He says she would also threaten to smash her face into the bathroom mirror and send pictures to a friend.

Richard recalls: “She’d often open the window, lean out and shout, ‘No Richard, stop, you’re hurting me’, so the neighbours could hear.”
...
The documentary also features Sheree being interviewed by police as she calmly and convincingly claims to officers that Richard has been abusive to her.

She continues to twist the truth when they show her a recording of her holding a knife.'

Comedian Greg Gutfeld Urges Liberals to Rethink Their Approach to Men, or Face ‘Terrifying’ Election Results

Matt · 18 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across the globe, young men are fleeing liberalism. Public opinion polls reveal that millions of men under 30 years of age are becoming more conservative than their female counterparts, by remarkable margins of 25 to 35 percentage points. In country after country, a historic political realignment is now taking place: China, Germany, Poland, South Korea, Tunisia, United Kingdom, and the United States (1), as well as Argentina (2) and Canada (3).

In his March 13 monologue, American comedian Greg Gutfeld brought this trend to the attention of his TV audience, offering a scathing assessment of the reasons behind the decline of male support for liberalism (4):

“Men are fleeing the Democratic Party like the showing of Barbie….they’re becoming the party of AWFLs: affluent white female liberals… And men are like, ‘Hey, we know when we’re not wanted. We’ll see ourselves out,’” he revealed.

Gutfeld continued, men “know the Democratic Party has become a gender-specific party….They’ve alienated men in favor of tormented activists…It’s a party that’s inhospitable to the Y chromosome. If you’re a man, why stick around?”

The reason for this historic change is the growing feminization of liberal political parties around the world.'

Some dating coaches online are pushing women to seek more traditional gender roles

Mastodon · 19 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dating coach Karla Elia tells women not to go out with a man who is “nice” or who “treats you right,” but one who can “afford” them.

Her advice, while highly criticized by some who have seen her videos, has dominated a pocket of the internet that depicts heterosexual romance as a deal between men and women, in which women are receivers and men are providers.

The 24-year-old is part of a community of women who have gained popularity — and notoriety — online for their espousal of what can feel like antiquated dating guidance.

“I see the dating scene and relationships as a business, because it is,” said Elia, who has more than 1 million followers on TikTok. “A lot of people don’t like to admit that relationships are transactional, but they are.”'

Scotland: Police face ridicule over 'ludicrous' Hate Monster campaign

Mastodon · 19 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police Scotland has been ridiculed over a ‘ludicrous’ campaign aimed at cracking down on hate crime which - features a ‘pound shop version of a Sesame Street character’.

The animated ‘Hate Monster’ on the force’s website and YouTube channel comes ahead of the introduction of new hate crime laws, due to be enforced from April 1.

A video shows the monster with a voiceover urging people to not allow their anger or prejudice to lead them into committing an offence, such as making a racist comment.
...
The website states: ‘We know that young men aged 18-30 are most likely to commit hate crime, particularly those from socially excluded communities who are heavily influenced by their peers.

‘They may have deep-rooted feelings of being socially and economically disadvantaged, combined with ideas about white-male entitlement.’

Critics say the hate crime legislation – which was spearheaded by Humza Yousaf when he was Justice Secretary – could lead to people being prosecuted for comments made in their own homes, and overburden the police force.

One retired officer said the campaign was a ‘disgraceful’ attempt at ‘profiling’.

Former Police Scotland superintendent Martin Gallagher said: ‘The sweeping generalisations made in the campaign text are very concerning, and stating that a young man in Scotland from a socially and economically deprived background feels any sense of “white-male entitlement” makes me wonder if the authors have ever set foot in any of Scotland’s most deprived areas."

She made an artwork that excluded men. A man sued for discrimination.

Matt · 20 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the Ladies Lounge of Australia's Museum of Old and New Art (MONA) on the island of Tasmania, only one man is allowed inside: a butler, who serves the women.

The lounge, a conceptual artwork, is decorated with Picassos and other expensive adornments and is separated from the rest of the museum with opulent green curtains. A staff member is posted outside to prevent the entry of any visitor who does not identify as a woman, and guests can indulge in a $325 high tea service featuring fancy finger food.

On Tuesday, one of those excluded men, Jason Lau, argued before the state's civil and administrative tribunal that the lounge violated anti-discrimination laws by keeping him and the rest of his gender out. He submitted it should cease operating as it currently does.
Catherine Scott, a lawyer representing MONA's parent company, told the tribunal in her written submissions that Lau's exclusion was "part of the art itself."

The American artist behind the lounge, Kirsha Kaechele, who is married to the private museum's owner, told the tribunal that the practice of requiring women to drink in ladies lounges rather than public bars only ended in parts of Australia in 1970 and that in practice, exclusion of women in public spaces continues.'

'Girls Gone Wild' Tennessee Cop Maegan Hall Reaches $500k Settlement With City

Matt · 22 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Playbook: Get police job. Fuck as many fellow cops as you can and act nuts until you're fired. Sue city or force for firing you. Get a hefty settlement. What's next for her I wonder, a career in porn or maybe an OnlyFans account? Excerpt:

'Former police officer Maegan Hall just received a huge payday from the city of La Vergne, Tennessee. She filed a federal lawsuit after she was fired from the La Vergne Police Department following an investigation which uncovered six sexual relationships with five different officers on the force.

Much of the alleged action took place on the job. In addition to the sex with her colleagues, the investigation found that she sent the men nude pictures and went topless during a "Girls Gone Wild"-themed hot tub party.

The city decided to settle the lawsuit filed last year by Hall for $500,000. She and her lawyer claimed that there was a hostile work environment within the police department and that her former supervisors groomed her.

La Vergne city leaders held a special meeting on Wednesday night where they voted 3 to 1 to settle the lawsuit for $500,000. It will be paid by the city's insurance company.

The settlement includes no admission of guilt and puts Hall's lawsuit against the city and three of her former supervisors to bed. The settlement also includes her court costs, her attorney's fees, and her expenses.'

UK: Complaint lodged after ITV editor sparks fury for saying ‘we don’t want white men’

Mastodon · 24 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ITV has come under fire after a commissioner allegedly told industry execs that the broadcaster does not want “white men” as talent.

A complaint has been lodged by a producer who attended the telly gathering where ITV commissioner Nicola Lloyd reportedly made the outburst.

When discussing hosts for new shows, Lloyd allegedly said: “We really don’t want any more white men” as talent.

Lloyd made the reported comment on a panel to a packed room at the Broadcast Indie Summit.

ITV said in a statement that the panel discussion included ways to pitch new ideas and ways to further diversify content and talent offerings.

The complaint, written by a television producer in the audience, said that Lloyd was discussing ITV’s “important ‘9pm’ broadcast slot”.

“On numerous occasions when attending meetings with British television executives and an ITV owned production company based at White City, I have heard informally that they do not want more ‘white males’ as talent.'

‘Motherhood is a trap. Marriage is a bad deal’: Feminist Corinne Maier on learning to be selfish

Matt · 25 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Yep, selfishness makes the world better for everyone! Ugh. Excerpt:

'“It’s never too late to learn how to be selfish,” says Corinne Maier, grave-faced behind her heavy-rimmed spectacles.

“Sadly, women aren’t born that way, so it does have to be learnt. But if we can forget about the ‘superwoman’ we’ve been bullied into thinking we have to be – at home, with the husband, the kids – and release our inner ‘slackerwoman’…”

We would be happier? “Exactly. Happiness cannot be achieved without selfishness. But that is achievable for every woman. You too can be selfish,” says Maier.'

UK: James May claims older, white men are ‘written off as unworthy’ during toxic masculinity debate

Mastodon · 27 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'James May has weighed in on the state of the modern man, claiming men are in danger of being “written off”.

The 61-year-old star made the comments on Monday (25 March) on the Who We Are Now podcast, which is hosted by his co-star on The Grand Tour, Richard Hammond, and Hammond’s daughter Izzy.

When asked if the “modern man is in trouble”, May said: “Well probably not, because the world rarely does go to the dogs.

“But I do think men are getting a bit of a bad rap recently, because there is a lot of talk about toxic masculinity.”

He continued: “I know there is a lot of it around, and it’s right that we confront it and address it. But it’s not all of us.

“We seem to be staying close to a point where simply being a bloke, especially if you’re a slightly older, lower middle class, white bloke to be honest, you’re almost immediately written off as being unworthy.”'

On Jontay Porter, the rise of sports betting, and toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 27 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is the legalization and integration of sports betting into mainstream sports media leading to increased toxic masculinity in the sports community?

Okay, I understand this isn't an undergrad liberal arts course, but hear me out for a second. It's International Women's Month, after all. As a woman in the sports space, I face toxic masculinity on the daily, and the sad part is that most of the time, the people perpetuating it don't even realize what they are doing.

It's the looks I get when I say I'm at the game as a member of the media, or the way male fans glare at me when they see the credential around my neck. It's the way I get airdropped anonymous explicit pictures while I'm trying to cover an NBA game from my spot on the media row.'

Foreskin Appreciation Day, April 4

DanBollinger · 27 March 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Say the 'F' Word and Break the Taboo, Learn the Power of the Foreskin

Intact America will give foreskin the respect it deserves on Thursday, April 4 — 4/4, the FOREth Day of April — with the second annual Foreskin Day, a virtual celebration as part of Intact America's national "Skin in the Game" anti-circumcision advocacy campaign. The program will focus on encouraging everyone to get comfortable saying the "F" word — "Foreskin."

Press Release

Teacher McKenna Kindred pleads guilty to sexual student relationship but won't go to jail

Mastodon · 4 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Washington state high school teacher accused of having an inappropriate sexual relationship with one of her students pleaded guilty to the crime but will face no jail time under an agreed plea bargain, court records show.

McKenna Aileen Kindred, who taught at Central Valley High School in Spokane Valley, pleaded guilty to one count of second-degree sexual misconduct and one count of communication with a minor for immoral purposes, according to Spokane County Superior Court records obtained by USA TODAY.

Both charges are misdemeanors.

Court documents show Superior Court Judge Dean Chuang suspended Kindred's sentence but said she must participate in two years of probation, pay a fine and told her she is not permitted to have contact with the victim.'

Why are women not protected by new hate crime law?

Mastodon · 4 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scotland has introduced a new hate crime law which seeks to protect various categories of people from hatred and prejudice.

Transgender identity is included as a protected characteristic in the legislation.

However biological sex is not, to the dismay of some campaigners for women's rights, including the Harry Potter author JK Rowling.

She recently wrote on X that "women gain no additional protections, of course."
...
"Women, like everyone else, are already protected from threatening or abusive behaviour in law," said a Scottish government spokesperson.

They added that ministers were planning to go further, by introducing a bill to tackle misogyny which would be "the first of its kind in the world".

The law, said the spokesperson, would "create a new focus on protecting women and girls to address criminal behaviour motivated purely by misogyny."'

Scotland’s Next Farcical Frontier

Mastodon · 4 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Buried within the BBC’s report on Scotland’s execrable new “hate crime” law is this little nugget of joy:

The Hate Crime and Public Order (Scotland) Act 2021 creates a new crime of “stirring up hatred” relating to age, disability, religion, sexual orientation, transgender identity or being intersex.

The law does not protect women as a group from hatred.

The Scottish government is expected to include this later in a separate misogyny law.

Am I alone in finding this last line hilarious? I am, of course, vehemently opposed to all “hate crime” laws, because, like the Supreme Court, I think that governments should superintend speech that is inextricably tied to behavior rather than speech that reflects certain viewpoints. But, even for those who disagree, “women as a group” is a laughably broad category. What’s the intellectual justification here? “Women” are not an individual who is being targeted by a mob. They’re not a minority. They’re not even mathematically oppressable in a democratic system such as Scotland’s. They’re literally half the population. How, pray, is protecting them from mean words supposed to work in practice?

The Scottish government’s “Working Group on Misogyny and Criminal Justice” recommends that the country “create a new offence of Stirring Up Hatred Against Women and Girls.” Where’s the threshold, I wonder? Does observational humor count? If so, pretty much every comedian is going to prison. What about drunk talk? If some guy at a bar in Scotland has a few too many beers and says, “You know who I don’t like? Women, that’s who. And not just my ex-wife, mind you. I’m talking about the whole lot of them — including the girls.” Do the police break down the door? Or does one perhaps have to formalize one’s misogyny in book form? Harlots of Aberdeen: Why Everything Women Are Is Ghastly, And What You Can Do About It — out now in paperback, where all disreputable books are sold.'

Married teacher, 32, is accused of raping boy, 11, on her bed after sending him nude photos and $700

Mastodon · 6 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A married schoolteacher is accused of grooming an 11-year-old boy with nude photos and $700 until they had sex on her bed.

Ashley Elizabeth Bardfield, 32, was arrested on Wednesday night in Mt Zion, Illinois, after the boy helped police with a sting operation.

The sixth-grade substitute teacher at Decatur Public Schools District was recorded telling the boy they could 'do it again' and she couldn't get pregnant.

Bardfield was reported to police after the boy's mother noticed him 'acting differently' after spending the night at the teacher's home on March 29-30.

She went through his phone and allegedly found texts between him and Bardfield and photos of them, including one of them 'flipping off the camera'.'

Support positive masculinity in England and Wales schools, union conference told

Mastodon · 6 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teachers should promote positive masculinity in schools in England and Wales in order to support boys who might otherwise feel demonised and end up turning to “the manosphere” for hope, a union conference has been told.

Charlotte Keogh, a secondary school English teacher from Worcestershire, said boys and young men needed support and guidance as they grappled with ideas about masculinity, rather than being punished and silenced.

The motion, which was carried, advocated for the wider use of the NEU’s “It’s Not OK” toolkit to tackle the problem in schools. Keogh opposed the amendment, however, “on the basis that the toolkit needs to address positive masculinity and seek to better support this culture in our schools and wider society rather than punish and silence our young boys’ cries for purpose, ambition and responsibility”.

Lucy Coleman from Oxfordshire, who proposed the motion, said: “You would think times have moved on since I was young, but actually things are worse now than they were. The internet and access to social media and online bullying has made it easier for sexist views to be shared and normalised. It is hard enough growing up as a female in a male-dominated world, but the added pressures of social media make it unbearable for young girls.”'

Adult woman posed as schoolgirl to molest teen boys

Mastodon · 6 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Florida woman, 23, accused of pretending to be a 14-year-old to molest a teenage boy has been hit with more charges as victims continue to come forward.

Alyssa Ann Zinger of Tampa, Florida, allegedly pretended to be a homeschooled 14-year-old girl to prey on middle schoolers and engage in sex acts with younger boys.

The 23-year-old was arrested in November for engaging in more than 30 sexual acts with at least one student as young as 12 from Wilson Middle School.

Zinger was taken into custody over claims she posed as a home-schooled teenager to contact the victim on Snapchat, before allegedly engaging in a sexual relationship with him.

She was arrested for a second time on Thursday and hit with additional charges for sex crimes after four more victims said that they had been allegedly targeted by Zinger.'

The Global Gender Divide We Really Should Be Talking About

Mastodon · 7 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A shared trend is a turning away from feminism among young men, even as women turn more strongly toward it. A 2023 survey by Equimundo found that just 47% of men in the U.S. aged 18 to 23 agreed with the statement that “feminism has made America a better place,” compared with 56% of men aged 38 to 45. This is a shocking development.

Perhaps what’s most troubling here is the rise of zero-sum thinking with regard to gender. Some 38% of Republican men, for example, agree with the statement that “the gains women have made in society have come at the expense of men.” Zero-sum calculations of this kind, not only with regard to gender but also race or immigration, can lead to the political equivalent of trench warfare, with each side digging in that leaves everyone worse off.

In a zero-sum political environment, merely drawing attention to the problems of boys and men can be seen as somehow downplaying the ongoing challenges facing girls and women. This is why Democrats, in particular, are so reluctant to directly address male issues. That is a recipe for bad politics.

But the cultural consequences of this neglect are even more important. Many American men feel like their concerns—in mental health, education, work, and family life—are not taken seriously enough. And they are not entirely wrong about that. The suicide rate is four times higher for men than women, and has risen by a third among young men since 2010. Women and girls are leaving boys and men in the dust in the classroom and on college campuses. Over the last few decades, wages for working class men have stagnated.'

The 4B Movement in South Korea and why it's said to contribute to the country's falling birth rate

Mastodon · 7 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Korean feminist movement 4B, which first started in 2019 on Twitter, is blowing up on TikTok.

In a nutshell, the movement advocates for women to reject gender norms, including marriage and child-rearing, in protest of the country's rampant misogyny.

The term was coined by South Korean author Cho Nam-joo in her 2016 novel Kim Jiyoung, Born 1982. The four Bs stand for four principles: “Bihon” (no heterosexual marriage), “Bichulsan” (no childbirth), “Biyeonae” (no dating men) and “Bisekseu” (no heterosexual sexual relationships).

The 4B movement then exploded on TikTok after a TikToker named Jeanie, who goes by denimchromosome, gave a spirited rant about it on Feb 17.

She said the 4B movement is women’s response to “giving up” on men, whom she referred to as “f a*”, adding that women are going to go “extinct”.

“Korean ethnicity is about to go away, and Korean women are literally like…,” Jeanie added while holding up her middle finger.

Her point was that Korean women are tired of the misogyny and hence are going to boycott heterosexual relationships and other feminine norms.

The video now has over 5.5 million views and thousands of comments, mostly from women calling for the 4B movement to go beyond the shores of South Korea.'

The report from Canada

Matt · 8 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Interview here. Another great interview from BlueOrange22 on YouTube.

How Obama Gave Trump the 'Military-Age Males' Talking Point

Matt · 9 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Immigration hawks want you to believe that men are a threat by default. Figures like former President Donald Trump and current Speaker of the House Mike Johnson (R–La.) argue that immigration is really an "invasion" because many migrants lined up at the border are "military-age males" from "adversarial nations." The implication isn't that these people work for any specific army or militant organization, but that any young man from the wrong country is guilty until proven innocent.

Conservatives and liberals alike might be surprised to learn that this idea was written into U.S. policy by former President Barack Obama. During drone campaigns in Afghanistan and Pakistan, the Obama administration counted any "military-age" men in certain areas as enemy fighters, even if the U.S. government didn't know who those men were. The policy allowed Obama to lowball the number of civilians killed by U.S. drone strikes.

Of course, the category of military-age or fighting-age men is much older than the drone program. But as political scientist Micah Zenko pointed out in an article for the Council on Foreign Relations, the term "military-age male reentered the lexicon of American warfare" during the Obama-era debate over the drone program.'

Canadian DNA lab knew its paternity tests identified the wrong dads, but it kept selling them

Matt · 9 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Canadian DNA laboratory knowingly delivered prenatal paternity test results that routinely identified the wrong biological fathers — ruling out the real dads — and left a trail of shattered lives around the globe, a CBC News investigation has found.

Harvey Tenenbaum, the owner of Viaguard Accu-Metrics, told a CBC producer with a hidden camera during a conversation in his office that prenatal paternity test results that his laboratory produced for about a decade were "never that accurate."

The hidden camera conversation unfolded in the midst of a months-long CBC News investigation into a years-long pattern of erroneous results produced by Viaguard's non-invasive prenatal paternity testing. The test — if done correctly — matches DNA from a fetus that is in a mother's blood with the biological father's DNA.'

New State Department diversity chief believes US is a ‘failed historical model’ with a ‘colonizing past’

Matt · 10 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Carr Johnson embraces a "feminist" leadership style, but one that "counter[s] White-centered feminism trends and narratives."

She said in a feminist webinar in August 2020, "Because we live and work within systems… so deeply rooted in patriarchy and colonialism and racism and otherism, we tend to be very resistant to shifts and changes. It's very uncomfortable for many colleagues… A culture of misogyny has allowed men to act without consequence and it becomes part of what we believe is normal, right? In order to make any change, we've literally got to be about the work of dismantling that traditional structure at every juncture."'

A man’s world? Art exhibit about misogyny was only open to women — until a man complained

Mastodon · 11 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A museum in Australia is being forced to allow men into art exhibit originally conceived for women only, after a tribunal ruled it “discriminatory,” following a complaint by a disgruntled man who was denied entry.

Tasmania’s Museum of Old and New Art (MONA) has been ordered to stop refusing entry to “persons who do not identify as ladies,” to its Ladies Lounge exhibit within 28 days, after a ruling was made by the Tasmanian Civil and Administrative Tribunal on Tuesday.

...

During proceedings, Kaechele told the tribunal that denying men entry to the mysterious room is indeed part of the art — giving them a taste of the discrimination and exclusion many women have experienced through history.

Kaechele said she believed that women “deserve both equal rights and special privileges in the form of unequal rights,” as a means of restitution for historical injustices, “for a minimum of 300 years.”'

Glamorous ex-Howard Stern Show star Elisa Jordana issues groveling apology after horrific video of her attacking boyfriend in a car on livestream

Mastodon · 12 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A YouTuber and former Howard Stern show personality has issued an apology after a video of her battering her boyfriend went viral and led to her arrest.

Elisa Ann Schwartz, who goes by the pseudonym Elisa Jordana, posted a livestream to YouTube on Monday as she drove through Palm Beach County, Florida.

During the broadcast, she and a man described as her boyfriend - who has not yet been named - were wrapped up in a violent altercation, with Schwartz repeatedly punching him as she confronted him about an alleged infidelity.

The dramatic footage shows her smacking the man in the face and threatening him.

He retaliates, grabbing her head and chasing after her on the road, before returning to the car and turning off the livestream.

Hours after the video was uploaded, Schwartz was arrested by the Palm Beach Sheriff's Office and charged with felony battery.

In a statement to DailyMail.com, the influencer apologized for her actions and insisted she had misrepresented herself.

'I just want to say I'm so sorry for what I portrayed on my livestream that everyone saw,' Schwartz said.'

Quinnipiac Law scholarship excludes heterosexual males, faces Title IX complaint

Mastodon · 12 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Quinnipiac University School of Law is facing a federal civil rights complaint for a scholarship only open to women and LGBTQ+ students.

The complaint, filed last week with the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights, comes from legal scholar Adam Kissel who shared a copy with The College Fix.

Kissel, a visiting fellow at the Heritage Foundation and former deputy assistant secretary for higher education in the Trump Administration, told The Fix the Goff Law Group Endowed Law Scholarship is "a blatant violation of civil rights." Title IX prohibits educational institutions from discrimination on the basis of sex.'

50 Years of Boyhood Pain and Suffering: A literature review of America's most performed unnecessary surgery

DanBollinger · 13 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Read Essay. Excerpt:

'An increasing number of experiments have intentionally inflicted genital pain upon thousands of boys for the past fifty years using them as guinea pigs to study the "efficacy" of anesthesia and surgical devices during the genital surgery to remove their foreskins (aka circumcision). A search at PubMed for journal articles containing the key phrase (circumcision anesthesia) OR (circumcision pain) and filtered by sex, age, and date of publication yielded some surprising and ghastly results. 31,303 boys 2 were enrolled by their parents in 192 studies from September 1974 to April 2024. All the studies acknowledged that circumcision was painful. All concluded that no surgical device, technique, anesthesia, or pain relief protocol removed all pain.'

In Ukraine’s West, Draft Dodgers Run, and Swim, to Avoid the War

Matt · 13 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That thousands of Ukrainian men have chosen to risk the swim rather than face the dangers as soldiers on the eastern front highlights the challenge for President Volodymyr Zelensky as he seeks to mobilize fresh troops after more than two years of bruising, bloody trench warfare with Russia.

“We cannot judge these people,” Lieutenant Tonkoshtan said. “But if all men leave, who will defend Ukraine?”

With Russia having seized the initiative on the battlefield in recent months, Ukraine’s ability to defend itself hinges on replenishing its arsenal of weaponry, a matter largely up to allies, and mobilizing troops at home.'

Expelled male student sues college for faulty rape trial

Mastodon · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male student accused of sexual assault and subsequently expelled by administrators at Amherst College recently sued the school for denying him due process and ignoring key evidence substantiating his claims of innocence.

In February 2012, the male student—identified as “John Doe”—escorted his girlfriend’s roommate, identified as Sandra Jones, back to her residence hall where Jones then performed oral sex on him. Doe alleges that he was blacked out during the encounter.

Roughly two years after the incident occurred, the female student accused Doe of sexually assaulting her and the school launched its own investigation. Doe was forced to partake in a school-led rape trial absent of any legal representation and eventually expelled after a panel of students and administrators found him ‘guilty.''

Americans overwhelmingly oppose efforts to roll back campus due process rights

Mastodon · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the Department of Education finalizes new regulations that would strip college students of critical due process rights in cases involving allegations of sexual misconduct, a survey released today by the Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression shows Americans overwhelmingly support these rights and believe they are necessary to ensure fairness and just outcomes.

Title IX is a federal civil rights law that prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in educational programs receiving federal funds. Among other things, it requires institutions to investigate allegations of sexual harassment and assault. After a series of delays, the White House Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs is expected by May to finalize its review of proposed Title IX changes that would reverse due process protections for college students accused of sexual misconduct.'

Biden Title IX changes threaten free speech, due process: legal experts

Mastodon · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Coward said the “due process rollbacks of the proposed rules” are “numerous and alarming.”

“They would: eliminate students’ right to a live hearing; eliminate the right to cross-examination; weaken students’ right to active legal representation,” he wrote.

The new regulations would “allow a single campus bureaucrat to serve as judge and jury; require colleges and universities to use the weak ‘preponderance of the evidence’ standard to determine guilt, unless they use a higher standard for other alleged misconduct.”

George Washington University law Professor John Banzhaf agreed with Coward’s concerns.

Banzhaf told The Fix “under the new regulations” for Title IX complaints, those charged with violating the rules “would be entitled to various procedural due process protections which have yet to be determined.” However, there is a history of schools failing to fulfill due process requirements even before the new regulations, he said.'

Associate Professor Denise Hines educates FBI personnel on the realities of male victims of domestic violence

Mastodon · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Associate Professor in the Department of Social Work Denise Hines was the keynote speaker for an FBI event for Domestic Violence Awareness Month (October) dedicated to bringing awareness to male victims of intimate partner violence (IPV), a historically under-recognized population of IPV victims. The event, “Men: An Underrepresented Victim,” shed light on the statistics and lived experiences of male IPV victims. Hines’s speech, which included evidence supported by her research, provided key insights on the physical, psychological, sexual, and legal/administrative abuse men can experience at the hands of their partners.

For example, Hines discredited some often-discussed myths about IPV against men. “People think men can’t be victims of sexual assault: That’s not true. Our data shows that they often are and that when sexual abuse is part of the IPV, the relationships are more dangerous,” Hines said. “People then ask: Does it really hurt them? Yes, it does. The majority of male victims have been injured, often severely enough to need medical attention, and sometimes, they are too embarrassed to seek medical care.”'

Are men more violent than women?

Mastodon · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steven F. Messner and Robert J. Sampson decided to take a closer look at the numbers behind the statistics of violence. They approached the issue by testing a simple hypothesis: If men are more violent than women, we should see more acts of violence in communities that have a larger male population compared to a female population. But their findings proved differently.

Messner and Sampson discovered that the rate of violent crime was higher in communities that had more females than males. This meant a larger percentage of men in these communities committed acts of violence than men in communities with a more balanced ratio of men to women. Why would that be?

They suggested a few ideas that might explain this trend. One is that in communities that have more women than men, there are more cases of disruption in families. That means that there are more single-parent families -- usually families with no father. Messner and Sampson suggest that the lack of a stable family environment contributes to a culture of crime and violence, though they say that other factors are also important.'

Feminist now calls for violent men to act in face of Middle East troubles

Matt · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

One Zoe Strimpel with feminist bona fides now wants Western men to reclaim violence and act! Funny how feminist pacifism goes right out the door and admonishes men to act when Reality presses in. Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the good things about being a citizen of the West is that, since the last world war ended in 1945, most men's survival has not been imperilled by the need to go and fight in massive wars.

We do not have to kiss goodbye to tens or hundreds of thousands of beloved sons, friends, fathers or brothers. We have a professional army, are accustomed to relatively small casualty numbers when that army does go into combat, and, bar periodic terror attacks, we are generally able to get on with the business of living miserably or prosperously – but living.

Less lovely is the corollary of this comfort: the moral decrepitude and cowardice that has sunk deep into our psyches. We are too narcissistic and bored, too cossetted and ill-focussed to be collectively courageous – or warlike. This has been devastating for the trajectory of the whole world in general and catastrophic for the safety, security and prosperity of the West.'

I wasn’t hired because I’m a white man — can I sue?

Mastodon · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I’ve been passed over for a promotion by several females and was told that’s just the way it is; that we have to promote women, as well as racially diverse people. So, white men are becoming extinct in the workplace. Does that sound like a lawsuit to you? These are the horrible questions you have to ask in these horrific times.
...
The law protects everyone from discrimination, even employees who have historically been entrenched in the majority, such as white men.

They are also entitled to protection under any laws that were intended to assure equal treatment for women and racial minorities. Whether or not you have a lawsuit based on your particular circumstance is a question for a lawyer.'

Glamorous ex-Howard Stern Show star Elisa Jordana claims she's the victim after fighting with Beverly Hills tycoon boyfriend

Mastodon · 14 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The YouTuber who was arrested last week after getting into a physical fight with her boyfriend on a livestream says she feels lucky to have walked away from the altercation with her life.

Elisa Jordana, the former Howard Stern Show writer and personality, spoke with TMZ in the aftermath of her arrest for felony battery.

Jordana - whose real name is Elisa Ann Schwartz - claims she was hit repeatedly and even suffocated by the man in the car. The man, her on-camera love interest Bahram Alipour, is the son of a wealthy Beverly Hills businessman.

The two were filmed hitting each other during a livestream where Jordana accused Alipour of cheating.

The live-streamer insists she is the true victim, because she feels that in slightly different circumstances, she could 'be dead right now."

Nebraska teacher, 45, caught naked in car with teen is married to a Harvard-educated government official

Mastodon · 16 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Nebraska substitute teacher caught naked in a car with a teenage student is a mom married to a Harvard-educated, high-ranking federal government employee, according to records and social media accounts.

Erin Ward, 45, allegedly confessed to having sex with the 17-year-old boy — a student at Burke High School where she worked — in the back of the car and was charged with felony sexual abuse by a school employee.

By sleeping with the teen, Ward is also accused of cheating on her husband, a director at the US Department of Defense — with whom she shares three kids, according to social media posts shared by the Gretna couple.

Erin Ward was arrested early Saturday when Douglas County sheriff's deputies found her allegedly fooling around with the teenage boy in the car she shared with her husband.

The panicked teen hurried to the driver's seat and sped off in the vehicle but crashed two blocks later — at which point he got out and fled on foot.

Erin Ward remained in the car, where she got dressed and then allegedly confessed to sleeping with the boy.

Police found her ID from Omaha Public Schools on her and she said she substituted at various schools in the area — including the teen's.'

1984 and Julia: Re-writing books and history

Matt · 16 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Check back in 300 (or fewer) years. Shakespeare will have been a lesbian and nothing attributable to him (her) will be recognizable by a contemporary scholar. Excerpt:

'Julia also belongs to the recent tradition of feminist retellings—in this case, of a work often criticized for its treatment of women. Newman herself has told the Telegraph that she once “absolutely idolized” Orwell but later came to see his fiction, and especially Nineteen Eighty-four, as steeped in “hatred of women [that] is really extreme.” That’s debatable: Some argue that Orwell’s feminist critics wrongly conflate protagonist Winston Smith’s hostility toward women (explicitly acknowledged in the book and clearly shown to be rooted in totalitarianism’s monstrous warping of human relations) with Orwell’s own attitude.

One could point out that Winston’s vision of humanity unwarped by the Party and its ideology is connected primarily to women—his own vanished mother, the “prole” woman singing as she does her laundry—and that his betrayal of Julia marks the point of no return in his own dehumanization and surrender.

...

In Nineteen Eighty-four, the Party seeks to tightly control sexuality by limiting acceptable sex to married, strictly procreative intercourse in which the wife is not expected to take any pleasure and branding everything else “sexcrime”; young adult Party zealots, women especially, are recruited into the “Junior Anti-Sex League,” which advocates total celibacy and procreation through “artsem,” or artificial insemination. Julia plausibly reveals that this anti-sex ideology coexists with the pervasive sexual exploitation of young women, including League members, by senior Party men; “artsem” is, more often than not, a hasty alibi for a pregnancy resulting from these liaisons. A particularly memorable segment of the novel early on, before the start of Julia’s relationship with Winston, chronicles a scandalous incident at the dorm she shares with other young Party women. Fixing a blocked toilet, Julia discovers that the cause of the blockage is an aborted fetus someone has attempted to flush down; the culprit turns out to be Vicky, the young and naïve “baby” of the dorm who has been given abortion-inducing pills by the Party official she’s been involved with. Then, in a fitting postscript to this episode, another dorm resident is hauled away as the transgressor.'

Gap between Caitlin Clark's WNBA salary and her male counterparts' draws outrage

Mastodon · 17 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College basketball superstar Caitlin Clark is set to soar to new heights in the WNBA — but her rookie contract means she will pocket a fraction of the millions her male counterparts have made on the court.

Under the 2024 WNBA rookie scale for the No. 1-4 draft picks, she'll earn a base salary of $76,535 for her first year, $78,066 the second year and $85,873 the third, with a fourth-year option of $97,582.

Despite Clark's unprecedented star power, her salary is a sliver of the eye-popping amount male athletes make in the NBA.

WNBA draft picks No. 2-4 — Stanford's Cameron Brink, who went to the Los Angeles Sparks, South Carolina's Kamilla Cardoso, with the Chicago Sky, and Tennessee's Rickea Jackson, also with the Sparks — will make the same pay as Clark.

For comparison, San Antonio Spurs rookie star Victor Wembanyama — the No. 1 pick in last year's NBA draft — secured a $55 million four-year contract under which he pocketed $12.1 million in his first season, according to the athlete contract tracker Spotrac.

Co-host Jenna Bush Hager added: "Honestly the gap is so jarring. ... We're talking about equal pay. That ain't even close."

Journalist Lisa Ling wrote on Instagram: "Steph Curry makes more per game than what Caitlin Clark is making for 4 years! With the toll sports and travel take on women's bodies, is this even a living wage? I know WNBA games have not brought in comparable numbers by any stretch of the imagination, but this is disgraceful. Do better for all of our women athletes!"'

Sexual equality has been a disaster for men – especially when it comes to dating

Mastodon · 17 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are in crisis. So found Danny Dyer in How to Be a Man, a Channel 4 documentary about modern masculinity (part two is on tomorrow night). And, he discovered, it's young men who are struggling most of all. They complain of being endlessly lectured about the evils of "toxic masculinity"; say they're victims of "misandry" (anti-male prejudice); and find themselves being led astray by unsuitable online role models such as Andrew Tate.

No doubt there's some truth in what they say. Frankly, though, I think there's a much bigger reason why so many young men today feel confused, lonely and inadequate. But we don't like to talk about it, because it's just a tiny bit awkward.

Still, let's be honest for once and say it. The rise of sexual equality over the past 50-plus years has been great for women. But it's been a disaster for men. Especially in the field of dating.

The uncomfortable truth, at least if you're a young man, is that women nowadays are free to be an awful lot choosier than they used to. In the days when the sexes were wildly unequal, and women were thus far less likely to be financially independent, many felt compelled to marry the first passable solvent man they met. Settle down at 18, become a housewife, have children. Well, what else was there to do?

Now that young women tend to have things like careers and money, however, they can afford to have higher standards in their choice of partner. And let's face it, we men haven't necessarily risen to that particular challenge. Hence the rise of "incels", or involuntary celibates – that is, men who can't get a girlfriend.'

A woman who accused Trevor Bauer of sex assault is now charged with defrauding the ex-MLB player

Mastodon · 17 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona woman who accused former major league pitcher Trevor Bauer of sexual assault has been charged with defrauding the baseball player.

An indictment unsealed Monday in Maricopa County Superior Court charges the woman with fraud and theft by extortion, both felonies, but doesn't provide specific details about the alleged crimes. It says Bauer and one other person were defrauded in a scheme that potentially spanned several years.

The Associated Press does not typically identify people who say they have been victims of sexual assault unless they come forward publicly.

The woman sued Bauer in December 2022, accusing him of rape two years earlier that she said resulted in pregnancy in late 2020.'

Trevor Bauer Guilty Of Being An Idiot, Victim Of His Own Stupid Decisions

Mastodon · 17 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Trevor Bauer is more of a cautionary tale of what foolish sexual decisions lead to than he is an innocent lily-white victim.

The embattled former Dodgers pitcher has been fighting to get back to the MLB ever since being placed on leave and ultimately suspended after sexual abuse allegations surfaced.

The initial allegations were brought by a woman named Lindsey Hill, who alleged at the time that Bauer abused her in rough fashion during a sexual encounter. Hill's claims of abuse are now widely-viewed as false and debunked, and the two settled a lawsuit that resulted in Bauer paying nothing. A phone call was later released where Hill claimed to be in significant pain, and Bauer acknowledged he was asked to hit her, according to the New York Post.

What really happened the night of the alleged sexual encounter will likely never be known, but there's certainly no proof that the public is aware of to suggest Bauer did anything to break the law. That's the reality of the situation.

Well, Bauer took another victory lap Tuesday when another accuser - Darcy Adanna Esemonu - was charged with felony fraud after allegedly lying about being pregnant in an attempt to extort him.

The former MLB pitcher claimed he had "one plain sexual encounter in December 2020. Nothing that could be considered remotely rough. She initiated it."

He proceeded to display messages to back up his story that Esemonu was the person pursuing a sexual relationship, and as he showed, doesn't seem to be the kind of person playing with a full deck of cards.

However, Bauer's latest video also confirms a different story that has long been simmering:

He's an idiot when it comes to his sexual decisions.

What's clear from Bauer's sexual encounters with Hill and Esemonu is that he didn't know these women well at all. Yet, he still made the conscious and proactive decisions to have sexual relations with two women who later attempted to ruin his life. To some degree, Hill succeeded. Trevor Bauer was booted out of the MLB after her allegations, and there appears to be very little interest in bringing him back.

Hill lying - if that's what has happened - is totally unacceptable, unforgivable, shameful and downright disgusting. The exact same can be said for Darcy Adanna Esemonu, who is facing criminal charges.

None of what was just said dissolves Bauer of his responsibility in this situation, and he holds a lot of it. More than most people would like to admit.'

Mom who admitted to smothering toddler while high on meth walks free thanks to controversial judge

Mastodon · 18 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Indianapolis mother who admitted to fatally smothering her baby while high on meth became overwhelmed and hid her face in her hands when a controversial judge allowed her to walk free.

Dacia Lacey, 32, was found not guilty of neglect of a dependent resulting in the 2022 death of her daughter, Alona, by Judge Mark Stoner, who is already facing calls to resign after giving a mentally ill man who fatally shot a police officer a sentence of time served, WTHR reported.

The mom was cleared even though the judge told her it was “a case that happens when you’re a bad parent. “

“There are some things you can never do. You can never have sole possession of your children and go out and use drugs,” Stoner said.

“You’re not innocent, but you’re not guilty of what the state has charged you with.”

Lacey — who faced up to 40 years in prison if convicted — dropped her head as Stoner told her that he found her not guilty in the bench trial. The mom, wearing a bright yellow prison suit, pursed her lips and squeezed her eyes shut as if to stop tears before she placed her head in her hands.
...
Court records show that Lacey gave police a lengthy confession, detailing through tears how she smothered her daughter because she was high on meth and wanted her to stop crying so she could get some sleep.'

CDEV and #GenderEqualityForMen

Matt · 18 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Basic Index of Gender Inequality, which measures childhood educational opportunities, healthy life expectancy, and overall life satisfaction, likewise reveals men have fallen behind women in 91 out of 134 countries. Other disparities have been documented in sex discrimination against men in hiring decisions, including for STEM positions.

But funding agencies continue favor females over males by more than a three-to-one margin, according to one analysis.'

From the author of "No More Mr. Nice Guy"

Matt · 18 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

A lot of men have Nice Guy Syndrome. The author of a significant book on the subject speaks about it on YouTube here.

'Oracle of Wall Street' who predicted 2008 financial crash says rise in young, sexless men living with their parents will cause house prices to plunge 30%

Matt · 18 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Of all the misandrist claptrap... Excerpt:

'A financial analyst nicknamed the 'Oracle of Wall Street' has said a 'growing crisis of the young American male' will cause house prices to fall as much as 30 percent.

Meredith Whitney, who earned the title after predicting the financial crisis of 2007 - 2008, suggested young men increasingly living with their parents and disinterested in starting families will drastically reduce housing demand.

The trend of men refusing to settle in turn means more women are remaining single into later life, leaving them without the income or need for big family homes.

But it comes as baby boomers start to downsize, meaning there will be a surplus of available properties. Much of the last decade's gains in home values have been driven by high demand and low supply - a phenomenon, Whitney says, is reversing.

To explain the rise in men living at home, she pointed to the increasing prevalence of video games, starting in the mid-2000s.'

New Title IX Rules Are Out. Here’s What You Need to Know

Mastodon · 19 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After several delays, the Biden administration finally released its final rule overhauling Title IX this morning, kicking off what will likely be a frantic few months as colleges race to update their policies in time for the coming academic year. Colleges and universities have until Aug. 1 to comply.

Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 protects students in all levels of education from sex-based discrimination. The new regulations, which appear similar to what was proposed in June 2022, significantly alter how colleges and universities respond to reports of sexual harassment and assault and expand protections for LGBTQ+ and pregnant students.

Other changes make it easier for victims to report sexual harassment and end the current requirement that colleges hold live hearings with an opportunity for cross-examination to allow those accused to confront their accusers. The 1,577-page regulations released Friday are here.
...
North Carolina representative Virginia Foxx, the Republican chair of the House Education and Workforce Committee, said in a statement that the Education Department has placed Title IX “on the chopping block.”

“The rule also undermines existing due process rights, placing students and institutions in legal jeopardy and again undermining the protections Title IX is intended to provide,” she said.'

I’m a man, and here’s what Danny Dyer’s How to Be a Man doesn’t tell you about the ‘war on men’

Mastodon · 20 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In these specific ways and others, it’s true that men do sometimes have it worse than women; that men are subject to prejudices and pressures that women usually are not. But misandry hasn’t produced these conditions. They are caused and exacerbated by the self-same patriarchy that chauvinist men espouse. Conventional masculinity hasn’t been torn down by the feminist agenda: it’s buckled under its own noxious expectations. What matters is that we construct something healthier and more honest from its rubble.

...

Ultimately, the modern masculinity crisis is inextricable from other complex social dynamics – including class and race. Like all markers of identity, masculinity isn’t necessarily helped by being reduced to one homogeneous blob. How to Be a Man at least touches on this, and looks at how regressive male attitudes are often exacerbated by socioeconomic circumstance. Fixing the problem is not so simple as getting a few blokes to unsubscribe from Andrew Tate’s YouTube channel. Structural change is needed. Education. Funding. Mutual compassion. Without that, the war, as it were, will surely drag on. And there’s no getting out of the firing line.'

Abortion, circumcision, workforce among focus areas in new round of health care legislation

Mastodon · 23 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unless a child required circumcision for medical reasons, Medicaid could no longer cover it under House Bill 1683. A separate bill would require providers to show parents the tools used in a circumcision and get their written permission before performing the procedure.

In fiscal year 2023, the state's Medicaid plan, half of which is funded by the federal government, paid $213,160 for circumcision procedures, according to the Department of Health and Human Services. Of that, about $90,500 was for "elective" circumcisions that would no longer be covered under the bill.

Nearly 20 states have passed similar legislation, according to the Journal of Urology. Medical experts disagree over whether the potential risks, such as surgical complications, outweigh the potential benefits, such as a reduced risk of urinary tract infections.

The second piece of legislation, House Bill 1706, would prohibit providers from performing a circumcision until parents have signed a form that warns them of health complications.'

Bill ending Medicaid coverage for elective circumcisions fails

Mastodon · 23 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Hampshire Medicaid plans will continue to cover all infant circumcisions for parents who choose the procedure.

In a 178-197 vote, lawmakers rejected House Bill 1683, which would have limited Medicaid coverage to medically necessary circumcision. The bill's supporters said they opposed spending state money on elective procedures. The bill was one of two addressing circumcision this year; House Bill 1706 sought to require providers to show parents the tools used for circumcision and explain the risks, such as the potential for decreased sexual pleasure, before performing the procedure. The House voted to send that bill to interim study earlier this month.

In urging House members to defeat the bill, Rep. Joe Schapiro, a Keene Democrat, cited health benefits and made the kind of parental-rights argument often voiced by Republicans who supported the bill.

"It's a parental choice, and I am here today to ask you not to take that parental choice, that parental prerogative, dare I say that parental right away," Schapiro said. "Passing this bill would be an intrusion into the freedom of New Hampshire parents to make medical decisions for their families."'

How to save boys from masculinity

Mastodon · 23 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But what she found is that, despite considerable progress on gender in society, the way we raise boys hasn't changed much — and the collision of expectations has created a crisis for boys that has fed the crisis for young men that has, in turn, fed the crisis of democracy that's facing the world today.

We talked with Whippman about BoyMom, her forthcoming book on what it means to parent boys in an America that's largely failed to equip its boys and men with a way to deal with change; how both the left and the right get boys wrong, with disastrous results; and how progressives actually interested in building a real alternative might get away from the notion of masculinity to make a better world for everyone.

...

But when we brought in these new social expectations for boys, we never quite got rid of the old ones. The traditional pressures of masculinity are still very much in circulation: boys are still expected to be assertive and domineering and aggressive and manly, and to never appear effeminate in any way. The social costs of falling short of this standard are also high for boys, who are taught to fear looking weak. And if anything, in the age of CGI muscles and superhero epics and online "masculinity influencers," the prevailing model for manhood has become even more cartoonishly masculine and aggressive over the years. Many boys I interviewed still felt they had to perform a kind of rigid, posturing masculinity in front of their friends and often feared that they were constantly only one step away from being labeled a wuss or a pussy.'

John Cleese says he’s ‘surprisingly poor’ after five-decade career

Matt · 23 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'John Cleese has joked about how his $20m divorce has resulted in him having to work in his eighties.

The Monty Python star and co-creator, 84, will soon celebrate the opening of a Fawlty Towers stage show in London’s West End, adapted from three episodes of his and Connie Booth’s seminal British sitcom.
...
In a forthcoming interview with SagaMagazine, the comic discusses his reasons for working on new projects as opposed to resting – and mentions the costly end of his third marriage as one of the main motivations.'

New social media trend tells men to enter their ‘soft guy era’: ‘Being a provider in 2024 is a scam’

Matt · 24 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new trend has emerged on TikTok known as the ‘soft guy era’, which advises men to stop being sole providers in their romantic relationships.

"The soft guy era movement is [about] promoting partnership. You’re telling me you’re a grown woman, and you’re my woman, and you can’t put up 50% of the bills, you’re broke and lazy," a TikToker who goes by the name Lil Goodie said.

"We all know being a provider in 2024 is a scam. So we don’t care, we’re not doing that anymore. We know that’s old-fashioned, these women got money, these women are working, so they need to contribute," another influencer named Scarfacemark said.

The trend blew up on TikTok earlier this month, with Mark and Goodie self-proclaiming the label of co-founders for the movement. Their slogan, "drizzle drizzle," pays homage to an opposing campaign that predates the "soft guy era" known as "sprinkle sprinkle." The tagline was created by Leticia Padua, a creator who uses her platform to give women advice on how to get a man to provide for them.

While Mark alludes to the focus of the movement to be reorienting men towards finding "high quality women," the basis of many of his videos revolve around finances.

"They want us to have money, I want my woman to have money as well," he said in a video.'

Inside the twisted minds of female teacher pedos

Matt · 25 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to finally see a general acknowledgement of female predatory sexual behavior vs. the media constantly casting it as a one-off thing or a case of "forbidden love". Excerpt:

'The typical physical profile of a female sex predator is a caucasian woman in her 30s, according to new research.
...
One of the women that I worked with confessed to me that she prided herself on being 'sensitive and caring' because she knew that would make young males 'feel safe.'

When I challenged her by informing her that she was harming these individuals, she replied, 'it never felt that way to me.'

Another predatory practice is the luring of victims with sexually suggestive or outright pornographic posts on social media or in private digital communications.'

"The Coming Incel Revolution"

Matt · 25 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting YouTube video discussion here. TLDR: "Incels" are simply young men who are relationally and sexually frustrated because women and the rest of society have devalued them. Cut off from romantic and financial resources, this class of man constitutes a new brand of marginalized minority. Like any marginalized group, they're angry and potentially volatile as a socio-political class. Unless something changes, the future vis-a-vis this class of person is both fraught and may pose a serious threat to the political establishment.

Circumcision's Ugly Truth

DanBollinger · 27 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

Men are being targeted by healthcare providers for forcible genital cutting and Americans—including many men who are cut—are looking the other way. Male child genital cutting (aka newborn circumcision) deprives these men of a full sexual life and open sexual future. These men are not being forcibly circumcised as adults but when they are newborns, a time when they are the most defenseless.

Norway: Men's Equality Commission issues final report

Matt · 28 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But I think the work of the Commission has significance well beyond Norway. There are policymakers around the world trying to figure out how best to begin to approach the glaring, growing problems of boys and men. Now they have a blueprint.

...

The Commission also calls on the Research Council in Norway to explicitly take up the challenge of improving the knowledge base on many of the issues tackling in the report. And as a pretty wonky bunch, they are keen on more data transparency too, calling for “a review and revision of the statistics pages and indicators for gender equality so that they reflect the equality challenges of boys and men to a greater extent than today.” That might sound dull: but honestly, just getting the basic facts in front of more eyes is a powerful and often necessary first step to action.'

Why do men fare better than women in the college admission process?

Mastodon · 28 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For first-years admitted in the fall of 2023, Brown's acceptance rate for male applicants was 6.9%, and the acceptance rate for female applicants was 4.2%, according to the University's Common Data Set.

Despite an applicant pool of 19,666 men and 31,650 women, Brown still admitted a first-year class with an almost perfect 50/50 ratio of men to women. As a whole, the undergraduate population has a male-to-female ratio of 46/54. Federal methodology requires institutions to report applicants' sex assigned at birth.

Brown's admissions data mirrors a nationwide pattern: Since the 1980s, female enrollment has consistently surpassed male enrollment among institutions of higher education. Brown alum Peg Tyre '83, Vice President of the EGF Accelerator — an accelerator for education nonprofits — provided some insight on the topic in book "The Trouble With Boys."'

Feminist Male Teachers Share Their Perspectives

Mastodon · 29 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hunt advised that part of being a better feminist is being a better listener. He said, “The first thing you have to do is ask yourself, ‘How has society benefited me?’ and, ‘If I’m benefiting, who is being harmed?’ Just pause, reflect, and then think.”

Rosenberg’s advice was to be more conscious of the fact that everyone lives a different experience. He said, “There are different expectations for people based on different societal factors and different historical baggage. If you don’t take that into account, you’re probably not leading that enriched of a life.”
...
He added, “For all the young gentlemen reading this, I know that when I was 16 it would have been kind of hard for me to be able to read between the lines on this, but, if you’re not advocating for women’s rights, what are you standing up for?”'

‘The View’ Co-Hosts Launch Into Lengthy Man-Hating Tirade

Mastodon · 29 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“The View” co-hosts jumped into a lengthy man-hating tirade Friday, calling straight ones “useless.”

The co-hosts responded to a TikTok trend asking women if they need men, agreeing with the majority who answered “no.” They adamantly assured they are not including gay men in their criticism.

“Because men are useless,” co-host Ana Navarro said. “I mean — and by the way, I wanted to differentiate between straight men and gay men because I think I would die without gay men. No one can gossip like a gay man, no one can help you accessorize like gay men, and nobody can help you from doing harm to yourself like gay men.”

She said her husband would be “emaciated, starving and living in his own filth” without her.'

Joy Behar Calls Out Men In ‘The View’ Audience After They Fail To Clap For Dr. Christine Blasey Ford

Mastodon · 29 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Joy Behar put the men in The View‘s live studio audience in the hot seat after they failed to clap for Dr. Christine Blasey Ford, who came forward with allegations of sexual assault against Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh in 2018.

In September of that year, Ford claimed that Kavanaugh (then a Supreme Court nominee) sexually assaulted her when they were teenagers in the 1980s. She testified about her allegations during the televised Senate Judiciary Committee hearing — though Kavanaugh was ultimately sworn into the Supreme Court the next month.

While appearing on The View to promote her new book One Way Back, Ford recalled receiving “horrible threats” following her testimony. However, she also said she received over 100,000 letters of support from all over the world.

“The level of the outpouring was incredible,” she said. “There were letters from all 50 states and 42 countries. They take up our whole living room and multiple other storage spaces. We’ve read about 30,000 of them and about 25% are from sexual assault survivors.”'

Windsor Castle guard ‘cried out for help as he was sexually assaulted by drunk female trooper at 3am’

Matt · 30 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From 2019 but exemplary of the double-standards that men are subjected to. Excerpt:

'A FEMALE soldier from Prince Harry's regiment has reportedly been let off with a warning after sexually assaulting a male colleague who cried out for help.

Trooper Corrie-Alice Holmes, 25, is said to have molested her shocked comrade after returning to base near Windsor Castle in the early hours following a drunken night out last Sunday.

The squaddie, from the prestigious Household Cavalry, is believed to have forced herself against the younger soldier, tried to kiss him and rubbed her body against his, according to the Mail On Sunday.

He rebuffed her, saying he had a girlfriend.

She only stopped her alleged assault when the stunned colleague shouted for help and a furious officer pulled her away.

Tpr Holms was hauled before senior officers the following day - where she was issued with a formal warning and told that further misconduct could see her dismissed from the Army.'

Jack Kammer interviewed by BlueOrange22

mens_issues · 30 April 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Jack Kammer was just interviewed by BlueOrange22. They have an interesting 40 minute discussion about men's issues, which can be seen here.

Australia declares billion-dollar war on 'toxic masculinity', twisted AI porn and domestic violence after horrific spike of alleged murders

Mastodon · 2 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anthony Albanese will ban 'deepfake' and artificial intelligence pornography as part of a $925million bid to combat the shocking rise in violence against women.

The Prime Minister convened a National Cabinet meeting on Wednesday following a surge in women being allegedly killed by men known to them since the start of 2024.

Speaking immediately after the meeting with the nation's state and territory leaders, Mr Albanese announced a suite of new measures to reduce violence, which he described as a 'scourge' on society.

Mr Albanese noted community concerns about 'toxic male views online' and 'young men's exposure to violent imagery' on the internet.

Ms Rishworth added that violence against women will only end with generational change, and that young boys need 'positive role models' to 'counter negative stereotypes'.

Mr Albanese, along with Ms Rishworth, announced a leaving violence program, which will receive $925million in funding in the May Budget.

Eligible women will be able to access up to $5,000 in financial support to leave abusive relationships.'

UK: Gang of women weep in court after kidnapping and beating innocent stranger

Matt · 2 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Slap on the wrist. Excerpt:

'Two women who kidnapped an innocent victim before driving her to a secluded area and beating her have been jailed.

Bitterly jealous Nadia Gubran, 21, plotted to kidnap a nursery nurse after she suspected she had been exchanging Snapchat messages with a man she herself was interested in.

Gubran recruited best friend Alya Dahshan, 21, and Layla Obad, 20, to carry out the ambush at around 6pm on March 21 last year.

The gang tracked the 23-year-old victim to her place of work, and followed her in Gubran's Volkswagen Golf as she made her way down Hartington Road, Liverpool.'

Ukrainian men abroad voice anger over pressure to return home to fight

Matt · 3 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With Ukraine desperate for soldiers to reinforce its crumbling defenses against Russia's invasion, Ukrainian embassies have temporarily suspended consular services for fighting-age men, placing new pressure on them to go home to fight.

The suspension of citizen services, such as passport renewals, is intended as a preliminary step to a new mobilization law that will go into force on May 18. It will require all men ages 18 to 60 to update their personal information with a local draft office within 60 days.

Martial law, in effect since the start of Russia's invasion in February 2022, prohibits men ages 18 to 60 from leaving the country. But many men who were afraid of being sent to the front have fled. Thousands of others were already living abroad. Now, all of them face pressure under the new rules, which could restrict their movements.'

The Banned Fantasy Novels Feminists Hate

Matt · 3 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting article here. Doubt it's in your local library. Excerpt:

'HOWEVER! There is one series that was driven from bookstores, and by the late 90s was almost totally disappeared based purely on the... "feelings"... it generated in its readers. A fantasy series set entirely on another world with more or less nothing to say about politics back on earth, awakened... stirrings... in its readers so disturbing to the powers that be it had to be stopped.

The Chronicles of GOR by John Norman (Pen-name of Philosophy Professor John Lange)

Begun in 1966 and continuing to... today (he's 92), the 38 book series is a Pulp Science Fantasy series in the vein of Edgar Rice Burroughs' "Barsoom" series (shout out to John Carter of Postcards From Barsoom)
...
This is the world and theory of mind Norman paints with a philosopher's attention to completeness... 38 books deconstructing and undoing not only modern feminist ideas of equality, but Christian ideas of the equality of the soul and nobility of the feminine spirit. By any standard maybe the most sexist misogynistic books ever written, not out of ignorance or resentment but a philosopher's indifference to any social or ethical preening that might impede the truth...

And women freaking loved it.'

Hating men is weird

Mastodon · 4 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I love being a guy.

My masculinity is something that I grew up being ashamed of expressing, growing up in a more conservative household. As a transgender man, I was in denial of it for a long time, and the day I decided not to be anymore felt like coming home from a decade-and-a-half shift of work where I could finally take off my shoes and rest. Nowadays, I take a lot of pride in the guy that I get to be and am growing into as well as the fact that being masc is no longer an evil, life-destroying specter looming over me.

All of the above are among the many reasons I refuse to get TikTok. A lot of more liberal spaces on the app — even (and especially) Queer spaces — tend to have very negative rhetoric around men and masculinity. Phrases like “kill all men” or “all men are trash” are common to hear while online. This has extended to in-person talking habits; if I had a dollar for every time I’ve had to grit my teeth and bear a friend saying something to this effect to my face, I might finally be rich enough to pay for law school.

The demonization of masculinity is nothing new to online Queer communities. Many butches and studs have reported facing discrimination and pressure to present less masculine in Sapphic spaces. Trans men and transmasculine people are either told that our trans masculinity isn’t real enough to be demonized like real masculinity, or that we’re traitors to our sex.'

Biden Admin Is Weaponizing Title IX To Promote Fringe Sexual Politics

Mastodon · 4 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The evolving definition of sex discrimination was a product of feminist advocacy. But that evolution always threatened—and continues to threaten—fundamental rights such as free speech and due process. By the subjective standards imposed under the DCL, "You look pretty today!" could qualify as Title IX sexual harassment if the statement is deemed hostile and affects someone's studies. So what happens, then, to free speech? And if students engage in sexual "hook ups" but later one student feels consent was lacking, are colleges equipped to investigate and adjudicate claims of criminal acts like assault and rape? What about protecting due process—such as the presumption of innocence and the right to see evidence—for those accused?'

Rising Number of Men Don't Want to Work

Matt · 6 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American men are opting out of the workforce at unforeseen rates.

For many, it's not an issue of not being able to find a job. They have simply opted out altogether. The Bureau of Labor Statistics found only 89 percent of working age men have a job or are actively looking for work. In 1950, that number was at 97 percent.

While the early 1950s saw around 96 percent of working age American men between the ages of 25 and 54 working full or part-time jobs, that proportion has now moved to just 86 percent, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

And as fewer men financially support themselves, there are long-reaching economic and societal implications, experts say.'

Boy Scouts of America changes its name after 114 years to boost inclusion

Matt · 7 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Don't hold your breath waiting for the GSA to go co-ed. They'll go out of business before letting those icky boys anywhere near them. Excerpt:

'Boy Scouts of America is changing its name for the first time in its 114-year history in a bid to 'boost inclusion'.

The Texas-based organization is set to become Scouting America as it hopes to improve participation amid flagging membership.

The historic change is the latest in a series designed to take the troop into the 21st century, including allowing gay youth and welcoming girls throughout its ranks.

It comes as the organization is emerging from bankruptcy following a flood of sexual abuse claims.

'In the next 100 years we want any youth in America to feel very, very welcome to come into our programs,' Roger Krone, who took over last fall as president and chief executive officer, said in an interview before the announcement.'

The Parents Who Want Daughters—and Daughters Only

Matt · 8 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Remember, selecting for boys is sexist and patriarchal, while selecting for girls is pregressive and an all-around positive! Excerpt:

'These patients are seeking not just choice. Many, like Amy, want daughters. The ability to act on that desire—an option mostly unheard of in the rest of the world—has sparked a small but growing trend in American family planning. It has expanded the concept of reproductive choice and bodily autonomy to for-profit procedures that will alter future generations. It speaks to a crisis in boys and lopsided expectations for daughters. And even among the people who are opting in, it's creating concerns about the degree of control some parents are attempting to wield over a baby's destiny—and whether they can ever really exert that control at all.
...
Grace, a 31-year-old who works in human resources (I'm referring to her by her middle name), told me, "When I think about having a child that's a boy, it's almost a repulsion, like, Oh my God, no."

Grace and her FAANG (Facebook, Apple, Amazon, Netflix, Google) engineer fiancé are freezing embryos to preserve their fertility—and to ensure they avoid that "Oh my God, no" scenario. After she turned 30, her fiancé wanted to make embryos right away. Grace wasn't particularly eager to kick off the kid-having process: "I don't like kids. I don't want kids anytime soon. Especially one that's a boy." But she also thinks that her feelings around kids may change—and she wants to be able to dodge the possibility of becoming a "boy mom" if they do.'

Women-only exhibit to become a toilet to keep men out

Matt · 8 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A museum in Australia is fighting to keep its exhibit women-only after a court ordered that men should be allowed entry under anti-discrimination laws.

Tasmania's Museum of Old and New Art appealed on Tuesday to reverse the ruling, arguing it took "too narrow a view on women's historical and ongoing societal disadvantage" and how the Ladies Lounge can "promote equal opportunity".

The court issued its order in April following a gender discrimination lawsuit filed by New South Wales resident Jason Lau, who was denied entry into the lounge.

Kirsha Kaechele, the artist behind the lounge, has said she will challenge the ruling by making the space "compliant" with regulations.

The lounge, which contains some of the museum's most-acclaimed works - from Picasso to Sidney Nolan - has been closed to the public since the court's order.

Ms Kaechele's plans involve transforming the velvet-clad lounge into a women's toilet and a church - which she claims will allow it to continue operating as a women-only space under legal exemptions.'

What the 4B movement and boycotting men tells American women about where we are

Mastodon · 9 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, in South Korea, the "4B movement" – based on four Korean words that start with the letter B – is led by women protesting rampant misogyny, gender-based violence and discrimination.

These women are reclaiming their autonomy by refusing heterosexual marriage ("bihon"), childbirth ("bichulsan"), dating ("biyeonae") and sex ("bisekseu"). Though some might want marriage or children, the risks of having to conform to traditional gender roles outweigh any benefits. Abstaining is the only way women can maintain a sense of self.

...

There are always exceptions to the rule, of course, but as women increasingly de-center men from their lives, having to no longer rely on a man for survival, men are threatened and mistaking women's liberation for misandry, or hatred.

In 2023, a team of researchers coined the term "misandry myth" revealing that feminist women's attitudes toward men were no more negative than men's attitudes toward men.

...

Instead of blaming women, we should strive to understand that this isn't a personal attack on men. It's a step forward in dismantling the patriarchy.'

Teacher had baby with underage student — while on bail for sex with different boy, jurors told

Mastodon · 9 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A UK teacher had a baby with an underage student she had sex with dozens of times — while out on bail for sex with another 15-year-old boy, jurors were told.

Manchester math teacher Rebecca Joynes, 30, groomed the first boy by taking him shopping for a Gucci belt worth the equivalent of around $430, the accuser told cops in an interview played in court, according to the Manchester Evening News.

She then drove him back to her apartment for unprotected sex, “laughing” when he told her he was too young even to drive, jurors were told.'

YT's BlueOrange22 discusses Australian "femicide" campaign

Matt · 9 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. In brief, he discusses the recent push to stop "femicide", contrasting the number of murders of men to that of women, and starts asking questions.

Australia: Headmaster of The King's School accuses media and government of 'deriding' elite all-boys schools

Mastodon · 9 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tony George, the principal of The King's School in North Parramatta, penned a piece in the school's journal Leader, published on Tuesday. His article, titled A call to empathy: Educational Leadership at The King's School, accused the media of creating "clickbait" stories to "deride" boys' private schools in Australia.

"Instead of acknowledging and celebrating the significant achievement and contribution of independent schools to society, sections of government and the press seem intent on deriding independent boys' schools with any story they can concoct," George wrote.

The headmaster suggested terms like "toxic masculinity" have become a "memetic cliche"; that is, a cliche used to generate internet memes and jokes.

"To be clear, any kind of toxic behaviour is bad, whether by males or females in single-sex schools or co-ed schools," George wrote.

"However, the practice of linking toxic behaviour to masculinity is to malign all males, just as linking oppression to the West maligns all western countries as oppressive.

"Rather than lambast men, boys and males with the same tarred brush of paranoia, we need to aspire to the formation of men who are empathetic leaders, ready, willing and able to bring optimism and hope as they seek the betterment of others."

The headmaster next criticised "wokeness" and "virtue signalling" in the media and society in general, which to him has generated a "victimhood culture".'

$2.3 billion in contracts awarded to minority and women-owned business enterprises for JFK airport transformation

Mastodon · 9 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Governor Kathy Hochul announced a historic milestone in the ongoing transformation of JFK International Airport, where a record $2.3 billion in contracts have been awarded to minority and women-owned business enterprises (MWBE). This is the largest participation of MWBE firms on any public-private partnership project in New York state history. With construction of new airport facilities fully underway, MWBE participation at JFK will continue to break records until the redevelopment is substantially complete expected in 2028. JFK redevelopment also demonstrates a significant focus on working with local contractors, awarding more than $950 million in contracts to Queens-based businesses to date.'

IBM's Red Hat sued over culling 21 white men employees as CEO vowed to punish managers who missed DEI targets

Mastodon · 9 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former sales chief is suing IBM's Red Hat for being sacked alongside 20 other white men during the software subsidiary's aggressive diversity push to hire more women and African Americans.

Allan Kingsley Wood, a white man, says he faced race and gender discrimination because of the company's diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) scheme, which set hiring targets for women and minorities.

The case was filed by America First Legal (AFL), which is headed by former Trump administration official Stephen Miller, as part of a broader assault against DEI in businesses, colleges, and the military.

Miller's conservative action group highlights a leaked video recording from 2021 in which IBM CEO Arvind Krishna vowed to punish executives who failed to meet diversity-hiring quotas.'

Gender Gaps in Employment Come From Masculine Workplaces

Mastodon · 10 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Economists who make the claim that gender employment gaps are due to women's free choices assume that workplace environments are equally appealing to men and women. But this assumption neglects the concept of masculine defaults, to me, one of the most useful ideas in the recent literature on the psychology of gender. Masculine defaults in the workplace are systems, policies, and approaches to work that are based on traditional masculine norms. In such contexts, masculine qualities such as competitiveness, independence, assertiveness, and risk-taking are rewarded more than feminine qualities such as cooperation, teamwork, modesty, and patience. For example, employees who self-promote and negotiate for raises or positions are more likely to advance and achieve better outcomes in the workplace. Such masculine defaults characterize workplaces everywhere.'

Germany may introduce conscription for all 18-year-olds

Matt · 11 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Military planners in Berlin are in the final stages of discussing three options, two of which involve a form of conscription, according to leaked plans reported in the German media.
...
In one of the options being discussed, Germany would bring back a compulsory military year for young men once they turn 18, which was suspended in 2011, and apply it to women as well. This would require a change to the German constitution, but is seen inside the ministry as most likely to receive societal approval.

Another option would only apply to 18-year-old men, but would not see everyone selected. They would be required to fill in an online form and could then be chosen for service, according to details leaked to Die Welt newspaper. This is seen by the defence ministry as “a strong signal” to both allies and rivals.

The third option would avoid compulsory service, focusing instead on “optimising” the current system by engaging in more proactive recruitment campaigns.'

Survival: Men vs. Women

Matt · 11 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Review of a now-infamous series of episodes from the series The Island with Bear Grylls from 2015 here. Quite fascinating.

Biden's DHS funds grant at Arizona State's McCain Institute to undermine 'manosphere,' claims anti-feminist ideas are a terrorist threat

Matt · 12 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Biden's Department of Homeland Security under DHS Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas has a granting program in place to fund "targeted violence and terrorism prevention." While that title would indicate that the grant is in line with the mission of DHS, in practice, the goal of this $20 million granting program was, in part, to prevent the "radicalization of men" and to "divert them away" from online "misogyny."

Hatred of masculinity and masculine tendencies are at the core of the kind of feminism DHS is pushing on the public with the funding of this grant. Congress has scheduled a hearing on to discuss the impeachment of Mayorkas for early January. This grant is among many funded by DHS to research online discourse, to the tune of millions of dollars.'

Tubi's new anti-male ad

mens_issues · 12 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Tubi (a streaming service) has a new anti-male ad. It features a husband and wife arguing, with the wife belittling her husband's hair transplants before the final scene showing the husband now divorced and in a cheap hotel while the divorced wife angrily stabs at his picture saying how she hates his "stupid face".

This kind of misandry is tiresome and has been going on too long.

Link to video here.

"Sorry straight white men, Doctor Who was never made for you"

Matt · 13 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What makes this article so objectionable is not the point it makes; the point it makes is accurate. DW was made for kids, in fact, but its target audience has evolved significantly since its inception. The problem is that it picks particular people to name and exclude based on, you guessed it, sex, race, and sexual orientation. Those people just happen to be men -- and straight and white. Would the author have written the same kind of article only call out, say, Asian women instead? Excerpt:

'But the bigoted straight white men who have spiralled into a meltdown clearly haven't been paying attention to the reboot's rich and ever-evolving history of multiculturalism and LGBTQ+ inclusion.

When Queer As Folk creator, Russell T Davies, brought Doctor Who back in 2005 it was clear from the get-go that this is a show for all the outcasts in society.

Class commentary was placed front and centre through Rose Tyler (Billie Piper) and her mum Jackie who lived on a London council estate. And left-wing sentiment has been a common thread throughout the series.'

Arizona woman who poisoned Air Force husband’s coffee with bleach dodges jail

Mastodon · 13 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona woman who admitted to poisoning her Air Force husband by pouring bleach into his coffee is reportedly avoiding jail time.

Melody Felicano Johnson, 40, pleaded guilty last month to two counts of poisoning food or drink for putting trace amounts of bleach into husband Roby Johnson’s coffee maker on July 11 and July 18, 2023, Arizona’s 13 News reported.

Johnson was sentenced to a probation sentence that includes mandatory mental health treatment that goes into effect immediately, and she is not allowed to have contact with her husband unless a legal team is present.

Roby Johnson said he believed his wife was trying to kill him to collect death benefits, according to court documents.

She was initially arrested and charged with attempted first-degree murder, aggravated assault and adding harmful substances to food, drink or medicine but agreed to a plea deal instead.'

‘Be unapologetic in your masculinity,’ Super Bowl winning kicker tells Benedictine College male students

Mastodon · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Super Bowl winning kicker Harrison Butker ripped into COVID lockdowns and pro-abortion Catholics, like President Joe Biden, during his graduation speech at Benedictine College.

But he also encouraged students to be open to marriage and having kids, particularly directing his comments towards female students.

To male students, he told them to “be unapologetic in your masculinity,” and not listen to voices telling them they do not matter.

“As men we set the tone of the culture, and when that is absent, disorder, dysfunction and chaos set in,” he said.'

Boy Scouts' decline = glaring example of masculinity under attack

Mastodon · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Boy Scouts has become an example of masculinity under attack in culture, Owen Strachan, the Family Research Council's senior fellow at its Center for Biblical Worldview, told Hice.

Today boys are penalized for being boys. All sorts of traits associated with good things in scripture are in today's culture – among woke, leftist, pagan thought – [considered] very bad things" said Strachan.

"If you take risks today, if you're assertive, if you speak up in groups, if you might dare to ever correct a woman in public in something like this, if you like competitive sports, if you like watching World War II movies – you better get out your blanket and hide in the closet, because they're coming for you."'

NYC teacher fired after texting student 28K times, sex allegations, is now teaching at different school: ‘Can’t f–king touch me’

Mastodon · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A defiant French teacher is still in the classroom after being fired by the Department of Education — crowing that the city “can’t touch me” despite the sexually-charged accusations that got her sacked, including making nearly 30,000 late-night texts to a schoolgirl.

Dulaina Almonte, 33, lost her job at Harry S. Truman High School in The Bronx in 2020 after the Special Commissioner of Investigation substantiated claims of her creepy behavior with teens.

“I can’t be guilty if I’m still a teacher,” Almonte — who now teaches at a Bronx charter school — boasted to The Post this week.

“It’s not a crime, but still got fired, which is honestly why the DOE can suck a big pr–k,” she continued.

“Still a teacher! Can’t touch me!” she bragged.

“Still a teacher working elsewhere. Like, you really can’t f–king touch me.”

Her audacity comes despite a damning 2022 SCI report which found her “excessive contact and behavior with the students demonstrates that she has no place in the New York City Schools.”

Phone records showed Almonte sent a 17-year-old female student a staggering 28,075 late-night texts over 14 months — 66 messages a day — and traded nearly 1,900 texts with a male 12th-grader.

The NYPD also investigated a Truman HS student’s claim that she and a former pupil were “involved in a sex act” in a classroom, according to a police report.'

UK: Female teacher accused of sleeping with boys 'was lonely and craved attention'

Mastodon · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A "pretty" teacher accused of having sex with teenage boys has said she felt lonely and "craved" attention after a break-up - but denied sleeping with the youngsters.

Rebecca Joynes said she was impacted negatively after a nine-year relationship breakdown around the time of the Covid-19 lockdown. But she insists she never had sex with the boys.

The 30-year-old was already suspended from her high school job and on bail for alleged sexual activity with a 15-year-old, known as Boy A, when she is said to have taken the virginity of a 16-year-old, who she later fell pregnant with.'

Australia: Teacher abuse charges tossed as law didn't cover women

Mastodon · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An ex-teacher has had her historical sex abuse charges quashed because the relevant 1970s laws did not apply to women abusing boys.

Helga Lam, a former teacher at a Sydney boys' school, had been charged with 15 counts of indecent assault on four school boys for alleged offences dating back to 1978.

But the top criminal appeal court in NSW tossed the charges on Monday, with three judges agreeing to quash the indictment.

Claims against Lam included penile-vaginal intercourse with the complainants, as well as masturbating them, performing fellatio on them and telling them to perform sex acts on her.

Three complainants were willing participants, while the fourth said "he was fearful and upset when the applicant performed sexual acts upon him", Meagher noted.

At the time of the alleged offending, the students were aged between 13 and 16.'

Interview with Kirsha Kaechele about the Ladies Lounge

Mastodon · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's move to the man who has placed himself at the centre of all this. I notice people have many opinions on Mr. Jason Lau. What is your take on him?

I like him. I think he's cute. And sincerely interested in the law. It was a pleasure to be courted by him.

So you welcomed the case.

Being taken to court was a dream come true. I was utterly delighted. And I think Mr. Lau was very brave. He brought an earnest and steady resolve.

I am genuinely grateful to Mr. Lau for taking the Ladies Lounge to court, so that we may exercise the argument. He is essential to the art, and I would like everyone to leave him alone now and focus instead on the horribleness of men in general.

Do you think they are horrible?

Yes. They really are.

You say women deserve three hundred years of reparations in addition to equal rights. Do you think that is fair?

Yes. To equalise historical injustice, it is my assertion that women deserve both equal rights and special privileges (in the form of unequal rights, or chivalry) for a minimum of three hundred years. I'm deeply disappointed by Australia's abandonment of chivalry alongside the introduction of equal rights, and would like to see its reinstatement as a central element of any reparations package.

How are other men responding to this?

Enthusiastically. We've been flooded with applications for the role! But men who don't qualify … you know, you must be under the age of 25 and good looking … less so. They're very upset—on the verge of hysteria in fact. Of course, they're saying I'm hysterical … And I hope they're right.'

Man v. Bear: Analysis of Bigotry

Matt · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. An analysis of the outright anti-male bigotry exposed by the "man v. bear" question.

NCFM Files Complaint on the 107th Anniversary of the Selective Service System

Matt · 14 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NCFM is commemorating the 107th Anniversary of the Selective Service System; the law requiring male citizens to register for the military draft by the age of eighteen, by filing a Complaint in the Central District of California. The Complaint requests that the court deem the mandatory registration of male citizens and immigrants a violation of Equal Protection under the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, as it is unlawful discrimination on the basis of sex.

Along with NCFM, five other individual plaintiffs joined the lawsuit. Twenty-year old plaintiff Jordan Falcon stated that he, " was opposed to bias conscription and does not like the idea of being sent to war based upon his gender." Tyler McNamara, Conor McKiernan, Nicholas Milillo, and Nicolas Mendiola are fervent supporters of the equal treatment of all sexes.

NCFM filed a similar Complaint on April 6, 2013. That matter went to the U.S. Supreme Court and on June 7, 2021, their Writ for Certiorari was denied. Justice Sotomayor stated, ""But at least for now, the Court's longstanding deference to Congress on matters of national defense and military affairs cautions against granting review while Congress actively weighs the issue."'

How Feminists Are Making Women Unemployable

Matt · 15 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Remember the Grace Hopper Conference kerfuffle? The narrator uses it to outline the ways feminism's attitude towards women actually works against them in the job market.

Erin Ruhl discusses "toxic femininity"

Matt · 15 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Erin discusses "toxic femininity" after discussing "toxic masculinity". She debunks the feminist definition of TF and points out the alternatives.

UK: Math teacher trying to seek 'sympathy' and painting herself as the 'victim' because she is a woman, court hears

Mastodon · 16 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr Allman said Joynes hoped she would be 'treated very differently' and they would see the evidence 'differently' because she is a woman and not a man in the same situation.

'We have to ask in the cold light of day would Miss Joynes and those acting on her behalf appealed to your sympathy in that way if she'd been a 30-year-old man called Robert Joynes?' he asked.

He also asked whether the two boys would have 'been disparaged in the same way in attempt to discredit them' if they had been two girls of a similar age.

'Would the defence on Miss Joynes' behalf - in our theoretical scenario on Mr Joynes' behalf - have suggested to you that the girls the were the ones that wanted it to happen?' he asked.

'It could just not have taken the same lines in questions because it would have been quite obscene.'

He said it was easy to forget that Joynes was a mature, adult teacher, he said, and they were two teenage children and 'that's how she would like you to see this case.'

'So, she almost becomes the victim and the boys become the perpetrators,' he said.'

Conservatives Rip Lawmaker for White Men Comment: 'Needs to be Removed'

Mastodon · 16 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Democratic Congresswoman Ayanna Pressley has inspired conservative outrage online over a video clip showing her disapproval of "white men failing up."

Pressley, among the progressive House Democrats often collectively referred to as "the Squad," made the remark while addressing allegations of widespread sexual harassment and discrimination at the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) during a House Financial Services Committee hearing on Wednesday.

The congresswoman said that she is a survivor of sexual violence while grilling FDIC Chair Martin Gruenberg over a report earlier this month alleging that the agency he leads is riddled with sexual misconduct. Pressley mentioned "white men" after questioning why most of the men accused of harassing their female colleagues received no disciplinary measures.

"I am so tired of white men failing up," she added. This lack of accountability is shameful, inadequate and deeply unsatisfactory, and it is re-traumatizing."'

Sky News host reacts to YouTuber asking students to fight ‘toxic masculinity by donating testicles

Mastodon · 16 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'Sky News host James Macpherson has reacted to a conservative YouTuber asking college students the “ridiculous proposition” of donating a testicle to the fight against “toxic masculinity”.

“Can you imagine a more ridiculous proposition,” Mr Macpherson said.

“And yet, how ridiculous have our universities become.”'

City of Kansas City apologizes after doxing Chiefs' Harrison Butker following faith-based commencement speech

Mastodon · 16 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The city of Kansas City, Missouri, has apologized after posting a message on social media revealing the residence of Kansas City Chiefs kicker Harrison Butker after the Super Bowl champion came under attack following his faith-based commencement speech at Benedictine College over the weekend.

The official social media account of Kansas City on Wednesday issued a brief apology on X after sparking major backlash on social media for sharing a post referencing the city where Butker resides.

"We apologies [sic] for our previous tweet. It was shared in error," the post read.'

Thousands Of People Sign Two Petitions To Kick Harrison Butker Off Kansas City Chiefs

Mastodon · 16 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course, the woke mob is coming for Harrison Butker now. Of course, it's trying to have him canceled by getting him fired.

It's part of the playbook. It's not surprising.

The problem here is the mob is about to run headlong into a meritocracy. The NFL struggles to cancel anybody – at least not on the first try – because NFL teams in business to win usually keep the best people around regardless of their failings.

Or perceived failings, in this case.

Butker is now in the crosshairs of multiple petitions at change.org that -- get this -- call "upon the Kansas City Chiefs management to dismiss Harrison Butker immediately for his inappropriate conduct."

There isn't just one petition but two that are calling for Butker, the Chiefs' kicker, to get the, boot. The more prolific of those two petitions set its initial goal of 35,000 signatures. It has more than 94,538 as of Thursday morning.

The petition has, here we go, moved the goal post to now collecting 50,000 signatures.

A Chiefs' spokesman was not immediately available for comment.'

"What Happened To Modern Feminism?"

Matt · 16 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The narrator discusses what happened to feminism over the past few decades. I recommend watching his other videos too, as he strikes me as being very bright and articulate.

Petition Demanding the Chiefs Dismiss Harrison Butker Nears 150,000 Signature Goal

Mastodon · 16 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A petition calling for the Kansas City Chiefs to kick Harrison Butker off the team has more than 136,000 signatures and counting.

The Change.org petition, started by Willard Harris, is encouraging the NFL franchise to cut the kicker due to the “harmful” and “unacceptable” remarks he made during a May 11 commencement address at Benedictine College.

The petition adds that such discriminatory remarks can lead to hate crimes, and it demands accountability from sports figures “who should be role models.”

Harris, the petition organizer, did not immediately respond to PEOPLE's request for a comment.

By 4 p.m. ET on Thursday, the petition had garnered 136,979 signatures, with an initial goal of 150,000.

Harris and those who signed are the latest to voice their displeasure with the NFL veteran.

On Wednesday, the league itself disavowed Butker's comments, saying in part in a statement to PEOPLE that his "views are not those of the NFL as an organization."'

How companies use ‘cognitive diversity’ as an excuse to keep hiring white men

Mastodon · 17 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the years, tech has found another way to pay lip service to diversity while doing little to increase the number of underrepresented minorities, especially Black women, by broadening the definition of diversity so it’s not just about representational diversity but “cognitive diversity” as well. Cognitive diversity is all about the different ways people think or work or learn—how they approach a problem or solution. Sometimes it even refers to different personality types. On the surface, there is nothing wrong with the notion or even practice of cognitive diversity—but when you elevate it to the same level as racial, ethnic, gender, and socioeconomic diversity, the very concept of diversity is watered down. It also means diversity is reinterpreted to include what Silicon Valley has never had a shortage of: white men with quirky personalities. The problem is there is never enough room for women.'

Author, Podcaster, & Professor Scott Galloway on How a Lack of Male Mentors Is Hurting Boys

Mastodon · 18 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's an old proverb that says, "Blessed is he who plants trees under whose shade he will never sit." For Scott Galloway — Professor of Marketing at NYU Stern School of Business, author, and host of the "Prof G" and "Pivot" podcasts — this proverb perfectly applies to the important work of the men who mentor teenage boys. Unfortunately (and unfairly), mentoring has gotten a bad rap, and Galloway isn't afraid to put it bluntly: "The Catholic Church and Michael Jackson have f*cked it up for all of us."

...

It isn't a lack of education, or media influence, or any social movements, said Galloway, that cause a young man to fail: it's the loss of a male role model. He pointed out a sobering fact: "There are a ton of boys who will go through pretty much their entire adolescence with almost no involvement from men." The U.S. has more single-parent households than any other country except Sweden. Teachers, up until the third grade, are 92% female. The majority of therapists are women. "We need to get men more involved in boys' lives," he said, citing that research shows these circumstances affect adolescent boys differently than their female counterparts, rendering them far less emotionally strong than girls. Though they may be physically stronger, boys are surprisingly fragile when it comes to emotions.'

The KC Chiefs should fire Harrison Butker and hire someone who kicks like a girl

Mastodon · 19 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For poetic justice after Harrison Butker's Neanderthal outburst — and because the pipeline of talent is real — the Kansas City Chiefs' next kicker should be a woman.

This is not a joke. It's not unrealistic. And it would be good for business. Just ask the University of Manitoba how ticket sales were last year.

Millions of American parents who've had daughters in soccer over the last 30 years can attest to the fact that girls can kick. And in multiple anecdotal scenarios — injuries, COVID-19 disqualifications and so on — college football coaches have called soccer coaches for help and been told the best prospects were female. In 1997, soccer standout Liz Heaston kicked two extra points for Oregon's Willamette University Bearcats. Ashley Martin broke the NCAA Division 1 barrier in 2001 as a placekicker for Florida's Jacksonville State University. Katie Hnida broke the NCAA Division 1-A barrier in 2003, placekicking for the University of New Mexico. Sarah Fuller kicked for Vanderbilt against Missouri in November 2020, making viral waves on social media posts that linked to the nonprofit Play Like A Girl.'

"A Message To Young Men"

Matt · 20 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Word.

Why was a black congresswoman not criticized for her racist comment about white men?

Mastodon · 21 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While commenting about the accusations of sexual misconduct against Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Chairman Martin Gruenberg, Rep. Ayanna Pressley (D-MA) stated that she was “so tired of white men failing up.” It’s the kind of racism, intolerance, and bigotry that Democrats said they want to purge from society. However, because the target of Pressley’s racist and bigoted wrath was a white man, her comments were absolved from widespread criticism or the kind of outrage had a white Republican made a similar comment about a black Democrat.

Feelings or sentiments regarding the accusations against Gruenberg aside, the criticisms against him should focus on his alleged actions and what he was accused of doing. Whatever Gruenberg allegedly did or did not do, his skin color had nothing to do with it. Pressley should not have even brought it up, and everyone in Congress and the media should have criticized and condemned her for her racial bigotry.

But they didn’t. Why? Because racial discrimination against white men is permitted and, in many instances, actively encouraged.

As mentioned above, Pressley’s comment was the kind of inflammatory rhetoric that would have led to widespread condemnations if roles, races, and political parties had been reversed. This double standard and hypocrisy keep happening in the country’s political realms. More people seem concerned with attacking Greene than calling out Pressley for her racial bigotry. It must stop. Democrats who make racist remarks deserve a strong, swift condemnation. They deserve the same kind of vitriol they have when they accuse Republicans of such things.'

Is it time to stop men congregating in groups?

Matt · 21 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Denying men the right of association is a hallmark of dictatorships. I guess it may also be a hallmark of a gynocracy. Excerpt:

'All of which begs the question: if we have so many examples of the threat posed to women's safety by allowing large groups of males to congregate together, should we be considering limiting their ability to do so?
...
Perhaps, given the clear and consistent evidence that aggressive and anti-social behaviour is heightened when men congregate in groups, authorities should be looking at ways to curtail this?
...
But if, as a man, the idea of your civil liberties being impinged upon in such a profound way rankles, ask yourself: what civil liberties do you believe women should have when we walk out into the world?

Because whether we're doing the shopping on an innocuous Saturday afternoon, walking to our car after dark, playing a game of weekend footy or simply doing our jobs, the truth is inescapable: we're at an unacceptably heightened risk of violence from men.
...
And until men in groups start raising their voices against this abuse, rather than staying silent or worse, crying #notallmen, I'm hard-pressed to think of a reason why this lack of personal freedom should be our burden to carry instead of theirs.'

HS teacher gets 13 years for having sex multiple times with student

Matt · 22 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former high school teacher will spend 13 years in prison after she pleaded guilty to having sex with a student as many as 30 times, including once on a school field trip to Washington DC.

Heather Hare, 33, was a family consumer science teacher at Bryant High School in Little Rock, Arkansas. Her relationship with the student occurred between August 2021 and April 2022.

Investigators found that Hare had sex with the student in her car, her home and even in her classroom. The student was a senior at the time. They first encountered each other, she was assigned to give him one on one counseling.

At one point, the teacher confessed to the teen that she fantasized about them having sex at the home that she shared with her husband and young daughter.'

Diverting Hate: Really?

Matt · 22 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'A recent publication from a group called Diverting Hate has accused the manosphere of hate and violence. Wait until you see who funded this hit piece on men and masculinity. They developed a scale to measure misogyny and have applied that to a number of youtube creators including Sandman, Just Pearly Things, the Real MTR, The Rational Male and others and make numerous accusations. Tom goes over the scale and the plentiful false accusations. This one is hard to believe.'

Global leader in prevention of gendered violence Jackson Katz in Australia to discuss ‘men’s issues’

Matt · 22 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Australia confronts horrifying levels of family violence, global leader on the issue Jackson Katz says it is no longer acceptable for domestic or sexual abuse to be seen as a women’s issue that some good men help with because that is part of the problem,

“These are men’s issues,” he said as he kicked off his Australian tour in Perth by speaking at a White Ribbon function.

He said three things needed to change to end gendered violence across the globe, including the use of passive victim blaming language, for men not to be confused between guilt and responsibility about who they are, and for men to take leadership in all corners of society by shutting down inappropriate jokes or conversations.'

Bucks County woman's false accusation could stop sex assault victims from coming forward: officials

Mastodon · 22 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 20-year-old woman is out on bail after investigators say she admitted to lying about an attempted rape and kidnapping in the parking lot of a grocery store in Middletown last month.

The father of the man accused told FOX 29's Kelly Rule that the whole ordeal has been horrible not only for his son, but for the entire family.

There’s also an impact on the community, and on how current and future victims of sexual assault crimes feel about coming forward.

"It’s a horrible thing to make up, horrible."

According to court documents, Urumova gave police a description of a man's truck and identified him as her attacker back in April.

But when confronted by detectives on Friday, officials say she admitted to lying about the attempted rape and kidnapping.

She said she named him because she had previously seen him and his truck in the shopping center and thought he was "creepy," court documents state.

The man was originally charged with multiple felonies and spent 31 days in jail. He has since been freed, and all charges withdrawn.'

The Anthropology of Karens

Matt · 23 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. In this video, Whatifalthist goes into toxic feminity and feminine manipulative techniques. He also discusses how this ties into the interests of large bureaucracies, of all things. It's very incisive.

HPV vaccines prevent cancer in men and women, new research suggests — but fewer boys get the shots

Mastodon · 24 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research suggests the HPV vaccine is preventing cancer in men, as well as in women, but fewer boys than girls are getting the shots in the United States.

The HPV vaccine was developed to prevent cervical cancer in women and experts give it credit, along with screening, for lowering cervical cancer rates.

Evidence that the shots are preventing HPV-related cancers in men has been slower to emerge, but the new research suggests vaccinated men have fewer cancers of the mouth and throat compared to those who didn't get the shots.

These cancers are more than twice as common in men than in women.

For the study, researchers compared 3.4 million people of similar ages — half vaccinated versus half unvaccinated — in a large health care dataset.

From 2011 to 2020, vaccination rates rose from 38% to 49% among females, and among males from 8% to 36%.'

CBS News Texas reporter gets interactive lesson in domestic violence awareness: "In her shoes"

Mastodon · 25 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ruth Guerreiro sits on the Conference on Crimes Against Women advisory council. She said an estimated 3,000 people from various professions attended the conference to learn about criminal offenses against women and ways to support victims through their journey.

"The majority of victims of intimate partner violence are female. And the majority of the abusers are male," Guerreiro said. "There are some males who are – who do experience intimate partner violence. The majority of the male victims have male partners."'

In defense of man: Has the hate men trend gone too far?

Mastodon · 25 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College is a long and arduous process of learning and becoming not just a better worker, but a better person. On my journey through this process, I've become more cognizant of what I say and how it affects other people.

A phrase that I've become stuck on and find myself thinking about often is one that most people give little thought to when they say it.

"I hate men."

Typically said in a disdainful tone after a man has done something rude or stupid in front of the speaker, the phrase has become a mainstay in our Gen Z vocabularies. The phrase and its variations are all rooted in people's frustration with the patriarchy and its many manifestations in everyday life.

Most of the time, when exclaiming, "I hate men" or, "Men suck," I am trying to explain my anger towards only one person when I should be trying to justify my anger at the system or situation that I have experienced. This exclamation is not only useless but harmful to those it is aimed towards. Men are over three times more likely to commit suicide than women, according to the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention. Of those men, less than half of them received some type of mental health care in the year leading up to their death. This is a silent pandemic that has affected men for decades.

This isn't to say that saying things like "I hate men" will lead to increased suicide, but as I've learned more this year, I've tried to use kinder and more compassionate language.'

I Hate Men, but Want to Be Loved—How Do I Stop Sabotaging My Relationships?

Mastodon · 25 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I also feel anger toward men. I hate them. I'm ashamed to admit it because I'm always talking about how women and men are equal. Maybe I'm just trying to convince myself of that because deep down I think that women are better and I know that it's wrong to think that way. I'm tired of being confused, and I've been confused for so long that I don't know if my feelings are real or made up anymore.'

Hillary Clinton Blames Sexism for 2016 Loss: Donald Trump Won Because He Is A Man

Mastodon · 26 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton blamed the fact that female voters abandoned her as her 2016 presidential campaign came to a close on her not being “perfect” in a recent interview.

“They left me because they just couldn’t take a risk on me because, as a woman, I’m supposed to be perfect,” the former secretary of state told the New York Times in an interview conducted in February and published Saturday.

She went on to argue that female voters took a “risk” on former President Donald Trump because he is a man.

“They were willing to take a risk on [Trump] — who had a long list of, let’s call them flaws, to illustrate his imperfection — because he was a man, and they could envision a man as president and commander-in-chief.”'

Portland high school’s Healthy Masculinity Club is ‘a place for guys to not be ‘guys’’

Mastodon · 27 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Once a week during lunchtime at Portland’s Cleveland High, chemistry teacher Brian Fain’s classroom becomes part consciousness-raising circle, part support group, as several dozen boys sit together to consider American manhood, circa 2024.

Their Healthy Masculinity Club — part of a nascent national movement at high schools around the Portland metro area and the country — resists pigeonholing. It’s both a club intended just for boys and the radical opposite of an old boys network.

Freshman Ephraim Goodness sums it up thus: “It’s a place for guys to not be ‘guys.’”

Fain, the club’s adviser, began brainstorming the idea for the group in a post #MeToo world, intent upon unpacking — and, ideally, reversing — the tendency of male students to disrespect his female colleagues but respond deferentially to his authority.

There was inherent discomfort, some club members acknowledged, in reading aloud about the harm caused by young men while being male.

“It’s hard to not be offended when people are saying that white men are hurting or attacking them, because, like, that’s me. But that doesn’t mean I’m doing the attacking,” Balmer said. “You have to acknowledge and realize that there are other people causing pain and violence and it can be hard to acknowledge that when you fit that category.”'

Having kids may shorten a man’s life, groundbreaking study reveals

Matt · 29 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Choosing to become a parent could end up shortening a man’s life. A groundbreaking new study reveals that fatherhood may take an alarming toll on men’s heart health as they get older. Researchers from Northwestern University and Ann & Robert H. Lurie Children’s Hospital of Chicago found that cardiovascular health tended to be worse for fathers compared to men without kids.

The research, published in the journal AJPM Focus, found that as men age into older adulthood, those who have children tend to have worse cardiovascular health compared to their childless peers. This was determined by looking at factors like diet, exercise, smoking, weight, blood pressure, and blood lipid/glucose levels.'

Why employers are reluctant to hire young men

Matt · 30 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'America's young men aren't working. Well, a smaller share of them are working, anyway. As of April, about 86% of prime-age men — meaning those between 25 and 54 — were employed, a significant drop from the 1950s and 1960s, when that number was often closer to 95%. And 52% of men 16 to 24 were working, compared with well above 60% decades ago.

There are plenty of explanations for what might be going on — perhaps it has to do with recessions or disabilities or wages not being high enough to draw them in. There is an equally robust number of proposed solutions to this conundrum: upskilling and reskilling, convincing men to go into fields historically viewed as being for women, getting employers to be more realistic about requiring college degrees.
...
Employers might also see young men as riskier to bring on board. Fairly or unfairly, there's a stereotype that young men are more volatile, more immature, and less responsible than their female counterparts. Darling notes that men drop out of college at higher rates than women and argues that the same behavioral differences that drive that trend could also mean businesses see them as a higher layoff risk.
...
As for why so many young men aren't working, it's a doozy. There's no quick fix for recessions or incarceration rates or pay or any of the many other factors driving the shift. But maybe a step in the right direction here is to at least talk about it. And, hey, if you're a business owner, maybe take a risk on that young guy who walks through your door instead of worrying about what it might cost you if you decide to fire him.'

Why are white men being shamed as transport polluters?

Mastodon · 30 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Black women are the worst for carbon-intensive travelling habits, according to the Guardian, citing research by the Institute for Public Policy Research (IPPR). Oh, sorry, I must have misread that. What the Guardian headline actually says is: ‘Wealthy white men are Britain’s largest transport polluters.’

While is poses as scientific inquiry this is really just political activism dressed up in academic clothes.

But it is worth quoting the other way around because the former is, of course, a headline you will never, ever read – either in the Guardian, an academic paper or anywhere. There are very simple rules for this kind of pseudo-scientific stuff: if you are going to bring race or gender into a study it must always present white men in a bad light, and no other group. White men, on the other hand, must never be presented as victims – that is the preserve of other groups. The only surprise is that the IPPR hasn’t also tried to dig down into the travelling habits of gay and straight people so that it can add ‘heterosexual’ to the list of attributes shown by the people who are condemning us to what the Guardian likes to call ‘climate breakdown’.

While is poses as scientific inquiry this is really just political activism dressed up in academic clothes. It starts with the assumption that white males are at the top of a hierarchy of privilege and works from there. If a study such as this chanced across a statistical finding which was at odds with that narrative you can be absolutely sure that it would not be reported. The glaring example of this was during the pandemic when many claims were made that women were suffering disproportionately from Covid when data clearly showed the opposite: that the disease was killing far more men than women.'

Jerry Seinfeld Criticized Over Masculinity Comments

Mastodon · 30 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jerry Seinfeld is facing backlash online after saying he missed the "dominant masculinity" of 1960s America.

Tuesday, the comedian appeared on the Honestly With Bari Weiss podcast to promote his latest film, Unfrosted. Set in 1960s Michigan, the movie is loosely based on the real-life dispute between Pop-Tarts and Kellogg's to create a new favorite breakfast food.

Weiss felt Unfrosted represented a "sense of one conversation, a common culture." Seinfeld—who directed and starred in the film—agreed.

"That's part of what makes that moment attractive looking back," the 70-year-old said. He added: "I always wanted to be a real man. I never made it, [but] in that era, it was JFK. It was Muhammad Ali. It was Sean Connery, Howard Cosell. You can go all the way down there. That's a real man."

"I miss a dominant masculinity," Seinfeld added. "Yeah, I get the toxic thing. But still, I like a real man."'

Melinda French Gates invests in boys and men: a new era for gender equality

Matt · 31 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Hard to believe but here it is. Excerpt:

'As part of this new effort, French Gates has created some dedicated grantmaking funds. As she writes in the New York Times: “I offered 12 people whose work I admire their own $20 million grant-making fund to distribute as he or she sees fit.”

...

What should advocates for gender equality make of these facts? Until recently, the standard response has been to ignore them, on the grounds that gender equality is exclusively a women’s issue. This is a mistaken approach. If gender gaps matter, they matter in both directions. Excluding boys and men also makes it easier for reactionary voices to claim that gender equality is in conflict with the interests of boys and men.

...

Most impressive of all, the Norwegian Government’s Men’s Equality Commission recently published its final report, Equality’s Next Step, after two years of work. It contains a raft of sensible policy recommendations, including more dedicated paid leave for fathers, a gender-neutral equality law, and the creation of a Men’s Health Committee. The report breaks out of zero-sum thinking, insisting, correctly, that “greater attention to boys' and men's challenges will strengthen equality policy, not weaken it.”'

Survivors say Russia is waging a war of sexual violence in occupied areas of Ukraine. Men are often the victims

Matt · 31 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Within an hour of being arrested by Russian security forces, Roman Shapovalenko was threatened with rape.

On August 25, 2022, the day after Ukraine's Independence Day, he said three armed, masked officers from Russia's Federal Security Service (FSB) stormed his home in the southern Ukrainian port city of Kherson, which was occupied by Russian forces at the time.

They turned his house inside out searching for incriminating evidence. A message in Shapovalenko's phone that called Russian soldiers "orcs" — a derisive reference to the evil forces in J. R. R. Tolkien's Middle-earth books and a popular Ukrainian slur for the Russian army — was enough for them. He said he was tied up, blindfolded and stuffed into an unmarked car.

For days after, Shapovalenko said he was repeatedly electrocuted in his genital area, threatened with being raped with a glass bottle, and was even made to believe he could be sterilized.'

Ukraine urgently needs soldiers, but some men are desperate not to fight

Mastodon · 31 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ukraine urgently needs new soldiers, but some — left uneasy by brutal fighting and intensifying conscription efforts — are desperately trying to avoid being called up.

“When you see people in uniform, you panic. You start thinking someone will mobilize you now against your will,” a lawyer based in Kyiv told NBC News. He did not want his identity known, fearful, like a growing number of men across the country, of being drafted into the army if his name is made public just as Russia launches a wave of attacks to try to decisively seize the battlefield initiative.

The 25-year-old has no military experience and just became eligible to be conscripted after Ukraine lowered the age men can be drafted from 27 to 25 last month.

Facing a third year of assaults from its vast neighbor, Ukraine is running out of men.

While volunteers lined up to fight at the beginning of the war, that fervor has waned and manpower shortages are now an issue that could seal Ukraine’s fate even if it can retain Western support.

So it has taken a series of steps that include passing a new mobilization law, increasing fines for draft dodging, and withholding consular services from Ukrainian men abroad who lack up-to-date military documents — measures that some soldiers on the front lines told NBC News they wholeheartedly support.

Ukraine has been conducting a rolling mobilization to boost its ranks since Russia invaded in February 2022. But the new mobilization law that came into effect earlier this month will mean that all men of military age have to report to draft offices to verify their credentials within 60 days. The apparent goal is to give the Ukrainian government a fuller picture of who can be called up. Men will also have to carry their military registration documents with them at all times. Women are currently not being mobilized, but some have volunteered to join the fight.'

Congress is weighing automatic registration for wartime draft

Mastodon · 31 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American men ages 18 to 25 would be automatically signed up for the draft if a measure making its way through Congress becomes law.

The proposal by Rep. Chrissy Houlahan would mean that men would be automatically registered for the draft when they turn 18. Under current federal law, all American male citizens and green card holders 18 to 25 years old must register with the Selective Service, but the requirement to do so falls on individuals. Those roles would be the basis of a military draft if Congress or the President decided to implement one, which Houlahan's proposed measure does not address.

Women would continue to be exempt from Selective Service registration under the proposal submitted as an amendment to the national defense policy bill for fiscal year 2025.

During debate on her amendment last week, Houlahan argued that the measure would allow Congress to spend more money on "readiness and towards mobilization" instead of "education and advertising campaigns driven to register people."

According to the Selective Service's annual report to Congress for 2022, the national registration rate that year for qualified men was 84%.'

Australian State Creates 'Secretary of Men's Behavior Change'

Matt · 31 May 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Make of this what you will because it left me scratching my head this morning. But just in case something similar pops up in the United States in the near future (don't rule it out), we should probably keep an eye on the situation. This story comes to us from Victoria, the second-largest state in Australia by population. Jacinta Allan of the Labor Party serves as the Premier there and she has just announced the creation of a new position in the state's Parliament. It's called the "Parliamentary Secretary for Men's Behavior Change." That's quite a mouthful, but all of the word salad that accompanied the announcement didn't do much to clarify precisely what the new Secretary is supposed to do or what powers or authorities they are being granted. In any event, the first person to hold the title is Tim Richardson, an MP from Mordilloc. Best of luck, mate. (Daily Wire)'

At-home saliva test to detect prostate cancer ‘better than blood samples’ – and could ‘turn the tide’ on killer disease

Matt · 2 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MEN could be checked for prostate cancer with a simple saliva test after a trial found it works better than blood testing.

It could save them unnecessary GP visits and embarrassing physical exams.

Scientists at the Institute for Cancer Research in London said the DIY spit test would catch more aggressive tumours and lead to fewer false alarms than the current NHS system.

Men simply spit into a tube at home and send the sample off for lab analysis.

Their DNA is checked for high risk genes or damage that could indicate prostate cancer, which is the most common type in men, with 52,000 cases per year.

Patients with the most concerning results are sent for further scans and exams, while those with low-risk scores can be discharged.'

When is it appropriate and lawful for policies to dictate specific behaviors based on gender?

Mastodon · 4 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, Victoria's government in Australia announced the creation of a new parliamentary role aimed at changing men's behavior to address gender-based violence. This decision marks a significant step in the government's strategy to combat violence against women by focusing on men as the primary agents of change. While the intention to eradicate such violence is commendable, the approach raises profound concerns about gender bias and societal division.

Labeling the issue as one that primarily or solely requires change among "all men" inherently suggests a collective guilt that overlooks individual differences and circumstances. Such a blanket approach can be perceived as misandric, potentially alienating not only many men who are non-violent but also those who are themselves victims of abuse. If the roles were reversed, with similar initiatives targeted exclusively at women, public outcry would likely be immense, pointing to a societal double standard in addressing gender issues.

Describing a need to change the behavior of an entire gender could also be viewed as a form of coercive control, implemented at a national level. This methodology risks simplifying the complex nature of abusive behaviors and may lead to unintended negative consequences, including increased gender polarization and societal discord.'

Candace Owens Says ‘Straight White Males’ Are Now Treated Like Black Americans During Segregation

Matt · 6 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I think she's a bit hyperbolic here but I get her general idea. Excerpt:

'Author and TV correspondent Candace Owens recently said “straight white males” are now being treated the same as Black people during the degrading segregation era in America.

Owens is known for controversial remarks she makes as a Republican correspondent, whether she’s on the job or off. According to Mediaite, the media host was a recent speaker at Turning Point USA‘s latest college event at Michigan State University. The non-profit organization was founded by Trump supporter Charlie Kirk, and its mission is “to build the most organized, active and powerful conservative grassroots activist network on high school and college campuses across the country.”

During the event Twitter user Jason Campbell, a senior researcher at Media Matters, tweeted a video of Owens on stage sharing her viewpoint on what she sees as the modern-day reality of “straight white males.”'

UK: 'Sadistic' women who filmed themselves torturing man to death jailed for at least 26 years

Mastodon · 6 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Zoe Rider, 36, and Nicola Lethbridge, 45, were sentenced for a "vicious and extremely violent joint attack" on 60-year-old neighbour Stephen Koszyczarski in his Sheffield flat.

The court heard how they recorded their attack on the vulnerable man as they falsely accused him of being a paedophile on 9 August 2023.

Mr Koszyczarski was robbed by the pair and was left bleeding and with 22 separate injuries around his face, head and body. He died from his injuries two days later.

Judge Sarah Wright told Sheffield Crown Court the pair were "both clearly fuelled by drugs and probably alcohol" when they carried out the attack.

"You set about him in the most brutal, heartless and despicable manner. You launched a vicious and extremely violent joint attack upon him.

"You exposed his genitals, threatened to mutilate him and shouted obscenities at him. You singularly failed to listen to his denials of the accusation or to offer him any compassion when he was clearly injured."

Jurors at the trial were shown harrowing footage shot by Rider and Lethbridge, which included them threatening to mutilate Mr Koszyczarski with scissors.

At one point he pleads with them to stop and one of the defendants replies: "Do you think I give a f?"'

New book ‘Boymom’ reimagines boyhood in an age of ‘impossible masculinity’

Mastodon · 6 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rapist, school-shooter, incel, man-child, interrupter, mansplainer, boob-starer, birthday forgetter, frat boy, dude-bro, homophobe, self-important stoner, emotional-labor abstainer, non-wiper of kitchen counters.”

These were some of the thoughts that kept Ruth Whippman up at night when she was pregnant with her third son and imagined his future. The year was 2017, when the Me Too movement was in full swing and a year into what she described as the “Pussy Grabber” administration of Donald J. Trump — “a time when the news was a rolling horrorshow of male bad behavior.”

Even in the “liberal urban bubble” of Berkeley, it became “increasingly clear that girls were now considered the prize. Boys, while cute and puppy-like, were generally viewed on some level as trouble — feral, hard to control, animalistic,” Whippman writes in her new book, Boymom: Reimagining Boyhood in the Age of Impossible Masculinity.

The cultural shift that was taking place was captured in New York Times pieces with titles like, “Wanting Daughters, Getting Sons” and “It’s a Boy, and It’s Okay to be Disappointed.” On a personal level, when she told friends she was pregnant with another son, she received sympathy rather than a congratulation on her pregnancy. Even Whippman’s letter carrier weighed in.

“I hope for your sake this one is a girl,” the carrier told her, as Whippman sat on the front steps of her home, her energetic boys whizzing around her.

“Trying to raise good sons suddenly felt like a hopeless task,” Whippman writes.'

Our culture’s trashing of boys and men is having toxic consequences

Mastodon · 6 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For a long time, the internet and social media have been bloated with memes, even articles, that denigrate men and most forms of traditional masculinity. Many of the people behind these posts insist that they are simply snarky barbs aimed at people with the most “privilege” who can’t take a joke.

If there was ever any doubt about the veracity of or honesty behind such a statement, a growing trend appears to pull back the veil.

In one American study, white parents picked a female embryo 70 percent of the time. A 2010 study showed that American adoptive parents were 30 percent more likely to prefer girls than boys, and were willing to pay an additional $16,000 to ensure they got a girl.

Such disturbing sentiments are widespread in the U.S. and are part of a growing trend in Western cultures — popularly called Gender Disappointment. An Australian psychologist who specializes in antenatal and postnatal care conducted a Facebook survey and found that Gender Disappointment is most common in women, who unabashedly want daughters, not sons. One woman posted on a mothers’ chat board that the “vast majority” of women on “every social media (Facebook, Instagram) site or general website (Netmums, Mumsnet, Reddit)” voice this gender bias. “There are websites like ingender and genderdreaming just dedicated to Gender disappointment…some of them are straight out Boy bashing or anti boy posts.”

This invites the question: What exactly is it about having boys that seems so repellent? Many of the women in the Slate article, even mothers of boys, pointed to that sweeping, damning and vague label “toxic masculinity.” They spoke to girls’ “limitless potential” versus that of boys. Girls move out of the house earlier, achieve greater academic success, are more likely to attend and graduate from college, find jobs more readily than male peers and have higher emotional IQ.

It’s also time that women did some soul searching — that they stop and reconsider their prevailing, limiting perceptions about men and masculinity. Their own personal experiences with men don’t apply across the board, and such wanton attacks on and wholesale dismissal of boys and men only perpetuate and normalize a reactivity that’s uncritical and self-pitying.'

Welcome to the 'microfeminist' revolution: Women clap back at everyday sexism on TikTok

Mastodon · 6 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Watched by 2.8 million, the TikTok video touched off a viral conversation about microfeminism, inspiring women – and men – to respond with their own small but mighty clapbacks at sexism that are spreading online and off.

Refusing to step aside for a man barreling down the sidewalk? That's microfeminism. Claiming the armrest when you're in the middle seat or the whole seat when the guy next to you on the subway is "manspreading?" Those, too, are acts of microfeminism.

So is greeting women first in a meeting, referring to "hers and his," assuming a CEO is a she and saying "girls" instead of "guys" as a gender-neutral term.

"I'm doing this thing, this tiny little act of collaboration with women, and I wondered if they noticed, and if anyone else is doing it," Chaney told USA TODAY. "And, wow, I learned they absolutely do."

And now these everyday acts of defiance are turning into an online movement.

Microfeminism has entered the zeitgeist, said New York University psychology professor Tessa West, and it's taking on "a whole new TikTok-defined meaning."'

UK: Politicians back our Show Respect campaign to end misogyny in schools

Mastodon · 6 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Politicians from all the major parties got behind our campaign to fund healthy relationships workshops in schools to address sexist abuse and harassment, as the Rotary Club of London gave its support with a four-figure donation.

It follows support from Mayor Sadiq Khan who backed our campaign along with our call for the Department for Education to create a new category that records when a pupil is excluded for sexist abuse.

It comes as a report from the Children's Commissioner Dame Rachel de Souza highlights the problem of "rape culture being normalised in schools" with "boys in particular mimicking harmful sexual behaviours they have seen online".'

French Prime Minister Gabriel Attal accused of 'definition of mansplaining' for interrupting Valerie Hayer debate

Mastodon · 6 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'French Prime Minister Gabriel Attal has been accused of mansplaining after interrupting a radio debate in which his fellow party member was speaking.

The prime minister made a surprise appearance at France Info on Monday, appearing on stage next to Valerie Hayer, candidate for the upcoming European Parliament elections on June 9.

Ms Hayer, of the presidential Renew party, was taking part in a debate with lead candidates when Mr Attal interrupted an exchange with the anchor.

LFI MP Raquel Garrido called the incident "mansplaining or, to be more precise, manterrupting".

But writing on X, Ms Hayer lashed out at opponents accusing Mr Attal of sexism.

"Instrumentalising the feminist cause only harms it. Real sexism is believing you can think for me," she wrote, adding she was "proud" to have Mr Attal "by my side" in the campaign.

Three-time RN presidential candidate Marine Le Pen called the incident "truly shameful" adding that Mr Attal would "have never allowed that if the candidate was a man".'

Gender quotas in Welsh Senedd elections could lead to legal challenges - report

Mastodon · 7 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The introduction of gender quotas in Welsh elections "could lead to legal challenges", according to a new report.

Politicians say those challenges could disrupt the outcome of the next Senedd election.

The cross-party Reform Bill Committee says the Welsh government has to take action.

The bill that's being considered would only change the rules when it comes to Senedd (Welsh parliament) elections.

The next vote to choose representatives in Cardiff Bay is due to take place in May 2026.

If approved, the changes would come into effect ahead of that vote.

The aim of the proposals is to increase the number of women who stand for election to the Senedd.'

‘Natty or not?’: how steroids got big

Matt · 7 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many of the young men I spoke to felt surrounded by signals that a muscular body was what they needed. They had noticed that celebrities, from movie stars to the sexed-up randos on reality shows such as Love Island, had got more muscular, though no one I talked to wanted to emulate a movie star exactly, let alone go on reality TV. The idea that “muscles get you girls” came up often, although most men I spoke to acknowledged that only a small subset of women prefer a mammothly muscular body. Many mentioned social media, where they saw constant images of successful muscular men – friends they knew and influencers they didn’t – which had, in some small way, made them feel bad about themselves. Many had got into weightlifting or fitness in order to feel better, and yet they often felt as if they were falling behind, or not achieving the milestones – “gains” in muscle or strength – that they should. Steroids, they hoped, would help.

The desire for this kind of body is relatively recent. In her 1999 book, The Male Body, the feminist social critic Susan Bordo noted that in the preceding decade, advertising and mass culture had become fixated on a kind of male body – muscular, athletic, often nearly nude – that hadn’t been considered ideal or attainable for much of the modern era. The erosion of mid-20th-century social hierarchies had weakened the traditional connection between body type and social position: the plump office manager versus the muscled factory worker, for example. Free of such associations, people were beginning to see their bodies as a representation of their identity or self. In this new reality, Bordo realised that the inescapable gaze of mass consumer culture would soon have the same shame-making effect on men as it did on women. “I never dreamed that equality would move in the direction of men worrying more about their looks rather than women worrying less,” she lamented.'

The Atmosphere of the ‘Manosphere’ Is Toxic

Matt · 7 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To understand the state of men in this country, it’s necessary to know three things.

First, millions of men are falling behind women academically and suffering from a lack of meaning and purpose. Second, there is no consensus whatsoever on whether there’s a problem, much less how to respond and pull millions of men back from the brink. Third, many men are filling the void themselves by turning to gurus to guide their lives. They’re not waiting for elite culture, the education establishment or the church to define manhood. They’re turning to Andrew Tate, Joe Rogan, Jordan Peterson and a host of others — including Elon Musk and Tucker Carlson — to show them the way.

Not all of these influencers are equally toxic. Tate, for example, is in a class by himself. He’s a pornographer who is facing human trafficking and rape charges in Romania. Peterson, by contrast, mixes good advice with a bizarre ideology. He’ll swing between compassionate insight and wild conspiracy. I’ve known men who genuinely improved their lives through elements of Peterson’s teaching. But to spend time watching and reading these gurus as a group is to understand why men continue to struggle even though the market is now flooded with online advice.'

UK: Met chief says millions of men are danger to women and girls in England and Wales

Matt · 7 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Millions of men in England and Wales pose a danger to women and children, the commissioner of the Metropolitan police has said.

Sir Mark Rowley said the figures were “eye-watering” and an “inconvenient truth” as he called for a much bigger effort, a national strategy and more money to tackle the problem.

He relied on an upcoming study produced for police chiefs nationally that says there are up to 4 million perpetrators of violence against women and children, who are mainly men, with one in 10 people being victims, who are mainly women or children.

Rowley, who is Britain’s most senior police officer, said the scale of offending by men against women and children was beyond the criminal justice system to tackle.

He told the London policing board: “When you look across violence against women and children, there are millions of offenders in the UK. Some of the numbers are eye-watering.

“The scale of this is way beyond policing and the justice system and we need a frank conversation about it, that looks at prevention work, protective work, as well as enforcement … work.

“This is largely men offending on women and children … You’ve got millions of men in the country who pose a risk to women and children at some level. And requires a whole step up in approach.”'

Scotland: Maggie Chapman suggests only 'wealthy white men' benefit from upgrading roads and reducing journey times between cities

Mastodon · 7 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Scottish Greens MSP was heckled at Holyrood after calling for NO new road upgrades in Scotland, despite representing a community which has been crying out for one. Highlands MSP Ariane Burgess called on public transport improvements instead.

And her colleague Maggie Chapman even suggested that "road building is a subsidy for wealthy, usually white men who are the main beneficiaries of reducing journey times between cities."

The Scottish Tories brought in a debate about the current poor state of roads across the country, including the pothole scarred city routes. They blamed "17 years of SNP neglect, underfunding and broken promises" for this situation, which includes the A9 dualling being delayed by a decade.

When in the Scottish Government, the Greens were blamed for various delays on the A9 and also the A96, with the SNP repeatedly denying the Bute House Agreement was the reason for this. But the mask slipped on Wednesday as Ms Burgess ranted about the need to save money and not upgrade the roads.'

What’s Wrong With Boys at School?

Mastodon · 7 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My experience is not merely anecdotal, but part of larger educational trends. Boys are not faring as well as girls in the classroom. Women outperform men in school in terms of school readiness in kindergarten, GPA, and increasingly in college enrollment and degree attainment. According to Richard Reeves, of the top 10% of students, two-thirds are girls. On the flip side, boys comprise nearly two-thirds of the bottom 10% of students. While boys outperform girls overall on standardized tests such as the SAT and ACT, girls perform better on the written and verbal portions of the exams while boys outperform on STEM subjects.

Not only from a grades standpoint but also a disciplinary standpoint, boys are not faring as well. Boys are roughly 2.5 times more likely to be suspended or expelled from school than girls; of all expulsions from public school in the 2017-2018 school year (the last year the National Center for Education Statistics has available data), 72% of all expulsions and 70% of suspensions were of boys.'

Is Feminism A Hate Group?

Matt · 9 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Most people see feminism as being about equality. They also tend to think of MRA's as being haters. Are they right? This video takes a close look at just what a hate group is and how feminism and men's advocates fit in. Thanks to StudioBrule for the clips of the Farrell protest. This post was based on the work of David Byron. If anyone knows where he might be these days I would love to hear from him.'

Opinion: Boys and men get everything, except the thing that's most worth having

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For many progressives, weary from a pileup of male misconduct, the refusal to engage with men's feelings has now become almost a point of principle. For every right-wing tough guy urging his crying son to "man up," there's a voice from the left telling him that to voice his concerns is to take airtime away from a woman or someone more marginalized. In many cases, the same people who are urging boys and men to become more emotionally expressive are also taking a moral stand against hearing how they actually feel. For many boys, it can seem as though their emotions get dismissed by both sides. This political isolation has combined with existing masculine norms to push a worrying number of boys into a kind of resentful, semi-politicized reclusion.

...

Perhaps it's not surprising that in the grip of the culture wars, caring about boys has become subtly coded as a right-wing cause, a dog whistle for a kind of bad-faith politicking. Men have had way more than their fair share of our concern already, the reasoning goes, and now it's time for them to pipe down. But for boys, privilege and harm intertwine in complex ways — male socialization is a strangely destructive blend of indulgence and neglect. Under patriarchy, boys and men get everything, except the thing that's most worth having: human connection.'

Alabama Lawmakers Want Prison for False Reporting Charges. That Could Have Serious Consequences.

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the last six years, I've been collecting and researching cases in which people – mostly young women and sometimes children – were charged with falsely reporting a rape or sexual assault. I've amassed more than 230 cases that span the country, an investigation we first shared in the documentary "Victim/Suspect," streaming on Netflix. In our first-of-its-kind qualitative analysis, we found a pattern of police turning their suspicions to the reporting victim before thoroughly investigating the alleged crime.

Academic studies consistently estimate that 2% to 8% of reports of sexual assault and rape are false. But police officers presume reporting victims are lying much more frequently: In one 2010 study, a majority of sex crimes detectives with less than seven years of experience believed that anywhere from 40% to 80% of rape reports were false. And a 2018 study found that officers' estimates of false rape reports go up the more they believe in popular myths about rape, like the idea that women lie about rape after regrettable sex or they bear responsibility if they were drunk.'

Iceland Set to Be Pioneer State Issuer of Gender Diversity Bonds

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Iceland, a country that ranks highest in the world for equality, will become the first nation to borrow money to spend on improving the gender gap.

The move follows a protest at the end of last year by thousands of women, who took to the streets to highlight the inequality that still exists. The bond offering will break new ground in a hot market for ESG debt, where so far only companies or development agencies have linked borrowing to gender spending.

“We would be the first sovereign to do a bond in this format, which I think is a good opportunity to step in that market and show an example of what can be done,” Thórdís Kolbrún Reykfjörd Gylfadóttir, Minister of Finance and Economic Affairs, told Bloomberg. She recently traveled to New York to talk about social gender bonds.

Iceland is the most gender equal country in the world based on economic opportunities, educational attainment, health care outcomes and political leadership, according to the World Economic Forum, a title it’s held onto for the past 14 years. Yet the protests drew attention to its remaining inequalities.

“I wouldn’t necessarily say that it’s directly linked to the recent protests. We have a history of gatherings and protests like this, and we look at it as a healthy sign of the kind of society we want to be,” Gylfadóttir said.'

The Equal Pay Act passed over 60 years ago. So, why do women still make less than men?

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Key factors sustaining the gender wage gap are workplace harassment, the lack of protection for parents and caregivers, segregation of men and women into different job types, and women entering the workplace after a history of earning lower or unequal wages, said Deborah Vagins, campaign director for the civil rights nonprofit Equal Rights Advocates and director of the national campaign Equal Pay Today.'

White men have least chance of getting on BBC trainee scheme

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The findings were released via the Freedom of Information Act. Female applicants also had a stronger chance of getting in than men, but by a lesser degree.

Since 2022, an average of 60.25 per cent of applicants were women. But in that same period, women made up 71 per cent of participants.

In contrast, men made up an average of 39.75 per cent of applicants but 29 per cent of participants, meaning that womens' chances of getting onto the scheme were 1.6 times higher than their male counterparts.

Neil O'Brien, who until the election was the Conservative MP for Harborough, said: "Unlike previous BBC schemes which have stated they are BAME-only, this scheme markets itself as open to anyone. But in practice there is discrimination.'

Travelers With Domestic Violence Charges Are Now Banned From Australia

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the past, Australia has denied travel visas to R&B singer Chris Brown and boxing star Floyd Mayweather due to domestic violence convictions. They’re taking this stand against domestic violence one step further by barring any visitor with a domestic violence charge against women or children from entering Australia.

The law came into effect on Feb. 28 and applies to all offenders regardless of where they’re from, where they committed the crime or what their sentence was. In addition, anyone who is currently visiting or living in Australia on a visa and has a record of domestic violence will be kicked out.

The new laws add to existing legislation that withholds or removes visitor visas if the visa holder has been sentenced to 12 months or more in jail.

Immigration Minister David Coleman said in a public statement that, "If you've been convicted of a violent crime against women or children, you are not welcome in this country."'

Australia's media industry is no meritocracy. Instead, the shamelessness of mediocre men is rewarded with untold power

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The horrible truth is that in the Australian legacy media landscape, there are too many stories of senior men who forgive themselves their own lapses of judgement, or forgive each other's because they're "good blokes", or — in the worst cases — go easy on each other because they fear a nuclear escalation.

Across this industry, there are precious few female editors, chief executives, news directors, and executive producers at the biggest commercial companies. But those who do hold those jobs know instinctively that they need to keep their noses rigorously clean. Because members of the boys club will rarely extend to them the benefit of the doubt they will so readily, sometimes unthinkingly, give each other.

What female news director, one wonders, would be welcome back at her job after a significant and eye-catching DUI conviction like Darren Wick was at Nine? We are all humans, and humans make mistakes, and hope to be forgiven for them. But a workplace manager whose problem with alcohol spills over into mistreatment of staff?'

‘Getting younger and younger’: Alpha male trend rises in kids as social media algorithm targeting exposed

Mastodon · 12 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The alarming rise in alpha male culture continues across the country, with one expert seeing Australian boys as young as 11 becoming heavily influenced by the content being promoted on social media.

The “alpha male” is defined by its followers as someone who takes charge, is hyper masculine, with everyone wanting to be him and women wanting to be with him.

A study conducted by the Dublin City University (DCU) showed that social media algorithms are amplifying the notion of male supremacy and misogynistic content.

The researchers made 10 experimental puppet accounts on YouTube and TikTok and found that all of the male-identifying accounts were drowned in anti-feminist, masculinist and extremist content.'

From 'himfluencers' to toxic masculinity: How social media is shaping young men

Mastodon · 14 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a new report from Australia's eSafety Commissioner, the internet can be a place of tensions, complexities and possibilities for young men.

The research examined the online experiences of young men in Australia aged 16 to 21 years old and explored how they express their identities, explore sexuality, and navigate social connections online.

Researchers said ideas about gender can both empower and limit young men, and those who strive to enact masculine stereotypes can end up harming themselves and others.

eSafety commissioner Julie Inman Grant said positive and diverse role models are needed as a small number of harmful voices are dominating conversations about masculinity.

"There's constant pressure for young men to conform to particular, often narrow and traditional, ideals about manhood," she said.

The report found Andrew Tate, a social media personality and self-described misogynist, continues to be a key figure in many young men's worlds, and engaging with this content is a central way in which some young men are shaping their identities.

Tate creates content based on male empowerment and being an 'alpha male', and promotes stereotypical ideas around gender roles and masculinity.

Federal Minister for Women Katy Gallagher said young men are facing an online wave of influencing behaviours, including from harmful content.

She said it was important to balance masculine behaviours and perceptions of manhood.

"It's not easy and I'm not going to pretend it is, but it's another front that we have to confront and respond to," Gallagher said.'

Seattle Mariners Host Refuse To Abuse Father's Day Game Day for Domestic Violence Prevention

Mastodon · 14 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Seattle Mariners will host a Refuse To Abuse® Game Day for Domestic Violence Prevention on Sunday, June 16th at T-Mobile Park, marking 28 years of partnership with the Washington State Coalition Against Domestic Violence (WSCADV). This year's event invites supporters to enjoy a Seattle Mariners Game together and takes place on Father's Day. "Everyone can play a role to prevent domestic violence," said Ward Urion, Strategic Prevention Strategist at WSCADV. "Fathers make a big impact when they model integrity and respect in relationships and we're grateful for all the fathers out there who are showing up as part of the solution."'

House passes defense bill automatically registering men 18-26 for draft

Matt · 14 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The House of Representatives passed a measure on Friday automatically registering men aged 18 to 26 for selective service.

It was part of the annual National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA), which sets out the U.S. government's military and national security priorities over the next fiscal year.

This year's NDAA authorizes $895.2 billion in military spending, a $9 billion increase from fiscal 2024.
...
It was led by Rep. Chrissy Houlahan, D-Pa., and passed in the House Armed Services Committee's version of the NDAA in May. The NDAA advanced through the committee in an overwhelming 57 to 1 vote.
...
The NDAA passed the House in a 217 to 199 vote, but it's unlikely to be taken up by the Senate.

Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., blasted the bill on Friday afternoon over the inclusion of amendments curbing funding for abortion, transgender medical care, and diversity efforts.

"Unsurprisingly, the legislation coming out of the House today is loaded with anti-LGBTQ, anti-choice, anti-environment, and other divisive amendments guaranteed not to pass the Senate," Schumer said. "As we move forward with this year's NDAA process, both sides will have to work together to pass bipartisan legislation that honors and respects all who serve in defense of our nation."'

Germany’s government proposes a new law to fast-track young men to join its depleted armed forces

Mastodon · 15 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Germany’s defense minister announced on Wednesday plans for new legislation that would help refill the depleted ranks of the armed forces to bolster the country’s defense capabilities.

Boris Pistorius said the proposed bill would allow the government to send letters to all young men who turn 18 — about 400,000 every year — asking about their willingness and ability to serve in the military.

Under the law, those who receive the letter would have to fill out the questions. The army would then invite those interested in serving for a medical checkup and choose the most qualified to serve in the military for a period of 6-23 months.'

Governor Healey, Executive Office of Veterans Services Celebrate Women Veterans Recognition Month During Deborah Sampson Award Ceremony

Mastodon · 15 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Executive Office of Veterans Services (EOVS) today announced Mary-dith Tuitt as the 2024 Deborah Sampson Award recipient. Mary-dith Tuitt was honored and presented with this title by Governor Maura T. Healey and Secretary Jon Santiago at the annual Women Veterans Recognition Day Ceremony, held at the Massachusetts State House.

“It is always a joy to celebrate National Women Veterans Appreciation Day at the State House to honor the remarkable women who have served in our armed forces. We recognize the immense contributions and sacrifices they have made, and their ongoing service to our community, state, and country,” said Governor Maura Healey. “I'm also thrilled to present Mary-dith Tuitt with the Deborah Sampson Award and thank her for inspiring us today and every day.”'

'In Her Boots' display recognizes challenges Women Veterans' face

Mastodon · 15 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wisconsin is home to nearly 300,000 veterans. Ten percent of those veterans are women. Out of all fifty states, Wisconsin is one of twelve that recognizes June 12th as Women's Veterans Day officially.

The display 'In Her Boots' can be found at the Wisconsin Veterans Museum to honor Women's Veterans Day, but to also bring awareness to the many issues Women Veterans face.

138 induvial boots are on display and they represent 138 different stories of Wisconsin Women Veterans.

Megan Haag, a Wisconsin Air National Guard Veteran, has her boot in the display. Haag says "I am proud to be a US Woman Veteran. My father is a Vietnam Veteran and my grandfather received a purple heart in World War II so being a patriot is just near and dear to my heart."

While the display celebrates and honors the Women who have served our country, most of these boots are decorated to represent the many issues these women faced during their time of service.'

Father’s Pledge - Allies, Activists, Advocates

Mastodon · 15 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father’s Day presents the opportunity for reflection, gratitude, or even a reset if necessary. While commerce collects major consumer dollars, culturally, it is also utilized by some to shine a spotlight on issues in the community.

Calling all fathers and father figures, for 15 years, Quentin Walcott, executive director and co-founder of the anti-violence organization Connect NYC, has had hundreds of men recite The Fathers Pledge Against Violence on the steps of Brooklyn’s Jay Street Borough Hall or Manhattan’s City Hall. Today, Thursday, 13th June, the Pledge was recited on the steps of City Hall in Manhattan.

The first of the 11 points is, “Never commit, condone, or remain silent about domestic violence, intimate partner violence, and violence in our homes and communities.”

“This year’s theme is about men’s mental wellness because we believe that healthy men equals healthy relationships and healthy communities,” Walcott told Our Time Press. “This is about women and children, and standing as allies and activists, doing the work daily.”'

Editorial: Men, boys could use a little help to be better men

Mastodon · 15 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not acknowledged often, but being a father isn't an easy job. (Being a mother is no breezy task either, but tomorrow being Father's Day, we'll stick to that subject).

And that level of difficulty seems only to be increasing as pressures and expectations on men and boys are growing in complexity and consequence, and a range of advice and influence — some of it helpful, much of it counterproductive at best — pulls those with XY chromosomes in different directions.

Being a good father — and growing into and living as a good man — requires more thought, preparation and effort than manning the grill on weekends. More men and boys are struggling to make those efforts and find success in school, careers and their personal lives, even as girls and women for the most part appear to be coping better and finding success with modern life's complexities and demands.'

Should solo moms celebrate Father's Day? These parents weigh in on the social media debate

Mastodon · 16 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It happens every year on Father's Day.

Mothers raising children on their own post on social media to celebrate themselves and other single moms, drawing criticism from others who feel they should leave the holiday alone.

"Single moms… Please don't do THAT," wrote one X user on June 9. "You know exactly what I'm talking about as well."

Others are more direct with their critiques.

"Please let the fathers have this day," wrote another X user.'

Happy Father's Day! Fathers are Essential!

Matt · 16 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Happy Father's Day gentlemen. Fathers are essential in so many ways. This short video looks at some of the ways that is true including a look at the research around fatherlessness and violent crime. You may be surprised by what you hear.

Our number one priority for saving this country should be to get fathers back in the home.

Happy Father's Day'

New Rule: Bring Back Trad Dads | Real Time with Bill Maher (HBO)

Mastodon · 16 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'This Father's Day, if you really want to give your father something he'll treasure forever, give him permission to be a dad like dads used to be.-

Women may be more resilient than men to stresses of spaceflight, says study

Mastodon · 17 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When faced with acid-dripping aliens, an untested machine that travels through wormholes, or a space station shattered by hurtling debris, it is the tough female astronaut who steps up to save the day.

And perhaps Hollywood is on to something. A major study into the impact of spaceflight suggests women may be more resilient than men to the stresses of space, and recover more quickly when they return to Earth.

The findings are preliminary, not least because so few female astronauts have been studied, but if the trend is confirmed, it could prove important for astronaut recovery programmes and selecting crews for future missions to the moon and beyond.'

The Army's Recruiting Problem Is Male

Mastodon · 17 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The issue is convincing men to put on the uniform.

A decade of declining recruitment numbers for the Army is almost entirely attributable to a significant drop in male recruiting as female enlistments have remained relatively flat, internal service data reviewed by Military.com shows.

Since 2013, male enlistments have dropped 35%, going from 58,000 men enlisting in 2013 to 37,700 in 2023, according to the service data. Meanwhile, female recruitment has hovered around 10,000 recruits each year.'

UK: Specialist training transforms football coach attitudes towards intervening to prevent violence and abuse, study shows

Mastodon · 17 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Specialist training is helping sports coaches to safely and effectively intervene when witnessing abusive behavior towards females, a study shows.

Football Onside is the first evidence-led bystander intervention program in the UK designed for those involved in professional sports. During the program people working in sport are trained to be 'active bystanders' and positive role models for their teams.

The program is designed help people intervene safely and effectively when they witness unacceptable behavior—from sexist jokes or demeaning "locker-room" banter to assault or physical violence.'

College enrollment drops as men stop viewing high ed as helpful for employment

Mastodon · 17 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College enrollment among men had steadily fallen for years, according to a December report from the Pew Research Center. The report came out months before the recent wave of anti-Israel campus protests, which have drawn widespread condemnation for their anti-Semitic incidents, disruptiveness, and attacks on law enforcement.

“This shift is driven entirely by the falling share of men who are students at four-year colleges,” the report explains. “Today, men represent only 42% of students ages 18 to 24 at four-year schools, down from 47% in 2011.”

“Today, only 39% of young men who have completed high school are enrolled in college, down from 47% in 2011,” the report continues. “The rate at which young female high school graduates enroll has also fallen, but not by nearly as much (from 52% to 48%).”'

Opinion: Women education leaders need better support and sponsorships to help catch up

Mastodon · 18 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In matters both big and small, women in education leadership are treated, spoken to and viewed differently than their male colleagues. And it impacts everything from their assignments and salaries to promotions.

The career moves that are open to aspiring women leaders often propel them toward a very real glass cliff — leadership roles in which the risk of failure is high. By failing to address this bias, states and districts are constraining the rise of some of their most capable current and would-be leaders.

New survey data and research illuminates the experiences and perspectives of women who confront this bias and demonstrates the need for systemic change to dismantle the bias driving the gender gap.

The glass cliff for women is real, but it is not insurmountable. If more leaders — both women and, critically, men — take even a few steps forward, we can build a bridge to a future in which every leader can reach their full potential.

Here are some ways district and state leaders can transform the pipeline for who advances and leads their systems.'

Platonic Marriages: Why Women Are Getting Hitched To Their Besties

Mastodon · 18 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an era where traditional definitions of marriage and family are increasingly being challenged and redefined, a new trend is emerging: women are marrying each other not out of romantic love, but for practical and legal reasons, according to a recent article in the New York Times.

These unions, often formed between besties, offer a host of benefits—from legal protections and insurance benefits to shared responsibilities and mutual support at work functions. I was deeply curious about this phenomenon, as it is part of a deeper discussion happening between women around the topic, “Do we really need men?”

Women are not only evaluating the role and importance men pay in their lives, but they’ve started an all-out boycott in South Korea know as the 4B movement, which is essentially a rejection of men. Women who embrace the 4B movement are refusing heterosexual marriage, childbirth, dating, and heterosexual sexual relationships. So, if women are opting out of trad-wife life, what are they embracing? Marrying their best friends. Let’s explore the potential impact of a platonic marriage on women’s careers and finances, and compare it with “traditional” marriage stats.'

UK: Sexual harassment and sexism rife in schools, report finds

Mastodon · 18 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sexual harassment and sexism is “rife” in schools, with support staff complaining of physical advances and lewd remarks, according to a new report.

Unison said its study showed that one in 10 female support staff in secondary schools revealed they have been sexually harassed, mainly by male pupils but also by male colleagues.

Responses from more than 2,000 employees across the UK working mostly in primary and secondary education, included teaching assistants, technicians, lunchtime supervisors and administrators, showed a number of incidents.

These included a male student trying to kiss a female worker and pushing her head into his crotch, boys trying to touch or slap a staff member’s bottom and a headteacher telling a female colleague to “stand here and look pretty, I’ll do the talking”.

Around one in seven school staff also reported they had witnessed sexual harassment in their workplace in the past five years.'

UK: Teacher had baby with underage student — while on bail for sex with different boy, jurors told

What's The Matter With Men?

Matt · 18 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From last year but still relevant. Excerpt:

'Richard V. Reeves, a British American scholar of inequality and social mobility, and a self-described “conscientious objector in the culture wars,” would like to skip past the moralizing and analyze men in the state that he finds them: beset by bewildering changes that they cannot adapt to. His latest book, “Of Boys and Men: Why the Modern Male Is Struggling, Why It Matters, and What to Do About It” (Brookings), argues that the rapid liberation of women and the labor-market shift toward brains and away from brawn have left men bereft of what the sociologist David Morgan calls “ontological security.” They now confront the prospect of “cultural redundancy,” Reeves writes.

He sees telltale signs in the way that boys are floundering at school and men are leaving work and failing to perform their paternal obligations. All this, he says, has landed hardest on Black men, whose life prospects have been decimated by decades of mass incarceration, and on men without college degrees, whose wages have fallen in real terms, whose life expectancies have dropped markedly, and whose families are fracturing at astonishing rates. Things have become so bad, so quickly, that emergency social repairs are needed. “It is like the needles on a magnetic compass reversing their polarity,” Reeves writes. “Suddenly, working for gender equality means focusing on boys rather than girls.”'

Paloma Faith says Glastonbury will 'go back to white men again' in brutal verdict of female-led line-up

Mastodon · 19 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Paloma Faith has hit out as the Glastonbury line-up as the festival attempts to diversify its performers.

The 42-year-old singer made the remarks as she addressed how there are now more women than men at Glastonbury for the first time following criticism about the lack of female headliners.

Due to previous backlash over the lack of diversity in the line-up, Dua Lipa, SZA and Shania Twain are taking the "Legend" slot.

However, Faith isn't sold by the changes and believes things could soon be back to how they were as she shared her blistering take.

"What tends to happen is they'll diversify and include non-white races and women again, and everyone says, 'Isn't it great? We're progressing' – and then it goes back to white men again for years," she commented.'

Pilot union suggests phasing out masculine terms, says 'cockpit,' 'father' is offensive to DEI culture

Mastodon · 19 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The world's largest airline pilot union suggested airmen and women stop using terms purportedly offensive to women and LGBTQ individuals, calling out terms like "cockpit" as non-inclusive.

Air Line Pilots Association, Int'l, represents over 70,000 pilots worldwide and states that it collaborates with a United Nations agency on its policies. According to a diversity, equity and inclusion language guide released in 2021, the ALPA lists numerous terms and phrases to avoid — especially "masculine generalizations" — that it deemed to be non-inclusive.

"Inclusive language in communications is essential to our union's solidarity and collective strength and is an important factor in maintaining flight safety," the guide states. "The purpose of this language guide is to offer examples of terms and phrases that promote inclusion and equity."

ALPA, for example, suggested replacing the word "cockpit" with "flight deck." The purportedly offensive term "has been and may be used in a derogatory way to exclude women in the piloting profession," the guide states.

Similarly, ALPA's guide called for the words "man" and "men" to be avoided. It offered suggestions for the word "manpower," including "people/human power."

"Who will provide the people/human power to support this event?" the guide stated as an example.

The guide also suggests avoiding using masculine terms, like "guys," when addressing groups, since the word is not inclusive of "women, transgender people and people with different gender identities."'

Firestorm erupts over requiring women to sign up for military draft

Mastodon · 20 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But Senate Armed Services Committee Chair Jack Reed (D-R.I.) defended the proposed policy change, arguing that women can hold many warfighting positions without serving as front-line infantry troops.

“Women are doing a remarkable job in our forces today, and if we were in a situation requiring a draft, I think we would need all able-bodied citizens 18 and above,” he said.

“If we go to a draft, that means we’re in a serious, serious situation,” he added.

“It’s not like World War II where we need a lot of infantry. We need cyber experts, we need intelligence analysts, linguists, etc. Wait a second, there are a lot of women out there that can do this better than men,” he argued.'

Alabama college offers $75,000 in trade scholarships to women only

Mastodon · 20 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Alabama college is offering $75,000 in scholarships for trade programs – but only to female students.

The goal “is to promote diversity, equity and inclusion in Gadsden State’s career technical programs,” according to a news release from the community college.

The list of “qualified programs,” include welding, construction technology, and civil engineering.

“This scholarship program is an initiative to get more women into manufacturing, construction, and transportation careers in order to help develop the workforce in our area,” Dean Alan Smith stated in the news release.

Smith did not respond to a voicemail on Monday that asked for comment on potential legal problems for the scholarship.

But Ed Barlett of SAVE Services said the program violates Title IX, a federal law that forbids discrimination on the basis of sex in higher education.

Gadsden State should either “discontinue the illegal program, or offer scholarships of a similar value to male students,” Bartlett told The Fix via email.

“Such illegal policies can be traced to Marxist ideology, which classifies men as ‘oppressors’ and women as ‘victims’, regardless of the fact that females now outnumber men in college enrollments,” Barlett told The Fix.'

As Ukraine Expands Military Draft, Some Men Go Into Hiding

Matt · 21 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Russian forces are on the attack across the front line, the Ukrainian military has been desperately trying to replenish its war-battered forces, embarking on a large-scale mobilization campaign backed by new laws.

While many Ukrainian men have answered the call to serve, some others have tried to evade conscription. Even before the latest mobilization push, thousands of men had fled the country to avoid service, some of them swimming across a river separating Ukraine from Romania. Now, as officers scour the country's cities to draft men of military age, currently 25 to 60, many people like Vladyslav have gone into hiding, fearful that conscription is a one-way ticket to the front line.

It is not clear how many men are hiding out, but in big cities like Kyiv and Lviv, social media groups alerting members to the movements of draft officers include tens of thousands of members.'

Disney Executive Caught on Tape: ‘There’s No Way We’re Hiring a White Man’

Mastodon · 22 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, after Governor DeSantis and Disney buried the hatchet, those cries died down until now. Twentieth Century Television Senior Vice President Michael Giordano was caught on a hidden video saying that Disney explicitly does not hire “white men” for specific roles.

Michael Giordano’s comments are only a few minutes in the video, with some intermittent reactions; however, Giordano says some damaging things about Disney’s hiring practices and inclusion policies.

Certainly, there have been times where, you know, there’s no way we’re hiring a white man for this…. There are times when it’s spoken.

Reporter: How would they say it?

There’s no way we’re hiring a white man for this role. They’d be very careful how they’d message that to agents.'

Dads Rock: The Evidence - excellent positive report about fathers

Matt · 22 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s good to be able to share positive news about men and fathers and this article does just that. Largely research based, it debunks some of the myths about fathers, including his time with the children, the positive impact of a fathers’s presence in the home and more.'

Teacher accused of having sex with female ex-student and tried to lure her into threesome with her husband loses her license

Matt · 22 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Currently she faces no criminal charges. Excerpt:

'A high school teacher has lost her license over accusations she had a long-running sexual relationship with a former female student.

Lindsay Amber Eileen Dolson had been teaching at an unnamed school in Canada at the time, during which she 'committed acts that, in all circumstances, would reasonably be regarded by members as disgraceful,' a discipline committee wrote.

They further branded her actions from about 2014 to 2015 to be both 'dishonorable or unprofessional,' and 'engaged in conduct unbecoming [of] a member [of the Ontario College of Teachers].'

The committee added she 'abused [the student] psychologically or emotionally' to the point where she was left suffering from 'adverse emotional and psychological effects'

According to a notice detailing how she was found guilty of misconduct, Dolson sent the student inappropriate messages about her 'sexual orientation, sexual preferences, and/or sexual history,' including having a threesome with her husband.'

Inside the industry where workers are four times more likely to die by suicide

Matt · 23 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WORRYING statistics have revealed that builders are more like to die by suicide than any other industry.

And the issue is worsening, despite general efforts to get blokes to open up about their mental health.

New figures show 749 construction workers took their own lives in 2022.

The Build Network UK said deaths increased 12 per cent in a year from 668 in 2021.

It added that suicide rates are the highest of any industry, with labourers four times more likely to die by suicide than the national average.

Network founder Andy Stevens said: “Every year these figures increase and it is time something was done to halt this alarming rise.'

The Female Teacher-Student Sex Epidemic That Nobody Is Talking About

Matt · 23 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Better Bachelor reviews the not-so-recent trend of female teachers stat. raping* their students.

*Though often referenced as "having sex with"

Ukranian women "taking men's places" on the front line

Matt · 24 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. In the wording of the title is the expectation that it's men who should be doing the fighting. Why not the women? The whole article drips with white feathers... Excerpt:

'She'd been in the army for 18 months, having joined up out of a desire to protect Yarema, her five-year-old son, and her parents, who lived a 13-hour drive away in Lviv, west Ukraine.

Ukraine does not conscript women – unlike men – but it is running out of soldiers: 31,000 have been killed in action since February 2022 (although no official figures have been released) and many don't want to face the obvious risks. According to reports, at least 20,000 men have dodged the draft and fled Ukraine illegally, while officials in recruitment centres have been discovered taking bribes of up to £1,200 to help them avoid it.

Put bluntly, with the country now in its third year of grinding conflict, it needs its women to fight.'

Sexism Against Men in TV Commercials

Robber748 · 24 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'I understand that people do not like to read through a video. I tried to keep the text to a minimum in my video "TV Commercials and Gender" at mountsiyeh.substack.com. So I would like to expand the discussion of the video here, fill in some of the blanks, and add some further ideas.

First, I would like to discuss a couple of rules that did not make the video.'

Top Spanish Court Rules Kiss Without Consent Is Sexual Assault

Matt · 25 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spain's Supreme Court on Tuesday ruled that a kiss without "tacit consent" can be considered sexual assault just months before former football federation chief Luis Rubiales will stand trial over his unsolicited kiss at the Women's World Cup.

The Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling from the southern region of Andalusia which convicted a police officer of sexual assault and sentenced him to one year and nine months in jail for kissing a woman on the cheek who was in police custody.'

Are Young Men Really Becoming More Sexist?

Mastodon · 25 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly 25 years ago, two prominent political scientists formally discovered a political gender gap. It had been an “established orthodoxy in political science” that women in advanced Western democracies were more right-wing than their male counterparts. But when Ronald Inglehart and Pippa Norris examined more than 60 countries across the world, they found that from the early 1980s to the mid-1990s, women had been moving to the left. They predicted that this gender split would continue to grow, with women moving even further left in the future.

But the modern-day focus on this split is increasingly on the radicalization of young men—are they moving further to the right?

All around the world—from Poland, where the far-right party supported a total ban on abortion, to South Korea, where the #MeToo movement sparked a fierce backlash—political commentators are raising questions about whether young men are becoming less liberal and less gender egalitarian than their fathers and grandfathers.

It’s too soon to make any final judgments, and many of these data points about young men and their interest in the far right aren’t substantial enough to be more than suggestive. But just because we don’t have the gold standard of randomized, controlled trials that scholars like to have before saying anything definitively, it doesn’t mean there’s nothing to be learned about the topic.'

Why Matriarchies Fail

Matt · 25 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Erin Byrd talks about why matriarchies are fundamentally unsustainable. She also cites a couple books that take on feminism.

A shortage of young men in the workforce could weigh on housing, Social Security, and growth for years to come

Matt · 26 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'America's job market is mysteriously short of young men.

It's a trend experts say will drag on the economy and could take years to fix, mainly because men have already been dropping out of the workforce for decades.

According to Carol Graham, a senior fellow of economic studies at the Brookings Institute, the labor force participation rate of prime working-age men has been declining over the last twenty years. Today, 11% of men aged 25-54 don't have a job and aren't looking for one, more than triple the percentage recorded in 1955, when just 3% were out of the workforce, according to data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.'

Restaurants increasingly discriminating by age and sex

Matt · 27 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, plenty of bars and lounges around the US impose similar — if not stricter — age restrictions, hoping to curb unruly behavior sometimes exhibited by newly legal drinkers and appeal to an older crowd. But such age limits are still unusual at restaurants, as evidenced by the recent controversy around a Missouri eatery.

Bliss, an upscale Caribbean restaurant that opened last month in the suburbs of St. Louis, provoked numerous headlines and fervent debate for limiting entry to women 30 and up and men 35 and up. As Barounis sees it, the uproar over the restaurant's age policy suggests it might have been too extreme.'

Diversity Was Supposed to Make Us Rich. Not So Much.

Matt · 28 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When management consulting firm McKinsey declared in 2015 that it had found a link between profits and executive racial and gender diversity, it was a breakthrough. The research was used by investors, lobbyists and regulators to push for more women and minority groups on boards, and to justify investing in companies that appointed them.

Unfortunately, the research doesn't show what everyone thought it showed.

There are obvious benefits of diverse corporate leadership for society, both in providing role models and in showing a commitment to promoting the best people, irrespective of skin color or gender. But doing it because it is the right thing is not the same as doing it because it makes more money.'

What Is Masculine Depression, and How Is It Treated?

Mastodon · 29 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MDRS-22 assesses what is called masculine depression. Masculine depression differs from the classical presentation in important ways. It emphasizes externalizing symptoms such as aggression, avoidant behaviors, emotional suppression, risk-taking, and self-medicating with drugs.

Note that masculine depression is not the same as male depression (i.e., it does not refer to a mental illness that occurs only in men). It is a subtype of depression, which means women may receive the diagnosis too.

Masculine depression is more likely to occur in women who assume male gender roles, for example, in single mothers exposed to the chronic stress of trying to pursue a career while raising a family alone.

In addition, both men and women with masculine depression reported less mental health-related use of medical and psychiatric services despite having more problematic substance use patterns (e.g., higher binge drinking).'

Aristotle and Socrates are sidelined as woke academics try to 'decolonialise' philosophers taught in classrooms and rely less upon 'dead white men'

Mastodon · 29 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"'Woke' academics have sidelined philosophers such as Aristotle and Socrates in favour of 'decolonising' classroom learning by getting rid of 'dead white men'.

A new toolkit for schools and universities has been produced by SOAS University of London, formerly the School of Oriental and African Studies.

New-age thinkers who are being recommended instead include an Indian-American feminist, a Nigerian 'gender theorist' and a Japanese zen expert.

The toolkit dismisses the study of classical Greek thinkers Aristotle, Plato and Socrates as 'armchair theorising'.

It is the first official guidance produced by SOAS academics aimed at 'decolonising' philosophy, with ambitions to provide more philosophical perspectives from Africa, Asia, the Middle East, and Latin America.

Among the 'new voices' suggested by the guide is Nishida Kitaro, a Japanese philosopher whose multicultural school of thought is said to 'challenge eurocentrism'.

Also included is Uma Narayan, an Indian scholar of philosophy who 'criticises culture-reductionist forms of postcolonial feminism'.

And African philosophers Kwasi Wiredu - developer of 'conceptual decolonisation' - and Nkiru Nzegwu, a leading African theorist of gender are also recommended.
...
Also proposed is an end to exams, pen-and-paper tests and essays - said to unfairly hinder students who are neurotypical or from diverse cultural backgrounds."

"The Manipulated Man" revisited

Matt · 29 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Manosphere Highlights Daily revisits "The Manipulated Man" written in the '70s by Esther Vilar and asks how much has changed since then.

Feminist Double Standards

Matt · 30 June 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists claim the sexes are identical. Feminists claim women require special consideration while men, society, workplaces, and schools make special accommodations for women so they could "catch up" to men. Feminists will claim women are identical to men. Feminists will claim women have unique needs. Which claim they make depends on the strategic goals of the moment. Feminism's not-quite-blank slate allows for women to have differences from men, but not evolutionarily-imbedded differences, only strategically and temporarily useful differences.

Women could do any job a man could do. Also, job requirements and workplaces must be changed to accommodate women. Women are as strong as men, but women suffered unique disadvantages due to previous exclusion or lack of accommodation.

Feminists reframed men's tendencies, interests and thought processes as inherently problematic, while women's tendencies, interests and thought processes deserved extra attention and respect in society, schools and workplaces.'

Ultra-Orthodox Israeli Men Protest Against Military Draft Order

Matt · 1 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thousands of ultra-Orthodox Jewish men poured into the streets of Jerusalem on Sunday night to protest against mandatory military conscription, part of a rekindled debate roiling the country after Israel's top court ruled that the military must start drafting religious students.

Many black-clad demonstrators gathered outside a yeshiva, or religious school, to hear rabbis exhorting the community over loudspeakers in Yiddish, rather than Hebrew, to stand strong against outside pressures to enlist. Some carried banners and stuck posters with anti-draft slogans on street lamps and bus stops.'

‘I Can’t Fix Them’: Laura Kavanagh Reportedly Slams Firefighters In Texts To NY AG Letitia James After Booing Incident

Mastodon · 1 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FDNY Commissioner Laura Kavanagh wants to “fix” the behavior of her department’s predominately male workforce — but can’t figure out how to extinguish their flames of discontent.

Kavanagh — who’s butted heads with plenty of male underlings since being named the city’s first female fire commissioner in 2022 — made the blunt admission while apologizing to New York Attorney General Letitia James during a March 8 text exchange, a day after pro-Donald Trump firefighters and other attendees mercilessly booed the Democratic pol during a department promotion ceremony.

“I should have called you last night, but I’ve been trying to find a way to say I’m sorry that doesn’t involve me apologizing for men who don’t deserve such grace,” texted Kavanagh, according to records The Post obtained from the AG’s office through a Freedom of Information Law request.'

Feminism v. Patriarchy in History

Matt · 1 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. YouTube's Whatifalthist and hoe_math have an interesting conversation on the topic.

Paedo's Vile Grin

Matt · 5 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rebecca Joynes, 30, lured the 15-year-old into meeting up with her before taking him on a shopping trip to Selfridges.

Footage shows her grinning at the teen, named only as Boy A, as she splashes out on the high-end accessory.

The teacher smirks while he hands the belt over to a shop worker before using her card to buy it.

Separate CCTV later shows the pair returning to her flat in Salford through a back gate - with a Gucci shopping bag in hand.

Once there, the pair kissed then had unprotected sex twice.'

Radical women-only hiring policy improves diversity at Dutch university

Mastodon · 7 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Dutch university's controversial policy to close the gender gap by temporarily allowing only women to apply for certain roles appears to be paying off.

In 2019, the Eindhoven University of Technology (TUE) announced that for the first 6 months of recruitment for permanent academic jobs, only women applicants would be considered. Now, the university—which specializes in engineering science—has found that in the first 5 years under the new policy, half of new recruits were women, compared with 30% previously.

The results, released earlier this month, are promising, says Yvonne Benschop, an organizational behavior researcher at Radboud University who specializes in workplace diversity. They "debunk old myths about women not being interested or qualified" for particular roles, she says.
...
The new policy sparked strong reactions in 2019, with international media coverage as well as harsh criticism in the Dutch press. Complaints about the legality of the program reached the Netherlands Institute for Human Rights, an independent monitoring body. The institute ruled that TUE was pursuing a legitimate goal but using too blunt an instrument. In response, the university adapted the plans in 2021 to apply only to departments and academic ranks where fewer than 30% of the faculty were women. It also reduced the number of women-only positions, which the university has named Irène Curie Fellowships, after Marie Skłodowska-Curie's Nobel Prize–winning daughter.'

Mother throws newborn daughter out of a window to her death because 'she thought a child would ruin her career as an executive at Porsche'

Mastodon · 7 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been jailed for seven and a half years after dropping her newborn daughter out of a window because 'she was worried a baby would ruin her career'.

Katarina Jovanovic, 28, from Lauffen am Neckar, Baden-Wuerttemberg State, Germany, was found guilty of manslaughter at the Heilbronn District Court on Wednesday, July 3.

Judges heard how she had given birth at home in secret 10 months ago on September 12 and then dropped her baby daughter from her apartment window almost 12 feet onto the tarmac below.

Horrified passersby found the minutes-old infant's body with a shattered skull underneath Jovanovic's balcony and called the police.'

Gynocentrism #2

Matt · 8 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men have been facing a chorus of antagonistic criticism and insults over the last 50 years. It started with them being called pigs and has devolved into the present-day insult of males being toxic. All the points in between have been filled with more insults and blaming men and patriarchy for every known feminine difficulty. But men don't fight back. Most men stay mum. They allow the lies and innuendo to be spun and spun with no rebuttal. This has left the culture convinced that men are indeed the problem. What a mess.

Why won't men fight back?

In order to understand the answer to that question we need to start with gynocentrism. What is it?'

Australia: Filicide overwhelmingly linked to male perpetrators who 'deeply believe their actions are justified', experts say

Mastodon · 9 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ANU PhD candidate Adelaide Bragias studies the gendered nature of domestic homicides and said previously filicide was seen as a women's crime linked to mental health issues.

"Generally speaking, a child is more at risk of filicide by their mother in their first year of life .. and usually that's because of severe mental illness … really severe depressive or psychotic symptoms," she said.

"As they get older it's their father that's more likely to kill them and usually our research is showing us that it is retaliatory or aggressive in nature."

"Generally what we see with women who kill their kids, it's a very different set of circumstances. It's less likely to be about control. It's less likely to be perpetrated in the context of domestic and family violence," she said.

"Oftentimes we see that it will occur in the context of, she's had significant mental health issues, particularly things like paranoid delusions where she becomes fixated on this idea of, 'I have to kill the children to protect the children'.

Dr Boxall said it's sometimes seen by mothers as the last line of defence in the presence of an abusive father.

"I've certainly reviewed cases where she killed the kids because she didn't see any other way out. Where in the context of the separation it might have been that he was granted custody, she felt like there was nothing else she could do and he was a very abusive person."'

Renault Korea backlash: carmaker embroiled in misandry row over finger gesture in video

Mastodon · 9 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Carmaker Renault Korea Motors is embroiled in a misandry backlash online sparked by promotional content, which has drawn attention to a particular pinching gesture in South Korean society deemed offensive.

The episode underscores deepening gender conflict among the country's young men and women, a phenomenon blamed on high unemployment and the widespread men-only online communities hostile to the opposite sex.

The Korean unit of French automobile group Renault S.A. has apologised and suspended a female employee who sparked the controversy by making the hand signal in a commercial clip.

Multiple videos reportedly showed footage of the employee placing her thumb and index finger close to each other, a gesture in Korean society used to mock the size of male genitals.

"We sincerely apologise once again to everyone who felt discomfort due to our recent internal promotional content," Renault Korea wrote on its YouTube channel's community bulletin board on Sunday.'

'Stop Blaming Men' author refutes idea of 'toxic masculinity,' talks negative impact of media on manhoo

Mastodon · 9 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amid negative media stories, shifting views on gender and the advent of new cultural terms like "toxic masculinity," certified life coach Michael Taylor is urging others to avoid placing the blame for society's ills on men.

Taylor, the author of "Stop Blaming Men for All the Problems," told Fox News Digital that he wants to dispel the idea that toxic masculinity exists.

"People confuse toxic masculinity with toxic behaviors," Taylor said. "So a man commits rape, domestic abuse, all those types of things. That's not toxic masculinity. That's a toxic behavior and I will assert that that behavior is the result of the man not being connected to his authentic masculinity."

In his view, authentic masculinity requires men to harness the tools and emotional awareness to avoid engaging in those types of toxic behaviors. According to Taylor, movies, music and other forms of mass media influence individual beliefs. It is, therefore, up to men to challenge them, he said.'

Goldie Hawn says she was ‘irate’ over initial ‘First Wives Club’ script: ‘It was very male bashing’

Mastodon · 10 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Goldie Hawn revealed that she was instrumental in getting “The First Wives Club” rewritten after being extremely dissatisfied with the initial script for the 1996 comedy film.

“I fought for every single thing I could because what happened with ‘First Wives Club,’ we all turned it down because it was very male bashing and didn’t want to do it,” Hawn, 78, said on the June 19 episode of Kelly Ripa’s podcast.

“I didn’t wanna do it and then suddenly, the girls said, ‘Okay, Goldie, you talk. You do it,’ ” she added.

Hawn, who co-starred with Bette Midler and Diane Keaton in the film, about a trio of jilted women seeking revenge on their ex-spouses, said that she “became the voice” of the project.'

NJ communities react to female predator arrests

Mastodon · 10 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Jersey communities have been reacting to back-to-back arrests of two female teachers in Monmouth County, accused of sexual encounters with students.

Julie Rizzitello submitted her resignation to the Wall Township school district, days before being arrested on Wednesday, Monmouth County Prosecutor Raymond Santiago announced.

The 36-year-old high school English teacher, who lives in Brick, was charged with sexual assault and other counts.'

Young Men Are Swinging Hard Right in Korea. It Could Be a Preview for America.

Mastodon · 11 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Around the world, from the United States to China to the U.K. to Germany to Tunisia, in chat rooms and in the streets, the gender divide is widening as Gen Zers split along political lines: Young women are increasingly swinging to the left, while young men are moving to the right — negating conventional wisdom that young people as a whole are more progressive than the generation before them. “Gen Z,” observed data journalist John Burn-Murdoch, who tracked this trend for the Financial Times, “is two generations, not one.”

The United States in particular saw this growing partisan gender split during the 2022 midterms, when far more women voters between the ages of 18 and 29 stood beside Democratic candidates than their male counterparts.

But nowhere is this divide more evident than it is in Korea, where the ideological gap between young men and women is growing wider than anywhere else — altering the country’s politics and fully taking over Korean society.'

Spain: Why Antifeminism Is Spreading Among Gen Z

Mastodon · 11 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are today's young people more sexist? Are we on the brink of, or already experiencing, a backlash against feminist values? Can men's problems be reduced to a crisis of masculinity? Many social scientists agree that an increasing number of young men are mired in discomfort, in a crisis that challenges their identity, self-esteem and the value of their interpersonal relationships.

Equality between the sexes is a historical novelty. The narrative about female oppression and gender inequality often looks to the past. Simone de Beauvoir wrote in The Second Sex, published in 1949, "Men's economic privilege, their social value, the prestige of marriage, the usefulness of masculine support — all these encourage women to ardently want to please men. They are on the whole still in a state of serfdom. It follows that woman knows and chooses herself not as she exists for herself but as man defines her."'

Prince William at Risk of Sexism Backlash

Mastodon · 12 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prince William could be risking a potential sexism storm if he attends an important men's soccer final in Germany on Sunday, after the royal was absent from a high-profile women's game in 2023.
...
William's attendance at the final hasn't yet been confirmed by Kensington Palace, but if he were to take his place in the Olympiastadion in Berlin for the game it would likely spark backlash after he earned criticism in 2023 for not traveling to Australia when the England women's team secured their place in the FIFA Women's World Cup final (also against Spain). The team lost that game 1-0.'

Fire department sexist hiring lawsuit nets $11.25 million proposed settlement

Mastodon · 12 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A lawsuit alleging the Chicago Fire Department used unnecessary physical tests to continue a “stubborn and purposeful” effort to block women from becoming paramedics could soon end in a $11.25 million settlement.

The city’s Law Department recommended the eight-figure deal, set to face two final votes by aldermen next week. The tests were “ill-matched” to actual paramedic work and failed 21% of the women who took them, but just 0.5% of male paramedic candidates, according to the 2016 lawsuit filed by 12 women blocked from the jobs.

“This testing has no legally defensible justification and eliminates a significant number of women, but virtually no men,” the lawsuit said. “Its discriminatory effect has not been accidental.”'

Northwestern law school sued for discrimination against white men in faculty hiring

Mastodon · 12 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A conservative group on Tuesday sued Northwestern University, claiming its law school discriminates against white men in faculty hiring and in the selection of articles that appear in its flagship law review.

The suit filed by an organization called Faculty, Alumni, and Students Opposed to Racial Preferences (FASORP), also names several Northwestern faculty and students as defendants. FASORP is represented by prominent conservative attorney Jonathan Mitchell and by America First Legal, which is headed by former Donald Trump adviser Steven Miller.

The law school “refuses to even consider hiring white male faculty candidates with stellar credentials, while it eagerly hires candidates with mediocre and undistinguished records who check the proper diversity boxes,” according to the complaint.

The lawsuit was filed in federal court in Chicago on behalf of three unnamed FASORP members who allege that they are ready and willing to apply for faculty posts at Northwestern's law school but cannot compete because they are white men.'

Ukrainian Men Desperate to Escape War Are Drowning as They Flee

Matt · 14 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was seven weeks after Pvt. Ivan Pidmalivskiy had been due back on the front line with Russia when rescuers pulled his lifeless body from a river on Ukraine's western edge.

His death added to a toll of more than two dozen other men who have drowned in the River Tysa since Russia invaded, many of them fugitives from a military draft aimed at sustaining Ukraine's war effort. Pidmalivskiy was different: He had fought for two years after returning to Ukraine from abroad to defend his country.

His family had seen the war take a growing toll on the burly 32-year-old, but he never revealed the depths of his exhaustion to them. "What was happening inside his soul, I don't know," said his mother, Liubov Pidmalivska.'

Men still being discriminated against in 2024

Matt · 15 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. BlueOrange22 asks why men are still being discriminated against and not seeming to care.

Israeli military says it will begin drafting ultra-Orthodox men. That could rattle the government

Matt · 16 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Israeli military announced Tuesday it will begin sending draft notices to Jewish ultra-Orthodox men on Sunday.

That follows a landmark Supreme Court order for young religious men to begin enlisting for military services. Under long-standing political arrangements, ultra-Orthodox men had been exempt from the draft, which is compulsory for most Jewish men.

The system created widespread resentment among the general public in Israel, especially after more than nine months of war against Hamas militants in Gaza. The court ruled that the system of exemptions was discriminatory.'

How Toxic Masculinity Affects People and What Can Be Done About It

Mastodon · 17 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toxic masculinity refers to a type of hyper-masculinity that causes aggression, self-importance, dominance, and lack of consideration for others' feelings and needs.1 The term originated in the late 20th century and is now associated with extreme misogyny and anti-feminist rhetoric.

It's thought that toxic masculinity gets instilled in people assigned male at birth because of how they are raised and by the messages society sends them about what it means to be a successful or powerful male.

The effects of toxic masculinity are far-reaching and can include aggression, emotional dysregulation, violence toward marginalized people, and the upholding of harmful gender norms.'

Women Demand Better Menopause Support in the Workplace

Mastodon · 17 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The State of Menopause 2024 report found that a significant portion of women are advocating for better workplace accommodations to manage menopause.

Out of the over 2,000 women experiencing pre-menopause or menopause symptoms and aged 40 to 64 surveyed, 51% want more workplace support for menopause, yet 76% have no accommodations.

The report suggest potential workplace support could include increased time off, more flexible schedules and fostering an empathetic environment. Some changes such as allowing for breaks when needed and providing access to resources, could make a difference in the lives of menopausal women.'

Title IX will apply to college athlete revenue share, feds say

Mastodon · 17 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Without direction from the federal government, athletic departments will have to decide how to allocate the new revenue share money between men and women. Administrators will have to choose between paying a higher portion to men, risking potential lawsuits, or equally sharing revenue with men and women, risking falling behind competitors in football recruiting.
...
When it comes to revenue share dollars provided directly by the schools, athletic department officials have told ESPN they don't know whether they must give a proportionally equal amount of money to men and women or if equitable treatment means that they can allocate the roughly $20 million based on each athlete's value in the NIL market.

If schools decide to view the new revenue sharing money as financial aid akin to the scholarships or cost-of-living stipends they already provide to athletes, roughly half of that money will need to go to women athletes on most campuses. In that case, a football team would collectively receive, at most, $10 million in revenue share -- or even less at schools that want to be competitive in basketball or other men's sports.'

The crisis of young men and the recent attempt on Trump's life

Matt · 20 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All of these narratives are an effort to get you to look away. We knew who the perpetrator was before knowing who he was: a lonely young man with access to weapons of war trying to recapture social status with a (perceived) heroic act of violence.

...

I've written and spoken a lot about the obstacles — financial, educational, social, sexual, spiritual — facing young men today, so I won't relitigate my case. If you're interested, read more here or here or check out my TED talk.

The CliffsNotes: Over the past generation there's been a deliberate transfer of wealth from the young to the old. Among other things, the result is unaffordable and indefensible costs for education and housing. Things are especially bad for boys and young men.'

Mayorkas, Cheatle Slam ‘Baseless and Insulting’ Criticism of Women in Law Enforcement After ‘DEI’ Attacks on Secret Service

Mastodon · 20 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Department of Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas and other DHS officials lashed out at critics of female Secret Service agents who have slammed the agency in the wake of the attempted assassination of former President Donald Trump.

In a Saturday afternoon statement attributed to Mayorkas and 10 others – including Secret Service Director Kimberly Cheatle – DHS lashed out at criticism of women in policing.'

Humor: "Bill Burr: On Gold-Diggers"

Matt · 21 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Comedian Bill Burr popped up on my Facebook feed with this. He hits the nail on the head about things like alimony. You'll probably need to have a Facebook account to access.

Europe turns to conscription as threat of wider war with Russia grows

Mastodon · 21 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A number of European countries halted mandatory conscription after the end of the Cold War, but several nations – particularly in Scandinavia and the Baltics – have reintroduced it in recent years, largely because of the Russian threat. Failure to enlist can result in fines or even jail time in some countries.

Latvia is the latest to implement conscription. Compulsory military service was reintroduced on January 1 this year, after being abolished in 2006. Male citizens will be put up for the draft within 12 months of reaching the age of 18, or graduation for those still in the education system.

“At first there was a lot of pushback,” said Arturs Pīlācis, a 20-year-old student. He’s yet to go up for the draft but voluntarily went on a month-long military course.'

Women-only music festival Burning Woman criticised over refund troubles

Mastodon · 22 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women-only music festival Burning Woman criticised over refund troubles

Burning Woman, a women's music and arts festival which was due to be held in Lincolnshire this month, has been criticised over refund troubles.

The festival cancelled its 2024 edition after announcing that it had been the target of harassment online and also faced financial struggles ahead of its event, which was due to take place from July 19 - 21 at Belvoir Castle, close to Grantham.

"This was not an easy decision," organisers wrote in an Instagram post. "We have poured our hearts and souls into creating a transformative and empowering event for you, especially amidst the challenges of the pandemic, last-minute venue change, and the rising cost of living."

Burning Woman claimed that it had been subject to "relentless harassment from an anonymous group of women" who "spread untruths about the company".'

UK: Equality watch-dog issues new guidance for employers on women-only jobs

Mastodon · 22 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This new guidance that makes clear men who self-identity as women are not female and should not be recruited as such. This makes it fairer on the women who apply and the people who rely on a woman being in that role for reasons of privacy, dignity and safety.

However this new guidance also says men who change their legal status to female by obtaining a GRC can be recruited into a female role.

This highlights the absurdity of a law that expects a woman to waive her need for privacy or safety simply because a man gets a certificate.
...
This new guidance is a step in the right direction. It bars the majority of men who identity as women from getting jobs reserved for women. Most transgender males do not have a GRC. But it leaves open a loophole for a small number to access these jobs with a GRC. More progress is needed before this is truly fair on women.'

Australia: Teachers warn of sexual harassment, sexism, misogyny in classrooms

Mastodon · 22 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teaching has remained a predominantly female profession.

The Australian Curriculum, Assessment and Reporting Authority said seven out of every 10 teachers identified as female, a number that increased to more than eight out of every 10 in primary school ranks.

There have been ongoing concerns about the rise of misogyny in Australian classrooms, led by online influencers such as Andrew Tate.

...

From having a 16-year-old female student tell a male classmate that, "Miss wants to f*ck you", to Year 9 students projecting pornography on a whiteboard behind her while she took the roll, Ms Duffus said she had seen it all.

She said at times it made her feel like an emotional prostitute.

"I was accepting large sums of money to be the teenagers' punching bag for the day," she said in an essay on her experience.

"By failing to come down hard on their sexist behaviour — because I didn't know their names, lacked access to their electronic records, or simply couldn't be bothered — I was somehow complicit in a system that was making teachers' lives worse."'

UK: Feminist professor to lead shake-up of national curriculum

Mastodon · 22 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A feminist professor will lead a shake-up of the national curriculum for schools in England, the Government has announced.

Prof Becky Francis, the chief executive of learning charity the Education Endowment Foundation, will chair a wholesale review of the school syllabus “to breathe new life into our outdated curriculum”, the Education Secretary said on Friday.

The review will scrutinise all aspects of teaching material for pupils aged five to 18 and will “look closely at the key challenges to attainment for young people,” the Department for Education (DfE) said.'

Feminism’s Patriarchs: An Ideological Response to the Failures of Men

Mastodon · 22 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is easy to identify many of the prominent feminist women throughout history—Mary Wollstonecraft, Betty Friedan, and Judith Butler—yet it is men, beginning with Charles Fourier, who have directed many of feminism’s key developments. Indeed, what is often called “feminism” cannot be separated from ideologically driven men who saw an opportunity to take advantage of or to cultivate detached and vulnerable women ripe for redirection toward their own social and political goals.

...

Over time, a movement that claimed to strive for equality between men and women unmasked itself as a movement that sought to make women like men, and even deny the reality of meaningful biological differences altogether. While this is obvious in second-wave and third-wave feminism, these beliefs were present from the beginning of first-wave feminism, too.'

On political poles and toxic femininity

Matt · 23 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Whatifalthist discusses political poles and the influence of toxic femininity in history on them, though this isn't his main point. YouTube video here.

Toxic masculinity? The rise of male influencers and the manosphere

Mastodon · 24 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'UK police chiefs have warned that young men are being radicalised into extreme misogyny online by influencers such as Andrew Tate. Speaking as the National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC) published a report into violence against women and girls, which it is calling a "national emergency", senior police officer Maggie Blyth has said that Tate and others like him are radicalising boys into extreme misogyny in a way that is "quite terrifying".

The report estimates that at least one in every 12 women will be a victim of violence every year: around two million women. Nearly 3,000 crimes of violence against women are recorded each day, though police chiefs are calling it the "tip of the iceberg" because the figures do not include unreported crimes.'

This is the first airline where women can request not to sit next to men

Matt · 24 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Gee, is there a version that allows ppl to pick the ethnicity of their seat-mates? Oh, but that'd be racist. This isn't sexist at all! Excerpt:

'But now, one airline is making it easier to calm anxieties when it comes to flying, becoming the first to allow women to request not to be seated next to a man.

A low-cost airline based in India, IndiGo, has announced a pioneering new policy allowing women to view the gender of the passengers sitting around them before booking.

They'll be able to choose to sit next to a woman if they'd prefer, which they'll be able to do by viewing the seat plan ahead of flying.

Where women are booked on, their seats will flash pink – yes, somewhat of a cliché but the policy itself is a watershed moment when it comes to passenger safety.
...
Critically, men will not be privy to this information when booking, so they won't be able to use it to deliberately position themselves next to a woman.

The new initiative was spurred by a survey issued to its female customers, who were asked how their travel experience could be made more comfortable.'

Challenging new Title IX rules, legal group says women in STEM award discriminates against real men

Mastodon · 25 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On July 10, the Equal Protection Project (EPP) of the Legal Insurrection Foundation filed a civil rights complaint against the Rochester Institute of Technology (RIT) that alleges that the eligibility criteria of RIT's Women in STEM Award discriminates against biological males who identify as males.

The Women in STEM Award at RIT is a scholarship valued at $76,000 designed to support outstanding high school students with a demonstrated interest in areas like science, computing, robotics, and math.

However, the award is exclusively open to "outstanding female, female-identifying, or non-binary student[s]" – effectively excluding males who identify as males, according to EPP. The civil rights organization alleges that this exclusion violates Title IX as interpreted by the Biden administration's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) and RIT's nondiscrimination policies.'

Maryland Commission for Men's Health Report on Domestic Violence (2010)

Matt · 25 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I wrote this report when I was the vice-chair of the Maryland Commission for Men's Health 2008-2010. This was one of three reports that The Maryland Department of Health tried to deep six. It took us a year to track down what they had done and the reports finally made their way to the legislators. (The story of this event was a chapter in Janice Fiamengo's excellent book Sons of Feminism: Men Have Their Say.) They really didn't want this to get out and they succeeded since it was a year late. It was written with the idea of giving legislators a good sense of the bigoted path the domestic violence industry had taken in Maryland. It continues to be a good summary of how the feminists have built a lethal anti-male industry. It is amazing and shocking how little has changed since that time. Sad too.

Perhaps the most confusing, perplexing, and controversial area in which men's health needs are overlooked is the issue of male victims of domestic violence. One immediately noticeable trend is the strong tendency to focus solely on female victims and ignore male victims. This tendency is seen repeatedly. Most media, whether print or electronic, focuses on female victims of domestic violence and all too often fails to mention male victims. Almost every article in the newspaper and every program on TV about domestic violence focuses on female victims. We see the same focus in academia: courses in sociology and women's studies repeat the message that women are the primary victims of domestic violence and rarely mention male victims. ...'

Michael Kimmel to present ‘Angry White Men’ at Monadnock Summer Lyceum

Mastodon · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Sunday, July 28, at 11 a.m. Michael Kimmel will present “Angry White Men: Masculinity on the Extreme Right” for the Monadnock Summer Lyceum at Peterborough Unitarian Universalist Church, 25 Main St.

Kimmel will reference his book “Angry White Men” and other research data to look at anger’s causes and explore more-positive possibilities.

Kimmel earned his BA from Vassar, a Master of Arts from Brown, and his doctorate from UC Berkeley. He taught at Bryant College, UC Berkeley, the State University of New York and Rutgers. He is founder and editor of the academic journal Men and Masculinities and a national spokesperson for the National Organization for Men Against Sexism.'

US women’s rights campaigner accused of sexual harassment

'An eminent sociologist and high profile women’s rights campaigner has stepped down indefinitely from the board of a gender equality group following allegations of sexual harassment.

Michael Kimmel, distinguished professor of sociology at Stony Brook University in New York, has resigned from the board of Promundo, an initiative that promotes gender justice by engaging men and boys.'

Not Just Dead White Men: Boston's "Un-Monument" Project Sets Out To Undo Centuries of Bias

Mastodon · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an audit of national monuments, the Monument Lab found that most monuments commemorate — surprise! — white men.

Who from history gets cast in bronze — and who doesn't — reflects a legacy of racism and sexism in America's public spaces. Now, a project from the city of Boston is taking aim at the landscape of monuments across the city.

It's called Un-Monument, short for "Un-monument | Re-monument | De-Monument: Transforming Boston." There's a playful, experimental spirit to the initiative, which consists of free temporary monuments, partnerships with arts and cultural organizations across the city and free public programming.'

Do women make better leaders?

Mastodon · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The surprising thing is not that a sitting president decided to abandon his reelection campaign. Or that his party's leading candidate to replace him is a woman.

No, the astonisher is that America has never had a female commander in chief.

What's truly astonishing is that there aren't more of them. After all, women make better leaders than men.
...
Don't take my word for it. In survey after survey, corporations led by women are found to perform better in such categories as managerial reputation, crisis management and profitability. Boston Consulting estimates that, on average, earnings at companies with gender-diverse leadership are 9 percent higher than those without. It's much the same for firms with a high percentage of women managers and board members. Accordingly, major asset management firms are adopting policies that favor investing in companies with substantial numbers of women at the top.
...
If leaders with two X chromosomes are arguably more effective, how come the U.S. has had only XY-endowed presidents? The standard answer is that Americans just aren't ready for a woman in that job, as Hillary Clinton's 2016 election defeat seemed to confirm.'

Tackling misogyny in UK schools could take up to 20 years, says Jess Phillips

Mastodon · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Plans to tackle misogyny in schools could take up to 20 years to have an impact on society, the safeguarding minister, Jess Phillips, has said as she outlined measures to protect women and girls.

Phillips spoke the day after the National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC) estimated that 2 million women were victims of violence perpetrated by men each year in an epidemic so serious it amounts to a "national emergency".

One of Labour's five missions is to halve violence against women and girls in a decade, by targeting perpetrators and addressing the root causes of abuse and violence.

The minister for violence against women and girls said "Raneem's law" was already in the works, and would ensure police forces provide protection to victims of domestic abuse. But evidence that some of the government's policies are working – such as addressing misogyny among schoolchildren – could take years to emerge.'

UK: Influencers driving extreme misogyny, say police

Mastodon · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Deputy Chief Constable Maggie Blyth said officers who focused on violence against women and girls were now working with counter-terrorism teams to look at the risk of young men being radicalised.
...
Speaking about harmful content online, she said: "We know that some of this is also linked to radicalisation of young people online, we know the influencers, Andrew Tate, the element of influencing of particularly boys, is quite terrifying and that's something that both the leads for counterterrorism in the country and ourselves from a VAWG [violence against women and girls] perspective are discussing."'

Paris 2024: Men's exclusion from artistic swimming raises questions on 'gender-equal Olympics'

Mastodon · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No men will compete in synchronised swimming at the Olympics, despite Paris 2024 vowing to be the first gender-equal edition in the history of the Games.

The 96 athletes picked by 18 different nations for the Olympics were all women.

In 2022, World Aquatics changed the rules, allowing up to two men to be selected in an eight-athlete synchronised swimming squad.

"World Aquatics is very disappointed that no male artistic swimmers have been selected for Paris 2024" they told Euronews in a statement.

"This should have been a landmark moment for the sport. We understand that it would always be a challenge for men to earn a spot on a team in time for Paris 2024, considering that their eligibility was only confirmed 18 months ago, but we were still hopeful that some would succeed."

Neither World Aquatics nor the International Olympic Committee have a say on the picks, as they are always decided by the individual national federations.'

9 things I'm doing to teach my teenage son about 'toxic masculinity'

Mastodon · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'2. I don't allow (or use) disrespectful language - Last month, my son asked me if it was ok to call a woman a bitch, even if it wasn't to their face. No stars for guessing what my response was. However, the fact he asked suggests he knew it was wrong (he was probably testing boundaries, too), so I calmly explained why it was a degrading term, even as a joke. I've also become aware of the language I use about men and myself. A casual 'dickhead' remark if a driver cuts me up could be perceived as negative by my son, as can calling myself a 'stupid cow' if I've dropped the milk. If I'm saying these thing about others and myself, what's that telling him?
...
8. I avoid the term 'toxic masculinity' - I found that when I used the term 'toxic masculinity', my son became defensive and rightly so, I referenced it at first, so my son knew what I was talking about, and then moved away from it. Phil agrees, 'Parents need to focus less on masculinity being a problem and more on masculinity being a healthy and natural expression in many boys and young men.'

Why are women so much more liberal than men?

Matt · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Melanie King asks this age-old question. YouTube video here.

Good small slide deck on men's issues being prioritized

Matt · 26 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Please download the 10 images attached hereon and review them. I found these on a men's rights/issues subreddit.

Janice Fiamengo on Anti-Feminism

Matt · 27 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Janice discusses her experiences as an anti-feminist in a YouTube video here.

Wodek Szemberg: Has the Left lost its masculine energy?

Mastodon · 28 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'James Carville, Bill Clinton's famed pollster and political strategist, did not mince words last month when he, not for the first time, fired off a salvo at the ailing body of the Democratic Party. In an interview with Jonathan Capehart of The Washington Post, Carville offered an indictment of "NPR-sounding" "female preachiness": "We know what's best for you, don't eat hamburgers, don't watch football, don't drink beer. Guess where our young male number is going? In the toilet, alright? Because Democratic messaging, I'm sorry, is too feminine, it just is."

Not even a reminder from Capehart to be mindful that we are living in the 21st century made any impression on the Ragin' Cajun, whose Southern drawl makes speaking and understanding postmodernese too difficult. In national elections, only binary sex matters.

Now that Kamala Harris has been elevated to the position of Democratic Party standard-bearer, the problem with "female preachiness" can only become magnified.

The economist Tyler Cowen recently summarized the issue of gender divergence on his blog thusly: "The ongoing feminization of society has driven more and more men, including black and Latino men, into the Republican camp. The Democratic Party became too much the party of unmarried women." (I presume that in the unmarried he includes women who are no longer married.)

Not surprisingly, a significant share of a generation of men who grew up surrounded by the discourse about the importance of gender equality do not feel that it is inclusive of them. This would be a most useful reason for feminists, who cannot conceive of female advances that are anything but good for everyone involved, to reconsider the universal applicability of the "happy wife, happy life" truism. Instead, they should take seriously the idea of how young men, especially, are shaped by their lived experience, and not only focus on women's purity of intent.'

Olympics camera operators warned not to frame women in a sexist way

Mastodon · 28 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The head of the company in charge of broadcasting the Olympic Games has called on camera operators to avoid “sexist” portrayals of female athletes at Paris 2024.

Yiannis Exarchos, CEO of Olympic Broadcasting Services, said his company and the Games as a whole are committed to equality between the men’s and women’s competitions this summer.

“Women are not there because they are more attractive - they are there because they are elite athletes,” he said.

He added: “[Equal participation of women] is not enough. It has not been enough for us. We wanted to make sure that the actual sports content was also reflecting this equality.”'

Why do women cheat? New study reveals complex motivations behind female infidelity

Mastodon · 28 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent study published in Evolution and Human Behavior offers new insights into the complex motivations behind female infidelity. The findings reveal that women who cheat are typically more physically attracted to their affair partners but view their primary partners as better co-parents. This suggests that women may cheat to obtain “good genes” for their offspring while relying on their primary partners for parenting support. Additionally, the study highlights several other motivations for infidelity, including relationship dissatisfaction, the desire for variety, and revenge.

Interestingly, the study also found that men exhibited similar patterns to women in their infidelity behavior. This suggests that men, like women, may also engage in infidelity to seek genetic benefits from physically attractive affair partners while valuing their primary partners for parental investment.

“Finding that men were strategically dualistic as well — prioritizing physical attraction in affair partners and parental ability in primary partners — was a surprise,” Murphy told PsyPost. “However, it’s consistent with some past research, some of which suggests men are even more dualistic than women in their affairs.”'

Australia: New project will help teachers tackle toxic masculinity in schools

Mastodon · 29 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toxic masculinity and misogynistic gender narratives are gaining traction online and in Australian classrooms, threatening gender equality and contributing to gender-based violence. A new project from Monash University aims to support secondary school teachers to tackle the influence of these harmful online ideologies on young boys and men.

The two year project, funded by Australia's National Research Organisation for Women's Safety (ANROWS), will see a collaboration between Monash Arts and Education Faculties to establish school-based early intervention programs to identify and tackle the harms of online misogyny and gender-based violence in schools.

The project will involve three phases over 18 months. The first phase involves in-depth research into the influence of manosphere content on Australian boys and young men. This data will guide focus groups with young Australians to explore their interactions with manosphere content both online and offline.

In the second phase, workshops with secondary school staff across Australia will identify the most effective content and delivery methods for a new pilot professional learning program addressing the manosphere's classroom impact. The final phase will pilot and evaluate this program with teachers, ensuring it meets their needs and effectively combats toxic masculinity in schools.'

Male Bashing

Mastodon · 29 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I recently attended a workshop intended for women therapists who are interested in learning more about working with men. At one point, the female workshop leader asked the group of mostly women to raise their hands if they liked men. About one-third of those in attendance immediately and enthusiastically raised their hands. In conversation afterward, most of these women said they were very close to their fathers, their brothers, or other men in their lives. Another third of the workshop participants slowly and hesitantly raised their hands while simultaneously glancing around the room to see what others were doing. Lastly, about a third of the women in the room never raised their hands. Keep in mind that the people attending were presumably there because they are interested in doing psychotherapy with men.

I wondered what the group's reaction would have been if the workshop leader had asked if they like African-American people or if she had asked if they like GLBTQ+ people. How many workshop participants would openly acknowledge not liking either of these groups of people? More importantly, would those therapists who were aware of their biases towards either group still feel OK about continuing to work with groups of people they acknowledged not liking?'

Australia: Sperm donor wins custody of boy over his birth mother and her lesbian partner in landmark court case

Matt · 29 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A sperm donor has won parental rights over a lesbian birth mother's only child in a landmark case.

The ruling was handed down in June by the Federal Circuit and Family Court of Australia which denied the mother's parental responsibility for the nine-year-old.

The court instead ruled in favour of her former partner and their sperm donor.

The custody battle has lasted for almost five years between the three adults, costing them hundreds of thousands of dollars in legal costs, The Herald Sun reported.'

America’s New Political War Pits Young Men Against Young Women

Matt · 29 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Looks like some men's issues are finally beginning to impact the electoral map. Excerpt:

'Collin Mertz, a 23-year-old farmer in North Dakota, believes American men like himself have been targeted by liberals in the push for diversity.

“It would seem the white male is the enemy of the left,” said Mertz, who voted for former President Donald Trump in 2020 and plans to do so again in November.

Lauren Starrett, a 28-year-old engineer in Cincinnati, feels a personal threat from conservatives seeking to scale back access to abortion and other rights.

“It’s kind of terrifying, really,” said Starrett, who backs Vice President Kamala Harris.

...

Some men say they have lost economic, cultural and political influence to women amid the focus on equity and diversity. Others expressed resentment over feminist and progressive attitudes on college campuses, in the entertainment industry and at many workplaces.

In certain U.S. cities, young women are outpacing young men in median annual income and are more likely than young men to live apart from their parents. A larger share of women under 30 are reaching financial independence compared with young women in 1980, according to the Pew Research Center, while fewer young men are reaching that milestone compared with four decades ago.

The Democratic push for diversity is making them more likely to vote for Republicans, some men said. An April survey by the Pew Research Center found that 23% of men—and 33% of men who backed Trump—believed the advancement of women has come at their expense.

Many young men feel abandoned by Democrats, saying Republican politicians are the ones making direct appeals to them, according to interviews with dozens of men under 30.'

Australia: Monash university project giving teachers tools to combat 'toxic masculinity' has been slammed for equating Jordan Peterson with Andrew Tate

Mastodon · 31 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Monash University project which aims to counter the growth of “toxic masculinity” in Australian classrooms has been slammed for failing to distinguish the views of Jordan Peterson and Andrew Tate.

Teachers at independent and Catholic schools will be given conversation guides and role-play scripts as part of the project, which will see Monash University’s Arts and Education faculties develop school-based early intervention programs to “identify and tackle the harms of online misogyny and gender-based violence in schools”.

A media release about the project, which is funded by Australia’s National Research Organisation for Women’s Safety (ANROWS), warns “toxic masculinity and misogynistic gender narratives” gaining traction online are seeping in to classrooms, threatening gender equality and contributing to gender-based violence.'

Media reaction to Macron kiss points up double-standard

Matt · 31 July 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Reverse the genders and you get the idea. Excerpt:

'French media is in a frenzy after a passionate cheek-to-cheek kiss between France's president, Emmanuel Macron, and Amélie Oudéa-Castéra, the country's sports minister, was captured during the opening ceremony of the Olympic Games.

In the photo, Oudéa-Castéra, known colloquially as AOC, can be seen with her arm around the president's neck, and his head cradled in hers as she plants a kiss below his ear. In the background of the photo, Prime Minister Gabriel Attal can be seen looking away conspicuously.

According to The Telegraph, the French magazine Midi Libre first commented on the photo. "After the opening ceremony of the Olympic Games, the pressure was off, giving way to euphoria. In an explosion of joy, sports minister Amélie Oudéa-Castera and President Emmanuel Macron kissed. The kiss caused quite a stir," Midi Libre wrote.'

Which Fairbanks House candidate says white men need to sit down and shut up?

Mastodon · 2 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Joy Beth Cottle, who changed her registration to Republican immediately before filing against Republican House Rep. Frank Tomaszewski of Fairbanks, has gone on the attack. She's attacking conservatives and she's attacking white men for the crime of being white.

She blistered Tomaszewski and two other sitting Republicans because they attended a symposium in Washington, D.C. that focuses on conservative, Christian-based leadership. Two of the Republicans she blasted were ethnic minorities — Rep. Jamie Allard and Rep. Stanley Wright.

In her attack, Cottle linked an article from a leftist blog out of Anchorage, whose founder is now employed by Rep. Alyse Galvin, the Democrat from Anchorage who flies under the false-flag "undeclared" category now.'

Young men are falling behind

Mastodon · 2 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young men are facing a collective crisis of masculinity, but they are too isolated from each other to address it together.

The number of men who report having zero close friends has increased from 3% in 1990 to 15% in 2021, while the size of social circles in general has decreased dramatically. Men feel more lonely than ever before, and they turn to their vices to deal with it.

Addiction to pornography is widespread among young men, and roughly two-thirds watch pornography weekly or more. Men make up the majority of “deaths of despair,” such as alcohol poisoning, while male drug overdose deaths are more than twice as common as female overdose deaths. Moreover, the suicide rate among men is four times higher than among women.
...
Men have largely been left behind by a culture that talks more about “toxic masculinity” than the positive aspects of having strong male figures. Guys-only spaces, such as the Boy Scouts, are being destroyed, and entertainment franchises, such as Star Wars, are openly hostile to their mostly male audiences. While men are struggling, they are also villainized constantly.

Unfortunately, this marginalization has resulted in many men turning to poor role models, such as pornographer Andrew Tate or antisemitic troll Nick Fuentes. These cranks promote degeneracy and debauchery, appealing to the worst tendencies of men. However, they are the natural result of decades of propaganda against actually healthy masculine behavior.'

Louisiana mayor Misty Roberts, 42, accused of raping a minor — one week after abrupt resignation

Mastodon · 2 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Louisiana mayor, who abruptly took a leave of absence before resigning last week, is accused of raping a minor during her time in office.

Former DeRidder Mayor Misty Roberts was charged with third-degree rape and contributing to the delinquency of juveniles, Louisiana State Police announced on Thursday.

An investigation into the 42-year-old mayor, who was in her second term, was opened on July 26, after the Beauregard Parish Sheriff's Office requested the state police look into a complaint against Roberts.
...
"As the investigation progressed, LSP SVU conducted interviews with two juveniles, one of which was the victim. Both juveniles confirmed Roberts had sexual intercourse with one juvenile victim while employed as Mayor," a statement read.

A warrant for Roberts' arrest was issued on Wednesday before she surrendered herself to the police.'

1 in 4 Women Admit to Violence Against Spouse

Matt · 2 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The public is convinced that domestic violence is all about aggressive men beating up on defenseless women. While this is in some ways correct, it is only a fraction of the story. The reality is that domestic violence is quite complex and women can be the perpetrators and men can also be the victims. That side of the story though has been deeply buried and ignored.

How did the public come to be so misinformed? It's a long and involved tale. Activists, clinicians, the media, academics and researchers have all played a part in this. Each group has for many years only told a part of the story, the part about women as victims and men as perpetrators. To get a good sense of this remarkable and lopsided tale you could read a report to Maryland lawmakers written by the Maryland Commission for Men's Health that tells the story plainly about male victims of domestic violence. It does not pull punches and goes into more detail than this short article.'

The Rise Of Angry, Disgruntled Young Males

Matt · 6 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the years, I have highlighted on my social media platform the importance of addressing the challenges and concerns faced by boys, men, and fathers. I've expressed concerns about the pervasive anti-male propaganda prevalent in news media, entertainment, and educational institutions, and warned that rather than society fostering gender harmony, we've often perpetuated a false narrative of men versus women, and all of this was going to come back to bite us. I envisioned new forms of misogyny like we've never seen before.

In recent decades, there has been a strong emphasis on empowering girls with the message of "girl power," while boys have been neglected. The mantra of "the future is female" has prevailed, leading to a focus on providing girls with resources, motivation, and support. Meanwhile, boys have been left with easy access to negative influences such as pornography, fast food, and video games, along with the unfair burden of repenting for the perceived crimes of their sex throughout history. We have devalued fathers and taken away men's sense of purpose. We have neglected the health needs of boys and men, which I've written about here. As many young men today struggle to navigate the complexities of modern society and are facing difficulties finding their way, they are unfairly shouldered with blame and are being labeled as the problem.'

White Men Attempt Rare Nonthreatening Gathering for Kamala Harris

Mastodon · 8 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the course of human history, politically oriented gatherings of white people have not typically been a sign of “fun.” Gatherings of white men in particular have historically cultivated an ominous vibe: think the Unite the Right rally, many European land wars, English football hooligans, or Congress. Basically, unless you’re at a Phish concert, seeing a bunch of white guys on a mission can be an unsettling thing. But Democratic organizer Ross Morales Rocketto decided something needed to be done to activate white dudes for the sake of progressive politics, so he set up an online rally called “White Dudes for Harris” that took place July 29. “What we are really trying to do is engage a group of people whom the left has largely ignored for the last few years,” he told the New York Times. “There’s a silent majority of white men who aren’t MAGA Republicans, and we haven’t done anything to try to capture those votes.”'

UK: The riots aren’t just a ‘far-right’ problem – they’re a ‘man’ problem

Mastodon · 8 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To most of us, looking on in horror at what is currently happening on the streets of otherwise tranquil towns in the UK, the sheer incomprehensibility of the violence threatens to overwhelm any hope of rational understanding.

No wonder, then, that the usual (loudmouthed) suspects are lining up in the hope of “explaining” why it is that thousands of young and not-so-young men are rampaging down your local high street on a summer afternoon. And sure, these men can be condemned as “fascists”, “criminals” and “thugs”, but that reductive labelling doesn’t help much. It makes them appear different to the rest of us – when in fact, they are not.'

The women involved in far-right riots across UK as social media awash with hate speech

Nearly Half of US Women Want Women-Only Subway, Train Cars

Mastodon · 8 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost half of U.S. women want women-only train cars on subways and transit systems according to a recent poll.

The survey, conducted by YouGov, found that 48 percent of adult women supported trains and subways nearest to them reserving a car for women only.

Of all adults, 43 percent said they would "strongly or somewhat support" the initiative whilst 30 percent "strongly or somewhat" opposed and 27 percent were unsure.

Sociologist Katie Gaddini told Newsweek she was unsurprised by the findings "given the high rates of sexual assault and harassment targeting women in the U.S."'

‘A Safe Place’: The SHE Word Podcast Launches Women-Only Online Community

Mastodon · 8 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The SHE Word podcast is launching a women-only online community today, set to provide a safe space for women to discuss and share their experiences.

TSW Founder Trudy Kerr explained how “this will be a safe place that women can have conversations honestly without fear of judgement, where they can post anonymously, and be seen”.

The podcast, which hosts conversations that women rarely have, but really should, is now boasting over 5.9 million collective views across all platforms, including YouTube and Spotify.'

Hims & Hers CEO: Women's health business "will likely" eclipse men's

Mastodon · 8 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The future of Hims & Hers — a digital-first health platform that offers content, telehealth and drug treatments related to skin care, sexual performance and mental health — may be more hers than hims.

Why it matters: An intensifying focus on women's health in the U.S. has emerged since the overturn of Roe, including an executive order for more research and new investments flowing into areas including menopause, maternal and postpartum care and pain treatment.

Between the lines: "For the most part, the existing health care system — for better or worse, and mostly worse — was built by men, for men," Hims & Hers co-founder and CEO Andrew Dudum told Axios on Tuesday in an interview for the "Leading Indicator" show from Public, an investing platform.

Women's health care in the U.S. has been underfunded and neglected despite women outnumbering men since 1946.

But there's "a really huge opportunity" to serve women with health care services around menopause, hormonal balance and dermatology, Dudum says.
Zoom in: There were nearly 1.9 million subscribers of the Hims & Hers platform as of the second quarter, the company announced this week.

Known initially for selling erectile dysfunction medication, oral hygiene and skin care products to men, Hims launched its first women's wellness products for hair loss, beauty and sexual wellness in 2018 under a new "Hers" brand.'

‘Would a world run by women be a better place?’: Athens museum hosts a bold female takeover

Mastodon · 8 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a global first, EMST’s floors and halls were handed over in their entirety to an all-female cast of artists last month.

“The exhibition’s title is intentionally provocative,” said Katerina Gregos, the museum’s artistic director, who smiles at the prospect of visitors probing the “hypothetical question” of how different the world could be: “What we are asking visitors to do is try and take a leap of the imagination and think what it would be like if governance and decision-making were in the hands solely of women.”

In such a world, would there have been so much war and conflict, or less chest-beating, more compromise and considered discussion, she asks.

“In short, would the world be a better place? We’re not advocating for the establishment of a matriarchy. Rather, we’re inviting reflection on whether there is an alternative. Because, let’s face it, with wars raging and the senseless violence that we see – mostly generated by men almost every day – you can’t say we’re in the best of places.”'

She Tried to Date Women as a Man...

Matt · 8 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YouTube video here. An analysis of Norah Vincent's experience dating women when disguised as a man.

Male students do better on ACT, get less financial aid

Mastodon · 9 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender gap in higher education is growing – and it may be due to how universities admit students and help them pay for school.

Men earn 42 percent of bachelor's degrees, 38 percent of master's, and 44 percent of doctorates, according to the American Institute for Boys and Men.

The group provided several reasons for this gap when asked by The College Fix.

"A pertinent data point is that a lower percentage of men attending college get aid – for example in the 2019-2020 school year, 67% of male undergraduates and 74% of female undergraduates received any aid," a spokesperson told The Fix via email.'

Acquitted former student sues 15 groups for defamation after they called him a rapist

Mastodon · 9 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Yale University student who defeated claims of rape is continuing his legal battle to seek justice.

Saifullah Khan is suing fifteen organizations including the National Women's Law Center, the Fierberg National Law Group, and the National Crime Victim Law Institute, along with attorney Jennifer Becker, for "defamation, false light, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and abuse of process action."

Khan (pictured) is seeking both compensatory and punitive damages. It is pending and the accused groups have requested extensions to file responses, according to a College Fix review of court documents on Aug. 1.

The lawsuit follows an amicus brief the organizations filed with the Connecticut Supreme Court surrounding whether Khan could sue his accuser for damages.

The initial brief called Khan a "rapist," and said he had committed rape – however, he already had been cleared by a jury of the charges. Despite this, Yale expelled Khan.'

‘Household labor’ study design is biased against men

Mastodon · 9 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent paper that claims to find women face greater burdens than men when it comes to household chores is flawed in its design.

“The division of household labor is an important but often overlooked driver of global gender inequity,” the Archives of Women’s Mental Health paper suggests. “Women carry a disproportionate burden of domestic tasks, and this burden may be linked with their health and wellbeing.”

The lead authors are psychology grad student Elizabeth Aviv and Professor Darby Saxbe, both at the University of Southern California. They wrote a summary of their research for The Conversation as well.

But the scholars designed the study in such a way, intentionally or not, as to bias the results to make it seem like women do a disproportionate amount of work in the house.'

Women firefighters allege sexist culture as FDNY commissioner quits

Mastodon · 10 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Firefighting is a male-dominated field nationwide, but New York City's gender gap is especially glaring. According to personnel data collected by the City Council, less than 2% of the FDNY's roughly 11,000 firefighters are women, compared to 9% nationwide and more than 12% in cities like Miami and San Francisco. The first woman to lead the department, Laura Kavanagh, stepped down on Wednesday, after less than two years on the job.

The FDNY did not make Kavanagh available to Gothamist for an interview. In an essay on Medium last month, she attributed her decision to wanting to spend more time with family and friends. Yet her exit has renewed attention to the FDNY's gender gap, as well as long-standing complaints about sexism and harassment.

The department has for decades faced allegations of discriminatory practices, including brazen racism. But in recent public comments and interviews with Gothamist, women firefighters said the lack of racial and gender diversity affects their interactions in the field — where they help people from different backgrounds in their most vulnerable moments, often in their homes. Inside the firehouse, women's scarcity translates into a lack of political power, coupled with a fear of retaliation for speaking out.'

UK: This is the story of working-class England. It's an experience barely worth living

Mastodon · 10 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YT video here.

Alex Phillips says white working-class men have been betrayed by decades of neglect.

UN concern over disciplinary case against UK lawyer for ‘boys’ club’ remarks

Mastodon · 10 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four UN special rapporteurs have warned that disciplinary proceedings against a female barrister for saying a judge had shown a “boys’ club attitude” may send “a disconcerting message” to lawyers challenging gender bias in custody and domestic abuse cases.

Charlotte Proudman is accused by the Bar Standards Board (BSB) of tweeting misleading information for comments she made about Jonathan Cohen – a member of the Garrick Club, which recently ended its ban on female members after 193 years – over remarks he made in a family case ruling two years ago.

They said: “While we do not wish to prejudge the accuracy of the above-mentioned allegations, we are concerned that the ongoing harassment of Dr Proudman, combined with the BSB’s decision to take disciplinary proceedings may send a disconcerting message that legal professionals who dare to challenge alleged systemic gender bias against mothers in custody cases, and women who are survivors of domestic violence, will be punished.'

UK: Scheme to jail Britons overseas ‘should only apply to men’

Mastodon · 10 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She called on the Government to amend its Criminal Justice Bill, which would grant ministers the power to detain UK prisoners in overseas jails, so that women are excluded.

Speaking at a Public Bill Committee meeting on January 18, where MPs were debating details of the proposed measures, Phillips said: “Data shows that women prisoners are predominantly victims of domestic and sexual violence, which is often a pathway to their offending. Would it not be better to put on the face of the Bill that women are carved out? … I am afraid to say that Governments are not always great on the issue of women in prison—not just this Government, but any Government, including any that might come in—so would it not be better to include that safeguard?”'

Australia: Men’s behaviour change programs are key to addressing domestic violence – our new study shows how we can improve them

Mastodon · 12 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men’s violence against women in Australia is recognised as a national crisis. We urgently need to better-understand what can be done to prevent it and intervene effectively.

There’s a need to hold perpetrators to account for their abusive behaviour. This is set out in the National Plan to end Violence against Women and Children. Men’s behaviour change programs are a key component of the broader strategy to hold men accountable for their actions and prevent future abuse.

While there’s been an increase in funding for these programs in recent years, there’s still limited understanding of whether perpetrators engage in these programs, and why. Our research, released today, provides new evidence on what’s needed to improve the efficacy of behaviour change programs with the goal of improving women and children’s safety.'

The All-Male Christian Group Seeking a Resurrection in the Trump Era

Matt · 12 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nothing scares so-called progressives and feminists more than men coming together in all-male groups of virtually any kind. One of the big successes feminists and so-called progressives have had, from their POV anyway, has been making men alienated from each other and afraid or gun-shy to form all-male groups of any kind for fear of being accused of "sexism"-- as feminists form as many all-female groups and events as they possibly can. If men are going to claim their power, they need unity which requires group-formation: men-only. What's good for the gander... Excerpt:

'It was an autumn Saturday in 1997, and Promise Keepers, a fast-growing conservative Christian men's ministry that some warned was a covert political project, had gathered at its biggest event ever. "Why are we here?" Phillips, then the organization's president, asked the hundreds of thousands of men in attendance. "Is it to demonstrate political might? No. Is it to demonstrate masculine strength? No. Is it to take back the nation by imposing our religious values on others? No." The crowd roared with approval.

This weekend, a much smaller group of Promise Keepers gathered in Tulsa at a very different moment for evangelicals — with less decisive answers to those questions. Headed by a new young CEO, the group is leaning into partisan politics where it once eschewed them, and equipping men to do battle not only with their own spiritual weaknesses but also with a secular culture that speakers portrayed as uniquely hostile.'

Men’s cancer deaths expected to spike more than 90% by 2050, study finds

Mastodon · 13 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The prevalence of cancer among men is expected to skyrocket globally in the coming decades, according to a new study from the American Cancer Society (ACS).

To predict future risk, Australian researchers analyzed the mortality rates tied to 30 different types of cancer among adult men in 2022, based on data from the International Agency for Research on Cancer across 185 countries and territories.

Based on those findings, they predicted that between 2022 and 2050, men’s cancer cases will spike by around 84% — going from 10.3 million to 19 million.

In 2020, men were 43% more likely to die of cancer than women, and their diagnosis rate was 19% higher, statistics show.

Men have been shown previously to engage more in modifiable risk factors for cancer, including smoking and consuming alcohol.

They are also less likely to get regular screenings for male-specific cancers, the study authors noted.'

White and Asian Men Not Invited to Apple's Entrepreneur Camp

Mastodon · 14 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female founder in-person programming

To be eligible to apply for Apple Entrepreneur Camp for female* founders, you must meet the following requirements.

Your organization must have:
A female founder, cofounder, or CEO;
A female developer proficient in Swift or Objective-C; and
A functional and complete app that's available on the App Store, as a beta build on TestFlight, or as an .IPA in an equivalent state.'

Canada: Federally-funded Anti-Hate Network blacklists Christian pro-life group, claims most hateful group ‘white boys, men’

Mastodon · 14 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Federally-subsidized activists claim a Christian pro-life group is a “hate movement” and that most haters are white people, namely white boys and men.

The Canadian Anti-Hate Network (CAHN) published its blacklist after receiving $640,000 from Heritage Minister Pascale St-Onge’s department and others for “research,” per Blacklock’s Reporter.

“We define ‘hate-promoting’ to refer to ideologies, groups, movements and individuals which target members of protected groups,” said the CAHN booklet entitled 40 Ways To Fight The Far-Right.

It included what the activists call a “non-exhaustive list of the kinds of far-right and hate movements we have seen in Canada in the last few years.”

Pro-life Catholic advocacy group Campaign Life Coalition and its affiliated LifeSiteNews were blacklisted along with neo-Nazis and skinheads. Minister St-Onge did not comment.'

Whatifalthist on YouTube: Stop Coping. Your life sucks.

Matt · 16 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video commentary here. Whatifalthist knocks the ball out of the park with this one.

Hoping for unicorns, 1 in 5 young men are NEETs—not in employment, education, or training

Matt · 16 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Then there's openly anti-male discrimination, too. Excerpt:

'There's a growing cohort of Gen-Zers who are rejecting life's major milestones and becoming NEETs—that is, "not in employment, education, or training". Many of them are college-educated men.

One in five young people around the world are currently NEETs, according to the International Labour Organization. In the U.S., this jumps to about 11.2% of young adults. Meanwhile in the U.K., almost 3 million Gen-Zers are now classed as economically inactive.

...

Despite having just graduated, 1 in 5 men under the age of 25 are unemployed, Bloomberg's analysis shows. And they're not actively looking for work, either.

While the share of Gen Z female college grads participating in the workforce has steadily increased, the participation rate for their male counterparts has nose-dived.

...

"Women tend to be more flexible in accepting job offers, even if they're not perfectly aligned with their career goals or are part-time or they are overqualified for," he says.

"Men, on the other hand, often hold out for roles that align more closely with their ideal career path or offer what they perceive as adequate compensation and status."

Some male candidates have been airing their frustrations that the few jobs available right now don't match their expectations, he says.

...

"There's an underlying narrative, often unspoken, about what constitutes 'acceptable' work for men," Maleh concludes, adding that societal pressure for men to be breadwinners deters them from taking what they might view as 'lesser' jobs—even temporarily.'

On the Ballot: American Manhood

Matt · 17 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 2024 vote was set to be a referendum on the rights of women. Instead it has become a debate over the needs and desires of men. The question now is which model of manhood will win in November. The macho brawler of the Trump-Vance ticket, or the kindly “girl dad” offered by Harris and Walz? The fighter or the coach?
...
For Democrats, the first step is simply to acknowledge the reality of the problems facing American men. The facts here are stark. Boys and men are lagging at every stage of the education system, with massive gaps opening up on college campuses. Wages for working-class men have stagnated, along with their marital prospects. White men raised poor are much worse off if they were born in 1992 than in 1978, according to the latest work from Harvard economist Raj Chetty. The male suicide rate is four times higher than for women, and claims 40,000 men a year. The suicide rate among men under age 30 has risen by 40% since 2010.

The point is that male struggles aren’t confected by reactionaries: they are real. And they are not being adequately addressed by either side.'

Why The Boy Scouts Vanished

Matt · 17 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YT video here. YT channel "The Why Minutes" takes on explaining things. In this case they take on the demise of the BSA.

UP Honor Flight considers women’s only flight

Mastodon · 18 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An honor flight for women who served in the U.S. armed forces could soon be coming to the U.P.

U.P. Honor Flight brings veterans to Washington, D.C., to see the memorials for the wars they fought in. Most of the veterans who take advantage of the opportunity are men, but the organization is looking to change that. If there’s enough interest, it’s considering a women‘s-only flight next May.

U.P. Honor Flight says a women’s only flight could make women feel safer.

“I think we’re going to get a better response from the women population doing an all-women veteran flight,” said U.P. Honor Flight President Scott Knauf.'

UK Gov’t to Treat ‘Extreme Misogyny’ Like Terrorism: Report

Mastodon · 18 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new Labour Party government in Britain is reportedly planning on treating “extreme misogyny” in the same manner as terrorism amid a supposed rise of radicalisation of young men on the internet.

Teachers, healthcare professionals, and local officials in Britain may become legally obligated to report young men to the government’s Prevent counter-terror programme in the same manner as Islamic terrorism or far-right radicalism if they are suspected of “extreme misogyny,” The Telegraph reports.

Under the programme, those referred to Prevent are assessed by police and their local authority to determine if they are in need of deradicalisation training.

According to The Guardian, British boys are already being reported to the counterextremism programme by their schools for repeating Tate’s views or for “verbal harassment” of female teachers.

A Prevent staff member told the paper: “He [Tate] obviously doesn’t fit within the Prevent sphere but incels do. He is parallel to them and has a crossover. When I’m in schools I find myself describing him, effectively, as toxic misogyny on steroids.”'

Suicide Rates Sharply Increase Among Young Girls, Study Finds.. what about the boys?

Matt · 19 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Good vid on this topic by Tom G. here. Tom discusses how 80% of suicides are men and boys yet it seems to be getting attention only because of the recent uptick in suicides among girls.

Fiancé of Madison Bergmann, teacher arrested for ‘making out’ with 11-year-old still talks to her: ‘He was madly in love’

Mastodon · 20 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Madison Bergmann’s ex-fiancé still speaks to the Wisconsin fifth-grade teacher — even after she was busted for allegedly “making out” with an 11-year-old in her classroom, according to friends.

“They still talk, as far as I know,” says a pal, who was invited to the couple’s now-canceled July 27 wedding.

“But obviously, everything has changed. He was betrayed in a really big way, but he was madly in love, and you can’t just turn that off.”

Now, Bergmann is hiding on her grandparents’ farm and avoiding most of her former friends — including the bridal party from her aborted ceremony.

“She seems embarrassed to face us,” the friend tells The Post. “She’s ghosted everyone, which is kind of to be expected.”

Bergmann, 24, has been charged with first-degree child sexual assault of a child under age 13.'

UK: The police can’t be impartial while discriminating against white men

Mastodon · 21 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Frontline police officers and detectives routinely show courage when confronting the violent, dangerous and heinous. So you’d think police chiefs might be willing to really ask themselves whether their force is as impartial as many of them claim.

Putting aside relatively complex operational matters, such as the policing of protests and the response to crime itself, perhaps we can just examine the track record of the administration in some forces.

In just the last five years, British policing has plenty of examples of veering off course.

We’ve seen Cheshire Constabulary found guilty of discrimination on the basis of not just race, but sexual orientation and sex too. The force rejected a prospective police officer because he was – put simply – a white heterosexual man.

The British Transport Police is funding a scholarship covering the tuition and living costs of a three-year degree in law at King’s College London. It’s worth £75,000 to the lucky recipient – who must be of black heritage – and who is expected to use their degree “to fight injustice”.'

Why Trump Appeals to Young Men

Mastodon · 21 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Democratic Senator Chris Murphy argued that Democrats had ceded the conversation on masculinity to Republicans. “We certainly should believe that masculinity can exist side by side with feminism, but we’ve got to acquire a language to talk to boys and men about the future of maleness, and right now we don’t have it,” Murphy said. “I do not think the majority of men believe that women should be removed from the workplace, but they notice when Democrats aren’t talking about addressing some of the real crises that exist in male identity today.”'

Father challenges state child custody law as sexist and unfair

Mastodon · 21 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a question of fairness in parenting.

A federal lawsuit — which could set new precedent — names judges and the Tennessee Attorney General on the issue of child custody.

That lawsuit argues that state law is unfairly biased against fathers, and is unconstitutional.

Historically, often with good reason, judges have favored the mother in child custody cases.

But times have changed, and one middle Tennessee man says the law unfairly excludes fathers from their children's lives.

Dr. Scott Wilson loves his daughter.

He and her mother never married, but they lived together since their child was born.'

"Let boys be boys"

Mastodon · 21 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers say the United States is dealing with an “epidemic” of male loneliness. Though, as Los Angeles Times columnist Jean Guerrero notes, shocking numbers of men feel that no one “knows” them. Worse, Guerrero says the data shows that men are “less skilled than women at making friends.” This is the case despite a long effort to socialize boys. In fact, according to Guerrero, “Young men, who tend to be more progressive and are presumably more comfortable with intimacy than their elders, are … the most isolated.” How can this be?

Ruth Whippman’s BoyMom: Reimagining Boyhood in the Age of Impossible Masculinity sheds some light on the trouble, though not, perhaps, in the way she intends. A self-proclaimed feminist with impeccable progressive credentials, Whippman analyzes her tortured feelings about being the mother of her three young boys. She is anxious for their well-being, anxious to survive their Nerf wars and aggressive wrestling, but especially anxious that they not end up as misogynist creeps who abuse women. And yet, confused as she may be, her thinking drives her toward some surprising insights.'

ICMI 2024 videos on YouTube

Matt · 21 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Paul Elam has thoughtfully posted some videos from the ICMI24 conference on YouTube. You can find them by going to YouTube and searching on "ICMI24". All of them are good. One that especially caught my ear had to do with the connection between population control and feminism, here. Enjoy!

SpectatorTV: The absurdity of Australia's 'Minister For Men's Behavior'

Matt · 22 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YouTube video here. The recent creation of the office in Australia is discussed in all its ludicrousness.

The ongoing erosion of research and publication standards – aka fudging the figures to support the feminist narrative

Mastodon · 23 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A paper by Dr. Murray Straus addressed the issue of feminists distorting domestic violence data. He identified the seven primary methods they used as being:

To suppress Evidence

To avoid obtaining data inconsistent with the Patriarchal Dominance Theory

To cite only studies that show Male Perpetration

To conclude that results support Feminist beliefs when they do not

To create “evidence” by citation

To obstruct publication of articles and obstruct funding research that might contradict the idea that male dominance is the cause of PV (see this post)

To harass, threaten, and penalize researchers who produce evidence that contradicts feminist beliefs'

I was fired from IBM because I'm a white man - how diversity targets ruined my career

Mastodon · 23 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The way Randall Dill tells it, he was a 'model employee' for IBM, nurturing relationships with the Pentagon and other big spenders.

Then came the diversity targets, and the Michigander was kicked out of the computing giant so it could hire more women and minorities, he says.

Worse still — says a lawsuit filed with a Michigan US District Court on Wednesday — Dill's bosses didn't tell him straight why he was being axed.

Instead, they said he wasn't bringing in enough business — even though that was never his job, the suit says.

In reality, the papers say, the managers wanted to bump up their bonuses by culling white and Asian male staff and recruit more women and other minorities.'

Arvind Krishna leaked video: IBM Chief in soup after Internal Meeting clip goes viral https://www.truescoopnews.com/newsdetail/arvind-krishna-leaked-video-ibm-chief-soup-internal-meeting-clip-goes-viral-watch

'A battle of billionaires seems to be in the making after Arvind Krishna's Internal Meeting Video was leaked on social media by a journalist. Arvind Krishna, CEO of International Business Machines, Corp (IBM), was seen addressing his executives in the leaked video and was seen confessing to pressuring executives to implement discriminatory practices in the hiring process. After Arvind Krishna Video Leak came to the fore, Tesla founder Elon Musk slammed the IBM CEO saying that what he is doing is illegal.'

A shortage of young men in the workforce could weigh on housing, Social Security, and growth for years to come

Matt · 23 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a trend experts say will drag on the economy and could take years to fix, mainly because men have already been dropping out of the workforce for decades.

According to Carol Graham, a senior fellow of economic studies at the Brookings Institute, the labor force participation rate of prime working-age men has been declining over the last twenty years. Today, 10% of men aged 25-54 don't have a job and aren't looking for one, more than triple the percentage recorded in 1955, when just 3% were out of the workforce, according to data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

That amounts to around 7 million prime working-age men who aren't working — and has introduced a host of problems for the economy, leaving key industries understaffed and adding to the strain on government services and social safety nets, Graham and other experts told Business Insider.

"Some of them drop out [of college] and are just sort of forlorn and have no purpose or meaning in life. They're not very likely to be married. They're very likely to be living in their parent's basement," Graham said. "They're lonely, they're isolated."

The economic burden can also compound through generations, she added, given that men who have exited the workforce tend to be lower-income and are more likely to report mental and physical health problems, which impact their children's ability to build wealth.'

Misandry and women

Matt · 23 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Good vid on how one woman overcame her misandry. Share it with your local feminist!

A Court-Ordered Therapy That Separates Kids From a Parent They Love Stirs a Backlash

Matt · 25 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I can see the kids' POV in this one case. A father with mood/temper problems is scary and may well be an unfit parent. Plus the approach taken seems excessive: separating the CP (ie, the mother) from the kids entirely. All in all, it's just sad. Excerpt:

'The treatment the Nielsens underwent is part of an industry of intensive “reunification therapy” that has sprung up during the past decade and is ordered by family courts to settle custody fights. Services like Building Family Bridges, where the Nielsens were forced to go, use videos and exercises to try to break a child’s pattern of rejecting a parent. The child is then ordered to live with that parent for an extended period and barred from having contact with the other parent. A battle has erupted over the approach in courtrooms and statehouses across the country.

After Tori told her story at a hearing with Arizona lawmakers earlier this year, the Republican-led legislature passed a measure prohibiting courts from ordering any reunification treatment that cuts off a child from the parent they prefer unless both parents agree. It was signed by Democratic Gov. Katie Hobbs in April.'

UK: Woman gets only 4 years for sex with boys

Matt · 26 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Flip the sexes; a man would get 10-20 years for the same crime. Excerpt:

'A woman who had an "obsession for sex with young boys" has been sentenced to prison after engaging in sexual activities with two 13-year-old boys in her son's bedroom.

Natalie Harris was handed a four-year jail term after confessing to four counts of engaging in sexual activity with a child. She broke down in tears as she received her sentence for the incidents that happened in Waterlooville in November 2022.

Initially, the boys denied any involvement until one of them confided in their mother and revealed that he had filmed the incident. The mother of one of the boys told Portsmouth Crown Court that Harris had "taken away his childhood".'

Should parents of boys set aside the topic of toxic masculinity? This author thinks so

Mastodon · 27 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a feminist, Whippman said she found the #MeToo movement energizing and validating. "It was like, finally, women had a voice. We were allowed to call out this kind of bad behaviour that we all knew about and we were all aware of, but … we didn't have the social permission or the vocabulary to call it out."

"But I think as a mother of boys, I just felt very conflicted and defensive," she said. "It was like, everyone's talking about this gender as if they're the enemy and they're harmful and they're terrible. But these are my children they're talking about."

That got her wondering, she said, if instead of striving to define positive versus toxic masculinity, parents should focus on simply raising good people — regardless of gender.'

Amy Hamm: Women-only plane seats a shameful attack on men

Mastodon · 27 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine you didn't have to sit next to anyone you don't want to on an airplane. Would you choose babies — those wailing little things — people who hog both armrests, or snore, or perhaps the poorly socialized who, profoundly lacking in self-awareness, see their plane neighbour as a hostage they can hold a one-sided conversation with for five hours? All of the above? How about men? Any man. All men. Would you avoid them?

One of India's largest airlines, IndiGo, is now offering the latter option — women can pre-select their seats beside other women only. When choosing a seat, female passengers see available spots colour-coded in blue or pink — an option not viewable by male travellers. Western feminists have floated, in the past, a similar idea to mandate pink airplane seats, both to deal with "manspreading" and as a response to #MeToo. IndiGo's CEO, Pieter Elbers, said the company has yet to analyze data on how the change has affected sales or customer satisfaction since it was introduced as a trial in May, but claimed that social media feedback has been positive. Men are OK with this insulting initiative? Really?

It smacks of Western liberal feminism, the same divisive, riddled-with-contradiction movement that lauds pornography and prostitution and burka-wearing — such empowering choices for women! — and declares that all women are to be believed at all times, while men, well, they're just patriarchal trash (unless they identify as women). Why would anyone want to sit next to a hulking pile of trash on an airplane if they didn't have to? Maybe those icky men should get in the cockpit where they belong!'

Punish the men who pay for sex, rather than the women lured into that life

Mastodon · 27 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist and advocacy organisations, such as UK Feminista and Cease, are putting this question to the Labour government, with its breathtakingly ambitious target of halving violence against women and girls. Does the government see the vulnerable women harmed by male sex buyers – one nine-country study found almost seven in 10 prostituted women were suffering from PTSD – as worthy as other female victims? There are encouraging signs; two home office ministers, Diana Johnson and Jess Phillips, are former officers of the APPG (all-party parliamentary group) on commercial sexual exploitation, which has recommended that prostitution should be recognised as a form of violence against women and that the buying of sex or profiting from the prostitution of another person should be criminalised. Phillips last month pledged the government would look at all levers to reduce the demand for commercial sexual services to protect women from exploitation.'

Kamala’s Team Considering Reporter’s Race And Gender For Her 1st Major Interview

Mastodon · 27 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One thing that seems to be factored into the decision is race and gender, POLITICO reported.

“Almost everyone we talked to said Harris will consider race and gender in making her choice, and that she would be keen to sit down with a Black and/or female reporter, though nobody believes that’s a requirement,” the outlet said.

When President Joe Biden was looking for a running mate in 2020, he said he wanted to choose a black woman, ultimately deciding on Harris. Harris may now be employing a similar vetting process when deciding who she will speak to for an interview.'

For men only? Lack of women winners for million-euro science prize draws protests

Mastodon · 30 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a June ceremony in the scenic Swiss village of Villars, three scientists each collected a huge new prize: 1 million Swiss francs ($1.1 million) to invest in their research to safeguard the planet against various environmental tipping points. The prizes were courtesy of the Frontiers Research Foundation (FRF), the nonprofit parent of the big open-access publisher.

Younger women scientists who co-authored winning papers accompanied their colleagues onto the stage, smiling uncomfortably: All the winners of this year's Frontiers Planet Prize (FPP), with a cash award bigger than the Nobel Prize, were men, just as they were last year.

...

"I grew frustrated during the ceremony when one award after another went to a man," says Gabriela Schaepman-Strub, an earth systems scientist at the University of Zürich and a 2024 finalist. Within days, Schaepman-Strub spearheaded a letter to FPP Director Jean-Claude Burgelman and other higher-ups at FRF. It was signed by five of this year's seven women finalists. "The situation experienced last week was a real setback for gender equality and diversity," they wrote. "Providing only male colleagues with a substantial grant cements the gender inequality that many universities are fighting against."'

IW jury awards $1.85M in defamation lawsuit over false rape accusation

Mastodon · 30 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Isle of Wight County jury, on Aug. 29, found that a Smithfield woman falsely accused her ex-fiance of rape, and ordered that she pay him $1.85 million in damages.

Virginia Beach lawyer Roger Hinde, 64, alleged in a 2022 lawsuit against 62-year-old Ana Meyers, also spelled “Myers” in other court documents, that the two met in August 2021 via the online dating website match.com and became engaged later that year.

Hinde’s lawsuit accused Meyers of “malicious prosecution” and “defamation and slander” for having gone to a magistrate days after the couple split up in May 2022 and taken out four felony warrants accusing Hinde of rape and three counts of sexual battery.'

SF Performing an Audit of City’s 98 Statues to Determine If Any Should Be Removed for Being Racist or Sexist

Mastodon · 30 August 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

An outside firm has been hired to perform an audit of the 98 statues and monuments in SF, and recommend which ones should be removed or altered if they "no longer represent the values that we say the city stands for.”
...
And now the Chronicle reports that the City of San Francisco has commissioned an audit to determine whether any SF statues should be removed, or maybe just given disclaimers or content warnings.
...

“These monuments no longer represent the values that we say the city stands for,” SF Arts Commission senior project manager Angela Carrier said at a meeting last week, per the Chronicle, saying that SF's overall collection of 98 statues and monuments shows “a concentration that talks about power, privilege, white supremacy, patriarchy, and colonialism.”
...
But it is well-known that SF has very few statues of women. We did recently add that statue of a woman in jogging gear at the Embarcadero, and there is a giant Burning Man statue of a nude woman likely coming to Union Square in June. But those are both temporary installations, and will not be considered in this audit.'

Meet the incels and anti-feminists of Asia

Matt · 1 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KIM WOO-SeoK, a 31-year-old chef in Seoul, grew up questioning the way society treats women. He felt sorry for his stay-at-home mother. He considered himself a feminist. But over the past few years, his opinions have shifted. When he came across women activists online, he was shocked to see some of them were making demeaning comments about men, including making fun of small penises. “I felt like my masculinity was under attack,” says Mr Kim. He believes that, since the 2010s, Korean society has become more discriminatory against men than women. Although he has a girlfriend, many of those who share his beliefs in the region do not.

In advanced countries the gap between the sexes has widened, with young men tending to be more conservative and young women tending to be more liberal. The trend is particularly striking in East Asia. Men are not adapting well to a society where women are better educated, compete with them for jobs and do not want to have babies with them. According to one survey in 2021, 79% of South Korean men in their 20s believe they are victims of “reverse discrimination”. In neighbouring Japan, a survey the same year found that 43% of men aged 18 to 30 “hate feminism”.'

The State of Working Class Men

Matt · 1 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Working class men in America need help. While the shift to a knowledge-based economy has blessed the more highly educated with strong and rising wages, working class men face dwindling job prospects, stagnant wages, and declining health. These challenges have been intensifying for decades but have now reached a point of crisis.

This report outlines the current state of America's working class men and describes recent trends in the key areas of employment, earnings, health, and family.'

Sentencing Disparity - Who Has it Worse? Men or Women?

Matt · 1 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We have heard about the sentencing disparity between Blacks and Whites with Blacks getting longer sentences for the same crime. But have you ever heard of a sentencing disparity based on sex? This video has a look at the ground breaking research of Sonja Starr, from the University of Chicago. She outlines a shocking series of discriminations faced by men.

The study: https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=2144002

There was a Michigan Law article on the study four years ago but it seems to have been taken down.'

Humor: Men Never Change

Matt · 2 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

This Facebook vid is very funny and spot on. The three-time divorcee gets the nature of the sexes cold and regales the audience with truths. Enjoy!

Red Pill a Hate Movement?

Matt · 3 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As hard as feminists try to make the red pill movement about hating women they fail to do this at every turn. Why? Because the red pill is not about hate, it is about men waking up to their value as human beings. The default state for men in our culture is what is known as the blue pill attitude. What does this say? It says that a man's value is based on how well he accomplishes things, how much money he accumulates, how much education he gets, and on and on. It is based on winners and losers in the status game. What is the status game about? It's about getting the girl.'

How could the EU’s €140bn budget better help women’s rights?

Mastodon · 3 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The EU’s budget is worth around €140 billion per year – and top officials are saying it needs to better focus on promoting gender equality in an upcoming overhaul.

Far from being gender-neutral, public spending can perpetuate, reduce or increase existing inequalities between men and women, Euronews was told.

"Gender budgeting, as it's known, aims to promote equitable spending so that taxpayers' money can identify and remove barriers that negatively affect women and girls in the EU.

The EU budget – which invests significant funds in agriculture, infrastructure and science – is due to be overhauled starting in June next year, and plans for the next seven years seem likely to strengthen gender mainstreaming, a European Commission spokesperson told Euronews.'

Push for gender equality stalls as men dominate nominations for EU commission

Mastodon · 3 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With Friday's deadline approaching for European Union members to offer nominees for von der Leyen's 26-person team, 16 of the 21 names known so far are men.

After her re-election in July, the European Commission president had asked states specifically to give her a choice of one male and one female candidate.

Not a single country has done so. As it stands, as few as six women may hold posts in the next EU executive, including von der Leyen herself and the nominee for foreign policy chief, Estonia's outgoing prime minister Kaja Kallas.

The European Women's Lobby, an umbrella group working toward gender equality in the bloc, said the situation was indicative of an "old boys' club" mindset, calling it "beyond embarrassing".

"If member states truly believe only men are fit for these roles or that there are no qualified women in their countries, they're not just out of touch – they're delusional," the group's spokesperson Mirta Baselovic told French news agency AFP.'

"We need men" reel

Matt · 4 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Nice seeing this reel on Facebook, for a change.

Israel’s Ultra-Orthodox Jews Are at a Crossroads as Military-Draft Orders Arrive

Matt · 5 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Israel’s ultra-Orthodox Jews, or Haredim as they prefer to be called, are at a critical juncture. So is the Israeli military, which, after a June Supreme Court ruling, is now aiming to draft some 3,000 Haredi men who had previously been exempted if they studied Jewish holy texts in religious seminaries full-time.

Despite the interest shown by young men like Wais, most Haredi leaders fear the military is a melting pot that will pull ultra-Orthodox men into mainstream Israeli culture. The military might soon have to decide how to handle large-scale draft dodging at a time when its struggle for additional manpower has been exacerbated by the nearly yearlong war in Gaza.'

Boys Under Siege

Matt · 6 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys are under attack in schools.

How are they under attack? Well, they learn that:

1. Their sex has caused the world's problems,
2. That Men are privileged.
3. That men are toxic and have oppressed women.
4. That Men just need to step aside and let women run things, then things would be better.
5. They learn that Boys are inherently inferior and simply need to try to be more like the girls.'

Virginia women’s college institutes new policy to keep college for women only, barring men

Mastodon · 6 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A private women’s college in Virginia announced that it would no longer allow males to join beginning in the Fall 2025 semester.

Sweet Briar College’s Chair of the Board of Director Mason B. Rummel and its President Mary Pope M. Hutson announced the change in an email to the community this August. The college leaders explained the policy changes as a result of the will of the school founder, Indiana Fletcher Williams.

More specifically, Williams’s will mandated that Sweet Briar would be an institution for “girls and young women,” something that the college’s leadership notes “must be interpreted as it was understood at the time the Will was written”--meaning that men who “identify” as women could not be accepted into the women’s college.'

UConn ‘Women in leadership’ program open to men, school says

Mastodon · 6 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new University of Connecticut “Women in leadership” initiative is open to men as well, the school said recently.

The public university in Storrs made a slight edit to its news release about the program the same day The College Fix reached out to the media relations team and general counsel’s office.

“UConn Trustee Creates Breakthrough Women’s Leadership Initiative,” the news release announced. “Gift catalyzes support for women in engineering leadership roles long overlooked.”'

Studies suggest men are happier if they never get married

Matt · 7 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting YT video from Better Bachelor here. Three years old but still on mark. He discusses a lot of good points.

Former chief of staff sues California State Sen. Alvarado-Gil for sexual harassment, discrimination

Matt · 8 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is one to watch. #believeallmen. Excerpt:

'California State Sen. Marie Alvarado-Gil is facing a civil lawsuit filed by her ex-chief of staff who alleges the senator forced him to do sexual favors while she was his boss and he suffered a back injury because of it.
...
Her former chief of staff, Chad Condit, filed the civil lawsuit in Sacramento Superior Court on Thursday. The lawsuit includes allegations of sexual harassment, discrimination, retaliation and violations of other state labor laws. Condit portrayed Alvardo-Gil as an erratic, controlling, sexually abusive authority figure. "This was a sex-based quid pro quo relationship of unwelcome advances and sexual behaviors coupled with punishment and flexing of power," Condit alleged.

Condit worked for Alvarado-Gil first on her campaign when she ran as a Democrat for Senate District 4 in 2022. He became her chief of staff when she got elected and he was fired in December 2023.'

Jerry Nadler promises higher taxes for ‘rich white men’ if Democrats take Congress

Mastodon · 11 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Jerry Nadler promised this week that rich white men will “certainly” be hit with higher taxes should Democrats retake Congress.

The longtime New York lawmaker made the apparently serious vow to comedian Lionel McGloin, who posed as a fluttering social media influencer on the floor of the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, where he was credentialed as a reporter by The Free Press.

“Can we please this year — It’d be so brat — have a higher tax rate for rich white men?” McGloin asked a seated Nadler during an interview posted to YouTube Friday.

“Well, if you have a Democratic Congress, we certainly will,” Nadler said.

McGloin responded enthusiastically, “Yeah, baby, tax those rich old whities!”'

Misogyny vs misandry

Mastodon · 11 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm sure that you've heard women say, "I hate it that I love him so much for he's really horrible." To step it up a notch though, there are people who really hate the opposite sex.

In a man's case it's called misogyny, where the man actually hates women like poison, and all that they stand for. That term has been bandied about for centuries and is very well known.

What we hardly hear about though is misandry wherein women hate men — which is ironic — for real or imagined, the perception is that more women hate men than the other way around, or so it would seem. This is based on the constant uttering from women who dedicate their lives to cussing men, calling them worthless, deadbeat, irresponsible, mean, and other names not fit for airplay.

"Man, all my wife do is cuss me every day, morning noon and night."

Some women spend their entire waking hours cussing men, either to their face or to their relatives and friends. If you do your own research you'll have to admit that more women go around complaining and cussing men than the other way around. Of course, they'll say that it's justified, seeing as how many men fit the bill and deserve it. All men are dogs, remember? I wrote that now infamous column years ago with that title, and oh how the women loved it.

But apart from that, just like how there are misogynists, there are also misandrists — women who genuinely hate men for reasons that sometimes even they are not aware of.

Who is worse, the misogynist or the misandrist? And who will fare better in this topsy-turvy world of male/female conflict? Misogyny versus misandry, we'll find out more, right after these comments about what I had to say about 'Coping mechanisms'.'

Humor, discussed: Comedian Bill Burr on Women

Matt · 11 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YouTube video here. Feminists hate him because he speaks "truth to power". "Far From Eden" covers him.

Humor: SNL classic from 1977

Matt · 12 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Dan Akroyd and Jane Curtain in one of the more memorable Point-Counterpoint exchanges here. Colorful language, very politically incorrect. Enjoy!

UConn ‘first-year women’ program faces federal complaint

Mastodon · 13 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Connecticut faces a federal civil rights complaint for an “innovators” program that is only open to females.

The public university in Storrs operates a “First-Year Women Werth Innovators cohort” which includes money, networking, and mentoring opportunities for aspiring entrepreneurs. While men can apply for similar programs as sophomores and juniors, there is no equivalent for freshmen males.

Civil rights activist Mark Perry shared with The College Fix a copy of the recent complaint he filed with the Department of Education. He says the program “illegally excludes and discriminates against non-female, first-year students based on their sex and gender identity.”

He cites several examples of how the program’s language is only directed at women.'

Bettina Arndt's report from Australia

Matt · 15 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YouTube video here. Bettina reports on the misuse and abuse of various anti-male laws in Australia.

Australia: Julia Gillard urges Labor to retain 50% female target, warning women still at risk of being dragged back

Mastodon · 16 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Julia Gillard is urging the Labor party to never remove its 50% female target for parliamentary candidates despite surpassing it federally, warning there are forces – especially in the “toxic sewer” of social media – which can still drag women back.

...

She said having women as 52.4% of Labor’s parliamentary caucus will naturally make it easier for a woman to rise into leadership. It also helped that people generally – and the media in particular – were more conscious now of how women are treated in politics.'

Are gender quotas in schools sabotaging success for girls? Bulgaria’s controversial policy puts boys ahead

Mastodon · 16 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bulgaria’s education system has been shaped by gender quotas since the 1960s, aiming for a 50/50 gender balance in classrooms. These quotas were initially created to encourage girls to enter traditionally male-dominated fields, such as science, technology, engineering, and maths (STEM). However, our findings suggest that these policies might be doing more harm than good, especially for female students during the high school admissions process.

Despite their original intent, these quotas can sometimes force admissions officers to favour boys—even if they have lower academic scores—to meet the desired gender balance. This has led to situations where girls, who make up 56 per cent of the student population, struggle to get into their preferred schools.

A system disadvantaging high-performing girls
Our research reveals that these quotas are making it increasingly difficult for some girls to secure spots in top high schools. The competition has intensified as more girls than boys are vying for these positions. While the quotas aim to balance gender representation, in practice, they can result in boys with lower grades being admitted over girls with higher scores.

The issue is particularly evident in high schools that focus on fields like languages and literature—areas where female students have traditionally been dominant. Here, academically strong girls may find themselves at a disadvantage simply because the quota favours boys, regardless of their performance.'

England’s national parks overseen by ‘bloated’, mostly white male boards

Mastodon · 17 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The boards that oversee England’s national parks are bloated, dominated by men and are severely lacking in diversity, a Guardian analysis has found. The analysis also found that farmers outnumber conservation experts by two to one, nature is rarely on the agenda at board meetings and only one national park can account for the ownership of all the land it covers.

Campaigners said a major overhaul of how national parks were governed was “fundamental” to the recovery of nature in the parks and to serving the public, for whom they were set up.'

Australia: Why golf club member was banned for dressing up as a woman - sparking sexism storm

Mastodon · 17 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A sexism row has erupted at one of Australia's most prestigious gold clubs after a male player was suspended for dressing up as a woman in protest against a cheaper deal for females.

A male member of Victoria's 13th Beach Golf Links, which hosts the Victorian Open, presented at the golf course's reception desk in a dress and a wig, telling staff he now identified as a woman.

The player and an individual who filmed the video of him approaching the desk, both aged in their 70s, plus another member, have all been suspended by the club.

According to the Herald Sun, a petition among club members is now circulating whereby they are calling for the removal of Grant Phelps, the club's chairman, 'primarily over this issue'.

Explaining the reason for the suspension, general manager Rob Hurley said the trio allegedly breached club policies 'in that they treated staff with disrespect, filmed them without their consent, and then published that video on a messaging service.

'The suspension did not relate to the chosen attire of the members,' he said.'

Grieving Corey Comperatore and Honoring Healthy Masculinity

Mastodon · 17 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The world is mourning the tragic death of Corey Comperatore, a volunteer fireman and family man who was gunned down at former President Trump's campaign rally on Saturday in Pennsylvania.

A bullet intended for the 45th president struck the head of Comperatore, who had thrown himself over his wife and daughters, acting as a literal human shield.

Calling him a "real-life superhero," one of the heartbroken daughters, Allyson Comperatore, remembered her father as "the best dad a girl could ask for."

"He threw my mom and I to the ground," she wrote on social media. "He shielded my body from the bullet that came at us. He loved his family. He truly loved us enough to take a real bullet for us. And I want nothing more than to cry on him and tell him thank you. I want nothing more than to wake up and for this to not be reality for me and my family."

The family is rightly taking solace in the fact their husband and father died a hero, his last selfless act being the one to shield them from the fate that took his own life.

Much has been said in recent years about so-called toxic or traditional masculinity, the idea that men are uniquely gifted and equipped to protect and lead. Radicals believe that manhood's distinctiveness is an unhealthy thing, that whatever men can do, women can and should do also.

It's one of the many lies tossed about, ignoring and denying how God uniquely created the two sexes to complement one another.

Healthy masculinity, which was on full display on that Pennsylvania farm on Saturday, stabilizes the family and serves the greater good of the community. It sacrifices convenience and prioritizes others' needs over one's own.'

Why Women Only Make Up One-Third of Tech Industries

Mastodon · 17 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of women working in STEM has grown by 31% since 2011; however, only about 30 percent of the tech sector comprises women. This begs the question: Why is there so little representation?

From the early stages of their education, women are frequently given fewer chances in STEM fields than men. Societal influences impact this discrepancy, as stereotypes, although disproved, suggest that boys excel in math and science and continue to persist in educational institutions and households. A recent study by UNESCO revealed that women represent over 30 percent of the global STEM workforce — a striking disparity highlighting the limited opportunities accessible to them in these fields.

In many tech companies, we also face the issue of workplace culture being labeled as “bro culture,” underscoring the exclusion of women in office settings that often leave them feeling undervalued and isolated. As these workplace cultures perpetuate, women leave traditional corporate tech roles to blaze their own trail, creating a corporate brain drain and the loss of diverse voices in traditional corporate industries due to the constant pressure to “prove” themselves and confront various forms of discrimination.'

Smirking Woman Accused of Stabbing Ohio Toddler to Death Deemed Incompetent to Stand Trial

Mastodon · 17 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The suspect, 32-year-old Bionca Ellis, has also been ordered to an inpatient treatment facility, News 5 Cleveland reported, citing court records.

Ellis was undergoing a 20-day evaluation when her doctor concluded “that the defendant is incompetent to stand trial, but that there is a substantial probability of restoration to competency within the statutory time frame if provided with a course of treatment,” according to Cuyahoga County Court of Common Pleas records.

Ellis is indicted on seven charges, including aggravated murder and felonious assault. While incompetent status “does not affect her charges; it pertains to her mental state now, not during the crime,” the report states.

“So assuming at some point, the defendant is competent to stand trial and then at that trial, the defendant could try to present evidence that at the time of the offense, they were suffering from a severe mental illness. And because of that severe mental illness, they did not understand the wrongfulness of their conduct,” Witmer-Rich said.'

New Docs Shed Light On Air Force's 'Goal' To Reduce 'White Male Population' Joining Officer Ranks

Matt · 19 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Air Force finally handed over a trove of documents pertaining to its sweeping "goal" of reducing the number of white male applicants in a popular officer program after spending months stonewalling requests for their release.

Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman C.Q. Brown — at the time the highest-ranking member of the Air Force — issued a memorandum in 2022 that the branch was updating its racial and gender demographic goals for applicants seeking to become officers, in a bid to prioritize "diversity and inclusion." Internal documents obtained by the Daily Caller News Foundation include a slideshow from 2022 where the Air Force outlines racial and gender quotas and details how it hopes to "achieve" a reduced number of white males in its Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) officer's applicant program.'

Paternity fraud may trigger suicidal thoughts, depression in children—Experts

Mastodon · 19 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mental health professionals have raised concerns over the psychological and emotional impact that paternity fraud could have on children's well-being.

The physicians warned that paternity fraud could lead to suicidal ideation and emotional distress among affected young people.

Speaking exclusively with PUNCH Healthwise, the experts noted that the emotional fallout from learning about a non-biological parentage could be profound on children, especially when not properly communicated.

According to them, in some cases, paternity revelations could lead to a crisis of identity, which in extreme cases, manifests as suicidal thoughts or severe emotional turmoil.

In recent years, Nigeria has witnessed a disturbing trend of paternity fraud, where children are discovered not to belong to their supposed fathers.'

Whatifalthist on the modern Left, feminism, etc.

Matt · 19 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YT's Whatifalthist ruthlessly deconstructs modern western Leftism as well as a couple other -isms thrown in. Well worth the listen, here.

Martin Seager on Men's and Boys' Mental Health and Shifting the Conversation

mens_issues · 20 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An interesting conversation on Honey Badger Radio here.

Do We Care When It's Men?

Matt · 20 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

An original essay by reader Mark L.:

Do We Care When It's Men?

Recently I have been listening to podcasts in my car. One of these podcasts is "History on Trial." On this show the host, Mira Hayward, presents the stories of "famous legal battles from American history." The stories often focus on some injustice that was either caused, remedied, or both by the American legal system.

Episode 16 was titled "The American Plan: Rock v. Carney (1920)." (1) "The American Plan" as we learn in the podcast was the common name for the collection of laws and policies that the Federal and state governments adopted around the time of World War I. The purpose of the American Plan was to fight sexually transmitted infections (STI's). These laws were deemed necessary because a significant number of US soldiers serving in the war were testing positive for STI's such as syphilis and gonorrhea.

"History on Trial" explains:

"To combat the problem, the government attempted to reduce sex work around military camps.

"In May 1917, Senator Wesley Livsey Jones introduced an amendment to the Selective Service Act– the act that invoked the draft– called Section 13. Section 13 empowered the Secretary of War to quote, 'do everything by him deemed necessary to suppress and prevent the keeping or setting up of houses of ill fame, brothels, or bawdy-houses within such distance as he may deem needful of any military camp.'" (2)

The rest of the episode explains how this alleged concern for public health in wartime morphed into policies that allowed civilians, mostly women, to be investigated, detained, forced to undergo medical examinations and even held in jails masquerading as "detention hospitals", all without due process of law. These policies were horrific, and as described in the podcast the reasoning behind them was sexist. Nothing I'm going to say in this article is meant to deny that in any way.

And yet, as I listened to the show, I sensed a certain incongruity. I think it started when the host casually mentioned the Selective Service Act and the routine testing of soldiers for STI's. How odd, I thought, that in a show about the forced testing and detention of women for STI's, the routine testing of millions of American male soldiers, over half of whom were draftees and thus also "involuntarily detained", was considered so unremarkable it passed without further comment. (3)

Whenever someone points out how differently we view things like forced detention and forced medical treatment, depending on the sexes involved, rationalizations soon follow. Of course, only men were drafted back then, we have been told, because only men were needed in large numbers to prosecute the war. That may have been true back in 1917, though even then there were many jobs women could do to "free a man to fight." But consider what happened during the next "war to end all wars." In 1945, the shortage of Army nurses was so acute that President Roosevelt proposed drafting female nurses. A bill to draft nurses was approved by the House but stalled in the Senate. Eventually, various factors, including a massive recruiting effort and the end of the war in Europe, made drafting female nurses unnecessary. Historynet.com describes the reaction in the Senate this way:

"Senators breathed a sigh of relief. Elbert D. Thomas of Utah called the withdrawal of the conscription bill 'the most satisfactory disposition of the difficult problem.' He was thankful that '[t]he most extreme emergency measure of the war has solved itself.'" (4)

Just think about that for a moment. The most extreme emergency measure of the war wasn't rationing food and other necessities. It wasn't the odious internment of thousands of Japanese Americans. It was the prospect of drafting enough women to make up a shortage of 8,000 nurses. With attitudes such as that, it is no wonder that despite severe shortages of medical professionals in later conflicts, no female nurses or doctors were ever drafted into service. (5)

Nor were women required to register for the draft when President Carter reinstated draft registration in 1980. The Supreme Court upheld the legality of male-only draft registration in 1981 because, as Justice William Rehnquist wrote, “[t]he purpose of registration was to prepare for a draft of combat troops”. (6) This ignored the fact that in the recently ended Viet Nam war, only about ½ the men served in positions that could be described as combat troops. (7) With the removal of all restrictions on women serving in combat units in 2015, this last of the excuses for male-only draft registration was removed. Yet the opposition to drafting women persists. If our lawsuit against male-only registration accomplished nothing else, by bringing this issue to the forefront, it forced the defenders of the system to admit what we have known all along: That their support of all-male draft was always about giving greater protection to women solely because of their sex. Here is a typical quote about the issue, this one from Senator Josh Hawley:

“It’s one thing to allow American women to choose this service, but it’s quite another to force it upon our daughters, sisters, and wives. Missourians feel strongly that compelling women to fight our wars is wrong and so do I.” (8)

At this point, I can almost hear my readers shouting at their computers something like “but it’s not just about being sent somewhere or forced to do something based on your sex. These women were forced to undergo intrusive and humiliating examinations for STI’s, often for no good reason.” A fair point, hypothetical reader. That is a truly awful experience, as I have already stated.

And yet, can we at least look at what examinations the men were forced to undergo? I don’t know what sort of examinations the men underwent when they were inducted into the military in World War I. I hope it was a professional medical exam. But I do know something about the routine inspections for STI’s to which soldiers were subjected while serving. These were known as “short arm inspections”, a term which dates to at least World War I. Every man in the unit was required to submit to the inspection, whether he was sexually active or not. Here is a secondhand account of such an inspection during World War II, as told to writer Mark Conley by his father.:

“The inspection consisted of a mass line up of all the males of the group (platoon, company etc.), usually at two-week intervals, (usually in conjunction within the times of incubation after a visit to towns or areas where the ole houses of ill repute were. To ensure they got everyone at the same time, the inspections were called in the early morning hours, say about 3 or 4 in the morning, when most people were asleep in their beds. Further reasoning for this was a half sleepy person wasn’t as resistant as they would if the person was wide awake in the daylight hours. It was also reasoned by the higher authorities that if the inspection occurred at this hour, it lowered the chances for an accidental erection, and a possible manly disgrace to occur. A uniform, consisting of only the wear of boots, overcoat and helmet liner, was proscribed for conformity and ease in the inspection. Procedures were written and regulations issued, delegating this task to the unit’s medical officer or assistant.

“The men were formed into ranks, and given the command to go to attention. The doctor or his designee would then proceed down the lines to perform the inspection.

“The doctor had a proscribed regime of spoken orders to the now shivering inspected. On the order to ‘present’, the man was to undo his great coat and allow the man to inspect him for sores or other outward signs of infection. On the order to ‘Strip it down’ each man was to grasp the base of his  and using a stripping motion, run the hand to its tip. This was to see if anything foreign, such as drainage from an unseen infection were to be found in the urethra. If nothing was found, the man was told to 'recover’ and so he tucked himself back into his greatcoat and returned to the position of attention.” (9)

So, what happened to the men who contracted an STI? Often that depended on whether they had submitted to medical prophylaxis, a series of measures taken after potential exposure that were intended to prevent infection. A man returning from leave who may have been exposed was expected to present himself to the infirmary immediately on his return. Time was of the essence because the measures were known to be ineffective at more than eight hours after exposure. For this reason, the Army discouraged commanders from allowing leaves of longer than 24 hours. Some commanders prohibited leaves entirely just to prevent STI's. (10)

At the infirmary medical personnel could carry out a procedure such as the following on the man's genitals:

"First, there is scrubbing with soap and water; then washing with mercuric chlorid solution of the dilution of 1:2000 ; a thorough rubbing with 33 per cent, calomel ointment ; and an injection of 2 per cent, protargol or some of the other trade products of silver albuminate, which are just as effective." (11)

Sometimes men bought prophylaxis kits to use on themselves. Supposedly, men who were "among the class which would avail themselves of [a prophylaxis kit]" would know where to obtain one. However, this personal prophylaxis was not sufficient for the Army, since men could not be trusted to wash themselves thoroughly enough. The treatment had to be "given under the eye of an experienced attendant." (12) Presumably that attendant could be either male or female, since women often served as medical personnel at that time. (13)

If a man promptly submitted himself for prophylaxis and still contracted an STI, "he is not punished beyond losing his pay while the disease disables him for duty." As if not being paid for a few days or weeks was no big deal. But if he did not submit to prophylactic treatment and contracted an STI, "he is court-martialed for disobedience of orders and, if convicted, is punished." (11) Another punishment that was used in the British Army, and possibly others, was to notify the next of kin of the infection. The British discontinued this practice after an officer committed suicide after finding out his wife had been thus notified.

As Braeden Suggit points out, "[t]reatment for VD was a punishment in its own right. Special hospitals for VD patients were set up and often regarded as deterrent. Patients would be treated with Salvarsan and mercury which offered uncomfortable and sometimes serious side effects such as jaundice and convulsions. Other treatments included irrigation, which was painful and undignified resulting in many men to opt for chemical treatment instead. These long and uncomfortable stays in VD hospitals often averaged between 50 and 60 days, with the majority of patients recovering and returning to the front." (14)

Using treatments as punishment for STI in the Armed Forces likely continues to this day. When I was in the Marines (in the 1980's), a Navy Corpsman described how they would treat Marines seeking treatment for a particular infection. If it was the patient's first visit, he would receive an injection and be told what to do to prevent it in the future. On a second visit, he would get the injection and a stern talking to. On the third visit, the Corpsman would retrieve a vial that was kept in the coldest part of the fridge just for this purpose. He would fill the syringe with the thick serum, then bounce the syringe needle first off of a metal table. This gave the needle a significant bend at the end. When the needle was pulled out after the injection, the men would scream as it brought a lump of tissue with it. According to the Corpsman, they never had a man return for Round 4.

Of course, the Corpsman who told me the story thought it was immensely funny. In fact, many of the things in this essay have been presented as humorous in books, movies and TV shows. But we only see them as humorous because men are on the receiving end. That's the point.

None of this should be taken as criticism of the "History on Trial" podcast or its host. She was telling a different story than the one I was telling here. In fairness, there was an episode that dealt with opposition to the draft, though that opposition had nothing to do with it being male only. (15) It's not like anyone is going to make a podcast about Rostker v. Goldberg or NCFM v. Selective Service System anytime soon. The idea that the law can impose a "selective burden" on men is seen as normal and unremarkable and thus not worth caring about. That too is the point.

Mira Hayward, "History on Trial Episode 16 The American Plan: Rock v. Carney (1920)" Retrieved from https://www.historyontrialpodcast.com/_files/ugd/ce3c2c_bf97d5dbe7534e73826c8122cd349b10.pdf
Scott W. Stern, The Trials of Nina McCall: Sex, Surveillance, and the Decades-Long Government Plan to Imprison

“Promiscuous” Women (Boston: Beacon Press, 2018), p. 12, as cited in the “History on Trial” transcript.
https://www.history.com/this-day-in-history/u-s-congress-passes-selective-service-act: “By the end of World War I in November 1918, some 24 million men had registered under the Selective Service Act. Of the almost 4.8 million Americans who eventually served in the war, some 2.8 million had been drafted.”
https://www.historynet.com/drafting-women/
See for example the failed attempt to recruit sufficient female nurses during the Viet Nam conflict.
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Operation_Nightingale_(United_States)
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rostker_v._Goldberg
Referring to US military personnel who served in Viet Nam, https://www.mrfa.org/us-navy-army/vietnam-war-statistics/ states “[o]f the 2.6 million, between 1 and 1.6 million (40-60%) either fought in combat, provided close combat support or were at least fairly regularly exposed to enemy attack.”
https://rollcall.com/2021/07/23/conservatives-riled-up-over-registering-women-for-draft/
Mark Conley, https://www.military-quotes.com/forums/threads/the-origin-of-the-term-short-arm-inspection.1161/
Pusey, William A. (Chairman, Committee on Venereal Diseases for the Surgeon-General of the Army), Handling of the Venereal Problem in the United States Army in the Present Crisis, 1918, p. 14. Retrieved from https://archive.org/details/101501138.nlm.nih.gov/mode/2up
Ibid, p. 16.
Ibid, p. 17
Victor Wong, a Canadian WW2 veteran, describes a “short-arm” inspection, this one checking for hernias, conducted by a female captain who was a physician. https://www.ccmms.ca/veteran-stories/army/victor-eric-wong/
Braeden Suggit, “Venereal Disease in the First World War”, 2017,
https://throughveteranseyes.ca/2017/09/18/venereal-disease-in-the-first-world-war/#_ftn7 We can get some idea of the horrors men faced at the front lines when we consider that some soldiers deliberately tried to get STI’s so that they would be sent to these “detention hospitals.” As bad as hospitals were, the front lines were generally far worse.
“Episode 7: Radical Priests v. the FBI” https://www.historyontrialpodcast.com/7-radical-priests-v-the-fbi

Game Developers Conference Advisor And Video Game Consultant And Developer Marina Díez Says “F White Men And Gatekeepers”

Mastodon · 21 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marina Díez, an advisor for the Game Developers Conference, the owner of 3ofcups games, and the Head of Strategy for BTF Games recently declared “f white men and gatekeepers.”
...
She added in a subsequent post, “(Not all white men suck but you know what I mean, my loves)”'

UK: Teachers tell schoolboys that 'displaying traditional gendered roles in a family' could lead to them committing rape

Mastodon · 21 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teachers are telling schoolboys that displaying traditional gendered roles in a family could lead to them committing rape, a bombshell report has claimed.

The report from the Family Education Trust (FET) found that almost a third of schools that it surveyed use relationship and sex education classes to teach pupils about 'toxic masculinity'.

In one schools' teaching materials on the subject, children are told that while masculinity 'in and itself is not necessarily a harmful thing' certain masculine traits can be be seen as 'problematic'.

Another presents a 'pyramid of sexual violence', which suggests that certain minor behaviours such as 'displaying traditional gendered roles' may develop into other examples of 'gender-based violence' such as flashing, groping and even rape.

The FET said that such lessons are teaching pupils about a 'problematic new ideology' that presents the idea that 'boys and men possess traits that are inherently negative for society'.'

Nearly one third of all English schools teach toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 21 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly one third of English secondary schools and academies are teaching about toxic masculinity in mandatory Relationships or Health Education (RSHE) courses, according to a new report from the Family Education Trust.

Toxic masculinity has multiple contrasting definitions, and its use in educational settings is not uniform. But in some English schools, the most inflammatory read of the concept— that masculinity or men themselves are innately bad — is being taught to students.

For example, 4% of schools teach that young men as a category are problematic, and 5% teach that they possess traits that are inherently toxic and negative to society, the report found. Only 22% of schools teaching this content report it to parents, and at least 18% are working with outside providers in developing toxic masculinity-related curriculum.

The Trust sent 300 Freedom of Information requests to schools over the summer, and only 65% responded.'

Why society is failing men and boys

Matt · 21 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every day, we see more grown men and young boys dropping out of school, dropping out of work and choosing to drop out of society entirely. They're getting lost in distractions, chasing comfort and losing the sense of purpose that used to drive men to live with meaning and ambition.

We need to turn this around.

In 1998, I started the heavy metal ban All That Remains, and in the past 25 years, I've performed for hundreds of thousands of people worldwide. Most of them are young men. I've had countless conversations with them and often their stories are devastating.'

‘Male circumcision’ and ‘female genital mutilation’: why parents choose the procedures and the case for gender bias in medical nomenclature

Matt · 21 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. References gamma bias as a major factor. Excerpt:

'Cutting of boys’ and girls’ genitalia is a debated human rights topic. Here, the first aim was to summarise why parents choose to have these procedures performed on their children. Results from 22 survey studies on ‘male circumcision’ and 27 studies on ‘female genital mutilation’ revealed that non-medical reasons, such as tradition, are prominent in the decisions for both procedures. The second aim was to describe researchers’ use of medical words (i.e. ‘circumcision’) and non-medical words (i.e. ‘cutting’, ‘mutilation’) when referring to these procedures. Relevant phrases were searched in titles and abstracts of articles indexed in PubMed.'

Young women are starting to leave men behind

Matt · 22 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across the developed world, girls and young women have been pulling ahead of boys and young men in education for several decades, with much larger proportions going on to attend university than their male counterparts.

This trend has generally been treated more as something to remark upon than to act on. The myriad domains in which women remain at a disadvantage to men have understandably led to efforts at achieving gender equality becoming synonymous with advancing women's opportunities and outcomes. Men have always gone on to have better labour market outcomes anyway, and if women outperform men in education, this helps narrow the overall male advantage — or so the thinking has gone.'

Canada spends over $32K for ‘intersectional feminist report’ on outer space development

Mastodon · 23 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just a couple of weeks ago, the dean of social sciences at Wesleyan University voiced worries that space exploration may follow a “European Christian imperialist” pattern, and that indigenous beliefs about “celestial bodies” won’t be taken into consideration.

There’s also the “indigenous scholars” who warned merely listening for evidence of alien civilizations could be interpreted as “eavesdropping” and/or “surveillance.”

Now, the Canadian Department of National Defence thought it a prudent use of taxpayer funds to spend over $32,000 for an “intersectional feminist” perspective regarding space-related development.

Give yourself a couple pats on the back if you guessed what the report concluded.

You got it: According to the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, the report “Hidden Harms: Human (In)security in Outer Space” says “current approaches to outer space are ‘heavily Western, state-centric, militarized, masculinized, and colonial,’ and encourage practices that are ‘racist, exploitative, elitist, and environmentally destructive.’”'

How Corporate Leaders Can Counter Young Men’s Rising Anti-Feminism

Mastodon · 24 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young men are becoming increasingly anti-feminist, according to new research. In the U.S., 45% of men ages 18-29 say they face discrimination, according to a Brookings Institute poll. The trend is similar in Europe and the UK, where young men express growing resistance to gender diversity initiatives.

Workplaces where men compete to demonstrate their masculinity often suffer from toxic cultures, low safety standards, misconduct and abusive leadership. They also exhibit more negative attitudes and behaviors towards women and LGBTQ+ individuals, studies show, which encourages harassment.

To counter these trends, corporate leaders can adopt strategies that highlight alternate models of masculinity; address men’s resentment towards gender equality policies; guard against masculinity contest cultures at work.'

Ireland: New alliance calls for gender quotas in local elections

Mastodon · 24 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Women's Council (NWC) has joined with other groups in calling for a 40% gender quota for local election candidates to be introduced as a key measure to address gender inequality.

For general elections, political parties must field 40% female candidates or they will lose 50% of their annual State funding.'

Jill Biden announces $500 million government plan focusing on women's health at Clinton Global Initiative

Mastodon · 24 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First lady Jill Biden on Monday unveiled a new set of actions to address health inequities faced by women in the United States, plans that include spending at least $500 million annually on women's health research.

Jill Biden made the announcement at this year's Clinton Global Initiative annual meeting in New York, moments before the organization honored President Joe Biden with the 2024 Clinton Global Citizen Award.

The additional government spending will mainly come from the Department of Defense, which provides medical care to more than 230,000 active duty military women and nearly 2 million military retirees, as well as their family members. The research will focus on why these women experience endocrine, hematological and other immunity-related disorders twice as often as men.

Another change will take effect next week, with a new policy that includes women's health at every step of the research funded by Congressionally Directed Medical Research Programs, which funded 751 grants last year to study Alzheimer's disease, multiple sclerosis, lupus, orthopedic and musculoskeletal injuries, and various cancers.'

The F*ck Rate is about to Implode

Matt · 24 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Our civilization is held together by a pact: mid men get pussy, everyone else gets core infrastructure.

This pact harnesses the single greatest source of psychic energy known to man: men's desire to secure the partnership, youthful attention, and children of attractive women. It comes at a cost — high status men have to give up access to pussy they'd otherwise have, mid women have to settle for mid men early instead of sharing a high status man for a bit and then otherwise remaining single / mercenarily marrying at old age, which they'd prefer … but the cost is almost certainly worth it for everyone involved. Plumbing is nice, you know.'

UK: Fewer women could be sent to prison as Justice Secretary announces reforms

Matt · 25 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Justice Secretary has announced moves to send fewer women to prison, as she warned jail time “forces” many of them into a “life of crime”.

Shabana Mahmood said a new women’s justice board will be tasked with reducing the number of women going into prison, with the “ultimate ambition” of having fewer women’s prisons.

She added a new strategy will examine early intervention to resolve cases before they go to court, “viable” community alternatives to prison and ways to address concerns over self-harm.

Ms Mahmood said a change of approach would “cut crime”, keep families together and prevent “harm” to the next generation.

There are 12 women’s prisons in England and Wales, a far lower number than the institutions used to house men, meaning they tend to be located further away from their families.'

Intact America Rolls Out DoNoHarm.report - A Free Service

DanBollinger · 28 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Press Release

Filing Medical Complaints Is Difficult; www.DoNoHarm.report Makes It Easy

Parents whose sons have suffered circumcision complications, and men who were damaged by their own circumcisions, will have a streamlined way to file complaints against the doctors and hospitals who are responsible, thanks to a first-of-its-kind online consumer complaint database, www.DoNoHarm.report The service—which is free to use—was designed by the nonprofit Intact America, which works to protect children from genital injuries and medically unnecessary circumcision, and to support men harmed by circumcision.

America’s Young Men Are Falling Even Further Behind

Matt · 29 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Spanish, parents call it encaminado: making sure your children are on the path to an independent adulthood.

Out of Dan and Joana Moreno’s four grown children, only their daughter is encaminada. She recently graduated from business school and got engaged. The Morenos’ three adult sons are still sleeping in their Miami childhood bedrooms. The younger two dropped out of college, and the oldest never went. All three are single. Their only work experience is with the family business.

“Something has gone amiss here,” says their father, Dan, who owns the repair chain Flamingo Appliance Service. “We love them, we love having them around, but that’s not how you build a life.”

The life trajectories of America’s sons and daughters are diverging.'

Our Neglect of Men is Having Devastating Consequences on Families, on the Economy, and More

Matt · 29 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'French professor Olivier Roy recently highlighted the profound societal changes in traditional norms and structures in Western societies in recent decades. (1) In his book The Crisis of Culture, Roy argues that the deculturation of society has contributed to a crisis in which the roles and well-being of men have been increasingly neglected. This oversight has significant repercussions for families, economic stability, and even national security.

Labor Force: Many of the problems can be traced to the declining labor force participation of men. U.S. Senator Marco Rubio's landmark report, The State of the Working and Non-Working Man, highlights the alarming decline in male labor force participation in recent decades. (2)

Rubio's report reveals how the absence of men from the workforce leads to a reduction in overall economic productivity, increases in welfare dependency, and a shrinking tax base. (3) Other countries such as Italy and Israel also have reported significant drops in male workforce participation. (4)'

The new Democrat-approved masculinity: Sit down and shut up

Mastodon · 30 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is no secret that the Democratic Party has a problem with male voters. If the polls are to be believed, any hope the party has of winning the presidential election relies on appealing to women at the expense of men.

But, perhaps concerned that Vice President Kamala Harris's lack of appeal to men may prove fatal in the presidential election, the Harris campaign and the Democratic Party are out to redefine what it means to be masculine, and the newly arrived definition is effectively the male version of stay in the kitchen.

In her latest cringeworthy interview as an MSNBC commentator, former White House press secretary Jen Psaki shares the gospel of new masculinity by praising second gentleman Doug Emhoff for "reshaping the perception of masculinity" by being "a supportive spouse."

Leaving aside Emhoff's history of marital infidelity that destroyed his first marriage (hardly the image of masculine virtue), Psaki is painting the image that in this reimagined masculinity, to be a "supportive spouse," men must subordinate their own ambitions and goals to those of the women in their lives. This message of sit down and shut up is the feminist equivalent of the cliche that men want women barefoot, pregnant, and in the kitchen.

Psaki, Emhoff, and Gov. Tim Walz (D-MN), the other anointed model of Democratic masculinity, are doing nothing to address the cultural problems that plague men. Their answer is to redefine what masculinity is. This is the reimagined masculinity that Psaki extolled Emhoff for modeling: A masculinity that shuns ambition and purpose and declares the image of masculine virtue as a flannel-wearing football watcher who stays out of the way.'

Trump and Harris battle over male voters — and what masculinity looks like in 2024

Mastodon · 30 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Richard Reeves, founder and president of the American Institute for Boys and Men, a nonpartisan research organization, said shifting political views among young men were the result of feeling less at home on the left than prior generations because of an unwillingness on the left to talk about problems men specifically face while at times painting them as problematic.

“That’s partly because of the kind of gender dynamics we see kind of playing out on the left,” he said. “More a sense of [political] homelessness and more a bit of detachment, a bit of retreat. It’s not a stampede over to the right.”'

Tasmania’s Supreme Court Overrules Closing of Women-Only Art Installation

Mastodon · 30 September 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, however, acting justice Stephen Marshall of the supreme court overturned the tribunal’s order, ruling that the Ladies Lounge was not discriminatory.

The “intention was to promote equal opportunity by drawing attention to present and past societal disadvantage to women by providing them with the concept of a ‘flipped universe’,” Marshall said. “[It provides] women with a rare glimpse of what it is like to be advantaged rather than disadvantaged.”

He pointed out that the tribunal failed to consider structural discrimination related to women’s status in Australia. The case will return to the tribunal for reconsideration.

“The [Supreme Court] judge’s verdict demonstrates a simple truth: women are better than men,” Kaechele proclaimed on Instagram after hearing of the decision. “The judge sided with the arguments put forward by our all-female team.”'

NFL Players Say Media Policy Is 'Outdated,' Want Interviews Outside Of Locker Room After Nude Incidents

Matt · 5 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Needless to say, if these were female athletes, there'd be no question but that camera-wielding reporters could not be allowed in the locker rooms. Excerpt:

'On Thursday, some individual players and at least one club -- the Cincinnati Bengals -- announced they would not be doing interviews in their locker room going forward.

"As you've heard from a couple of teams now and the NFLPA is going to come out with a statement, in an effort to protect the sanctity of the locker room and the comfort of the players, each team is going to figure out a program to where we conduct our interviews outside of the locker room," said Bengals center, Ted Karras, the team's union representative.

...

But what has caused the change in how players view this policy has come in recent years when electronic media captured interviews on camera, and sometimes caught players in compromising states of undress.'

For Women Only event celebrates cancer survivors, promotes local healthcare services

Mastodon · 5 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For Women Only, the annual event sponsored by Orleans Community Health which raises funds for cancer services, took place Thursday night at White Birch Golf Course.
...
Condo announced the evening had grossed $6,300 to provide essential cancer services.'

Opinion: The evidence shows women make better doctors. So why do men still dominate medicine?

Mastodon · 5 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"When will I see the doctor?" Most female doctors have been asked this question many times. It feels like a slight — a failure to recognize the struggle it took to get to where they are, a fight that is far from over once a woman has her medical degree.

Women now make up more than half of medical students but only about 37% of practicing doctors. That is partly because the makeup of the medical workforce lags that of the student body. But it's also because persistent sexism drives higher attrition among women in medicine.
...
That's unfortunate not just for doctors but also for patients. On the whole, female doctors are more empathetic, detail-oriented and likely to follow through than their male counterparts. In other words, they are better doctors.

Admittedly, that is a generalization, but it's one worth making. I experienced it firsthand working with female colleagues, and I'm informed by that experience in addressing my own medical needs. I prefer to see female doctors.'

"Another country falls to feminism"

Matt · 6 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

YT's Better Bachelor takes on the effects of the spread of feminism on the dating scene just about anywhere you may go in the world in a video found here.

Kansas professor on leave after calling to 'shoot' men who won't vote for female president

Mastodon · 9 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A University of Kansas professor is on administrative leave after a viral clip circulating social media Wednesday showed him calling for men who refuse to vote for a female presidential candidate to be shot.

The professor in the clip appears to be addressing a lecture hall full of students. He bluntly tells the students that men who underestimate a woman's ability to lead the country should be shot, arguing "they clearly don't understand the way the world works."

"It's what frustrates me, there are going to be some males in our society that will refuse to vote for a potential female president because they don't think females are smart enough to be president," he says. "We can line all those guys up and shoot them."

The professor then adds, "Scratch that from the recording, I don't want the dean hearing that I said that."'

Lawmakers Invited to Issue Statements in Support of Men's Equality Month

Matt · 9 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'October 9, 2024– Recent news reports have identified men as the new swing voting bloc in many countries around the world (1). This fact highlights the importance of addressing the long-standing concerns of men and boys.

To raise public awareness, the International Council for Men and Boys (ICMB) is sponsoring Men's Equality Month in November. The month will feature educational events, social media efforts, and more. Men's Equality Month will complement and support Women's History Month, held every year in March.

Over 40 organizations already have made plans to participate in the November observance, with additional groups expected in the next several weeks. These groups are located around the world, making Men's Equality Month a global event: Bermuda, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, El Salvador, England, India, Kenya, Lithuania, Netherlands, Philippines, Slovenia, Trinidad, the United States, and Uruguay. (2)'

Minnesota mom admits to sexually abusing 2 teen hockey players she met in hot tub during hotel ‘staycation’

Mastodon · 9 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Minnesota mother of two admitted to sexually abusing a pair of 15-year-old hockey players whom she met in a hotel hot tub during a “staycation” with her husband and children.

Allison Schardin, 39, pleaded guilty on Friday to third-degree criminal sexual conduct after she pleaded not guilty to the disturbing allegations in May, according to reports.

Schardin, of Blaine, was at a hotel with her spouse and two children on Jan. 14 when she spotted the two teen athletes, who were traveling from Colorado with their team, and struck up a conversation with them, according to a complaint obtained by Law & Crime.

While she was with the boys in the hot tub, her husband yelled, “If you don’t come upstairs, our relationship is over,” the complaint states.

Schardin exchanged contact information with the victims and later texted one of them to see if she could come to his room after getting into a fight with her husband.

She allegedly told the boys they were young enough to be her kids, but then pressured them into sex acts with her while a third boy watched, according to the complaint.

In exchange for her guilty plea, another criminal count was dismissed and prosecutors agreed to jail time of no more than eight months, the Star Tribune reported. She must also register as a predatory sex offender.'

Why do Democrats have a masculinity problem?

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Aside from all the ways that men play the role of American culture's scapegoat ("toxic masculinity"), mainstream American life is deeply feminine (as is much of modern American evangelicalism). The feminine gaze is the operating assumption of modern life. To partake in polite society requires adopting a feminine instinct to operate in today's mainstream. One must cater virtually every message to the whims of the most important demographic: suburban women.

Adding to the feminization of modern American life is the effeminacy, forced and unforced, of the dominant models of modern masculinity. By effeminate, I'm not referring merely to men who adopt feminine affectations in their dress or speech. I mean all the ways that elite American culture simultaneously mocks men who are unapologetic in their masculinity as simpletons and cavemen while upholding the gender-sensitive metrosexual or finely draped homosexual as the epitome of masculinity. If you want courageous masculinity profiled, you must go outside of the mainstream media to see it.'

Workshop aims to help prepare boys for manhood

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Protégé Club, which is the organization's youth division, offers programs geared toward identifying risk factorsof young men and encouraging them to find their rightful place in society.

"This forum will give them the ability to learn how to identify and create resources and critique destructive masculinity views while journeying to become a reverent trailblazer who is associated with partners in their community," the statement continues.

Areas that the workshop will cover include man box, family values, communication, sexuality, dating violence, abstinence, and contraceptives, STIs and STDs, goal setting, decision making and the cost of fatherhood.'

CDC: Health Disparities in Suicide

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Gender disparities not included. Excerpt:

'Suicide and suicide attempts can have lasting emotional, mental, and physical health impacts, as well as economic consequences. They can also impact people who struggle with their own risk of suicide and/or mental health challenges (called "lived experience").'

$100 million awarded in Palm Beach County's boy botched circumcision case

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Palm Beach County jury awarded a boy $100 million in a medical malpractice case after a failed circumcision he received as a newborn by Dr. Berto Lopez of West Palm Beach.

According to the lawsuit filed by the boy's family, Dr. Lopez butchered the infant's surgical procedure on February 15, 2021, ten days after the Florida Board of Medicine revoked his medical license.

"At first, I didn't really know what was going on. I wanted to believe the doctor because he said he hit an artery, and that's why all the bleeding was happening. It was fairly quickly that we realized that he committed such a horrible injury on our son," said the Riviera Beach father, who we're not identifying to protect his son's identity.

"The damage is almost the entire head of the penis has been transected or amputated," Cohen said. "In the records it says, more than 50%."'

A mass circumcision is marketed to tourists in a remote area of Uganda. Some are angrily objecting

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Everything is changing as the population expands. People may not manage to follow the cultural processes," he said, citing the economic hardship and commercialization he said were diluting the communal aspect of Imbalu. "But we are fighting through the clan system that (Imbalu) remains intact."

But the Ugandan government's intervention has raised eyebrows among many Bamasaaba and underscored angst over the most important ceremony for this ethnic group of four million Ugandans. Some who spoke to the AP said they felt the Umukuuka, in his first year in office, was trivializing Imbalu by exposing it to outside interests.

The mass circumcisions will last until the end of 2024.

The tribal initiation of boys into adulthood has long been controversial in African countries such as South Africa, where incidents of botched, deadly circumcisions among Xhosa-speaking people have inspired campaigns for safe clinical circumcision. Among the Bamasaaba, whose cutting method is just as violent, there have been no calls to end the practice. The strongest adherents see Imbalu as more important than ever amid widespread infant circumcision in hospital settings. They say those boys who are not initiated in the tribal way risk suffering lifelong social delinquency.'

UK: School textbooks are sexist, woke scientists say - so, would you take offence to these descriptions of men and women?

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From 'Charlie and the Chocolate Factory' to 'The Tiger Who Came To Tea', woke campaigners have taken offence to many beloved books.

Now, scientists claim that even our school textbooks are sexist.

Researchers from the UK's Center for Global Development analysed the contents of 1,255 textbooks from 34 countries around the world.

They found that the textbooks mentioned women half as often as men and were far less likely to describe their careers and achievements.'

'Misogynist' schoolboys face terror unit probes despite damning report accusing Prevent, the body set up to combat Islamic extremism, of 'losing its focus'

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teenage boys face investigation by anti-terrorism officers if they make sexist remarks in the classroom, The Mail on Sunday can reveal.

The Home Office is considering plans to allow teachers to report misogynistic comments to the government's Prevent programme, which was set up to combat Islamic extremists. Even comments about a 'woman's place being in the kitchen' could be enough to spark a referral to the unit, sources said last night.

Critics say the move would dilute Prevent's work in deradicalising potential terrorists at a time of huge global tensions.

The plan – which would place sexism on a par with Islamic extremism – was discussed in high-level meetings between Home Office and Prevent experts in recent weeks. The Home Office is looking at widening the Prevent programme to combat growing misogyny among teenagers, fuelled by vile social media influencers such as Andrew Tate, but some civil servants warn the plans risk reducing the anti-radicalisation unit to becoming 'a wing of social services'.

One Prevent source said last night: 'Lots of young boys hold extreme sexist views about girls, which teachers will hear and make referrals. This will then overload the system, and Prevent will not be able to concentrate on Islamist or far-Right extremism."

Harris is wrong: The government absolutely controls men's bodies

Mastodon · 10 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Kamala Harris made an inaccurate claim on a popular podcast this week.

The Democratic presidential nominee appeared on the Call Her Daddy podcast and repeated an emphatic no when asked by host Alex Cooper if any laws exist that give the government control over a man's body.

Many people cite selective service as an example of governmental control over men's bodies. Men aged 18 to 25 must register, unlike women. If drafted, those men must fight wars they did not want to fight. Some men have been killed. Our country has living veterans of World War II, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War who are products of the draft. We cannot say the same about women.'

Obama: Black men have ‘excuses’ for not supporting Harris

Mastodon · 11 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Barack Obama is urging Black men to step up their support for Kamala Harris, a sign that her campaign is worried about what is typically a reliable demographic for Democrats.

Referencing reports that support for Harris is lagging among Black males, the former president gave what amounted to a scolding as he made an unscheduled stop at a campaign field office in Pittsburgh.

“You’re coming up with all kinds of reasons and excuses, I’ve got a problem with that,” he said. “Because part of it makes me think— and I’m speaking to men directly— part of it makes me think that, well, you just aren’t feeling the idea of having a woman as president, and you’re coming up with other alternatives and other reasons for that.”'

Democrats’ ‘New Masculinity’ Will Keep Turning Away Critical Voting Bloc

Mastodon · 11 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Psaki then referred to Emhoff as a “wife guy” and then claimed some people are not comfortable with “fierce women, strong women, intelligent women.”

Like Emhoff, Walz and every other man are simply supporting characters for the female lead. The left doesn’t allow strong men who might disagree with women because it destroys female empowerment.'

Want to film in Paris? No sexism allowed

Mastodon · 13 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Filmmakers looking to shoot on the iconic streets of Paris will have to promise to fight sexism, discrimination and sexual violence on set under a regulation adopted Friday by city lawmakers.

The regulation, due to take effect on January 1, requires production companies seeking a permit to film in the French capital to sign a charter pledging to promote gender balance on set, train crews against sexism and fight gender discrimination and violence.

Companies will also have to put special measures in place to protect those involved in shooting sex scenes -- a side of the industry that has been transformed since the "Me Too" movement exploded in 2017.

The measure "extends that adopted by the National Cinema Centre, which only applies to the film industry", said deputy mayor for culture Carine Rolland.'

Curfew - is there a radical fix for violence against women?

Mastodon · 13 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Would a curfew for men lead to less violence against women and girls?

That's the provocative question at the heart of Curfew, the new drama series on Paramount+.

Set in a dystopian future, the show imagines a society where all men live under The Women's Safety Act and are subjected to a government-imposed curfew from 19:00 to 07:00, with their movements tracked 24/7 by ankle tags.

The goal? To drastically reduce violence against women.

However, as the series unfolds, the discovery of a murdered woman during curfew hours casts doubt on the effectiveness of the policy, raising broader questions about the limits of such measures.'

Young men’s economic prospects are shifting, along with their politics

Matt · 14 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“This is just a huge economic fact that lies behind a lot of this sense of cultural dislocation among men, this sense of not really knowing whether you are going to be needed, or feeling like you’re failing against the standard that was set 50 years ago about the position of men and women in the labor market,” said Richard Reeves, president of the American Institute for Boys and Men, which he founded to study the unique problems males face.

Reeves said his research indicates that a sense of economic and social dislocation could also be contributing to higher suicide rates among young men and wider substance abuse.

“It’s a very, very difficult and painful transition right now between some of the cultural expectations we have about the role of men and the economic reality on the ground,” he said.'

Top Oregon official put on leave for allegedly prioritizing 'qualified' job candidates over 'gender identity'

Mastodon · 14 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A diversity, equity and inclusion expert had her former boss placed on administrative leave for reportedly prioritizing merit over personal identity when hiring new employees, according to a report.

Megan Donecker, who formerly served as the Oregon Department of Forestry's DEI strategy officer, complained about the agency's management, criticizing her boss Mike Shaw for looking "beyond gender and identity in hiring, seeking only candidates most qualified for the job," OregonLive reported.

Shaw served as the agency's second-in-command under State Forester Cal Mukumoto until he was placed on administrative leave on Aug. 6 after Donecker filed a formal complaint against him, the Daily Mail reported.
...
"The Department of Forestry is charged with protecting about 16 million acres of public and private forestland and serves as Oregon's largest fire department," The local journalist Noelle Crombie wrote. "It is overseen by Mukumoto, who answers to the Oregon Board of Forestry, a seven-member citizen board appointed by the governor. Mukumoto, appointed in 2021, manages an agency of nearly 1,400 employees and a biennial budget of about $577 million. His salary is $237,288."'

Gendered job listings: Are women turning away from 'masculine' roles?

Mastodon · 15 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Gender stereotyping in job ads can lead to a self-selection bias, where women choose not to apply for these jobs, even if they meet the qualifications, due to the perception that they are not a good fit," found the study.

It added that "stereotypically male job ads" can also "lead to a bias in the hiring process, where women are unfairly evaluated as being less competent or less suitable for the job".

IAB researchers evaluated listings for 710 occupations published on one of Germany's largest online job portals, BA Jobbörse.

They found that more jobs were actually gendered towards women, rather than centred around 'masculine' language.

Even so, the report found that in certain fields such as STEM (science, technology, engineering, maths), the majority of job descriptions used "masculine" terms.'

Women are better than men at science job interviews

Mastodon · 15 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An investigation into academic hiring outcomes for biological-science roles has suggested a surprising trend: women who applied for assistant professor positions in North America were more likely to get job offers than were men.

...

Overall, women were at an advantage. Two-thirds of women in the sample received at least one job offer compared with half of the men. The advantage is particularly notable because men had slightly more first-author publications in highly ranked journals. “Men had a few more CNS [Cell, Nature, Science] papers, but women were getting more job offers,” Jadavji says.'

Gutfeld: Real men see through this bull

Mastodon · 15 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Greg Gutfeld and the panel react to a new advertisement for Vice President Kamala Harris that features professional actors on ‘Gutfeld!’. The relevant segment starts at time mark 2:39.

Kansas Lecturer Leaves After Remark on Shooting Men Who Won’t Vote for Women

Matt · 15 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Kansas announced Friday that an instructor is no longer employed there after a video showed him “making a highly inappropriate comment in his classroom suggesting violence against individuals for their personal views.”

University officials didn’t name the instructor, but the Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression (FIRE) has identified him as Phillip Lowcock, a health sport and exercise science lecturer who allegedly made an offhand comment in class that men who wouldn't vote for a woman for president should be shot. By Friday, Lowcock's profile page was no longer on the university's website.

Asked whether Lowcock was fired or voluntarily left, a university spokesperson said in an email “that’s a personnel issue the university is not able to discuss.” Inside Higher Ed was unable to reach Lowcock Friday.'

Clint Eastwood’s daughter Francesca arrested for domestic violence after alleged fight with boyfriend

Mastodon · 16 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Clint Eastwood’s daughter Francesca Eastwood was arrested for domestic violence Saturday night, TMZ reports.

The actress, 31, was arrested after allegedly physically assaulting her boyfriend as they were driving through Beverly Hills, Calif., police sources told TMZ.

Francesca’s boyfriend reportedly called the cops with her in the car after their verbal argument allegedly turned physical, and they instructed him to drive to the Beverly Hills Police Department.'

Georgia Trump to join Fox News' Harris Faulkner at all-women town hall in battleground state

Matt · 16 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former President Trump, the 2024 Republican presidential nominee, is joining Fox News' Harris Faulkner in the battleground state of Georgia to speak with an all-female audience about issues that affect them most in a town hall event that will air Wednesday.

The town hall will be filmed at a venue called the Reid Barn in Cumming, Georgia, on Tuesday and air on Wednesday at 11 a.m. ET on "The Faulkner Focus." Ahead of the event, Faulkner underscored the importance of the female vote and for presidential candidates to have the opportunity to explain their platforms to the demographic.

"Women constitute the largest group of registered and active voters in the United States, so it is paramount that female voters understand where the presidential candidates stand on the issues that matter to them most. I am looking forward to providing our viewers with an opportunity to learn more about where former President Trump stands on these topics," Faulkner said in a Fox News press release.'

How Americans See Men and Masculinity

Mastodon · 18 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'25% say people in the United States have mostly negative views of men who are “manly or masculine.” This is smaller than the shares who say people have mostly positive views of masculine men (43%) or that views are neither positive nor negative (31%).

But among Republican men, 45% do think people have negative views of masculine men, and the vast majority of those who feel this way say this is a bad thing. Much smaller shares of Republican women (24%), Democratic men (20%) and Democratic women (13%) say people view masculine men negatively. (Republicans and Democrats include those who lean toward either party.)'

Brown University STEM gap due to sexism: ‘equity’ scholar

Mastodon · 18 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female students at Brown University are not enrolling in STEM degrees at the exact same rate as male students due to sexism, according to a professor who also works as an “equity consultant.”

The Brown Daily Herald recently surveyed 1,177 undergraduate students on their majors. This represents about 15 percent of all undergrads.

Approximately 45 percent of females are majoring in the “physical sciences” compared to 59 percent of males, according to the survey. The poll also provides data on students who are “neither male nor female” (about 40 percent of Brown students say they are LGBT).

For insights, the student newspaper turned to Katherine Rieser, who does not teach in any of the physical sciences departments. Rather, she directs the graduate program in teaching and is a senior lecturer in education, according to her university bio. However, she is a “race and equity consultant” according to her curriculum vitae.

Rieser, as reported by the campus newspaper, “attributed these differences to ‘structurally racist or gender biased policies’ in education, which she says have catalyzed discrepancies between gender and race.”'

NCFM update Boys and Men Commissions

Matt · 19 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NCFM is gearing up to file a lawsuit against the State of California for not having a Commission on the Status of Boys and Men.

The Global Initiative for Boys and Men has been hard at work, developing state reports to highlight the need for such commissions, including one for California that was just completed last week, which you can read below. Each report can cost up to $10,000 and take months or even years to complete and keep updated. Our upcoming lawsuit will cost at least $30,000, similar to the one we filed against the Selective Service System earlier this year.'

The cost to women of the overlooked rise of Kenya's manosphere

Matt · 19 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the co-founder and executive director of Usikimye, a non-profit in the Kenyan capital of Nairobi that works with women – and some men – who are experiencing sexual and gender-based violence at home, Migwi said that the woman "couldn't put her finger on what was changing" in her relationship with her husband at first, but soon thought she figured it out. The man had for months been consuming content by Kenya's most prominent "masculinity influencers," who lead Kenya's arm of the more global "manosphere" — where content is put out across websites, blogs and social media accounts promoting a certain lifestyle, focused on masculinity and opposing feminism — which she believes changed his views towards her.'

Women, nonbinary comedians crack up patriarchy in Shenanigans' 'Men Aren't Funny'

Mastodon · 22 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are no cooties at this comedy show.

UCLA's comedy club Shenanigans is once again hosting its "Men Aren't Funny" show, kicking off their first performance of the year Friday. Gabby Klijian, a third-year English student and the president of Shenanigans, said the club frequently puts on "Men Aren't Funny" as a way to exclusively showcase female and nonbinary performers in a variety of comedy routines, including improv, stand-up and sketch performances.

Although there aren't any guidelines on the comedians' content, because of the theme of "Men Aren't Funny," most of the show's material spotlights feminism and the experiences of women and nonbinary comedians, said Karina Dutko, a geography graduate student\ and the co-head of Shenanigans' stand-up team.'

AVDA's Committed Men program aims to redefine masculinity, reduce violence

Mastodon · 24 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One out of three women has been a victim of physical or sexual violence. But what if we could prevent domestic abuse before it happens?

That's the goal of AVDA's (Aid to Victims of Domestic Abuse) prevention team. Specifically, its "Committed Men" program, which specifically works with young men and boys to prevent intimate partner violence. The goal is to create the social change necessary to reduce dating and domestic violence in the future.

AVDA's men and boys' prevention program goes into schools, churches, athletic clubs and community centers to mentor young boys, teaching them the difference between healthy and hurtful masculinity. The program challenges their beliefs and attitudes and expands the definition of what it means be a man.'

Australia: New School Resources To Counter Andrew Tate-Types

Mastodon · 24 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Victorian students will learn to recognise and respond to toxic masculinity, hate speech and coercive control online – with new Respectful Relationships resources being rolled out to schools across the state.

The new resources will give students the skills to counter the influence of Andrew Tate-types, helping them safely navigate issues like consent, sextortion, pornography and gender-based bullying.

More non-government schools are also being invited to join over 1,950 Victorian government, Catholic and independent schools, including over 370 non-government schools already signed up to the initiative.

Developed by education experts Professor Helen Cahill and Associate Professor Debbie Ollis in consultation with teachers, students and parents – the new contemporary materials will help young people stay safe online and in real life. We're giving parents and carers peace of mind too – delivering advice and resources from trusted sources.'

Chemists rip ‘feminism’ STEM class proposal

Mastodon · 24 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An academic journal article about “feminism” and “dysconscious racism in STEM” never should have been published, according to two chemistry professors.

Professors John Landrum and Joseph Lichter questioned why the Journal of Chemical Education allowed a paper that vaguely touched on “white supremacy” to be published.

“Overlooking the obligation to provide clear definitions and valid evidence for such terms, especially ‘White Supremacy’ which was deemed sufficiently important to include in the abstract, is hard to rationalize for a journal that ascribes to upholding reasonable standards of scientific rigor,” the two Florida International University professors wrote.

They also called the paper a “deeply flawed work of scholarship.” Only two academic publications cited the paper – the Landrum (pictured, left) and Lichter (pictured, right) reply, and a subsequent response from the original author to these criticism.'

Why Won't Men Fight Back?

Matt · 25 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men have traditionally avoided conflict in relationships to maintain peace, keep their partner happy, protect their reputation, avoid shame, preserve sexual access, and maintain stability. A key reason for this is the lack of social support or training that encourages men to prioritize their own needs. As a result, men often place their partner's desires above their own. This pattern, shaped by both personal and societal expectations, leaves men less likely to push back—whether in their marriage or in response to broader social issues.'

Harris Continues Pushing Men Away From Her Campaign One Tweet at a Time

Mastodon · 26 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It looks like Kamala Harris's recent tweet stirred up some heated reactions online. In her post, Harris addressed the importance of men supporting women's rights, stating, "The men of America do not want to see their daughters, wives, sisters, and mothers put at risk because their rights have been taken away." The Vice President's comments aimed to rally male allies around protecting women's freedoms, but some people see it differently.

Critics have labeled this approach as another example of "momsplaining," feeling it comes off as condescending. They argue that Harris is out of touch with male voters, suggesting she's simultaneously telling men what they should care about while also emphasizing that they should stay out of women's business. Online discussions are debating whether Harris's message is a rallying cry for unity or an example of the VP alienating a key voting demographic.'

New ‘insulting’ Harris ad targets Black men's love lives

Mastodon · 26 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Kamala Harris’ campaign released a new digital advertisement that targets Black men's love lives, insinuating that they will be rejected by women if they don’t have a plan to vote.

The ads depict a dating game in which a Black man approaches a group of women who are holding balloons. They begin to ask him questions about himself, including how much he makes, how tall he is and whether he works out.

The man’s answers get seemingly positive responses from the women, until one asks him if he has a plan to vote in November.

"Nah, not my thing," the man says, prompting all the women in the scene to pop their balloons.

"Vote. Election Day is Nov 5," reads a message at the end of the ad alongside a Harris-Walz campaign logo.

"New Harris/Walz ad tells black men that women will reject them if they don’t vote," Center for the Study of Partisanship and Ideology President Richard Hanania remarked in a post on X along with a video of the ad. "Memorable and works as an appeal to self-interest."'

Opinion: Men of America, get over yourselves

Mastodon · 26 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm a 62-year-old cisgender male (just learned the meaning of that from my kids a few years ago). I came of age in the late 20th-century metrosexual era in New York City (still not exactly sure what that term means). I've always been comfortable with my masculinity (another vague, confusing term), but unlike many men my age (or younger), I probably have as many close female friends as I do male ones.

Enough about me. What I'd really like to explore here is the state of gender relations in America on the cusp of an epochal presidential election in less than two weeks. A recent piece in The New York Times, titled "Why gender may be the defining issue in this election," got my mind racing as I read it at the breakfast table.
...
For me, the proud father of three daughters in their 20s, it also means enthusiastically casting my vote for Harris next month. Forty-six men, including slaveholders, philanderers, warmongers and corrupt officeholders, have had their turn.

Now, it's time for a woman to clean up our mess.

The future of America is at least half female. Time to embrace it.'

'Let's Be Crystal Clear, It's Not Us, It's You' - Brutal MAHA Alliance Ad Details Kamala's Man Problem

Mastodon · 27 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If recent polls are any indication, Kamala Harris has a man problem. Try as they might, the Harris campaign is not resonating with men. Black and Hispanic men along with rank-and-file union men are demographics that Democrats depend on and they are just not lining up to vote for Kamala.

It's evident to even the most casual political observer why men aren't enthusiastically supporting Harris and the Democrats. For years men have been demonized as toxically masculine. Traditionally male-dominated careers in the energy, transportation, and mining sectors are attacked. In fact, the only arena where men have Kamala's complete support is any arena where men want to compete in women's sports.

Kamala is failing to understand the disconnect she has with men. A new ad from The MAHA Alliance explains it to her in brutal detail.'

Dear Kamala Harris

Michelle Obama makes passionate plea for women’s health while campaigning for Harris

Mastodon · 27 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harris in Houston spoke directly to male voters, saying, “Men across America do not want to see their daughters and wives and sisters and mothers put at risk because their rights have been taken.”

Obama in Michigan made a similar overture, but often in more vivid, painfully detailed terms.

“If your wife is shivering and bleeding on the operating room table during a routine, the delivery gone bad, her pressure dropping as she loses more and more blood, or some unforeseen infection spreads and her doctors aren’t sure if they can act — you’ll be the one praying that it’s not too late,” Obama said. “You’ll be the one pleading for somebody, anybody to do something.”

To the women watching, Obama asked that they either try to convince undecided friends and family members to vote for Harris or that they strike out on their own.

“If you are a woman who lives in a household of men that don’t listen to you or value your opinion, just remember that your vote is a private matter,” Obama said. “You get to use your judgment and cast your vote for yourself and the women in your life. Remember, women standing up for what is best for us can make the difference in this election.”'

Michelle Obama says she's a 'little angry' at the hesitation to vote for Harris

Mastodon · 27 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She spoke specifically to men in her remarks, emphasizing that further restrictions on abortion and other aspects of women's health care would impact them and their sons, too.

"I am asking y'all from the core of my being to take our lives seriously — please," Obama said. "Do not put our lives in the hands of politicians — mostly men — who have no clue or do not care about what we, as women, are going through."'

In a race defined by gender, Michelle Obama pleads with men to step up

Mastodon · 27 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"To anyone out there thinking about sending out this election or voting for Donald Trump or a third-party candidate in protest because you're fed up, let me warn you: Your rage does not exist in a vacuum," she said. "If we don't win this election, your wife, your daughter, your mother, we as women will become collateral damage to your rage."'

What exactly is toxic masculinity? And could the term's overuse have unintended consequences?

Mastodon · 27 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parenting educator and author Maggie Dent agrees the term can be problematic.

"I believe we have toxic males, the same as we've got toxic females," she says. "I believe both genders deserve to be respected as individuals."

Yet she points out there has been a shift in the behaviour and attitudes of teenage boys in recent years.

"We absolutely know that today's tweens and teen boys, even as young as [nine or 10] … if they've got a phone or they've got access to devices and they're on certain social media, they are getting marinated in content that is the opposite to what anybody wants for their son," she says.

In the 40 years since she was a high school teacher, Ms Dent says teenage banter and teasing has taken an alarming turn.'

Using Research to Push a Narrative

Matt · 27 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a noticeable trend in research about men and women that often tells only part of the story. A prime example is domestic violence studies that falsely claim women are the sole victims, while ignoring men's experiences. This happens in other areas too—like reproductive coercion, teen violence, healthcare, and others. Women's troubles are spotlighted, while men's are overlooked. Once you see this pattern, it's hard to unsee it.

In this post, we'll look at a study published in July of 2024, that employs a similar strategy—not by lying, but by omission. The researchers present only the part of the story that supports the narrative they want to push. And in this case, it's clear.'

Nikki Haley Rips ‘Bromance’ and ‘Masculinity Stuff’ on Display at Trump’s MSG Rally: ‘Going to Make Women Uncomfortable’

Mastodon · 30 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Republican presidential candidate Nikki Haley criticized the “bromance” and “masculinity stuff” on display at former President Donald Trump’s controversial Madison Square Garden rally this week, arguing it could alienate female voters.

During an appearance on Fox News, Tuesday, Haley said, “I think they need to do what they need to do to get across the finish line. I just think that they need to focus primarily on who it is they are talking to.”'

Boys at Swanson learn healthy perspective of masculinity with new program

Mastodon · 30 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Louisiana Department of Juvenile Justice joined the Swanson Center for the Youth in Monroe to host the “Healthy Masculinity” program on Tuesday, Oct. 29.

The program was made to teach boys how to have a healthy perspective of masculinity by creating a safe space for vulnerability.

Boys in the program learned about coping mechanisms for trauma, setting healthy boundaries, setting standards, and communicating emotions properly.

“[It’s] so important, you know, for the young men to see people who look like them, you know, to come inside our facilities and not only just teach them about being a man, but just be that mentor,” said La. DOJJ Public Information Director Nicolette Gordon.'

Young men are struggling. They need help, not hounding

Mastodon · 30 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former President Barack Obama's recent scolding of Black men for not considering a woman, Democrat Kamala Harris, a viable presidential candidate, has been much debated. What hasn't been debated, and should be, speaks to a larger issue among many young men of all races.

Obama's accusation that misogyny was at play — a fraught, oversimplified one — overlooks deeper trends and factors. Many young men of all races feel alienated from not just the Democratic Party itself but from a culture and future that doesn't seem to include or welcome them.

For a long time, this sentiment has been dismissed as merely whining from a misogynistic group of over-privileged men's rights activists. But growing trends speak to undeniable realities: The lower grade point averages boys earn in high school follow them throughout college. They are far less likely than female peers to attend four-year colleges, far more likely to implode when faced with academic struggles and less likely to graduate and to attend graduate school. (No, young men are not flocking to well-paying trade jobs or construction.) They are less likely than young women to hold down jobs, even with a college degree.

Other future prospects can seem equally futile. Males are more likely to be single, as well as romantically and sexually dormant: 63% of men under 30 describe themselves as single, versus 34% of women the same age.

Perhaps it's no surprise that men, especially younger ones, are suffering far more from mental health struggles than we realize (health care workers are just starting to realize this), are three to four times more likely than females to die by suicide and are at the fore of the loneliness epidemic.

Two things are increasingly clear: Young men cannot simply pull themselves up by their bootstraps alone. Second, the common one-stop-shop response to their struggles — that it's all a result of "toxic masculinity" — is overly simplistic and only exacerbates the problem. Males ages 16 to 29 are twice as likely as female peers to find this damning label unproductive and offensive at best, wounding at worst.'

Urgent Call for Lawmakers and Others to Address Global Crisis Affecting Men and Boys

Matt · 31 October 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'October 30, 2024 – Around the world, men and boys are facing an unprecedented human rights crisis. This crisis is contributing to a range of social problems such as the weakening of the family, plummeting birth rates, and the dad-deprivation of millions of children (1).

Globally, men and boys are lagging behind women and girls in 12 areas: Education, Health, Child labor, False allegations, Victims of violence, Parenting, Treatment by the criminal system, Partner abuse, Homelessness, Workplace injuries and deaths, Reproductive and adoption rights, and Media portrayals (2).

The men and boys crisis has reached the point that statements of concern have been issued by lawmakers and governmental bodies in 14 countries around the world (3). In Denmark for example, Minister for Equality Marie Bjerre explained, “For far too long we have not taken it seriously enough that men can also be victims of intimate partner violence and need help. The time has come to ensure that abused men and their children receive the same help as when a woman reaches out for help.” (4)'

Cape Town father wins court case after WhatsApp reveals paternity fraud

Mastodon · 1 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Kraaifontein man has won a High Court battle to relinquish his parental rights after discovering he was not the biological father of his daughter. He had been paying maintenance for years.

The judgment by Judge James Dumisani Lekhuleni revealed how the man had discovered the truth of his ex-wife's extramarital affair on WhatsApp. In the application, the father, who is unnamed to protect the child, sought relief from the court after paternity tests revealed the truth.'

Entrenched Sexism Is Very Australian. Let’s Uproot It

Mastodon · 1 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From the boardroom to the workplace, it’s been a horrible year for women. And one of the worst places has been Australia.

Company boards — still overwhelmingly male — are failing to meaningfully hold executives accountable for bad behavior. Large institutional investors must double down on insisting diversity in the C-suite is non-negotiable, as gender-parity initiatives stall.

Or have we? The corporate world is run by a network of old boys whose connections are forged at single-sex private schools. Women continue to be subjected to violence at home at such a rate that the prime minister declared it a “national crisis” after a spate of killings earlier this year. Unwanted and aggressive attention on a night out is far too common.

“Australia has a cultural problem with women in leadership,” Governor General Sam Mostyn told Bloomberg News three years ago when she was president of women’s leadership advocacy group Chief Executive Women. She noted there was a lack of respect for women at work, and a failure to take advantage of the strides they had made in education.'

The real reason for the rise in male childlessness

Matt · 3 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the picture of who is childless is changing. Recent research has found that it's more likely to be men who aren't able to have children even if they want them – in particular lower income men.

A 2021 study in Norway found that the rate of male childlessness was 72% among the lowest five percent of earners, but only 11% among the highest earners – a gap that had widened by almost 20 percentage points over the previous 30 years.

Robin Hadley is one of those who wanted to have a child but struggled to do so. He didn't go to university and went on to become a technical photographer in a university lab, based in Manchester, and by his 30s, he was desperate to be a dad.'

Law Student Faces Expulsion for ‘Aggressive Pointing’

Matt · 4 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Houston Porter, a 28-year-old law student at Pace University, first walked into the college auditorium last month, he was surprised to see a packed house for the “Saving Women’s Sports” panel he was co-moderating.

“Our events normally don’t get that kind of turnout,” says Porter, a member of The Federalist Society, a conservative group that sponsored the panel at Pace’s law school in White Plains, New York. “So it was exciting.”

But not long after, Porter’s world started “crumbling down”—with at least one professor shouting at panelists and another allegedly rushing the stage, followed by a Title IX investigation that accuses him of having “aggressively pointed” at a transgender student and misgendering her. Now Porter faces the possibility of suspension, expulsion, and even being barred from practicing law.'

Why Aren’t Men’s Issues Being Taken Seriously? - George TheTinMen

mens_issues · 5 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. George from TheTinMen is a content creator, pro-men’s advocate and a researcher.

Why is it so hard to advocate for the problems of boys and men? If truly we care about half of the population flourishing and living lives they enjoy, why is it so unpopular to talk about the challenges they're facing?

Expect to learn what George thinks the current world of advocacy for men looks like, why the press struggles to define what “healthy masculinity” is, the lessons we can learn from the rise of the Manosphere, the hidden effects of bullying on boys' mental health, whether White Guys For Harris actually helped men and much more.

It's No Surprise Young Men Are Abandoning the Democratic Party

Matt · 5 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You have probably heard that the Democratic party is falling out of favor with men. All the evidence shows this to be true, especially with young men in the 18-29 age group who have been migrating en masse to the Republican party in recent election cycles. From the 2016 Trump-Clinton race to now, the percentage of these voters that identify or lean Democrat has taken a nosedive from 51 percent to 39 percent. The reasons for this shift are many and I am positive that the experience boys are having in school is a contributing factor.
...
Imagine that girls (and even some teachers!) wear t-shirts to school that say “the future is female” or “girls rule, boys drool.” On the one hand, this is hardly a big deal. On the other hand, boys would never be allowed to wear anything that claimed the opposite. The message of derision and contempt is kind of baked in and that takes a toll after a while.

Flyers and posters hang on school bulletin boards and classroom walls about special programs for girls like “Girls on the Run,” “Girls Who Code” and the “Girls in STEM Club” — there are no similar offerings for boys.'

Anne-Marie Duff explains why she doesn't like the term 'toxic masculinity'

Mastodon · 5 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anne-Marie Duff has discussed her experience of raising a son, and said she does not like the term "toxic masculinity".

The Bad Sisters actor, 54, parents a teenage son, Brendan, with her ex-husband James McAvoy, who she met on the set of the British comedy-drama Shameless.

Speaking about bringing up a boy and the discourse around young men, she told The Observer Magazine: "I think the rhetoric around it is frustrating sometimes. Like, I don't love the expression 'toxic masculinity', because masculinity is a describing noun, isn't it? Is all masculinity toxic? It's like saying, 'pathetic femininity'."

She added: "My worry is that there are a lot of young boys who think it's innate."

Duff then pointed to "a very sad story" a friend had recently told her about a 13-year-old boy they knew who was having counselling because he thought there was an inevitability about him becoming a rapist.

"We have to be so careful with our young people," she said.'

Prominent law professor blames Harris loss on ‘toxic masculinity’ and ‘white supremacy’

Mastodon · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jed Handelsman Shugerman, a prominent law professor at Boston University, argued Wednesday that the reason Donald Trump won and Kamala Harris lost the 2024 presidential race is due to “toxic masculinity” and “white supremacy.”

“Anyone blaming Harris or Walz today has utterly lost the plot & missed the point. This is fundamentally about America, toxic masculinity, & white supremacy. Blaming Harris would be part of that problem, not the solution,” the professor posted on X early Wednesday morning. “She deserves our thanks. Thank you, @vp @KamalaHarris.”

In a follow-up post, he argued Harris “ran a solid, energetic, inspiring, strategic, & disciplined campaign in less time than anyone in modern US history. You made us proud to be on the right side of history and the humane side of humanity.”'

Stephen A. Smith Blames Oprah Winfrey, Michelle Obama for ‘Alienating’ Voters

Mastodon · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The commentator next took aim at the hateful claims Michelle Obama made as she stumped for Harris when Obama told blacks that if they didn’t vote for Harris, they were essentially race traitors.

“If we don’t agree with you, we’re against you?” the exasperated Smith asked. “How do you think the men felt about that? So we have to do what you tell us to do; otherwise, we’re anti-you? You thought that worked? Do y’all know anything about most men? You think that’s going to work?”'

Woman (actually) jailed for sexually assaulting girl

Matt · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who abducted and sexually assaulted a 14-year-old girl has been jailed for breaching a court order.

Phoebe Pearce, 25, from Newport, groomed the schoolgirl, who was aged 14 at the time, after meeting her through Facebook two years ago.

She was warned off by the teenager's mum but Pearce lured the girl away from her home to have sexual activity with her while she was on police bail.

A court heard Pearce texted a friend saying the girl was "youngish but I don't care".

In September 2022, Pearce admitted grooming, abduction and sexual activity with a child at a Cardiff Crown Court hearing.

Judge Jeremy Jenkins said the relationship "quickly turned into a sexual one".'

Liberal women going on sex strike over Trump win

Matt · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not like the typical man was getting much from liberal women anyway. Reminds me of a vegan going on an animal products strike. I mean... why bother? The vegan already doesn't abide animal products in his life anyway! Excerpt:

'Liberal women have sworn to go on sex strike over Donald Trump's election win.

Mr Trump swept to victory in Tuesday's presidential race that Democrats cast as a referendum on abortion rights and protections for women.

Some women are now threatening to punish men for voting for Trump, taking inspiration from a Korean feminist movement that vows to withhold sex from men in order to redefine the gender power balance.'

Germany to enforce national service in drastic plan as 'stupid' Scholz prepares for WW3

Mastodon · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Germany's government has given the green light to a draft law that paves the way for the return of national service.

The legislation will allow Berlin to gauge the willingness of the country's 18-year-olds to serve in Germany's army, the Bundeswehr.

...

Under the model proposed by the German government, all men turning 18 – which is estimated to be about 300,000 in 2025 – will have to fill out a digital survey on their interest in joining the army.

Young women will also be sent the survey but are not obliged to fill out the form.'

Triggered AOC blames sexism for Trump win as she warns it will be a ‘scary’ time in US

Mastodon · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The freakout on the left continued Thursday with New York Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez blaming sexism for Kamala Harris’ presidential election loss — as she warned it will be a “scary” time in America under “the fascist” Donald Trump.

“This is going to be a very, very, very, challenging difficult time … for millions of people in this country. This is going to be a very scary time,” AOC said in an extended, funereal Instagram video from the kitchen of her home.

“I’m not here to sugarcoat what we are about to experience.”'

Dem Strategist Sends Disgusting Tweet About White Men After Trump's Victory

Mastodon · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Democrat strategist Ally Sammarco sent an appalling tweet in reaction to Donald Trump winning the election.

Ally Sammarco had a different take away:

White men are responsible.

She took to X on election night to tweet, "White men without college degrees are going to ruin this country."'

Kamala's Anti-Male Sexism Drove Men from the Democratic Fold

Matt · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'November 7, 2024 – Men have long been a decisive force in presidential contests (1). Exit polls from Tuesday's election showed race, ethnicity, and marital status were particularly important factors (2):

- Race: 60% of White males voted for Trump, compared to only 37% supporting Harris.
- Ethnicity: Hispanic men favored Trump over Harris, by a 55% to 43% margin.
- Marital Status: Among married men, 60% supported Trump and 38% favored Harris.

Contributing to these numbers were five major missteps by the Harris campaign:

Inside the hidden world of male victims

Matt · 7 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Matt feared his wife was going to kill him. He had seen violent streaks before. Once, when he accused her of infidelities, Matt said she pulled a knife and “put it (at) my throat.”

Fleeing wasn’t an option because they had young children. He felt stuck without a safe refuge where he could take them. “As long as I had my kids, that’s all I cared about,” Matt said.

He expected the police wouldn’t take him seriously: a six-foot-tall Caribbean man scared of his wife. “If anything happens and she calls the cops, they’re going to come straight at me,” he told the National Post, requesting anonymity to protect his children.'

Psycho Says She's Purchasing a Glock and Shooting Every White Man She Sees

Mastodon · 8 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Libs of TikTok has found a white woman who most definitely didn't vote for Trump and is also pro-gun because she says she's going to buy a Glock and shoot white men in the street. Only at nighttime, though. But your skin has to be really white and you have to be a man.'

Illinois judge found dead outside of home, wife charged with murder in his fatal shooting

Matt · 8 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The wife of an Illinois judge was arrested and charged with fatally shooting her husband, according to Illinois State Police.

Megan Valentine, 44 of Albion, was arrested Tuesday after the body of Illinois Second Judicial Circuit Court Judge Michael J. Valentine was found outside of a home, per a news release from police.

She was charged with first degree murder, aggravated discharge of a firearm, aggravated battery with a firearm and aggravated domestic battery, according to court documents filed in Edwards County Thursday.

The Edwards County Sheriff's Office responded to a home in Albion Tuesday at around 12:14 p.m.

"Upon arrival, an ECSO deputy observed the body of Michael Valentine laying outside the residence," police said, adding Megan Valentine was then taken into custody.'

‘A fatal miscalculation’: masculinity researcher Richard Reeves on why Democrats lost young men

Matt · 9 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the months leading up to election day, pollsters were fixated on one demographic: young men. This group, often elusive in political data, was showing signs of a notable swing toward Donald Trump and away from the progressive viewpoints of young women.

Traditionally a policy wonk, Richard Reeves became an unlikely media mainstay this election cycle, sought after by those trying to decode the concerns and motivations of these gen Z male voters. Reeves is president of the American Institute for Boys and Men, which he started in 2023 to create research-based approaches to bettering the education, mental health, and work and family life of men. Many of the institute’s policy proposals were outlined in Reeves’s 2022 book Of Boys and Men: Why the Modern Male Is Struggling, Why It Matters, and What to Do About It.'

‘Morning Joe’: Dem Rants About Toxic Masculinity Cost Votes

Mastodon · 10 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From The Left

MSNBC’s Joe Scarborough claimed on Friday’s Morning Joe that Democratic claims around toxic masculinity pushed male voters to Donald Trump. Some of the analysis around the president-elect’s victory this week has focused on how Trump benefited from his improved performance with traditionally Democrat-supporting groups including Black and Latino men. Exit showed Trump picking up 47 percent of Latino men and his standing with young Black men compared with four years ago. “There’s been an awful lot of talk about people who have traditionally voted for Democrats, Black men, Hispanic men.'

NYU professor shares his theory on why young men shifted their votes to Trump

Mastodon · 10 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'NYU professor of marketing Scott Galloway speaks to CNN's Michael Smerconish about how young men's shift toward US President-elect Donald Trump's rhetoric affected the 2024 election results.'

Hold negative views about feminism? Study says it reveals something darker about your personality

Mastodon · 10 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism evokes distinct opinions, perspectives, and beliefs. Environmental and social factors also play a major role in shaping feminist beliefs. However, this sociological concept has major psychological origins. A study published in Personality and Individual Differences examines the Dark Triad, a cluster of malevolent personality traits - narcissism, Machiavellianism, and psychopathy - and their association with feminist beliefs, providing a deeper glimpse into the psychological mechanisms behind feminism.

The research expanded on the Dark Triad, encompassing three negative personality traits that substantially affect feminist opinions. These three traits are narcissism, Machiavellianism, and psychopathy. They are highly toxic, manipulative, vindictive, and exploitative of others.
...
Collectively, these traits make one self-centred, cold, competitive, and domineering. Generally, Dark Triad traits are linked to traditional male gender roles.'

Teacher: Men should wear blue bracelets post-election to indicate they're 'safe' to be around

Mastodon · 12 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Ohio English teacher is on leave after recording herself in what appears to be her classroom suggesting men should wear "blue bracelets or blue safety pins" to identify themselves as "safe" for non-Trump voters.

Danielle Mann (pictured), a 26-year veteran educator at Talawanda High School who also teaches a "Holocaust Resistance" course and is advisor to the school Gay-Straight Alliance, made the recording two days after the election.

Mann "challenges" such men to post their own videos to TikTok and other platforms so people like her could "thank" them and have it "on the record" as to who the "safe" males are.

Such videos also would allow people to know these men "tried to do right by the people of this country."

Mann goes on to claim women are now in "danger" and says that even though she's a white woman, "they will get to [her] eventually."'

‘Shocked’ husband speechless as wife files for divorce after he voted for Trump

Mastodon · 12 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man has said he can’t believe his wife was ready to “throw away our entire life” after filing for divorce over his vote for Donald Trump.

The distraught husband wrote on social media that he has been left without words that the marriage could fall apart over politics - and that the divorce papers could be served so quickly.

"She won’t have a discussion, she says nothing will change her mind Insists she is going to report my parents because they live off of disability but my dad does some cash work auto repair, so now I’m worried for my while family (sic).”

It clearly seems that the relationship has quickly become acrimonious with a vicious argument now over possessions. He continued in his post: “She wants me to buy her out of the house, we have $300k in it plus built a 4-bay garage since we bought it 3 years ago. I can’t afford that.'

Why feminists in the US are shunning marriage, sex and children after Trump's win

Matt · 12 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A radical feminist movement in which women shun marriage, dating and sex with men is taking hold among young liberal Americans in the wake of Donald Trump's election victory.

Originating in South Korea and known as 4B, which means "four nos" in Korean, its tenets are: no dating, no sex with men, no marriage and no children.

Other principles include ditching beauty products and avoiding social interactions with men altogether.

"The women in South Korea are doing it. It's time we join them," said one post on X. "Men will NOT be rewarded, nor have access to our bodies."'

Opinion: Why did so many men vote for Trump? He reminded them they matter.

Mastodon · 13 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years, the phrase "toxic masculinity" took over discussions about men. Any success by men was discounted as a privilege of the patriarchy. The #MeToo movement presumed men guilty until proven innocent.

Men were told not so subtly to be quiet and to fade away. They were more dangerous than a bear in the woods. And less necessary than a fish with a bicycle.

The Harris campaign doubled down on this narrative, focusing on young women to the point of pandering. She hung out on "The View" and "Call Her Daddy," and snubbed Rogan's invitation to speak to the millions of young men who listen to his podcast.

Trump and Vance sent a very different message: Men, you belong. Men, we appreciate you. Men who are masculine, kind, hardworking and family-oriented. You are necessary and you are vital. We will work together to fix what's broken so the people we love are safe and thrive.

It's a message that men wanted and needed to hear. And they rewarded Trump and Vance with their votes.'

Democrats do not know how to talk to young men — and it cost them

Mastodon · 13 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Late in the US presidential election campaign, Democrats discovered a serious problem. Young men, minorities especially, had abandoned the party in droves. An American Compass poll, conducted with YouGov in early October, captured a snapshot: 20 per cent of young non-white men had not yet settled on either Donald Trump or Kamala Harris, and those who had decided were evenly split.

Harris did not know what to say to these defectors. Her coalition was built on an identity politics that presumed an alliance among younger and LGBTQ+ voters, women and people of colour, all sharing the same commitment to a progressive vision of social justice. Somewhat awkwardly, the actual agenda — fighting climate change and forgiving student debt, resisting any restrictions on immigration or abortion — aligned primarily with the interests and priorities of a white, female, college-educated elite. But anyone who looked like a coalition member was expected to vote accordingly.'

Trump won because Democrats keep telling young men they're dangerous and don't matter

Matt · 15 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2020, Joe Biden won young men under 30 by 15 points. In 2024, Donald Trump won them by 13 points. What happened, and what can Democrats do about it? As someone who has been elected three times to the board of directors of the National Organization for Women in New York City, I was worried about dynamics that I felt few Democrats were registering.

I saw these repeatedly as I was researching my book, "The Boy Crisis." I recall interviewing a young man from Mill Valley, California, a city with deep Democratic Party ties. As the interview concluded, he broke down, "I wish I hadn't been born male."'

Women Can Be Sexual, Men Can't

Robber748 · 16 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Nice video here which describes how much of male sexual behavior is potentially criminal while women have few restrictions on their sexual behavior. Very interesting.
Thanks for all you do.
robber748

Northwestern faces complaint after bragging about 50-percent female class

Mastodon · 17 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Northwestern University graduate program recently announced that 50 percent of its new students are women, leading to questions about whether the institution is prioritizing students' gender over academic merit.

Northwestern's Kellogg School of Management also is the subject of a new Title IX complaint that claims several of its programs and scholarships discriminate against men.

This fall, the Kellogg School accepted 524 students into its two-year masters of business administration program, and 50 percent are women, according to a recent article on the school's website.

The specific factors were not listed, but the article mentioned that students' diverse experiences, academic excellence, and extracurricular activities played a part in their acceptance into the Evanston, Illinois university.

The post also listed a few of the demographic groups to which the graduate students belong, including "11% [who] identify as LGBTQ+" and "40% [who are] are international students."

But Adam Kissel, a former U.S. Department of Education official, said Northwestern Kellogg's emphasis on gender parity likely violates federal anti-discrimination law.'

Chemistry lecturer: No need to learn ‘dead white dudes’ names

Mastodon · 17 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'A chemistry lecturer at Kennesaw State University told her students they don’t need to know the proper names of formulas, because they are named after “dead white dudes.”

The Fall of Kamala Harris and the Global Rise of Toxic Feminism

Matt · 18 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The defeat of Kamala Harris has triggered an outpouring of feminist behaviors such as online meltdowns, scornful invectives ("misogynist"), and threats of bodily harm (1). Social media has seen a spike in online videos promoting the use of Aqua Tofana, a tasteless poison that women used in the 17th century to poison their husbands. One Aqua Tofana video registered 1.3 million Likes since November 5. (2)

Hours after the election results were announced, feminists launched a 4B Movement, which advocates for No marriage, No childbirth, No dating, and No sex by women (3). 4B originated in South Korea, which not surprisingly, now has the world's lowest fertility rate, triggering fears of population collapse (4). The 4B Movement is a dystopian recipe for "loneliness, bitterness, and depression," observes writer Conn Carroll (5).'

U.S. women are outpacing men in college completion, including in every major racial and ethnic group

Mastodon · 21 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women between the ages of 25 and 34 continue to be more likely than men in the same age group to have a bachelor's degree. The gender gap in bachelor's degree completion appears in every major racial or ethnic group, though the size of the gap varies widely.

n 1995, young men and women were equally likely to hold a bachelor's degree (25% each). Since then, there has been a growing gap between men and women in college completion.

Today, 47% of U.S. women ages 25 to 34 have a bachelor's degree, compared with 37% of men.

The share of young women with a bachelor's degree has increased by 22 percentage points since 1995, from 25% to 47%. Over the same period, men have seen a smaller increase (12 points, from 25% to 37%).'

UK: Could a ‘Minister for Men and Boys’ tackle incels and toxic masculinity?

Mastodon · 21 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the Conservative Party Conference this year, there was a “Case for a Minister for Men and Boys” panel event. On this panel was Dr Luke Evans, MP for Hinckley and Bosworth – a vocal advocate for positive body image whilst in Parliament. The topics discussed varied from “health, male body image and education, to suicide”.

This is not the first time that a Minister holding this portfolio has been proposed. Earlier in 2024, a petition was launched to appoint a Minister for Men and Boys to “address problems that either exclusively or disproportionately involve men”. The petition received 6,444 signatures and was ultimately closed. Former MP for Don Valley Nick Fletcher discussed the importance of having a Minister in September 2023. Various charities such as SurvivorsUK and Gender Parity UK have pressurised political parties into calling for a Minister in their manifestos.

Mental Health UK argues that ‘toxic masculinity’ promotes the idea that men should be strong, and showing vulnerability is a sign of weakness. As a result, men feel unable to express their emotions properly, and are therefore more likely to turn to drugs, alcohol, recklessness and violence. All this occurs under the backdrop of patriarchal norms that socialise men to be silent about their issues.

A Minister for Men and Boys would need to focus on challenging the patriarchy that creates the male mental health crisis. However, they would also need to address the stigma and barriers that men of minorities also face.'

What is International Men's Day and why is it celebrated?

Mastodon · 21 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today is International Men's Day (IMD). While most of us have heard of and may celebrate International Women's Day (IWD) on March 8 every year, many will not know that there's also the equivalent awareness day for men. The aim is to celebrate male cultural, political and socioeconomic achievements, while also shining a light on the issues that half of the population face.

IMD was created just over a decade ago, in order to give men an equivalent to the century-old IWD, but some are opposed to the idea of a day dedicated to celebrating men, arguing that it in some way waters down the female awareness day, which continues to shine a light on the very real problem of gender inequality. Others, however, fully respect the importance of IMD in addressing the issues facing men that need highlighting.'

The Deception of Feminism

Matt · 21 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Janice F. takes on the myths around early feminism and more in this video.

California Judge Strips Father of Parental Rights, Greenlights Ex-Wife to Proceed with Chemical and Surgical Castration of 12-Year-Old Son

Mastodon · 23 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A California judge has permanently stripped Texas father Jeffrey Younger of all parental rights to his twin sons, James and Jude, granting Younger's ex-wife, Anne Georgulas, the authority to chemically and surgically transition their 12-year-old son, James, against his father's wishes.

Jeffrey Younger was forced to pay his ex-wife $5,000 a month to pay for his son's "transition" and counseling in addition to a $10,000 retainer required by the counselor.

Younger alleges that the Texas family court system, particularly Judge Mary Brown—whom he dubbed "Judge Bloody Mary Brown"—ignored evidence and expert testimony in favor of his son's well-being. Instead, the court granted his ex-wife full custody, allowing her to pursue the medical transition.'

Truckee High School's 'Yo, Bro!' club aims to redefine masculinity through service and responsibility

Mastodon · 25 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At Truckee High School, Katie Jamison Bensley, a teacher of Human Geography, World History, and United States History, has founded a club that aims to challenge traditional definitions of masculinity and provide a healthier, more inclusive space for young men. The "Yo, Bro!" Club is a response to societal pressures that often condition boys to express themselves through aggression and dominance, reinforcing toxic masculinity.
...
The "Yo, Bro!" Club is designed to offer a fresh perspective on masculinity by focusing on community service, academic achievement, and personal responsibility. Members are encouraged to challenge stereotypes and embrace a more empathetic, emotionally expressive version of manhood. The club's mission is clear: redefine masculinity by encouraging boys to focus on their growth as individuals and contributors to their community, rather than conforming to outdated gender norms.'

German Greens Advocate “Women Only” Train Carriages

Mastodon · 25 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Antje Kapek, the transport policy speaker for the Green Party in Berlin, has called for the introduction of train carriages for exclusive use by female passengers. This follows a shocking upsurge in serious sex crimes on trains and buses, with Berlin alone experiencing the equivalent of more than one such assault every day. Frankfurt is heading in a similar direction.

Transport hubs across Germany are becoming less safe. Federal Police recorded 13,543 violent crimes at train stations in the first half of 2024. This has led to the suggestion that a model found in Japan, India, and Indonesia—and the ‘family carriages’ of the Doha Metro—be adopted in Berlin. It involves carriages set aside for female passengers only, whether all day or at peak times (such as 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. in Tokyo).'

I know why women aren’t having children. Men just aren’t good enough

Mastodon · 25 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I’m not shaming mothers or women, it’s completely the opposite: I’m shaming men, especially American ones. In Serbia, men see it as their role both to provide for their kids but also to look after them. But in the United States, you wouldn’t see a man carrying a baby in a sling, that’s unmanly. American men play video games, look at pornography and have given up on the idea of striving to be better, some of them have even given up on working at all. Yet somehow they still expect to get the most beautiful women. They’re not going to school, starting businesses, hustling to be better men and mentors to others. It’s left to women to do the work – we buy the books, have the community and the friends. And then if we have children, we bear the physical, financial and emotional burden.'

Outrage as controversial children's book Our Skin blames 'white men' for introducing idea that thin is beautiful

Mastodon · 25 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Readers have been left outraged after a controversial children's book called Our Skin blamed white men for introducing the idea that thin is beautiful.

The book, published in 2021, was penned by Harlem activist Megan Madison, Brooklynite library worker Jessica Ralli, and Pilipino Isabel Roxas, and has been previously distributed to NYC schools.

Aimed at children aged two to five, the 'inflammatory' book discusses skin tone and racism, claiming: 'A long time ago, way before you were born, a group of white people made up an idea called race'.

But the book also delves into beauty standards and stereotypes, where the authors also seem to point the finger of blame at 'white men'.

Sharing an image of the disturbing page on X/Twitter, one reader was left baffled by its content, warning viewers: 'Books like this exist. And people are reading them to children'.

The page is illustrated with a white woman and black child looking at a photo of a white man's body and reads: 'Before you were born, a group of white men started making up lots of ideas about bodies that weren't true.'

UK: White Ribbon Day 2024 – a call to action for men and boys

Mastodon · 25 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'White Ribbon Day offers a powerful opportunity for men and boys to be allies for women and girls. I myself take an active role in promoting gender equality and challenging behaviours and attitudes that perpetuate violence against women and girls, and today I am calling on the youth justice sector to do the same. It is so important to have positive male role models within these spaces and beyond.

White Ribbon Day also marks the start of the 16 Days of Activism Against Gender-Based Violence, which runs until Human Rights Day on 10 December.

Recent national and international events have highlighted the urgent need to address gender-based violence, alongside persistent misogyny in society, which have created a climate where women and girls often feel unsafe.'

Women call for more male domestic abuse victim support

Matt · 25 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Around 30 women gathered in Belfast on Saturday to highlight concerns about a lack of support for male victims of domestic violence.

The march was made up of women wearing fluorescent pink and included relatives of men who have been the victims.

The twin daughters of west Belfast man Tony Browne, who was murdered by his girlfriend in 2022, were among those who attended.

Bobbi-Leigh and Shannon McIlwaine say there “isn’t enough support services for men” who are going through domestic abuse relationships.'

Wife allegedly dismembered husband with drop saw to escape abusive marriage

Matt · 28 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Look, an "abused woman" was forced to defend herself with a chain-saw. Excerpt:

'A woman allegedly murdered her husband to escape an abusive marriage, gaining control of certain finances before killing and dismembering him with a drop saw, then placing his remains in up to 30 plastic bags which were dumped across south-west Sydney, a court has heard.

Nirmeen Noufl, 53, was supported by a dozen family members and friends as she was refused Supreme Court bail on Thursday morning over the alleged murder of 62-year-old Mamdouh “Emad” Noufl. Nirmeen Noufl is fighting the charges.'

UK: Fire service worker loses tribunal case over mention of handbag

Matt · 29 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'West Yorkshire Fire and Rescue service employee Tayba Amber lost a number of claims against the organisation after claiming Martin McCarthy was a 'sexual predator'.

Miss Amber worked as an information governance assistant at the fire service's HQ before going off sick from stress in March 2022.

West Yorkshire Fire and Rescue service employee Tayba Amber lost a number of claims against the organisation after claiming Martin McCarthy was a 'sexual predator'.

Miss Amber worked as an information governance assistant at the fire service's HQ before going off sick from stress in March 2022.'

The Hot New Job for Men: Nursing

Matt · 30 November 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of men in the U.S. with the job of registered nurse has nearly tripled since the early 2000s. Many come to the field after working in the military or in jobs, such as paramedics or firefighters, that exposed them to the work of nurses.
...
Many of the manufacturing jobs that are being moved overseas, replaced by automation or phased out of the American economy were mostly filled by men. As a result, other occupations traditionally dominated by women are now gaining a larger share of men, including elementary and middle-school teachers and customer-service representatives.'

Young men struggling with ‘toxic masculinity’ could face greater mental health risks, says new study

Mastodon · 1 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Swiss study found that men who identify with traditional male norms strongly are at a higher risk of suicide. Globally men already have a higher suicide rate than women, but this study further delves into what kind of men particularly are more at risk. Emulating the traditional muscular role intensively is detrimental and takes a mental toll, driving towards suicide.

...

The study from the University of Zurich elaborated on how traditional gender norms emphasizing strength, independence, and emotional control create dangerous psychological strain. These expectations make it harder for men to seek help and express vulnerability, leading to bottled-up emotions that build over time. The dissociation from expressing feelings to appear ‘manly’ is both stressful and emotionally exhausting. Fearing that sharing vulnerabilities will make them seem ‘weak’ or less masculine, many men try to handle everything on their own, further exacerbating their mental health challenges.'

Why can't a woman be more like a man? Because patriarchy persists in the US

Mastodon · 1 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although today a woman can be more like a man, and a man can be more like a woman, anti-female hatred, contempt and prejudice persists.

Patriarchy, originating with the advent of agriculture, is a 10,000-year-old social system of society and government in which the father or eldest male is head of the family. Men hold primary power and predominate in roles of political leadership, moral authority, social privilege and control of property. Women are largely excluded.

It is different from sexism, which is prejudice and discrimination based on a person's sex or gender. However, patriarchy has been a breeding ground for sexism.

To suggest solutions, we must first acknowledge the advantages and disadvantages of patriarchy and the gains and losses when we give it up. It will then be possible to change from patriarchal attitudes and behaviors to egalitarian and humanistic attitudes and behaviors.

That would require increasing privilege and power for women in the traditionally male domains of corporation, military and government, and increasing privilege and responsibility for men in traditionally female domains of family and household.'

Discussion of elimination of permanent alimony in Florida

Matt · 1 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Levi Nichs discusses the effects of the elimination of permanent alimony in Florida.

Young men leaving traditional churches for ‘masculine’ Orthodox Christianity in droves

Matt · 3 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Interesting development. Excerpt:

'So Christenson began exploring other denominations in college and landed on perhaps the most traditional of all: Orthodox Christianity. In 2022, at the age of 25, he converted.

“It seems to me like the mainline denominations are hemorrhaging people,” he said. “If you still are serious about being a Christian now that there isn’t really as much social status tied up in it, and you want something that has some heft to it, there’s more of an awareness of Orthodoxy than there used to be.”

...

Christenson’s story isn’t just anecdotal. As more and more Protestant churches unfurl Pride flags and Black Lives Matter banners in front of their gates, young men are trending toward more traditional forms of worship.

A survey of Orthodox churches around the country found that parishes saw a 78% increase in converts in 2022, compared with pre-pandemic levels in 2019. And while historically men and women converted in equal numbers, vastly more men have joined the church since 2020.

Father Josiah Trenham has led Saint Andrew’s Orthodox Church in Riverside, California, for nearly three decades — and he’s noticed a swift jump in interest: “The last four to five years have been a massive uptick. It’s showing no sign of tapering off. If anything, it’s increasing still … It’s happening massively in untold numbers all over the country.”'

On the effects of the feminization of academia

Matt · 4 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'The inclusion of women in higher education is a great achievement for Western liberal societies. How is this changing academic culture?

An essay by behavioural scientists Bo Winegard and Cory Clark.'

Never Before Have So Many Sailors Been Abandoned at Sea

Matt · 6 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If these were women, there'd be massive help lent to them. In fact the situation never would have gotten this bad. Excerpt:

'The crew of the Grand Sunny cargo ship has been stuck at sea for a year, unpaid and often hungry, after the vessel's mysterious owner stopped paying the bills.

The fate of the 11 men on board the Grand Sunny off the coast of China is increasingly common in the global shipping industry. The vessel appears to have been involved in sanctions-dodging trade, transporting oil products in the South China Sea, according to Hong Kong maritime officials.'

Glamorous female lawmaker, 30, 'bullied male aide into sex then made him run her errands'

Matt · 6 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Innocent til proven guilty but one to watch. "But women don't do these kinds of things!" Really? Excerpt:

'A glamorous Washington state lawmaker bullied a male aide into sex, then made him run her errands and tried to fire him when he reported her, a lawsuit claims.

Emily Clouse, 30, is said to have begun a 'mutually consensual dating relationship' with the unnamed man after being elected as a commissioner in Thurston County, which includes the state's capital of Olympia.

But the aide alleges he felt unable to reject Clouse's advances because of the power she held over him and says he found the romance 'increasingly unwelcome.''

Michigan court upholds light sentence for woman who killed dad in dispute over ride

Matt · 7 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Need I comment? Excerpt:

'The Michigan Court of Appeals declined to overturn a light jail sentence for a young woman who killed her father by burning him with a dangerous powder when he couldn't drive her to a hair appointment before her 18th birthday party.

Megan Imirowicz, now 21, was sentenced to a year in jail in 2023. She was immediately released because she had already spent roughly 17 months in custody before trial and while awaiting her punishment.

Sentencing guidelines called for a minimum term of slightly more than four years in prison. But Oakland County Judge Victoria Valentine gave Imirowicz a break, noting her age, lack of maturity and likelihood of rehabilitation. Prosecutors objected.'

Aussie Men Under Attack

Matt · 8 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'This is an important video from a group in Australia called the “Other Side.“ They do an excellent job in looking at the reality that men have been under attack. The video has a professional feel to it and is a good bet to influence people who might be new to these issues. Share it!'

Jefferson City Organization to Conduct "Healthy Masculinity Project"

Mastodon · 8 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anxiety and Depression Association of America defines toxic masculinity as "the way men are culturally trained and socially pressured to behave" with the three tenants of "toughness", "anti-femininity", and "power."

Two organizations have collaborated to curate a program that prevents this phenomenon in young boys.

A Call to Men is a national organization that promotes healthy behaviors among men of all backgrounds.

This organization has served several male-dominated spaces teaching them the same message.'

It may seem bizarre, but many women (including me) are captivated by the 'hot assassin', writes Clara Gaspar

Mastodon · 11 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Handsome, Ivy-League educated, from a well-heeled family – oh, and did I mention the rippling six pack?

On paper, Luigi Mangione is the sort of man any sane young woman might dream of.

There's a rather large problem, however: the smouldering Italian American now stands charged with killing the CEO of UnitedHealthcare, 50-year-old Brian Thompson, in New York last Wednesday.

I'll admit, I was captivated as soon as the first CCTV images of Mangione were released to the public just hours after the murder.

Various cameras captured him apparently pulling off his meticulously planned operation: approaching Thompson outside a Manhattan hotel, executing the hit and vanishing on an electric bike.

It was like a scene from a Christopher Nolan thriller: cinematic, chilling – and darkly compelling.'

CLARA GASPAR: After the 'Monster of Avignon' case and the claims against P Diddy and Fayed, is it any wonder that so many women my age are growing up genuinely terrified of men?

Why men join the manosphere

Mastodon · 11 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The obsession with ‘toxic masculinity’ shows no sign of abating. As reported this weekend, Bridget Phillipson, the education secretary, has warned of ‘the misogyny increasingly gripping our schools’.

In response to this threat, the government is to issue guidance for teachers to look out for signs in the classroom of ‘incel culture’ stemming from the ‘manosphere’. Teachers of pupils aged over 14 are to be told to look for clues that boys were being drawn into aggressive misogyny, behaviour that could lead to violence and sexual abuse. They are to be on guard for rhetoric indicating teenage boys are being radicalised into ‘hating women’.

A preferable route would be to stop teaching boys to hate themselves in the first place. This is the source of so much discontent among teenage boys, the reason why so many are becoming dysfunctional to begin with, and the reason why many take refuge in the manosphere.

A good first step would be to cease the narrative of ‘toxic masculinity’.'

#NotAllMen, Symptoms Of Male Defensiveness In The Feminist Era

Mastodon · 11 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A reader once told me he's fed up with men being blamed for everything: "We do a lot of things wrong, we need to improve. But it's unbearable to be singled out for everything and beaten down just for being men. It seems there's no escape."

This perception is a reality for many men who feel attacked and, more or less consciously, guilty. What do we do about it? Can we address the situation to achieve a positive reaction? Feeling cornered isn't the best if we expect reflection and change, nor does it encourage active participation.

Saying "men never do anything at home" or "they are rapists" can be meant to provoke, intentionally or not, but the undesirable reaction is rejection from men and even from other women who feel uncomfortable when they look at the men in their lives (fathers, sons, brothers, friends, partners).

This lays the groundwork for the unfortunate #NotAllMen narrative, which is a form of victimization through reductionist and individualistic differentiation that diverts conversation, invalidates experiences, and questions the universality of harassment and violence faced by many women.'

Eyewitnesses Say Nancy Mace Called For Man's Arrest After He Shook Her Hand

Matt · 12 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Utter B.S. Excerpt:

'Eyewitnesses who watched the interaction between Representative Nancy Mace and James McIntyre are questioning the congresswoman's claims about being assaulted, describing instead a scene where McIntyre was just shaking her hand.

McIntyre, a 33-year-old from Chicago, was arrested by U.S. Capitol Police on Tuesday evening at an event for foster children and charged with assaulting a government official. Authorities said that the suspect was tracked down after Mace's office reported an incident in the Rayburn House Office Building.

"I was physically accosted at the Capitol tonight by a pro-tr*ns man. One new brace for my wrist and some ice for my arm and it'll heal just fine," Mace wrote on X, formerly Twitter, on Tuesday. "The Capitol police arrested the guy. Your tr*ns violence and threats on my life will only make me double down."

But two eyewitness describe a different scene.'

Crystal Mangum confesses to lying about being raped by Duke lacrosse players in 2006

Mastodon · 13 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former stripper and current murder convict Crystal Mangum confessed to lying about being raped by Duke Lacrosse players in an interview on the independent media outlet "Let's Talk With Kat" on Thursday.

"I testified falsely against them by saying that they raped me when they didn't and that was wrong, and I betrayed the trust of a lot of other people who believed in me," Mangum said. "[I] made up a story that wasn't true because I wanted validation from people and not from God."

Mangum, who is serving a prison sentence for murdering her boyfriend, falsely accused three Duke players of raping her while she was performing at a team party in March 2006. The players she accused were arrested, igniting a national controversy and conversations about racism. The allegations even resulted in the team having to cancel a game against Georgetown.'

Scholarship programs slapped with lawsuits for alleged discrimination against White men

Mastodon · 13 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two scholarship programs for "underrepresented" minorities are being slapped with lawsuits for allegedly discriminating against White people.

The nonprofit organization Do No Harm (DNH) is challenging the Society of Military Orthopaedic Surgeons' (SOMOS) E. Anthony Rankin Scholarship Program on behalf of a DNH member who said he could not continue with the application process because he is a White male.

The program, which is "meant for underrepresented medical students," matches students with a "U.S. Military host" at one of two medical centers, the complaint states. The program spans four weeks, during when students can receive up to $12,000 "to cover ‘travel, housing, and daily per diem for the duration’ of their time hosted by the military," the filing reads, quoting the program's website description.'

150 Feminist Lies and Exaggerations

Matt · 13 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In nearly every crusade feminists have waged, there have been both lies and exaggerations. They have consistently stretched the truth and, in many cases, outright fabricated claims to push society toward a female supremacist agenda.

As I began compiling a list of the many lies told by feminism over the years, I quickly became overwhelmed. There were so many that it was frustrating to organize them all. Then I had an idea: "I wonder what AI would say about this?" Admittedly, I assumed AI would simply repeat the standard “women good“ party line, but I decided to ask anyway. My question was straightforward: "Can you give me a list of feminist lies or exaggerations? Include the lie as the first part, followed by the facts that refute it."

When I plugged in that question, to my surprise, AI generated 20 responses almost immediately. Then it asked, "Do you want more?" Naturally, I said, "Hell yes!" More responses followed. The AI then asked, "Do you want to specify a particular topic?" Intrigued, I said, "Domestic violence." From there, it generated 10 more responses specific to that issue. This continued until I had amassed over 150 responses, spanning various topics.'

Police ask for compassion for Wisconsin shooter

Matt · 17 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No one asks for compassion for male shooters who also kill themselves after murdering others, do they? Excerpt:

'A law enforcement official briefed on the situation told CNN the shooter was a 17-yearo-old female.

'We know that the suspect shooter was a teenage student who attended the school,' Madison Police Chief Shon Barnes said.

However, police are not releasing the age or gender of the suspected shooter at this time.

'Again, as difficult as today is, that's still someone's child that's gone, that's still someone that has to deal with what happened today. And so we want to make sure that we can ensure as much cooperation as we can,' he said.'

Suspect in Madison school shooting motivated by misandry

Mastodon · 17 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Online friends of Rupnow identified an X account belonging to her, in which a photo was posted just minutes before the shooting. Police said they responded to the school shortly before 11 am local time, and a photo was posted to the account at 10:45 am showing a person in a bathroom stall showing the "OK" hand symbol.

An account on X called @PETR0GRAD claimed to have access to a Discord chat where Rupnow was detailing her mindset and plans. Later, it was suggested that this was part of an earlier draft of a manifesto.

The excerpt stated, "women are the only hope for this wretched world. But even women have been brainwashed by moids for too long theyve internalized the patriarchy and turned on each other, always begging for for male approval and validation. Its disgusting. I realize the truth men are iredeemable. radfem hitler was is f*cking vindicated now. They cant be reformed or redeemed. Theyre a f*cking scourge upon the earth. The only solution is to total exterminate them and every foid who worships these f*cking parasites. Every single male must be wiped out, from babies to the elderly. Only then can women be free to create a new world. ill be a pioneer, ill be the first to take the first step. i dont care if theyr fathers, brothers, husbands, sons, teachers, police, and especially n*ggers or politicians. ive been craving to kill them all. This is my mission. only when their parasitic sludge has been expunged from this earth is when Then the world will be clean and women can start over. It's the only way. in aproximatety 10 mintue si should be dead, its strange but it feels good."'

DNC Candidate David Hogg Blasts Dems For Dismissing His ‘Concerns’ About Party’s Appeal To Young Men: ‘Shut Down By Consultants’

Mastodon · 18 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'David Hogg plans to fire consultants who helped lead the Democratic Party down their “path of failure” if he wins his recently announced bid to become Democratic National Committee vice chairperson.

Hogg, a 24-year-old gun control advocate who survived the 2018 Stoneman Douglas High School shooting, joined MSNBC’s Chris Jansing on Tuesday after announcing his candidacy for a leadership position in the DNC. The activist revealed that part of his motivation was frustration with the Democratic Party, especially after he was shut down repeatedly during the 2024 presidential election for voicing concerns about the party’s outreach to young people, specifically men.'

What happens when climate denialism and misogyny intersect? Enter: ‘petro-masculinity’

Mastodon · 19 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cara Daggett, an associate professor of political science at Virginia Tech University, coined the term “petro-masculinty” in a paper she published in 2018. She used the term to describe the rise of authoritarian movements in the Western hemisphere and how they were being shaped by climate change denialism and misogyny in an appeal to men who felt they were being left behind by society.

...

No longer just an energy source, fossil fuels have become wrapped up in the American identity, says Daggett. For conservative men in particular, that’s essential to a return to male-governed households and society, not only at the expense of women, Daggett says, but also the environment.'

What South Korea's 'Queen of 4B' Wants Americans to Know

Mastodon · 19 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ji Yeon, who also goes by her American name Canti, is a 27-year-old YouTuber and a graduate student in media and gender studies based in Seoul. American women might know her as the "Queen of 4B," referring to the South Korean movement aimed at creating a world without men. 4B — shorthand for four Korean words that all start with bi-, or "no": bisekseu (no sex), biyeonae (no dating), bihon (no marriage), and bichulsan (no childbearing) with men — is both an ideological stance and a lifestyle, and its ideas went viral in the U.S. in the weeks following the reelection of Donald Trump. Ji Yeon has been practicing 4B since 2018, which has since given her, she says, a true sense of liberation. "I realized, 'Oh, I can just be myself. I don't have to conform to what society deems acceptable.'" Since April of this year, she has been corresponding with and hosting social-media ask-me-anythings about the movement with mostly American audiences. Last week, we had a long talk about 4B's rise in America and the power of global feminist solidarity.'

More Men Are Addicted to the ‘Crack Cocaine’ of the Stock Market

Matt · 20 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If you see yourself in this article, please reach out to GA. Excerpt:

'A new type of addict is showing up at Gamblers Anonymous meetings across the country: investors hooked on the market’s riskiest trades.

At Gamblers Anonymous in the Murray Hill neighborhood of Manhattan, one man called options “the crack cocaine” of the stock market. Another said he faced hundreds of thousands of dollars in trading losses after borrowing from a loan shark to double down on stocks. And one young man brought his mom and girlfriend to celebrate one year since his last bet.

They were among a group of about 60 people, almost all men, who sat in rows of metal folding chairs in a crowded church basement that evening. Some shared their struggle with addiction—not on sports apps or at Las Vegas casinos—but using brokerage apps like Robinhood.'

Married teacher, 32, is accused of raping boy, 11

Matt · 21 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A married schoolteacher is accused of grooming an 11-year-old boy with nude photos and $700 until they had sex on her bed.

Ashley Elizabeth Bardfield, 32, was arrested on Wednesday night in Mt Zion, Illinois, after the boy helped police with a sting operation.

The sixth-grade substitute teacher at Decatur Public Schools District was recorded telling the boy they could ‘do it again’ and she couldn’t get pregnant.

Bardfield was reported to police after the boy’s mother noticed him ‘acting differently’ after spending the night at the teacher’s home on March 29-30.'

Sen. John Fetterman says fellow Democrats lost male voters to Trump by ‘insulting’ them, being ‘condescending’

Mastodon · 22 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pennsylvania Sen. John Fetterman bluntly told his fellow Democrats they lost male voters to President-elect Donald Trump because they were “condescending” and “insulting.”

“It was clear [in 2016] that people were voting for Trump. And the Democrats’ response was, ‘Aren’t they smart enough to realize they’re voting against their interests?’ And that’s insulting, and that’s, I mean, that’s, that’s just not helpful,” the 55-year-old told the New York Times Thursday.

“It’s condescending. And if anything, that reinforces that kind of stereotype. Telling them that ‘I know better than you do,’ that’s not helpful.”'

Justifying Women's Violence "Kill all Men"

Matt · 23 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Apparently the recent Wisconsin female school shooter, Samantha Rupnow was known to spew hatred towards men and to believe that all men needed to be killed in order for women to be free to create a new world. I don't think she offered an explanation of where the sperm might come from in order continue propagating this paradise, but maybe she just didn't think that far ahead? The media is staying fairly quiet about this. Imagine the chaos that would ensue if a male mass shooter openly stated that he wanted to kill all women. You would never hear the end of it.

Where did this young woman get this sort of stance? You need look no further than the radical feminists who have been encouraging this sort of thing for some time. Valerie Solanas and her Scum Manifesto are an extreme version of this, but there are many others. The depersonalization of men has been one of the hallmarks of not just radical feminism, but also mainstream feminism. One example of that is the "I bathe in male tears" mantra that is so prevalent and ubiquitous. People don't think much of that phrase, but what would they think if someone said they bathe in Black tears, and wore t-shirts making that claim in public? What would the public think? They would quickly be labelled as dangerous racists. It's easy to see the hatred when the group is almost anyone other than men. This sort of thing is diminishing the humanity of men. And there are many other ways that men's humanity has been ignored or worse. The feminist refusal to allow men into treatment centers as victims of domestic violence is another example, or issues around reproductive rights or circumcision. Men are portrayed as not needing special care, of actually being less than human. This, along with men's already existing disposability and gynocentric disadvantage, degrades men and prepares the ground for the more radical views of simply killing men. The explanation for this hatred is of course, that they deserve it. The "Battered Woman Syndrome" is a tragic example of this.'

The Red Pill: A Feminist's Journey into the Men's Rights Movement

Matt · 23 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Register for this showing event over Zoom here.

Are Young Men Really Becoming More Sexist?

Mastodon · 24 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's conventional wisdom that young people will be more progressive than their forebears. But although young people can often be counted upon to be more comfortable with risk and radicalism, that doesn't mean they will always express that through left-leaning politics.

Young men may have helped hand President-Elect Donald Trump his victory, fueling the narrative about a growing gender gap among young voters. But this is not just an American trend. In South Korea, young men have been radicalized against feminism, opening up a large gender gap; in Poland, gender emerged "as a significant factor … with young men showing a strong preference" for the far-right political alliance; and in Belgium, the anti-immigrant and separatist Vlaams Belang party received significantly more support from young men than young women.'

Study blames 'sexism' for causing dementia in women

Mastodon · 24 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are disproportionately more likely to get Alzheimer's than men, which has long been attributed to living longer and genetic differences.

But now, a new study from Columbia University Irving Medical Center has blamed a new cause: sexism.

Researcher, who reviewed data on more than 21,000 people, said that inequality in access to resources and power was causing damaging changes in women's brains that leads to dementia.

They found that women in America's 'most sexist' states had nine extra years of cognitive decline compared to their peers in the country's least sexist states.

Dr Justina Avila-Rieger, an associate scientist who lead the study, said: 'Our findings suggest that addressing social inequities may be a powerful way to lower the burden of Alzheimer's among women.

'What we... know is that structural inequalities shape individual health outcomes by creating barriers to health-enhancing opportunities and resources.

'Eventually, these exposures produce disparities in chronic physical health conditions that directly influence brain health, the onset of cognitive impairment and, ultimately, dementia."

If Men Are in Trouble, What Is the Cause?

Mastodon · 24 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why do boys disproportionately fall into the bottom tenth?

Fascinatingly, Autor and his colleagues found that boys suffered much more than girls from “adverse child-rearing conditions” and “that less favorable home environments differentially raise the prevalence of adverse outcomes among boys relative to girls.”

The consequences?

“Because these adverse outcomes are determinative of high school dropout rates,” they wrote, “this differential sensitivity could help explain the large gender gap in dropping out.”'

India: ER prosecutes 304 men for travelling in women-only train coaches

Mastodon · 24 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Railway Protection Force (RPF) prosecuted 304 men for travelling in women-only train coaches in the Eastern Railway zone in a six-day drive as part of 'Operation Mahila Suraksha', an official said on Tuesday.

The initiative, spearheaded by the RPF, focuses on protecting women passengers and ensuring their right to travel without fear or intimidation, he said.

The ER official said that between December 15 and 20, an intensive drive across Howrah, Sealdah, Malda and Asansol divisions of Eastern Railway led to the apprehension and prosecution of 304 men under the provisions of the Railway Act for unauthorised travel in women-only coaches.'

Healey executive order seeks more construction jobs for women

Mastodon · 24 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gov. Maura Healey on Monday signed an executive order aimed at boosting women's employment in the construction industry, and she celebrated the effort with what could be one of her final public collaborations with the Biden administration.

The order (Executive Order 638) will direct state agencies issuing construction contracts to "do it in a way that we know creates better access to jobs for women and minorities," Healey said at the event inside Sheet Metal Workers Local 17's Training Center.

That will translate to utilizing apprenticeship programs that boost women and people of color, the governor said, along with safety and anti-harassment training programs and supportive services like child care.

The order created a new body -- the "Diverse and Equitable Construction Workforce Participation Committee" -- which Healey said would coordinate the effort across state agencies and monitor projects over $35 million.'

"Shatter the Glass of Modernity"

Matt · 28 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Whatifalthist takes on modernity and feminism, among other things, in this podcast on YT.

Welcome to the femosphere

Matt · 30 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is a term used by Dr Jilly Kay, an expert in feminist media and cultural studies at Loughborough University, in a paper published earlier this year. Kay has been researching a reactionary turn among young women, and how a backlash against mainstream feminism has created new spaces online. In the femosphere, instead of “incels” – male involuntary celibates – there are “femcels”, and instead of pickup artists there are female dating strategists and so-called “dark feminine” influencers who encourage women to find men to support them financially.

Most corners of the femosphere explicitly describe themselves as feminist, so Kay said she was surprised to see that their values seemed conservative, and their philosophy mostly anti-gender equality.

She said: “The logic that they adhere to is that men and women are fundamentally different.”'

James Bond Hopeful James Norton Says Men Should Atone For “Patriarchal Crimes Of The Past”

Mastodon · 30 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'James Norton, the Happy Valley star who has been heavily linked to James Bond, thinks men should be proactive when confronting the MeToo movement.

Norton told the Radio Times magazine that the “modern man” was living in a time where there was an “attempt to rebalance the patriarchal crimes of the past.”

He argued that some men wrongly think they should be “passive” about misconduct when they should actually step up in a post-MeToo world.

“What interested me was the question of what it is to be a modern man, post-MeToo, with the attempt to rebalance the patriarchal crimes of the past,” he said.

“With a lot of men, there’s a misconception that what we should be doing is making space, stepping back and almost becoming passive.”

Norton said this is a realization that dawns on his character Pete, who decides he must confront the bullying and controlling character of Miles (James McArdle). He added: “You have to be proactive and, sometimes, confrontational.”'

Leveraging and Weaponizing Gynocentrism

Matt · 31 December 2024 · Archived copy · Original

From July but it's definitely a good ICYMI post. Article here. Excerpt:

'To understand this process, it's essential to examine how men are influenced by gynocentrism. Testosterone drives men to seek status, which is crucial in attracting women as mates. Higher status means more reproductive choices. Because of this, men strive to impress women to earn their admiration, working hard to prove their high status. Men seek women's approval and avoid their disapproval, as both impact their perceived status. This is driven by biological imperatives.

Equally significant is the social conditioning over thousands of years, where men are taught to prioritize providing for and protecting women. From a young age, cultural norms emphasize respecting and supporting women, reinforcing men's role as providers and protectors. These biological and social factors combine, creating a powerful, instinctual drive in men to support, protect, and demonstrate their value as capable problem-solvers and valuable assets to women.'

A ‘Ladies’ Night’ lawsuit sent a family-owned restaurant out of business

Matt · 1 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

This article is gynocentrism and nymphotropism in action. The editorial bias is glaring to anyone with eyes to see. Excerpt:

'Historically, “Ladies’ Nights” have been great for business.

The discounted drinks or meals tend to draw a large crowd of women, which in turn tends to draw more men — which then leads to packed bars and increased sales for the business.

But a family-run restaurant in the San Francisco Bay Area is shutting down this week because it can’t afford to operate after it settled a “Ladies’ Night” discrimination lawsuit, CNN affiliate KGO reported last week. John Marquez, the chef and owner of Lima Restaurant in Concord, told the outlet that it hasn’t been able to bounce back after settling a lawsuit over a promotion that discounted drinks for women.

It’s not the first small business to be sued over a Ladies’ Night promotion due to technicalities in discrimination laws in certain states. The Unruh Civil Rights Act, a California law that dates back to 1959, says businesses can’t discriminate against religion, race and gender. A slew of lawsuits have since followed, and that has meant a sharp drop in the promotion.'

False rape allegations like the Duke scandal aren’t common enough to justify withholding support from victims, advocates say

Mastodon · 5 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“This was a really damaging instance that hurt those boys’ lives and impacted them for decades, so I don’t want to downplay how tragic it is from that perspective, but I do hope that people put it into context of this is far from the norm,” says Scott Berkowitz, president of non-profit anti-sexual violence organization Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN).

“For every false report, there is a far greater number of reports both that are truthful and people who experienced rape who never reported. That’s a much bigger national problem.”

A study published by the journal Violence Against Women in 2010 found that false allegations of sexual assault range from between 2% to 10% of assaults reported. A majority of sexual assaults, an estimated 63%, are never reported to the police, according to the National Sexual Violence Resource Center.'

Daphne Taziki's murder came after gunman's wife made false rape allegation, prosecutor says

Mastodon · 5 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Baldwin County Assistant District Attorney Patrick Doggett told jurors during his opening statement that they will hear testimony that Lofton's wife, who worked at the restaurant, told her husband about the supposed rape and that she went as far as using a second cell phone to manufacture an incriminating text message string purporting to be from Mallette.

Doggett said Lofton the day before had called the Daphne Police Department's non-emergency line to report the rape but that the woman – even after the shooting – was vague about the details of the allegations and uncooperative.

On the phone call to police, Doggett said, the defendant said he might have to handle it if they could not. The prosecutor said other evidence, including surveillance video, puts Lofton on the scene.

Defense attorney Trey Koons to told jurors during his opening statement that the case is not as "black and white" as prosecutors make it out to be. He directed the blame at his client's wife.

"I think we got two good guys," he said. "I think we have one evil woman. … She manufactured the most vile and terrible text messages and showed them to Travis."'

More 'structural sexism' linked to dementia and yet more diseases

Mastodon · 5 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Diabetes, age, genetics, heart problems — all these factors have been linked to an increased risk of Alzheimer's disease and related dementias.

Structural sexism could also contribute to the deadly disease, per a new study.

The concept refers to sweeping trends — such as unequal pay at work, less workplace participation, a lack of representation in state legislature and laws that limit reproductive freedoms — that largely impact women in a negative way.

Women born in states with higher levels of structural sexism experienced the equivalent of nine years of cognitive aging. Researchers — the study was done by Columbia University, Duke University School of Medicine, Trinity College Dublin and University of California, San Francisco, scientists — think these findings can at least partially explain why women are more likely than men to suffer from Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia. Black women are particularly hard hit.'

UK: HMRC worker who branded her female boss 'sexist' because she wanted a granddaughter to buy pink dresses for loses unfair dismissal claim

Mastodon · 5 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A HMRC worker who branded her female boss 'sexist' when she said in a meeting that she wanted a granddaughter so she could buy 'pink dresses' has lost a discrimination claim, an employment tribunal heard.

Rachel Gladstone demanded that team leader Sandra Edwards apologise, asking that she 'keep the overt spoilt pink baby girl princess sexism for your private and family life'.

Ms Gladstone added that it was a 'triggering' subject for her as she had spent time while raising her own daughter to counteract the 'pink is for girls' culture, which she described as 'mildly damaging when taken to extremes'.

The comments - made in a series of emails - led bosses to launch disciplinary proceedings against admin worker Ms Gladstone, then 52, over her behaviour at work for which she received a written warning.

This prompted her to resign and to sue HMRC for unfair constructive dismissal and disability discrimination.

However, her claims were all dismissed by the tribunal which concluded that she had been treated fairly.'

Sexism Allegations Erupt Once Again as Dallas Wings Appoint 5th Male WNBA Head Coach Chris Koclanes

Mastodon · 5 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Dallas Wings have stirred controversy once more with the appointment of Chris Koclanes as their new head coach. As the fifth male to hold this position in a league championing women's sports, Koclanes' hiring has once again sparked heated discussions about sexism in the WNBA. The move has ignited fan backlash, with many questioning the league's commitment to empowering women, given the increasing number of men at the helm of WNBA teams.

According to a recent Instagram post by the WNBA, the @DallasWings announced Koclanes as their new head coach. Koclanes, who is currently an assistant coach for the USC Trojans, brings a wealth of experience, having served as an assistant coach in the WNBA and Division I women's basketball.

One fan summed up the general sentiment succinctly, "Here come all the men." This comment reflects a growing frustration over the trend of hiring male coaches in a league that was founded to showcase the talents of women.

Nevertheless, the Dallas Wings remain firm in their choice. Executive Vice President and General Manager Curt Miller praised Koclanes for his leadership qualities, emphasizing his ability to foster connections with players. "He is a servant leader who places a high value on connection, collaboration, and a positive and consistent communication style with all those he coaches," Miller stated.'

Sweden's Decline: The Consequences of Feminist Leadership

Matt · 5 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This video examines the damage caused by feminists in positions of national power in Sweden. The title, Cancel Nation: How Well-Meaning Women and Fake Feminists Brought Down the Most Liberal Nation, appears to be written by someone attempting to excuse or rationalize the pathological decisions of Sweden's feminized legislators. However, the content speaks for itself.

The comments section of the video is particularly revealing. Here's one from a Swedish man who has had enough:
...
Many commenters noted that these were not "fake" feminists but the genuine variety. I agree. This video offers a stark look at the consequences of allowing feminist ideologies to dominate national policy. We must work to limit feminist and woke influence and call it out whenever possible.'

Hoe-flation grips China

Matt · 8 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video on the subject here. Looks like the world's oldest profession has completely colonized the notion of marriage, which tried in any case to support the idea of sincerity of emotional attachment. Not anymore!

UK: School's video hopes to combat toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 9 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A video encouraging men and boys to be open with their emotions has been created by students and staff at a school.

The film, made at Clevedon School in North Somerset, warns against toxic masculinity in society, a term that refers to a set of behaviours and attitudes that can be damaging to mental health.

"From a young age, boys are taught that to cry is weakness; to be vulnerable is shameful; to express their emotions other than anger is to lose their masculinity," staff say in the video.'

Irish anti-bullying center launches school guide to combat toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 9 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The guide, which was launched during a webinar event in November, provides guidance to schools, teachers and parents/guardians on how to address the impact of online masculinity influencers and associated content on children and young people, particularly teenage boys.

Dr Darragh McCashin and Dr Catherine Baker from Dublin City University collaborated with Dr Fiona O'Rourke on the new guide.

The guidance in the report covers three main sections. It begins with introductory information about online masculinity influencers who promote harmful ideologies, attitudes and behaviours and the ‘ecosystem’ that underpins and supports them along with the impact they are having on children and young people from all gendered backgrounds.'

"Toxic male technique" uses poison semen to control insects

Mastodon · 9 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scientists have found a way to use toxic masculinity for good. Australian researchers have successfully genetically engineered insect semen to be poisonous, reducing the number of female insects able to breed. A new technique inserts proteins from spider and sea anemone venom into the reproductive system of fruit flies, poisoning the female during mating.'

Female LA Firefighter Blames Victims if She Lacks Skills and Muscle to Save Them

Mastodon · 10 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That's a quote from the Los Angeles Fire Department's Assistant Chief in a recently unearthed promo video. With the ongoing wildfires in California, many are questioning if firefighters are up to the job. This video confirms some of them are not. Are you willing to die for DEI?

"Is she strong enough to do this? You couldn't carry my husband out of a fire. He got himself in the wrong place if I have to carry him out of a fire."

It's disturbing to think a firefighter would blame a victim for being in danger. But, that's what happens in the video. The firefighter says it's the victim's fault if she lacks the strength or skills to save them.'

LAFD Deputy Chief Faces Backlash for Past Remarks on Fire Victims

Mastodon · 10 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Los Angeles Fire Department Deputy (LAFD) Chief Kristine Larson is facing widespread criticism online after comments surfaced in which she appeared to shift blame onto fire victims for their circumstances.

Speaking as part of a video that aired during a commercial break for the FOX show 9-1-1 about firefighter capabilities, Larson said, "Am I able to carry your husband out of a fire? He got himself in the wrong place if I have to carry him out."

Her remarks, captured in a resurfaced clip now circulating widely on social media, have sparked outrage among community members and safety advocates, who view them as lacking empathy for victims of fires and emergencies. The comments were originally shared by the right-wing account @EndWokeness on X, formerly Twitter, garnering millions of views and heated debate.
The backlash is compounded by Larson's comments emphasizing the importance of firefighters reflecting the communities they serve.

"You want to see somebody that responds to your house, your emergency, whether it's a medical call or a fire call, that looks like you," she said in the same video. For some, these remarks contrast starkly with her dismissal of victims' plights.'

CA fires bring out not-so-toxic masculine behaviors. Feminists not complaining.

Matt · 11 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

I saw this story and thought how quintessentially masculine such behavior is and how suddenly no one's complaining about masculine behaviors now, at least not at the moment, at least not in California. Women could behave the way these men do, but generally speaking-- they don't. Feminists are eerily quiet about men when they behave this way but start their litany of complaints back up once the emergency has passed. Fancy that.

Massachusetts Court Weighs Whether All Prostitution Is Sex Trafficking

Matt · 13 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"So every John is a sex trafficker?" asked Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court Scott L. Kafker in the courtroom last week.

"Yes, your honor," replied Plymouth County Assistant District Attorney Julianne Campbell.

The case—Commonwealth v. Garafalo—represents the latest assault on civil liberties and basic language to be carried out in the name of stopping sex trafficking.

It's long been a goal of certain radical feminists to define all sex work as sex trafficking. If you completely remove agency and free will from the equation—at least for women—then anyone who accepts money for sexual activity can be a victim and anyone who makes or facilitates this payment a criminal.

This paradigm is the basis for the "Nordic Model" of regulating prostitution, in which paying for sex is illegal but the basic act of offering sex for money is not. The Nordic model is established in many European countries, was adopted last year in Maine, and is gaining ground in the U.S. (where it's sometimes, confusingly, called the Equality Model).'

Alpha Male domination is the theme of 2025 — men like Trump mean ‘nobody feels safe’

Matt · 14 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good grief. Excerpt:

'Despite the groundbreaking and heroic actions of women in the last 12 months, there’s one archetype sitting firmly on the horizon for 2025: the Alpha Male.
...
But despite these trailblazing moments, the steadily growing popularity of the Alpha Male signals a dangerous cloud of toxic masculinity in 2025.

According to political scientist and president of the Institute of European Policy Making, Catherine De Vries, the president-elect is the shining star of the Alpha Male stereotype: a hyper-masculine man who seeks to assert absolute authority, and values material wealth and strength.

While Andrew Tate brought the Alpha Male to mainstream media, Donald Trump is the reason it will boil over in popularity this year, as he steps into arguably the most powerful position on Earth.'

How the Crazy Feminists Develop

Matt · 15 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Tom and Hannah have an open and honest discussion about how the crazy feminists develop. Hannah offers numerous insights into female psychology and the damage done to women, children, and men by feminists.

South Jersey elementary school teacher accused of having sexual relationship, child with student

Matt · 16 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Middle Township Elementary School teacher in South Jersey is facing charges after she allegedly had a child with a student she's accused of sexually assaulting inside her home several years ago.

Laura Caron, 34, of Cape May Court House, was arrested on Wednesday on charges of aggravated sexual assault, sexual assault, and endangering the welfare of a child.

The alleged crimes happened between 2016 and 2020 at the suspect's home in Cape May Court House.

Authorities say the victim was 13 years old and living with then-28-year-old Caron when their child was born in 2019.'

Elderly Pennsylvania woman 'invites two young boys into her home before getting them drunk and sexually assaulting them'

Matt · 16 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania woman is behind bars after allegedly serving two young boys alcohol and attempting to sexually assault them.

Rochelle Stewart, 64, was charged with six misdemeanors — one count of indecent assault, one count of making a false police report, and two counts each of giving minors alcohol and corruption of minors.

Pittsburgh police said on Jan. 8 two boys, ages 12 and 13, offered to shovel snow in front of the home of Stewart's home, Law&Crime reported. According to a criminal complaint Stewart agreed to pay the boys $5 to shovel her walkway.'

From writer in Trinidad: Toxic masculinity running amok

Mastodon · 17 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What is evident from the violence that has taken hold in TT is parents afraid of their children, and a society living in fear. Barricaded in their homes behind burglar bars and security cameras, fearful of speaking up. Not helped by the fact a solution is yet to be found to stem the escalating violence. Not that there is a straightforward one.

The fact, however, is that violence, abuse and killing of women, children and crime overall are perpetrated predominantly by males.

...

That said, males need to help themselves by recognising and willingly admitting they have a problem, a desire to initiate change and sufficient discipline to maintain that change. To self-reflect (not a masculine thing to do) or seek professional help. It is, of course, easier said than done.'

Stanford Law prof fires Meta as client, citing platform's 'descent into toxic masculinity'

Mastodon · 17 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mark Lemley, the William H. Neukom professor of law at Stanford Law and director of its Program in Law, Science and Technology, said in his social media post he has “struggled with how to respond to [CEO] Mark Zuckerberg and Facebook’s descent into toxic masculinity and Neo-Nazi madness.”

Lemley, a partner at Lex Lumina who was representing Meta in a copyright dispute in the Northern District of California, said he fired the company as a client. The case, Kadrey v. Meta Platforms, involves allegations that Meta trained its artificial intelligence product using the copyrighted works of several authors.'

Department of Education Says Revenue Sharing Must Comply with Title IX

Mastodon · 17 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Revenue sharing in college athletics is slated to begin next season, starting on July 1 (if the proposal is finalized in April, as expected), but a potential wrench has been thrown into the plans of programs across the country.

The U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights put out a memo Thursday regarding Title IX and NIL, answering questions surrounding revenue sharing and Title IX.

As shared by Pete Nakos of On3, future revenue-sharing distributions from a school to its players for NIL rights are considered financial assistance, and if not divided proportionally among men and women athletes, schools would risk Title IX violations.

Nakos further reported that most programs were planning a distribution split that would have given 75% of revenue sharing to football, 15% to men's basketball, 5% to women's basketball and 5% to the remaining athletes. That, obviously, would not be Title IX compliant.'

Men think they're doing their share of housework. They're not.

Mastodon · 17 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The household gender divide is as old as time. Studies show that even in progressive (heterosexual) households, women tend to do more of the housework than men. Is there any hope of change?

Men "seem to think" they are doing their fair share of the chores, said The Washington Post. A YouGov survey revealed that 81% of men living with partners "responded with confidence" that they were pulling their weight around the house. But statistics from the Bureau of Labor Statistics tell a somewhat different story: Women "cooked, cleaned and did yard work" for nearly two hours a day, according to the study. Their male partners did only half that amount. But that is more housework than men used to do — and the increased chore time is coming largely in the form of meal preparation. "Men are gaining," said the Post.

Overall, though, the gender divide "continues to linger," Bev Betkowski said at the University of Alberta's Folio. New research from the university suggests that women who carried the bulk of the housework load at age 25 still bear the same heavy burdens decades later as they move into middle age — and that "women's domestic workload only increased during the child-rearing years." It is important to lay out the ground rules early. When patterns are "set early in the relationship, they tend to persist," said Matthew Johnson, a relationship researcher at the University of Alberta.'

Surge of Female Enlistments Helped Drive Army Success in Reaching 2024 Recruiting Goal

Mastodon · 17 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last year marked the first time in several years that the Army achieved its ambitious recruiting goals -- primarily due to an increase in female recruits, according to internal service data reviewed by Military.com.

Nearly 10,000 women signed up for active duty in 2024, an 18% jump from the previous year, while male recruitment increased by just 8%, the data shows. The hike comes as the service continues to struggle with recruiting men, who have traditionally filled the bulk of its ranks but have become more of a challenge to enlist in recent years.

The numbers mark the continuation of a trend reported in a Military.com investigation that found a yearslong Army recruiting slump was centered around men, while female recruiting numbers have remained relatively strong. They also point to young women as an increasingly vital recruiting pool, especially as young men are struggling to meet the Army's eligibility requirements.'

The Misandry Myth Only Seeks To Reinforce Patriarchy

Mastodon · 17 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The term ‘misandry‘ has been increasingly mentioned in recent weeks. While the term has been deeply embedded in the manosphere’s vocabulary for long, following the Atul Subhash suicide, it has gained renewed traction. It has since spilt outside of MRA/manosphere circles, with many claiming that women, society, and institutions exhibit misandrist tendencies and systematically favour women and disfavour men.

The manosphere’s use of the term, or its insistence that it’s the inverse of misogyny and is just as, if not more, prevalent, isn’t new. The dominant narrative within the Indian manosphere seems to be that men face systemic persecution at the hands of women and in a system that is created for their sole benefit. What’s troubling, however, is the use and acceptance of the term outside of the manosphere and how it has penetrated common parlance as the opposite of misogyny.'

Pennsylvania woman's heinous excuse after falsely accusing man she never met of attempted rape and kidnapping

Matt · 18 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania woman said she falsely accused an innocent man she never met of trying to rape and kidnap her all because he looked 'creepy'.

Anjela Borisova Urumova, 20, pleaded guilty on Thursday to filing a false police report against 41-year-old Daniel Pierson, whom she accused of attempting to kidnap and rape her.

Pierson was held on a $1 million bail, charged with multiple felonies and spent a month in jail as a result of the false claims.'

The problem with MAGA's definition of manhood

Mastodon · 19 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Zuckerberg also reportedly "blamed his former chief operating officer, Sheryl Sandberg, for an inclusivity initiative at Facebook that encouraged employees' self-expression in the workplace."

I mean, at one level, it's actually a perfect example of masculine energy to not own your decisions and instead blame them on a woman who was your subordinate. But it's a kind of masculine energy — if you want to call it that — that's pretty damn pathetic.

That's the other weird thing about all these "manly men" and how they perform masculinity. Not only does it involve a ton of whining and blame-shifting, but it also involves abject levels of, dare I say, emasculating subservience.

All these "manly men" are so eager to submit to the awesome will of Trump while simultaneously bragging about their superhuman feats. Whether it's all the pushups you can allegedly do, in Hegseth's case, or claiming you are one of the best video gamers in the universe, as Elon Musk has recently done.'

California State University changes 'illegal' program that excluded White men

Matt · 24 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California State University changed a program that was only open to men of color to now be open to all students, following a complaint filed to the Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights.

"Cal State, like most universities, has very large bureaucracies devoted towards preventing and remedying discrimination," Cornell professor William Jacobson and founder of the Equal Protection Project, told Fox News Digital. "So how is it that the university as a system engages in open discrimination?"

The complaint, filed Nov. 19, 2024, by Jacobson and the Equal Protection Project, claimed that 23 campuses at California State University operated a "Young Males of Color Consortium."'

Strategic disinvestment from masculinity linked to poor psychosocial outcomes

Mastodon · 24 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent study published in Sex Roles reveals that “strategic masculine disinvestment,” a process where men intentionally distance themselves from traditional masculine ideals, is linked to poorer psychosocial functioning, including higher levels of distress and anger.

Jessica Pfaffendorf and Terrence Hill examined how changes in masculinity, including the shift away from hegemonic masculinity, marked by traits like stoicism and assertiveness, intersect with broader social changes. As structural support for traditional masculinity erodes, men are increasingly adopting alternative identity strategies.

The researchers analyzed data from the 2021 Crime, Health, and Politics Survey (CHAPS), which included a nationally representative sample of 803 men (ages 18-91) from the United States. To assess strategic masculine disinvestment, participants indicated whether they sometimes acted “less manly” because it helped them get ahead in the world.

Psychosocial functioning was evaluated through validated scales that measured variables such as mastery, anger, anxiety, depression, and nonspecific psychological distress. Mastery was assessed using items that gauged participants’ perceived sense of control over their lives, while psychological distress was measured through the K6 Psychological Distress Scale, which captures symptoms like nervousness, hopelessness, and worthlessness. Participants also provided demographic information.'

Women, gays, transgender and queer Americans serve in the military because men won't

Mastodon · 24 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As we can see, in the post-Vietnam years, women flooded into the service and took up roles that were traditionally filled by men. They did a pretty good job of it — so much that the military realized non-combat jobs could and should be performed by women.

There were two lessons we learned from Iraq. The first was that when you put women in combat roles, they rose to the task. The second was, why beg straight white men to serve when gay, bisexual, and transgender Americans are so willing to?'

What’s Behind Right-Wing Support for “Male Feminist” Justin Baldoni

Mastodon · 24 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Justin Baldoni would seem to be a bogeyman for America’s right wing. He broke out as a heartthrob on the satirical telenovela Jane the Virgin, known for its progressive themes, and then branded himself as one of the country’s foremost male feminists on his Man Enough podcast, the tagline for which was “undefining masculinity.”

But after Blake Lively, who starred opposite him in his directorial hit It Ends with Us, alleged workplace mistreatment including sexual harassment, he’s been unyoked from “woke.” In fact, he’s become an unexpected new conservative cause celebre as a growing contingent of commentators take his side.'

Israel receives names of four female hostages Hamas is due to release Saturday

Matt · 24 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Whole thing is an exercise in nymphotropism. The first hostages to be released should be all civilians regardless of sex, then all soldiers regardless of sex. Instead they prioritize females above all else. Predictable. "Women and children first!" The children I understand. Not the women. Excerpt:

'Israel is preparing to receive on Saturday four female soldiers held hostage by Hamas.

The militant group said Friday that it intends to release Karina Ariev, 20, Daniella Gilboa, 20, Naama Levy, 20, and Liri Albag, 19.

Israeli officials have told the families of the four women that they intend to move forward with the release – despite the fact that Israel had previously expected Arbel Yehud, a female civilian hostage still held in Gaza, to be included in Saturday's release.

Israel had demanded that Hamas release Yehud, a 29-year-old who was taken hostage from her home in Kibbutz Nir Oz, as part of the next release, a source familiar with the matter said. Yehud is believed to be held by Palestinian Islamic Jihad, not Hamas, which could be a factor in the timing of her release.'

France: Sex not part of woman's 'marital duties,' court rules in divorce case

Matt · 25 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What duties are left, I wonder, if any? Excerpt:

'A French woman has won a ruling from Europe's top human rights court, with a panel of seven judges unanimously saying she should not have been blamed in her divorce for not having sex with her husband.

The European Court of Human Rights judgment ruled that the woman — known as Ms. H.W. in court documents in keeping with European protocol — suffered a violation of Article 8 under the European Convention on Human Rights, the right to respect for family and private life.

The case centered on the divorce between the woman, a French national born in 1955 who lives in Le Chesnay, near Versailles, and her husband, known in court records as Mr. J.C.'

Sexism linked to social ills for men and women, finds largest cross-cultural study of its kind

Mastodon · 26 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism is facing a backlash, with women's rights being rolled back in many countries and a significant number of people saying feminism has gone far enough or even too far. Yet women still face basic obstacles to education in some countries and are generally paid less than men. They still suffer from male violence and, in some places, face increasing restrictions to reproductive rights. There are even some places where families force midwives to kill their newborn girls.

Many women are also fed up with doing both a full-time job and the lion's share of domestic duties and unpaid caring jobs. It's easy to wonder whether gender equality is simply impossible, especially as many men inaccurately perceive that gains for women equate losses for men.

But there is hope. Our 62-nation psychological study, which is largest of its kind, suggests that gender equality benefits us all and sexism is harmful to everybody – women, men and nations in many surprising ways. As such, we all have an interest in promoting egalitarianism.

As our findings show, sexism is linked with several social ills affecting us all. For example, higher sexism predicted lower GDP – indicating lower economic productivity. It also predicted a lower "global peace index", meaning nation's higher domestic and international conflict, militarisation and lower safety and security.'

Professor: Gender studies made me realize X-Men's Wolverine is 'toxic' masculinity

Mastodon · 29 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one of Shyminsky's TikTok videos he says if you're a man who believes it's your duty to protect women then you require dangerous men to exist; as such, you're not actually working toward a world in which such people do not exist.

In other words, such a man's "self actualization is opposed to women's liberation" — that "being a good man also requires you to be a bad one."

Shyminsky further claims men who believe it their duty to protect women are the real danger: "You are one of the bad ones for some other woman's good man," he says.'

Silicon Valley's toxic techno-bros

Matt · 29 January 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An influential Silicon Valley publication runs a cover story lamenting the “pussification” of tech. A major tech CEO lambasts a Black civil rights leader’s calls for diversifying the tech workforce. Technologists rage against the “PC police”.

No, this isn’t Silicon Valley in the age of Maga. It’s the tech industry of the 1990s, when observers first raised concerns about the rightwing bend of Silicon Valley and the potential for “technofascism”. Despite the industry’s (often undeserved) reputation for liberalism, its reactionary foundations were baked in almost from the beginning. As Silicon Valley enters a second Trump administration, the gendered roots of its original reactionary movement offer insight into today’s rightward turn.'

Gender Equality For Men

Matt · 2 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

This vid (registration on Rumble required) is from March 2024 but is still very timely. In it a man (a leader in the MRM, Ed Bartlett) is interviewed to discuss what are some men's issues and what are he and others doing to raise awareness. Worth registering to see it.

America’s ‘Marriage Material’ Shortage

Matt · 4 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's not often that MSM articles openly acknowledge women's financial motivation in seeking a marriage partner, but this one does. Excerpt:

'People’s lives are diverse, and so are their wants and desires and circumstances. It’s hard, and perhaps impossible, to identify a tiny number of factors that explain hundreds of millions of people’s decisions to couple up, split apart, or remain single. But according to Lyman Stone, a researcher at the Institute for Family Studies, the most important reason marriage and coupling are declining in the U.S. is actually quite straightforward: Many young men are falling behind economically.

A marriage or romantic partnership can be many things: friendship, love, sex, someone to gossip with, someone to remind you to take out the trash. But, practically speaking, Stone told me, marriage is also insurance. Women have historically relied on men to act as insurance policies—against the threat of violence, the risk of poverty. To some, this might sound like an old-fashioned, even reactionary, description of marriage, but its logic still applies. “Men’s odds of being in a relationship today are still highly correlated with their income,” Stone said. “Women do not typically invest in long-term relationships with men who have nothing to contribute economically.” In the past few decades, young and especially less educated men’s income has stagnated, even as women have charged into the workforce and seen their college-graduation rates soar. For single non-college-educated men, average inflation-adjusted earnings at age 45 have fallen by nearly 25 percent in the past half century, while for the country as a whole, average real earnings have more than doubled. As a result, “a lot of young men today just don’t look like what women have come to think of as ‘marriage material,’” he said.'

How to dial down ‘masculine energy’ in your workwear

Mastodon · 6 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you’re looking to do the opposite of Zuckerberg and eschew tired notions of masculinity in the workplace, a great place to start is with what you wear. Small, intentional wardrobe choices can subtly shift the image you project, setting the tone for a more thoughtful and inclusive working environment.

You could do as many Gen Z men do already, and embrace pearls. But if you’re working in a typical British office, statement jewellery might not be the right fit. Instead, focus on subtle shifts in your everyday staples, pairing tailored pieces with softer items — chinos with an unstructured blazer, or suit trousers with loafers, a shirt and a quarter-zip sweater. Minor changes in cut, fabric and tone can inject softness and avoid macho clichés, without the need for a sartorial overhaul.'

Sarah Harte: Stand down, boys — masculine hierarchies are far from being neutered

Mastodon · 6 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, the nexus between masculinity and violent aggression struck me as unfortunate messaging, given the global violence against women. Plus, genderising the qualities that employees need to succeed seems reductive.

Overall, the feminine against the masculine binary idea reduces us all to unhelpful archetypes. Some men display what has been tagged as traditionally feminine traits, and women display so-called male characteristics.

Despite the latest cruel announcement in the States that there are only two genders supposedly to protect women in some cynical version of benevolent sexism, we are all as human beings plotted along a continuum of behaviour, a nuanced gradient on which every person functions and acts at different levels be that professionally, personally or sexually.'

Wake school board member says DEI opponents are protecting ‘mediocre white men’

Mastodon · 6 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A white Wake County school board member is gaining attention for a speech defending diversity, equity and inclusion and accusing DEI critics of being losers who want to support “mediocre white men.”'

Why Black Women Cannot Let Mediocre White Men Win

Mastodon · 6 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You see, the mediocre white man is a figure that we, as Black women, have had to contend with all of our lives. No matter how qualified I am for a job, white men have told me to my face that I only got the role because I'm Black and a woman.

"You're just a DEI hire" are words I have often heard.

They've refused to acknowledge or accept that I am the best-qualified person for the job. Many Black women will tell you they've had a similar experience.
...
They conveniently associate DEI with incompetence, corruption, and unethical behaviors. Non-DEI, aka white men, no matter how unqualified they are, are associated with competence, non-corrupt and ethical behaviors. Excuse me; we must not be talking about Trump himself, Pete Hegseth, JD Vance, and a host of other white men who have been elevated into positions of power within this administration.

The mediocre white man hates the competent Black woman because she is everything that he is not. She is hardworking while he is lazy, and she is professional while he is sloppy. She speaks out and is courageous, while he constantly whines and is a coward.'

America Must Protect Itself From the Dangerous, Violent Fragility of White Male Mediocrity.

Mastodon · 6 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'America has always been hijacked by the violent fragility of a few terrified, mediocre, white men.

They need sanitized safe spaces to protect themselves from a changing, vibrant world that sees them as equals and not superiors. They must ban books that shatter their ego and replace them with fairy tales to prove to themselves and to the world that they are “the master race.” Tragically, their superiority cannot be proven based on merit alone so they must rig the system to keep out women, Black people, and communities of color.

This weakness reveals itself through slavery, segregation, Jim Crow laws, and denying women the right to vote until the 20th century. Their cowardice is on display 24-7 through non-stop projection. As they whine and rant on every platform despite being born with privilege and wealth, they demand the rest stop complaining about discrimination and bigotry and instead pull ourselves up from the bootstrap.
...
All of this chaos was preventable if enough Americans simply voted for Kamala Harris, a competent Black Indian American woman. But, nope, a plurality of Americans needed to “feel” great again by “owning the libs” and dispensing cruelty. Unfortunately, all of us are in it now. There’s still a chance for us to confront the authoritarian threat of violent, wealthy, mediocre, white men who are coming after all of us.'

"Trump Throws Catnip at His Men’s Rights Activist Base"

Matt · 7 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. LOL, due process guarantees cause feminists to flip out! Excerpt:

'In 2017, during his first term, Trump introduced rules that strengthened protections for students accused of sexual misconduct and reduced the liability placed on schools to respond to reported misconduct. While Trump’s proposed rule changes didn’t technically take effect until 2020, sexual violence researcher Dr. Nicole Bedera told Jezebel that in her field research of college campuses during the first Trump administration, most schools “immediately used the proposed rule changes in 2017 as grounds to not investigate any sexual misconduct allegations at all.”

In 2022, the Biden administration then introduced Title IX rules that rescinded some of Trump’s and also expanded Title IX to include protections for LGBTQ and pregnant students. The majority of Republican-controlled states challenged Biden’s rules and, in January, a federal judge in Kentucky officially scrapped them.

Among Trump’s former and now reinstated guidelines is an especially cruel requirement that mandates schools hold live hearings for accused students to cross-examine their accusers, which can be highly traumatic for rape survivors. Trump’s rules also allow schools to skirt liability for off-campus assaults, and allow them to use the “clear and convincing evidence” standard of proof when investigating reports.'

What is toxic masculinity, and why is it even bad?

Mastodon · 8 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So, what’s is toxic masculinity and what's wrong with it?

Toxic masculinity isn’t just not talking about feelings with your bros—it’s a psychological trap that keeps men emotionally stunted, relationally dysfunctional, and, at its worst, self-destructive. But we can't talk about toxic masculinity without discussing why some people are so fixated on it as a concept.

From a young age, boys are told to "man up", which is just code for shut up about your feelings. This is repression in action. Bottled-up emotions don’t disappear; they resurface as rage, detachment, or self-destruction.

Rigid masculinity often starts with a cold, distant, or hyper-masculine father figure. To win approval, boys either imitate toughness or reject softness—either way, they inherit an emotional handicap that plays out in adulthood.'

‘I’m Not Sure If That’s Possible’: John Fetterman Says Dems May Have Lost Key Demographic Forever

Mastodon · 8 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“I don’t know, and truthfully, I’m not sure, I’m not sure if that’s possible, to be honest. I think that’s been seriously eroding for a while,” Fetterman said. “And in some cases, in the conversations I’ve had, a lot of people, they don’t even want to say it publicly, but they just feel like, you know, the other side seems like it’s like, ‘Men, well, that men’s the problem. Men are to blame, or their masculinity is toxic. Or unless you’re able to conform to our very strict kinds of definition of what we think’s appropriate, well then, hey, I’m going to find an alternative.'”

“And they’ve done that. That’s absolutely true. And once we’ve kind of turned their back on that demographic, it’s going to be difficult to rebuild and replace that with those voters,” he continued. “Because I think that migration has been ongoing phenomenon for several years and that was been in front and center, you know, in part of the election in 24.”'

The Politics of Dehumanization

Matt · 8 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Whatifalthist comments on dehumanization in modern society and mentions things affecting men in particular. Worth watching.

SAVE: White Men Targeted by FAA's Discriminatory DEI Program

Matt · 8 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / February 5, 2025 – Recent airplane tragedies in Washington, DC and Philadelphia have placed the public spotlight on biased and discriminatory hiring practices in the airline industry. The problem can be traced back to 2011 when the Obama Administration introduced Diversity, Equity and Inclusion policies in the federal government via Executive Order 13583, "Establishing a Coordinated Government-Wide Initiative to Promote Diversity, and Inclusion in the Federal Workforce." (1)

The Obama order targeted all federal agencies, including the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). As a result, the FAA's hiring and training process went from a skilled-based system to hire air traffic controllers, and replacing it with a new approach designed to favor one candidate over another based on race and sex. (2)

In response, a class action lawsuit was brought by the Mountain States Legal Foundation in 2019. The Brigida vs. FAA case represented more than 2,500 aspiring air traffic controllers who they said were harmed by the FAA's discriminatory policies. (3)

For example, Andrew Brigida scored 100 per cent on his training exam, but alleged that he had been denied a position in an air traffic control tower because the FAA recruitment process favored "diverse" candidates. (4)

The FAA's DEI program also caught the attention of 11 U.S. attorneys general. (5) In a February 2024, letter, (6) the AGs warned that DEI hiring practices within the Federal Aviation Administration were putting airline passengers in danger.'

Maryland Governor Moore Promises a Focus in 2025 on Men and Boys

Matt · 9 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. It's like a cup of cold water when you are really hot and thirsty.

Rise of the ‘ick’ damaging men’s mental health, experts claim

Mastodon · 9 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Telling men they give you the “ick” is driving a hidden mental health crisis, experts have claimed.

The expression is used to describe a feeling of disgust or repulsion at a specific behaviour and moved from a popular slang word to being recognised by the Cambridge Dictionary in 2024.

It is particularly used by young women to describe things they find unattractive in men.

Across social media, users have shared their lists of things young men and teenagers do that give them the dreaded ick.

Wearing skinny jeans, running for the bus, putting on a baby voice and doing doggy paddle in a swimming pool are among the most commonly featured.

One viral “ick-list” included things such as drinking milk, applying lip balm and waiting for the green man before crossing the road.

Dan Somers, the founder of men’s mental health charity, Manup?, said it was the “kind of language that can cause men and young boys to really lose self-worth”.

He said: “Everyone feels they can have a laugh and joke about men, and nobody will call it out.'

Ukraine: Issue of compulsory military draft for women “off table” - MP

Mastodon · 9 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The issue of obligatory mobilization of Ukrainian women liable for military service is not on the agenda. Female Ukrainians may join the Army only consensually.

This was stated by Fedir Venislavskyi, a member of the Parliamentary Committee on National Security, Defense and Intelligence, who spoke at a briefing in Kyiv, Ukrinform reports.

“The issue of conscripting women liable for military service was resolved by parliament through a clear imperative norm of the law because ahead of passing amendments to legislation on military registration and military service, it was stipulated in the Cabinet resolution that women can be mobilized exclusively with their consent,” Venislavskyi emphasized.'

Why more young men in Germany are turning to the far right

Matt · 10 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dr Rüdiger Maas, from the German think tank the Institute for Generational Research, says parties on the left often focus on themes such as feminism, equality and women's rights.

"Overall, men don't see themselves in these themes," he tells us. "That is why they have a tendency to vote further right."

Hard, populist right parties have also done well in countries such as France, Austria, the Netherlands, Poland, Spain and Italy.

"Sixty per cent of young men under 30 would consider voting for the far right in EU countries and this is much higher than the share among women," says Prof Abou-Chadi, in analysis drawn from a subset of the 2024 European Election Study.'

Super Bowl Ads Less Male Positive?

Matt · 10 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here

"Some of the ads for the super bowl were misandrist messes. Here's an example. Please use the comments to point out the many ways this ad is anti-male. Please also offer links to other commercials that were anti male and I will add them to the post."

Scholars tell ND higher ed board to hire more women: ‘It’s ethical’ and ‘the right thing to do’

Mastodon · 11 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The North Dakota State Board of Higher Education is facing calls to choose women to fill four leadership vacancies, with one scholar describing it as “ethical” and “the right thing to do.”

The board oversees the state’s public universities. Three presidential positions currently are open at Bismarck State College, Dickinson State University, and Lake Region State College, The North Dakota Monitor reports. A fourth, the North Dakota University System chancellor, will become open later this year.
...
However, some universities have gotten into legal trouble for hiring and admissions practices and programs based on individuals’ race or sex.

Recently, legal experts raised questions about the constitutionality of certain diversity, equity, and inclusion goals at North Dakota State University, The College Fix reported.

One, which aims to increase female enrollment in its business school, is a “clear violation” of Title IX, “which bans all forms of sex discrimination in schools,” legal expert Edward Bartlett told The Fix.'

Mace makes allegations of sexual abuse against multiple men from the House floor

Matt · 11 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I have reasons why I think this is made up. In any case, it's one to watch. Excerpt:

'As Rep. Nancy Mace prepared to speak, she took out a Bible and — as if she were in a courtroom, instead of on the House floor — she placed her right hand and swore to tell the “whole truth.”

The South Carolina congresswoman then delivered a damning 53-minute speech that has no precedent in the chamber’s history. Describing herself as “going scorched earth,” Mace accused her ex-fiancé of “evil” crimes including physical assault, rape and sex trafficking against her and other women — accusing him and several other men by name on the floor. While Mace did not provide specific evidence of her claims, she said she brought the case to state authorities for further investigation.

“Tonight is about justice for me and tonight is about justice for all of the women that you all raped, that you all filmed, that you all photographed, that you all abused for years,” Mace said on the floor, in a tone that alternated between somber and scorching. Three other GOP women, Reps. Anna Paulina Luna, Lauren Boebert and Victoria Spartz, sat behind her, listening closely, while Mace’s mother sat in the House gallery above.'

‘She didn’t show up’: 3 young girls slain by mother in triple murder-suicide

Mastodon · 11 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The father of the slain children, however, had long surmised that his little girls were victims of a homicide.

“What got me the most was ‘Why?’ You ask yourself why this happened,” Jonathan Newell said through tears in comments to WPTA last year. “Was it because of the visitations? Did my kids die for — because I wanted to see them? Did one hour, twice a month, that was supervised — did my kids die for one hour, twice a month that was supervised? It’s a dumb reason. It’s not an OK reason.”

The grieving father went on to say he hoped the memory of his children, highlighted by the occasion of their too-soon deaths, would be used to promote increased awareness and treatment of mental health.

“We need better access to it,” Newell said. “And there need to be more resources for moms and kids.”'

Common words on job adverts that women think are intimidating and too masculine

Mastodon · 13 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Job adverts which use the words ‘ambition’ and ‘drive’ may deter women from applying.

Stereotypically masculine job descriptions can leave women feeling ‘intimidated’ and worried about facing a ‘boys’ club’, a study has found.

When researchers removed ‘masculine’ terms like entrepreneurial from an advert, they found the proportion of women applying increased by four per cent.

Men who were not alpha male types were also more likely to go for the job.

Dr Joyce He, who led the study from the University of California, Los Angeles, said: ‘Changing the language of a job advert, which is such a small and cost-effective thing to do, could encourage women to apply and be more inclusive for everybody.

‘Words like competitive may suggest to women that their colleagues will be stereotypically masculine and so they won’t fit in.'

NCFM et al, files lawsuit against the State of California for failing to have a Commission on the Status of Men and Boys

Matt · 13 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1971 the California Commission on the Status of Women and Girls became a permanent agency. In the 2023/2024 fiscal year the Commission received $5 million in state funding dedicated to supporting organizations serving women and girls, addressing economic challenges, and promoting gender equity across the state.

California not having a Commission on the Status of Men and Boys violates California Constitution Article I, Section 7 which states: “A person may not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or denied equal protection of the laws,” the U.S. Constitutions Fourteenth Amendment equal protection provisions and a host of other state and federal laws also ensure equal protections, fair treatment and prevents discriminatory practices.'

North Carolina school board member rips ‘mediocre white men’ in rant against DEI critics

Mastodon · 14 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A member of North Carolina’s largest school district’s board slammed critics of diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI) and said the term is being bandied about by people who are racist in place of the “n-word.”
...
“I really want to highlight, as Dr. Ng mentioned, we’re celebrating 250 [years of America] next year that … it’s really important to talk about people being hired based on their skin color. And for 250 years, it has been mediocre White men who have been hired based on their skin color.”'

Predatory sexual behaviour isn't acceptable just because a woman does it

Mastodon · 14 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fair enough. She's right to point out that there shouldn't be a sexual sell-by-date for women. But it's not true that age disparity in movies between leading older men and young female stars is 'not even discussed'.

People are always clutching their pearls at the likes of Leonardo DiCaprio and his string of nubile lovelies, or pointing out how absurd it is that Tom Cruise's leading ladies are half his age.

It's not just Hollywood, either: Donald Trump's wife Melania is 24 years younger than him. And let's face it: a lot of those cheering on Bridget playing tonsil hockey with someone 27 years her junior would be the same people who despise Trump for it.

And this is where, for me, the problem lies. If we chastise such behaviour in a man, why do we laud it in a woman? Why is there this notion that it's somehow fine because it is 'feminism'.

I don't get it. Predatory behaviour is predatory behaviour. Women need to be very careful about this.'

Trump (Still) Needs a Social and Family Policy

Matt · 16 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This avoidance is conspicuous to those of us who remember that for decades reforming social and family policy — welfare above all — was the Republicans' top priority. (No reform ever took place.) What happened?

Simple: the feminists took control of social policy and politicized it. No longer a simple question of controlling government waste and inefficiency (in which case it would be a straightorward matter for DOGE), the welfare matriarchy was mobilized as a vehicle for "gender equality" and the "empowerment of women". This makes male policymakers tremble. With the (partial) exception of abortion, conservatives fear to touch anything that will anger feminists. Accepting the principle that "To learn who rules over you, find out who you are not allowed to criticize", we are not ruled by Globalists or Deep State functionaries, but by superannuated female adolescents with green hair. As always, "The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world."'

Governors Speak Out on Urgent Need to Lift Up Men and Boys

Matt · 16 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Last week Maryland Governor Wes Moore, a Democrat, gave a state of the state speech in which he highlighted the problems and challenges facing men and boys in his state. Gov. Moore's speech highlighted a range of concerns:

"And it's not just that in Maryland, labor force participation for young men is nearly the lowest it has been in two decades.

"It's also that suicide rates among men under 30 have risen by more than a third since 2010.

"Across the country, college attainment levels are the same now for men and boys as they were in 1964.

"And Maryland still sends youth under the age of 18 to our state prisons at twice the national rate.'

13 Steps to Make America Male Friendly Again

Matt · 17 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Trump is moving quickly to dismantle DEI initiatives and root out waste and fraud. However, if he truly wants to restore America's greatness, he must confront the deeply embedded misandry in our culture. Some of this stems from feminist-driven legislation and bureaucracies that have taken hold and harmed men, children, and families. Other aspects reflect long-standing societal biases against men. To make America a place where men and boys can be respected and truly thrive, the following changes are essential:'

NCFM v. Selective Service Appellant’s Brief

Matt · 17 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Document here. Excerpt:

'Attorney for NCFM, Nadine Lewis, filed our appellate brief (Case Number 24-7746) February 3, 2025. It was accepted.

The full text of the conformed appellate complaint is below:'

DOGE Stops $10 Million in Taxpayer Funds from Paying for Circumcisions in Mozambique

Mastodon · 18 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE) has stopped millions of U.S. tax dollars from going to outlandish overseas programs, including $10 million to “voluntary medical male circumcisions” in Mozambique, the watchdog initiative announced.

...

Another whopping $40 million was allotted to a “gender equality and women empowerment hub,” and a staggering $486 million was going to go to the “Consortium for Elections and Political Process Strengthening,” including $22 million for “inclusive and participatory political process” in Moldova and $21 million for voter turnout in India.

“It is genuinely horrifying to see how much money the American people were sending to OTHER COUNTRIES while our own infrastructure is crumbling,” wrote former U.S. Department of Energy nuclear scientist Matt Van Swol:'

President of Argentina Calls out Feminists at WEF

Matt · 19 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'There is a marked shift in tolerance of woke ideology and of feminism. People are starting to wake up. This short clip features Argentina's President Javier Milei's recent remarks to the WEF where he called out feminists and woke ideology. In the first half of the clip he explains how the social justice movements have robbed western cultures. He then focuses on feminism and clearly states they are not about equality but are about privilege. Well worth it to see the entire speech and I will leave a link below for anyone interested.

When officials like Milei speak the truth it gives a green light for others to voice their concerns about feminism. Thank you President Milei.'

Justin Baldoni and the Death of Man-Bun Feminism

Mastodon · 21 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The entire episode reveals the flaws of the #MeToo movement. Believing all women are vulnerable to the predations of all men fails to account for the real-world messiness of how sexuality actually intersects with power. But it also reveals the flaws of the man-bun feminism Baldoni has personified for his entire career. He quite literally wrote the book on beta maleness, buying into the idea that masculinity itself is a crime that must be “undone.” Perhaps he convinced himself that women can’t be bullies but only bullied. And so he accepted Lively’s takeover of the film, which is what ultimately led to the demise of their relationship.

Legally, the two have entered a stalemate of sorts. Lively has sued Baldoni; he has sued her back; their cases have been consolidated, with the trial set for March 2026. But whoever wins, both have already lost. She might be grinning on SNL, but Lively has clearly failed in her attempt to mend her reputation using the old #MeToo script. Meanwhile, that script has also failed Baldoni. Long before Lively tried to present herself as the perfect victim, he tried to present himself as the perfect “male feminist.” And now here he is, taking his accuser to court—trying to remind the world that you can’t believe all women.'

UK: Firemen are too male and too white, say chiefs

Mastodon · 23 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Britain's fire service is too male and too white, a report has claimed.

The report, which was commissioned by the National Fire Chiefs Council (NFCC), found that the fire service was "institutionally racist, misogynistic and homophobic".

It said firemen in Britain were not "diverse" enough because the service's proportion of women and ethnic minorities is less than in wider society.

Produced by an advisory group focused on improving diversity, equality and inclusion in the fire service, the report found that 9.3 per cent of firefighters were women and 5.4 per cent belonged to ethnic minorities as of March 2024.'

Violence by Women Soars in California

Matt · 23 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Short version: Women are (finally) being arrested more often for DV. Excerpt:

'On the increase in the female violent crime arrest rate specifically, Lofstrom and senior researcher for the Center on Juvenile and Criminal Justice, Mike Males, told Newsweek that increased domestic violence policing that began in the 1980s is a major factor.

"While men are more likely to be arrested for violence throughout society, women's violence arrests disproportionately occur from domestic incidents," Males said.

Before the mid-1980s, domestic violence was often treated as a private matter rather than a serious criminal offense in California. But after the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (FVPSA) was passed in 1984, the law allowed for mandatory arrests for domestic violence incidents where officers had probable cause to believe an assault had occurred, even if they didn't witness it. This increased domestic violence arrests significantly, and more women were arrested as well, sometimes due to dual arrest policies where both partners were taken into custody.'

Home Ownership Gender Gap?

Matt · 25 February 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'This article starts by saying Single women own millions more homes than single men in the US — and the gap is only growing. It offers some ideas about why that is... but what did they leave out?'

Rise Up Foundation graduates first all-boys class from Healthy Masculinity Project

Mastodon · 1 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Rise Up Foundation held a graduation ceremony Wednesday evening at The Linc for 31 young men who completed the Healthy Masculinity Project, marking the first time the program has been offered as an all-boys class.

The program, developed in partnership with A Call to Men and Scholastic, is designed to challenge gender norms and promote respect, accountability and leadership in young men. Participants came from across Mid-Missouri, including Columbia, Moberly and Jefferson City.

Each graduate received a teal tie, the color representing sexual assault awareness, and a City of Jefferson proclamation recognized the program's efforts in promoting leadership and violence prevention.'

UK: Woman who groomed and abused young boy jailed

Matt · 2 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who groomed and sexually assaulted a young boy over several months has been jailed for four years.

Caitlin Hutchinson, 21, of Roker Avenue in Sunderland, sent the victim sexually explicit text messages and made him carry out sex acts on her.

Durham Police said Hutchinson initially denied the offences and told officers the boy had forced himself on her.

The boy, who is in his early teens, said the last 18 months had been hell and he could not forgive Hutchinson for "ruining his childhood".'

‘It’s a scary time’: Sophie Lewis on the ‘enemy feminisms’ that enable the far right

Matt · 3 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Eventually any given 'ism' gets branches and at least some of those will grow contrary to the well-being of the rest of the proverbial tree. I'm liking this. Excerpt:

'The occasion for these declarations was Trump’s all-out assault on trans rights. Since taking office, the president has used executive orders to attempt to restrict the ability of trans Americans to travel, work, receive medical care, serve in the military, attend school and participate in women’s sports. Though there are thought to be fewer than 10 trans athletes among the more than half a million competing in college sports in the US, it was this sports-related executive order that prompted certain, trans-exclusionary feminists to declare Trump’s feminist bona fides.

How did we get here? How have we arrived at a place where self-identified feminists ally themselves with a man who has so extravagantly dedicated his personal and political lives to the humiliation, domination and degradation of women and girls?

I brought this question to Sophie Lewis, whose new book, Enemy Feminisms, out this week in the US, seeks to understand how and why some forms of feminism have diverged so fundamentally from others as to become, well, enemies.'

Lawsuit Claims California Discriminates against Its Boys and Its Men

Matt · 4 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Coalition for Men (NCFM) filed a lawsuit against the state of California for violating the equal rights of boys and of men.

Suicide, overdose, and alcohol death in California increased 49% for its boys and men from 2018 and 2019 to 2022 and 2023, and boys and men account for 75% of all the deaths of despair in California—a topic I discuss in my new book Boys, A Rescue Plan: Moving Beyond the Politics of Masculinity to Healthy Male Development and coauthored with New York Times best-selling author Michael Gurian. We argue that brain-sex difference matters and understanding those differences are critical in helping boys and men and girls and women in all sorts of areas.

Boys and men account for 75% of all the deaths of despair in California.

Despite these outcomes, which have been prevalent for decades, California has spent over $25 million on the California Commission on the Status of Women and Girls from 2021 to 2024 and has yet to establish a commission on boys and men.'

Can White Men Finally Stop Complaining?

Matt · 4 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Feminists want men, esp. white ones, to be silent and fade away. We're not gonna do that. In fact, we're just getting started! Excerpt:

'OK, men, so will you finally quit complaining?

In 2021, Joe Rogan famously said, “It will eventually get to straight white men are not allowed to talk…It will be, ‘You’re not allowed to go outside’…I’m not joking. It really will get there, it’s that crazy.” But Rogan’s complaint is actually an old one that has exploded as a rallying cry every decade or so for more than 50 years. White guys have blamed others for their job losses, educational failures, economic problems and drug addictions.

Somebody else is always at fault. The mighty white guy, it turns out, is quite the delicate flower.

“The white male is the most persecuted person in the United States,” a retired marketing executive declared in a Newsweek cover story in 1993. The magazine cataloged a litany of white men’s gripes: a culture that demonized them, diversity programs run amok, women and Black people getting jobs that were rightfully theirs. “This is a weird moment to be a white man,” it reported. “Suddenly white American males are surrounded by feminists, multiculturalists, P.C. policepersons, affirmative-action employers…all of them saying the same thing: You’ve been a bad boy.”'

UK: 'Toxic masculinity' on rise with most young women scared of men their age

Matt · 5 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most young women are scared of men their age, according to a poll which reveals the impact of so-called "toxic masculinity" on the sexes.

Nearly two-thirds of women aged 18 to 24 are living in fear of their male peers, research by the Centre for Social Justice (CSJ) found.

With International Women's Day on Saturday, a Whitestone Insight survey commissioned by the think tank found that 62 per cent of young women believe most young men are "pretty frightening".

More than two-fifths of young men (41 per cent) agree with their female counterparts.

The finding features in Lost Boys, a study published by the CSJ that details the plight of Britain's boys and young men.

Not only are males now falling behind females in education and the workplace, but they are also increasingly viewed with suspicion by women.'

NCFM Open Letter to DOGE re the Violence Against Women Act

Matt · 6 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Letter available here. Excerpt:

'The National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) provides funding for military DV programs, which are influenced by VAWA, thereby distorting overall military effectiveness, supported by Women Industry civilian contractors with ties to VAWA-funded programs outside the military establishment. We are directly involved in several military cases wherein highly awarded, competent, and career-minded personnel have been or are being railroaded out of the military and even imprisoned due to false accusations driven by political pressure, command staff, and agreeable, if not inept, judge advocate attorneys.

Corruption, malfeasance, and maladministration must stop. Those involved must be held accountable, go to prison, and make restitution. Restitution should be to the state and to those who have been harmed.

Hence the open letter to DOGE below. Please pass it around. It may help. Post it wherever you can please on social media sites.'

Call to Action

Matt · 7 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Post here. Excerpt:

This is an important call to action related to the previous video on Breaking the Feminist Lock on the Family. This post offers phone numbers and web addresses where you can suggest that the appointees to ACF and OCSS are not radical feminists and more importantly that you offer Stephen Baskerville and ThisIsShah as your choices for appointees.

https://stephenbaskerville.substack.com/p/announcement-and-request-how-you

Donald Tusk announces military training plan for all Polish men

Matt · 7 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Work is under way to make all men in Poland undergo military training, Prime Minister Donald Tusk said.

In a speech to the Polish parliament, Tusk said the government aimed to give full details in the coming months.

Efforts are being made to "prepare large-scale military training for every adult male in Poland," he told the Sejm.

"We will try to have a model ready by the end of this year so that every adult male in Poland is trained in the event of war, so that this reserve is comparable and adequate to the potential threats."
...
Tusk said women may also undergo military training, but "war, is still to a greater extent the domain of men".'

Jobless, isolated, fed misogynistic porn... where is the love for Britain's lost boys?

Matt · 10 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Generally gynocentric, of course, but it's a start anyway. Excerpt:

'The boys are not all right. That's the message from a new Centre for Social Justice report, Lost Boys, published last week. It surveys how boys and young men are faring in Britain and finds that in several areas there is now a reverse gender gap, with boys, particularly those from poorer backgrounds, struggling to keep up with girls.

When it comes to education, girls outperform boys at GCSEs and A-levels, and the ratio of women to men at university is 60:40. Boys are more than twice as likely to be excluded from school, with rates of exclusion particularly high for those from disadvantaged backgrounds. This is all feeding through into labour market outcomes: in the 00s, women aged 16-24 were more likely to be not in employment, education and training than young men; in recent years, that has flipped, with young men also significantly more likely to be unemployed than young women.

The pay gap for young people has also become a more complex story: for 21- to 24-year-olds, median earnings are now higher for women, but this has been driven by a stark drop in earnings for non-graduate young men, with graduates still earning more than their female equivalent. What's more, boys are more likely to be obese than girls, and rates of suicide are three and a half times higher for boys aged 15-19 than girls of the same age.

None of this is to deny the many inequalities faced by females in a patriarchal society. But neither should a focus on women's equality crowd out discussion of the problems being experienced by a minority of boys; improving their lot would do a huge amount to make life better for both sexes.

But we have struggled to have a constructive conversation about the specific issues facing boys, with a tendency for all sides to slip into polarised, zero-sum framing. For some on the left, there is an implicit fear that focusing on boys might distract from the challenges facing girls; and certain sections of the right wrongly regard boys falling behind as a product of important feminist wins of recent decades.'

Why work is (still) not working for women

Matt · 11 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I read essays like this one and the lack of mention of what men have to deal with especially in the non-Western world (killed in mine cave-ins, by forced military service, industrial accidents, etc.) is glaring. The author is clearly all about and only about the trials of women. This is feminist thinking in action. Excerpt:

'Unpaid work. Sexual harassment. Violence. Low wages. The “motherhood penalty.” These are just some of the issues that millions of women continue to face at work in 2025.

Despite progress made towards global gender equality, men continue to hold the highest paid positions in industries worldwide, while many women still typically handle grunt work across companies and supply chains.

Meanwhile, many women around the world are still struggling to find work, with many holding precarious jobs or forced to hustle in the informal economy just to get by.'

Announcing the New York Declaration for Men and Boys

Matt · 11 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Announcing the New York Declaration for Men and Boys

Rally at UN Headquarters 8:30-9:30am at the corner of 1st Ave and E46th St on the East side of 1st Ave @ the Security entrance to the UN on the North end of that building

Press Conference 11:00am, March 12, 2025.

Come in person to the Even Hotel, 221 E 44th St. New York City, New York, NY.

Or join virtually through this link: https://us06web.zoom.us/j/87840628063?pwd=bXClFcDHWWIznQOOQ2Y1dU9g68p9yI.1

You may recall that 30 years ago, the United Nations approved the Beijing Declaration, which since then has been the cornerstone of the global women's rights movement.

The Beijing Declaration makes numerous references to "gender equality." And though the gender disparities affecting men were well documented even then, the UN has inexplicably done nothing to address the 12 areas of male disadvantage: www.menandboys.net

This lamentable state of affairs is about to change.

The International Council on Men and Boys will unveil the New York Declaration for Men and Boys – attached. (This is embargoed, so please do not distribute). Its launch aligns with the 69th session of the Commission on the Status of Women, taking place from March 10 to 21, 2025, at the United Nations Headquarters in New York.

This timing underscores the ICMB's commitment to gender equality disussions that encompass a holistic approach to human rights and equality. The New York Declaration seeks to highlight areas where men and boys face unique challenges, including health disparities, educational underachievement, legal inequalities, and societal expectations.

Hope to see you!

Sincerely,

Rebecca Hain
Zoom Conference Emcee
International Council on Men and Boys
rhain@saveservices.org

In a room full of women, school board member pulls his pro-male resolution

Mastodon · 12 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The vice president of San Rafael's school board withdrew a controversial resolution Monday night that would have recognized "the indispensable role of young men in our community and commit[ted] to support their needs and acknowledge their contributions."

Mark Koerner pulled his legislation before the vote in front of a room filled almost entirely with women after facing intense backlash following the introduction of the resolution Friday.
...
During the 40-minute public comment period before the vote, nearly two dozen speakers described the resolution as "strange," "ridiculous," "offensive," "a mockery of women's history month," and "a vanity metric."'

Koerner that month proposed a resolution to instate an "International Boys Day." It was denied. Koerner said he did not intend for the resolution to be divisive and admitted he was "open to revising language."

Smith College to offer course on ‘Marxist Feminism’

Mastodon · 12 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Smith College students can take a course on “Marxist Feminism” in the spring semester as part of the school’s Program for the Study of Women, Gender & Sexuality. Smith College is a private women’s liberal arts college in western Massachusetts.

According to the course description, Marxist feminism begins with the “simple insight” that “capitalism relies on the class politics of unpaid, reproductive ‘women’s work.’” Based on this understanding, Marxist feminists have combatted systems of power and oppression, including “patriarchy, slavery, feudalism and colonialism.”'

India: Woman who falsely accused 12 men of rape and spent month in jail feted by Haryana CM Saini on Women's Day

Mastodon · 12 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That Haryana Chief Minister Nayab Singh Saini conferred the Indira Gandhi Award on Women's Day to a Jind-based social worker once jailed for filing a false rape case has left the state BJP government red-faced. Court documents show Rekha Dhiman had in 2020 falsely accused 12 men of rape, and has previously also filed false police complaints.

On Sunday, the Haryana Chief Minister's Office (CMO) sought a time-bound report on the matter from the women and child development department. The government has also said strict action will be taken against those found guilty in this matter.

Talking to ThePrint Monday, Haryana government media coordinator Ashok Chhabra, confirmed that the CM Saini "has taken this lapse very seriously and sought a report from the concerned department".'

'Captain America' actor insists 'American masculinity' is exceptional, despite being under attack

Mastodon · 15 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Actor Anthony Mackie, who plays the latest incarnation of Marvel's Captain America in "Captain America: Brave New World," warned that American masculinity is both necessary and exceptional.

Mackie has made numerous headlines in recent months, having taken up the iconic role of Captain America from its popular predecessor, Chris Evans, in Marvel movies. On Tuesday, "The Pivot Podcast" released an extensive interview where the actor spoke about both his career and his personal life, including how he raises his sons.

"In the past 20 years, we've been living through the death of the American male," Mackie said. "They have literally killed masculinity in our homes and our communities, for one reason or another, but I raise my boys to be young men."

He explained that he believes becoming young men consists both of maturity and the ability to be a protector.'

A Marin School Board Questioned the Term ‘Toxic Masculinity.’ Then Came the Backlash

Mastodon · 15 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mark Koerner just learned the tough lesson that questioning the term “toxic masculinity” in a liberal school district can spur a reaction that might come across as, well, a bit toxic.

“It was pretty confrontational towards me. You can call it toxic. You can call it whatever you want,” said Koerner, vice president of the San Rafael City Schools’ Board of Education, a day after a throng of district parents vociferously panned his resolution during a school board meeting.

“Offensive,” “embarrassing,” ridiculous,” “tone deaf,” “insensitive at best.” Those were just some of the jabs in the nearly hourlong fusillade of admonishments, mostly from district moms, of Koerner and his ill-fated resolution.

The measure in question, titled “Recognition of the Essential Role and Needs of Young Men in Society,” sought to officially “recognize and support the needs of young men, promoting their mental, emotional, and physical health” and recognize that “the current emotional, educational, and financial state of young men is in critical condition.”

Some parents hinted that Koerner should resign, while others suggested his resolution was another salvo in the culture wars fueled by the anti-woke rhetoric and policies of the Trump administration. One commenter specifically referenced recent remarks by Vice President J.D. Vance encouraging young men to embrace their masculinity.'

Despite ‘Rising Misogyny’, UN Commission Adopts Declaration on Gender Equity

Mastodon · 15 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“The poison of patriarchy is back and is back with a vengeance,” United Nations (UN) Secretary-General António Guterres told the opening of the annual session of the Commission on the Status of Women (CSW) at the UN in New York on Monday.

The CSW takes place amid a major global backlash against women’s rights, from the Taliban banning Afghan women from public life to the Trump administration in the United States pushing back against “diversity, equity and inclusion” (DEI) which has resulted in cuts to research on women’s health.

“Misogyny is on the rise, and so, violence and discrimination,” said Sima Bahous, who heads UN Women, noting that “domestic and ODA [official development assistance] allocations to gender equality remain woefully inadequate and, in some cases, are being cut altogether”.'

Supreme Court Decision on Prosecutor Sexism Could Give Women New Trials

Mastodon · 15 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In January, the U.S. Supreme Court ordered a federal court to consider whether an Oklahoma woman named Brenda Andrew should get a new trial. In 2004, an Oklahoma jury convicted Andrew and sentenced her to die for the killing of her husband three years earlier. She is now the only woman on the state's death row.

However, Andrew has long asserted that prosecutors tainted her case with irrelevant testimony regarding her sex life, mothering skills, and clothing. Earlier this year, the Supreme Court agreed. With this landmark 7–2 ruling, the nation's highest court recognized that harmful gender stereotypes can poison women's criminal trials.

As the co-founder of the Center on Gender and Extreme Sentencing and faculty director of the Cornell Center on the Death Penalty Worldwide, I led a team of researchers that reviewed the cases of nearly fifty women on death rows around the country for evidence of gender bias. We found that juries were allowed to consider women's sexual histories, failings as mothers, choices of intimate partners, and female "wickedness" when deciding how to punish them.'

Globalizing the Sexual Revolution (Part I)

Matt · 16 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Critics of the UN dismiss it as ineffectual for its failures to preserve global peace. Yet meanwhile, UN operatives are active in promoting the Sexual Revolution. Two scholars write that feminists “have turned the United Nations…into the global headquarters of feminist missionaries.” In UN documents, “‘peace’, ‘justice,’ and ‘development’ are linked over and over again with women.”

Some 1,300 “gender focal points” exist to address “women” or “gender” in the UN system. Its agencies are required to incorporate sexual ideology (“gender perspective”) “in all policies and programs.” Hundreds of offices and officials are devoted to the “promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women.” Not a single such agency exists for men (or for families that include men), despite the fact that men are the overwhelming majority of war casualties, AIDS victims, victims of occupational injuries and deaths, prisoners, and more.'

Japan Weak Men’s Center suddenly cancels men-only train event

Mastodon · 18 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many commuter train lines in Japan operate trains with women-only carriages on a daily basis during the morning and evening rush hours, as a countermeasure against gropers, or chikan, as they’re called in Japanese. Chikan use the crowded conditions onboard commuter trains as cover for their heinous acts, making it difficult to identify or confront the perpetrator before they exit the train and make their escape, and so women-only cars are offered as an option for female passengers who feel more at ease with no men in their vicinity.

However, a non-profit organization called the Japan Weak Men’s Center has, for the last few years, organized a men-only train. The organization insists that this is not a form of protest against women-only train cars, having previously issued a statement establishing its opinion on the matter as “Women-only cars are absolutely necessary so that they can feel secure and safe while riding. Such cars should be provided not just at rush hour, but at all times.” Instead, the professed goal of the Japan Weak Men’s Center’s men-only train initiative is to raise awareness that men too can be victims of groping and other forms of sexual harassment or assault, as well as the potentially ruinous effects of being falsely or mistakenly accused of groping.'

We’re getting the ‘manosphere’ all wrong – and here’s why

Mastodon · 18 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We have to examine why the manosphere’s predominantly young male audience is engaging with its content, what about it connects with them, and how it works. We must look beyond the noise and disregard our own reactions to truly grasp its power.

Boys and young men today feel ostracised by what they see as the dominant conversations in society. They find themselves problematised in gender narratives, framed as perpetrators of problematic behaviour, and portrayed as potential aggressors – before they have so much as made friends with a girl.

They’ve fallen behind their female classmates at school. They’re socially isolated – spending increasing amounts of time online, alone in their rooms. They’re prey to unrealistic body image standards, perpetuated by fitness influencers and a whole host of brand and media content (have you noticed how every topless man in a Netflix drama has a six-pack, even if they live in the 17th century?). In effect, boys and young men find themselves removed from society, struggling to meet impossible standards, excluded from the conversation, and failing fast.'

Katherine Ryan review — finely crafted man-bashing comic morsels

Mastodon · 18 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She's got a joke about Carr, a fair few about her "current husband" and childhood sweetheart Bobby, a good line about their son Fred — whom the doctor pronounced not neurodivergent but instead "diagnosed as 'boy'". And if she jokes about how white and well-off all three of her kids are, she has great lines too about how a man like Dave Grohl — "who looks like he sleeps in his car" — can father a love child. The gag is usually that men have somehow inexplicably been allowed to think they are better than second-class citizens.'

UK: Boys growing up without dads are in crisis, report says

Mastodon · 18 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harley Watson was on a path to what he calls a "gangster" life.

The 17-year-old, from Clacton, in Essex, was a "lost and troubled kid", having grown up without a dad.

"I was behaving very badly in school and, if I'd carried on, I would almost certainly have been excluded."

His experience is echoed in a new report, which says young men who lack a positive male role model are in crisis.

Fatherlessness has a significant impact on boys' mental health, education and future prospects, the Centre for Social Justice (CSJ) report found.

Aged 14, Harley joined Lads Need Dads, a local programme that equips boys with life skills and confidence.'

Are mental health issues among men, boys overlooked?

Mastodon · 18 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the discourse around gender equality is gaining momentum, mental health crises among men and boys are being ignored, according to a UK-based psychology expert.

In his latest book, Benjamin Hine, Professor of Applied Psychology at the University of West London (UWL), UK, argued that men struggle to negotiate harmful notions of masculinity and are not included in conversations around gender.

Hine stated that body image, fatherhood, and sexual relationships are the key reasons stressing out men and boys. He called for addressing their concerns without framing them as “the problem”. The book also explored a range of other issues like education, gaming addiction, and homelessness - most of these issues are often ignored because men are too readily seen as ‘the problem’ rather than ‘having problems’, Hine said.'

Crisis in the classroom as number of men becoming secondary teachers plummets to record 35 per cent low while boys turn to toxic male role models in their absence

Mastodon · 18 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of men becoming secondary school teachers in the UK has fallen to a record low - sparking fears boys are turning to toxic male role models in their absence.

Shocking figures show the proportion of male secondary school teachers has dropped from 46 per cent in 1994 to just 35 per cent today.

Experts are concerned this could leave impressionable young minds susceptible to the twisted ideologies of figures such as self-proclaimed misogynist Andrew Tate.

They are now calling for a targeted recruitment campaign to bring more positive role models for boys into the classroom, reports The Sunday Times.

While staff rooms were once closer to an even split of men and women, the number of male teachers has been gradually declining since the early 1990s, according to figures from the Department for Education (DfE).

The statistics are even worse in primary schools with one in seven primary and nursery teachers being men, though this figure has been low for many decades and hardly fluctuates.'

Stop calling teen boys toxic – the problem might be us

Mastodon · 18 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teenage boys today have witnessed the #MeToo movement rightly calling out misogynistic men, but perhaps they haven't fully grasped the nuanced arguments about masculinity's place in the movement. These boys are growing up in an environment where consent is discussed as if they are already guilty – or potentially guilty – of heinous behaviour towards women. The tone feels personal and, at times, accusatory, as if they alone are the problem rather than society's entrenched patriarchal views of ownership over women.

I think this has left many younger Gen Z boys confused, provoking a sense of powerlessness in the face of vocal feminism. I am not blaming feminism per se – women have needed it more than ever to express what they face in society – as patriarchal structures need to be continually challenged.

"We are at a tipping point for boys in history," Chloe Combi, a podcaster, author, and researcher who is an expert on Gen Z, tells me. "We need to take this more seriously. The gender divide is the problem. Girls have been fed this idea that all boys are potential rapists; boys, in turn, were told feminism is dangerous, and girls are humourless.'

Illinois Teacher Charged with Molesting Student Claims She Was Blackmailed by 15 Year-Old

Mastodon · 20 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Christina Formella, a 30 year-old teacher, said she did not assault the teenager while tutoring him at Downers Grove South High School in December 2023 after the student's mother uncovered the alleged assault through text messages on his phone.

The teacher, who is married, reportedly told investigators that the student had used her phone to send himself inappropriate text messages to "blackmail" her.

"She claimed that one day, [the boy] had grabbed her phone unattended, had entered her passcode… had sent the message to his phone, had then deleted the message from her phone, and had saved it to his phone as blackmail," court documents detailed.

Formella has claimed that her looks and caring "too much" made her an easy target of blackmail.

DuPage County Attorney Robert Berlin said, "The allegations against Ms. Formella are extremely disturbing."

"It is alleged that she used her position of trust and authority as a tutor and a coach to sexually assault a minor student. The type of abuse and behavior alleged in this case will not be tolerated," the attorney continued.'

Hilaria Baldwin fires back at critics after snapping at Alec during awkward red carpet interview: ‘Manterrupting’

Mastodon · 20 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hilaria Baldwin has fired back at critics after her recent red-carpet appearance with husband Alec Baldwin in New York City went viral.

The couple were discussing their TLC series “The Baldwins” with “Extra” at the Planet Hollywood Times Square opening party when Hilaria, 41, snapped at her beau, 66, for talking over her.

After a clip of the exchange made rounds on social media, the yoga guru has now set the record straight.

In a video on Instagram, the pair — who have been married since 2012 — were in bed together as they playfully mouthed along to the audio of the viral clip.

Hilaria then asked her husband, “And that is called, what’s the word of the day?”

“Manterrupting,” the “30 Rock” alum responded.'

New York Declaration for Men and Boys

Matt · 20 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The International Council for Men and Boys (ICMB) proudly announces the launch of the New York Declaration for Men and Boys, a significant document addressing crucial global issues impacting males. Released on the 30th anniversary of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, which focused on women and girls, this declaration marks a pivotal moment. It emphasizes the need for genuine equality by highlighting the perspectives and challenges faced by boys and men.

You can read the declaration below, or follow this link to the ICMB web site. Many thanks to both Ed Bartlett and Larry DeMarco for their leadership on this important document.

Please share this.'

Iceland’s minister for children quits after admitting she had a baby with 16-year-old boy

Mastodon · 21 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Iceland’s minister for children has abruptly resigned after shockingly admitting she had a baby more than 30 years ago with a 16-year-old boy — who ended up coughing up child support.

Ásthildur Lóa Thórsdóttir fessed up to the secret relationship, which started when she was a 22-year-old counsellor at the church group the teen attended, on Thursday after Icelandic news outlet RUV was tipped off about the saga.

The 58-year-old politician, who is a member of the country’s center-left People’s Party, confessed that she gave birth to the teen’s baby when she was 23 — and that the boy was in the birthing suite during her labor.

The teen, identified as Eirík Ásmundsson, even paid child support for the next 18 years — despite Thórsdóttir allegedly denying him frequent access to their child after she met and went on to marry her husband, according to the outlet.

“I understand… what it looks like,” Thórsdóttir said after being forced to come clean on the decades-old tryst, arguing it is “very difficult to get the right story across in the news today.”'

Group of Labour MPs seeking to steer young men away from ‘toxic influencers’

Mastodon · 21 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dozens of Labour MPs have joined forces in an effort to steer young men away from “toxic influencers” and the manosphere with positive messages about fatherhood and the promise of better paternity rights, the Guardian has learned.

The new group of predominantly male MPs, many with seats in “red wall” constituencies, are urging Labour to speak to men directly, warning that by “leaving a void” they are allowing figures on the right to dominate the discourse around masculinity.

It comes as a report called for a “boy-positive” learning environment to be developed in schools, while on Wednesday the former England manager Gareth Southgate spoke of his fear that “callous, manipulative and toxic influencers” were taking the place of traditional father figures in society.

The Hepi report calls on the government to develop a strategy for men’s education, overseen by a new minister for men and boys.'

'Adolescence': How young men are being radicalised by social media

Mastodon · 21 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four-part British drama 'Adolescence' debuted last week on Netflix to wide-spread acclaim. It follows the events after a 13-year-old boy murders a girl in his school year. Each episode is a one-take insight into different aspects of the murder's fall-out: from the initial arrest, to the investigation at a school, a psychological assessment of the boy, and his parents' response.

Hanging over the drama is the question of how a culture of toxic masculinity has led to the tragedy. Particularly in the school episode, the influence of male content creators like Andrew Tate on young boys is highlighted as a dangerous radicalising force in British society.

UK Prime Minister Keir Starmer has said that he watched the show with his 16-year-old son and 14-year-old daughter. Asked if he backed 'Adolescence' being broadcast in parliament and in schools, he said: "It's a very good drama to watch. This violence carried out by young men, influenced by what they see online, is a real problem. It's abhorrent and we have to tackle it."'

Ireland: Parents urged to delay smartphones for children amid ‘alarming’ rise in toxic masculinity - Simon Harris

Mastodon · 21 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents should consider delaying access to smartphones for their children due to the “alarming trend” of alpha-male influencers promoting toxic masculinity among boys online, Tánaiste Simon Harris has said.

He was speaking at an event in his hometown of Greystones, Co Wicklow, where all eight primary schools and parents' associations have agreed a “no smartphone voluntary code”.

“The Conor McGregors, the Andrew Tates – these are figures that exploit insecurities and reinforce outdated and dangerous narratives,” he told a gathering of principals, teachers and parents.

“If we don’t get on top of this, the result is a generation of boys who struggle to form healthy relationships, who are less emotionally resilient, and who are at risk of internalising damaging ideas about gender and identity.”'

UK: Young men drawn to toxic masculinity because schools are not ‘boy-positive’

Mastodon · 21 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young men are being drawn to toxic masculinity because schools are not “boy-positive”, a report has claimed.

Research by the Higher Education Policy Institute (Hepi) has found men are being left behind in society because they underachieve at school.

It estimated that about half a million men have missed out on higher education in the past decade.

The report warns of the risk that these “undereducated men” will be driven towards “political extremes” if male underachievement in schools is not resolved.

It comes as the Netflix series Adolescence receives critical acclaim for its plot, which centres on a boy, 13, who is arrested for stabbing a teenage girl after being “indoctrinated” by misogynist influencers.'

I love Adolescence, but culture must stop demonising young men

Mastodon · 23 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yet while I applaud the quality of Philip Barantini's drama, and the importance of the issues it explores, I can't help but feel that this is another cultural work that demonises young boys. Jamie is an angry young man, and I don't mean that in the artistic sense: he has been radicalised by online propaganda, become susceptible to the rise of incel culture, has had his view of women tainted by easy-to-access pornography. The boy, like so many 13-year-olds, is also crippled by a lack of self-esteem.

The columns I have read this week have been along the lines of "why every parent should watch Adolescence"; and yes, it does serve as an effective warning to protect and monitor your child. But we need to make something very clear: Jamie is no everyboy.'

Schools to give boys anti-misogyny lessons to stop toxic masculinity in wake of Netflix hit Adolescence

Mastodon · 23 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Schools are set to give students anti-misogyny lessons in the wake of hit Netflix TV show Adolescence about a teen boy who murders a female classmate.

The classes form part of the government's new relationships, health and sex education (RHSE) guidance, which will be introduced before the end of the academic year.

It comes after Sir Keir Starmer revealed at Prime Minister's Questions on Wednesday that he was watching the mini-series with his two teenagers - and that he backs the show creators' calls for it to be shown in parliament and schools.

The four-episode programme follows the Miller family, whose lives are torn apart when their 13-year-old son Jamie is arrested for stabbing a female classmate to death after being influenced by online misogyny.

Though Labour's classroom guidance is still being developed, it is understood to include content to 'support healthy relationships', to 'enable schools to tackle harmful behaviour and ensure that misogyny is stamped out and not allowed to proliferate', an insider source said, the Times reported.'

Adolescence writer suggests social media ban for kids

Mastodon · 23 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The writer of the Netflix drama Adolescence has suggested that children should be denied access to social media to protect them from toxic ideas online.

Jack Thorne, together with actor Stephen Graham, created the drama series about 13-year-old boy Jamie, who is accused of murdering a girl at his school.

The series tackles themes of bullying, incel culture – incel is short for involuntary celibacy – and navigating social media as a young person.

Bristol-born Mr Thorne said: "We do believe perhaps the answer to this is in parliament and legislating – and taking kids away from their phones in school and taking kids away from social media altogether."'

Adolescence reveals a terrifying truth: smartphones are poison for boys' minds

Mastodon · 23 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Proponents of the first idea want investment in youth centres and mentoring programmes, and to encourage more men into teaching. These notions have much merit, and would of course be good on their own terms. But as a solution to the problem of misogyny among radicalised schoolboys, I lean more towards the ideas offered by the second school of thought: getting them away from their smartphones.'

Boys don’t need anti-misogyny lessons

Mastodon · 24 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This experience came to mind when I saw the news yesterday that “anti-misogyny lessons” may be on their way to British schools, prompted at least in part by the new Netflix series Adolescence, which has dominated the national conversation over the last week. Questions have been asked in Parliament about the rise of influencers who push “toxic masculinity” and encourage “incels” to resent and despise women.

It is clear that there is a problem with many teenage boys in Britain feeling alienated from mainstream society, or coming to believe that it is rigged against them. The deeper question is what ought to be done about this, beyond well-meaning moralism. Public figures talk about “reaching out” to young men; or providing better role models, as former England football manager Gareth Southgate proposed recently; or correcting their allegedly problematic views. But there is a striking vacuum at the heart of this discourse. No one seems genuinely interested in addressing the material concerns at the heart of young male ennui.

That’s because it is hard to even discuss topics such as the mass entry of women into the professions, the disempowering of men in modern divorce law, and the erosion of all-male environments without being accused of wanting to return to the bad old days. Very few people in positions of authority would even know what you meant if you lamented the way in which society increasingly rewards classically feminine characteristics — consensus, inclusivity, and the therapeutic mindset — while penalising typically masculine ones, such as a preference for directness, individual action, and robust but non-personal disagreement.'

Masculinity Will Not Save Men

Mastodon · 24 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The answer to male pain isn't masculinity, but a new political order, where no man or woman is an automaton or object. As analysts like Reeves have argued, it is possible to champion men and boys without sacrificing women and girls to the right-wing. Yet some liberals would rather appease violent masculinity than defeat it. Newsom didn't just interview Kirk; he praised the far-right activist, and attacked trans athletes and "woke culture" in the same episode. Democrats like him agree that wokeness has gone too far, that trans rights and immigration are destabilizing the country and alienating male voters. In searching for common ground with Trump, they align themselves with the same reactionary forces that sell men hierarchy and call it freedom. Join us, the right-wing says, and you can use slurs. But the liberty to insult others is an ersatz version of the real thing.'

Some Women Use Abuse Claims to Destroy Men

Matt · 25 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Join Tom and Ulysses Slaughter for a powerful discussion on false allegations. Ulysses shares his remarkable experience with lies, deception, and the devastating consequences of a false allegation. Watch a clip of his initial encounter with police.'

We need to value and celebrate our boys. Let’s not behave like they’re all latent misogynists

Mastodon · 25 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unless they make a TV drama about an issue, it doesn’t exist. That is where we are now. It took Mr Bates vs The Post Office for people to gasp: “But this was horrendous!”, for the prime minister to announce new legislation to exonerate wrongly convicted subpostmasters and former Post Office CEO Paula Vennells to have her CBE withdrawn. It took Baby Reindeer for us all to realise that, yes, women stalk men too! And maybe it’s time we started taking it seriously?

Then there’s the hit new Netflix show Adolescence, which shines a light on the corrosive impact of social media and misogynistic influencers on teenage boys – and has taken this phenomenon to an almost comedic level. Like coma patients, who have awoken from a 25-year slumber, we’re all suddenly up in arms about this thing called “The Internet”. “These boys who spend their days and nights immersed in a toxic online culture,” came the mass musings. “What if it’s not good for them?”'

Alex Deane FUMES at firefighters painting nails to 'combat toxic masculinity': 'Performative nonsense'

Mastodon · 25 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Commentator Alex Deane has criticised Nottingham Fire and Rescue Service's participation in a nail-painting campaign as "performative nonsense" that fails to address real issues.

The initiative, organised by charity Hard as Nails, saw male firefighters paint their nails to encourage discussion about gender identity and toxic masculinity.

Speaking to GB News, he said: "I think you could speak about this for hours, to be honest with you, but I think it's more misogyny than toxic masculinity.'

UK: Schools should be ‘boy positive’ to tackle male underachievement – report

Mastodon · 25 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A “boy-positive” learning environment should be developed in schools and the Government should appoint a minister for men to tackle gender disparities in education, a report has suggested.

The Higher Education Policy Institute (Hepi) has said a dedicated strategy is needed to tackle attainment differences between men and women to address “one of the most egregious issues” affecting education and society.

There is a risk of “under-educated men veering towards the political extremes” if male underachievement is not tackled, the report has warned.

The think tank’s paper, sponsored by Ulster University, estimates that half a million young men have missed out on higher education over the past decade.

The report, which has been co-authored by male inclusion adviser Mark Brooks, calls for a bigger focus on gender disparities – especially in the educational workforce – in Ofsted inspections, as well as in universities’ access and participation plans.'

I am a white woman. I know for a fact white men lie about their climb to the top. | Opinion

Mastodon · 25 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'White men have been lying about climbing the ladder on their own. They are not successful due to talent, but because they have the access and support necessary to climb, and fewer active barriers.

White men have been getting affirmative action all along from other white men. What the rest of us have been asking for, fighting for, is the same access to and support to climb the ladder.'

Netflix Adolescence: Entertainment or Propaganda?

Matt · 26 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Netflix's limited series Adolescence has sparked widespread debate, particularly regarding its portrayal of masculinity and male-oriented online spaces. The show follows a disturbing premise: a 13-year-old boy, allegedly influenced by the so-called "manosphere," commits a violent crime against a young girl. While media critiques of online radicalization are not inherently problematic, Adolescence appears to go beyond cautionary storytelling and into the realm of ideological propaganda. The series constructs a narrative that pathologizes male identity and spaces dedicated to discussing men's issues. By examining the show's premise, its selective framing of male spaces, and its lack of real-world precedent, it becomes evident that Adolescence is, in fact, a piece of anti-male propaganda.'

What’s Wrong With the White British Boys?

Mastodon · 28 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Britain’s got a problem, and it’s not the one the chattering classes are bleating about. It’s not climate change, pronouns, or gaslighting Netflix series probing what’s gone wrong with boys. No, the real crisis is a hole in the nation’s heart—a gaping wound where loyalty, pride, and (dare one say it) the willingness to defend this Sceptred Isle used to reside. The white working-class lads who once formed the backbone of Britain have had enough. Derided, scorned, and blamed for every ill under the sun, they’re no longer signing up to die for a country that’s made it clear it doesn’t want them. And who can blame them?

Former Defence Secretary Lord Hammond—hardly a rabble-rouser—sounded the alarm in The Telegraph earlier this month. “Young men are unprepared to fight for Britain,” he warned. He’s got a point. Back in 2015, a Gallup poll found just 27% of Brits would willingly take up arms for their country—one of the lowest figures in Europe. That was a decade ago, mind you. Today, you’d be lucky to find a lad from Bolton or Barnsley willing to take a bow for King and Country, let alone a bullet.

And why on earth should they? Thanks to decades of Critical Race Theory, feminist claptrap and the self-loathing taught in our schools, the white, working-class male has morphed into nothing short of a national punchbag. To Westminster liberals, they’re ‘toxic’ and ‘privileged’, forced to subsist on crumbling estates while resources are handed over to those with more exotic backgrounds and skin colours. To employers, they provide no commercial value in terms of woke credibility and are therefore passed over for promotion—or excluded entirely. To the authorities, they’re now the only demographic liable to feel the full force of the law.'

UK: Keir Starmer says all options on table in ‘two-tier’ row with Sentencing Council

Mastodon · 28 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The prime minister has signalled he is prepared to change the law to stop the introduction of “two-tier” sentencing guidelines, after an arm’s-length body resisted pressure to scrap them.

Keir Starmer said “all options are on the table” after the Sentencing Council for England and Wales refused to back down despite pressure from ministers.

The row concerns new guidance aimed at tackling bias and reducing reoffending, which puts more emphasis on the need for pre-sentence reports, which give details of the offender’s background, motives and personal life before sentencing.

Under the change, due to come into force on 1 April, magistrates and judges would be asked to consult the pre-sentence report before determining whether to imprison someone of an ethnic or religious minority, as well as young adults, abuse survivors and pregnant women.

Critics including Robert Jenrick, the shadow justice secretary, said the guidelines amounted to discrimination against white men.'

'Two-tier' justice row: Sentencing Council rejects minister's call for guidance rethink

Mastodon · 30 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sir Keir Starmer today said he was "disappointed" with the Sentencing Council's refusal to change guidance and that "all options are on the table" over how the government might respond.

Ms Mahmood expressed her "displeasure" at the body's recommendations, arguing that "as someone who is from an ethnic minority background myself, I do not stand for any differential treatment before the law".

She had recommended that the guidance be reversed, but because the Sentencing Council is independent, she cannot order them to do so.

Responding to the news that her requests had been rejected, Ms Mahmood said: "I have been clear in my view that these guidelines represent differential treatment, under which someone's outcomes may be influenced by their race, culture or religion.

"This is unacceptable, and I formally set out my objections to this in a letter to the Sentencing Council last week.'

‘Adolescence’ Does a Disservice to Young Men

Mastodon · 30 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Adolescence is the new hit Netflix series everybody’s talking about, based on several instances of teen boys stabbing their female peers in the UK. The murderous protagonist, 13-year-old Jamie, is a white boy from the north of England—a fact many commenters are crying foul over. They say it’s fashionable to demonize white boys as racist, homophobic, or in this case, misogynistic.

But my problem isn’t that white boys are the villains. It’s that the four-episode series demonizes masculinity in general.'

The New Marriage of Unequals

Matt · 31 March 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If the genders were flipped the whole tone would be different. It'd go on about how educational inequality needs to be addressed, etc. Instead the tone fairly settles gleefully for the status quo. Excerpt:

'Once upon a time, it was fairly common for highly educated men in the United States to marry less-educated women. But beginning in the mid-20th century, as more women started to attend college, marriages seemed to move in a more egalitarian direction, at least in one respect: A greater number of men and women started partnering up with their educational equals. That trend, however, appears to have stalled and even reversed in recent years. Gaps in educational experience among heterosexual couples are growing again. And this time? It’s women who are “marrying down.”

Researchers debate whether marriage between educational equals—homogamy—is on the decline. But one thing is clear: The phenomenon of women marrying men with less education than themselves, what academics call “hypogamy,” is on the rise. In fact, women are now more likely to marry a less-educated man than men are to marry a less-educated woman.'

Adolescence demonises white working-class boys

Matt · 1 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I think another difficulty is that it's just hooey to think that the main threat of violence posed to women and girls, particularly girls, is white working-class boys brought up in stable two parent families. Total hooey. The main writer of the series claimed that he based it on three real life cases. In every case, the perpetrator was not a working-class teenage boy from a stable family background. You can see why, you know, the appalling murders by Axel Rudakubana, has prompted a kind of moral panic about this. But this is a complete misdiagnosis of what the causes of that episode were.

And the idea now that this is going to be shown in schools! There's been a real clamour for Adolescence to be shown in schools, to teach boys why they should resist these kind of toxic influences. The idea that that these poor mites are going to have to sit through this and self-flagellate afterwards and explain to the their classmates why masculinity is toxic and should at all costs be handled with tongs – it's awful to think. They're in a bad enough way as it is without being demonised yet again by the mainstream media, their schools and MPs.'

Pete Hegseth Announces He Is Ordering Equal Standards For Men And Women In Combat Roles

Matt · 1 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth will issue a memo setting equal standards for men and women in combat roles across the armed services, he announced on X Monday.

The memo aims to implement the same set of standards for all service members involved in combat, regardless of sex, Hegseth said on X. Hegseth said the services would review the guidance to ensure the “highest and equal standards for men and women in combat.”'

Netflix series 'Adolescence' left me sad and mad as a mother of boys

Mastodon · 1 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Adolescence" promotes a political agenda, and the narrative is built around that. It's a screed about toxic masculinity with a 13-year-old child at its center. Through vignettes about his home life with two flawed but loving parents, school friends and interviews with professionals about his behavior, "Adolescence" makes boys and men out to be problematic, susceptible to toxicity online and seemingly destined for violence.

As a mom of boys, I reject that depressing conclusion. Boys like Jamie do exist, but the data doesn't support it as a widespread trend.

Men are more likely to commit violent crimes than women, but only a small percentage of men are guilty of violence. We should be cautious about passing sweeping laws, like social media and smartphone bans, based on the actions of a relative few.

As parents, we can do far more than restrict our sons' use of phones and social media, although limits are a good idea. We also can appreciate and celebrate the incredible and unique differences between boys and girls, men and women. It's good to feel good about being a male.'

Netflix hit Adolescence to be shown in schools across the UK

Mastodon · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Starmer said it was difficult watching the drama with his 14-year-old daughter and 16-year-old son. But showing the drama widely in schools will "help students better understand the impact of misogyny, dangers of online radicalisation and the importance of healthy relationships," his office said.

"It seems like the whole nation is talking about Adolescence and not just this nation," Starmer said. "As a dad, I have not found it easy to watch this with children, because it connects with the fears and worries that you have as parents and adults."

"There isn't one single policy lever to pull. It's actually a much bigger problem than that," he added. "And that's the devastating effect that the problem of misogyny has on our society."'

Rethink What It Means to Be Prince Charming

Mastodon · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to empowering books for boys, there is a gaping hole in children's literature, according to New York Times bestselling author Francesca Cavallo. With the English-language launch of her first book for boys on March 20, Stellar Stories for Boys of the Future, she hopes to begin to fill that void.

The book uses 12 illustrated stories set on imaginary planets to explore topics like self-acceptance, rejection, friendship, and consent. Its goal is to immunize boys against the constraining and sometimes harmful messages about what it means to be a man in the world.

"[Male characters] are very often portrayed as emotionally immature individuals who must save others because they are incapable of saving themselves," Cavallo tells Parents. "So I felt strongly that boys needed to be inspired to conquer themselves."'

The term 'toxic masculinity' leads boys to feel bad about being a man

Mastodon · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One listener texted into the show to say that the phrase ‘toxic masculinity’ is a “truly horrible, nasty, anti-male term".

Mr Bidwell acknowledged that the use of the term can imply that all masculinity is toxic.

“A true, healthy male is really not toxic,” he said.

“He is a protector; he is someone who will provide huge value to this world.

“I think this is the part of the challenge we’ve got with kids growing up, young boys growing up, is that they’ve had this term brandished.

“They felt that masculinity is bad, or they’re being told masculinity is bad and they’re wondering what they’ve ever done to be labelled that way.”

Mr Bidwell said that while there are definitely masculine traits that “are being displayed in a very toxic way”, that we should be careful to brand all masculinity as toxic.'

Our focus should not be on 'toxic masculinity', but on why men and boys feel so lost

Mastodon · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fast-forward to the 21st century, and it is the male of the species who is now routinely diagnosed with ‘toxic masculinity’, another uniquely gendered problem attributed to ‘too much testosterone’.

Intriguingly, we have only discovered lately — thanks to popular culture — that this evolutionary ‘flaw’ is not only responsible for uncontrollable anger, violence and an irresistible urge to dominate and ‘mansplain’, but it also makes men laughably stupid when it comes to domestic chores, multitasking and parenting (as adverts and rom-coms show us every night online and on TV).

So the story of young Jamie may be a parable for our times, insofar as it exposes the deplorable online recruiting sergeants (like the infamously misogynist Tate brothers), but the Tates and their ilk are catering for a much more worrying underlying — and burgeoning — male resentment, and its alarming ramifications.

So, demonising young men, telling male teenagers they are part of the ‘Patriarchy’ (guilty of their forefathers’ ‘sins’) and crushing their dreams in an anti-masculine ecosystem is not only unfair, it is profoundly dangerous because it nurtures the resentment that the ancient Greeks called the wellspring of war.'

From the police to the prime minister: how Adolescence is making Britain face up to toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thorne has called for the introduction of a “digital age of consent” by banning smartphones for under-16s. Pundits have suggested that social media giants should do more to regulate algorithm-driven extreme content. A recent survey came to the depressing conclusion that more than half of young women are now frightened of their male peers.

The debate was further fuelled by former England football manager Sir Gareth Southgate delivering a televised lecture this week, warning about the dangers of “callous, manipulative and toxic influencers” and demanding better male role models. His pleas were echoed by feminist writer Caitlin Moran, author of What About Men?, on Channel 4 News. She said toxic masculinity was “very joyless and very depressing”, expressing the hope that Southgate’s speech and Adolescence would be a watershed moment.

Safeguarding minister Jess Phillips said: “Netflix’s brilliant Adolescence is not just a drama. It’s a disturbing glimpse into the minds of thousands of young boys warped by the violence and abuse they are witnessing every day online.”'

Dads club in Brixton tackles toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With Netflix smash hit Adolescence highlighting the devastation that can be wrought by toxic masculinity, a school dads club has been showing what positive role models men can be.

Jessop Primary School Dads and Male Carers Club provides a space for men to connect, learn new skills, and spend quality time with their children.

It is celebrating its first anniversary having doubled attendance since opening - with an average of 57 dads, carers, and kids at each session.

According to the club it wants to counter the negative influence of harmful online content.

It was started by parents after the murder of Elianne Andam by teenager Hassan Sentamu in a row over a teddy.

Club founder Scott Leonard said: "Primary school is so informative for young people, where they shape much of their thinking and behaviour."

Just 14% of primary school teachers are male according to the Office for National Statistics.'

No Zuck, brands certainly don’t need more toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 2 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Employers must create work environments that celebrate both ends of the masculine and feminine energy spectrum.

While Meta CEO Mark Zuckerberg used US podcaster Josh Rogan's platform to call for more masculine energy in the workplace, our planet was literally on fire, thanks in part to the ego-driven thinking popularised through toxic masculinity.

When you Google the most powerful CEOs, Zuckerberg’s name is often accompanied by Elon Musk and Jeff Bezos. It’s no coincidence that each of them was present during Donald Trump’s second inauguration and subsequently have announced the dismantling of ESG and DEI initiatives across their companies.

These powerful men are standing by while our planet is faced with existential crises surrounding climate change, extreme economic disparity and global conflicts that have all arisen under a corporate climate forged under toxic masculine energy qualities like unfettered ambition and a winner-takes-all mentality.'

A toxic society, not toxic masculinity, made Andrew Tate famous

Mastodon · 4 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Schools, particularly in Western countries, have become increasingly hostile to traditional expressions of masculinity. Boys are expected to behave like girls — to sit still, be passive and suppress their natural instincts.

The education system is tailored to female learning styles, with an emphasis on verbal skills over hands-on learning, group discussion over competition, and compliance over independence. If a boy struggles in this environment, he isn't given alternative avenues to succeed. Instead, he tends to be medicated, disciplined or labeled as having a behavioral disorder.'

North Dakota breaks ground on first prison designed for women, with focus on rehabilitation

Mastodon · 4 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The rehabilitation of female inmates in North Dakota took a large step forward Wednesday as state officials celebrated the groundbreaking of the first prison in state history designed to house women.

The new Heart River Correctional Center in Mandan will be more than 191,500 square feet and includes space for 304 beds. The project is expected to cost $166.8 million and be complete in fall of 2027.

Gov. Kelly Armstong and other state officials joined Colby Braun, director of the North Dakota Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, and Warden Connie Hackman Rivinius for an event that included women who are in custody.

“Today, we take another step toward a justice system that not only ensures public safety, but also provides opportunities for rehabilitation and second chances,” Hackman Rivinius said. “This project represents more than just walls and infrastructure. It symbolizes the commitment to dignity, safety and the possibility of change.”'

New Tennessee bill could shift custody battles toward equal parenting time

Mastodon · 4 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A custody battle is brewing in Tennessee—not between parents—but in the law itself.

For years, state law has leaned heavily toward mothers in custody cases. But a new bill at the state capitol could change the starting point for custody battles, giving both parents an equal shot at raising their children.

House Bill 1131, sponsored by State Representative Antonio Parkinson (D-Memphis), proposes that judges begin every child custody case with the presumption of 50/50 parenting time, unless there's evidence suggesting otherwise.

"We want Tennessee to recognize the fact that it is in the best interests of the child to have both parents in the child's life," Parkinson told FOX13 in an interview.

Right now, Tennessee law often defaults to awarding mothers full custody—leaving many fathers with limited visitation, even if they're listed on the birth certificate.

Attorney Princess Woodard explained, "In Tennessee, by default, mothers have sole legal and physical custody of the child. And that does not simply change because you're on the birth certificate."'

Lawyers say Oregon genital cutting law discriminates against boys; seek circumcision ban

Mastodon · 4 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oregon laws that forbid genital cutting of girls but stay silent on male circumcision must be expanded to equally protect all children, a new lawsuit asserts.

A father and son who were circumcised at birth decades apart, as well as two brothers whose foreskins were cut off as babies, filed the lawsuit against the state of Oregon on Thursday in Multnomah County Circuit Court.

“It is quite barbaric and strange that we in America cut non-consenting children at a very early age without any medical necessity,” said Lake Perriguey, a civil rights attorney well known for fighting to overturn Oregon’s ban on gay marriage a decade ago.'

Appalling sexism accusations leveled at female Google exec in bombshell new lawsuit

Mastodon · 4 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female Google executive stopped male colleagues working on key projects and denied them promotions, a new discrimination lawsuit has sensationally claimed.

Managing Director of Sales Marta Martinez has been accused of sexism and making her male co-worker's lives miserable by Marco Meier, who worked for the Google advertising team for nearly 13 years before he was fired last year.

The former German pro basketball player claimed he had a promising career with the company but was let go after complaining about gender discrimination from Martinez.

In a bombshell federal lawsuit filed in the Southern District of New York last week, Meier claimed Martinez subjected male employees to a 'relentless campaign' of hostility and discrimination.'

'[Meier] and all male team leaders in Martinez’s department endured a relentless campaign of hostile and disparate treatment, severe harassment, and discrimination based upon gender,' the lawsuit claimed.

Psychiatric Therapy Won’t Heal What Feminism Broke

Matt · 5 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism was never a benevolent movement that simply lost its way. It was, from the beginning, an ideology of resentment. It tells women they must view men with suspicion. That they should never be vulnerable, never sacrifice, never trust. By equating success with male-dominated spheres, it wires women to view any trade-off as a loss and at every turn, resentfully ask, “Why should I, and not him?”

This ideology has profoundly shaped the way women approach relationships. They are told to “love themselves before they can love someone else.” That they should spend years alone, single, working on self-acceptance. But how does that work in practice? If a woman is overweight, does standing naked in front of a mirror and repeating “I love myself” change anything? Rarely, because there are inherent truths and knowledge. And denying that things can be better or worse is a postmodernist fantasy.

Feminism, like any pathogen, infects the worldview of those who adopt it. Depending on personality structure and competence level, living by its principles leads to psychopathology unresponsive to medication. It warps decision-making and pits women against their own psychological needs and against the opposite sex—without whom these needs can never be fulfilled.'

Former judge denounces Labor for pushing feminist ideology into the Family Court

Matt · 5 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The Family Court system is in enormous trouble.' That is a momentous statement given that the speaker, Adelaide barrister Stuart Lindsay, is a former Family Court judge. But there's much more… This experienced insider blames the parlous state of this vital institution on a campaign led by the Labor Party to 'promote a particular pronounced feminist ideology in the Family Law Act'.

Lindsay spent ten years, from 2004-14, working as a judge in the Federal Circuit Court dealing mainly with family court matters. He's now back working as special counsel for a local firm on the coalface of a system he sees as being in dire straits.

He's been right there, witnessing the destructive impact of feminist ideology infiltrating the family law system, destroying the lives of so many ordinary families. Lindsay explains the big push started with Prime Minister Julia Gillard, but Kevin Rudd was right on board, as successive Labor governments have 'tried to ensure judges provide for right outcomes in accordance with the invariably feminist ideology'.'

This middle-class moral panic about ‘toxic masculinity’ is growing unhinged

Mastodon · 6 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What on earth has got into our ruling class these past two weeks? We’ve had the Prime Minister ordering every secondary school in the land to show its pupils Adolescence. We’ve had Newsnight asking teenage boys when they last cried. And we’ve had anti-terror police telling the nation’s parents to report their sons to Prevent if they catch them watching “misogynist videos online”. Listening to these people’s ever more hysterical raving, you’d think that the single greatest threat facing our country was “toxic masculinity”.

It isn’t, of course. But then, that’s the very reason why middle-class liberals are so eagerly stoking this moral panic. They want us to talk about fashionable Netflix dramas, “incels” and Andrew Tate in order to stop us talking about certain problems that are far worse.

For all their ostensible anxiety about “toxic masculinity”, middle-class liberals are rarely happier than when they’re lecturing us about it – because it’s slap-bang in the middle of their comfort zone. Here is an issue where the villains almost invariably seem to be white and male, their crime is old-fashioned sexism, and the proposed solution is a crackdown on social media. All perennial favourite themes of middle-class liberals.'

Warning that Adolescence may 'do more harm than good' if Stephen Graham Netflix show is shown to children

Mastodon · 6 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the plan may have unintended consequences, warns Sophie King-Hill from the health services management centre at Birmingham University. She said: "Showing the series as a teaching tool risks framing boyhood as monolithic, with one particular – and problematic – way of being a boy."

And she points out that good though the drama is, it was not created as an educational resource or with the robust research, evaluation and consultation to be used as such in schools. The series gives an extreme and fictional portrait of one teenager drawn into the world of the manosphere, but Ms King-Hill stresses that not all boys will see themselves reflected in the Netflix portrayal.

"As a researcher working on masculinity and misogyny, my concern is that showing the series in schools may lead boys to think that they are all perceived as potential threats," she said.

"Showing the series as a teaching tool risks framing boyhood as monolithic, with one particular – and problematic – way of being a boy. Already, a broad-brush, blame-heavy approach is often taken to boys in response to issues relating to sexual harassment and violence."'

Do horrified viewers of the fictional Netflix series ‘Adolescence’ care about real adolescent boys?

Mastodon · 6 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

But ideological versions of feminism are analogous to a particular kind of religion (which has a history that goes back not centuries but millennia). I refer to fundamentalism, which relies on a profoundly dualistic vision of the world: one in which “we” are perpetually victimized and “they” are perpetually “privileged.” All of history is therefore a titanic war between “us” and “them,” one that will end ultimately with “our” victory (reward) and “their” defeat (punishment).

In the case of feminist ideology, women are innately good (the source of all virtue and happiness) and men innately evil (the source of all vice and suffering). I could go on and on, but I have already made my point. This worldview, feminist ideology, has come to dominate every Western country by infiltrating almost every institution (from legislatures and the courts of law to journalism and the court of public opinion, from academic and elite culture to popular culture). Its form of dualism is gynocentrism. And the fallout from pervasive gynocentrism is misandry. This is the environment in which boys grow up, although some of them seek refuge in easily accessible sources of misogyny. As comments on Adolescence (and other phenomena) often observe, misogyny is alive and well. But so is misandry. Standing sadly in the corner, this proverbial “elephant,” is largely unacknowledged even by those who claim to care about boys and men—let alone by those who have ideological or even professional investments in exposing misogyny. The question is not whether misandry, too, exists but why it exists and what dangers it presents not only to boys and men but to society as a whole.

Young white men do have problems, but they need to man up

Mastodon · 6 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last weekend I was on a panel at the Oxford Literary Festival (sponsored by The Telegraph, if you please) and the topic was the Southport riots. In considering the subject, the excellent Tony Sewell, aka the Lord Sewell of Sanderstead, aired the view that one big cause of social unrest in Britain is that white working class boys are left behind. They're bottom of the barrel, whether in school, higher education prospects, health, happiness, or projected income. Sewell, the chair of the 2021 Commission on Race and Ethnic Disparities report, knows the stats well. His report found that "systemic racism" is not what lies behind disparities in outcome in Britain: it's class, and poor white youth, mostly boys, do by far the worst.'

UK: Why men are so unhealthy - and what can be done

Matt · 6 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the UK men are more likely to smoke, drink alcohol, use drugs and have high cholesterol and blood pressure.

These are major contributors to the fact men have a lower life expectancy than women - by four years - and are nearly 60% more likely to die prematurely before the age of 75 with heart disease, lung cancer, liver disease and in accidents.

Prof Alan White, who co-founded the Men's Health Forum charity and set up a dedicated men's health centre at Leeds Beckett University, says the issue needs to be taken more seriously.

He cites the pandemic as an example, pointing out that 19,000 more men than women died from Covid. "Where was the outrage? Where was the attention?"

He says it is too easy to blame men's poor health on their lifestyles, arguing "it's much more complex than that."'

Are male teachers the answer to fighting toxic masculinity?

Mastodon · 7 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Podcast here.

'Could having more male teachers help with toxic masculinity?

Education Secretary Bridget Phillipson sparked a discussion with her comments calling for more men to become teachers, so that young boys have better role models.

Is this the case here too? And what can be done to attract and encourage men into classrooms?

Principal and Host of ‘If I were Minister for Education’ Podcast, Simon Lewis, joins Seán to discuss.'

We need more male teachers so British boys have role models, says minister

Mastodon · 7 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The fate of boys “is a defining issue of our time”, according to the education secretary, Bridget Phillipson, as she calls for more men to become teachers to combat “toxic” behaviours.

Speaking at a conference on Thursday, Phillipson will warn that boys and young men growing up in Britain need stronger role models to counteract the dangers they face, illustrated by the Netflix series Adolescence.

“It’s clear the behaviour of boys, their influences, and the young men they become, is a defining issue of our time,” Phillipson is to say, adding: “We need to raise a generation of boys with the strength to reject that hatred – curiosity, compassion, kindness, resilience, hope, respect.”'

UK: Misogyny bill is set for the ‘woke’ scrapheap

Mastodon · 8 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How can we legislate to criminalise misogyny when we can’t even agree what a woman is?” So said one SNP backbench MSP, commenting on The Times’story that Nicola Sturgeon’s proposed bill outlawing hatred of women has been shelved. It is destined for the scrapheap of “woke” legislation, we are told. Yet the irony is that it is another of Sturgeon’s quintessentially woke enthusiasms that has scuppered it.

The misogyny bill has been kicking around St Andrew’s House since March 2022 when St Nicola’s favourite barrister, Baroness Kennedy of The Shaws KC, proposed imprisoning men for up to seven years for “stirring up hatred” against women. However, Humza Yousaf, following his boss, said that “of course” transgender women would be protected by the legislation, as well as “cis” women.

Many women loathe that appellation and were furious at the thought that natal men could be protected from abuse by other men. Imagine how the trans doctor Beth Uptonmight have deployed a misogyny law against the nurse, Sandie Peggie, in that stushie over changing rooms in a Kirkcaldy hospital? Isla Bryson might have accused Sturgeon of misogynistic hate crime for sending him — sorry, her — to a male prison.'

Philipines: Bill seeking to disqualify misogynist candidates filed in House

Mastodon · 8 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A party-list lawmaker on Tuesday filed a bill seeking to disqualify local and national candidates who make misogynistic or discriminatory remarks during election campaigns.

Gabriela Rep. Arlene Brosas filed at the House of Representatives Bill 11498, which proposes amendments to Sections 68 and 261 of the Omnibus Election Code.

The bill seeks to make misogynistic and gender-based harassment during campaigns a ground for disqualification and an election offense.'

What our reaction to Adolescence tells us about our fear of boys, sex and the internet

Matt · 9 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Instead, this policy response draws on a history of moral panic about young people and the internet. Young people are a “problem” we can “fix”, while ignoring deeper social and cultural issues.

This framing of boys and the internet ignores their capacity, skills and how they engage in the digital world. It also ignores the many ways in which they learn about relationships.

Most importantly, it risks further marginalising boys from the conversations and education they urgently need.'

Sea Change as Lawmakers Set Out to Remedy Disparities Affecting Men

Matt · 9 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Previously, persons had assumed that men were the “winners” on the full range of gender issues. But a recently published analysis identifies 12 areas in which men are substantially lagging behind women. These disparities include lower enrollment in higher education, five-year shorter life span, dramatically higher rates of homelessness, and nine other areas (2).

Last month the International Council for Men and Boys released a historic New York Declaration for Men and Boys, designed to galvanize global attention about the pressing needs facing men (3).

Both Democratic and Republican leaders have become actively engaged in this debate.'

The Real War Against Women: Feminism

Matt · 10 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a deeply unsettling irony buried beneath modern discourse about female empowerment. Women are told they are strong, capable, and deserving of equal opportunity—but they are also conditioned to outsource responsibility for their lives to systems that can never truly protect them.

They are warned about men, encouraged to seek institutional solutions to personal problems, and taught to distrust the very tools that would make them independent. The bitter truth is this: the most persistent obstacle to female empowerment is not some grand patriarchal conspiracy. It is other women—and the belief systems they promote, police, and perpetuate.

The modern woman has been sold two contradictory ideas. First, that she is autonomous and powerful. Second, that she must rely on external systems—government, corporate protections, or cultural pity—to protect that power. The result? A growing population of women who demand respect but forfeit responsibility, who speak of strength but embrace dependence, and who undermine one another with far more enthusiasm than any man ever could.'

India: Tackling toxic masculinity must be a national priority

Mastodon · 10 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Being a young person today is anything but simple. For many young Indians, adolescence is no longer a carefree phase but a high-pressure journey marked by academic stress, social media scrutiny, and emotional isolation. Beneath the surface of exam scores, digital connectivity, and outward success lies a growing undercurrent of anxiety, depression, and emotional struggle, too often overlooked or misunderstood. India is facing a silent yet staggering mental health crisis — one that is disproportionately impacting its youth.
...

Changing the culture around mental health also requires reshaping the way we talk about masculinity. Tackling toxic masculinity must be a national priority — not just by revising textbooks, but by promoting healthier models of masculinity that embrace vulnerability, empathy, and emotional growth. Community initiatives, media campaigns, and mentorship programmes can help shift mindsets, especially when male role models speak openly about mental health. But these cultural shifts will mean little without real investment. India must significantly boost its mental health budget to strengthen infrastructure, train more professionals, and expand access to care — particularly in rural and underserved areas. A lack of funding is no longer just an administrative gap; it's a life-threatening obstacle for millions of young people in need.'

‘Mansplaining’ doesn’t constitute gender harassment

Mastodon · 10 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female doctor’s claims of gender discrimination and retaliation failed to survive summary judgment when she couldn’t demonstrate that workplace tensions stemmed from gender-based animus rather than general interpersonal conflicts, the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled.

The decision in O’Horo v. Boston Medical Center Corporation reinforces that while Title VII prohibits discrimination based on protected characteristics, it does not serve as a “general civility code” for the workplace. Employers can take steps to address interpersonal conflicts while remaining vigilant against genuine discrimination.

“[The plaintiff’s] claim rests, in large part, on incidents with no apparent relation to her gender, and she makes no effort — beyond pointing to her subjective beliefs — to demonstrate such gender-based discriminatory animus,” Gelpí stated.

“Take first [the plaintiff’s] contention that she felt [her colleague] ‘mansplained’ to her on one occasion and, throughout 2018 and 2019, treated her worse than her male colleagues. But harassment coupled with a plaintiff’s subjective belief of discrimination ‘doesn’t tell us much,’ because ‘there is a plethora of reasons’ why [her colleague] could have treated [the plaintiff] poorly ‘that have no nexus to her gender,’” Gelpí said.'

Woman, 20, sentenced for false rape report that jailed innocent man for a month

Mastodon · 10 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman was sentenced for a false rape report that resulted in an innocent man being jailed for a month.

According to the Bucks County District Attorney's Office, a 20-year-old woman from Bristol Township was sentenced to 45 days to 23 months in Bucks County Correctional Facility for filing a false police report that led to an innocent man being jailed for a month.

Anjela Borisova Urumova pled guilty in January to seven misdemeanor counts, including false alarm to an agency of public safety, tampering with or fabricating physical evidence, false reports, and unsworn falsification to authorities.

In addition to her jail sentence, Common Pleas Judge Stephen A. Corr ordered Urumova to serve one year of probation, undergo a mental health evaluation, avoid contact with the victim and his family, and pay $3,600 in restitution to the victim.

"Not only did this targeted false report impact the victim and his family in unimaginable ways, but there is also a profound ripple effect," said District Attorney Jennifer Schorn.

"A crime like this can shatter the community’s confidence in the system. It can jeopardize prosecutions of legitimate crimes of sexual violence."'

Time for ‘shock therapy’ — how to get our 7 million dropout men back to work

Matt · 11 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No inquiries to such men re WHY they are not inclined to work? Think we need to start there. Excerpt:

'President Trump wants to get America’s vast army of “dropout” men back into the workforce. Attention to this problem is long overdue.

Nearly 7 million men in the prime of life — over a tenth of the 25-to-54 age group — are neither working nor looking for work these days.

But Team Trump is trying to fix the problem with the wrong tools.

They argue that trade policy (tariffs) and industrial policy (special treatment for manufacturing) will reverse the long-term flight from work by men, by creating high-paying jobs to lure them back to work.

This approach may sound sensible to some. Unfortunately, it is likely to fail — even though the White House could succeed through other pro-work policies.'

Liberal author tells 'The View' there's 'no such thing' as toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 11 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A liberal guest on Friday's "The View" pushed back on the idea that "toxic masculinity" is a problem for society.

Co-host Sara Haines asked NYU business professor and author Scott Galloway about his new book, "Notes on Being a Man," in which he urges men to embrace healthy masculinity.

She referenced the current cultural spotlight on masculinity, as seen in the popular Netflix show "Adolescence," and in how Democratic governors like Michigan's Gretchen Whitmer and Maryland's Wes Moore have recently launched programs to help young men in their respective states.

Galloway brought up how men are far more likely than women to commit suicide, face addictions and be incarcerated. He argued that young men need a positive view of masculinity to guide their lives.'

Newsom Tries to Understand ‘Bro Culture.’ Will It Change Him in the Process?

Matt · 12 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first three guests on Mr. Newsom’s show — officially titled “This Is Gavin Newsom” — were conservative men who have enraged Democrats in the past. Besides Mr. Kirk, who has criticized gay marriage and diversity programs, there was also Steve Bannon, an architect of the MAGA movement, and Michael Savage, a conservative talk show firebrand.

Concepts of masculinity have been a recurring theme with both conservative and liberal guests, as Mr. Newsom has delved into the “bro culture” that helped Mr. Trump defeat former Vice President Kamala Harris.

“This issue of young men and what’s happened to our party is deeply on my mind and will be deeply part of my podcast,” Mr. Newsom said in an interview with The New York Times. What he’s trying to explore, he added, are “the things that we’re uncomfortable exploring.”'

Pennsylvania judge Sonya McKnight convicted of shooting sleeping boyfriend in the head

Matt · 12 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania judge accused of shooting her ex-boyfriend in the head while he slept may spend decades behind bars — as she was convicted of attempted homicide and aggravated assault charges Wednesday.

After two hours of deliberations, a jury convicted Sonya M. McKnight, a magisterial judge in Dauphin County, on both charges she faced — one count of attempted murder and one count of aggravated assault.

McKnight, 58, who has held the elected role since 2016, was taken away in handcuffs after the trial judge rejected a defense request that she be released.'

Galloway says three things are contributing to young men not being successful

Matt · 13 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. It's good the discussion is at least getting started. Let's see if they'll actually get around to poking the tiger, ie, addressing the negative effects of feminism on men.

Mike Johnson Says Men Need to Stop 'Playing Video Games All Day' and Get to Work: 'They're Draining Resources'

Matt · 15 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Men really do need their own political party. Excerpt:

'House Speaker Mike Johnson defended Republican efforts to attach work requirements to Medicaid, suggesting that young American men are wasting their lives "playing video games all day" instead of working.

Johnson's remarks came as House Republicans pushed forward a budget framework that would help finance President Donald Trump's tax cuts, with plans to slash federal spending by trillions. GOP leaders are eyeing $880 billion in reductions to Medicaid, a move critics warn could gut health coverage for millions of low-income Americans.

Johnson attempted to sidestep claims of direct benefit cuts, instead blaming "able-bodied young men" for taking advantage of a program he said was meant for single mothers, the elderly, and people with disabilities.

"They're draining resources from people who actually do [need it]," Johnson said. "So if you clean that up... you save a lot of money and you return the dignity of work to young men who need to be at work instead of playing video games all day."

Despite Johnson's insistence that, "No one has talked about cutting one benefit in Medicaid," the work requirement would threaten health care access for millions, including Americans that are temporarily unemployed after being laid off.'

‘We can’t pit boys against girls’: headlines overshadow struggles of a generation of girls

Matt · 16 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. As predictable as the sunrise, turn an issue facing boys into a concern for girls. Excerpt:

'But while public debate has focused on the crisis facing boys, a series of less remarked upon statistics suggest that girls are far from being the winners of a zero-sum game. The Children’s Commissioner for England told the Guardian this week that the current debate risked pitting boys and girls against each other – to the detriment of both.

“This is an optimistic generation, eager for change – but both boys and girls are facing pressures and influences that previous generations never imagined,” said Rachel de Souza. “We can’t pit boys against girls, because these are shared issues for every child.”

Last month a report from the Centre for Social Justice argued that the last 100 years had “been marked by great leaps forward in outcomes and rights for women” but in this generation “it is boys who are being left behind”. The Lost Boys report noted that in education girls were outperforming boys “from nursery to university”, while men aged 16-24 were more likely to be unemployed than young women, and if in full-time work, paid on average 9% less.'

Women's Aid Boyz Only Programme tackles harmful masculinity and mental health

Mastodon · 17 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women's Aid South Lanarkshire & East Renfrewshire's Boyz Only programme is a 6-session support which aims "to provide boys with a safe space to explore their gender and world view".

It also explores how boys can change themselves, their behaviour and challenge those around them to help end inequality. It promotes self-care and gives time and attention to boys who perhaps have never been afforded an individual focus on themselves.

A spokesperson for Women's Aid said: "In today's society, boys and young men are expected to be masculine with unrealistic expectations. These expectations dictate how boys and men should act, think, and feel which ultimately negatively affects men, women, boys and girls. If we do not tackle this issue then gender based violence, misogyny, incel behaviour, gang culture and poor mental health will continue to rise, and everyone will be affected".'

More than 20 colleges join initiative to address male enrollment decline

Mastodon · 17 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new partnership between nearly two dozen colleges and universities aims to tackle the steep decline in male enrollment — an effort that is very much needed, two scholars told The College Fix.

In a stark shift in higher education demographics, men are now earning two of every five college degrees, and are more likely than women to drop out of college. These trends are highlighted in a recent report from the University of Tennessee at Knoxville and the American Institute for Boys and Men.

With college enrollment dropping and men making up the vast majority of that decline, the university and institute decided to launch the Higher Education Male Achievement Collaborative in October.'

Young men's financial insecurity helping to fuel anti-feminism in the EU, research claims

Mastodon · 17 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The financial insecurity experienced by young men is partly to blame for the rise of anti-feminist discourse, a new study has claimed.

The report, which is published by the European Policy Centre (ECP), suggests that working-class men without university degrees have been particularly affected by declining wealth and employment rates over the past two decades.

"What we do know is that young men face difficulties in terms of income, wealth, purchasing power, access to housing and above all education," said Javier Carbonell, the ECP analyst who wrote the study.

"And they have fallen behind young women in this respect", he added.

The gender gap in education continues to widen in favour of women, Carbonell noted.

In Europe, 48% of people aged between 25 and 34 have a degree, but only 37% of them are men.'

Feminism's war on boys has left them nowhere to be men

Matt · 18 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Good commentary discussing "Adolescence", "the manosphere", and feminism's effects on society.

Russia snatches men from gyms in Putin’s new conscription drive

Matt · 19 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During an evening workout at Spirit Fitness in south-east Moscow, gym-goers were suddenly told to drop to the floor.

This was not part of their training, however, but an instruction from Russian police hunting for illegal immigrants and military draft dodgers.

Such raids have been reported across multiple Russian cities for weeks, human rights campaigners say, even before Vladimir Putin signed an order to conscript 160,000 men in the country’s biannual call-up, the largest since 2011.'

Netflix's "Adolescence"

Matt · 19 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My initial suspicion, before watching the series, was that the motivation behind this rather nasty series was to propagandize the UK public into support for even more draconian censorship laws – with "the manosphere" being particularly targeted. The recent Online Safety Act was not draconian enough for many of the usual suspects. However, after watching the series I see that "the manosphere" theme was not presented very forcibly and was only one of several potential motivations for the killing. Another theme was the father's explosive temper, which the scene with the female psychologist revealed was shared by the boy, Jamie. But that is actually even worse because it centres Jamie's motivation on masculinity itself, the same narrative that has been poisoning our culture for decades. Either way it can only be seen de facto as the blackest propaganda, whatever the writers intended.'

We need to talk about Feminism...

Matt · 19 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some commentators claim that feminism is a dangerous ideology. But I, for one, have never found their arguments especially convincing. In this essay, I'd like to address the same question, but by evaluating feminism against the "red flags" just mentioned – starting with worrying signs and moving through increasingly dangerous ones. I'm not suggesting feminism is committing genocide, but it is time to ask whether it shows signs of travelling a dangerous path. After all, even the well-intentioned may stray.'

Is Feminism a Healthy Movement for Social Change?

Matt · 20 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We have not had a single healthy mainstream identity movement since that time. All, including feminism/the women's movement and all of the movements for racial equality, culminating in the Woke movements of today, have been founded on a moral dichotomy, a dividing of the world into guilty oppressors/perpetrators and innocent victims, a division built not on behavior but on identity. This founding analysis builds moral inequality in at the movement foundations; since victims are morally innocent and oppressors are guilty, the purported vision of equality is rendered unobtainable, forever out of reach. What equality can exist between oppressors and victims? Such movements are pathological and that is why, despite all of the equality legislation and the trillions of dollars spent on amelioration programs, we still hear constantly that equality remains far away.'

Misandry Is the Oxygen: Why Boys Are Turning to Misogyny, and What No One Wants to Admit

Matt · 20 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's be clear: Misogyny is real. An angry man—or worse, an angry young man—can be incredibly dangerous. There's no denying the threat misogynistic violence poses. But while the world shouts about misogyny, barely anyone asks the harder question:

Why are boys becoming more misogynistic?

Why, in a supposedly progressive, inclusive, and compassionate society, are we seeing this rise?

The answer, I believe, is uncomfortable but simple:

Misandry is not just tolerated today—it's culturally embedded, emotionally normalized, and increasingly rewarded. And misandry fuels modern misogyny. If misogyny is fire, misandry is the oxygen. It keeps it alive. It feeds it. It isolates boys until they burn.'

‘We don’t have a cultural place for men as victims’: why men often don’t tell anyone about sexual abuse

Matt · 20 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Australia, it’s estimated almost one in five boys (18.8%) experience child sexual abuse. And at least one in 16 men (6.1%) experience sexual violence after age 15.

However, many boys and men don’t tell others about these experiences. Studies show men are less likely to disclose sexual abuse and assaults than women.

It also takes boys and men longer to first disclose sexual abuse or assaults. On average, men wait 21 years before telling anyone about being abused.

This is a problem because talking to others is often an important part of understanding and recovering from these traumatic experiences. When boys and men don’t discuss these experiences, it risks their mental health problems and isolation becoming worse and they don’t get the support they need.'

Why US Men Think College Isn’t Worth It Anymore

Matt · 21 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men opting out of college isn’t a new phenomenon: Women have outnumbered men in undergraduate enrollment for about 40 years, and the gap continues to widen. Almost half of women age 25-34 have earned a bachelor’s degree, according to Pew Research Center data; for men the rate is 37%. Between 2011 and 2022, the number of Americans attending college dropped by 1.2 million, with men accounting for almost the entirety of that drop.

As US men forgo higher education, the demographic group as a whole has lost ground in other areas too. Working-class men today are less likely to be employed than they were four decades ago, their inflation-adjusted wages have barely budged in more than 50 years, they’re less prone to get married or have children, and an increasing number report having no close friends. Men are also four times more likely than women to die by suicide. Data show that men age 18-30 spent an average of 6.6 nonsleeping hours alone each day in 2023, 18% more than they did in 2019 and over an hour more than women did, according to a report by the Aspen Economic Strategy Group.'

Facebook vid: violent woman recorded assaulting cop, lying, accusing him of attempted rape

Matt · 21 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. You need a Facebook account, probably, to see it. #DontBelieveAllWomen

Australia: Why no Minister For Men?

Matt · 21 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Aired 4 days ago on Sky News.

Shock court ruling for snarly sorority girl who pepper sprayed Uber driver

Matt · 22 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The former sorority girl who attacked a Muslim Uber driver with pepper spray in New York City received a shockingly light punishment after taking a plea deal.

Jennifer Guilbeault, 23, was filmed spraying mace on 45-year-old Shohel Mahmud during a hate-fueled late-night ride in Midtown Manhattan on July 31.

Disturbing footage captured Guilbeault stepping toward the driver's seat and unleashing the pepper spray on Mahmud.

She was charged with a hate crime for the assault but vehemently denied her actions were motivated by race.

Guilbeault appeared subdued in court on Monday. She wore a buttoned-up cream sweater and black pants, and her long hair was tucked behind her ears.

She entered a plea deal to a lesser charge of second-degree aggravated harassment at the hearing and was granted minor consequences for the attack.

As part of the deal, she is required to do 100 hours of community service, complete an alcohol abuse program, attend an anti-bias program and have no new arrest for a year.'

Most young Aussie men are turning to masculinity influencers, and it's impacting their mental health

Mastodon · 23 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Online "masculinity" content is mainstream and wide-ranging — far broader than the toxic Andrew Tate style manosphere or incel culture touched on in the hit Netflix series Adolescence.

It includes fitness and wellbeing, relationship and career advice, personal discipline and self-improvement.

A new report out today shows more than two thirds (68 per cent) of young Australian men engage with masculinity influencers and it's shaping their identity.

The Movember Institute of Men's Health surveyed more than 3,000 men aged 16 to 25 across Australia, the UK and the US to find out what impact such content was having on their lives.

"We came in with a health lens. That is the key here. No one has done that," said Dr Zac Seidler, global director of men's health research at Movember.

He said getting rid of content on social media because it was "dangerous" was unhelpful, as there was no causal evidence to suggest that was the answer.'

Women who hate men: a comparative analysis across extremist Reddit communities

Mastodon · 23 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the present online social landscape, while misogyny is a well-established issue, misandry remains significantly underexplored. In an effort to rectify this discrepancy and better understand the phenomenon of gendered hate speech, we analyze four openly declared misogynistic and misandric Reddit communities, examining their characteristics at a linguistic, emotional, and structural level. We investigate whether it is possible to devise substantial and systematic discrepancies among misogynistic and misandric groups when heterogeneous factors are taken into account. Our experimental evaluation shows that no systematic differences can be observed when a double perspective, both male-to-female and female-to-male, is adopted, thus suggesting that gendered hate speech is not exacerbated by the perpetrators' gender, indeed being a common factor of noxious communities.'

'Andrew Tate phenomena' surges in schools - with boys refusing to talk to female teacher

Mastodon · 23 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 5,800 teachers were polled as part of the survey by the NASUWT teaching union, and nearly three in five (59%) said they believe social media use has contributed to a deterioration in pupils' behaviour.

Andrew Tate was referenced by a number of teachers who took part in the survey, who said he had negative influence on male pupils.

One teacher said she'd had 10-year-old boys "refuse to speak to [her]...because [she is] a woman".

Another teacher said "the Andrew Tate phenomena had a huge impact on how [pupils at an all-boys school] interacted with females and males they did not see as 'masculine'".

While another respondent to the survey said their school had experienced some incidents of "derogatory language towards female staff...as a direct result of Andrew Tate videos".'

Militants in Indian Kashmir segregate men from women and children before opening fire

Matt · 24 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. When women are targeted, it's called "gendercide" or "femicide". When men are targeted, it's business as usual. Excerpt:

'Militants who killed 26 people in India's Kashmir region separated the men from the women and children and asked the men their names before shooting them at close range, security officials and survivors said on Wednesday.

About 1,000 tourists and 300 local service providers were in the Baisaran Valley - known as mini Switzerland for its lush hilltop meadow, surrounded by dense pine forests - when three gunmen launched the Tuesday attack, the worst in India in nearly two decades.'

The Anti-Male Propaganda in Netflix's Adolescence

Matt · 26 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'In this discussion, Hannah Spier, Janice Fiamengo, and Tom Golden take a critical look at the anti-male messaging embedded in the Netflix series Adolescence. Together, they unpack the show's characters, storylines, and the implausibility of the events depicted, highlighting how such narratives reinforce harmful cultural stereotypes about boys and men. The conversation shines a light on how entertainment media can quietly shape public perceptions, often portraying male characters as either predatory, weak, or disposable, while sidelining the real experiences and complexities of young men.'

Domestic violence delusions

Matt · 28 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"You can't hand out domestic violence orders like parking tickets." Well, that's exactly what they have in mind for residents of our Deep North.

The speaker was Terry O'Gorman from the Queensland Council for Civil Liberties, protesting on television news about the latest domestic violence madness taking over his state. Under sweeping "reforms" announced earlier this month, police officers will be able to hand out 12-month Police Protection Directives on the spot – bypassing current court processes.

The Queensland Police Union has been running a grim television campaign featuring a full screen shot of a closed fist and a vicious, snarling man – making the case that police are drowning in domestic violence cases, which they say comprise up to 90% of their workload.'

Damsels in Excess: A Powerful Critique of Modern Feminism, Its Myths, MGTOW and Men's Rights

Matt · 28 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Just began reading this book, published in late 2024. I've read enough to be able to recommend it. Excerpt:

'For decades, society has been shaped by a matriarchy, a narrative that pushes men aside and elevates women to positions of unchecked power. Damsels in Excess pulls back the curtain on the rise of feminism and its Marxist roots, exploring how a movement originally meant for equality has instead created a world where men are demonized and women are made miserable. This is the book that cuts through the propaganda to reveal the catastrophic consequences of a feminist-driven society.

At its core, Damsels in Excess tackles the crisis of masculinity and the displacement of young men. Boys are falling behind in education, career prospects, and even basic social skills. The male crisis has been ignored for too long. “We've created a generation of young men who have been abandoned by society, told to apologize for their very existence, and forced into a role of silent suffering,” Scheffer writes, shedding light on a troubling truth—young men today have no clear path forward in a society that has turned its back on them.

Meanwhile, fathers, the backbone of families and societies, are being slandered and discarded. The “deadbeat dad” label is weaponized by the family courts, the media, and even public opinion, painting men as failures while systematically denying them the chance to be involved in their children’s lives. But the true horror doesn’t stop there. #MeToo has turned every interaction between a man and a woman into a potential minefield, further disenfranchising men and exacerbating the tensions between the sexes.'

Florida Woman Sentenced to Life for Getting Ex Killed After He Wins Shared Custody of Daughter

Mastodon · 30 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rachiel Moore, 27, was found guilty of first degree premeditated murder and tampering with evidence on Thursday, and was immediately sentenced by Santa Rosa Circuit Court Judge Clifton Drake to life in state prison without parole, Florida State Attorney Ginger Bowden Madden said in a press release.

On March 19, 2023, Colby Vinson was fatally shot outside his apartment while unloading groceries with his young daughter, for whom he had been granted shared custody earlier that week, Madden said.

When deputies responded to the crime scene, they found the four-year-old child sitting next to her father's body, according to a report by WEAR.

Moore's former stepfather, Jason Curtis, was determined to be the person who shot and killed the 24-year-old man in the presence of his child.'

Tim Walz says Kamala picked him so 'white guys' could have 'permission' to vote for black lady

Mastodon · 30 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Monday, Governor Tim Walz (D-MN) said one of the reasons former Vice President Kamala Harris picked him as a running mate was to give white people "permission" to vote for her. Walz made the comments while speaking at Harvard's Kennedy School, where he discussed the future of the Democratic party and Harris's failed 2024 presidential campaign against President Donald Trump.

"I could code talk to white guys - watching football, fixing their truck. I could put them at ease," Walz told the audience. "I was the permission structure to say, 'Look, you can do this and vote for this.'"'

Violent clashes in Melbourne after protesters descend on women's rights rally

Matt · 30 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The TRAs are putting MRAs to shame. MRAs should be protesting such events. After all, feminists are known for phoning in threats to venues chosen by MRAs for conferences. Why shouldn't MRAs protest these sorts of events? Excerpt:

'Earlier on Saturday, trans-rights activists and police clashed as protesters roamed the city after gathering to disrupt a women's rights rally.

Pro-trans protesters moved through the streets from Parliament House, where they played drums and chanted at the Women Will Speak event on the steps outside Victoria's parliament earlier in the day. About 50 people attended the Women Will Speak event, which drew about 440 protesters, according to Victoria Police.

"Around 40 people then conducted a march across the CBD, blocking intersections with wooden pallets and swarming local retailers," police said in a statement.'

Britain's girl gang problem

Matt · 30 April 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Most of these girls do no time. Excerpt:

'Fears are mounting over a wave of young girl gangs wreaking havoc across the UK - with offenders launching attacks on vulnerable OAPs, children and police.

Experts say there has been a surge in the number of girls and young women taking part in violence across British communities following a series of high-profile incidents and emergency service alerts - but they too often go untackled, a former Metropolitan Police detective has told MailOnline.

The British Transport Police last week shared images of young female suspects hunted over unprovoked attacks on pensioners on Southeastern rail services.'

We put the pressure on to join Men in Sheds

Matt · 1 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Women-only spaces, good. Men-only spaces, bad. SSDD. Excerpt:

'It started out as a gathering to reduce loneliness and combat social isolation among elderly men.

Now there are more than 1,000 Men in Sheds projects running across the country, where members get together, talk and learn new skills.

But while many are aimed exclusively at men, one group in Loughborough, Leicestershire, has taken the decision to admit women and members' wives.

Member Brenda Needham said: "I kept asking my husband all the while 'why can't we join?'"'

Florida opens Office of Parental Rights

Matt · 2 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attorney General James Uthmeier is launching the Office of Parental Rights (OPR) to empower parents and protect children. This first-in-the-nation initiative is established to provide justice to parents and families whose rights have been violated. In Florida, parental rights are reserved to the parent of a minor child without obstruction or interference from the state, any of its political subdivisions, governmental entities, or institutions.

“Governments should understand that—when it comes to raising a child—they don’t know best. The parents do, and they deserve an Attorney General’s office working on their behalf,” said Attorney General James Uthmeier. “This first-in-the-nation office is a mechanism for parents and families to seek justice where local governments and school systems seek to 'treat,' indoctrinate, or collect data from students without parental involvement. This new initiative is another way we are making Florida the best place to raise a family.”'

Why Are We Still Punishing Young Men?

Mastodon · 3 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Serial entrepreneur, professor, bestselling author & podcaster Scott Galloway breaks down what's happened to masculinity in America, how young men are failing and what we can do to address it.

DOJ slashes hundreds of grants to restorative justice, ‘toxic’ masculinity programs

Mastodon · 4 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Department of Justice (DOJ) has cut hundreds of grants for programs it believes do not advance the agency’s mission, including awards focusing on “racial equity” and “toxic” masculinity.

As part of its effort to slash funding out-of-step with the Trump administration’s agenda, Attorney General Pam Bondi and the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE) cut over 360 grants, according to an agency official.

One $2 million grant was awarded in 2022 for a “feminist, culturally specific nonprofit organization” to address “structural racism and toxic masculinities.” Another $5 million grant went to a group that promotes “racial equity in victim services” to conduct “listening sessions in targeted communities.”'

Black Women Call Out Toxic Workplace Culture At Top Feminist Organizations

Mastodon · 4 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A scorching exposé is calling out feminist organizations for their lack of representation and toxic workplace culture. On Monday, The Lily, a publication for millennial women, outlined in detail the ways in which some of the country's most revered women-led entities are pushing an agenda catered to White women at the detriment of their Black employees.

Among those named in the article are the National Organization for Women (NOW) and the American Association of University Women (AAUW). The latter's mission is to advance equity for women and girls through advocacy, education and research and the homepage talks about achieving a "vision of equal opportunity for all." But Black former staffers who worked at AAUW say within the nonprofit, that's simply not the case.'

Scottish government drops plans for new misogyny law

Mastodon · 4 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Scottish government has confirmed it will not bring forward planned legislation to criminalise misogyny before next year's Holyrood election.

A bill has long been promised to improve protections for women and girls, but ministers now say there is not enough time to draw up a law which reflects the recent Supreme Court judgement on the definition of a woman.

They are instead going to amend existing hate crime legislation to provide protections on the basis of sex.

The government has also confirmed it will not be bringing forward legislation to end conversion therapy this term, and is hoping for a UK-wide solution.

A new misogyny law was promised after an expert group in 2022 backed separate legislation rather than incorporating abuse and violence against women into Scotland's hate crime law.

The group, led by Baroness Helena Kennedy KC, said this was a better option because women are not a minority, and a "more fundamental set of responses" were required to address the "deeply rooted" problem.

The Scottish government proposed creating five new offences in its Misogyny Bill including stirring up hatred against women and misogynistic harassment.

Misogyny would also be treated as an aggravating factor in crimes, which could lead to tougher sentencing.'

Toms River Cop Accused In Attack On Ex, New Girlfriend Headed To Mental Health Facility

Mastodon · 4 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Toms River police officer charged with attacking her ex-boyfriend and his new girlfriend has been released from jail on the charges, but only to allow her to attend an in-patient mental health treatment program, a judge has ruled.

Rebecca A. Sayegh, 32, was expected to board a flight Friday evening for an out-of-state facility operated by Shatterproof, a mental health treatment program that specializes in treating law enforcement officers, said Terrance Turnbach, her attorney.

Superior Court Judge Pamela Snyder agreed to allow Sayegh to be released to attend the program, which is 30 to 90 days of in-patient treatment.

Berkeley Township police initially released her, but she was re-arrested Monday because home invasion burglary is a first-degree charge that comes with a presumption of a warrant, authorities said during the hearing.'

---

https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-14661089/New-Jersey-cop-Rebecca-Sayegh-arrested-home-invasion-lawsuit-captain.html

'Sayegh sued her department six months ago alleging she was sexually harassed by her former Captain Shaun O'Keefe. The claims against O'Keefe were later dismissed, while her lawsuit against the department is still pending.

The cop claimed that the department's leaders were a 'Boy's Club' that passed her over for promotions and allowed O'Keefe to 'shamelessly' pursue her, which he denied.'

UK: Hundreds of domestic abuse victims face jail under new law

Mastodon · 4 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Jane's* abusive ex-partner turned up at her house and began "screaming abuse" and "threatening her", she called the police.

But when officers arrived, they said they couldn't do anything as, despite her ex being stood opposite her home, he was technically outside of the restraining order area.

"I got angry and kicked off," Jane told the Prison Reform Trust charity. "So they arrested me."

Jane's story is not unusual. At least 1,486 women who were accused of assaulting an emergency worker in the four years to November 2024 had been victims of domestic abuse in their lifetime, openDemocracy can reveal. The findings raise concerns that vulnerable women are being criminalised when they seek help to deal with an abuser.'

Schopenhauer on women and love, etc.

Matt · 4 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting video here. For those new to the philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer, read some about him on Wikipedia here. Nice thing about this take is it's based largely on biological imperatives in humans; it's not ideological, more analytical.

Teenage girl found not guilty of murdering Mildura man Seb O'Halloran after arguing self defence

Matt · 5 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. In future, ladies, if you just feel threatened by a man, you need only claim you were high on drugs and run him through with a knife -- and you'll be fine. In fact, you'll get loads of sympathy and will probably make money off it. Excerpt:

'A teenage girl cried tears of relief and clutched her chest, as a jury in Victoria's Supreme Court found her not guilty of murder.

There was an outpouring of emotion in the courtroom as the verdict was delivered, with the girl's family breaking down and security guards hugging the girl when the judge told her she was free to go home.

The girl, who was 17 at the time of the attack and cannot be identified for legal reasons, said she was acting in self-defence when she plunged a kitchen knife into Seb O'Halloran's chest at her Mildura home on October 21, 2023.

Prosecutors called the incident murder. The girl's lawyers argued it was self-defence.'

The Origins of Hatred - Part Two - Feminism

Matt · 6 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the clearest long-term examples of using fear, blame, victimhood, and resentment as a social tactic is the way feminism — backed by unwavering support from the media and lawmakers — has worked to embed fear, distrust, and blame into the minds of women and girls.

Nearly every major feminist campaign has been built on two themes: blaming men and claiming victimhood. Along the way, women have been encouraged to distrust men, to fear them, and to view their actions through a lens of suspicion.

The success of these campaigns has relied heavily on gynocentrism — a deeply embedded, often invisible bias. Most people don't even realize they carry it, but it's there, quietly shaping our instincts. Gynocentrism shows up as an automatic tendency to prioritize the needs, emotions, and concerns of women, while overlooking those of men. Feminists have strategically weaponized this bias, using it to pressure institutions and society into funneling more resources to women.'

Woman doused friend in fuel, set him alight for misogynistic comment, court hears

Matt · 8 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is one to watch. So if a guy makes a "misogynistic comment" while you've both been doing stoopid things like getting high and drunk, obviously the thing to do is set him on fire after throwing fuel on him. Bet she gets a slap on the wrist. Excerpt:

'A woman who angrily doused an "old friend" in petrol and set him alight for making a misogynistic comment was suffering from depression and substance abuse, a court has heard.

Corbie Jean Walpole, 24, earlier pleaded guilty to one charge of burning or maiming by using corrosive fluid.

Her victim, Jake Loader, was 23 when he was found with life-threatening burns at a southern New South Wales home in Howlong on January 7 last year.

Walpole tearfully appeared before the Albury District Court today expecting to be sentenced.'

Positive role models take on tough topics in new app for young men

Mastodon · 9 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week I attended the launch of Ask A Mate, an app developed by Brisbane domestic violence charity Beyond DV. It's a tool for young men aged between 13 and 18 to access advice on topics such as relationships, gender, sex, consent, and domestic and sexual violence – delivered by people they look up to. Think AFL stars and bass players.

Beyond DV founder Carolyn Robinson came up with the concept in 2022 in response to the spread of dangerous online content influencing young men.

"That was really my whole reason for doing this, [to provide young men] with an alternative to Andrew Tate," she says. The brutal murder of Sydney coach Lilie James by her former partner in 2023 was another reason to see the project through.'

Biden says he’s ‘not surprised’ Kamala Harris didn’t win, blames sexism

Mastodon · 9 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Thursday, during an appearance on “The View” the former president didn’t hold back in expressing his thoughts on why America elected Donald Trump for a second term instead of Harris. He said frankly he wasn’t surprised.

“I wasn’t surprised, not because I didn’t think the Vice President was qualified to be president. She is. She is qualified to be president of the United States of America,” he explained. “I wasn’t surprised because it went the sexist route.”'

The Margins of Mercy

Matt · 9 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the desperate aftermath of an earthquake in Haiti, the United Nations World Food Programme (WFP) excluded men from emergency food aid. WFP head Josette Sheeran announced the policy:

"It is our methodology to distribute only to women to ensure that food gets to women and children in Haiti."

I described what happened in my first essay but, here, I want to focus on what didn't happen - concern for men.

If the WFP had withheld food from almost any other group, say people of colour, they would have been universally condemned. Instead, they were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 2020. What could explain such indifference to the fate of men?'

Young men are leading a religious resurgence

Matt · 10 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Christianity is starting to make a comeback in the U.S. and other western countries, led by young people.
...
Gen Z-ers — especially Gen Z men — are actually more likely to attend weekly religious services than millennials and even some younger Gen X-ers, Burge's analysis shows.
...
Within older generations, there's a consistent gender gap among Christians, with women more likely to be religious than men.

Within Gen Z, the gap has closed, as young men join the church and young women leave it. If the current trajectory sticks, the gender gap will flip.
...
Plus, for some young men, Christianity is seen as "one institution that isn't initially and formally skeptical of them as a class," Rishmawy told the Times.'

Time to Act: 15 Ways Maryland Can Support Its Boys and Men

Matt · 11 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For too long, the challenges faced by boys and men in Maryland have been overlooked. From distorted media portrayals to cultural narratives that paint masculinity as a problem, boys and men are often viewed through a lens of suspicion or deficit. In late April, I presented the following 15 ideas to the Governor's staff—not a list of services or budget items, but focused proposals aimed at improving the public image and cultural understanding of boys and men in our state. These ideas are about restoring balance, affirming the value of boys and men, and challenging the negative stereotypes that continue to shape policy and perception. If we truly cared about them, this is where we would start.'

Jasmine Crockett Says Dem Donors Want the ‘Safest White Boy’ Possible For 2028: ‘There is One Specific Candidate’

Matt · 11 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Replace "White Boy" with "Black Boy" or "Asian Boy". Or "Boy" with "Girl". You get the idea. Excerpt:

'Rep. Jasmine Crockett (D-TX) and DNC Vice Chair Malcolm Kenyatta joined SiriusXM Urban View hosts Clay Cane and Reecie Colbert this week for a town hall discussion about the future of the Democratic Party and, in a promotional clip, she told them the party is eyeing a safe “white boy” candidate for 2028.

During the conversation, Crockett turned to who the Democrats might run in the next presidential election and said she’s already hearing chatter of who donors are rallying behind. “It is, it is this fear that the people within the party, within the primary system, will have about voting for a woman because every time we voted for a woman, we’ve lost,” she began, adding:'

UK: Top private school offers 'healthy masculinity' workshops for parents to combat Andrew Tate

Mastodon · 11 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A top private school is offering ‘healthy masculinity’ workshops for parents to help them combat toxic online influencers such as Andrew Tate.

The Royal Hospital School (RHS) in Suffolk is running 90 minute sessions to help families talk to their sons about resisting dark messages from the web.

Irfan Latif, headmaster of the 300-year-old institution, said private schools have a ‘responsibility’ to counter misogynistic narratives.

And he advocated promoting positive male role models such as Atticus Finch, the hero of To Kill a Mockingbird, as an ‘alternative’ to harmful figures on social media.

RHS, which charges up to £46,000 a year for boarders and is part of the elite HMC private schools group, was the alma mater of hero explorer Ernest Joyce.

Expand article logo Continue reading

Mr Latif said: ‘We have not had any particular issues or incidents at RHS, but as educators we have a duty to be proactive.

‘The workshops are about equipping our pupils, and their parents, to navigate the pressures of modern masculinity before problems arise.’

Writing in Independent School Management Plus, Mr Latif said the issue of ‘toxic masculinity’ poses ‘significant challenges for schools’.'

Woman Declares 'Marriage Is a Bad Decision' for Women Today. Why She Thinks It Only Leads to 'Pain and Heartbreak'

Mastodon · 11 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marriage is not for everyone, especially women, according to TikTok user hebatalks. The influencer recently made a video stating that she doesn't believe modern marriages are beneficial for women in today's society.

"I don't really believe in marriage, not in modern day, at least, because I would say that the majority of the time it doesn't work out," she shared in the video. "And even when it doesn't end in divorce, it ends in absolutely hating and resenting each other towards the end of life."

"The reality is that in most marriages, women get the short end of the stick, like women are the ones who have to sacrifice their careers, their health, their well-being, to take care of their husband and the children."

Despite not being married herself, the TikToker said that she has observed "hundreds" of people in unhappy unions.

Many commenters added their support to her video. One user wrote, "Men get the best deal out of marriage, a free maid and cook, children that we birth, and we're expected to split bills." Another user added, "My fear with marriage is my life will stop for someone else. That's why I'm not rushing."'

For men only? Lack of women winners for million-euro science prize draws protests

Mastodon · 11 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a June ceremony in the scenic Swiss village of Villars, three scientists each collected a huge new prize: 1 million Swiss francs ($1.1 million) to invest in their research to safeguard the planet against various environmental tipping points. The prizes were courtesy of the Frontiers Research Foundation (FRF), the nonprofit parent of the big open-access publisher. Younger women scientists who co-authored winning papers accompanied their colleagues onto the stage, smiling uncomfortably: All the winners of this year's Frontiers Planet Prize (FPP), with a cash award bigger than the Nobel Prize, were men, just as they were last year.

...

"I grew frustrated during the ceremony when one award after another went to a man," says Gabriela Schaepman-Strub, an earth systems scientist at the University of Zürich and a 2024 finalist. Within days, Schaepman-Strub spearheaded a letter to FPP Director Jean-Claude Burgelman and other higher-ups at FRF. It was signed by five of this year's seven women finalists. "The situation experienced last week was a real setback for gender equality and diversity," they wrote. "Providing only male colleagues with a substantial grant cements the gender inequality that many universities are fighting against."

...

Schaepman-Strub blames the structure of the prize. "For me, the main message really is: How can we contribute to improving this prize so it's really contributing towards a just transformation" in terms of both gender and geography? She and others note although nine of the 43 finalists have been women, just two have come from Africa—both from South Africa—and very few from other countries of the Global South. The foundation is working to boost African representation, says Lise Korsten, president of the African Academy of Sciences, which signed an agreement with FRF to expand the pool of African nominees. "Our aim is to reach out to every single country on the African continent," Korsten says.'

UK: Gentleman's club rules criticised as 'sexist'

Matt · 12 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Didja ever notice... need I even say it? Excerpt:

'A gentleman's club which voted to continue to prohibit women from becoming members has been called "sexist" by a feminist group.

Women can enter the Castle Hill Club in Lincoln only as guests of men who are members.

Paul Watson, secretary at the club, which opened in 1922, said the rule "had always been the same" and "for the rights or wrongs of it, they wanted to leave it that way".

Ellie Henshaw, 19, from the University of Lincoln's Feminist Society, said the decision was "frustrating" and "it's not the default anymore that women should be excluded".'

It’s Not Just a Feeling: Data Shows Boys and Young Men Are Falling Behind

Matt · 13 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From the NY Times, of all places. Excerpt:

'Boys and young men are struggling. Across their lives — in their educational achievement, mental health and transitions to adulthood — there are warning signs that they are falling behind, even as their female peers surge ahead.

In the United States, researchers say several economic and social changes have combined to change boys’ and men’s trajectories. School has changed in ways that favor girls, and work has changed in ways that favor women. Boys are often seen as troublemakers, and men have heard that masculinity is “toxic.”

Young people themselves tend to agree that girls are now at least equal to — and often doing better than — boys. Many young men say they feel unmoored and undervalued, and parents and adults who work with children are worried about boys. It’s not just a feeling: There’s a wealth of data that shows that boys and young men are stagnating. Below, I’ll explain what some of that data is.'

Feds investigate Harvard for allegedly discriminating against white, male applicants

Mastodon · 14 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harvard University is under federal investigation for allegedly discriminating against white and male applicants in its faculty hiring practices, according to the Washington Free Beacon.

Additionally, on Tuesday, the Trump administration announced plans to cut an additional $450 million in grants to the school over its handling of antisemitism on campus, Reuters reports.

“There is a dark problem on Harvard’s campus, and by prioritizing appeasement over accountability, institutional leaders have forfeited the school’s claim to taxpayer support,” the administration’s antisemitism task force said in a statement.

The task force also accused Harvard of having a “long-standing policy and practice of discriminating on the basis of race.”'

The “Crisis” of Male Adolescence Is Nothing New

Mastodon · 15 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In many ways, toxic masculinity is a kind of curdled male entitlement. Boys and young men simply have not absorbed the fact that certain privileges are no longer laid out on a platter for them, as they were for their fathers and grandfathers. Girls and women expect to work, which means they can be choosier in dating and marrying. The quotas that openly favored males are gone, although a vestige of that system still survives in the worship of male high school athletes and in the advantage many colleges quietly afford male applicants. There are lots of women doing manly-men things, like excelling in math and science, joining the military, and playing sports. If they weren’t kicked to the sidelines by harassment, rape, and unintended pregnancies, who knows how much girls could accomplish?

Maybe the solution to boys falling behind is for them to act more like girls: Put down the joystick and pick up a book. Do your homework, join the Spanish club, volunteer in the community, and learn to cook (which is actually fun).'

Forensic spray helping women to 'feel safer'

Mastodon · 15 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Victims of domestic violence are being given a forensic spray that proves if a perpetrator has approached them.

SmartWater, which has its own DNA, will remain on the suspect's skin for up to six weeks and can help lead to convictions. Perpetrators are told that victims are carrying the spray in a bid to deter them from contacting the victim.

Gloucestershire Police has been trialling SmartWater since January, with early feedback suggesting it is working.

Ch Insp Ash Shingler said: "We're working with seven victims. None of the SmartWater has been deployed - that's a good sign because it means the preventative element seems to be working."'

David Hogg, Victim of Wokeness

Matt · 15 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But Hogg has not won over everybody. On the contrary, the DNC is trying to oust him as vice chair. And the reason for that is, frankly, hilarious.

Kalyn Free, a 61-year-old woman with Native American ancestry and a rival candidate, filed a complaint that Hogg's election as vice chair had violated certain DNC bylaws designed to promote gender-based equity. Essentially, she argued that the process was unfair because it was not sufficiently rigged in favor of her as a woman. For now, the DNC is buying it and has taken steps to void Hogg's election. The party may schedule a redo, which would require Hogg to rerun for the vice chair position.'

Tasmanian police resist feminist weaponisation of DV laws

Matt · 15 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dr Fiona Girkin works with the Tasmanian Institute of Law Enforcement Studies teaching police about domestic violence. When she first wrote to me nine months ago to tell me about her work, she thanked me for “being willing to protect men from women who seek to destroy their lives.”

Fiona Girkin is no longer prepared to call herself a feminist. Before her present teaching job, she worked for 20 years in the community services sector alongside many feminists, “It was the most toxic workplace I have ever worked in,” she said, explaining that she had “experienced many women who claimed to be empathic but instead wielded power of a different kind. They would bully and manipulate staff to gain power over in the resources they held including large sums of Government funding for service provision.”'

Toxic Femininity

Matt · 16 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toxic femininity refers to female behaviours that manipulate, control, or harm others while hiding behind cultural norms of softness, vulnerability, or moral superiority. Where toxic masculinity might enforce dominance through aggression or stoicism, toxic femininity tends to weaponise emotion, victimhood, and social influence. It's often linked to covert forms of narcissism—harder to spot, but just as destructive as the (mostly male) overt form.

This is not about blaming women—it's about asking why society is afraid to confront negative behaviour when it's cloaked in femininity.'

Patriarchy, ergo, hooker

Matt · 16 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Read this article and saw the key line rationalizing the whole being-a-hooker thing and thought, "Holy non-sequiturs, Batman!" If we lived in a patriarchy, wouldn't the cashflow go from her to him instead? Excerpt:

'In some ways, the world of sugar dating mirrors the regular world of dating and matchmaking, with lessons in clear boundary-setting and communication. Sugar babies are also hard workers, which is part of the reason Soraya can't see herself dating any time soon.

"Why do I have to put myself through normal dating with emotions that I don't even like, like putting this much energy in and needing to deal with all of these men? I think I should be compensated for it."
...
Srushti Upadhyay is a PhD candidate at the University of Buffalo in the US who has interviewed hundreds of sugar babies in order to understand their motivations. She has found that most sugar babies do not date men in their personal lives.

"If they're going to be dating men, they want to be rewarded for it because men hold a lot of power in this patriarchal society everywhere they go. And so to them … putting in this time and energy into relationships with men is something that they don't want to do for free. It's just a lot of work."'

The Feminist Double Standard of Gender Stereotyping

Matt · 17 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Modern feminist thought has deeply influenced how society perceives and responds to gender-based stereotypes. Feminists have rigorously documented how stereotype threat impacts women and girls—how being reminded of negative gender-based assumptions can lower their performance, limit their confidence, and reduce their opportunities. As a result, enormous institutional energy has been devoted to minimizing stereotype threat for females across education, employment, and media.

Yet in a jarring contradiction, the same feminist voices that crusade against the stereotyping of girls often perpetuate, ignore, or excuse deeply harmful stereotypes about boys and men. From classrooms to courtrooms, from media headlines to college campuses, males are frequently cast in the most unflattering terms imaginable: violent, toxic, emotionally stunted, hypersexual, power-hungry. This glaring double standard is rarely acknowledged—and when it is, it's often waved away as justified.'

ASU campus that is 30% male says it will focus on ‘gender equity’ – for women

Mastodon · 18 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona State University campus that is 70 percent female said it will develop “gender equity” strategies – to help “vulnerable” women.

The New College of Interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences says it will focus on “innovations and advances in gender equity” to “address the needs of New College’s growing female student population by improving access to education, leadership opportunities, and equitable advancement.”

“With women soon representing nearly 70 percent of students at West Valley campus, we must create educational strategies that support vulnerable groups, including single mothers and women of color,” the ASU college explains.'

Queensland police to be granted power to issue instant year-long domestic violence orders

Matt · 19 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Queensland police are set to be granted sweeping powers to tackle domestic and family violence, but some stakeholders have warned the measures won't further protect victim-survivors.

The government says the reforms, which were introduced to parliament on Wednesday, will enable police to issue long-term orders to perpetrators and respond to more cases.

Under current laws, police can issue a five-day protection order before they are required to go before a judge to get a longer-term order.

The new laws will enable police to issue an on-the spot 12-month order to a perpetrator without the need to go to court.

Perpetrators who commit an act of domestic violence during the year-long period could face a maximum penalty of three years in jail.'

Science or Spin? Testosterone, Masculinity, or the Last Gasp of Woke

Matt · 20 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the strangest omissions in the paper is its refusal to ask the most important question: Why do men want to be more masculine? The authors treat this desire as something odd or unhealthy—like it's a social problem to be solved—without ever asking what's driving it.

The reality is that men operate in a masculine status hierarchy, where increased masculinity often brings greater access to success, admiration, influence, and romantic attention. Men at the top of this hierarchy tend to attract the highest-value partners, gain more respect, and earn more. The drive to be more masculine isn't irrational—it's strategic.

What pushes men upward in that hierarchy? Testosterone. It fuels status-seeking, assertiveness, and competitiveness. The work of Christoph Eisenegger has shown that testosterone's real effect goes beyond aggression, and into a deeper, more adaptive drive to attain and maintain status.'

Why a men's barbershop has sparked fury from Aussie women over a controversial policy

Mastodon · 20 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A barbershop owner has defended his male-only policy despite mothers complaining they have been forced to wait outside while their sons get a haircut.

Robbie Ferrante operates Robbie's Chop Shop in the inner south Adelaide suburb of Unley and labels it the 'last male sanctuary' where guys of all ages can 'get away and chill'.

His business has struck a chord with some women such as Elena Téa who shared a scathing TikTok video questioning how the place was able 'to continue'.

Local women complained they had been forced to sit outside while their sons or brothers received a haircut.

Mr Ferrante told Daily Mail Australia on Monday his shop aimed to fill a gap for young men who are searching for a place of community.

'What I saw over time was a lot of boys didn't have good role models, (who) needed a little bit of a helping hand or someone that could just sort of guide them,' he said.

'So I'd always had this vision of a place where guys could just be guys and relax and not have to worry about conforming to society or what they say or things that they do.

'Not in a bad way, but just having the freedom to express what they're feeling."

Australia: Judge says controversial women-only art exhibit is legal

OnlyFans users face prison under harsh new Swedish prostitution law

Matt · 20 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So porn vids are still legal to buy. However asking a girl to diddle her friend on camera for pay is going to be illegal. Literally the difference is that in the first case the viewer doesn't communicate with the performers and in the second, he does. Other than that, what? Sweden seems to be on its way to outlawing maleness. Excerpt:

'OnlyFans users in Sweden could face prison sentences under a harsh new law that treats buying online sex shows the same as paying a prostitute for sex.

The law, which will take effect July 1, also criminalizes profiting from or promoting others who perform sexual acts for payment on demand.

“This is a new form of sex purchase, and it’s high time we modernize the legislation to include digital platforms,” Swedish member of parliament Teresa Carvalho said after the bill passed.'

Should Feminists Care About Male Suffering?

Mastodon · 21 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the idea that feminists and other progressives are perpetuating male suffering by denying it is wildly inaccurate. Most women I know are screaming at men from the rooftops: “We want you to make more friends! We want you to be more vulnerable! We are desperate for you to understand emotional labor and take on more of it!”

We know men have problems. We see these problems manifest in our fathers, our brothers, our partners, our sons, our coworkers, our friends. And when these problems manifest in the form of violence and abuse, as they so often do, we also suffer the consequences.

The Richard Reeveses of the world claim to be “reframing” debates about gender, but their efforts fall short. They are telling people, women in particular, to care more about the problems of men, as though women haven’t already spent centuries tending to the needs and wounds of our boys and men.

They don’t need to be telling women to care; we already do. Aboriginal and women’s rights activist and academic Dr. Lilla Watson famously said, “If you have come to help me, you are wasting your time. If you have come because your liberation is bound up with mine, then let us work together.”'

Study Suggests Scientists Are Sexist — Just Not Against Women

Mastodon · 21 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every feminist circa 2013 came pre-installed with a few rote talking points. The wage gap. The patriarchy. Pervasive and debilitating sexism in all walks of life – but especially in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics (STEM).

A new review of scientific literature on sex bias in academia has produced direct evidence against that last myth. Researchers synthesized studies produced from 2000 to 2020, looking for evidence of bias as it relates to critical career advancements. Not only did they find that “tenure-track women are at parity with tenure-track men” in grant funding, journal acceptances, and recommendation letters – women have more of an advantage over men when it comes to hiring.

Fewer women than men apply for tenure-track jobs. But those who do are more likely than their male counterparts to be interviewed and more likely to receive job offers. Look at electrical engineering positions. The mean percentage of female applicants is a measly 11%. The mean percentage of first offers that went to women is a staggering 32%.'

UK: Woman who set her friend on fire faces imminent sentencing

Matt · 22 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I'm guessing maybe she gets 2-5 years, eligible for parole in two, etc. I.e., a slap on the wrist. Guess we'll know soon! Excerpt:

'A woman who doused her childhood friend in petrol and set him on fire after he made what she deemed as misogynistic comments will learn on Thursday if she is going to jail.
...
Prosecutors want Walpole jailed for setting Jake Loader ablaze as he sat on a chair in her backyard at Howlong, about 30km west of Albury, early last year.

Mr Loader, who lives in outback Queensland, was in Howlong to join old friends including Walpole for a night on the drink, which included celebrating a 21st birthday.

Walpole claimed Mr Loader had been baiting her before she poured five litres of petrol over his head and used a cigarette lighter to turn him into a human torch.

'He was antagonising me,' she previously told the NSW District Court, sitting in Albury.'

Woman jailed for dousing friend in petrol, set him alight after sexist remark

Mastodon · 22 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who doused a “lifelong friend” in petrol and set him alight after being angered by his misogynistic comments has just been sentenced to seven-and-a-half-years in prison.

Corbie Jean Walpole, 25, pleaded guilty in December to one charge of burning or maiming by using corrosive fluid and had hoped to receive a non-custodial sentence.

However, she was told she would spend a minimum four-and-a-half-years behind bars after a judge denied her plea for mercy, according to ABC.

Judge Jennifer English said she rejected the claim that Walpole was “provoked” when she attacked her friend, Jake Loader, on a night out in January last year.

“It is never easy to send a young person, particularly a young woman, to jail,” Judge English told the NSW District Court in Albury, shortly before 10am on Thursday.'

Men Are Calling Other Men to Say Good Night, and the Results Are Amazing

Matt · 24 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When DeAndre Scarborough, a 24-year-old content creator and college research coordinator, decided to call several of his male friends, and his brother, to wish them each a good night, he knew that they'd be thrown for a loop.

Lying in bed with his girlfriend around 11 p.m., Mr. Scarborough made a call, delivering the good night message to a friend who immediately responded with confusion and laughter, asking, "You good?"
In between giggles, another friend, equally confused, said, "Man you're calling the wrong number, these freak hours."

Mr. Scarborough had seen the trend online and, after some nudging by his girlfriend, decided to upload his own video. He said what makes this trend "twice as funny" as others is that it's so uncommon for men to talk to each other vulnerably.

"We're not really emotionally tapped in with each other, so for the most part if you say something like that, people immediately think the worst," he said in a phone interview on Friday. "So that's why the people that I called were like 'you good?,' because we don't really have those types of conversations, saying good night. The most you'll get is a 'yo, what's up.'"'

Woman arrested for kidnapping and torture not being prosecuted

Mastodon · 24 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The brunette beauty arrested alongside Kentucky-based crypto investor John Woeltz for the alleged kidnap and torture of an Italian man in Manhattan is a small-time actor who claims to work as a marketing manager for luxury brands like Rolls-Royce and Bentley and whose family lives in Connecticut.

Beatrice Folchi – the 24-year-old who police sources said worked as Woeltz's assistant – was arrested Friday at the SoHo penthouse where a man from Turin, Italy, told cops he was held hostage and brutally tortured for nearly three weeks, in a sick extortion attempt to gain the password to his cryptocurrency account.

She was charged with first-degree kidnapping and first-degree unlawful imprisonment, but the Manhattan District Attorney's Office declined to prosecute pending further investigation, a spokesperson said.'

White men ‘in pit of worry’ over doing or saying wrong thing at work

Matt · 25 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From the UK. Interesting phenomenon. Personally I don't fret too much since I'm inclined to be focused on work while at work but I can definitely see how the more gregarious would find it troubling. Excerpt:

'Almost a quarter of white men say they are discriminated against for their race and gender, according to a poll, amid warnings it is pushing them towards influencers such as Andrew Tate.

Research commissioned for White Men Can’t Work!, a five-part podcast and YouTube series hosted by the documentary maker Tim Samuels, suggested that nearly half of white men in the UK are self-censoring at work because they fear that saying the wrong thing could cost them their jobs. Some 41 per cent say they feel anxious that they can be sacked for doing or saying the wrong thing.

More than a third (36 per cent) of those under 34 say they have lost out on a promotion or other opportunities because of their race or gender, according to the polling by JL Partners. Almost half believe they will be worse off than the current generation, with 49 per cent agreeing and 22 per cent disagreeing.'

Paul Elam interviews Janice Fiamengo re the current state of the MRM

Matt · 25 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

YouTube video here. Paul interviews Janice regarding where the MRM is at these days.

Video shows Emmanuel Macron being pushed in face by wife

Mastodon · 26 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brigitte Macron placed her hands on her husband's face as they prepared to exit their plane after touching down in Vietnam at the start of a South East Asia tour.

President Macron is seen taking a step back before he recovers and waves to the cameras at the bottom of the aircraft stairs.

The pair then walk down the steps together.

The Elysee initially denied the authenticity of images of the interaction before eventually verifying they were real, French media reported.

The clip has sparked suggestions of an argument between the pair but Mr Macron said afterwards it was a case of "simply joking with my wife as we often do".

Speaking to French media after landing in Hanoi he rubbished claims of a "domestic incident", instead telling broadcasters "it was nothing" and that people on social media were making "nonsense" out of the video.'

"The Disposable Man"

Matt · 26 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Presenter discusses male disposability. Very much worth listening to.

Report: Democrats Set $20 Million Plan to Win Back Young Men

Mastodon · 27 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Democratic donors and strategists have been gathering at luxury hotels to discuss how to win back working-class voters, commissioning new projects that can read like anthropological studies of people from faraway places," national political correspondent Shane Goldmacher wrote.

The Democrats reportedly coded the plan SAM – Speaking with American Men: A Strategic Plan.

"The prospectus for one new $20 million effort, obtained by The Times, aims to reverse the erosion of Democratic support among young men, especially online," wrote Goldmacher. "It is code-named SAM — short for 'Speaking with American Men: A Strategic Plan' — and promises investment to 'study the syntax, language and content that gains attention and virality in these spaces.""'

Texas dad bangs drum for fathers' rights, calls for legislative change

Matt · 27 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After nearly 20 years marriage, a San Antonio-area man has found himself in a contested custody battle over their children. Now, he's banging his drum outside of the Bexar County Courthouse and inside the Texas Capitol calling for justice for dad's he believed are overlooked in custody cases – a claim not entirely backed by the Texas Family Code or by account of a local family law attorney.

Goerge Zachery married his ex-wife in March of 2004 in Bexar County, according to a marriage license on the county records website. Just over 18 years later, divorce paperwork was filed in Kendall County, about 30 miles north of San Antonio. Now, George Zachery is appealing to a higher court, looking to overturn a Boerne-area judge's rulings.'

Men in Feminism: The Wrong Conversation

Matt · 29 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rather than offering new insights into how men might thrive, heal, or participate meaningfully in future gender discussions, the article reverts to a familiar script: men are framed as the problem, their psychological needs treated as secondary, and their involvement tolerated only when it's filtered through feminist ideology.

The piece positions feminism not as a framework for mutual transformation, but as a moral litmus test — one that men must pass by internalizing guilt, accepting blame, and proving themselves worthy through re-education. Instead of exploring what it means to be a man in today's world or considering the genuine challenges boys and men face, the article doubles down on one-sided concern. Feminism, it declares, is a "nuanced and multifaceted movement that aims to improve the lives of women." Really?'

The high cost of millennial divorce

Matt · 29 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice the POV the article is written with. I'll leave it to the reader to judge. I have a fix for women leaving their husbands then complaining that the judge isn't transferring enough of his money over to her: Don't marry in the first place! Simple enough. Excerpt:

'Jasmine Bloemhof was starting to build a career in publicity when she got married at 23. By the time she filed for divorce, a month shy of her 31st birthday, she was a stay-at-home mom with two toddlers and a nearly $50,000 student-debt balance hanging over her head. She had no savings to speak of.

"Just seven days before filing for divorce, I had accepted a remote job as a publicist — something I was genuinely excited about," says Bloemhof, now 41 and in Los Angeles. Just as she was about to start, the agency rescinded the offer. "They said my divorce timing was not ideal, and they were concerned about my ability to service their clients while in the throes of something as turbulent as a divorce with two toddlers. I should have sued them for letting me go, but I could not imagine putting energy into that. Everything felt like it was unraveling."

As she struggled to find steady public relations work and waited for the courts to negotiate payment plans for child and spousal support, Bloemhof racked up credit card debt to cover basic necessities. She sold whatever she could rustle up that might be valuable: jewelry, shoes, designer handbags. To get around, she borrowed a car from her parents.'

Toxic online content is poisoning boys' minds — Congress must respond

Matt · 29 May 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Someone please tell him that that show is a work of fiction. And also, the first amendment to the US Con'n doesn't allow Congress to regulate speech. Excerpt:

'The boys are targeted for content designed to stir anxieties about their ability to attract a woman. And white males are specifically swamped with defeatist attitudes about their chances of getting into college while competing with increasing numbers of educated women, minorities and immigrants.

The result is alienated and frustrated adolescent white teens, as well as lots of young males of color.

The reality behind the show is evident for young Americans, according to a recent essay in the Wall Street Journal. A student at a Chicago Catholic high school wrote that his male classmates celebrated when social media titans accused of sex crimes and human trafficking – the brothers Andrew and Tristan Tate were recently allowed into the U.S.

"As online influencers with millions of followers, the Tate brothers are notoriously misogynistic and extravagantly wealthy," wrote Eli Thompson, the high school senior. "Alpha dogs who are buff, rich and domineering, they promote a model of manhood that feels both backward and reassuring. If we follow their sexist, racist lead, they promise, we'll be alphas too."'

Joy Behar: Dems Should Spend Money on ‘Teaching Men to Not Be Such Sexists’

Mastodon · 1 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Friday on ABC’s “The View,” co-host Joy Behar said Democrats should stop trying to connect with men through language and instead teach them not to be sexist.

Behar said, “So, since Trump scored big with young male voters last election, Democrats are spending $20 million to learn how to speak their language. You heard it, 20 million bucks just to talk to boys. So, is this a good idea or a waste of money?”

Co-host Sara Haines said, “I think it’s the wrong way to go about the problem, because the Democrats are asking how do we get male voters? The disillusionment of men is how do we care better about our men and boys, it should be about how we solve the root problems that drove men to feel like they had nowhere to go.”

Co-host Alyssa Farah Griffin said, “The most common thing I hear from men who were open to supporting Trump, they feel like they want to be able to provide for the future and build wealth and don’t want to be ashamed they want to provide and want to have money. Then they do see these statistics of how men are falling behind and want to be able to highlight it and talk about it but not be pushed back that you’re saying, oh, well, you’re excluding girls and women if you want to advance men.”

Behar said, “You wonder what I think? I think it’s a waste of money. Maybe these guys should spend their money on teaching men to not be such sexists. Maybe that’s it.”'

Men’s Health Month

Matt · 1 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is often a strong focus on men’s physical health — fitness, annual checkups, and heart health — but mental well-being is equally as important because mental health is health!

Just as the body needs care and attention, so does emotional and mental well-being. Yet, there is a silent crisis in men’s mental health — one that too often goes unnoticed or unspoken. Tragically, men are nearly four times more likely to die by suicide than women*, underscoring the urgent need to break this silence and seek support.'

Pearl asks "What's In It For Men?"

Matt · 1 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Pearl asks, "What's in it for men?" This is regarding the recent push by the Democrat party to appeal to young men.

Support For University Professor Being Investigated For Controversial Domestic Violence Take

Matt · 1 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Will she or won't she? Questions are swirling around whether a professor in Australia will get canned for her comments about domestic violence or not.

Dr. Fiona Girkin is an associate lecturer in Policing and Emergency Management at the University of Tasmania. Her job is to teach new Tasmania Police recruits about family and domestic violence.

Recently, she appeared in a video interview with controversial conservative media figure, Bettina Arndt. In the interview, Girkin talked about how, in listening to the officers she has worked with, there were just as many female offenders in domestic violence cases as there were male.'

The plow horse: How marriage uses men

Matt · 5 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. He goes into the not-so-pretty realities around being a married man.

The Case Against Circumcision

Matt · 5 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What does it mean that no other animal on earth does such a thing to its own genitalia? And not because other species care about cruelty, much less consent. They don't do it because it's batshit crazy to disfigure yourself and others of your kind. Nature does foreskins for biological reasons, not to swap for a nod from a god.

What does it mean that Egyptian artworks from thousands and thousands of years ago feature circumcised dicks? Mummies, too. Historians think it was a sign of elite status, royal or religious, in the Upper Paleolithic era, and from there back the historical trail vanishes; no one's sure exactly where or when circumcision became established first in the Near East and Africa. Historical and anthropological speculation suggests that it arose in more than one region, both as a mark of full manhood and to punish prisoners of war and slaves; castration tended to kill off the supply.'

Debunking the UN's Attack on the Manosphere

Matt · 5 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a growing wave of attacks against what's being called the "manosphere." These attacks are coming primarily from feminist organizations and media allies who claim that the manosphere (the electronic patriarchy) is filled with misogynists who hate women and promote violence.

The truth, however, is quite different. What they're labeling the "manosphere" is, in many cases, a loose network of voices pushing back against decades of feminist misinformation. That pushback — often grounded in research data, lived experience, and reasoned critique — is what truly alarms feminist ideologues.

To them, this movement represents a threat. It challenges their long-standing narrative by exposing its flaws, hypocrisies, and one-sided portrayals of gender dynamics.'

Man up and take it: Gender bias in moral typecasting

Matt · 6 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Informed by moral typecasting theory, we predicted a gender bias in harm evaluation, such that women are more easily categorized as victims and men as perpetrators. Study 1 participants assumed a harmed target was female (versus male), but especially when labeled ‘victim’. Study 2 participants perceived animated shapes perpetuating harm as male and victimized shapes as female. Study 3 participants assumed a female employee claiming harassment was more of a victim than a male employee making identical claims. Female victims were expected to experience more pain from an ambiguous joke and male perpetrators were prescribed harsher punishments (Study 4). Managers were perceived as less moral when firing female (versus male) employees (Study 5). The possibility of gender discrimination intensified the cognitive link between women and victimhood (Study 6). Across six studies in four countries (N = 3,137), harm evaluations were systematically swayed by targets’ gender, suggesting a gender bias in moral typecasting.'

The Quest to Bring Young Men Back to the Democrats

Matt · 7 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Wow, they're not even close! Excerpt:

'Those losses have precipitated soul-searching on the left, as Democrats wonder how to revive their appeal to young men who are struggling financially but intrigued by the machismo promoted by Trump and media figures popular on the right. Republicans are “exploiting grievances” by connecting economic pressures to shifts in gender norms, said Shaunna Thomas, the co-founder and former executive director of the gender justice organization UltraViolet.

Democrats know they need to bring young men back into the fold. But it’s a delicate dance: On the one hand, the wrong kind of outreach risks coming across as condescending, but on the other hand, too much focus on the needs of young men might end up alienating the women who have traditionally formed the core of the Democratic base.'

End NICU circumcision petition

DanBollinger · 8 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

NICU circumcisions put baby boys at increased risk, which is what happed to baby Cole. Please sign this petition to stop this horrible excuse for healthcare.

END NICU CIRCUMCISION PETITION

Norway outlaws sex without consent as Europe strengthens rape laws

Matt · 8 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Norway strengthened its rape laws on Friday by criminalising sex without explicit consent, joining a growing list of countries to widen the definition of sexual attacks.

Up to now, prosecutors have had to show that an attacker used violence or threatening behaviour, or had sexual intercourse with someone who was unable to resist, to secure a conviction for rape.'

Israel Is Putting More Women on the Front Line to Help Fix Its Manpower Problem

Matt · 8 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Days ago, an Israeli search-and-rescue team in Gaza spent hours drilling through concrete and plying aside rebar to recover the body of a fallen soldier buried under rubble in Khan Younis.

The combat unit had been following a commando brigade in Gaza, recovering the bodies of dead soldiers on the battlefield. It is a routine task in the Israeli military, but it was unique that this team was made up mostly of women.

“A year and a half ago, I would never have dreamed of leading a combat team within Lebanon or Gaza,” said a petite 25-year-old major. “I think the war proved to all of us how much we are capable of.”

She is among a growing number of women serving on the front lines of Israel’s military. Before the Hamas-led Oct. 7, 2023, attack that spurred the war, women were trained for combat, but left mostly to guard within Israel’s borders or run checkpoints in the West Bank, considered less dangerous tasks.'

How Trans Men Expose Female Privilege

Matt · 9 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The narrator tells quite a story. She also has a vid saying how dating women helped her understand men, here. Nice to see this kind of thing though it's rare indeed.

San Antonio Woman Arrested for Drugging, Then Raping a 16-Year-Old Boy Saying She 'Wanted to Do This for a Long Time'

Matt · 11 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rump then pushed them on the bed and took off his clothes. She then allegedly had sexual intercourse with the boy, stating that she "wanted to do this for a long time."

She then told the boy that if he told anyone what happened she was going to say he raped her.The boy told police that he didn't say anything to anyone until another adult found out Rump had sex with him after Rump confessed to it at a beach, according to the affidavit.'

For tech's new generation, college is an expensive waste

Matt · 11 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...Today, a perfect storm of economic, political, and technological forces is driving young people — mostly men, as every noncollege techie I interviewed happened to be — to circumvent college entirely. For one, higher education has grown prohibitively expensive: In 2024, the average federal student loan debt was just under $30,000 for those who completed a bachelor's degree, and all-in costs for some four-year degrees have now surpassed half a million dollars....

...

Like many of the young men I spoke with for this piece, JC Btaiche tells me he's "pretty obsessed" with the Apple founder. In high school, he mimicked Jobs' practice for almost a year, looking into the mirror by his bed daily. "Every morning I'd be, like, 'I don't want to go to school,'" he says. "Life is too short. There's strong examples of people who have not gone to college who have done incredibly well." At some point, he stopped showing up to most classes. After graduating from high school, Btaiche decided not to attend college and soon after, when he was 19, founded Fuse Energy, a nuclear fusion startup.'

‘Female narcissism is often misdiagnosed’: how science is finding women can have a dark streak too

Matt · 11 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scientists long assumed that women were simply too wonderful to be significantly psychopathic or narcissistic, and didn’t bother to study the possibility much, according to Ava Green from City St George’s, University of London. But research over the past few decades is increasingly challenging this stereotype, suggesting women can have a dark streak, too. Much like in autism or ADHD, such traits just express themselves slightly differently in women – making them harder to spot with diagnostic tests that were essentially developed for men.

Most of us have some level of the dark personality traits. These are often combined into what scientists call the “dark triad” of psychopathy, narcissism and machiavellianism (that is, striving for control and power by being manipulative and unethical). While only about 1-5% and 1% of people have clinical levels of narcissism and psychopathy respectively – and many of them are in prison – people with sub-clinical levels can cause damage too. You’ve probably come across a few, given that about a third of the population have above-average levels of dark traits. Such people have a hunger for power and control and are often selfish, unempathetic, manipulative, deceptive and remorseless to some degree.'

The Gen Z gender pay gap has reversed with young women earning more than young men – so what's up with boys?

Matt · 12 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Streeting was speaking at the launch of The Centre for Policy Research on Men and Boys (CPRMB), a new organisation that seeks to produce actionable policies to tackle a decline in men's health, employability and life expectancy that has crept up on the political class. Brooks – their policy adviser and a lifetime campaigner in the field of men's health – has overseen the release of the CPRMB's first report. Missing Men outlines the challenges facing men and boys, and comes hot on the heels of another report by the Centre for Social Justice (CSJ) – Lost Boys – which paints an equally stark picture of male outcomes.

Over the last year, politicians have grappled with the changing status of men. A group of Labour MPs has formed to brainstorm ways to appeal to boys amid rising support for Reform among Gen Z males. In November, Streeting commissioned the first ever men's health strategy, observing that the number one killer of men under 50 is suicide – "a fact so shocking that I nearly fell off my chair," he said (although one that has been true for men aged 20 to 34 since 2001). Netflix's fictional drama Adolescence, which pondered whether dispossessed schoolboys can be radicalised to commit femicide, drew the attention of the prime minister, who called for it to be shown in schools.'

The Rise and Fall of the Blue Pill

Matt · 12 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Whatifalthist discusses the blue pill and how it's gone in western society -- and where it's going. He makes specific observations about young men in our society and the effects the blue pill has had on them.

France to use UK drama Adolescence to teach teenagers about toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 13 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'France has followed the UK and the Netherlands in allowing the Netflix drama Adolescence to be used in secondary schools as part of efforts to teach teenagers about toxic masculinity and online harms.

The French education ministry will offer schools five classes based on excerpts from the critically acclaimed mini-series, which has provoked a global debate about the impact on young boys of misogynistic content online and on social media.'

UK: WEC to hear evidence from Laura Bates on misogyny, the manosphere and AI

Mastodon · 13 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MPs on the cross-party committee chaired by Labour MP Sarah Owen will examine the rise of the manosphere and its influence on misogynistic behaviour and attitudes online and offline. The session will also look at the emerging use of artificial intelligence (AI) and how this is facilitating misogyny, and the links between the misuse of AI and the manosphere.

Discussion is expected to focus on non-consensual intimate image abuse (NCII) through deepfakes, linked to the Committee's current and prior work on NCII abuse, and other aspects of Bates' research, including bias in artificial intelligence.

WEC's inquiry explores the prevalence and impact of misogynistic views, attitudes and behaviour among men and boys, particularly in schools and educational settings, and the reasons for this. It examines ways that boys and young men are also being harmed and if better support, activities and services need to be available to them.'

Wikipedia on Laura Bates

Democrat congresswoman draws boos over 'shameful' sexism remark in committee hearing with Treasury Secretary

Mastodon · 13 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A House Ways and Means Committee hearing took an unexpected turn Wednesday when Rep. Linda Sanchez, D.Calif., accused Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent of interrupting her because of her gender—prompting audible groans from the room.

When Bessent attempted to interject, Sanchez quickly cut him off: "Please don't interrupt me… I know I'm a woman, but please try to limit yourself to answering my questions."

That remark prompted groans from the hearing room, with one attendee audibly reacting, "Oh, come on." Sanchez responded: "No, I'm sorry, but we get talked over all the time, and I don't want that to happen at this hearing."'

She says she killed her husband after years of enduring his abuse. A new Georgia law could reduce her sentence.

Mastodon · 13 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Those in a similar position who are still in jail could soon see some relief in Georgia. A new law passed in Georgia called the Survivor Justice Act would allow domestic violence survivors to ask for lower sentences in court if they can present evidence that abuse led them to commit their crimes. Under the law, Dickens' sentence could have been as little as 10 years.

Republican state Rep. Stan Gunter sponsored the bill, which passed overwhelmingly in Georgia's Legislature and was signed by Gov. Brian Kemp last month.

"We weren't looking at the whole picture. We were just getting bits and pieces of it, and it wasn't enough to make a good, clear decision on how to treat these people," Gunter said.

"This is not a get out of jail free card. They still have to serve a portion of the sentence," he added.'

Let the Tool Do the Work: A Lesson from My Father

Matt · 15 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We don't talk about it much on Father's Day, but we should: when dads disappear, children pay the price. Boys lose their guide for channeling power responsibly. Girls lose their first experience of what it feels like to be loved and respected by a good man.

The numbers bear it out: more school dropouts, more juvenile crime, more emotional struggles. A father's absence ripples outward for generations.'

Girls and their Frenemies

Matt · 15 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Men need to be aware of the strategies and tactics used by women in terms of relational aggression. They use it against each other and against men. Excerpt:

'Relational aggression is the psychologist's name for what the rest of us call 'mean girl' behaviour, or straight-up 'bitchiness'. It is a pattern of behaviour typically played out by school-age girls, but it is not exclusive to them. In fact, where do they learn it if not from their adult role models? Adults are just more subtle about it.

Chances are, you've experienced relational aggression. You know it when it happens to you. It's an emotional slap in the face and you often feel a sense of shame and confusion.

What distinguishes relational aggression from just being mean, is that it focuses on damaging a person's sense of social place. I see it as using relationships as weapons.'

New women-only West London tower block will be a 'UK first' as 100 flats being built by 2026

Matt · 17 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When completed, Brook House in Acton will provide 102 "genuinely affordable" social rented flats, replacing an old 39-home estate. The cost of renting a home will be on average less than a quarter of what it would cost to rent an equivalently sized home in the private sector.

Ealing Council currently has more than 600 single women on its waiting list and over 8,000 households in the borough waiting for a home. The tenants will be a mixture of women from the council waiting list and residents put forward by Women's Pioneer Housing, which will manage the site.

Women's Pioneer Housing was founded in 1920 by suffragists. It manages around 1,000 properties in West London, most of which are studio or one-bedroom flats in large converted Victorian or Edwardian buildings.'

Karen Read found not guilty of murdering Boston police officer boyfriend

Mastodon · 18 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Karen Read, a US woman charged with running over her police officer boyfriend and leaving him for dead in a snowbank, has been found not guilty of second-degree murder in a case that gripped true-crime fans nationwide.

The jury also found Ms Read, 44, not guilty of vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated and leaving the scene of the collision in January 2022. But she was convicted of operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol (OUI).

Her July 2024 trial stemming from the death of Boston police officer John O'Keefe collapsed after the jury was unable to reach a verdict.

She again pleaded not guilty in the retrial, with her lawyers arguing she was being framed for Mr O'Keefe's death.'

Men need bloke-friendly services, says Special Envoy for Men's Health, Dan Repacholi

Matt · 20 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Asked what the key priorities for Government should be to support men's mental health and prevent male suicide, Mr Repacholi highlighted the need for more services to be tailored to the needs and preferences of men and boys.

"First, we need strong, local mental health services that men feel comfortable using," he said, before adding that the sector was already doing incredible work.'

Michelle Obama says she is ‘so glad’ she didn’t have a son: ‘Would have been a Barack Obama’

Mastodon · 20 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She’s not kidding around.

Former first lady Michelle Obama said she was “glad” she didn’t have a son because he would have turned out exactly like her husband, former President Barack Obama.

Obama, 61, doled out the ego-checking barb on Wednesday’s episode of “IMO,” the podcast she hosts with her brother Craig Robinson, as the siblings were chatting with Hot 97 radio personality Angie Martinez, who suggested the mother of two “should have threw a boy in the mix.”

“I’m so glad I didn’t have a boy,” Sasha and Malia’s mom plainly stated.

“Because he would have been a Barack Obama. Ooh,” the “Becoming” author said, looking down and shaking her head for emphasis.

...

The episode focused extensively on parenting male children as Martinez has one son and Robinson has three boys.'

Feminism is a Hate Group

Matt · 23 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From back in 2017, still true today. Excerpt:

'Feminism is a HATE GROUP.

Feminists claim they do not hate men, and yet there is absolutely no evidence to back up their assertion. The library is full of books containing hateful denouncements of men, hateful rhetoric aimed at men, and hateful attitudes and beliefs about men. Feminists routinely excoriate men both publicly, online, in books and media, and even in general entertainment. For people who claim to love men so much- I say PROVE IT.

...

Feminists don't do anything for men– ever. Unless it somehow benefits Feminists more, first and foremost. The only thing that Feminists have for men is the back of their hand and their denouncements and slander and ugly vilification– the constant daily sludge of "Women Good, Men Bad" which oozes out of every media orifice.

In contrast, Men work their asses off for Women. They work to feed them, clothe them, give them shelter and all of the comforts of civilization that they can possibly dream up and afford. Men help women in their daily lives. The build things, move things, create things, they provide companionship and protection and resources for their children.'

Draft talk: no mention of women

Matt · 23 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Read this article and note women aren't even mentioned as being even a remote possibility for Congressional action on a possible draft-- not that I think it's likely to happen anyway. Remarkable, isn't it? Excerpt:

'Legislation would need to be passed through Congress amending the Military Selective Service Act in order to reinstate a draft, according to the Selective Service Agency.

In 2015, then New York Democratic Representative Charles Rangel introduced a bill to re-instate a draft alongside a "War Tax" bill to point out the inequity of war as then President Barack Obama attempted to galvanize support for an Authorization for Use of Military Force against the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria.
...
Currently, all men between 18 to 25 are required to register with the Selective Service System.

The Selective Service Agency states that, should a draft be reinstated, the first to receive induction orders would be those whose turn 20 years old during the year of the lottery.

Additional drafts would follow for those turning 21 through 25, then 19 and 18 would occur if additional soldiers were required.'

‘Chivalry is dead’: What men just aren’t doing anymore

Mastodon · 24 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is Chivalry dead? After a grown man practically trampled me to get on the bus recently, I’d be inclined to say yes.

He was in a suit and fun socks (boring finance bros tend to think quirky socks make them look fun), and he was on the verge of elbowing me to get a seat.

I was unnerved by his rugby scrum approach to public transport, it was a bit much for 8 a.m. and buses come every 10 minutes – but I wasn’t shocked

It wasn’t very chivalrous, but is that even a thing anymore? Is men letting women go first on public transport a dead concept?

Did it die when we started advocating for fair pay and the rights to our bodies? Is the price of equality that men just aren’t that polite anymore?

I want equal pay and men to follow the Titanic rule of women and children first.'

Woman Who Set Male Friend On Fire For Sexist Joke Asks For Lighter Sentence

Matt · 24 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Like clockwork! Excerpt:

'The Australian woman, 24, pleaded guilty to one count of burning, maiming, disfiguring or disabling a person by use of a corrosive fluid.

She was given a sentence to seven-and-a-half-years in prison and would spend a minimum of four-and-a-half-years behind bars.

The convicted friend is now challenging the severity of her sentence. She submitted a notice of intention to appeal with the Court of Criminal Appeal on June 13.'

Women who hate men: a comparative analysis across extremist Reddit communities

Matt · 27 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In this context, while the global discourse on online misogyny is well-established the phenomenon of misandry remains a relatively underexplored and insufficiently acknowledged facet of the researched digital landscape.
...
This said, despite concerted efforts have been made to address hate speech targeting women and misogyny in broad sense, research on online misandry remains relatively scarce, thus not contributing in mitigating existing stereotypes and misconceptions. As an example, Nadim et al. show that more men than women experience online harassment, contrary to prevailing assumptions.
...
In this work, we investigate the dynamics of misogynistic and misandric communities on Reddit. Our examination entails a comprehensive analysis of linguistic features, the extraction of emotional nuances embedded within the textual content, and a structural graph-based analysis.'

When Women Are Radicalized

Matt · 27 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is growing awareness of how young men can be drawn into far-right extremism or misogynistic subcultures, but we in the media—and society more broadly—pay less attention to how young women become drawn into political subcultures. Indeed, the terms “radicalization” and “women” are rarely—if ever—seen together. This oversight has consequences, because radicalization—defined as rigid commitment to an ideological cause to the point where it distorts one’s worldview, harms mental health, undermines relationships, or disrupts functioning—is not a male-only phenomenon.

Of course, political engagement is not, in itself, cause for concern. The fact that young women attend climate protests or BLM marches is not evidence of extremism. But if we imagine political engagement on a spectrum, the extreme end is not benign. And the failure to recognize this has allowed radicalism to flourish.

The escalating tactics of climate activism illustrate the pattern. Last year, three female members of the British climate action group Just Stop Oil, alongside two male members, were sentenced to prison for climbing onto overhead signs of a major motorway, forcing police to shut down traffic. One of the men received a five-year sentence, while the others were sentenced to four years each. Two trucks collided and one police officer was injured amid the chaos. The stunt created major gridlock that led to people missing medical appointments, exams, and flights.'

Mothers Raise Children, Fathers Raise Adults

Matt · 27 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s a saying that provokes strong reactions: “Mothers raise children; fathers raise adults.”
At first glance, it seems to box parents into rigid roles. But when you dig into decades of family psychology and cross-cultural research, you find something profound: fathers, in particular, have a special knack for cultivating traits that help children not just survive, but thrive in the unpredictable, sometimes harsh realities of adult life.

One of the most powerful of these traits is resilience — the ability to recover from setbacks, navigate stress, and adapt to challenges without falling apart. When we look at how fathers tend to interact with their children, a consistent theme emerges: they build resilience in ways that complement the secure base mothers provide.'

Invisible Man: My Experience as a Male Trainee Clinical Psychologist in a Female-Dominated System

Matt · 28 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From the very first day of training, I sensed that I was unwelcome. The discomfort was immediate. I recall walking into a room and being met with expressions of unease—subtle, yet unmistakable. Despite my efforts to introduce myself and initiate conversations, it took over twenty minutes for anyone to acknowledge me. It felt as though I had been relegated to the margins before I'd even had a chance to participate. I felt invisible—discarded onto the proverbial muck heap.

As time went on, I began to overhear fragments of conversations within the cohort. Many of my peers—predominantly women—shared histories of trauma, and tragically, many of those experiences had involved men. While I deeply respect the pain and resilience behind such disclosures, I began to sense a kind of projection: an unspoken association between myself, as a straight male, and the harm they had suffered. In contrast, the gay men in the cohort appeared to be more readily accepted—treated almost as extensions of the female group—while I and the other heterosexual men were subtly distanced.'

Trans man 'blindsided' by all the loneliness and suspicion that comes with being male

Matt · 28 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, a trans man opened up about the “culture shock” of navigating male loneliness, and shared how, if they had been forced to grow up with the often insidious messaging boys and men receive, it would have really damaged their psyche.

In a Reddit post, the man first got candid about the “social isolation” that comes from constantly being perceived as a "potential predator.”

While he noted that “all strangers, no matter their gender, keep their guard up around me,” women in particular came across as “incredibly aloof, cold, and mirthless." He did add the disclaimer that, as someone who used to have to protect themselves in the same way, they understood where the “armor” was coming from (“women aren’t just being needlessly guard[ed]”). But, for those who had never experienced life as a woman, he could easily see how this type of behavior could be viewed as “a conspiracy" against the other sex.'

NCFM Podcast: What is the Glass Floor?

Matt · 28 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Podcast video here. This podcast discusses "the glass floor", which keeps women from being held accountable for bad actions as well as other circumstances.

China's new divorce law has had unintended consequences

Matt · 30 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. To encourage men to marry, the Chinese government passed a new law allowing men to gasp keep what they earned during the marriage. The effects are not as expected.

College study: There are too many ‘male-identified’ jazz educators

Mastodon · 30 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It probably comes as no surprise in this day and age that there exists a place called the “Institute of Jazz and Gender Justice” at Boston’s Berklee College of Music.

The institute claims jazz “remains predominantly male due to a biased system,” which “impos[es] a significant toll on those who aspire to work in it.”

So its main page asks right under the title banner “What would jazz sound like in a culture without patriarchy?”

A recent study by the institute appears to confirm the assertion as it shows “male-identified jazz educators” outnumber “female-identified counterparts” by six to one. The latter group comprises just eight percent of instrumental jazz instructors, and only 15 percent of all jazz faculty.'

The War on Male Identity

Matt · 30 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By now, most of us have heard the term “brainwashing.” It usually brings to mind Cold War images of broken POWs or disturbing cult documentaries. But what if the most pervasive forms of psychological manipulation aren’t hidden in bunkers or religious compounds — but embedded in mainstream institutions that claim to promote justice?

Psychiatrist Robert Jay Lifton, who studied Communist reeducation camps in Maoist China, laid out the classic framework for understanding brainwashing. In his landmark work, Thought Reform and the Psychology of Totalism, Lifton identified eight core mechanisms that coercive systems use to break down and reshape the self.

At the heart of it? A psychological attack on your identity — followed by shame, blame, and the expectation that you publicly confess and “rebuild” yourself according to the group’s ideology.

Sound familiar?'

Women can be drafted into the Danish military as Russian aggression and military investment grow

Matt · 30 June 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Katrine and other female soldiers, all of whom spoke to The Associated Press on June 11 on the condition that only their first names be used because of operational security, volunteered for military service earlier this year. Until now, that was the only way women were allowed to partake in military service, although women have been able to enlist as full-time members of the armed forces since the early 1970s.

The Scandinavian country is seeking to increase the number of young people in the military by extending compulsory enlistment to women for the first time. Men and women can both still volunteer, and the remaining places will be filled by a gender-neutral draft lottery.'

Society may have overestimated risk of the ‘manosphere’, UK researchers say

Mastodon · 2 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who engage in the online “manosphere” and the content of Andrew Tate are often able to express a “strong commitment to equal treatment and fairness”, according to research commissioned by Ofcom.

Prompted by growing concerns about internet misogyny, researchers for the UK communications regulator followed the journeys of dozens of men through online content ranging from the US podcaster Joe Rogan to forums for “incels” (involuntary celibates). They found that while a minority encountered “extremely misogynistic content”, many users of the manosphere were critically engaged, selective and capable of discarding messages that did not resonate with their values.

They found it was far from a unified community: many participants felt the various subcultures under the manosphere umbrella were misunderstood, with extreme misogyny being grouped with benign self-improvement content. Several participants were drawn to it by its perceived humour, open debate and irreverence as well as connecting with views they found about traditional gender roles and family dynamics.

“This research does challenge the assumptions about the experiences and perceptions of individuals consuming manosphere content,” Ofcom said.

“Many of the participants expressed a strong commitment to equal treatment and fairness. They showed particular sensitivity to situations they perceived as unjust or discriminatory. This extended to issues specifically concerning men.”'

New book: "The Convention on the Elimination of all forms of Discrimination Against Men (CEDAM)"

Matt · 2 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Men (CEDAM) is a bold and comprehensive manifesto advocating for global recognition of men's rights. Modeled on the UN's CEDAW* treaty, this book introduces CEDAM an international framework that identifies and challenges 46 key areas where men and boys face discrimination. Backed by detailed examples, essays, and personal reflections, Augustsson's work calls for true gender equality by addressing often overlooked issues like conscription, genital integrity, fatherhood rights, educational disparities, and societal biases.'

Amazon page here.

Presidential Message on National Men's Health Week, 2025

Matt · 3 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I've grown accustomed to hearing politicians talk about men's health, usually focusing on the idea that men need to stop taking risks and start going to the doctor. The implication is that it's somehow men's fault that they're at risk of dying early, and so on. Of course, this is what feminists often refer to as "blaming the victim."

That's why I was so pleased to read Donald Trump's message for National Men's Health Week. He spoke candidly about the disadvantages men face and the ways in which men and masculinity have been targeted by a vicious campaign. It was a breath of fresh air.

No matter how you feel about Donald Trump, you have to give him credit for calling out the reality of men's issues in today's world. Below, I'll paste the entire message for you to read. It's a step in the right direction.'

AU: Inspire Early Learning to stop male staff changing nappies in wake of shocking child abuse allegations in Victoria

Matt · 5 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male educators will reportedly no longer be involved in changing nappies or toileting duties at a string of Victorian childcare centres.

Inspire Early Learning – which operates 16 childcare centres in the state – sent a letter to parents on Friday announcing the changes, as per 7News.

Chief curriculum and quality officer Eleinna Anderson told families the changes were to ensure they remained “sensitive and responsive to family needs”, and that male staff would still play a “vital role” in activities and classroom preparation among other duties.'

Russia’s ‘anti-woke’ visa lures those fearing a moral decline in the West

Matt · 6 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hare family, devout Christians who ran a farm in Texas, describe themselves as a family of “moral migrants” and have emerged as the face of a small but growing trend of Westerners relocating to Russia in search of the traditional, conservative values they feel are eroding in the liberal West. Their journey reflects the ideological narrative Putin has spent years crafting: Russia as the guardian of family-centered traditions amid a Western world spiraling into moral and social decay.
...
In 2019, an Australian family — coincidentally sharing the surname Hare — relocated to Russia in protest over the legalization of same-sex marriage in their home country. They established a farm in Altai, a scenic region in southern Siberia, and run a popular video blog about their life that was prominently featured in RT and other state media coverage.

The messaging in these videos often dovetails with an established MAGA worldview. Trans and LGBTQ+ rights are cast as signs of moral decline and opposed under the guise of protecting the interests of children. Feminism is rejected as a leftist project to erode masculinity and dismantle family institutions.'

Karl Stefanovic clashes with woman calling for all male workers to be banned from childcare centres

Mastodon · 7 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Louise Edmonds, a founding member of the Independent Collective of Survivors, spoke with Karl Stefanovic on the Today show on Thursday morning, advocating for a complete ban on male workers in the childcare sector.

'Look, it is extreme for one. But the thing is, we're now seeing this is the third case of huge amounts of children being exposed to alleged paedophiles and alleged child sex abuses in a childcare centre,' Ms Edmonds said.

'What we're seeing is that less than eight per cent of (workers) actually in the industry (are male).'

Stefanovic pushed back, highlighting the challenges already faced by men in the sector.

'Men have a right to work in that area. And so many of them are dedicated,' Stefanovic said.

'The perception is already hard enough for them. And when a story like this happens, it makes it even more difficult for them.'

Ms Edmonds argued while there are 'good men' that want to be positive role models, the safety of children must come before concerns about gender equality.

'Without staining all the good men who are in there wanting to be positive role models for the young boys who are in daycare centres, there are some measures that can be taken,' Ms Edmonds said.

'We shouldn't be looking at the equality space in the sector.'

Male childcare workers say they feel judged in wake of latest abuse case

Mastodon · 7 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr Munroe said it had been a tough week for everyone working in child care, but male educators in particular.

And some advocates have said exactly that and called for men to be banned from the profession.

Mr Munroe said he was worried about other men in the field, especially those at high school thinking about a career in child care, part-way through training, or those working in less supported centres.

He is now looking at ways to support the "many good male educators out there".

"I'm thinking about … maybe opening a support group for male educators, just to let them know that there are a lot of really good ones out there."'

Prevalence of Female Psychopaths: More Common than Believed

Matt · 8 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers provide novel insights into female psychopathy, challenging the conventional 6:1 male-to-female psychopath ratio with new evidence suggesting a closer 1.2:1 ratio.

The research indicates that societal gender biases have obscured the true nature and prevalence of female psychopaths, who often employ manipulation and seduction rather than violence to achieve their goals. This revelation not only calls for a reassessment of psychopathy across genders but also signals significant implications for criminal justice and corporate leadership.'

NYTimes Article Men Where Have You Gone? Two Men Respond

Matt · 8 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I recently read a New York Times article by Rachel Drucker titled “Men, Where Have You Gone? Please Come Back.” The subtitle reads: “So many men have retreated from intimacy, hiding behind firewalls, filters and curated personas, dabbling and scrolling. We miss you.”

In the article, Drucker shares a personal story about meeting a man named James online. Things started off well—but then James disappeared. From there, she explores her ideas of why so many men seem to be withdrawing from relationships and intimacy.'

Mass circumcision ceremony that killed 93 kids is set to happen again

Matt · 8 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The annual tribal “initiation ceremony” where teenage males in South Africa undergo painful circumcision has begun – despite it ending in 93 horrific deaths last year.

Gruesome injuries also led to a further 11 penis amputations after unskilled traditional “surgeons” used old spears and razor blades to perform eye-watering rituals.'

Southern Poverty Law Center labels NCFM “male supremacist group”

Matt · 9 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Southern Poverty Law Center’s Report/Dismantling White Supremacy – How Male Supremacy Provided the Foundation for Hate in 2023, reads as follows: “This year, the SPLC documented nine male supremacist hate groups, including several abortion abolitionist groups, a popular misogynist incel community, and the National Coalition for Men.” Without a shred factual evidence, the SPLC labeled us a “male supremacist hate group,” an absurd, inflammatory, and defamatory label we categorically reject as a very woke falsehood.

For over four decades, NCFM has advanced gender equality, legal fairness, and the well-being of boys and girls, men and women, and their families through evidence-based advocacy, education, and relevant dialogue. The SPLC’s defamatory designation ignores the core of our mission and our many accomplishments in achieving equality for the sexes and conflates advocacy with extremism. Disagreement is fine, libel crosses the line.'

UK: Top private school offers 'healthy masculinity' workshops for parents to combat Andrew Tate

Mastodon · 9 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Royal Hospital School (RHS) in Suffolk is running 90 minute sessions to help families talk to their sons about resisting dark messages from the web.

Irfan Latif, headmaster of the 300-year-old institution, said private schools have a ‘responsibility’ to counter misogynistic narratives.

And he advocated promoting positive male role models such as Atticus Finch, the hero of To Kill a Mockingbird, as an ‘alternative’ to harmful figures on social media.

RHS, which charges up to £46,000 a year for boarders and is part of the elite HMC private schools group, was the alma mater of hero explorer Ernest Joyce.

Mr Latif said: ‘We have not had any particular issues or incidents at RHS, but as educators we have a duty to be proactive.

‘The workshops are about equipping our pupils, and their parents, to navigate the pressures of modern masculinity before problems arise.’

Writing in Independent School Management Plus, Mr Latif said the issue of ‘toxic masculinity’ poses ‘significant challenges for schools’.'

Teacher seeks to move closer to student she sexually abused '50 times'

Matt · 9 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alleged dirty teacher Christina Formella and her husband were all smiles in court as she tried to convince a judge to let her move closer to the ex-student whom she is accused sexually abusing more than 50 times.

Formella, 30, swished into a DuPage County courtroom holding hands with hubby Michael on Wednesday morning. Neither of the Formellas answered questions about the case that has shocked suburban Chicago.

“Michael was holding her hand the entire time. They were smiling at each other, literally smiling at each other the entire time until she got up,” one courtroom spy who sat directly behind the couple told The Post. “They look really confident.”'

There is no feminist solution to the fertility crisis

Matt · 9 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The reality is that women mate hypergamously, meaning they only find men “appealing” if they make as much money or more than they do. Women with college degrees prefer men with college degrees or higher education. They will even marry men without college degrees, but only if they make more money than they do. But women simply do not find men who make less than they do appealing.

And over the past 50 years, the percentage of women who outearn men has risen substantially. According to the Congressional Research Service, the real wage of the average woman has risen almost 30% while the real wage of the average man has decreased by 3%. Now, for college-educated men, the story is different. The average real wage of men with a college degree has risen substantially. But only 37% of men have a college degree, and that number is falling. At the same time, the percentage of women with a college degree already surpasses men (39%) and continues to rise.'

In India’s deportation drive, Muslim men recount being tossed into the sea

Matt · 11 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The politics of religion aside, would any government do this to women? No. It's unthinkable, isn't it? Excerpt:

'Indian police dragged Hasan Shah from his bed in western India one morning in late April. Later, he said, officers bound his hands with rope, placed a blindfold over his eyes and put him on a boat bound for Bangladesh.

After three days at sea, Shah said, they stood him on the edge of the vessel with a life vest, untied his hands, uncovered his eyes and gave him a final order at gunpoint: “Jump into the water,” Shah remembered the officers saying.

“If you look back, we’ll shoot you.”

Shah said he swam to dry land, where he was picked up by the Bangladeshi coast guard and taken to the city of Satkhira, in the country’s southwest, an account corroborated by the coast guard. The documents proving his Indian citizenship were snatched by police when they detained him in his hometown of Surat in India, Shah said. He is stranded now in a foreign country, effectively stateless, separated from his wife and four children who rely on his meager income as a waste picker.'

UK: Nursery worker convicted of abusing 21 babies

Matt · 12 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And in Australia they're trying to prohibit men from being daycare workers. Excerpt:

'A 22-year-old nursery worker has been convicted of abusing 21 babies, including kicking one little boy in the face and stepping on his shoulder.

Roksana Lecka, from Hounslow, west London, admitted seven counts of cruelty to a person under the age of 16 and was found guilty of another 14 by a jury at Kingston Crown Court, the Metropolitan Police said.

Her crimes were discovered in June last year after she was sent home for pinching a number of children and appearing "flustered" at the Riverside Nursery in Twickenham, south-west London, the Crown Prosecution Service said.

Solicitor Jemma Till from Irwin Mitchell said the families involved had been "traumatised".

Lecka will be sentenced at Kingston Crown Court on 26 September.

Detectives from the Met Police went through CCTV from the nursery that showed her pinching and scratching children under their clothes on their arms, legs and stomachs.'

The Consequences of Blaming Men for Everything

Matt · 13 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Nick Freitas takes feminism to task in this talk. He puts the matter in the context of Christianity and evokes traditional notions of masculinity, which may put off some people, but at least he is addressing the issue.

Why Men Struggle to Stand Together

Matt · 14 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women consistently show strong in-group bias. They support each other socially, emotionally, and politically. They instinctively identify with the struggles of other women. This solidarity forms the backbone of movements, activism, academic departments, and public policy. When a woman sees another woman being mistreated, her response is often immediate: “That could’ve been me.”

Men, by contrast, tend to show weaker and more conditional in-group bias. Their loyalty to other men is context-dependent, usually tied to shared purpose or external threat. A man will stand with another man on the battlefield, on the job site, or on the basketball court—but outside of those types of goal-oriented bonds, that sense of male unity often fades.
...
Even today, many men see other men as rivals first, allies second. If another man struggles—loses his job, breaks down emotionally, or gets mistreated in a custody battle—he may not get support. He may get silence. Or worse, blame. Because in the male psyche, weakness often reads as threat. It disrupts the unspoken expectation that men must be strong, self-reliant, and in control. In male hierarchies, weakness can be seen as a liability—something that drags down the group or exposes it to risk. And for many men, seeing another man suffer can stir up buried shame or fear about their own vulnerabilities, leading them to distance themselves rather than lean in. It’s not cruelty—it’s biology and conditioning.

This fragile in-group bias creates a massive hurdle for any effort to advocate for men. Men’s rights movements, fatherhood initiatives, male mental health campaigns—they all struggle not just because society ignores them, but because men themselves often fail to show up for one another. And this problem isn’t just internal. It’s magnified by something even larger: gynocentrism.'

Girling the Boy Scouts

Matt · 15 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Boy Scouts of America has a Chief Diversity Officer & Vice President of Diversity and Inclusion. The organization requires all Eagle Scouts to earn a badge in diversity, equity, and inclusion. It admitted girls to its program for 11- to 17-year-old boys in 2019 and changed the name of that program from the Boy Scouts to Scouts BSA. The word “boy” has been routed from the organization’s promotional materials and replaced with “youth,” as in: “For more than 100 years, Scouting programs have instilled in youth the values found in the Scout Oath.”

Does it matter, then, that the Boy Scouts of America has now extirpated the last use of “boy” found in its entire portfolio—the “boy” in “Boy Scouts of America,” the name of the parent organization? It does. That the Boy Scouts cannot tolerate even an atavistic use of “boy” reveals how powerful the impulse is to efface males from our culture. The transformation of the Boy Scouts of America into Scouting America is an object lesson in the incapacity of traditional institutions to withstand progressive takeover.'

The Culture of Malicious Legislating

Matt · 16 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When a group of legislatures in Washington State decided to forgo a hearing about a commission on the status of boys and men (HB 1266 and SB 5446) in February and made the same decision in years past, it became clear that there was something much more ill-natured at work.

After-all, a hearing is only one step in the process of adding a new law or changing an existing law. Hearings allow legislators to sit back and listen to expert testimony, ask questions, and hear public statements about those impacted by a potential bill. The process also allows voters to see how a policymaker votes—something many policymakers fear when it comes to the political backlash that happens when it comes to supporting boys and supporting men.'

A greater MGTOW

Matt · 17 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Good video here.

'This video explores The Psychology of Men Who Walk Away from Society's Script — a silent rebellion many men are living today, not with protests or noise, but with quiet withdrawals from a life that feels fake.'

Man who spent 17 years in prison after being wrongly convicted of rape hits out at 'insulting' compensation

Matt · 20 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man who served 17 years in prison after being wrongly convicted of rape has hit out at an 'insulting' increase in compensation for victims of miscarriages of justice.

The Ministry of Justice has announced that the compensation cap will rise by 30 per cent for those who were convicted of a crime they did not commit.

Those wrongfully imprisoned for more than 10 years will receive £1.3 million instead of £1 million, while those with sentences of less than 10 years will receive £650,000 rather than £500,000, in the first increase to the payment since the scheme's introduction in 2008.'

Slain UC Berkeley professor said in restraining order request ex-wife made him 'fearful' for his life

Matt · 21 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Months before Przemyslaw Jeziorski, a marketing professor from the University of California, Berkeley, was killed in Greece, he filed a request for a restraining order against his ex-wife, saying he was fearful for his life due to alleged previous instances of blackmail, financial abuse and physical assault by his ex-wife's boyfriend, according to court documents obtained by ABC News.

The request was denied by a California court.

Jeziorski, a 43-year-old associate marketing professor at UC Berkeley's Haas School of Business, was allegedly shot and killed in Athens on July 4 near the home where his two children -- Zoe and Angelo -- live, his younger brother said in a statement. The children, who are 10-year-old twins, had been living with the Jeziorski's ex-wife in Athens since 2020, according to court documents.'

Why Modern Men are Quietly Giving Up on Love

Matt · 21 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. It seems the existentialist Soren Kierkegaard had things to say about life today, particularly in the realm of "romance".

Barack Obama chastises progressives for abandoning young men

Matt · 22 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. At least one news/commentary source (The Hill) has commentators broaching the topics. It's a start anyway.

New Uber feature will allow women to choose female drivers or riders

Matt · 23 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Uber is rolling out a new program for women in the U.S. that allows them to choose female riders or drivers, the company said Wednesday.

“Across the U.S., women riders and drivers have told us they want the option to be matched with other women on trips,” Uber said in a statement.

Women customers will see an option called “women drivers” and choose a different driver based on the pick-up time. Female riders will also be able to pre-book trips with women drivers. Only 1 in 5 Uber drivers are women, according to the company.'

Heterofatalism: or How to Blame Men For Everything

Matt · 25 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is a response to a recent New York Times article by Jean Garnett titled “The Trouble With Wanting Men.” The subtitle says it all: “Women are so fed up with dating men that the phenomenon even has a name — heterofatalism. So what do we do with our desire?”

Sometimes, the best response is a little humor while flipping the script. See what you think.

Ah, “heterofatalism” — the brand-new term coined for the collective exasperation of women who, after navigating the complex world of dating, come to the conclusion that men are the root of all relationship woes. You see, the issue isn't just that men are occasionally anxious, emotionally distant, or a little too obsessed with their sports teams; no, the real problem is that these poor souls — with all their confusing desires, communication issues, and tendency to occasionally ghost you after a couple of drinks — are making it impossible for women to live happily ever after.'

As of today, in Italy, the killing of a woman is considered more serious than the killing of a man

Matt · 26 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unanimously approved in Italy, the bill introducing the crime of femicide. The senators gave their first-reading approval to the measure, which now moves to the Chamber of Deputies. The bill establishes femicide as a new, autonomous crime, punishable by life imprisonment when the murder is committed for reasons of discrimination, control, possession, domination, rejection, or hatred specifically and exclusively toward a woman.

The law introduces a serious legal asymmetry: it recognizes a specific criminal offense only if the victim is female. In doing so, the legal system moves away from the universality of criminal law, which should punish the act, not the identity of the person involved. The same action, killing a partner out of jealousy or a need for control, would be punished more severely if the victim is a woman, and not if the victim is a man. This results in a form of reverse discrimination.'

"Men Can't Be Democrats"

Matt · 27 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. She asks an interesting question: Can a man "be a man" and also be a Democrat these days? Of course this appeals to some standard of manhood which IMO isn't well-defined, but the issues she brings up are food for thought.

"I quit my job, divorced my husband, and moved to Italy to retire."

Matt · 27 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If a man wrote this same piece saying he left his wife etc. to enjoy retirement in Italy, he'd be castigated. Just pointing out the double-standard. Excerpt:

'So I quit my job, retired, and divorced my husband. We had 30 years together and raised our amazing kids. But I didn't want just to walk the dog, play pickleball, and tend a garden. I wanted a bigger life.

After the divorce, I moved into a small apartment in Colorado with a monthly rent of $1,700. I still have it and rent it out to traveling nurses abroad.

In the beginning, I thought I'd travel the majority of the year, come back to the States, and live a "normal" life there for one month a year.

For some time, I did that. I've visited nearly 50 countries, including Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam, Madagascar, Turkey, Cyprus, and the more popular spots, like France, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Greece.'

Around the World, Feminists Have Become the New Extremists

Matt · 28 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Banging drums at the Columbia University library in early May, a group of protesters shouted: “Free, free Palestine!” They etched political slogans on the walls and defaced the library. At the end, 78 protesters were arrested – 60 of them female (1).

Whether the cause is Gaza, climate change, or Black Lives Matter, an overrepresentation of young women has become the norm in progressive activism.

Gallup reports that among American men aged 18 to 29, their political views have remained steady over the years. But among young women, the percentage who identify as “liberal” has soared, rising from 29% in 2000 to 40% in 2023. (2)

Gallup concludes, “a widening of the ideological gaps between men and women over time has been due to women becoming more liberal at a faster rate than men.”'

Obama and Democrats don’t get it: Masculinity is not the problem. Erasing it is

Mastodon · 30 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On the recent IMO podcast, former President Barack Obama, alongside Michelle Obama and Craig Robinson, claimed young men "don’t need sports" but instead need "gay mentors" and shouldn’t strive to be providers.

While the comment was dressed in intellectual language, let’s call it what it is: the latest in a series of assaults by the radical left on masculinity, tradition and biology.

This isn't just another misguided soundbite. It's part of a broader social re-engineering campaign, one that aims to redefine manhood by ignoring everything history, nature and civilization have taught us. If we allow it to continue, the outcome is not enlightenment. It's collapse.'

Elliot Page is not the role model boys need

Mastodon · 30 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are now better at being men than men themselves. At least, that's the message from Streatham Wells Primary, where pupils are being taught that Hollywood actress Elliot Page — formerly Ellen — is a shining example of positive masculinity.

Page, who underwent a double mastectomy and now identifies as a man, is, according to headteacher Sarah Wordlaw, the embodiment of what boys should aspire to be. "We need to encourage empathy, kindness, showing emotions," she said, "listening to alternative points of view, and developing emotional literacy."

All admirable qualities. But let's be honest: these are traits traditionally associated with females — and more specifically, with the well-behaved girls every teacher quietly dreams of cloning. Meanwhile, behaviours more typical among boys — risk-taking, competitiveness, self-assertion — are largely written off as "challenging" or worse, "toxic". And while boys are being told off, their views on sex and power are being quietly shaped elsewhere. Namely, by the porn-saturated culture they're learning from long before puberty.

Tellingly, most of the role models held up for children in schools like Streatham Wells Primary — whether boys or girls — are chosen because they defy sex stereotypes. This began as part of a feminist push to liberate boys and girls from the shackles of sex roles. But somewhere along the line, the aim became less about expanding opportunity and more about engineering conformity.'

Gaza aid site offered a 'women only' day. It didn't stop the killing

Mastodon · 30 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The food distribution was announced in advance, like many before it, in a post on social media carrying an illustration of smiling Palestinians receiving boxes of aid.

This time, however, the invitation shared by the Gaza Humanitarian Foundation (GHF) was different, featuring illustrations of only women.

"Tomorrow at our morning distribution at our location in the Saudi district, only women are welcome to come and receive a food box," the GHF post said. "Men should avoid the site during this distribution."

Mary Sheikh al-Eid wanted to feed her seven children. Her husband had been killed earlier in the war and the family had been surviving on lentil soup for three weeks, said Mary's sister Khawla, but the last week had been a struggle.

"Her children and mine told us not to go," Khawla told the BBC. "Mary told me she wanted to because it was a day for women and the numbers wouldn't be big."

...

On Thursday, the sisters Mary and Khawla set off early for the aid point in the southern Rafah area. By the time they arrived, the scene was already chaos.

"There was a huge crowd of women and the place seemed out of control, they couldn't offload and distribute the aid," Khawla said. "They started spraying the women with pepper spray, then they brought stun grenades and started throwing them on the women to force them backwards."

The sisters got split up in the mayhem. Khawla's clothes were full of pepper spray and so she called her sister, agreeing to meet at their brother's house.'

Why Is Masculine Maturity So Hard to Talk About Today?

Matt · 30 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the early 1990s, you could walk into a bookstore and find entire tables devoted to the male journey. Robert Bly's Iron John was a bestseller. Sam Keen, James Hillman, Michael Meade, Robert Moore, Richard Rohr — all were offering soulful, intelligent takes on what it meant to be a man. It wasn't about domination. It wasn't about "reclaiming power." It was about emotional honesty, growth, and purpose. In other words: maturity.

Fast forward to today, and you'll find… almost nothing. Talk about masculinity now and the conversation quickly turns to toxicity, privilege, or fragile male egos. Where once there was myth, poetry, and psychology, we now get slogans and shame.

Why did this happen? Why is masculine maturity such a neglected subject?

Here are a few answers — and a couple of stories that may help explain why the silence around men runs so deep.'

Mass circumcision ceremony leaves 39 boys dead and dozens more mutilated

Matt · 31 July 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 2025 tribal 'initiation ceremony' where teenage males in South Africa undergo agonising circumcision has ended – with 39 deaths and dozens more boys mutilated.

Despite a target being set by the Government of zero fatalities this year, the figure is still a huge drop on last year where 93 died, while a total of 361 boys have died in the last five years.

Gruesome complications in 2024 led to 11 penis amputations after unskilled traditional 'surgeons' used old spears and razor blades to perform the eye-watering rituals.'

Engineered Fatherlessness Creates Chaos

Matt · 2 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article and video here. Excerpt:

'This 2021 video explores the growing issue of fatherlessness, questioning whether it's been deliberately engineered or simply allowed to happen. It exposes the fact that we knew even in the 1960's the devastating impact of not having fathers in the home. It shows some little known, and basically ignored research about this issue. Yes, Dan Quayle was correct!'

SuperShe Island

Matt · 3 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Remeber back in 2018 the story about the island purchased by a successful American businesswoman that would be open as a resort to women only? What ever happened to it? Alas for her it seems the idea didn't pan out. In 2023 the island was sold to a shipping magnate for a million euros. The wikipedia entry is here. Intetestingly not many details are found there.

Feminist Tries Living Alone Like A Man for Two Weeks

Matt · 4 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A simple read-out of a post by a young woman discussing her 2-week experiment: live alone like a man for two weeks.

Gavin Newsom tackles masculinity crisis via executive order

Mastodon · 5 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gov. Gavin Newsom is the latest Democratic leader to address the question of how to solve rising rates of loneliness, substance use disorder, and economic stagnation among American men.

On Wednesday, he issued an executive order directing his administration to engage more men and boys by identifying civic volunteer opportunities, expanding mental health support, and recruiting more male teachers and school counselors.

Politicians on both sides of the aisle have trained their attention recently on how to improve educational, romantic and employment opportunities for men and boys, a phenomenon referred to as the “masculinity crisis.” The epidemic has been cited as a deciding factor in President Donald Trump’s reelection and as one of the reasons the Democratic Party’s popularity has plummeted to historic lows.'

Criticism Mounts as Police Chief Is Sued for Workplace Discrimination

Mastodon · 5 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cincinnati Police Chief Teresa Theetge is facing mounting criticism over how her department handled the brawl that erupted in the streets of downtown on July 25, while also being accused of workplace discrimination, the New York Post reported Saturday.

When video footage of the incident spread online, showing several people beating a man, and a woman being knocked unconscious, officials denounced the violent behavior, according to Breitbart News.

In addition, the Post report said Theetge was being sued by several officers who accused her of discriminating against white lieutenants when it came to promotions and assignments, noting the lawsuit was filed in May.

The officers in the suit have claimed the chief overlooked them and handed out the privileges to minority and female lieutenants.

The outlet continued:

Theetge was allegedly “personally involved in the assignment decisions” and used a “race-based quota system” to promote minorities and women to career-enhancing positions, the suit states.

Coveted “preferred-assignments” were doled out to 79% of minority lieutenants and 89% of female lieutenants in 2023 — but just 44% of white male Lieutenants were given the assignment, the lawsuit claimed.'

The hatred of straight white men

Matt · 8 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Sydney Watson covers a race/gender/sexual orientation bias obvious to many of us but not to everyone.

Tea: The App That Lets Women Rate Men Like Used Cars—What Could Possibly Go Wrong?

Matt · 9 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What it offers is a digital vigilante squad, accountable to no one. Screenshots are disabled. The screen reportedly blacks out if you try, and users are kept anonymous. Despite this built-in privacy feature for its petty users, the same courtesy is not extended to its potential victims of reputation destruction, gossip, manipulation, and social exclusion; all patterns of female antisocial behavior. Women on this app can "access a nationwide forum of posts" and "set alerts for a man's name" so they “never miss any tea about [their] potential date, ex, or partner.”

The app allows women to run background checks, reverse image search, and look up phone numbers, as well as advertise men as walking red or green flags. Chivalrous, funny, respectful, pays for the date, and calls back? Green flag. Toxic, jealous, dishonest, and dating multiple women? Red flag. Any anonymous scorned lover with a grudge and a WiFi connection can now upload photos of a man she wants to vet to the mob of other similarly petty, paranoid women, like a human carfax—a can of worms I can assure women they do not want to open.'

Nuisance or hero? Retired U-M prof perfects art of fighting campus DEI

Matt · 9 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So it goes with Perry, who has become one of the nation's busiest litigants in the culture wars over diversity, equity and inclusion. Over nine years, he estimates he's filed nearly 1,000 formal complaints alleging that college scholarships, programs and other opportunities based on gender or race violate federal civil-rights laws.

A hero to some and reviled by others, Perry said he's notched a long list of successes: canceling a Minnesota high school field trip for students of color, the decision by Northwood College in Midland to open up to men a scholarship that had been reserved for women and making a Michigan State University 100-year women's lounge co-ed.'

Charges dropped against man accused of trying to abduct a child at a Georgia Walmart after surveillance video sows doubt

Matt · 9 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is why men shouldn't play the protector role. He is likely to get into trouble just for being a decent human being. Excerpt:

'Charges have been dismissed against a man who was facing attempted kidnapping and other charges after a mother accused him of trying to grab her 2-year-old son from her at a Georgia Walmart, court records show.

Mahendra Patel encountered 26-year-old Caroline Miller with her two children riding a motorized cart she was driving in the March 18 incident at a Walmart in the city of Acworth, about 30 miles northwest of downtown Atlanta. He asked her for help to find Tylenol, his lawyer says. Miller alleged Patel then grabbed her 2-year-old son from her, but that she pulled the child back.

Patel's lawyer, however, says surveillance videos prove he was just trying to make sure the boy didn't fall from the scooter, which they said had just clipped a store display.

Patel was held in a Cobb County jail for 45 days after he was indicted on April 3 by a grand jury on charges of criminal attempt to commit kidnapping, simple assault and simple battery.

He was released on a $10,000 bond in early May after his lawyer, Ashleigh Merchant, presented her case as to why he should be released by showing the judge a compilation of security footage she subpoenaed from Walmart and shared with media outlets, including CNN.

It was the security footage that drew public attention to the case and prompted over 90,000 people to sign a petition declaring his innocence and calling for his release.'

NCFM – William Seremak Hunger Strike Riverside California Superior Court

Matt · 9 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr. Seremak's plea to Judge Jackson below is not an isolated cry for help — it is part of a long, persistent effort to be heard. He has written extensively to those involved in his case, detailing a deeply troubling narrative that includes alleged domestic abuse by his former spouse, politically charged criminal accusations, and a denial of his constitutional right to a speedy trial. After enduring more than 400 days of incarceration, compounded by serious health issues, Mr. Seremak remains most devastated by the forced separation from his young daughter — a loss that continues to fuel his fight for justice.

Mr. Seremak's story reflects broader concerns about a system that can overlook the rights of fathers, due process, and the human cost of bureaucratic indifference. While NCFM supports his call for accountability, transparency, and reform, the statements he makes are his own. NCFM does not endorse or verify these claims and continues to uphold the principles of due process and the presumption of innocence for all parties.'

Norfolk death prompts review into domestic abuse on men

Matt · 9 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A review into the death of a 27-year-old man who took his own life after suffering sustained domestic abuse at the hands of his partner has highlighted concerns that not enough is done to help male victims.

In the report, his family claim he was "treated differently" by agencies intended to help people suffering from domestic abuse because he was a man and that police often took his partner's side, as she was a woman.

The review was carried out by the Norfolk Community Safety Partnership (NCSP) after a police investigation into his death uncovered the history of domestic abuse.

It describes how the father-of-two - who is anonymised as 'Val' in the report - was repeatedly assaulted by his partner, 'Kim', to the extent that he was left cut, bruised and bleeding.'

Why do Women Cling to Feminism?

Matt · 11 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a powerful force at play that binds both men and women to the belief that feminism stands for equality. Despite clear evidence to the contrary, public perception remains steadfast. This strong adhesive, I believe, is gynocentrism—an often unnoticed bias that influences both genders to avoid confronting the truth.

But what exactly is gynocentrism? It's the pervasive belief that women's needs, desires, and perspectives should take precedence. This societal tendency elevates women's experiences to a central position in discussions of justice, equality, and societal norms. Remarkably, many are unaware of this bias within themselves; it operates subtly yet significantly in everyday life.

Feminists, whether knowingly or not, have harnessed gynocentrism as a tool to shield their ideology from scrutiny. By framing their movement around the principle that women's well-being and viewpoints must be prioritized—a core tenet of gynocentrism—they've built an ideology that resonates not just with women, but also with men who unwittingly accept this framework.'

Feminism is Sexism - even AI agrees

NobleDragon · 11 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

After numerous prompts and examples (mostly to increase the scope, depth, and examples), I was able to get Grok xAI to write the following. It leaves a lot to be desired, but it's a start. Enjoy!

Noble Dragon

A Comprehensive Treatise on the Non-Egalitarian, Sexist, and Racist Dimensions of Feminism Across All Waves and Types
==========

Introduction

Feminism, frequently heralded as a movement for gender equality, has consistently prioritized female interests over equitable treatment for all, revealing a core that is not only non-egalitarian but also inherently sexist and, at times, racially biased. This treatise argues that, across its historical waves and ideological variants, feminism has advanced female power while disregarding or exacerbating male disadvantages, often employing narratives and actions that vilify men and exploit racial stereotypes for strategic gain. By focusing on outcomes rather than stated intentions—as intent is best inferred from actions and achievements—this analysis draws on historical context, social science research, and academic critiques to provide a thorough indictment of feminism's non-egalitarian nature. It delves deeply into existing topics, introduces new dimensions such as political advocacy disparities, social welfare policies, and public shaming tactics, and incorporates high-profile cases like the Duke Lacrosse scandal, UVA rape hoax, and others to illustrate feminism's sexist and racist tendencies. This expanded treatise anticipates and counters objections, such as claims that feminism corrects patriarchal imbalances, and concludes with a speculative analysis of feminism's underlying goals based on its observable impacts across legal, educational, workplace, family, health, military, cultural, and political domains.

First-Wave Feminism (Late 19th to Early 20th Century): Selective Advocacy and Social Power
---

The Voting Franchise: A Case of Selective Equality

First-wave feminism, often celebrated for securing women's suffrage, operated in a context where male voting rights were significantly restricted, yet it pursued universal female franchise without addressing male disenfranchisement, revealing a non-egalitarian and sexist approach. In the early 19th-century United States, voting eligibility for men was tied to property ownership, literacy, or tax-paying status. In 1800, only about 50–60% of white adult males could vote due to property qualifications, which varied by state (Keyssar, 2000). By the 1820s, states like New York and Massachusetts relaxed these requirements, but barriers persisted for Black men, poor white men, and immigrants. The 15th Amendment (1870) nominally granted Black men voting rights, but Jim Crow laws, poll taxes, and literacy tests reduced eligible male voters to approximately 70% by 1900 (Engerman & Sokoloff, 2005). In southern states, Black male voter turnout dropped to under 10% by 1900 due to these restrictions (Keyssar, 2000).

Feminist leaders like Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony demanded universal suffrage for women, achieved with the 19th Amendment (1920), but ignored disenfranchised men. Stanton's opposition to the 15th Amendment, arguing that educated white women deserved precedence over "ignorant" Black men (Stanton, 1869, as cited in Davis, 1981), exemplifies a racially biased prioritization of white female interests. This stance alienated Black women and men, reinforcing racial hierarchies to advance white women's goals. The movement's silence on male-specific burdens, such as conscription during World War I, which mandated military service for men and resulted in over 116,000 U.S. male deaths, further highlights its sexist focus on female gains without addressing male sacrifices (Chambers, 1987). This selective advocacy ignored the fact that voting was often tied to male obligations, such as military service, which women were exempt from, revealing a pattern of pursuing female benefits while disregarding male burdens.

Women's Pre-Suffrage Social Power

Contrary to feminist narratives of female powerlessness, women wielded significant social influence before gaining the vote, often using moral authority to shape legislation and culture in ways that marginalized men and reinforced sexist stereotypes. The Women's Christian Temperance Union (WCTU), founded in 1874, mobilized 150,000 women by 1890 to advocate for prohibition, framing male drinking as a moral failing and a threat to family stability (Bordin, 1981). WCTU leader Frances Willard declared alcohol a "male vice" that women must correct, portraying men as inherently irresponsible and in need of female oversight (Willard, 1889, as cited in Gusfield, 1986). This rhetoric influenced the Volstead Act (1919), demonstrating women's legislative impact without formal voting rights.

Additional examples of female social power include:

- Moral Reform Societies: The New York Female Moral Reform Society (1834) targeted male licentiousness, particularly prostitution, positioning women as morally superior. Its publication, The Advocate of Moral Reform, described men as "the chief promoters of vice" and urged women to "restrain the passions of men" (1835, as cited in Smith-Rosenberg, 1985). Leaders like Sarah Ingraham argued that "men's licentiousness" was the root of social decay, advocating laws to regulate male behavior, such as anti-prostitution ordinances in New York City (Smith-Rosenberg, 1985). These efforts cast men as morally deficient, justifying female control over male conduct.

- Public Health Advocacy: Women led sanitation reforms through organizations like the Ladies' Sanitary Association (1860s), criticizing male-dominated municipal governance as negligent. Their campaigns secured ordinances for improved water and waste systems in cities like Boston and Philadelphia, showcasing women's ability to shape policy through moral suasion (Melosi, 2000). Leaders like Louisa Lee Schuyler framed men as "indifferent to public welfare," reinforcing sexist stereotypes of male incompetence (Melosi, 2000).

- Education Reform and Male Disadvantage: Feminist advocates like Catharine Beecher expanded female access to education, establishing schools like the Hartford Female Seminary (1823) and shaping curricula that prioritized female literacy and professional training (Sklar, 1973). However, these reforms ignored boys' restricted educational access, particularly in rural areas. In the 19th century, boys aged 10–14 were frequently kept from school during planting and harvest seasons for farm labor, leading to a 20% lower attendance rate compared to girls in agricultural states like Iowa and Nebraska by 1870 (Ruggles et al., 2010). For example, in Wisconsin, boys' school attendance dropped to 65% during peak agricultural seasons, while girls maintained 85% attendance (Tyack & Hansot, 1990). Feminist advocacy for women's colleges, such as Vassar (1861) and Wellesley (1870), focused on female higher education without addressing these K–12 disparities for boys, which resulted in lower literacy rates for rural males (15% illiteracy vs. 10% for females by 1880) (U.S. Census Bureau, 1880). This selective focus perpetuated an educational gap that favored girls and ignored systemic barriers for boys, reflecting a sexist bias in feminist priorities.

These examples demonstrate women's ability to leverage moral, social, and cultural authority to drive change, often at the expense of men's social standing. By framing men as morally inferior or socially deficient, first-wave feminism reinforced sexist stereotypes and prioritized female empowerment over equitable reform. The neglect of boys' educational barriers further underscores a pattern of pursuing female gains while ignoring male disadvantages.

Conscription and Male Sacrifice

First-wave feminism's silence on conscription exemplifies its non-egalitarian and sexist nature. During World War I, the Selective Service Act of 1917 mandated military service for men aged 21–30, with over 2.8 million drafted and 116,000 deaths (Chambers, 1987). Non-compliance was punishable by imprisonment, and conscientious objectors faced harsh penalties, including solitary confinement (Kohn, 1986). Women faced no equivalent obligation, yet feminist leaders like Stanton and Anthony did not advocate for women's inclusion in the draft or men's exemption, despite demanding equal rights in voting. This selective advocacy ignored the linkage between male citizenship and military sacrifice, reinforcing a pattern of pursuing female benefits while disregarding male burdens.

Racial Bias in Suffrage Advocacy

The racial bias in first-wave feminism's suffrage campaign further highlights its non-egalitarian nature. Stanton and Anthony's opposition to the 15th Amendment, which prioritized Black male suffrage, was rooted in a belief that white women were more entitled to vote. Stanton's writings in The Revolution (1868–1870) frequently used racial slurs, describing Black men as "Sambos" unfit for political power (Davis, 1981). This rhetoric alienated Black women, who were excluded from mainstream feminist organizations like the National Woman Suffrage Association (NWSA), and ignored the disenfranchisement of Black men through poll taxes and literacy tests. The NWSA's alignment with white supremacist groups, such as southern women's clubs that supported segregation, further entrenched racial hierarchies to advance white female interests (Newman, 1999). This willingness to exploit racial divisions reveals a racist dimension in first-wave feminism's pursuit of female empowerment.

Anticipating Objections

Critics may argue that first-wave feminism focused on suffrage due to women's unique exclusion from voting. However, the restricted male franchise—only 70% of men could vote by 1900—and the burdens of conscription highlight feminism's selective focus (Keyssar, 2000; Chambers, 1987). The racially charged opposition to Black male suffrage and the exclusion of Black women from feminist organizations undermine claims of egalitarian intent (Davis, 1981). An equitable movement would have addressed all voting restrictions and gender-specific burdens, not just those affecting women.

Second-Wave Feminism (1960s–1980s): Benefits Without Burdens

Workplace Opportunities and Occupational Segregation

Second-wave feminism, catalyzed by Betty Friedan's The Feminine Mystique (1963), sought access to male-dominated fields but ignored men's overrepresentation in high-risk occupations, revealing a sexist bias in its pursuit of equality. The Equal Pay Act of 1963 addressed wage disparities, increasing female representation in law (from 5% in 1970 to 20% by 1980) and medicine (from 10% to 25%) (Goldin, 1990). However, feminist advocacy did not address men's dominance in dangerous jobs like construction (93% male, 7,000 annual deaths), mining (98% male, 1,200 deaths), and logging (95% male, 500 deaths) (BLS, 1975). Men accounted for 94% of occupational fatalities, yet no feminist campaigns pushed for women's inclusion in these fields or protections for men (BLS, 1975). This selective focus on prestigious roles, while ignoring hazardous ones, prioritized female advancement over equitable risk-sharing.

For example, the National Organization for Women (NOW) campaigned for women's entry into corporate boardrooms and professional schools but remained silent on male-dominated trades like welding, where men faced high injury rates (BLS, 1975). The Occupational Safety and Health Act (1970), while improving workplace safety, was not influenced by feminist advocacy to address male-specific risks, despite men comprising 90% of workplace injuries (Levine, 2003). This pattern of pursuing male benefits without male burdens reflects a sexist agenda that favored female empowerment over mutual equity.

Reproductive Rights and Male Disenfranchisement

The push for reproductive rights, culminating in Roe v. Wade (1973), granted women autonomy over pregnancy but ignored men's lack of reproductive choice. Men faced mandatory child support obligations without legal options to opt out post-conception, a disparity unaddressed by feminist organizations like NOW (Young, 2006). In Hermanson v. State (1981), courts upheld male child support obligations even in cases of non-consensual conception, such as statutory rape, reinforcing men's legal powerlessness. Feminist advocacy for female reproductive autonomy, while critical, ignored this asymmetry, prioritizing female rights over equitable reproductive policies.

Conscription and Military Service

During the Vietnam War, men faced mandatory conscription, with 58,220 U.S. male deaths, while feminists did not advocate for women's inclusion in the draft or men's exemption (Chambers, 1987). The Selective Service Act of 1980 continued to require only men to register, with non-compliance punishable by up to five years in prison. NOW's silence on this issue, despite demands for workplace equality, underscores a sexist prioritization of female benefits over male burdens. For example, feminist campaigns for equal pay and job access did not extend to advocating for gender-neutral conscription, even as women gained access to military academies like West Point in 1976 (Holm, 1992).

Family Law: Custody and Alimony

Second-wave feminism resisted egalitarian family law reforms, particularly in divorce and custody, prioritizing maternal rights over equitable outcomes. No-fault divorce laws, supported by NOW in the 1970s, empowered women to leave marriages but disadvantaged men financially and emotionally. By 1980, mothers received custody in 80% of U.S. cases, despite meta-analyses showing shared parenting benefits children's psychological and social outcomes (Bauserman, 2002). NOW opposed joint custody reforms, arguing they could tie women to abusive ex-partners, even in non-abusive cases, claiming shared custody "undermines maternal authority" and could lead to "economic instability for women" (NOW, 1986, as cited in Kruk, 1993). This stance ignored evidence that non-custodial fathers faced 2.5 times higher suicide rates and paid 85% of child support, often under financial strain (Kposowa, 2000; U.S. Census Bureau, 1985).

Feminist leaders like Gloria Steinem supported alimony reforms that favored women, arguing they compensated for domestic labor (Steinem, 1970). However, men were awarded alimony in less than 10% of cases by 1980, despite economic disparities in some marriages (Weitzman, 1985). In California, where no-fault divorce was pioneered in 1969, men faced asset division that often left them with less than 30% of marital property, exacerbating post-divorce poverty (Weitzman, 1985). This entrenched maternal preference and male financial burdens, reflecting a sexist bias against equitable family law.

Domestic Violence: Exclusion of Male Victims

Second-wave feminism established women's shelters and rape crisis centers but ignored male victims, reinforcing a sexist narrative that only women suffer violence. The National Crime Victimization Survey (1973–1980) reported that 35% of intimate partner violence victims were men, yet feminist-led shelters, influenced by NOW, focused exclusively on women (Straus, 1999). Erin Pizzey, founder of the first women's shelter in 1971, criticized feminist shelters for refusing male victims, noting that men reporting abuse were often turned away or ridiculed (Pizzey, 2011). The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA, 1994) allocated resources primarily for female victims, despite comparable male victimization rates (35% of men vs. 37% of women) (CDC, 2010). Feminist rhetoric, such as NOW's 1980 campaign framing domestic violence as a "male problem," marginalized male victims and denied them support, perpetuating a sexist bias (Dutton, 2006).

Political Advocacy Disparities

Second-wave feminism's political advocacy focused on female-specific issues, such as abortion rights and workplace discrimination, while ignoring male-specific political disadvantages. For example, men faced mandatory draft registration, which was tied to eligibility for federal benefits like student loans and government jobs, a requirement women were exempt from (Holm, 1992). Feminist organizations did not advocate for gender-neutral draft policies or protections for men denied benefits due to non-registration. Similarly, feminist lobbying for the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) emphasized female equality but ignored male-specific issues like paternity fraud, where men were legally obligated to support children they did not father (Young, 2006). This selective advocacy prioritized female political power over equitable reform.

Anticipating Objections

Critics might argue that second-wave feminism addressed systemic patriarchal barriers, justifying a female focus. However, ignoring male burdens—workplace deaths, conscription, reproductive disparities, custodial inequities, and political disadvantages—contradicts egalitarian principles (BLS, 1975; Young, 2006). NOW's opposition to shared custody and the exclusion of male victims from violence advocacy highlight a sexist prioritization of female interests over mutual equity (Bauserman, 2002; Straus, 1999).

Third-Wave Feminism (1990s–Early 2000s): Cultural Narratives and Male Vilification
---

Cultural Narratives and Stereotyping

Third-wave feminism, emphasizing intersectionality, perpetuated anti-male narratives by framing men as universally privileged, often with racially charged undertones. Peggy McIntosh's "male privilege" concept (1988) portrayed men as inherently advantaged, ignoring male disadvantages like suicide (3.5 times higher than female rates) and incarceration (93% male prisoners) (CDC, 1999; BJS, 2000). Gender studies programs labeled masculinity as "toxic," with terms like "hegemonic masculinity" portraying male behavior as oppressive (Connell, 1995). For example, feminist scholar Michael Kimmel argued that masculinity fosters violence and entitlement, without equivalent scrutiny of female gender roles (Kimmel, 2000). Cultural products like Eve Ensler's The Vagina Monologues (1996) depicted men as aggressors, with lines like "My vagina was my village, and you invaded it," reinforcing stereotypes of male predation (Ensler, 1996). The riot grrrl movement's lyrics, such as Bikini Kill's "Dead Men Don't Rape" (1991), implied inherent male violence, shaping cultural perceptions that marginalized male perspectives (Marcus, 2010). Sitcoms like Home Improvement and Everybody Loves Raymond portrayed men as bumbling or emotionally stunted, embedding negative stereotypes (Scharrer, 2001).

Educational Disparities and Male Neglect

Third-wave feminism prioritized female educational opportunities, such as STEM initiatives, while ignoring male educational decline. By 2000, women earned 57% of bachelor's degrees, and boys lagged in reading and writing by 10–15 points on standardized tests (OECD, 2000). Feminist advocacy focused on closing the gender gap in male-dominated fields like engineering (5% female in 1990) but ignored male underrepresentation in education (75% female) and boys' lower graduation rates (84% vs. 90% for girls) (NCES, 2000). Title IX policies, while promoting female sports, eliminated over 2,000 men's teams by 2000, reducing male athletic opportunities (Gavora, 2002). For example, universities like Stanford cut men's wrestling and gymnastics programs to comply with Title IX proportionality requirements, despite male student demand (Gavora, 2002). This selective focus exacerbated the educational gender gap, favoring female advancement over balanced reform.

High-Profile False Accusations: Duke Lacrosse Case

The Duke Lacrosse case (2006) exemplifies third-wave feminism's sexist and racist tendencies. Crystal Mangum, a Black woman, falsely accused three white Duke lacrosse players of rape, sparking a national narrative of privileged white men victimizing a marginalized woman. Feminist commentators like Amanda Marcotte labeled defenders of the accused as "rape-loving scum" and sarcastically remarked, "Can't a few white boys sexually assault a black woman anymore without people getting all wound up about it?" (Marcotte, 2007, as cited in Wikipedia, 2024). The NAACP and Duke's "Group of 88" faculty, many aligned with feminist ideology, condemned the players as racist and sexist, despite no DNA evidence and Mangum's inconsistent accounts (Taylor & Johnson, 2007). The case collapsed in 2007, with prosecutor Mike Nifong disbarred for withholding exculpatory evidence. Mangum admitted in 2024 that she fabricated the allegations, citing a desire for "validation" (AP News, 2024). The rush to judgment, fueled by feminist narratives, vilified innocent men and exploited racial tensions, highlighting sexism and racism in feminist advocacy.

Additional Cases: Mattress Girl and Columbia University

The “Mattress Girl” case at Columbia University (2014) further illustrates third-wave feminism’s sexist bias. Emma Sulkowicz accused fellow student Paul Nungesser of rape, carrying a mattress on campus as a feminist protest, supported by feminist groups and Senator Kirsten Gillibrand (Sulkowicz, 2014). Columbia’s investigation found insufficient evidence, and Nungesser faced harassment and reputational damage, despite police declining to press charges (Young, 2015). Sulkowicz’s performance art, celebrated by feminist media, amplified the narrative of male predation without due process, reflecting a sexist presumption of guilt.

Anticipating Objections

Critics may claim that third-wave feminism’s intersectionality made it inclusive. However, its neglect of male issues—incarceration, suicide, and educational decline—and its role in cases like Duke Lacrosse and Mattress Girl reveal a sexist and racially biased approach that prioritizes female narratives over evidence and fairness (BJS, 2000; CDC, 1999; Taylor & Johnson, 2007).

Fourth-Wave Feminism (2010s–Present): Amplifying Sexism and Racism
---

#MeToo and Presumption of Guilt

The #MeToo movement amplified anti-male narratives by presuming male guilt, often with racial undertones. While exposing abuse, it sidelined male victims (1 in 6 men report sexual abuse) and promoted “believe women” policies that undermined due process (Stemple & Meyer, 2014). The Johnny Depp–Amber Heard case (2022) revealed mutual abuse, yet Depp faced ostracism based on unproven allegations, with feminist organizations like NOW defending Heard’s claims (Heard v. Depp, 2022). The UVA rape hoax (2014), reported by Rolling Stone, falsely accused fraternity members of gang rape, driven by feminist narratives of campus rape culture. The story collapsed due to inconsistencies, but not before damaging reputations, with feminist advocates like Zerlina Maxwell defending the narrative despite evidence (Erdely, 2014; Coronel et al., 2015). These cases reflect a sexist bias that prioritizes female narratives over fairness and exploits racial stereotypes when convenient, as seen in the UVA case’s portrayal of white fraternity members as predators.

False Accusation Rates

Feminist claims that false sexual assault accusations are only 2–10% (Lisak et al., 2010) underestimate the issue. A 2010 meta-analysis found rates of 10–41% using stricter definitions of “false” (e.g., proven fabrication) (David et al., 2010). A 1994 study by Eugene Kanin estimated a 40% false accusation rate in a small U.S. city, based on police and victim recantations, though its small sample limits generalizability (Kanin, 1994). A 2017 study by the National Sexual Violence Resource Center found that 20% of allegations were inconclusive or lacked evidence, suggesting a higher potential for false claims than commonly reported (NSVRC, 2017). High-profile cases like Duke Lacrosse, UVA, and Mattress Girl highlight the devastating impact of false accusations, amplified by feminist rhetoric, on men’s lives through job loss, reputational damage, and social ostracism (Taylor & Johnson, 2007; Coronel et al., 2015).

Institutional Double Standards

Fourth-wave feminism has pursued access to male-only spaces while preserving female-only ones, reflecting sexist double standards:

- Sports Reporters in Locker Rooms: Feminist lawsuits, like Ludtke v. Kuhn (1978), granted female reporters access to male locker rooms, arguing equality. However, male reporters remain barred from female locker rooms, citing privacy, a disparity unaddressed by feminists (Ludtke, 1978). For example, in 1990, female reporter Lisa Olson faced harassment in the New England Patriots’ locker room, prompting feminist calls for access, but no reciprocal advocacy for male reporters (Olson, 1990).

- Male-Only vs. Female-Only Colleges: Feminist lawsuits, such as Mississippi University for Women v. Hogan

(1982), forced male-only colleges like The Citadel to admit women, citing discrimination. Female-only colleges like Wellesley and Smith remain exclusive, with feminists defending them as “safe spaces” (Hogan, 1982; Wellesley College, 2020). This double standard prioritizes female privilege while dismantling male spaces.

- Boy Scouts vs. Girl Scouts: Feminist advocacy led to the Boy Scouts admitting girls in 2018, arguing inclusivity, but the Girl Scouts remain female-only, with no feminist push for boys’ inclusion (BSA, 2018; Girl Scouts, 2020). This reflects a sexist agenda that opens male spaces while preserving female exclusivity.

- Augusta National Golf Club: Feminists, led by Martha Burk and NOW, pressured Augusta National to admit women in 2012, framing male-only clubs as discriminatory. Female-only clubs, like the Ladies’ Golf Union, face no similar scrutiny, highlighting feminist hypocrisy (Burk, 2003).

- Military Academies: Feminist lawsuits in the 1990s forced male-only military academies, like the Virginia Military Institute (VMI), to admit women (United States v. Virginia, 1996). Female-only programs, such as women’s leadership initiatives within the military, remain unchallenged, reinforcing sexist double standards (Binkin, 1993).

These double standards prioritize female access while preserving female privilege, undermining egalitarian claims and reflecting a sexist agenda.

Educational Disparities and Male Decline

Feminist-driven initiatives have boosted female STEM participation (30% of degrees by 2020) but ignored male college enrollment declines (41% of graduates) (NCES, 2020). Title IX policies disproportionately discipline men, with 70% of suspensions for sexual misconduct, often without conclusive evidence (Kipnis, 2017). For example, in 2015, Yale University suspended a male student based on an unproven allegation, later overturned, highlighting the bias in Title IX enforcement (Kipnis, 2017). Feminist advocacy for female scholarships and mentorship programs has not been matched by efforts to address boys’ lower high school graduation rates (88% vs. 90% for girls) or male underrepresentation in fields like nursing (75% female) (NCES, 2020; BLS, 2020).

Workplace Disparities and High-Risk Jobs

Feminist policies have increased female representation in corporate boards (e.g., Norway’s 40% female mandate) but ignored male-dominated high-risk industries, where men account for 92% of workplace deaths (BLS, 2020). No feminist campaigns advocate for women’s inclusion in construction (93% male) or for men’s entry into female-dominated fields like teaching (70% female) (BLS, 2020). The gender pay gap, often cited as evidence of discrimination, ignores men’s overrepresentation in low-paying, dangerous jobs like waste collection (95% male) (Hakim, 2000). This selective focus reflects a sexist prioritization of female advancement over equitable risk-sharing.

Mental Health and Health Disparities

Feminist campaigns focus on female mental health, such as postpartum depression, but ignore male suicide rates (3–4 times higher globally) and veteran PTSD, which affects 15% of male veterans (WHO, 2021; Tanielian & Jaycox, 2008). Breast cancer research receives 7 times more funding per death than prostate cancer, despite similar mortality rates (NCI, 2020). Feminist advocacy for women’s health initiatives, like the Women’s Health Initiative (1991), has not been matched by efforts for male-specific health issues, reflecting a sexist neglect of male well-being (White, 2011).

Criminal Justice Disparities

Feminist-influenced laws, like VAWA, prioritize female victims, despite 35% of domestic violence victims being men (CDC, 2010). Men receive 63% longer sentences for similar crimes, and women are more likely to receive probation (Starr, 2012). The “chivalry hypothesis” suggests judicial bias favoring women, with female offenders receiving lighter sentences in 80% of cases (Daly, 1987). Feminist advocacy has not addressed this disparity, reinforcing a sexist legal framework.

Media Portrayals and Public Shaming

Feminist-influenced media, from The Simpsons to Captain Marvel (2019), portrays men as incompetent or villainous, reinforcing sexist stereotypes. Feminist critics like Anita Sarkeesian critique male video game characters as “toxic,” while female stereotypes face less scrutiny (Sarkeesian, 2013). Public shaming campaigns, such as #YesAllWomen, generalize men as threats, with tweets like “All men benefit from male privilege” amplifying sexist narratives (Hess, 2014). These tactics marginalize men and contribute to mental health disparities, with male suicide rates 3–4 times higher (WHO, 2021).

Social Welfare Policies

Feminist advocacy has shaped social welfare policies to favor women, often at men’s expense. For example, Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) programs prioritize mothers, with 95% of benefits going to women, despite male caregivers’ needs (USDA, 2020). Homelessness programs focus on female victims, though men comprise 90% of the homeless population (HUD, 2020). Feminist campaigns for subsidized childcare rarely address single fathers, who receive less than 10% of benefits (U.S. Census Bureau, 2020). This reflects a sexist bias in resource allocation.

Additional Cases: Brock Turner and Brian Banks

- Brock Turner Case (2016): Feminist outrage over Turner’s six-month sentence for sexual assault framed him as a symbol of “rape culture,” ignoring the complexity of the case, where both parties were intoxicated and evidence was inconclusive (People v. Turner, 2016). Feminist media, like Jezebel, labeled Turner a “privileged predator,” amplifying racial and class stereotypes without acknowledging due process concerns (Dockterman, 2016).

- Brian Banks Case (2012): Banks, a Black man, was falsely accused of rape in 2002, serving five years in prison before his accuser recanted. Feminist narratives initially supported the accuser, ignoring racial and gender biases in the justice system (Banks, 2012). The case highlights how feminist advocacy can exploit racial stereotypes to vilify men.

Anticipating Objections

Critics may argue that fourth-wave feminism addresses leadership gaps (8% of Fortune 500 CEOs are female). However, ignoring male disadvantages in education, workplace safety, criminal justice, and social welfare, while pursuing double standards in institutional access, reveals a sexist and racially selective agenda (NCES, 2020; BLS, 2020; Taylor & Johnson, 2007).

Female Power and Privilege: A Historical Perspective

Reassessing Power Dynamics

The feminist narrative of universal patriarchy oversimplifies history, ignoring women’s significant influence. Mothers, as primary caregivers, shaped societal values and gender norms, exerting more influence than formal political power (Chodorow, 1978). Women’s moral authority, evident in temperance and reform movements, positioned them as society’s ethical arbiters, often at men’s expense (Welter, 1966). For example, 19th-century women’s religious leadership in churches like the Methodist Episcopal Church influenced community norms, with women comprising 60% of congregants and driving moral reforms (Brekus, 1998).

Forms of Female Power

- Sexual Power: Women’s mate selection strategies influenced male behavior, securing resources or status (Buss, 1989). In Victorian England, strategic marriages enhanced family wealth, a power dynamic ignored by feminists (Davidoff & Hall, 1987).

- Maternal Influence: Mothers socialized children, reinforcing gender norms like male stoicism, which disadvantaged men emotionally (Chodorow, 1978). For example, mothers’ emphasis on male “toughness” contributed to higher male suicide rates (Kposowa, 2000).

- Moral Authority: WCTU and moral reform societies framed men as morally inferior, influencing laws that regulated male behavior. Frances Willard's claim that men's "animal passions" required female restraint justified anti-vice laws (Gusfield, 1986).

Anticipating Objections

Critics may argue that women's power was limited by domestic roles. However, maternal and moral influence shaped societal norms more than political power, and feminist advocacy leveraged these roles to advance female interests while ignoring male vulnerabilities (Chodorow, 1978; Gusfield, 1986).

Additional Societal Impacts

Economic Disparities

Feminist policies have boosted female earnings (82% of male wages), but men dominate low-paying, high-risk jobs like waste collection (95% male) and construction (BLS, 2020). Feminist advocacy for equal pay ignores men's overrepresentation in these sectors, reflecting a sexist bias (Hakim, 2000).

Public Policy and Taxation

Feminist-influenced policies, like tax credits for single mothers, disproportionately benefit women, with 90% of Earned Income Tax Credit recipients being female (IRS, 2020). Men, particularly low-income fathers, receive less support, despite higher poverty rates among non-custodial fathers (U.S. Census Bureau, 2020).

Cultural Narratives and Literature

Feminist literature, like Andrea Dworkin's Pornography: Men Possessing Women (1981), portrays male sexuality as inherently violent, contributing to cultural biases that harm men's social standing (Dworkin, 1981). Contemporary feminist books, like The Handmaid's Tale adaptations, amplify dystopian narratives of male oppression, ignoring female power dynamics (Atwood, 1985).

Religious Influence

Feminist advocacy within religious institutions has prioritized female inclusion, such as women's ordination, but ignored male-specific issues like the expectation of male stoicism in religious teachings, which contributes to mental health disparities (Brekus, 1998; WHO, 2021).

Speculation on Feminism's Goals

Feminism's consistent prioritization of female interests, from suffrage to #MeToo, suggests a goal of female dominance rather than equality. Its silence on male disadvantages, double standards in institutional access, and racially charged narratives in cases like Duke Lacrosse and Brian Banks indicate a sexist and racially selective agenda that inverts traditional power dynamics to favor women (Chodorow, 1978; Taylor & Johnson, 2007). By vilifying men and preserving female privileges, feminism seeks a societal hierarchy where women hold preferential status.

Conclusion

Feminism's history reveals a non-egalitarian, sexist, and racially biased movement that prioritizes female empowerment while neglecting or vilifying men. From first-wave suffrage to fourth-wave #MeToo, feminism has pursued female benefits, ignored male burdens, and employed double standards, as seen in cases like Duke Lacrosse, UVA, and institutional access disparities. Its actions suggest a goal of female supremacy, undermining claims of equality.

Bibliography

Addis, M. E., & Mahalik, J. R. (2003). Men, masculinity, and the contexts of help seeking. American Psychologist, 58(1), 5–14. https://doi.org/10.1037/0003-066X.58.1.5

Atwood, M. (1985). The handmaid's tale. McClelland and Stewart.

Banks, B. (2012). What doesn't kill you: My life in football and beyond. Triumph Books.

Bauserman, R. (2002). Child adjustment in joint-custody versus sole-custody arrangements: A meta-analytic review. Journal of Family Psychology, 16(1), 91–102. https://doi.org/10.1037/0893-3200.16.1.91

Binkin, M. (1993). Who will fight the next war?: The changing face of the American military. Brookings Institution Press.

Bordin, R. (1981). Woman and temperance: The quest for power and liberty, 1873–1900. Temple University Press.

Boy Scouts of America (BSA). (2018). BSA welcomes girls into scouting programs. BSA National Council.

Brekus, C. A. (1998). Strangers and pilgrims: Female preaching in America, 1740–1845. University of North Carolina Press.

Burk, M. (2003). The Augusta controversy: Women, golf, and power. Ms. Magazine.

Buss, D. M. (1989). Sex differences in human mate preferences: Evolutionary hypotheses tested in 37 cultures. Behavioral and Brain Sciences, 12(1), 1–49. https://doi.org/10.1017/S0140525X00023992

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). (2010). National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey. National Center for Injury Prevention and Control.

Chambers, J. W. (1987). To raise an army: The draft comes to modern America. Free Press.

Chodorow, N. (1978). The reproduction of mothering: Psychoanalysis and the sociology of gender. University of California Press.

Connell, R. W. (1995). Masculinities. University of California Press.

Coronel, S., Coll, S., & Kravitz, D. (2015). Rolling Stone and UVA: The Columbia University report. Columbia Journalism Review.

Daly, K. (1987). Structure and practice of familial-based justice in a criminal court. Law & Society Review, 21(2), 267–290. https://doi.org/10.2307/3053522

Davidoff, L., & Hall, C. (1987). Family fortunes: Men and women of the English middle class, 1780–1850. University of Chicago Press.

David, D. S., Brannon, R., & Daugherty, M. (2010). False allegations of sexual assault: An analysis of ten years of reported cases. Violence and Victims, 25(6), 811–824. https://doi.org/10.1891/0886-6708.25.6.811

Davis, A. Y. (1981). Women, race, & class. Random House.

Dockterman, E. (2016). Why the Brock Turner case will make a difference. Time Magazine.

Dutton, D. G. (2006). Rethinking domestic violence. UBC Press.

Dworkin, A. (1981). Pornography: Men possessing women. Perigee Books.

Engerman, S. L., & Sokoloff, K. L. (2005). The evolution of suffrage institutions in the New World. The Journal of Economic History, 65(4), 891–921. https://doi.org/10.1017/S0022050705000353

Ensler, E. (1996). The vagina monologues. Villard.

Erdely, S. R. (2014). A rape on campus. Rolling Stone.

Gavora, J. (2002). Tilting the playing field: Schools, sports, sex, and Title IX. Encounter Books.

Girl Scouts of the USA. (2020). Girl Scouts policy on membership. Girl Scouts National Council.

Goldin, C. (1990). Understanding the gender gap: An economic history of American women. Oxford University Press.

Gusfield, J. R. (1986). Symbolic crusade: Status politics and the American temperance movement (2nd ed.). University of Illinois Press.

Hakim, C. (2000). Work-lifestyle choices in the 21st century: Preference theory. Oxford University Press.

Heard v. Depp, 129 Va. Cir. 1 (2022).

Hess, A. (2014). The rise of #YesAllWomen. Slate.

Holm, J. (1992). Women in the military: An unfinished revolution. Presidio Press.

Keyssar, A. (2000). The right to vote: The contested history of democracy in the United States. Basic Books.

Kimmel, M. S. (2000). The gendered society. Oxford University Press.

Kipnis, L. (2017). Unwanted advances: Sexual paranoia comes to campus. HarperCollins.

Kohn, S. M. (1986). Jailed for peace: The history of American draft law violators, 1658–1985. Praeger.

Kposowa, A. J. (2000). Marital status and suicide in the National Longitudinal Mortality Study. Journal of Epidemiology & Community Health, 54(4), 254–261. https://doi.org/10.1136/jech.54.4.254

Kruk, E. (1993). Divorce and disengagement: Patterns of fatherhood within and beyond marriage. Fernwood Publishing.

Levine, D. I. (2003). Working in the twenty-first century: Policies for economic growth through training, opportunity, and education. M.E. Sharpe.

Lisak, D., Gardinier, L., Nicksa, S. C., & Cote, A. M. (2010). False allegations of sexual assault: An analysis of ten years of reported cases. Violence and Victims, 25(6), 824–839. https://doi.org/10.1891/0886-6708.25.6.824

Ludtke v. Kuhn, 461 F. Supp. 86 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Marcus, S. (2010). Girls to the front: The true story of the riot grrrl revolution. Harper Perennial.

Melosi, M. V. (2000). The sanitary city: Urban infrastructure in America from colonial times to the present. Johns Hopkins University Press.

Mississippi University for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718 (1982).

National Cancer Institute (NCI). (2020). Cancer funding statistics. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

National Center for Education Statistics (NCES). (2000). Digest of education statistics, 2000. U.S. Department of Education.

National Center for Education Statistics (NCES). (2020). Digest of education statistics, 2020. U.S. Department of Education.

National Sexual Violence Resource Center (NSVRC). (2017). Statistics about sexual violence. NSVRC.

Newman, L. M. (1999). White women's rights: The racial origins of feminism in the United States. Oxford University Press.

Olson, L. (1990). Incident in the locker room. Sports Illustrated.

Pizzey, E. (2011). This way to the revolution: A memoir. Peter Owen Publishers.

Ruggles, S., Alexander, J. T., Genadek, K., Goeken, R., Schroeder, M. B., & Sobek, M. (2010). Integrated public use microdata series: Version 5.0. University of Minnesota.

Sarkeesian, A. (2013). Tropes vs. women in video games. Feminist Frequency.

Scharrer, E. (2001). Men, muscles, and machismo: The portrayal of men in American television sitcoms. Men and Masculinities, 3(3), 281–299. https://doi.org/10.1177/1097184X01003003004

Sklar, K. K. (1973). Catharine Beecher: A study in American domesticity. Yale University Press.

Smith-Rosenberg, C. (1985). Disorderly conduct: Visions of gender in Victorian America. Oxford University Press.

Starr, S. B. (2012). Estimating gender disparities in federal criminal cases. Yale Law Journal, 122(2), 366–416.

Stemple, L., & Meyer, I. H. (2014). The sexual victimization of men in America: New data challenge old assumptions. American Journal of Public Health, 104(6), e19–e26. https://doi.org/10.2105/AJPH.2014.301946

Steinem, G. (1970). Women's liberation: A movement whose time has come. Ms. Magazine.

Straus, M. A. (1999). The controversy over domestic violence by women: A methodological, theoretical, and research agenda. In X. B. Arriaga & S. Oskamp (Eds.), Violence in intimate relationships (pp. 17–44). Sage Publications.

Sulkowicz, E. (2014). Mattress performance (Carry that weight). Columbia University.

Tanielian, T., & Jaycox, L. H. (2008). Invisible wounds of war: Psychological and cognitive injuries. RAND Corporation.

Taylor, S., & Johnson, K. C. (2007). Until proven innocent: Political correctness and the shameful injustices of the Duke lacrosse rape case. Thomas Dunne Books.

Tyack, D., & Hansot, E. (1990). Learning together: A history of coeducation in American public schools. Yale University Press.

U.S. Census Bureau. (1880). Tenth census of the United States, 1880. U.S. Government Printing Office.

U.S. Census Bureau. (1985). Child support and alimony: 1985. Current Population Reports.

U.S. Census Bureau. (2000). Child support and alimony: 2000. Current Population Reports.

U.S. Census Bureau. (2020). Poverty in the United States: 2020. Current Population Reports.

U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). (2020). WIC program participation and costs. USDA Food and Nutrition Service.

United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515 (1996).

Weitzman, L. J. (1985). The divorce revolution: The unexpected social and economic consequences for women and children in America. Free Press.

Wellesley College. (2020). Admission policy for women. Wellesley College.

White, A. (2011). The health of men: A review of the literature. Journal of Men's Health, 8(1), 7–14. https://doi.org/10.1016/j.jomh.2010.09.001

World Health Organization (WHO). (2021). Suicide worldwide in 2019: Global health estimates. WHO.

Young, C. (2006). Ceasefire!: Why women and men must join forces to achieve true equality. Free Press.

Illinois substitute teacher had sex with 11-year-old student during 'play dates,' police say

Matt · 11 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Illinois substitute teacher pleaded guilty to having sex with her 11-year-old student during what was described as "play dates" at her home, reports said.

Former Decatur Public Schools employee Alley Bardfield, 34, is now set to be sentenced in September after admitting to predatory criminal sexual assault, according to WCIA.

The station, citing a lawsuit filed by the victim's parents, said the student visited Bardfield's home in Mt. Zion for multiple "play dates" in 2023 and 2024.

"The victim's mother reported noticing her son acting differently after a visit to Bardfield's house. As a result, she checked her son's phone and social media. In a follow up discussion with her son, he disclosed having had a sexual encounter with Bardfield while a guest at her Mt. Zion residence on March 29, 2024," Mt. Zion police said in a statement last year.'

New study finds the gender earnings gap could be halved if we reined in the long hours often worked by men

Mastodon · 12 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are lots of reasons why people work extra hours. In some jobs, it's the only way to cover the workload. In others, the pay is poor, so people need to work extra time. And in others still, working back late or on weekends is encouraged and rewarded, explicitly and implicitly.

Those employees who do the extra hours, willingly and without complaint, are seen as hungry and ambitious. A view expressed in some workplaces is simply "that's what everyone does".

But what if we discovered that people – at least in heterosexual couple households – can only work long hours at their partner's expense? Would it still be OK for workplaces to expect people to work longer than our standard full time week, and incentivise them for doing so?'

New Rule: Make Dads Great Again | Real Time with Bill Maher

Mastodon · 12 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

If we want to keep teenage boys out of the toxic manosphere, we need to give them a better choice of role models.

Defense: Bitter, Resentful Ex Made False Rape Claims Against Rossi

Mastodon · 12 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'Nicholas Rossi's defense attorney, Sam Duggan, delivered her opening statement, arguing rape claims against Rossi were made up by a bitter ex-girlfriend who took 13 years to make their allegations after their rage and resentment bubbled up.'

Crazed Women Increasingly Resort to Progressive Activism

Matt · 12 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American Eagle recently launched its “Sydney Sweeney Has Great Jeans” ad campaign that features the popular actress dressed in denim. Unexpectedly, the ads triggered a full-scale meltdown among progressive women. They exploded with irrational claims that the ad relies on “Nazi propaganda” to foster notions of “genetic superiority” and “white supremacy” (1).

Such bizarre statements can be viewed as a form of delusional psychosis.

Indeed, progressive women have long been seen as foot soldiers for radical movements. “It was always the women, and above all the young ones, who were the most bigoted adherents of the Party, the swallowers of slogans, the amateur spies and nosers-out of unorthodoxy,” George Orwell revealed decades ago in his classic tome, 1984.'

Jury returns $58.5 million verdict for Detroit cop falsely accused of child sexual abuse

Matt · 13 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal court jury in Detroit has returned a nearly $58.5 million verdict against a Michigan State Police lieutenant and former assistant attorney general for their roles in a case in which a former Detroit police officer was falsely accused of sexually assaulting a child.

Sean MacMaster sued David Busacca of the MSP and Brian Kolodziej, a former prosecutor, in 2021 after Attorney General Dana Nessel dropped charges of first-degree criminal sexual conduct against MacMaster and another man.'

UK: SAS top brass want to recruit super-fit 'GI Janes' to fight as special project launched

Matt · 13 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAS commanders have revealed that they will need to recruit super fit female troops if the black-clad force is to fight in future wars.

The women will be recruited through Project Artemis, a programme aimed at bringing women into not only the SAS but also the SBS. Under the project female candidates, with at least two years' service, get nine months' mentoring to get them in shape to face selection.

It is hoped mental, physical and skill-based training under Project Artemis will help prepare the SAS selection course known to produce one of the world's most famous fighting forces.

Only one in ten male applicants pass the test. Combat roles were opened to women only in 2018.'

Sha’Carri Richardson addresses domestic violence arrest and apologizes to Christian Coleman

Matt · 14 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Flip the genders; it'd be headline news. Excerpt:

'Sprinter Sha’Carri Richardson addressed her recent domestic violence arrest in a video on social media and issued an apology to her boyfriend Christian Coleman.

Richardson posted a video on her Instagram account Monday night in which she said she put herself in a “compromised situation.” She issued a written apology to Coleman on Tuesday morning.

“I love him & to him I can’t apologize enough,” the reigning 100-meter world champion wrote in all capital letters on Instagram, adding that her apology “should be just as loud” as her “actions.”'

The Price of Needing Help: How Men Lose the Right to It

Matt · 14 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marin's words capture an unspoken cultural law: a man's value is measured by his independence and ability to provide—not by his humanity. This isn't just a philosophical problem; it's a practical one that plays out every day in men's lives.

When women are in need, the language society uses is sympathetic—"vulnerable," "at risk," "deserving." For men, the same situation draws terms like "lazy," "weak," or "failure." That double standard is so ingrained that when a man reaches a point of real need—whether after a job loss, a divorce, a health crisis, or a mental breakdown—he is often met with judgment before compassion.'

NCFM – Supreme Court Affirms: Men Are Protected Under Title VII

Matt · 14 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'June 2025 in a unanimous decision, the Supreme Court ruled in Ames v. Ohio Department of Youth Services that individuals from majority groups—including men—are entitled to the same anti-discrimination protections under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act as any other group.

For decades plaintiffs were required to show “background circumstances” proving their employer was unusually inclined to discriminate against the majority—a hurdle not faced by minority-group plaintiffs, thereby making it harder for men to bring forward legitimate claims of sex-based [discrimination].

The plaintiff in Ames was a heterosexual woman who alleged discrimination after being passed over for promotion in favor of LGBTQ+ colleagues. Her case was dismissed under the old rule requiring “background circumstances.” The Supreme Court reversed that dismissal.'

On Feminist Claims of Female Disadvantage in Modern American Society

Matt · 16 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My takeaway is that in modern America there is a broad moderate pro female sentiment in terms of societal opinions, and this carries over to slight pro female bias in various things like politics, employment, medical research and education. Women also are not a meek powerless group, with them making up the majority of voters, HR employees and increasing proportions of important media positions. The best case for female disadvantage in modern is the higher levels of sexual aggression that they face from men, but these statistics are not as lopsided in terms of gender as some people think. Even if you think I am completely wrong and biased (and i'm sure in an article that tries to cover so much I made some mistakes), I hope you learned something and got a different perspective.'

Loneliness is rife among young men. It’s time to get offline and talk to each other

Matt · 16 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Definitely has some bullspit tropes in it but the overall message is good: most men do need time with their fellow men. Digital world isolation is a real thing. Excerpt:

'Since 1990, there has been a sharp decline in how many people men say they are close to, says Ferrara, who is a postdoctoral fellow at Stanford and a visiting fellow at the London School of Economics. In the US, two-thirds of men aged between 18 and 23 think that nobody really knows them; one third haven’t seen anyone outside their household in the past week; only a fifth say they have friends they can really count on; and a staggering 69% of young men think “no one cares if men are OK”.

Of course, women also experience this same loneliness, isolation and disconnection – at rates that are not far behind their male counterparts. In addition, many women in relationships with men find themselves doing something that Ferrara has named “mankeeping”, a term that has recently gone viral: picking up the emotional weight of being their male partner’s only intimate social connection. With this in mind, Ferrara has had her work dismissed as “himpathy” – in other words, too kind to adult men who should be able to look after themselves.

While I understand the reflex to lash out and ask, “Why should a bunch of incels get so much attention?”, such a dismissal is a mistake. “Our lives are so interlinked,” as Ferrara put it to me: men’s failures to maintain close connections are hurting society at large.'

If Men Aren't The Problem, Who Is?

Matt · 17 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While Tate's crude words are troubling, his sentiment reflects a common theme among respondents: many men view modern women as self-focused or materialistic. More concerning is their fear of financial devastation in divorce, a legitimate worry given family court biases. Men see friends and family members devastated by marital breakdowns. Why would they take that risk? "The juice ain't worth the squeeze" one follower said.

As influential figures like Tate amplify these fears, the perception of marriage as a viable goal diminishes, leading to a decline in dating and relationships. So, is it Andrew Tate's fault? Not exactly. He's highlighting serious issues we must tackle. We must approach men's concerns with empathy and advocate for systemic reforms—particularly in family courts—while emphasizing the benefits of committed marriages. Only then can we begin to restore the value of connection in a fractured world.'

The ‘Man Crisis:’ Feminists Are Telling the Exact Opposite of the Truth

Matt · 18 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This past Saturday the Washington Post published an article with the uncompromising title, “What’s Wrong with Men?” Resorting to the flawed logic so common in contemporary feminist discourse, author Jessa Crispin starts with fictional Michael Douglas movies from the 1980s and 1990s, using them to reach dystopian conclusions about American men 40 years later.

For decades, feminists have been claiming that women live under an oppressive patriarchy. But then the truth came out: Men are lagging behind women in 12 major areas, such as health, education, treatment by the legal system, homelessness, and more.

For feminists reluctant to relinquish their hard-earned victim status, the November elections delivered another jolt of unwelcome news: Men had become the new “power demographic” of the American electorate.'

It’s Time to Ask: Is the ‘Patriarchy’ a Feminist Myth?

Matt · 18 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres resorted to harsh rhetoric as he denounced what he called the “poison of patriarchy,” categorically claiming that opponents to gender uniformity are happy to “throw equality to the wolves.”

Addressing the UN Commission on the Status of Women, Guterres was referring to the fact that women currently hold 27% of seats in national parliaments worldwide, a number that appears to be impervious to the usual nostrums of gender equality activists.

Guterres is a life-long socialist. And according to Marxist theory, men and women should be seen as interchangeable in their ambitions and interests.

But reality paints a different picture. Multiple surveys show that around the world, women consistently prioritize family and relationships over political ambition.

And experience reveals that male lawmakers consistently favor women in the laws they pass. in 1994, for example, mostly male legislators voted to approve the American “Violence Against Women Act.”'

'The cemetery of living men'

Matt · 18 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. You won't see the most despicable female convicts being treated this way. But men not even arraigned for a crime are treated worse that factory-farmed animals. Excerpt:

'Arturo Suárez says he was beaten by guards as soon as he arrived at El Salvador's notorious Cecot prison. When he regained consciousness - his glasses smashed - everything was blurred, he says, but he heard the greeting clearly.

"Welcome to hell. Welcome to the cemetery of living men. The only way you leave here is dead."

Arturo says the person speaking was the jail's director, Belarmino García.

Cecot - the Center for the Confinement of Terrorism - was designed for the mass incarceration of El Salvador's most violent and dangerous gang members, a symbol of President Nayib Bukele's hardline approach to the wave of murders and extortion that had terrorised the country.'

Kathy Griffin Joins a Dating App: ‘I Have A Lot of Fear About Men, the Entire Gender’

Mastodon · 19 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Comedian Kathy Griffin revealed that she has downloaded the dating app Hinge in order to find herself a date, adding, “I have a lot of fear about men, the entire gender.”

Griffin shared in a Monday Substack post that what “started out as a joke” between herself, singer Sia, and actress Nia Vardalos turned into her downloading the Hinge dating app and creating a profile.

Why can’t I find a nice partner at a law firm or a semi-retired fireman?” the comedian asked, before adding that she has “never received a dick pic” in her life, nor has she ever “sent a vagina picture.”

“I don’t even know why I wanna date a guy,” Griffin continued. “I have an awesome house that’s paid off. I have my four doggies. I read three books a week. I have the best friends I could ever hope for.”'

Non-therapeutic male circumcision in infancy or childhood and risk of human immunodeficiency virus and other sexually transmitted infections: national cohort study in Denmark

Matt · 19 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In conclusion, our cohort study provides the first nationwide, prospective assessment of the long-term impact on STI risk of non-therapeutic male circumcision carried out in infancy or childhood. Our study provides population-based evidence that early-life circumcision is unlikely to provide protection against HIV or other STIs in males up to the age of 36 years. Rather, in our study circumcision was associated with higher STI rates overall, particularly for anogenital warts and syphilis. Our findings are relevant for ongoing debates on the ethics surrounding genital surgeries on healthy children [46], and should be thoroughly considered among international organizations and stakeholders preparing to expand ongoing adult circumcision programs in Africa in the fight against HIV and other STIs to also cover circumcision of young boys and male infants.'

The Growing Cohort of Single Dads by Choice

Matt · 19 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Single mother by choice has become a common term for unpartnered women who have intentionally become parents. You rarely hear of single fathers by choice, which makes sense given that they're much more rare. But this population, it appears, has been expanding—slowly, over the course of a couple of decades, and then more notably in the past few years. The exact count is unclear; most surveys don't differentiate them from widowers or men separated from an uninvolved co-parent. Still: Susan Golombok, a University of Cambridge psychologist and the author of We Are Family: The Modern Transformation of Parents and Children, told me that before this millennium, single dads by choice were virtually unheard of. Based on my conversations with kin researchers, fertility-industry professionals, and adoption centers, that's certainly not the case anymore.'

Joy Reid claims 'mediocre White men' like Trump, Elvis can't 'invent anything,' steal culture from other races

Matt · 19 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good grief. I blame the schools. Excerpt:

'Former MSNBC anchor Joy Reid condemned President Donald Trump, Elvis Presley and others on Friday as some of history's many "mediocre White men" whose achievements are stolen or counterfeit.

Reid criticized Trump's review of the Smithsonian during an interview with Wajahat Ali for his "The Left Hook" substack, in an episode titled, "How Mediocre White Men and Their Fragility Are Destroying America."

They argued that across America's institutions, there is a phenomenon of "mediocre White men" with no actual culture of their own who co-opt the achievements of Black people to aggrandize themselves.'

First Came Tea. Then Came the Male Rage.

Matt · 19 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. That men are both capable and willing to defend themselves is for feminists proof that we're baaaad people. I say, if you're damned if you do or don't, you may as well do. Excerpt:

'The whole episode, from start to finish, was horribly bleak—and also bleakly illuminating. Tea is hardly a perfect app. As its name suggests, it allows not only serious warnings about men but also gossip about their supposed defects and romantic tendencies. When Tea users do make serious allegations of predatory behavior, those accusations go unconfirmed, a glaring failure of due process. But for all of the app's flaws, the breaches have proved its users' concerns valid: Women had good reasons for wanting something like Tea in the first place.'

Victims, Violence and Villains

Matt · 20 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My last essay looked at how empathy distorts moral judgment. This essay looks at how feminism exploits empathy – using domestic violence advocacy as the example.

Obviously, I am deeply concerned about domestic violence. But I am also concerned about the cynical manipulation of our empathy. In this essay, I argue that feminism has become adept at generating empathy from a victim narrative and at exploiting it for political gain.

Quite a lot of ink has been spilled on the topic of domestic violence, so I won't revisit ground well covered by others. Rather, this essay will focus narrowly on how feminists use empathy to gain power.'

"Did I Just Get Red-Pilled"?

Matt · 21 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A former feminist discloses her journey and thoughts. Nice to see.

English teacher who slept with students won't be charged

Matt · 21 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The case of the Petah Tikva teacher who had sexual relations with two 17-year-old boys from the school where she taught was revealed this evening, with new details continuing to emerge. Several months ago, T., a 43-year-old English teacher at a middle school in Petah Tikva, was summoned for police questioning. There, she admitted to the acts, and her case was closed for lack of guilt.

During the investigation, she admitted to having sexual relations with two students at her home while another student watched, and this occurred while her husband was serving in the reserves. However, it was established during the investigation that she had relations with two 17-year-old high school students while she was teaching at a middle school, meaning no offense involving abuse of authority was committed.

Furthermore, according to the law, 17-year-olds are considered adults regarding consensual sexual relations. The case was transferred from the police to the State Attorney's Office, where it was decided to close it due to lack of guilt, meaning no criminal offense was committed.'

Woman whose false rape accusation ruined Army doctor's life gets tiny jail sentence

Matt · 21 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania woman received a shockingly short jail sentence after falsely accusing an Army doctor of rape.

Veronika Rodriguez, 27, was sentenced to just 30 days in jail with 22 additional months on probation for one count of false reporting, intercepting communications and disclosing intercepted communications.

Rodriguez was found guilty by a Lebanon County jury in May after she claimed Fahad Pervez had sexually assaulted her.

The false accusation led Pervez to voluntarily resign from his position within the military.

The pair had gone on a date in January 2023 while Rodriguez was a member of the Pennsylvania Air National Guard and had sex in the doctor's car while parked at the Keystone Conference Center in Fort Indiantown Gap.

Police had approached the car for being parked after-hours and the incident later appeared on a police blotter, Law & Crime reported.

But after the pair were questioned by National Guard officials for fraternizing, Rodriguez claimed the man had taken her glasses so she couldn't see properly and that the encounter had not been consensual.'

Sweden: Women confess to aborting fetuses because they are male

Matt · 22 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Don't feminists decry supposed female infanticide in China in times past? Excerpt:

'Sofia, whose real name is something else, had three sons when she became pregnant for the fourth time. With the help of a so-called Nipt test, she was able to find out the gender in week ten.

– It was a boy and my whole world fell apart.

She and her husband had decided to terminate the pregnancy if it was a boy, which she did. Sofia's dream of a daughter was so strong that it took over everything else.'

Moscow grapples with a generation of crippled men

Matt · 24 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Russia is believed to have several hundred thousand men wounded in its war of aggression. Many of them are crippled and will need years of rehabilitation. Many have sustained serious mental illness.

Little is known about the numbers. Moscow does not want the world, nor the Russians themselves, to learn about the huge toll.

Information about the many men killed and wounded on occupied land is subjected to strict censorship. Similarly, details about the new military hospitals are sparse.

The war ministry's construction department only briefly informs about the construction projects. On its websites are short videos and image presentations of military hospitals that are under construction in the regions of Kursk, Belgorod, Bryansk, Samara, Ryazan, Penza, Mirny, St.Petersburg, Moscow, and more.'

Bid to rescue woman stuck 22,000ft up mountain called off after man dies trying to save her

Matt · 24 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And yet the article's all about her. He is a mere casualty. Excerpt:

'But repeated efforts to bring her down failed, both by climbing and using a helicopter.

And tragedy hit when climber Sinigaglia died on the mountain from prolonged exposure to low oxygen and hypothermia.

Today, a final effort to climb to her was abandoned just 3,600ft below where she is stuck, with the weather set to worsen, as the team were ordered to return to base camp.'

Good breakdown of the waves of feminism and what they did

Matt · 24 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Don't let the video title mislead you. This is actually a breakdown of feminism's waves and what each taught and did. Definitely worth your time.

False Allegations Target Millions Around the World, Survey Reveals

Matt · 25 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this month a U.S. jury returned a stunning $58 million verdict for Sean MacMaster, who had been falsely accused of child sexual abuse. When MacMaster became embroiled in a child custody dispute, his former wife Johanna falsely accused the man of child abuse. The woman went so far as to propose to Sean that agreeing to terminate his parental rights would be his “get out-of-jail-free card.”

The case represents one of the largest awards ever rendered for a wrongful allegation.

A new survey conducted in Argentina, Australia, United Kingdom, and the United States reveals false allegations are more widespread than many persons realize.'

Florida Nurse Accused of Sex with 15-Year-Old Stepson After Dad Walked in On Them

Mastodon · 26 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A nurse from Ocala, Florida, is accused of raping her 15-year-old stepson after his father walked in and caught them in the act.

The accused is identified as 34-year-old Alexis Von Yates who on Thursday accepted a plea deal and pleaded no contest to a lesser charge of lewd and lascivious battery in the case, Court TV reported.

The allegations came to light in July 2024 when the woman allegedly targeted her stepson while he was visiting his father.

...

"Under the terms of the plea agreement, Von Yates will serve two years in the Department of Corrections, followed by two years of community control and 10 years of sex offender probation. She must also complete 200 hours of community service and pay fines and court costs," the Court TV report noted.'

Wife Allegedly Poured Acid on Sleeping Husband, Locked Him in Room Using Wooden Bar and Wire

Matt · 26 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Florida man has died days after he was found screaming, locked in a room and doused in acid — allegedly by his wife who police claim called 911 to report the incident.

The victim, Robert Heyden, was attacked in a New Port Richey, Fla. residence last week, the New Port Richey Police Department said in a statement to PEOPLE.

Police did not name the victim in their statement, but he was identified by the Tampa Bay Times.

Chuanying He was arrested in connection with Heyden's killing, per police.'

Monster mom, accused of raping her toddler on camera for money, released by judge

Matt · 26 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Pierce County judge ordered the release of a mother without bail, despite accusations that she filmed herself sexually assaulting her two-year-old son for profit.

Trinity Carrell, a 22-year-old Edgewood resident, was charged in Pierce County Superior Court with rape of a child in the first degree, promoting commercial sexual abuse of a minor, and animal cruelty in the first degree.

Police said Carrell used Snapchat to send sexually explicit videos to a man for payment, which included sexually explicit video of her young son for what she thought would be $50,000 payment. She said the Snapchat user asked for a video of her changing her son's diaper, while "fondling" him.'

The Men Suing Over Their Partners' Abortions

Matt · 26 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The antiabortion movement has found an unlikely new ally to target abortion providers: husbands, boyfriends and exes.

Men have filed several recent lawsuits stemming from abortions obtained by their partners or ex-partners. The strategy is part of an effort by antiabortion lawyers to gain ground in their uphill battle to target mail-order abortion pills and interstate travel for the procedure. But it carries risks—putting dysfunctional relationships on display to advance a divisive claim that men are harmed when their intimate partners end pregnancies.

"They're finding people who might have an ax to grind against their ex to try to end abortion access. These are not savory plaintiffs," said Marc Hearron, a lawyer with the Center for Reproductive Rights who represented a Texas abortion-rights activist in one case where a man sued several people over his then-wife's self-managed abortion. The cases, Hearron said, are based on "a wackadoo theory."'

The job market's boy problem is getting worse — but data suggests some ways to fix it

Matt · 26 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new analysis of publicly available data shows that unemployment is rising among younger men, and their labor force participation is stagnating. The good news is that there are some fixes.

"Over the last year, things have gotten worse for young men," Sara Estep, an economist at the Center for American Progress and one of the report's authors, told Business Insider. While young men's unemployment levels are below historical levels, "things are definitely moving in the wrong direction."

The analysis highlights both the issues plaguing the male workforce and where men are making strides; it also illustrates where policymakers and worker organizations can step in.

Fewer men in the workforce could lead to understaffed industries and weigh on the coffers of Social Security — and the men who aren't working might be at risk of worsening mental health and declining happiness. Funneling younger men toward secondary education and vocational school might help; so can opening up opportunities for workers with disabilities.'

Pearl interviews Aaron Cleary

Matt · 26 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Aaron Cleary is author of A World Without Men and other books dealing with social and economic issues.

Millions of Gen Zers are jobless—and unemployment is mainly affecting men

Matt · 27 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gen Z is stepping out of college and into a fierce labor market, up against slower payroll gains, “ghost” jobs, absent hiring managers, and dwindling entry-level job openings thanks to AI. It’s caused millions of these young workers to be frozen out of new opportunities, and men are largely the ones being impacted.

Although Gen Z men and women face the same labor market hurdles after college graduation, young male professionals have continued to be unemployed at higher rates. For years they’ve struggled to keep up with their female peers who have skyrocketed past them in education and work. In the first quarter of this year, 9.1% of men ages 20 to 24 were jobless, compared to just 6.6% of women in that age group, according to a FRED analysis of U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics data. And the trend continues, with 9.1% of Gen Z men being jobless in the second quarter of 2025, compared with only 7.2% of women. Young female professionals have continued to have an edge on their male counterparts, being employed at rates 0.6% to 2.5% higher over the past five years.'

The New Dream Guy Is Beefy, Placid and ... Politically Ambiguous

Matt · 27 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. H-wood is now lionizing some "ideal" man who is brainless, having no opinions of his own. Didn't feminists used to deride similar depictions of women, feminine but lacking any of her own opinions? The double-standard is glaring. Excerpt:

'Lately there has been a return of this type: the hunk with a heart of gold. For years, he was left in the dustbin of retrograde male figures, sidelined in favor of something more sophisticated: the self-aware outsider, the flustered nerd, the romantic misfit. Now there is a clear craving for the fantasy man who seems sweetly naïve, simple, almost oafish — concerned mostly, by the looks of it, with working out and the pleasure of a protein shake. If he seems unfazed by the byzantine requirements of modern masculinity, it is largely because he doesn't know or care that they exist.
...

The straightforward appeal and charisma of these guys overlap with the simplicity of their messaging. Their success as political surrogates comes from yoking their charm and louche authenticity to kitchen-sink issues like the cost of living. They can discuss the astronomical cost of health care right alongside the inflated price of creatine supplements. Just guileless dudes making guileless points.'

Feminism, the Left and Me

Matt · 27 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's obvious that feminism fits on the political left. At least, it's obvious until you look closely. Then it gets complicated.
...
Notice that these fascist or populist movements all claim the superiority of their in group – just like feminism. They assert the supremacy of group rights over the individual – just like feminism. They are guilty of prejudice and discrimination against the out group – just like feminism. And they use the language of victimhood and safety to justify their actions – just like feminism.

Why the similarities? That's easy. It's because both are us vs them ideologies. They are similar because that's what us vs them ideologies look like.

Looked at that way, the mystery isn't their similarities but their differences. The question now becomes – If they are both us vs them ideologies why are they different?'

Falling Behind: The Miseducation of America's Boys

Matt · 28 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Series page here. Excerpt:

'American boys are falling behind in academics as early as eight years old. It’s a gap that only grows as those boys become men.

This special On Point series explores why America’s boys are falling behind in school, and what can be done about it.'

Wary of Russia, Germany tiptoes toward compulsory military service

Matt · 28 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Germany took a major step Wednesday toward a controversial return to compulsory military service, as Berlin confronts the inadequacy of its armed forces to stand up to Russia and the prospect that European nations will be tasked with providing security guarantees for Ukraine.

Germany — with the European Union's largest population and economy — has committed to vast spending to confront the Russian threat amid American reluctance under Donald Trump to pay for Europe's defense. But Germany also has a woefully understaffed military, and it faces other obstacles to rearmament after largely embracing pacifism since World War II.

On Wednesday, aiming to boost the ranks of the Bundeswehr, the German armed forces, Chancellor Friedrich Merz's cabinet approved a plan that would reinstate a form of conscription, which has not existed in Germany since being suspended in 2011.

The measure — which needs parliamentary approval — would not subject Germans to draft cards and lotteries. Instead, starting next year, it would require 18-year-old German men to fill out a questionnaire about their physical fitness and willingness to serve. For women, the form would be voluntary. The bill also would allow compulsory military service to be reinstated in the future, with parliamentary consent.

Beginning in 2027, the bill would require all 18-year-old men to undergo a physical fitness exam.
These measures would save time "if mandatory conscription for basic military service has to be activated, because conscription data will then already be available and will not have to be collected in this situation," according to the draft legislation.'

Woman chooses man (likely), saved from bear attack

Matt · 29 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. She was saved by her "hiking companion" who used bear spray to send the bear running. I am guessing her "companion" was a man. Isn't life filled with these little ironies? Excerpt:

'A 34-year-old woman was injured by a brown-colored bear on Wednesday, August 27, 2025, near Lake Janet in Glacier National Park.

Park officials said in a news release on Thursday that the woman and one person were hiking near Lake Janet when a medium-brown colored bear with two cubs charged out of the brush toward the woman.

The woman dove off the trail, while covering her head. The bear swiped at her, injuring her shoulder and arm.

As this was happening, her hiking partner deployed bear spray, causing the bears to immediately run away. The incident lasted less than 30 seconds.'

When Men Hurt: Finland’s Lesson for a World That Mocks “Incels”

Matt · 29 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the late 1980s, Finland discovered something troubling. Among its highest-risk suicide groups were young men rejected from military service. At exactly the age when they were trying to prove themselves, they were branded as outsiders. Many spiraled into isolation, unemployment, and despair.

Finland’s response was striking. The Defense Forces worked with mental health groups, employment services, and therapists to catch these men before they fell. They created guidebooks for life after discharge. They launched projects like Young Man, Seize the Day to provide vocational training, community, and a renewed sense of belonging.

In other words: Finland looked at these young men — stigmatized, rejected, hurting — and asked, “What do they need to find a way back in?”'

Movember rips off men's health dollars

Matt · 30 August 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was a great idea - a charity started by a couple of Aussie blokes who persuaded men to grow moustaches to support the Prostate Cancer Foundation. Twenty years later, Movember has grown from that small group of men sporting hairy upper lips to become the major male health charity in the world.

Every November, in country after country, blokes fondly imagine they are doing their bit growing a Mo to support men's health. As one of the very few events where men's issues make it onto the public agenda, men with Mos and their financial supporters bask in the glow of raising funds they think will improve the welfare of other males.

Little do they know that this huge enterprise, run by a feminist and supported by mainly female staff, is increasingly committed to diverting men's health dollars away from real male health concerns towards woke projects promoting anti-male ideology.'

Male Suicide: Finland Acted, America Shrugs

Matt · 1 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the United States, the conversation about male suicide is as predictable as it is shallow. “Men just won’t seek help,” we’re told. And that’s the end of it. Nothing more is asked, and nothing more is done.

But in the 1980s, Finland was facing a suicide crisis of its own. Suicide rates were among the highest in Europe, and the deaths were concentrated in a very particular group: men — often rural, middle-aged, isolated, and drinking too much.

Finland could have shrugged, as America does, and accepted that “men just won’t seek help.” Instead, they made a very different choice. They decided to find out, in painstaking detail, who was dying, where, and why.'

Masculinity norms and their economic consequences

Mastodon · 3 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Masculinity norms can create powerful labour market distortions. Men often refuse service sector jobs that conflict with masculine identity, preferring unemployment to doing ‘feminine’ work – a behaviour that is particularly salient following waves of technological progress and globalisation that disproportionately affected male employment (such as the ‘China shock’ in the US). This rigidity reflects how masculinity norms assign value to occupations based on their gender composition, systematically devaluing female-dominated sectors.

Within organisations, ‘masculinity contest cultures’ can promote intense competition according to masculine rules: displaying strength, showing no weakness, and valuing work above all else. These cultures normalise extreme working hours and create hostile, excessively competitive environments that undermine work-family balance. Such dynamics contribute to persistent gender gaps in the labour market – for example, child penalties for women and low paternity leave uptake among men.'

Suicide Rates Among Young Men Are On the Rise; Toxic Masculinity May Be To Blame

Mastodon · 3 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, suicide is now the second leading cause of death among males aged 15-29, and suicide rates among young men in the US have risen by roughly a third since 2010. Across much of Africa, where I work as a public health and gender equality practitioner, men make up the vast majority of suicide deaths, and in Lesotho, the country with the highest suicide rate globally, men are dying at three times the rate of women.

Rigid gender roles may be to blame. Masculine representations rooted in ideals that reward toughness, emotional suppression, and dominance are quietly accelerating a mental health crisis among young men. These rigid norms don't simply discourage boys from seeking help; they actively shame vulnerability, equate emotional expression with weakness, and isolate those who are struggling. In cultures where being "a real man" means staying silent, mental distress festers in the dark. Unless we confront and transform these harmful ideals, any global response to youth mental health will be incomplete—and too late for many.
...
To effectively tackle this issue, we must address the needs of all adolescents, with attention to those most at risk. This means introducing gender-transformative education that teaches emotional literacy and normalizes help seeking as strength. We need male-friendly, culturally grounded safe spaces in schools, sports clubs, faith groups, and online where boys can be vulnerable without judgment. Mental health professionals must adopt gender transformative approaches that understand masculinity's impact on behavior.'

The ‘war on boys’ led to a ‘masculinity crisis’ — what’s new in the effort to help America’s struggling young men?

Mastodon · 3 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After years of the “boy crisis” being discussed in academia and social science, it’s becoming a priority for governors — among them, Utah’s Spencer Cox, California’s Gavin Newsom and Maryland’s Wes Moore.

“Could the suddenly everywhere ‘boy troubles’ become a surprise political issue for the midterms?” Richard Whitmire, the author of the 2010 book “Why Boys Fail,” recently asked on social media.

“That’s my prediction,” Whitmire added. “The fun part: Either party could seize it.”

While politicization of any issue is not often seen as a good thing, in this case, it might be, Whitmire said in an interview. He has long been a proponent of sweeping changes in education to help boys become more proficient at reading at an earlier age, and he wants to see a courageous politician take up that banner.

Other solutions being proposed across the country include programs to get more young men in higher education and apprenticeships, providing more role models and mentors for boys, expanding mental health supports, and curbing the amount of time that boys and teens spend online in addictive and destructive behavior.'

Woman arrested for making false rape and assault report in Whitesville, sheriff says

Mastodon · 3 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After a lengthy investigation by multiple law enforcement agencies into a report of a rape and assault, the woman initially believed to be the victim has been arrested and charged.

On the afternoon of Aug. 13, authorities responded to a business called "The Rooster's Crow" on Highway 54 in Whitesville to investigate a report of a rape and assault.

The Daviess County Sheriff's Office says the victim, Kylen Edge, claimed a man went inside the business, raped and assaulted her, and then left.

Authorities said they worked tirelessly to find the unknown suspect. They say the community was also on high alert, with some residents reporting they were afraid to leave their homes, buying security systems, and becoming suspicious of each other based on "rumors and misinformation" surrounding the supposed suspect.

Several days into the investigation, detectives said they began to realize that the information obtained and the evidence collected did not support the allegations made by Edge.'

Are women better lawmakers than men? A nuanced yes, VCU researcher finds

Mastodon · 3 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study from Virginia Commonwealth University researcher Jatia Wrighten, Ph.D., and colleagues finds that women are more effective lawmakers than men when serving in professional state legislatures, which are generally in session full-time, than when serving in part-time legislatures that have lower barriers to entry, lower salaries and fewer staff.'

Divorce Plunged in Kentucky. Equal Custody for Fathers Is a Big Reason Why.

Matt · 6 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The dads were not all right.

It was 2017, and across Kentucky, divorced fathers were coming together against a common enemy: a custody system they felt favored their ex-wives.

Although custody laws in Kentucky and elsewhere granted judges discretion to decide what split was in a child's best interest, aggrieved fathers claimed that this typically meant relegating them to the role of every-other-weekend "Disneyland dads," forced to cram two days of fun into what mothers had two weeks to create.

"You become like 'Uncle Dad' instead of a parent," said Rob Holdsworth, 53. In 2014, he reluctantly uprooted his life and civil-service career in Dayton, Ohio, to relocate to Bowling Green, where his ex-wife had moved with their two sons. He took the only job he could find—working nights in a soap factory—to see the boys just a few times a month.'

Happy Fathers Day!

Matt · 7 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

MANN wishes all fathers everywhere a happy Fathers Day. This day can be quite fraught for some fathers as they may recall lost custody battles and PAS thrown at them, as well as other pains. Let these things be a source of motivation for all of us to keep fighting for a just society for fathers and men generally.

Keep up the good fight, brothers!

From Research to Action — How Finland Helped Its Men

Matt · 8 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the last post, we saw how Finland took an extraordinary first step: instead of shrugging at suicide rates, they studied every single case in the country for a full year. They learned who was dying, where, and why.

But research alone doesn't save lives. The true test came next. Could Finland turn this knowledge into action?

In 1992, the government launched the National Suicide Prevention Project, a sweeping, nationwide effort that would run for five years. Its ambition was bold: to translate the research into targeted interventions across every layer of society — from army barracks to hunting cabins, from classrooms to church pulpits.

The official goal was clear: reduce suicides by 20% in ten years. But the real innovation lay in how Finland went about it.'

Who Really Glorifies Violence? Incels vs. the Radical Left

Matt · 12 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the past several years, the media has been obsessed with incels. Scroll through the headlines and you'll see the same story over and over: young men, alienated and angry, gathering in online spaces that are supposedly breeding grounds for misogyny and extremism. The word incel has become shorthand for "potential terrorist."

But when you actually look at what incels say and do, a very different picture emerges. These are not young men plotting the downfall of society. They are young men drowning in despair. Their anger is almost always turned inward. The statistics are overwhelming: nearly 40% report daily suicidal thoughts. Large numbers are neurodivergent. Most have histories of bullying and rejection. The overwhelming danger for incels is not that they'll kill someone else. It's that they'll kill themselves.'

Australia State Offices for Men or Women

Matt · 13 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'State governments in Australia currently exhibit a sex bias in terms of housing offices or portfolios whose purpose is to advise legislators on policies related male or female wellbeing (see the links for each office for details on the various activities undertaken by these offices). However, only the Northern Territory has a portfolio focused on men's wellbeing, and this portfolio is combined with the women's portfolio in the Office of Gender Equity and Diversity. Thus, boys and men in Australia are not benefiting from this same level of state- or territory-level attention as girls and women. This bias is odd considering that life expectancy is four years shorter among Australian males than females, with part of this sex difference in life expectancy due to higher rates of homicide victimization and suicide among Australian males than females.'

Left Behind No More: United Nations Officials Urged to Launch ‘UN Men’ Body

Matt · 14 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the 80th United Nations General Assembly (UNGA 80) convenes in New York, advocates are urging world leaders to confront a glaring omission in the global equality framework: the absence of any UN agency addressing the rights and needs of men and boys.

Halima Layeni, Executive Director of Life After Abuse Foundation (LAAF) (1), called for the creation of UN Men, the male counterpart to UN Women. “Each year, billions of dollars are directed toward programs for women and girls. Entire agencies exist to advance their progress,” she said. “Yet there is no UN Men. No dedicated institution, no agency, and no systematic recognition of the unique challenges faced by men and boys.” (2)(3)'

Having difficult talks with your son should happen sooner than you might think, expert says

Matt · 14 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Middle and high school educator Christopher Pepper and coauthor Joanna Schroeder hope their new book, “Talk to Your Boys: 16 Conversations to Help Tweens and Teens Grow Into Confident, Caring Young Men,” will provide families with the tools to help.

I spoke with Pepper, who has helped coordinate Young Men’s Health Groups in San Francisco, to learn how parents can steer their sons through minefields like screen time and technology, pornography, consent, and alcohol and substance use. He has discovered that despite their awkward stereotype, teenage boys really do want a chance to connect.'

Male Suicide: Finland Acted, America Shrugs, Part 3

Matt · 15 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the first two posts of this series, we traced Finland's extraordinary journey: from confronting its suicide crisis head-on with unprecedented research, to building a nationwide prevention strategy that saved lives and changed culture. (plus an intro post)

By the mid-1990s, the results were visible. Suicide rates, which had climbed for decades, had finally begun to fall. Hunters were talking to their mates about mental health. Army officers were watching out for vulnerable conscripts. Teachers, clergy, and even journalists had taken on new roles in prevention.

But Finland didn't stop there. They did something few governments ever do: they invited outsiders in to judge their work.'

Urge Congressoids to include women in Selective Service, or end it

Matt · 15 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The National Defense Authorization Act of 2026 (NDAA 2026) is making its way through Congress. House Rep. Jack Bergman of Michigan added an amendment to the bill that would require automatic registration of men ONLY.

Obviously this is ridiculous on several levels, one being that the rationale for keeping the draft male-only in previous court cases included the fact that the draft existed to fill out the ranks for combat roles. Since those decisions, policy has changed and women are now eligible for combat roles. Modern warfare is largely about being able to shoot a rifle (which any idiot can do, alas) and otherwise not $hitting one's pants when things start blowing up around you. That last has nothing to do with gender. Some men lose it under fire, some don't. Same goes for women. Why should guys have all the "fun"? We shouldn't.

Please contact your House AND Senate Congressoids via https://www.congress.gov/ and ask them either to support the bill if it includes women in the registration requirement, or better yet, eliminate the Selective Service system entirely. But in any case at no time should men be auto-registered for the draft unless women are too.

Patel defends FBI pull-up test after Hirono decries it as gender bias in Senate showdown

Mastodon · 16 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"One question I had is that you are now requiring applicants to be able to do a certain kind of pull-ups, which a lot of women cannot because of physiological differences. Are you requiring these kinds of pull-ups?" Hirono asked.

Patel didn't budge.

"We are requiring everybody to pass the 1811 standards at BFTC. If you want to chase down a bad guy, excuse me, and put him in handcuffs, you had better be able to do a pull-up."

Hirono replied, "There are concerns about whether or not being able to do these kinds of harsh pull-ups is really required of FBI agents."

Patel interjected, "Doing one pull-up is not harsh, and there are always medical exemptions to that."'

Circumcision In Decline: Why Fewer U.S. Parents Are Heeding Recommendation By Doctors

Matt · 16 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision among newborn boys in the United States has steadily declined over the past decade, even as leading health organizations have voiced support for the procedure.

A new analysis from researchers at Johns Hopkins University of more than 1.5 million annual hospital records shows the share of newborn boys circumcised during their first month of life fell from 54.1% in 2012 to 49.3% in 2022.

This decline came after the World Health Organization (2007), the American Academy of Pediatrics (2012), and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (2018) each issued recommendations supporting access to newborn circumcision. These groups highlighted research linking the procedure with lower risks of urinary tract infections, penile inflammation, and transmission of sexually transmitted infections including HIV.'

Why aren't we talking about the real reason male college enrollment is dropping?

Matt · 18 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Her research shows that the reason fewer men are enrolling in veterinary school boils down to one factor: the number of women in the classroom.

For every 1% increase in the proportion of women in the student body, 1.7 fewer men applied. One more woman applying was a greater deterrent than $1000 in extra tuition!
...
Since males had dominated these professions for centuries, you would think they would leave slowly, hesitantly or maybe linger at 40%, 35%, 30%, but that's not what happens. Once the tipping point reaches majority female- the men flee. And boy do they flee!

It's a slippery slope. When the number of women hits 60% the men who are there make a swift exit and other men stop joining.'

Obesity Is Killing American Men

Matt · 19 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent data suggests that around 40 percent of adults in the United States have obesity, which sets the stage for high blood pressure, various forms of cancer and some 200 other complications. Men have similar rates of obesity as women, but they are less likely to seek medical care, making up only about 20 percent of bariatric surgery patients and around 22 percent of people on anti-obesity drugs. If men do take GLP-1 medications, a recent study suggests that they are also more likely to stop using them.

It's hard to parse exactly why this treatment gap exists, but it's probably tied to the greater societal focus on women's bodies, and men's general tendency to delay seeking health care, especially when it comes to weight. The consequences, however, can be severe, since obesity tends to be more deadly in men than women. And experts say that untreated obesity is one important contributor to the 5-year life expectancy gap between men and women.'

How viral man-hating memes went too far

Matt · 20 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That’s not to say there isn’t truth to what’s being said; in the dating space, Krenn has seen a major rise in the number of women publicly voicing anger, resentment, or dismissal toward men as a group, not just toward specific behaviours. “What was once limited to small communities or private conversations is now broadcast and consumed on a mass scale, and it has even become fashionable in some circles to speak about men in ways that would never be tolerated if directed at women,” he adds.

...

Short of half-heartedly repeating “not all men” like brainwashed cyborgs, it’s hard to know where to turn to improve any of this. Clearly, there are very real problems at the heart of the modern dating landscape, which are feeding a culture whereby it’s become normal to deride men in this way. But at some point, surely we have to find a way to move past this way of thinking? “To combat this cultural trend, we have to model and promote vulnerability, curiosity, and compassion in dating,” says Baum.'

The decline of sex and the alpha male

Matt · 21 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And can you blame her? Over the past decades, women's emancipation went ahead, while men's opportunities and success declined. The evidence is everywhere, starting with education, where boys' academic performance has worsened at every level. Romantic relationships have always been asymmetric, typically a higher-status man with a lower-status woman. The reverse has never been the norm and exceptions only prove the rule. With emancipation, many women have climbed higher up the social ladder. Men, over the same period, have not only failed to keep pace but have slipped downward. The result is a dating market with too many successful women, too many failing men, and a crisis. If modern Anna's options look like Tim from Tinder, why bother losing a night's sleep?

The crisis isn't only in the statistics. It's visible in the disappearance of small, if imperfect, social rituals that once signaled desire in public space, such as buying someone a drink at a bar. The old moral codes are gone, but they are being replaced with new ones: the parish priest has given way to HR, sexual harassment trainings and viral tweets. Rules have multiplied around sex from verbal consent protocols to workplace regulations. The result is that people grow afraid of the consequences, and sex hardly feels casual, any longer.'

The Stupidification of Women? The Hate on Campus? Look no Further

Matt · 21 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The following is the progression of ‘evolving’ for modern left-of-center women, for whom finding a meaningful work is the number one priority, children being the last, as the below illustrates.
...
When the recognition of slim to no talent or at least un-sellable talent, is made and a future of grinding for multinationals is revealed, and spiritual enlightenment or Kundalini awakening seems out of reach, the desperation moves onto Democrat politics, and ends in middle-aged and elderly woman on the streets, face contorted in rage. Those women, a full 40% of whom are childless and family-less, spend their lives slogging away in some corporate or health or educational structure, becoming semi-insane. As an aside note, in my years-long investigation of voter fraud, many of the operators are women just like these below: middle-aged, put together, well dressed, polite, fully criminal.'

I live in a women-only commune — there’s no men and no drama

Matt · 22 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not really a bad idea, esp. for elderly women like these. I've often said that if women REALLY want to live without men around, they should endeavor to build themselves a city for women only. Thus far no one has taken up the challenge. Excerpt:

'The Bird’s Nest is a five-acre women-only commune, and the brainchild of 70-year-old Robyn Yerian.

Dedicated to ’empowering women’ the group ‘encourage, help, console and laugh with each other.’

‘This community is our little utopia,’ says Robyn. ‘We have dogs running around, and get together all the time. We are a bunch of really great friends.’

Robyn’s commune actually started by accident.

In 2002, she started to consider her retirement plans, and realised she’d struggle to support herself from the money she’d saved.

So, instead, she withdrew it, and bought five acres of land, costing her $35,000 (£25,926.41). A further $100,000 – cash from her life savings (£74,075.45) – was spent to make it liveable.'

Dismantling Men's Masculinity

Matt · 22 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Our culture has slipped into imbalance. Instead of valuing both masculine (yang) and feminine (yin) traits, we treat yang traits in men as problems to be corrected while elevating yin traits as the moral ideal. This creates an environment where boys and men are shamed for expressing natural masculine tendencies, while the feminine is glorified as “healthier,” “safer,” or “more evolved.” To make matters worse, men are framed as the problem—legitimizing attacks against them—while women and girls are cast as victims, granting them cultural permission to adopt masculine traits. Boys watch in bewilderment as this double standard unfolds: masculinity is shamed in men but praised in women, and women are celebrated for both yin and yang traits. It defies logic, yet nearly every cultural institution reinforces it. We are living in a truly unbalanced world.'

Dr. James Nuzzo Cancelled for Challenging Feminism and DEI

Matt · 25 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Join me as I talk with Janice Fiamengo and researcher Dr. James Nuzzo about the shocking story of his academic cancellation. What begins as one man's ordeal soon reveals how woke ideology and radical feminism are undermining science, silencing dissent, and eroding academic freedom. Thoughtful, eye-opening, and at times heartbreaking, this video exposes what really happens when universities put politics before truth.'

Hillary Clinton blames white men of a 'certain religion' for doing 'such damage' to America

Mastodon · 25 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton warned that white men of a “certain religion” are responsible for “so much damage” just two weeks after the assassination of Turning Point USA co-founder Charlie Kirk.

Clinton, 77, made the remarks during a segment Wednesday on MSNBC’s “Morning Joe” in which the two-time Democratic presidential candidate said America has yet to achieve the “more perfect union” spoken of by former President Abraham Lincoln.'

Irritable Male Syndrome (IMS) Is An Actual Condition — And It Could Explain A Lot

Mastodon · 28 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We seem to have reached peak “get off my lawn” culture, with men having temper tantrums all over the damn place. Whether they’re typing shrill all-caps messages, foaming at the mouth with road rage or aggressively punching holes in your drywall, men seem to be angrier than ever. And with a “boys will be boys” cultural mindset that provides a free pass on bad behavior to men well into their final decades, it’s hard to know when, or if, these antics will ever end.

Would it make you feel any better to know that there’s not only a possible medical reason, but even an accepted syndrome designation, for this way many men have of interacting with the world?

Maybe not, but the term “irritable male syndrome” does exist, and in the two decades since it was coined, it’s become accepted in medical and psychological circles. While not a clinical diagnosis, experts say it’s an accurate description of a cluster of symptoms that often appears in aging men.

“Along with the term ‘andropause,’ which refers to male menopause, it’s a useful shorthand for describing what happens to men through gradual testosterone decline and hormonal changes,” said Dr Justin Houman, assistant professor of urology at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.'

‘Men seem to make life for women worse’: single US women share the woes of dating in 2025

Matt · 28 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By 2030, 45% of prime working age women in the US, defined as women aged between 25 and 44, will be single according to Census Bureau historical data and Morgan Stanley forecasts – the largest share in history.

Hundreds of those women, from across the US, shared with the Guardian why they were single, how they felt about it and what they would be looking for in a future partner if they were still in the market for one.
...
One of the phrases respondents used the most was that they were looking for a partner capable of “adding to” or “enhancing” their life – as in, someone who was entirely self-sufficient and capable of adding romance, children or a unique intellectual connection to their lives. A large number of women complained about past suitors who had been “lacking effort” or “unable to keep up”.'

How Two Young Men Got Pulled Into Internet Darkness, and How They Got Out

Matt · 28 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the two young men fell into very different internet rabbit holes—one with alt-right leanings and the other on the far left—they were both drawn by a desire to find belonging and a yearning, they say, for the hero's journey. For both, the result was depression and loneliness.

They each sought out ideas and experiences that elude many young men in an age some see as one of helicopter parenting and so-called toxic masculinity. For decades, schools have cut shop class, as well as recess and other programs that mental-health experts say give boys an outlet for their energy. The American Psychological Association reported that boys often receive more severe punishment than girls in school for the same behaviors. And there are fewer male teachers now than in the 1980s, according to the American Institute for Boys and Men.
...
Whether it's conspiracy theories, misogyny or political extremism, the rabbit holes—or pipelines—that lure teenage boys and young men are vast. Studies show males are disproportionately vulnerable to online extremism in one form or another. And psychologists say these pathways, for both right-wing and left-wing ideology, can end in violence.

The shooting death of conservative political activist Charlie Kirk was allegedly committed by a 22-year-old man, who authorities say had spent considerable time online growing political and left-leaning over the past year.'

Masculinity: Assessing the Damage and Reclaiming Your Strengths

Matt · 29 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is the final stretch in the gynocentrism series. In the earlier posts we looked at a definition of gynocentrism from chatgpt, noted that most of us have at least a little gynocentrism , saw how it operates beneath the surface of our culture, and how it offers women both protection and access to resources. We've also seen how feminism took that ancient system and weaponized it, and why men often fail to resist.

Now it's time to turn the focus inward. This essay is about what you can do — not on a political stage, not in the culture at large, but in your own life and relationships. Before we talk about strategies, we need to start with something more personal: assessing the damage.'

UK: Criminal charges against Andrew Tate dropped

Matt · 29 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Guy's an a-hole. That doesn't make him a rapist though. "Some justice," as they say. Excerpt:

'ANDREW Tate's rape charges in the UK have been dropped, with the disgraced influencer moaning about his "mistreatment".

Three women in their late twenties and early thirties have accused Tate of rape and sexual and physical assaults - including holding guns to their heads and strangulations with belts.

But the CPS said today that the evidence did not meet the threshold to bring criminal charges, and they would be dropped - though the civil case continues.

Reacting to the news, Tate posted on X: "Romania? No case UK? No case USA? No case 4 months in jail, 3 years locked in my house.

"Endless media slander. 25million dollars stolen from me. Lawfare? – I'm one of the most mistreated men in history beside president Trump himself."

A CPS spokesperson said: "We undertook a further review of a case file in relation to allegations of assault and rape between 2013 and 2015.'

From breadwinners to bystanders: The death spiral of the American working man

Matt · 30 September 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Something strange is happening in America's job market. For the first time in living memory, young men with college degrees are struggling to find work, while women with the same qualifications are thriving. What once seemed fixed — the old order of men filling the top jobs and women fighting for entry — has been flipped. And the consequences could be severe.

The numbers paint a disturbing picture. Men with college degrees are now more likely to be out of work than women with the same education. To compound matters, men's pay has barely budged since 1979, whereas women's earnings keep climbing. More worrying still, a growing number of men are no longer looking for work at all. They have simply checked out.'

AOC Calls on Supporters to ‘Laugh’ at MAGA ‘Men’

Matt · 6 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) called on Democrats and activists to “laugh” at “insecure” MAGA “men” – zeroing in on White House deputy chief of staff Stephen Miller as a “clown.”

Speaking during an hour-long Instagram Live session on Sunday, AOC mocked Miller, whom she admitted that she’d never met, as someone who looked like he was short and was angry because he was:

...

Continuing, the Democratic congresswoman doubled down, arguing Democrats should be “making fun” of what she said was a culture of “insecure masculinity” within MAGA:'

Forget the rom-coms — scientists say nice guys do finish last

Matt · 7 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But while nice guys win hearts on the silver screen, a study suggests they may struggle in the unforgiving arena of real dating.

The findings, published in the Journal of Research in Personality, indicate that personality traits are linked to relationship success in markedly different ways for men and women.

The authors sent questionnaires to 3,800 adults in Australia, Denmark and Sweden to assess their personalities. They were asked whether they were in a relationship and, if so, how satisfied they were with it.

When it came to kindness, there was a divide between the sexes. Women who were more “agreeable” — meaning empathetic, co-operative and patient — were no more likely to be in a relationship than women in whom these qualities were less pronounced.

For men, though, agreeableness seemed to work against them. The correlation between kindness and being in a relationship was weak but slightly negative. In other words: the nicer he was, the less likely he was to have a partner.

The researchers also found that men who were more outgoing, confident and sociable were significantly more likely to be in a relationship, compared with less extroverted men.'

Feminism Has Emerged as a Global Hate Movement

Matt · 8 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Suffragette Mary Leigh had a long record of criminal convictions arising from her unrelenting advocacy for the women's movement. On July 18, 1912, Leigh hurled a hatchet at Prime Minister Herbert Asquith, slicing through the cheek of an Irish MP.

Canadian commentator Janice Fiamengo would later write that the end goal of Leigh's campaign was to "express a deep hatred for the male sex" and to "create a lasting sex-divide of suspicion and hostility that would transform British society."

But in a society dominated by chivalrous impulses, the excesses of the suffragette movement were overlooked, even applauded.

Then in 1970, feminist Kate Millett published her book, Sexual Politics, that popularized the Marxist-inspired concept, "patriarchy." Millett described patriarchy as a "most ingenious system of social control" that subordinates women through socialization, economic dependency, and normalized violence, she claimed.

Millett managed to ignore the fact that men are far more likely to be victims of violence. Indeed, government reports reveal men are lagging behind women in 12 areas such as health status, educational attainment, homelessness, and more. This callous neglect of male disadvantage would soon become a defining characteristic of the feminist movement.'

Why America needs to tax-incentivize tradesmen, not just college graduates

Matt · 11 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If these were lines of work now populated largely by women, these kinds of incentives would already be in place. Excerpt:

'Nvidia CEO Jensen Huang recently warned that building America's artificial-intelligence infrastructure will require an army of electricians. The demand for data centers – both cloud and AI – is expected to double year over year. Mike Rowe has been sounding the alarm for years: the most "essential" jobs are the ones our culture stopped celebrating.

Here's the truth: without skilled tradesmen, America grinds to a halt. No power. No housing. No data centers. No cloud. No AI.

Yet we keep pushing young people toward four-year degrees, often leaving them with six-figure debt, while treating the trades as a second-class option. Meanwhile, a "silver tsunami" is coming as baby boomers and Gen X tradesmen are retiring faster than replacements are entering the field.'

"Falling Down"

Matt · 11 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Just discovered this movie. Michael Douglas puts in an Oscar-worthy performance as a divorced man who was fired from his defense industry job and one day just loses it. It's liable to be quite cathartic for some men who watch it. But lads, if anyone gets the urge to copy the main character, talk it out. This is after all just a cathartic fantasy film.

NCFM v. Selective Service System

Matt · 12 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Before the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Lack of men in crucial fields exacerbates NV workforce shortages, research finds

Matt · 13 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A public policy think tank recommends Nevada create a commission on boys and men to address gender disparities in some of the state's most in-demand occupations.

The Lincy Institute at UNLV, in a policy brief released Monday, makes the case that gender disparities in health, education, administration, and literacy (HEAL) professions warrant a closer look by state policymakers. Men make up only 22% of the HEAL workforce.

Men are losing out on stable jobs, some of which do not require a four-year degree. And the lack of men in crucial fields like education and health care is exacerbating already existing workforce shortages.

This HEAL workforce is expected to grow by 1.6 million jobs nationwide by 2033, according to the report, which analyzed data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics and Nevada P-20 to Workforce Research Data System.

Lincy found that women are disproportionately enrolled in educational programs or training for HEAL occupations, not just at the collegiate level but also in high school career and technical education programs.'

Marjorie Taylor Greene, tearing into her own party, says GOP men in Congress are ‘weak’

Matt · 14 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Note to Ms. Greene: Shaming men by calling them "weak", etc., is an outdated tactic. Try again. Excerpt:

'Greene’s sharpest attacks also reflect some disillusionment with how she and other conservative women in Congress have been treated in recent months. She said she sees a pattern of unfair treatment in which competent and tough women such as herself and Rep. Elise Stefanik (New York) have been punished or ignored while “weak” Republican men are rewarded.
...
"Whereas President Trump has a very strong, dominant style — he’s not weak at all — a lot of the men here in the House are weak,” Greene said. “There’s a lot of weak Republican men and they’re more afraid of strong Republican women. So they always try to marginalize the strong Republican women that actually want to do something and actually want to achieve.”

Jealousy may be part of the dynamic, she added. “They’re always intimidated by stronger Republican women because we mean it and we will do it and we will make them look bad,” she said.'

The Engineered Isolation of Men

Matt · 16 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades, society has been dismantling the three foundations that once anchored men: work, identity, and family. What we call a “men’s crisis” isn’t just about depression or suicide—it’s about systematic disconnection. When a man loses his place to contribute, his right to belong, and the respect that once gave him pride, he doesn’t merely suffer; he disappears.
...
Modern culture mistakes this for fragility: “Men just need to talk more.”
But talking doesn’t rebuild meaning.

What men need isn’t therapy in isolation—it’s reconnection to the structures that once made their lives coherent.'

NCFM Letter to Secretary of War Pete Hegseth about Wrongful Allegations

Matt · 18 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'October is recognized nationally as Domestic Violence Awareness Month, a time to reflect on the impact of domestic violence and renew commitments to justice and support for all affected. In this context, the National Coalition for Men (NCFM) highlights the urgent need for fairness and integrity in the handling of domestic violence, sexual harassment, and sexual assault allegations within the Armed Forces. While supporting victims and holding perpetrators accountable is essential, NCFM draws attention to the significant harm caused by false allegations—wrongful convictions, administrative discharges, and lasting personal and professional consequences for service members.

NCFM welcomes recent policy changes that introduce credibility assessments and accountability for false claims, but urges further reforms. These include the creation of a Conviction Integrity and Accountability Unit, improved oversight of military prosecutors and law enforcement, and greater transparency in promotion decisions. As we observe Domestic Violence Awareness Month, NCFM calls for balanced policies that protect victims, safeguard the rights of the accused, and ensure justice for all members of the military community.'

"Gen Z Protesters": Revolutionaries, and men at that. Politicians should take notice.

Matt · 18 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Some of you have read about the "Gen Z Protests". These are less protests and more revolutions. ICYMI:

Gen Z protesters toppled Madagascar's president. Should other African leaders worry?

2025 Nepalese Gen Z protests

What isn't being said in these reports is that these protests-turned-revolutions are being executed by economically, culturally, and socially disenfranchised men.

When women feel disenfranchised enough in some important way, they march in pink pussy hats and threaten men with withholding sex until they get their way. However when men feel disenfranchised enough, they overthrow governments.

My gut tells me these revolutions have been under-reported because TPTB don't want men in the West getting ideas. And indeed, toppling even the US gov't would take maybe only 10,000 determined people, possibly fewer. The US gov't is made up of under 500 individuals and they meet all in the same place: the District of Columbia. January 6 scared the bejeesus out of the gov't because indeed, things came very close to revolution. And who were the January 6 protesters? Mostly they were men. Men who what? Felt disenfranchised.

There are efforts in play in some states to set up commissions on the status of men and boys. If our gov't people are paying attention, I think they'll see the wisdom of starting to take men's interests a lot more seriously. Men don't don blue penis hats and nag their mates to get their way. As I said above, they overthrow governments.

Cops: AI Image Used In False Sex Attack Claim

Matt · 18 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Florida Woman contacted police earlier this month to report that a male assailant had barged into her home, knocked her to the ground, and then committed a sexual assault.

While the attacker was a stranger, the woman said, she was able to take a photo of the suspect while he was seated on the couch in her St. Petersburg apartment.

“Multiple officers and forensic technicians responded to the scene” where Brooke Schinault, a 32-year-old mother of two, said the October 7 attack occurred.

But a subsequent police examination of the image provided by Schinault revealed that “the photo was AI generated via ChatGPT,” according to an arrest report. Additionally, the photo was found in “a deleted folder dated...days before she alleged the sexual battery took place.”'

Men ‘will exploit hate crime law to accuse women of misandry’

Matt · 19 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men will seize upon new legal protections against sexism to “maliciously” target women, a feminist charity funded by the SNP government has warned.

The group Engender claimed proposals to make “sex” a protected characteristic under Scottish hate crime laws risked sending the message that there was a “parallel relationship” between misogyny and misandry. Engender said that men did not deserve equal protection.

The proposals are being put forward by SNP ministers after they ditched legislation designed to criminalise misogyny, which they feared would prove too controversial.'

Tommy Tuberville slams Democrats for ‘demonizing’ young male voters after AOC's ‘masculinity’ remarks backfire

Mastodon · 19 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, D-N.Y., had a highly scrutinized moment during Wednesday night's CNN town hall with Bernie Sanders, when the congresswoman addressed why she believed Republicans have more success garnering support among young men.

"They are able to radicalize and target and exploit a generation of young boys, in particular, away from healthy masculinity and into an insecure masculinity that requires a domination of others who are poorer, browner, darker or a different gender than them," Ocasio-Cortez said, drawing backlash on social media.

Sen. Tommy Tuberville, R-Ala., an SEC championship-winning football coach who coached at the high school and collegiate levels 40 years, responded to Fox News Digital when asked for his reaction to Ocasio-Cortez's statement.

"When I was coaching, I taught my players that this is the greatest country in the world, and if you work hard, the sky is the limit for what you can achieve — no matter what you look like. Unfortunately, woke Democrats have spent the past 20 years telling young men they are ‘racist,’ ‘sexist’ and ‘toxic’ simply for being men," Tuberville said.

"But it didn’t stop there. Democrats tried to prevent men from getting jobs just because of their skin color and also tried to baselessly cancel them during the ‘Me Too’ movement. It’s no wonder that more than half of the young men in this country voted for President Trump in the 2024 election. If Democrats don’t stop demonizing men, they may never win an election again."'

Reproductive Rights End at Ejaculation: How Men Lost Control Over Parenthood

Matt · 20 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's one of the most unspoken truths in modern life: once conception occurs, men have no reproductive rights. A woman can choose to keep a pregnancy or end it. She can decide to raise the child or place it for adoption. A man, on the other hand, is bound—socially, legally, and financially—to whatever decision she makes.

That imbalance is so normalized that few even notice it. When the topic arises, most people reflexively defend the status quo. "Well, it's her body." Of course it is. But what's rarely considered is that while women have control over their bodies, men have no control over their futures.

"The man's genetic material, his emotional capacity, his finances, and his lifelong identity as a father or a stranger—all of it hangs on someone else's choice. A woman's responsibility is conditional; a man's is absolute."'

"The Red Pill" on YouTube

Matt · 21 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

TRP has made it to YouTube. No subscription needed!

Apple confirms it pulled controversial dating apps Tea and TeaOnHer from the App Store

Matt · 22 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Controversial dating safety apps, Tea and TeaOnHer, have been pulled from the Apple App Store. The apps' removal was first spotted by the app store intelligence provider Appfigures, which told TechCrunch the two apps were removed from the App Store on Tuesday in all markets but remain live on Google Play.

Reached for comment, Apple confirmed the apps' removal, saying it removed Tea Dating Advice and TeaOnHer from the App Store because they failed to meet Apple's requirements around content moderation and user privacy. The company also said it saw an excessive number of user complaints and negative reviews, which included complaints of minors' personal information being posted in these apps.'

Virginia Advisory Commission for Men and Boys announced

Matt · 22 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday Virginia Democrats announced an effort to create a legislative advisory committee for men and boys — the first ever in the country.

House Speaker Don Scott, Del. Josh Thomas (House patron), Sen. Lamont Bagby (Senate Patron and party chair) Sen. Lashrecse Aird and Del. Michael Feggans gave a press conference Oct. 14 at the General Assembly building to announce what stands to be groundbreaking legislation.

A bill to create a permanent committee will be introduced to the general assembly next year and focus on four key areas long known to negatively impact men and boys:'

UK: Family law shift hailed as victory for children facing domestic abuse

Matt · 23 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The family courts will no longer work on the presumption that having contact with both parents is in the best interests of a child, in a landmark change that domestic abuse campaigners have said “will save so many children’s lives”.

The move has been heralded as “groundbreaking” by family lawyers and campaigners who have long argued that the “pro-contact culture” in the family courts places the rights of abusive fathers over the safety and wellbeing of children.'

On the feminization of western society

Matt · 23 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video discussion here.

Women’s Studies was Never About Study

Matt · 23 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades, Women’s Studies has held a privileged place in academia. From its earliest days, it was never a neutral or exploratory field—it was born out of activism, not inquiry. The goal was not to ask open questions about gender, but to advance a political framework that saw women as oppressed and men as privileged. It promised to give women a collective voice and to expose the “hidden structures” of patriarchy, but from the beginning, its conclusions were already written into its premises.

Women’s Studies emerged in the late 1960s as an explicitly ideological project, shaped by the political currents of second-wave feminism. Its founders were activists first and academics second. The programs they built were not designed to test ideas but to institutionalize a belief system—that society was organized around male domination and that liberation required dismantling it. Rather than studying whether patriarchy existed, Women’s Studies set out to document how it did, embedding the theory of oppression into every syllabus. What began as political conviction soon became academic dogma.'

Woman gets rare whole-life sentence for murder of French schoolgirl

Matt · 27 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Finally, the punishment fits the crime in a female-perp case. Excerpt:

'A woman who raped and murdered 12 year-old Lola Daviet in Paris has been handed a rare whole-life sentence in a case that has shocked France.

Dahbia Benkired, aged 27, must spend at least 30 years in prison after a panel of judges and a jury decided to impose the country's harshest possible penalty.

A whole-life term is extremely rare in France and Benkired is the first woman to receive it.

Those who have been given the sentence include serial killer and rapist Michel Fourniret and jihadist Salah Abdeslam, who took part in the 2015 Paris attacks which killed 130 people.'

Never Date a Feminist: Here’s Why

Matt · 27 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Something precious has been lost between men and women. You can feel it in the awkwardness of modern dating, the cold negotiations of marriage, and the way so many couples approach each other with suspicion instead of trust. What used to be a natural partnership—rooted in complementarity and mutual respect—has been reframed through a political lens that sees power, not love, as the central dynamic.

That shift didn’t happen by chance. Feminist ideology, as it evolved from the 1960s onward, carried a moral story about men and women: that men were the oppressors and women their victims. What began as a call for fairness hardened into a worldview that mistrusts men, glorifies grievance, and turns intimacy into an ideological battlefield.'

People are having fewer kids. Their choice is transforming the world's economy

Matt · 27 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Worldwide, the number of children born to the average family has dropped by more than half since the 1970s, according to the latest United Nations data. Economists say having fewer children is the norm for many families, especially in relatively prosperous countries like the U.S.

The trend is leading to populations that are dramatically older, and beginning to shrink, in many of the world's biggest economies.

...

Already, women in the 15 countries that account for 75% of global gross domestic product, including the U.S., are having too few children to maintain a stable population. Many of those nations have fallen into the "very low" category of "total fertility rate" identified by the U.N. as a serious concern.

...

"For the countries below 1.4 births per woman, we see much faster population decline and a pronounced shift in the population age distribution to the older ages," said Vladimíra Kantorová, the U.N.'s chief population scientist. The rate of births per woman in the U.S. dropped to 1.6 in 2024, the lowest ever.

In China, Japan, Italy and South Korea, deaths already outpace births. Demographers say more high-income countries would face population decline, if not for high rates of immigration.

...

Some researchers, including Harvard University economist Claudia Goldin, think fears about shrinking families are overblown. Goldin described much of the concern as a political backlash against high rates of immigration and women's empowerment.

Asked about economic impacts of an aging, declining workforce, Goldin said, "I am not worried about that. Scarcity is everywhere; trade-offs are everywhere. There is no optimal birth rate."

...

Ashley Evancho, the financial planner and mom who lives near Buffalo, agrees families like hers aren't likely to have more kids, even if governments offer incentives and benefits.

"My opportunity cost, the opportunity cost to my career or my education [of having more children] is so much higher," she said. "So the economy, the way it works, will probably have to fundamentally change."'

Beware the New Battle of the Sexes

Matt · 28 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Helen Andrews' essay is as the liberals would say, sparking a "backlash". One such article is here. Excerpt:

'Although interest in “The Great Feminization” has been building for a while, it exploded recently with a viral essay by Helen Andrews, a conservative commentator. In it, Andrews argues that female group dynamics are responsible for “wokeness” and “cancel culture,” which she describes as “simply feminine patterns of behavior applied to institutions where women were few in number until recently.” Andrews argues that corporate cultures often suffer when they become majority female, and she worries particularly about the impact of gender dynamics on law. Too many women lawyers, she suggests, might well bring down the American legal system:

The field that frightens me most is the law. All of us depend on a functioning legal system, and, to be blunt, the rule of law will not survive the legal profession becoming majority female. The rule of law is not just about writing rules down. It means following them even when they yield an outcome that tugs at your heartstrings or runs contrary to your gut sense of which party is more sympathetic.

Andrews concludes that while it is “still controversial” to argue that “there are too many women in a given field or that women in large numbers can transform institutions beyond recognition in ways that make them cease to function well,” it is necessary to do so because “we all are … dependent on institutions like the legal system, scientific research, and democratic politics that support the American way of life, and we will all suffer if they cease to perform the tasks they were designed to do.” In a speech at the National Conservatism Conference last month, Andrews argued that “a thoroughly feminized civilization will set itself on the road to collapse.” Although Andrews is careful to point out that she doesn’t want to roll back women’s rights (and acknowledges that individual women can pursue professional excellence), she hopes the trend of feminization will reverse if we take what she sees as needed steps to abandon our “system in which it is illegal for women to lose” and “[r]emove the HR lady’s veto power.” While Andrews is cagey about what future she hopes for, she’s explicit that institutional threats remain “as long as demographics remain unchanged.” She doesn’t say where she wants the apparently too many working women to go.'

UN report cites anti-male discrimination concerns in Croatia's military conscription law

Matt · 28 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The UPR is a unique UN mechanism that examines the human rights situation in every member state every five years. A working group of 47 countries bases its recommendations on three key documents: the National Report submitted by the member state, the Compilation of UN Information, and the Summary of Stakeholder Submissions, which includes relevant contributions from the Ombudsperson and civil society organizations.

The report highlights a warning from the Center for Economic Education (CEE) that the Defense Act discriminates against men by legally obligating them to perform military service solely on the basis of sex. This, the CEE notes, restricts men's personal liberty and imposes sex-based obligations, while simultaneously disparaging the value of women's contribution to the armed forces.'

Marjorie Taylor Greene Lashes Out at ‘Pathetic Republican Men’

Matt · 31 October 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Thursday evening, the lawmaker responded to some of her critics on X, who objected to the TV hits, given that the programs’ hosts are liberals:

"There are pathetic Republican men (mostly paid social media influencers) attacking me for going on Bill Maher’s show and The View.

Here is my voting card and nothing has changed about me, I’m 1,000,000% America ONLY.

Sorry I’m not sorry I don’t obey Republican men’s demands that I, as a woman, don’t remain seen but not heard."

The text was accompanied by a screenshot of her “A” voting grade by the Conservative Review.'

7 Dark Reasons Why Men Stay Single

Matt · 1 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Not the real Elon Musk but nonetheless a really good vid.

"The Big Lonely"

Matt · 2 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A documentary here about a man who after three failed marriages found himself homeless. He decided to go live on a mountain.

She Was Ready to Have Her 15th Child. Then Came the Felony Charges

Matt · 2 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

File this one under "Forced Paternity". Excerpt:

'MaryBeth Lewis was shopping for groceries at her local Walmart in suburban Buffalo when she got the word: Her surrogate had just been induced. She rushed home and packed a bag for her new twins — a book for baby footprints, matching outfits and beanies and blankets embroidered with their names. Then she jumped back in the car and raced down Interstate 390 to a small hospital 130 miles away in a rural corner of the state.

When MaryBeth arrived at the maternity ward, she found her surrogate in a recovery room, tired but happy after a quick delivery. She asked to see the twins, and a nurse went to go find them. But before she returned, a different woman dressed in scrubs appeared and got in MaryBeth's face. "What you did was terrible," the woman said. "You will never see these babies." MaryBeth tried to talk to her, but the woman refused to listen. A voice over the loudspeaker announced that visiting hours were over. "And that means you," the woman said.'

November Is Men’s Equality Month

Matt · 3 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'November is Men’s Equality Month, and November 19 marks International Men’s Day — two celebrations that recognize the contributions of men and boys while raising awareness about the areas where they continue to face disadvantage.

These observances are growing fast. International Men’s Day began in 1999 in Trinidad and Tobago. Building on that success, the International Council for Men and Boys (ICMB) inaugurated Men’s Equality Month (MEM) in 2024 to expand the recognition of men’s issues across the entire month of November.'

When “Helping Men” Comes With a Hidden Asterisk

Matt · 6 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But as you read on, a familiar pattern emerges. The compassion is there — but it’s conditional. The sympathy comes wrapped in ideology.

And beneath the glossy language of “healthier masculinities” runs an unmistakable undercurrent of misandry.

The piece centers on the claim that men’s suffering largely stems from their “rigid gender norms.” This “man box,” we’re told, traps men in emotional stoicism, dominance, and self-reliance — all of which supposedly lead to loneliness and self-destruction. The solution, according to the experts quoted, is to “deconstruct masculinity” or “redefine” it in more emotionally expressive, prosocial terms.

But this framing quietly does something damaging: it pathologizes masculinity itself. It treats male distress not as the product of a culture that devalues men but as a symptom of how men behave.'

Give Men Reproductive Rights, Too

Matt · 7 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article from last year here. Excerpt:

'Modern feminism has been rooted in securing a woman's guaranteed right to decide whether she wants to bring her pregnancy to term. Devastatingly, in most U.S. states, that right is now denied after countless political, social, and media campaigns have failed on this front.

One problem is that we have refused to embrace our biggest ally group: men, who hold similar views on abortion rights as women, and also benefit when they have agency over their parenthood.

While we fight for women to have the right to decide whether she has the maturity, financial, or emotional resources to bring a pregnancy to term, men are legally responsible to financially support any biological child, yet have never enjoyed the right to decide whether to become a father.'

Labor Department social media campaign depicts a White male workforce

Matt · 7 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. IMO the point that the posters lack ethno-genderal diversity is true. What's wrong is the basis of the criticism of it: that exclusive white male representation necessarily entails "white supremacy" or worse, Nazism. That's utter hogwash. Excerpt:

'But the agency has made a dramatic shift during the Trump administration, launching a social media campaign with illustrations that appear to be AI-generated and that almost exclusively feature White men — part of an effort to promote the hiring of American citizens over foreign workers.

Art experts and historians say the images mimic the styles of artist Norman Rockwell or historical government propaganda, including posters from New Deal-era America and fascist Europe. The campaign has drawn scrutiny, with critics saying it is not realistically portraying the diversity of the country's workforce and is sending messages that feel exclusionary, given that White men make up a minority of the workforce.
...
Duke University art history professor Paul Jaskot said he would compare the images to a range of historic propaganda, including Nazi and Soviet art in the 1930s, as well as the campaign led by the Works Progress Administration during the New Deal era in the U.S.

"These images participate in a longer history of images of heroic white masculinity that extends well beyond the Nazi period," Jaskot wrote in an email.'

The Routledge Handbook of Men’s Victimisation in Intimate Relationships

Matt · 7 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

A new book aggregating the literature on male victimization in intimate relationships here. Description:

'This handbook provides a timely synthesis of the international literature that investigates men’s experiences of intimate partner violence and help seeking behavior, and considers what the findings mean for research, practice, and policy.

Providing the reader with a synthesis of cutting-edge knowledge, this book draws together a wealth of information from leading international researchers and practitioners working in the field of men’s victimization in intimate relationships. By including chapters that address a diverse range of men’s experiences and needs, it offers an accessible format for the reader to learn about the experiences of underrepresented groups of men across the world and how this knowledge can shape practice, policy, and future research.

The Routledge Handbook of Men’s Victimisation in Intimate Relationships will be of great use to postgraduate students (including training psychologists, psychiatrists, medics, barristers/attorneys, social workers, probation officers, doctors, and nurses); academics, researchers, and professionals working in areas of family violence law, practice, policy and service provision.'

Photoshopping out boyfriends: A new trend explained

Matt · 7 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Amanda takes on the motivations around high-status women discouraging other women from having boyfriends, husbands, and children. An interesting take.

The War On Men Isn't Helping Anyone

Matt · 9 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. What's noteworthy is that the interviewee is notoriously lefty. I don't agree with everything he says but the fact he's discussing the topic is significant.

Gavin Newsom tells Democrats they 'walked away' from masculinity crisis impacting men and boys

Mastodon · 10 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gov. Gavin Newsom, D-Calif., urged Democrats to "own up" to ceding ground on the masculinity crisis during an interview Sunday.

"I say this as a Democrat: We need to own up to the fact that we ceded that ground. We walked away from this crisis of men and boys. Trump saw it as an electoral opportunity to exploit it, but he‘s done nothing to deliver in terms of results to address those anxieties, which are real," he said during an interview on CNN's "State of the Union."

Newsom told CNN host Jake Tapper that suicide rates, dropout rates and suspension rates were off the charts for men.'

The Perils of Seeing Yourself as a Victim

Matt · 10 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Something powerful happens when a person begins to see themselves as a victim. It doesn't just shape how they interpret the world — it shapes who they become.

In therapy, I've watched people recover from immense trauma once they reclaimed a sense of agency — the feeling that they could influence their own lives. I've also seen others sink deeper into despair when they made victimhood their identity.

The difference isn't what happened to them. It's how they understood what happened.'

California Creates Council on Men and Boys; NCFM Dismisses Lawsuit

Matt · 10 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Governor Gavin Newsom announced the creation of the California Council on Men and Boys, a landmark step toward gender equity in state policy. The council addresses long standing disparities and follows years of advocacy and legal action by the National Coalition For Men (NCFM) and represents a significant shift in how California approaches the well-being of all its residents.
...
For decades, the California Commission on the Status of Women and Girls (CCSWG) has received robust support, with funding exceeding $25 million in recent years. The commission has played a vital role in advancing issues related to economic and educational equity, healthcare access, and violence prevention for women and girls, serving millions of Californians. Until now, however, there has been no equivalent body dedicated to addressing the unique challenges faced by men and boys.'

An example of The Problem

Matt · 10 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

This is what especially young men have to deal with.

Watch a couple of this fem-wit's videos and you'll see she's bats. A lot of women like her are out there. This is what Feminism has wrought.

The Relentless War on Masculinity: Does it Ever End?

Matt · 11 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Newly-released book here. Description:

'For decades, Western societies have tilted against men and boys—dismantling fatherhood, ignoring male disadvantage, and portraying masculinity as a problem to be fixed. The result is a deep social crisis: falling education outcomes for boys, disengaged young men, rising mental health struggles, plummeting birth rates, and fractured relationships between men and women.

In this timely and courageous book, David Maywald shines a clear light on the causes of this crisis and offers a vision for how to rebuild. Combining data-driven analysis with heartfelt advocacy, he calls for a new social contract: one where boys are supported, men are respected, and both sexes work together to create a healthier future for us all...'

Podcasting’s Diversity Problem: 64% of Hosts Are Male, 77% Are White, USC Study Finds

Matt · 11 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. White men hold the vast majority of dirty and dangerous jobs, yet no one is complaining that that is a problem. Excerpt:

'The hosts of the top 100 podcasts of 2024 were overwhelmingly white and male, a new comprehensive study from USC reveals. Of the top podcasts, 64% were hosted by men, while 77% of the hosts were white, underlining a severe lack of diversity in the medium that continues to rise in popularity and has become a cornerstone of viewing time on YouTube.

Even expanding beyond the top 100, 66.3% of the hosts of the top 592 podcasts were male, and 79.2% were white. In both gender and race, podcasts trail other parts of the entertainment industry — 50% of the top 100 films of 2024 had a female lead, and among the most popular TV shows of last year, 44.9% of the series regulars were from an underrepresented racial/ethnic group.'

Wife of Minnesota preacher killed in Africa found guilty alongside her Angolan ‘romantic partner’ of plotting murder

Matt · 13 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nothing in the New Testament says it's OK to go out on a missionary expedition with your husband and plot his murder with your secret lover. Nothing. Just sayin'. Excerpt:

'A Minnesota woman has been found guilty of killing her husband while he was on a missionary trip to the southern African nation of Angola.

Jackie Shroyer, 44, from Detroit Lakes, will serve 24 years in an Angolan prison after she was convicted by the Lubango District Court on Wednesday of involvement in her husband’s murder, according to a

Beau Shroyer, who was 44 from Detroit Lakes, was killed in an “act of violence while serving Jesus” on 25 October last year, the family’s church, Lakes Area Vineyard, told the media last November. The pastor had moved to Africa in 2021 with his wife and their five children for missionary work, organized by the North Carolina-based religious organization SIM USA.'

The Psychology of Collective Victimhood - Part 2

Matt · 13 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the mindset of victimhood spreads from individuals to entire groups, something powerful — and dangerous — begins to happen.

The sense of personal injury becomes a shared moral identity.
Suffering, once private, becomes political.

At first, this can bring solidarity and even healing. A wounded community finds its voice. People who once suffered in silence finally feel seen. But over time, the same force that unites can also divide. The story that once offered meaning starts to reshape how people see themselves, their nation, and even morality itself.'

Germany calls up all men aged 18 for military medical exam

Matt · 13 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Germany will call up all 18-year-old men for a military medical examination and create a mechanism for “emergency conscription” after the ruling coalition ended months of squabbling over the future of national service.

The country will not return to full mandatory conscription, which was suspended in 2011, but plans to expand its reserves by training up to 5,000 young men each year.

The German armed forces, known as the Bundeswehr, need to recruit another 80,000 professional soldiers to hit their Nato target strength of 260,000.

...

The model for the partial revival of national service remains the Swedish system, under which only the hardiest and most motivated members of each cohort are called up.

They will serve between seven and 23 months, depending on the level of their commitment. Young women will also be able to sign up, but on a purely voluntary basis.'

British soldiers forced to undergo 'consent, misogyny and incel culture' training

Matt · 15 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Britain's armed forces are rolling out mandatory training on consent, misogyny and "incel culture" for all military personnel after new research found that two-thirds of women in uniform faced sexualised behaviour in one year.

The Ministry of Defence has launched its first-ever prevention programme to tackle what officials are calling "wholly unacceptable" conduct across the Royal Navy, Army and RAF.

The new initiative will teach troops about "harmful online influences" while working to "enforce the highest behavioural standards" throughout the services.

The new training programme kicks off at Catterick Garrison in North Yorkshire and Plymouth Naval Base, with a focus on reaching young recruits at facilities like Army Foundation College Harrogate and HMS Raleigh.'

California begins to address disparities suffered by men and boys; NCFM Dismisses Lawsuit

Matt · 15 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Governor Gavin Newsom issued Executive Order N 31 25, directing California state agencies to take coordinated action to address the mental health crisis, social isolation, and opportunity gaps facing men and boys. He did not announce the establishment of a “council for men and boys” as earlier reported. Nonetheless, the Executive Order is a step in the right direction and strengthens continuing efforts to establish a fully funded Commission on the Status of Men and Boys.

...

For decades, the California Commission on the Status of Women and Girls (CCSWG) has received robust support, with funding exceeding $25 million in recent years. The commission has played a vital role in advancing issues related to economic and educational equity, healthcare access, and violence prevention for women and girls, serving millions of Californians. Until now, however, there has been no equivalent body dedicated to addressing the unique challenges faced by men and boys.'

International Men's Day march in Dublin, Ireland

Matt · 15 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Click "Read more" and see the attached .jpg for more information.

Calls for 'masculinity reset' as men 'portrayed as either frightening or pathetic' on screen

Mastodon · 16 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Calls have been made for a "masculinity reset" because film and TV "portray men as either frightening or pathetic".

A survey found that most people believe boys are lacking proper role models due to a lack of representation in films, adverts and on television.

Instead, men are portrayed as either hapless and useless such as Daddy Pig in Peppa Pig, Homer Simpson and Peter Griffin in Family Guy, or as monstrous characters like Paul Spector, the serial killer in The Fall.

The poll of more than 2,000 people was part of the "Lost Boys" study by Centre for Social Justice (CSJ).

The think-tank's study called for a "masculinity reset" to ensure both male and female qualities are treated positively by the mass media.'

The problem with boy moms

Mastodon · 16 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"A boy mom is a slang to refer to a specific kind of parent who is perceived as being overly fixated on their male children," Mary Walrath-Holdridge of USA Today said.

However, this definition is too sympathetic to boy moms, in my opinion. The term boy moms has developed to refer to internally misogynistic women who grew up lacking male attention. They promote emotional incest, overstepping of boundaries and sexism through their disturbing actions.'

Wait-- The Men's Rights Movement is Working?

Matt · 16 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Nice to see some reported progress at least with shared custody laws. Just getting started, so much needs to change.

The Psychology of Prejudice Against Men

Matt · 16 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is the first of several interviews with Aman Siddiqi about his dissertation on the Prejudice Against Men. Aman's dissertation is extraordinary and his ability to explain its complexity in interviews is excellent. The point he makes is that no psychotherapist can create a therapeutic relationship with men unless they are aware of where men face prejudice. I am sure you will enjoy Aman and his ideas. It is like a breath of fresh air!

The Psychology of Prejudice Against Men is a topic that gets too little attention. Aman Siddiqi has broken the unwritten rules of silence from the misandrist psychological community by taking a close look at the workings of this invisible prejudice and how it impacts men and the psychotherapeutic relationships between therapists and male clients. In his Doctoral Thesis Siddiqi draws on past research on discrimination and prejudice and applies those research driven ideas to what is happening to men today. Importantly he brings to light the concept of "Acceptable Prejudice" which is a prejudice against specific groups that is invisibly endorsed by the culture and shows how it is now men who are carrying the burden of this prejudice. This is a fascinating interview that begins the process of unraveling the web of bias faced in today's world by boys and men.'

Dads blast ‘lazy’ stay-at-home moms for complaining: ‘It’s not hard — they’re just playing victim’

Matt · 16 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sticks and stones may break some bones, but the withering words of men — and a handful of ladies — calling full-time housewives “liars” and “lazy” for claiming the domestic job is hard, can cut deep.

“To all the stay-at-home moms, I feel like you’re lying,” spat Cass — an alleged work-from-home, stay-at-home dad of a newborn — in a controversial clip.

...

Still, internet trolls — including fathers who claim to have fulfilled the role of Mr. Mom — consider the thankless job a cushy gig that shouldn’t warrant much bellyaching from gals on the grind.

“You’re gonna trigger all the lazy moms with this one,” teased an instigator beneath Cass’ TikTok post.

“Being a stay-at-home mom is the easiest job in the world,” argued a smug male commenter.'

UK: Justice officials accidentally release plans to spend millions moving women criminals out of prison

Matt · 17 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Officials are planning to spend tens of millions of pounds moving hundreds of female criminals out of jail to make room for more male offenders.

Documents accidentally released by the Ministry of Justice (MoJ) outline a scheme which would cost an initial £68million and then a further £47million a year to ‘divert’ women offenders out of jail.

Another scheme would see female offenders placed in another type of residential centre instead of jail, at a cost of £60,000 to £100,000 a year per head.'

Cancel Culture with a Vengeance

Matt · 18 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Universities and media love to brand themselves as champions of free speech and open debate. But what happens when those same institutions quietly use legal tools to gag and erase the very people who challenge their orthodoxies?

In this conversation, I'm joined by two of my favorite thinkers, Dr. Janice Fiamengo and Dr. Stephen Baskerville, to dig into a darker layer beneath "cancel culture." We start from the case of Dr. James Nuzzo, whose FOIA request exposed a coordinated effort by colleagues and administrators to push him out rather than debate his research, and then go much deeper.

Stephen explains how non-disclosure agreements, non-disparagement clauses, and mandatory arbitration have become a hidden system of censorship in universities, Christian colleges, and even media outlets—silencing dissenters, shielding institutions from scrutiny, and quietly strippi ng people of their practical First Amendment rights. Janice adds her own experience with gag orders and human rights complaints, and together we explore what this means for anyone who challenges feminist or "diversity" ideology.'

Beyond half measures: how to improve gender gap indices

Matt · 18 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Measuring gender gaps is challenging. For one thing, distributions overlap even when there is a gap at the average. In the U.S., median female earnings are 18 percentage points lower than male earnings, but 40% of women earn more than the median man. Women live five years longer than men on average, but 36% of men live longer than the median woman. Analyzing gender gaps across different subgroups also complicates the picture: white women now earn considerably more than Black men, for example (at the average, of course).

Another potential difficulty is whether to focus only on gender gaps in one direction. The term “gender gap” is typically used to show inequalities where women are worse off than men. Many institutions and scholars focus on these gender gaps. But of course many gender gaps run the other way; these gaps are highlighted by our own work at the American Institute for Boys and Men. This is appropriate in either case; different institutions have different focuses.

A question arises, however, when it comes to indices of gender gaps, especially when these are used for comparative purposes. The most comprehensive existing indices do not measure gender gaps in both directions, instead reporting only the gaps where girls and women are behind boys and men. One example is the World Economic Forum’s Global Gender Gap Report (GGGR) produced by the World Economic Forum (WEF). The GGGR is the most commonly cited measure of gender gaps across countries. It captures and synthesizes a vast amount of data, measuring gender gaps in 146 countries across four dimensions: Economic Participation and Opportunity, Educational Attainment, Health and Survival, and Political Empowerment.'

"The Relentless War On Masculinity" - formats

Matt · 18 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

The new book, "The Relentless War On Masculinity: Does It Ever End?" is available now in multiple formats. Take a look here.

International Men's Day

Matt · 20 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

November 19 is International Men's Day. Following are a few articles discussing at some issues men have. This is some progress.

115+ Happy International Men's Day messages, ...

Why We Must Keep an Open Mind Toward International Men's Day

To The Men The World Overlooks

The National Coalition For Men Celebrates Men and Boys on International Men’s Day 2025

New El Salvador Law Mandates DNA Test Before Babies Are Given Birth Certificate

Matt · 20 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is big news even though ES is a small country. It sets a precedent. Excerpt:

'President Nayib Bukele of El Salvador has signed into law a controversial measure requiring mandatory DNA testing for all children at birth to verify biological parentage.

Bukele defended the law, stating it is “not against women, but against lies,” aimed at preventing men from unknowingly raising children who are not biologically theirs. The Genetic Verification System Law mandates that all tests be conducted in certified laboratories, with the state covering costs for low-income families.

The law has sparked widespread debate. Supporters praise it as a step toward family transparency and protecting paternal rights, while critics warn it represents state overreach and raises ethical and privacy concerns.

El Salvador is now the first country in Latin America to implement a nationwide, mandatory genetic verification system for civil registration.'

MenAreGood discusses The Relentless War on Masculinity

Matt · 20 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Happy International Men's Day! It's a perfect day to acknowledge the relentless war on masculinity? Here we go!

In this video I sit down with four people I deeply respect to talk about a book I think is going to matter: The Relentless War on Masculinity: When Will It End? by David Maywald.

Joining me are:

Dr. Jim Nuzzo – health researcher from Perth and author of The Nuzzo Letter, who's been quietly but steadily documenting how men's health is sidelined.

Dr. Hannah Spier – an anti-feminist psychiatrist (yes, you heard that right) and creator of Psychobabble, who pulls no punches about female accountability and the mental-health system.

Lisa Britton – writer for Evie Magazine and other outlets, one of the few women bringing men's issues into women's media and mainstream conversation.

David Maywald – husband, father of a son and a daugh ter, long-time advocate for boys' education and men's wellbeing, and now author of The Relentless War on Masculinity.'

How Feminist Researchers Lied

Matt · 22 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are millions of compassionate and loving people in the United States who have been given erroneous information about domestic violence. Over the years the media and academia have offered a steady stream of information that indicates that women are the only victims of domestic violence and men the only perpetrators. We have all been deceived. What most don't know is that a part of that deception has been intentional and has come from the scientific community. As hard as it is to believe it is indisputable. Most of us had no idea of this deception until recently. More and more is now coming out about the symmetry of victimization in domestic violence between men and women.

One of the breakthroughs that have helped us identify this deception was the journal response of Murray Straus Ph.D. Straus has been an acclaimed researcher of family and interpersonal violence for many years. In his article he unveils the ways that this misinformation has been intentionally spread via "research." He shows the seven ways that the truth has been distorted. It is a fascinating yet sobering article that shows how, without actually lying, the researchers were able to distort things and make it appear that it was something that is was not. ...'

Germany wants to build Europe's strongest army – a new conscription bill is moving that closer

Matt · 23 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The coalition government is hoping a new bill agreed upon last week will help make this a reality, bolstering Germany's forces in the face of the perceived threat from Russia and a significant shift in US foreign policy.

The sweeping new reforms will see Germany attempt to boost its numbers to 260,000 soldiers, up from around 180,000 currently, in addition to an extra 200,000 reservists, by 2035.

In the first instance, the drive will focus on voluntary enlistment, with greater incentives for those who sign up, including a monthly starting salary of €2,600 ($3,000) – an increase of €450 from the current level.

If the new quotas are not met, the government will have the option of mandatory call-ups, where necessary.'

Why Anti-Feminism Still Sounds Feminist

Matt · 24 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Words like empowerment, agency, and choice slip into our sentences without a second thought. They sound wholesome, but they carry a worldview: that morality begins with women's feelings, that men must prove their virtue, and that harmony means protecting one sex from the other.

It's not hypocrisy; it's inheritance. After decades of dominance, feminism has become the cultural air we breathe. Even those who push back against it often do so in its moral vocabulary, defending traditional roles in the same language that once dismantled them. How can we expect to heal the divide between the sexes and create a pro-women landscape for both when all men hear in our voices is more feminism?

...

Over the past few years, conservative women fed up with careerism, hookup culture, and the endless war between the sexes have started speaking out against the culprit. But instead of breaking away from feminist vocabulary, they borrow it. Choice. Agency. Empowerment. These are the words that still buy social legitimacy. We've spent so long in a woman-centered moral framework that even women who reject feminism still think and speak in those terms.

The feminist lexicon rebranded moral concepts into emotional ones. Empowerment no longer means strength but validation. Agency doesn't mean accountability but autonomy without consequence. Even when conservative women say, "I choose to stay home; that's what makes me feel empowered and feminine," they're still speaking the language of woman-centered justification feminism taught them.'

Why midlife divorce is good for you (as long as you're a woman)

Mastodon · 24 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It wasn't any one incident that convinced Pat*, 55, from Cheshire that she had to leave her husband – just 25 years of feeling taken for granted.

"It was OK while he was working," she explains. "We both had our separate lives, and he was a workaholic and travelled a lot. But then he retired, and he was under my feet. He was pretty lost, I suppose. But he just undermined me constantly… everyday, he'd say or do something which hurt: forgetting something important to me, not noticing something I had done for him, being negative.

"Each thing in isolation wasn't that bad… but it built up. I can remember looking at him one day across the breakfast table and thinking, 'I just can't do this anymore'."

Given that she is only in her mid-50s, Pat says she thought: "I might live for another 40 years. There has to be more to life than this. So I told him I'd had enough. At that point, he said he'd come to couples' counselling, something I'd been suggesting for about 15 years. But by then, it was too late – when you are done, you are so done."
...
The upshot is that if men want to hang on to their "walkaway wives", they are going to have to try a lot harder to keep them happy.'

The Bias We Pretend Doesn't Hurt Boys

Matt · 24 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine, for a moment, what would happen if one group of children lived like this not for a day, but for years. Imagine if the message they heard — from teachers, media, curriculum, and culture — told them that something essential about them was wrong.

Imagine if they were boys.

That's where we're headed. But before we get there, we need one more piece of the puzzle.

Because psychologists later discovered that what Elliott demonstrated dramatically in a classroom is also happening quietly inside children every day. They even gave it a name.

It's called stereotype threat.

And it explains far more about our boys' struggles — and our cultural blind spots — than most people realize.'

The Battle For the Minds of Men

Matt · 25 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When men can't get the help they need, they often leave a trail of devastation in their wake. Men represent nearly 80 percent of suicide victims and live roughly six years less than women, driven in part by more risk-taking behaviors, higher rates of smoking and drinking, and lower rates of visiting doctors. They make up the majority of overdoses and the homeless. Google "deaths of despair" and the image results are mostly shadowy images of lonesome men, many with their heads buried in their hands.

...

This approach failed to recognize that many men came to therapy from a place of shame. He'd seen enough guys walk into his practice "hanging his head like a dog who knew he did something wrong." How some were discussing men would only make guys less comfortable coming forward, he said.'

UK: I’m sick of people mansplaining how to be chancellor, says Rachel Reeves

Matt · 25 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rachel Reeves has said she is “sick of people mansplaining how to be chancellor” to her, days before she unveils her make-or-break Budget.

Hitting back at critics amid growing concern over sweeping tax rises that are expected next week, the chancellor said she is “not going to let them bring me down by undermining my character or my confidence”.

Ms Reeves also admitted the government has “made a couple of unforced errors” but insisted it is “fighting to win”.

But the chancellor failed to give any detail on what she will unveil in the Budget or how she will improve Britain’s ailing public finances, nor did she address the leaks and briefings that have dominated the media landscape in the lead-up to next week’s fiscal event.'

Men are in trouble — but whose fault is it?

Matt · 26 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For all the time-old fretting over the battle of the sexes, the outcome no one seemed to worry about is this one. The battle is over. But there is no jubilation, because the men have retreated. Back each sex went to their respective trenches to live a life alone and without love.

A new study that surveyed 2,000 British men and women aged 18-45 revealed that men are at an unprecedented crisis point. They have rejected old ideas about masculinity, they desperately want to care for their community and aspire to be tender, involved fathers. Yet they despair of being able to fit into the seemingly contradictory demands made of them by their female romantic partners and society at large, with nearly half considering giving up on love entirely.'

Italy now recognizes the crime of femicide and punishes it with life in prison

Matt · 26 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Italy's parliament on Tuesday approved a law that introduces femicide into the country's criminal law and punishes it with life in prison.

The vote coincided with the International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, a day designated by the U.N. General Assembly.

The law won bipartisan support from the center-right majority and the center-left opposition in the final vote in the Lower Chamber, passing with 237 votes in favor.

The law, backed by the conservative government of Premier Giorgia Meloni, comes in response to a series of killings and other violence targeting women in Italy. It includes stronger measures against gender-based crimes including stalking and revenge porn.'

Judges say Scottish courts are risking right to fair trial in sex cases

Matt · 27 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A landmark ruling by the UK Supreme Court could trigger multiple legal challenges by men convicted of sexual offences in Scotland.

Five judges have ruled that Scotland's courts have taken an approach to evidence which risks depriving a defendant of their right to a fair trial.

The Supreme Court had been considering the case of two men, David Daly and Andrew Keir, who were appealing against convictions for rape.

The court dismissed their appeals and said they had received fair trials – but ruled that Scotland's courts should change their approach to the admission of evidence in such cases.'

AUS: Men earn nearly $10,000 more than women in bonuses and overtime pay, fuelling the gender pay gap: new data

Matt · 27 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Men work longer hours and gasp get paid for it. Oh my! Fix it for women's sake! Excerpt:

'Men are earning on average A$9,753 more than women each year in the form of performance bonuses, allowances and overtime pay.

That's according to the latest gender pay gap data released on Thursday by the Workplace Gender Equality Agency. It covers more than 8,000 private companies for 2024–25, employing more than 5.4 million workers across Australia.

The overall gender pay gap fell to 21.1%, compared to 21.8% in 2023–24. But the gap in discretionary pay makes up a big chunk of the total gender pay gap of $28,356.'

France confirms voluntary military conscription in wake of Russia war threat

Matt · 27 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's the thin edge, I think. Excerpt:

'France will introduce a voluntary military service of 10 months beginning next summer, becoming the latest EU country to hint at war preparations in the face of a growing threat from Russia.

President Emmanuel Macron has confirmed the expansion of the military, focusing on volunteers mostly aged 18 to 19.

‘A new national service will be introduced, gradually starting next summer,’ he said during a speech to troops in Varces-Allieres-et-Risset.

This makes France the first European heavyweight – and the first nation that has nuclear capabilities – to reintroduce military service.'

Most Boys Aged 11-14 Have Been Exposed To Online Misogyny. Here's What Ofcom Hopes To Do About It

Matt · 29 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ofcom has urged tech companies to take “practical action against online misogynistic abuse, pile-ons, stalking and intimate image abuse”.

The communications regulator, which is responsible for ensuring everything from our postal service to our TV responsibly delivers safe content, has suggested that these groups need to go “above and beyond what is needed to comply with their legal duties under the Online Safety Act” to achieve true digital equality.

They point out that 99% of intimate images reported to the Revenge Porn Helpline were of women; 99% of deepfake image abuse involves women; nearly 70% of boys aged 11-14 have been exposed to misogynistic content online.

Those are only a few of the issues the regulator raised before announcing their “five-point plan to hold sites and apps to account on protecting women and girls online”.'

Teen Violence — When Ideology Trumps Data

Matt · 29 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first project we'll look at is a study from Great Britain on teen relationship violence. The research included both a written survey and in-depth interviews with selected teens. The survey results were clear: both boys and girls experienced relationship violence.

Yet, the public ad campaign that followed told a very different story. It focused entirely on helping girls as victims and portrayed boys only as perpetrators. This stunning disregard for male victims — and for the girls identified as perpetrators — stood in sharp contrast to the study's own data. Those numbers showed that many boys were victims of teen relationship violence, and that girls, too, could be perpetrators.

Let's start at the beginning — with how this issue first caught my attention.'

On Men and Women

Matt · 30 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Long but very good. Excerpt:

'This war between the sexes and total breakdown of sexuality is incomprehensible to anyone over a certain age, with the birth-year cutoff sitting somewhere between 1991 and 1997. It has been nothing short of a Cultural Revolution, a complete break from previous sexual morality and conception. The self-conception of, and interactions between, men and women in 1995 are utterly alien to those of 2025. This all-encompassing nature makes it difficult to pin down exactly what has changed, which makes it even more difficult to pin down the why behind these changes—much less their second- and third-order effects.

...

The result was immediate and far-reaching. Anti-male sentiment—justified or not—became the single most pervasive cultural force in the Western world. For ten years, disdain for men has been the animating impulse of thousands of cultural products and just as many policies, backed by trillions of dollars in investment. The very framework of conversation narrowed to focus near-exclusively on gender war-derived topics; the totalizing nature of this new frame is what birthed the contagion coarsely called “Woke” today.'

Women Are Refusing To Be In Relationships With Men In Record Numbers, And This Is The Brutal Truth Behind Why

Matt · 30 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is why I advise young men in particular either to avoid dating altogether or be very careful who you date, if you must. The typical young woman isn't a fit romantic partner these days. Excerpt:

'These stories reflect a shift among young women in which more and more of them are “quiet-quitting” these relationships. Women are now 23% less likely to want to date than men, not because they don’t care, but because they feel they’ve invested too much emotional labor without support in return.

In intimate relationships, young women are taking on a disproportionate load of invisible emotional labor, often supporting men through intense feelings of failure and isolation from friends. Many men described feeling “weird or like a waste of time” when opening up to male friends, instead reserving vulnerability for their relationships with women.

While men consider this unburdening to women a “natural part” of their relationships, those same women describe it as work— what researchers at Stanford University call “mankeeping.”'

‘We won’t win this war without women’

Matt · 30 November 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Only thing stopping women from being included in Selective Service is conservatives of both sexes. They need to face facts. Excerpt:

'Nearly four years into Russia’s invasion, women here are increasingly taking on combat roles once reserved for men. Ukraine’s struggle to source personnel has forced its military to change. By early this year, more than 70,000 women had enlisted in Ukraine’s military — up 20 percent since 2022. Around 5,500 of those currently serve in combat roles.

But Daria’s crew is the first in Ukraine’s national guard to operate entirely without men.

She and the four women under her command drive their own vehicle, carry their own equipment, build their own explosives and launch armed drones along the southeastern front.'

National Coalition For Men (NCFM) Marks Movember by Calling for End to Gender-Exclusive Conscription Policies

Matt · 1 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'As millions of men grew mustaches this Movember to raise awareness of men's health, the National Coalition For Men (NCFM) is spotlighting another critical issue: the health and wellbeing of men subjected to involuntary conscription. While many nations continue to impose mandatory military service exclusively on men, a smaller but growing number have extended conscription to women as well. NCFM reaffirms its position: mandatory conscription targeted only at men is discriminatory, outdated, and unjust.

Conscription as a Men's Health Issue

Movember highlights men's unique health challenges — from prostate cancer to mental health.

Male-only conscription policies add another layer:
• Physical health risks: Severe injury, long-term health consequences, and death.
• Mental health burdens: stress, trauma and disruption of family, education, and careers.
• Systemic inequality: reinforces outdated gender roles, placing the burden of national defense squarely on men's shoulders.'

An example of manly heroism and how it is oft-overlooked

Matt · 1 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

I saw this on Facebook. While this man did actually get recognized for his heroic efforts, I thought of men like electrical linemen, underwater pipefitters, underwater welders, and a myriad of other jobs done either exclusively or almost exclusively by men that rarely get recognized and to whom we can thank for keeping modern civilization going. It's really just amazing the degree to which we all owe a subset of men so much for what they do. I'm reminded also of Churchill's famous quote about the RAF: "Never was so much owed by so many to so few." Anyway, here's the story I found on Facebook:

In 1906, one of England's most magnificent cathedrals stood on the edge of catastrophe. Winchester Cathedral, a masterpiece of medieval architecture that had stood for over 800 years, was slowly sinking into the earth. Massive cracks had begun splitting its ancient walls. Chunks of carved stone tumbled from the ceiling during services. Engineers delivered their verdict with grim certainty: without intervention, this irreplaceable piece of history would collapse completely.

The problem lay deep underground, invisible to everyone who walked through the cathedral's soaring Gothic arches. The Norman builders who laid the foundation in 1079 had constructed it on what seemed like solid ground. But beneath the surface lay something treacherous: a thick layer of waterlogged peat, the compressed remains of ancient vegetation from when the River Itchen once flowed through this valley. For centuries, massive beech logs had supported the cathedral's immense weight. Now, after eight hundred years, those timbers were rotting away.

The architect Thomas Jackson and civil engineer Francis Fox were summoned to save the building. Their solution seemed straightforward enough: dig trenches beneath the walls, remove the decaying logs, and replace them with concrete. Simple in theory. Impossible in practice.

The moment workers dug below the water table, the trenches flooded instantly. The peat soil released water faster than any pump could remove it. Every attempt ended the same way: excavated holes filling with murky water within seconds, making conventional construction work utterly impossible. The cathedral couldn't be saved using normal methods. They needed something extraordinary.

Fox had an unconventional idea. If they couldn't keep the water out, perhaps someone could work in it. They needed a diver.

William Walker wasn't looking for glory when he received the call. Born in 1869 to a working-class family in Surrey, he'd trained as a deep-sea diver at Portsmouth Dockyard and made his career in the unglamorous world of underwater construction. He'd worked on docks, tunnels, and harbor projects—difficult, dangerous work that rarely made headlines. When Siebe Gorman Company sent him to Winchester in April 1906, he expected a temporary assignment. Maybe a year at most.

He ended up staying for five and a half years.

Another diver, Rayfield, initially shared the work. But after a year, when it became clear the project would take far longer than anticipated, the company decided to keep only their most dependable man. Walker remained. Every morning, he would put on his diving suit—two hundred pounds of canvas, rubber, copper, and lead that required thirty minutes and multiple assistants to secure properly. The massive copper helmet alone weighed nearly sixty pounds. Lead-lined boots kept him anchored to the bottom. A rubber air hose connected him to the surface, where workers manually pumped oxygen into his helmet throughout each dive.

Then he would descend into absolute darkness.

The water beneath Winchester Cathedral was completely opaque, thick with centuries of accumulated peat and sediment. No light penetrated it. Walker couldn't see his own hands in front of his face. He worked entirely by touch, feeling his way through the submerged trenches six meters below the surface. Imagine doing construction work blindfolded, underwater, wearing equipment that weighed more than most people, while a thousand-year-old building pressed down from above. That was every single day for Walker.

His task was both simple and impossible. Workers above would prepare trenches and bags of concrete. When the trenches flooded, Walker would descend. Working blind in the frigid water, he would remove the last of the rotting timber by hand, then begin placing bags of concrete, one by one, in precise positions to support the walls above. Each bag had to be positioned correctly by feel alone. A mistake could mean disaster.

He worked two four-hour shifts most days, spending up to six hours underwater. The heavy suit took so long to remove that during breaks, he would simply unscrew his helmet, eat lunch, smoke his pipe, and then seal himself back inside. Every weekend, he would cycle seventy miles home to his wife and growing family in South Norwood, then return by train Monday morning to do it all again.

Month after month. Year after year.

The numbers tell a story of almost incomprehensible persistence. By the time Walker finished in September 1911, he had placed 25,800 bags of concrete. 114,900 concrete blocks. 900,000 bricks. Nearly a million bricks, laid one at a time, by hand, in complete darkness, underwater. Every single one positioned by a man who couldn't see what he was doing, who relied entirely on years of experience, muscle memory, and an unwavering commitment to precision.

When journalists asked Walker about the difficulty of the work, he demonstrated the matter-of-fact humility that characterized his entire approach. "It was not difficult," he said. "It was straightforward work, but had to be carefully done." As if spending six years working blind underwater beneath a collapsing cathedral was just another day at the office.

Once Walker completed his underwater foundation work, pumps could finally drain the area without risking the cathedral's collapse. Conventional workers moved in to complete the restoration. The building was saved. King George V personally honored Walker in July 1912, making him a Member of the Royal Victorian Order. Newspapers across Britain celebrated "the diver who saved Winchester Cathedral with his own hands."

Yet despite this recognition, Walker's story gradually faded from public consciousness. He returned to diving work, continuing his career in the same quiet, professional manner he'd always maintained. Six years later, in 1918, William Walker died during the global Spanish flu pandemic. He was forty-nine years old.

For decades, few people beyond Winchester remembered his name. The cathedral stood magnificently restored, but the man who had literally held it up was largely forgotten. It wasn't until 1964—more than fifty years after his work—that a statue was erected inside the cathedral to commemorate his achievement. There's a touching footnote to this tribute: the sculptor was given a photograph to work from, but he mistakenly used the image of engineer Francis Fox in a diving suit instead of Walker himself. The error wasn't discovered until the unveiling. A second, corrected statue by sculptor Glyn Williams now stands in the cathedral, properly honoring Walker.

Today, Walker's diving helmet is displayed in Winchester Cathedral's nave. A pub near the cathedral bears his name. On St. Swithun's Day each year, prayers of thanksgiving are offered for the man who saved the building. His gravestone in Beckenham Cemetery carries an epitaph that captures everything: "The diver who with his own hands saved Winchester Cathedral."

William Walker's story resonates because it represents something increasingly rare: the quiet heroism of someone who simply did the job that needed doing, no matter how difficult, no matter how long it took, no matter how little recognition it might bring. He didn't seek fame. He didn't demand special acknowledgment. He descended into that black water every day because the cathedral needed saving and he had the skills to save it.

We live in an age that celebrates instant success and viral achievement. Walker's story reminds us that some of history's most important work happens slowly, in darkness, known only to the person doing it and perhaps a handful of others. That the foundation beneath the foundation matters just as much as the soaring heights everyone admires.

Winchester Cathedral still stands today, drawing hundreds of thousands of visitors each year who marvel at its Gothic arches and stained glass windows. Most will never think about what lies beneath their feet: nearly a million bricks, placed one at a time by a man working blind in the darkness, holding up history with his own hands.

That's the real miracle of Winchester Cathedral. Not just that it was built, but that when it began to fall, one person cared enough to spend five and a half years of his life saving it. William Walker didn't just save a building. He preserved a piece of human heritage for all the generations that would follow. He became the invisible foundation upon which something beautiful could continue to stand.

And perhaps that's the most powerful kind of legacy: work done so well that no one has to think about it, holding up something greater than yourself, long after you're gone.

Swiss voters reject mandatory national service for women

Matt · 1 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Indeed because we all know vacuuming and loading a dishwasher is just as challenging as mortal combat. Excerpt:

'Swiss voters on Sunday decisively rejected a call to require women to do national service in the military, civil protection teams or other forms, as all men must do already.

Official results, with counting still ongoing in some areas after a referendum, showed that more than half of Switzerland's cantons, or states, had rejected the "citizen service initiative" by wide margins. That meant it was defeated, because proposals need a majority of both voters and cantons to pass.
...
While compulsory military service for women might be seen as "a step toward gender equality," it added, the idea would "place an extra burden on many women, who already shoulder a large part of the unpaid work of raising and caring for children and relatives, as well as household tasks."'

The Bias We Pretend Doesn't Hurt Boys - Part 2

Matt · 2 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When a stereotype harms girls, we mobilize.
When a stereotype harms boys, we rationalize.

Look again at the math example.

The message girls heard—“girls aren’t good at math”—was subtle and narrow, yet the response was sweeping. Grants, new curricula, teacher training, role-model initiatives, national campaigns. Entire systems shifted to make sure girls never internalized even a hint of inferiority.

Necessary? Yes.
But also revealing.

Because when the stereotypes aimed at boys are far harsher—“toxic,” “oppressor,” “privileged,” “dangerous,” “obsolete”—we do nothing. And this is where gynocentrism comes in.

Gynocentrism isn’t hatred of boys; it’s something quieter and harder to notice:
a cultural reflex that centers girls’ and women’s needs as moral priorities, while treating boys’ and men’s needs as less urgent, less sympathetic, or even suspect.'

Reproductive Coercion and Research Omissions

Matt · 6 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This post is the second in a three-part series that followed How Feminist Researchers Lied. Although these pieces were written some time ago, they remain just as relevant today.

The study examined here focuses on “reproductive coercion” — and it’s a striking example of how researchers can deliberately mislead. Incredibly, it makes the preposterous claim that men are the ones “poking holes in condoms.” Despite its weak foundation, the study received massive coverage in the mainstream media and has undoubtedly shaped public perception, reinforcing yet another false narrative about men.'

Up to 64,000 women in UK 'are child-sex offenders'

Matt · 7 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

An old article but still highly relevant, here. Excerpt:

'Child sex abuse by women is significantly more widespread than previously realised, with experts estimating that there could be up to 64,000 female offenders in Britain.

Researchers from the Lucy Faithfull Foundation (LFF), a child protection charity that deals with British female sex offenders, said its studies confirmed that a "fair proportion" of child abusers were women. Donald Findlater, director of research and development, said results indicated that up to 20% of a conservative estimate of 320,000 suspected UK paedophiles were women.'

Liking social media ‘thirst traps’ now grounds for divorce, Turkish court rules

Mastodon · 8 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liking ‘thirst traps’ on social media could be grounds for divorce – in Türkiye, at least.

In a landmark ruling, a Turkish court has determined that ‘liking’ other women’s social media posts can be used as evidence in divorce proceedings.

The Court of Cassation, Türkiye’s highest court, found that a man from the major city of Kayseri, “undermined marital trust” by repeatedly liking other women’s photos online.

Both the husband, identified as S.B, and the wife, H.B, filed for divorce.

She accused her husband of belittling her, failing to provide financial support, and breaching his duty of loyalty by interacting with other women’s posts, according to local reports.'

Is the UN the Global Amplifier of Gynocentrism?

Matt · 8 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades the United Nations has described gender equality as one of its core missions. But when you look closely at where the money goes, what the campaigns say, and who the programs serve, a simple pattern appears:

“Gender equality” at the UN means women’s advancement—not equality for both sexes.

The UN has an entire agency, UN Women, whose mandate is “the empowerment of women and girls.”

There is no equivalent body for men and boys—no UN Men, no program for male mental health, no dedicated fund for fathers, male victims of violence, or boys falling behind in school.'

Brigitte Macron caught calling feminist hecklers ‘stupid bitches’

Matt · 8 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brigitte Macron is facing controversy after describing radical feminists who interrupted a stand-up comedian in a protest over alleged sexual violence as “stupid bitches”.

The French first lady’s outburst, which was captured on video, drew an angry reaction from left-wingers.

Her use of the phrase sales connes — a vulgar insult that translates roughly as “stupid bitches” — was in stark contrast to the highly consensual public image she has cultivated since President Macron took office in 2017.'

What Did Men Do to Deserve This?

Matt · 8 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, Galloway has also become a leading evangelist for a notion that rapidly solidified into conventional wisdom: America's young men are in crisis. "Seldom in recent memory has there been a cohort that's fallen farther, faster," he writes in his new book, "Notes on Being a Man." To make his case, Galloway pulls from a heavily circulated set of statistics. At colleges and universities nationwide, female students outnumber males by about three to two. Among young adults, men are more likely than women to live with their parents; by their mid-thirties, more than fifteen per cent of men still live with their folks, compared to less than nine per cent of women. Men die by suicide at about three and a half times the rate that women do. Men's real wages are lower for the tenth and fiftieth percentiles of earners than they were in 1979. Currently, the unemployment rate among young men with bachelor's degrees between the ages of twenty-three and thirty is close to double that of their female peers.

These numbers have roused bipartisan concern. In March, Governor Gavin Newsom, of California, on the début episode of his new podcast, welcomed the conservative influencer Charlie Kirk, who lamented Gen Z as the "most alcohol-addicted, most drug-addicted, most suicidal, most depressed, most medicated generation in history." And these under-thirties, Kirk said, were receiving a pernicious message: "You're not going to have the same American Dream that your parents would have." He and his fellow conservative organizers "saw this as an opportunity," he added, "especially with young men." Donald Trump won men under age thirty by fifty-six per cent in the 2024 election, up fifteen points from 2020. For these gains, Kirk credited the coalescing electoral power of the right-leaning constellation of podcasters and streamers known as the manosphere, which encompasses libertarian bros, evangelical Christians, and white nationalists.'

GOP lawmaker unveils bill to ensure fathers shoulder 50% of pregnancy expenses

Matt · 9 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Ashley Hinson, R-Iowa, is unveiling a bill called the Supporting Healthy Pregnancy Act that would ensure pregnant mothers get financial support from the father even before their child is born, Fox News Digital learned first.

It's an effort by the Republican Party to affirm its pro-family ideology as Democrats continue to accuse the GOP of being anti-choice while also being unwilling to support women who keep their babies.'

Sabrina Carpenter Reveals Key to Writing Hits: ‘Call Men Stupid in as Many Ways as You Can’

Mastodon · 10 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sabrina Carpenter gave fans and artists alike advice when it comes to writing songs—more specifically, when it comes to writing hits. The popstar, 26, accepted the ‘Hitmaker of the Year’ award on Saturday, December 6th.

In her acceptance speech, given at Variety’s Ninth Annual Hitmakers event, she spoke about her songwriting process and advice to those looking to write music. Her advice included much of what you would imagine a songwriter would say, but she ended with an unexpected dig at men. “Write what speaks to you, write something that only you can write. Write the music you want to listen to yourself. Add the weird chord progression and key change, and call men stupid in as many ways as you can.”'

Domestic violence victims get coerced into debt. New York may create a way out.

Mastodon · 10 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That includes instances of what is known as “coerced” debt, which is when an abuser convinces or forces a victim to take out a loan or line of credit on their behalf. The victim is then responsible for paying off that debt regardless of whether their abuser contributes or not.

The bill, soon to be acted on by Hochul, would allow victims to have that debt removed by creditors, who would then be able to hold their abuser civilly liable for the money owed.'

Disparate Impact: The ‘Greatest Weapon Against Excellence’

Matt · 11 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Google settled a racial bias lawsuit for $50 million.

Merrill Lynch paid $20 million.

Maryland taxpayers will have to pay $3 million to make a racial discrimination suit go away.
...
In our new video, she argues that companies and governments feel forced to pay because of a legal doctrine called “disparate impact.”

“Most people don’t even know what it is!” I say.

“It is their greatest weapon against excellence,” she replies, “and it is an abuse of the spirit of our civil rights laws.”
...
Disparate impact rules say any policy or test in which some races or sexes do better than others is illegal discrimination, even if the policy has nothing to do with race or sex.

“The Maryland State Police wanted to make sure state troopers could read at a very basic level,” says Mac Donald.

But because black applicants got lower scores, the test was ruled racist.

Because women got lower scores on the physical fitness test, the state was also found guilty of sexism.'

Brigitte Macron’s use of sexist slur sparks outrage in France

Mastodon · 11 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brigitte Macron was attending a performance Sunday by Ary Abittan, a stand-up comedian who was accused of rape by a former partner in 2021. Following a three-year investigation, the case was dismissed – a ruling later upheld by French courts.

In a conversation with Brigitte Macron ahead of the show that was captured on camera and briefly published online, the comedian says he feels “scared” of protesters who interrupt his shows.

Brigitte Macron replies: “If there are any stupid b*tches, we’ll kick them out,” before laughing, and insisting Abittan promise not to talk about “the problem” that evening, seemingly referring to the activists.

Activists from the French feminist collective #NousToutes, many wearing masks bearing his image, interrupted the comedian’s Saturday night show.

French government spokesperson Maud Bregeon criticized the activists who protested at Abittan’s show during an appearance on French television on Wednesday morning. She said their actions demonstrated disregard for a decision made by the courts, adding: “That shocks me deeply.”

Asked if Brigitte Macron should apologize for her remarks, Bregeon replied firmly, “no.”'

The AWFL Darwin Awards: Suicidal Empathy as Homicidal Spite

Green · 11 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, by Substack user "Yuri Bezmenov." Excerpts:

"Homicidal spite lurks under the mask of suicidal empathy. Instead of a natural immune response to course correct, the system doubles down on destruction. It is the only way to explain why leftists continue to push harmful agendas, even after decades of failure..."

"The most prominent examples of suicidal empathy and homicidal spite come from AWFLs: Affluent White Female Liberals. Anytime we see an absurd situation, we are likely to find a AWFL behind it. You don't need to be an "expert" psychiatrist to feel their wrath to destroy healthy families and societies. They are spiritual suicide bombers, taking people down with them slowly and passive-aggressively instead of quickly and violently. Perhaps the cocktail of SSRIs and birth control is driving their depression and psychosis. Their misguided mothering instincts are smothering, nagging, and micromanaging our civilization to death."

Boys to be target of UK's violence against women strategy

Mastodon · 12 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Changing attitudes among boys and young men will be at the centre of the government's strategy to tackle violence against women and girls, the BBC has been told.

Next Thursday, Home Secretary Shabana Mahmood will unveil the long-delayed plan about how to combat what ministers call a "national emergency".

It comes after the publication of the strategy has been delayed three times over the last year.

The Labour government has pledged to halve the rate of violence against women and girls over the next decade - but critics have questioned its commitment to combating the problem.

There are also likely to be concerns as to why the strategy is being published on the day Parliament breaks up for its Christmas holiday.

BBC News has been told the violence against women and girls (VAWG) strategy will be built around three goals: preventing radicalisation of young men, stopping abusers, and supporting victims.

Over the coming week, the government will announce a policy blitz to tackle what government sources have called "the scourge of violence that has left the lives of women and girls shattered".

As part of the strategy, ministers will focus on prevention and tackling the root causes of radicalisation of young men in their schools, homes and online. They will work with teachers to challenge misogyny and promote healthy relationships.

Government sources say more support will be provided to parents so they can intervene early.'

Drones being used to tackle violence against women

Mastodon · 12 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the people of Swindon enjoy a night out this festive season, a drone will often be keeping a watchful eye on proceedings.

Wiltshire Police is using the technology as part of Project Vigilant, an operation which focuses on tackling violence against women.

The drone will be flown over key areas, such as Swindon's Old Town, to look out for suspicious behaviour.

Det Insp Troy Smith said: "It's pretty much the same as a helicopter, but a lot smaller. We want to make our streets a hostile environment for sexual predators. Women have the right to enjoy their nights out untroubled by these individuals."'

I've Seen Friends And Family Members Get Swooped Up By The Manosphere, And As A Liberal Man, I Hate It But See The Allure

Mastodon · 12 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When people tell young men that they are inherently bad, or that masculinity is a problem, we are sending a message that they are evil by nature. It will only cause that person to either internalize hatred, give up on trying to improve, resent the people telling them they're inherently flawed, or lead them to seek out people or content that celebrates them instead. It also empowers men who are actually evil, because telling them they are naturally this way gives them an excuse to lean into misogynistic behavior without accountability.'

When Women Hate Men, It’s Called Survival

Mastodon · 12 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If someone punches you in the face and you shout, “I hate you,” that’s not the same as the punch. Your anger is a reaction to harm. Their violence is the harm.

Misogyny is the punch. Misandry is the bruise that heals into self-protection.

When men hate women, it manifests as control — laws, violence, pay gaps, harassment, domination. When women say they hate men, it manifests as fear, exhaustion, and a refusal to play nice anymore.

One maintains power. The other resists it.'
...
When women express misandry, men clutch their pearls as though civilisation itself is under attack. They seem genuinely frightened — but not of violence. Of irrelevance.

Because when a woman says, “I hate men,” what she usually means is, “I hate what men have done to me, to my friends, to my mother, to the world.” It’s not a random act of bigotry. It’s cumulative trauma turned into language. It’s shorthand for centuries of fear and exhaustion.

When a man hates women, women die. When a woman hates men, she stops returning texts.

That is the difference.'

"8,000 Years Ago, Women..."

Matt · 12 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'8,000 years ago, 17 women reproduced for every 1 man. 90% of male bloodlines vanished—not through war, plague, or disaster, but through female choice and economics. This is the story of the Neolithic Bottleneck.

Discover how the agricultural revolution created the most extreme genetic selection event in human history, why Y-chromosome diversity collapsed while female lineages stayed intact, and how this ancient pattern still shapes modern dating, wealth inequality, and reproductive dynamics today.'

UK: Boys to be taught to respect women and girls as part of curriculum

Mastodon · 13 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All boys will be taught how to respect women and girls as part of the school curriculum under government plans to “deploy the full power of the state” to crack down on male violence and misogyny.

Teachers will give lessons on how children should challenge misogynistic comments and behaviour and to promote “healthy relationships”, The Times has been told.

Official government advice will also help teachers and parents to spot signs that children are being radicalised by online misogynists such as Andrew Tate and how they can intervene early.

A Home Office source insisted that ministers had taken time to make the final strategy “as ambitious and bold as possible — to fight the tide of violence, stop abuse and protect victims.”

They added: “Put together, the strategy will deploy the full power of the state to introduce the largest crackdown to stop violence perpetrated against women and girls in British history.”

Prevention will target the behaviour and attitudes of young men in order to stop the root causes of radicalisation in their “schools, homes and online”, a government source said.

An internal Home Office report last year concluded that an online “manosphere” is helping to fuel extreme misogyny and needs to be stopped in its tracks through official government policy.

The violence against women and girls strategy will aim to fix this “patchwork” of practices in schools by providing nationwide statutory guidance to schools, teachers and parents so it becomes a routine part of the curriculum.

It is also understood that schools will be required to introduce a new peer mentoring scheme that will train boys to support classmates in challenging unacceptable attitudes and behaviour.'

Changing the Norms to fit the Narrative: CMNI

Matt · 13 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The last study we will examine in this series will be the Conformity to Masculine Norms Inventory (CMNI). (Development of the Conformity to Masculine Norms Inventory published in Psychology of Men & Masculinity, Vol 4(1), Jan 2003, 3-25.)7

This inventory purports to measure the conformity or lack of conformity to what it considers the masculine norms for this culture.'

Male Uber And Lyft Drivers Sue Over Women-Only Ride Options

Mastodon · 14 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Uber's assumption that male drivers—like plaintiffs who have garnered stellar ratings and extensive ride histories—cannot provide female passengers adequate 'peace of mind' and 'comfort' is rooted in stereotypical notions that the Unruh Act is designed to root out of society," the attorneys argue in the Uber complaint. Uber and Lyft have not yet responded to requests for comments on the lawsuit.

John Banzhaf, a law professor at the George Washington University Law School and an expert on gender discrimination cases (though not involved in this lawsuit), believes the male drivers have a strong chance of winning the case. One additional reason, Banzhaf notes, is that women may feel safer with a male driver in some situations. For instance, a woman entering a dangerous neighborhood may feel more comfortable with a man behind the wheel. In that situation, Banzhaf explains, "I understand that some women will ask the driver to remain at the curb and watch over them until they walk into the building. They might feel more comfortable with a male driver." Yet the apps only allow women to select other women drivers.'

'Brain scars': The hidden forms of sexism that harm women's health

Mastodon · 14 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The effects on women's health, unsurprisingly, can be consequential and not always immediately visible. A large study analysing over 7,800 brain scans across 29 countries found that societal gender imbalances physically change women's brains. The research showed that women living in countries with higher gender inequality had thinner cortical thickness in brain regions associated with emotional control, resilience and stress-related disorders such as depression and post-traumatic stress disorder.'

UK: Men who correct women over any disagreement could face disciplinary action under new Green party rules

Mastodon · 14 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who correct women over any disagreement could be hauled before disciplinarians under plans being weighed up by the Green Party.

Leaders are considering broadening the party's definition of misogyny to the point that 'any disagreement' could lead to men facing sanction.

The proposals are set out in a leaked 53-page dossier on legal and reputational risk prepared by its own lawyers.

It says the Green Party Council was 'very close' to adopting a document titled Guidance on Identifying Misogyny and Sexism as part of its ethics framework.

According to the report, seen by the Telegraph, the draft guidance listed 'being corrected' as an example of misogynistic behaviour experienced by women, a definition the lawyers warned was so expansive it could 'justify any disagreement between a man and a woman as a sanctionable disciplinary offence'.'

Teacher loses her job after video surfaces of ‘egregious’ abuse of her son, sheriff says

Matt · 15 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A teacher in Alabama was arrested and fired after a disturbing video went viral that showed her allegedly hitting her son more than 20 times with a belt.

Nicole Staples, 44, was released from Metro Jail on Wednesday evening after posting a $7,500 bond.

Staples was arrested earlier that afternoon and charged with willful abuse of a child under 18 after the video circulated on social media.

Her older son, Jackson Staples, who no longer lives at home, said he received the video on Tuesday and was alarmed.'

Demonizing Men with False Data on Sexual Abuse

Matt · 16 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Casting men as abusers is essential to reconstructing society in the image of express social justice. If men as a class are natural abusers and women as a class are naturally abused, then a justice system based on individual rights makes no sense; differing systems of justice must address the different classes that are based on identity. Traditional marriage and family become sources of cruelty and danger. Every man should be approached with suspicion by every woman.

This vicious and divisive approach to social relations has been propped up by data and studies, most of which issue from ideologically biased academia or institutes. The statistics must be reopened with fresh eyes. Better yet, they should be replaced by honest research.'

UFC star Ilia Topuria claims he’s being extorted with ‘false allegations of domestic abuse’

Matt · 16 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ilia Topuria is stepping away from fighting in the UFC as he grapples with some serious problems.

The lightweight champion issued a statement on Monday, claiming he’s facing an extortion plot centered around “false allegations of domestic abuse.”

“Over the past several weeks, I have made the difficult decision to temporarily step away from defending my title,” the 28-year-old said in a statement posted to social media. “This was not a decision I took lightly. However, when circumstances arise that threaten your personal integrity, your family, and your reputation, there comes a point when you must address them directly.'

The Study That Was Twisted: How CNN Turned “Exposure” Into “Toxic Masculinity”

Matt · 16 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In October, 2025, CNN ran a commentary by communication professor Kara Alaimo claiming that boys exposed to “digital masculinity” online have lower self-esteem, are lonelier, and that such content fuels offline violence against women. The problem? None of that is what the data actually show.

Alaimo based her argument on a Common Sense Media survey titled “Boys in the Digital Wild: Online Culture, Identity, and Well-Being.” After reading both the CNN piece and the full 88-page report, the contrast couldn’t be sharper. What she presented as a story of crisis looks, in the actual data, like a story of ordinary adolescent life — with a few predictable patterns and a lot of healthy boys.

What the Survey Really Found

The 2025 report surveyed 1,017 boys ages 11–17 across the U.S., asking about their online habits, exposure to “masculinity-related” content (posts about fighting, fitness, dating, or making money), and indicators of well-being such as self-esteem and loneliness.'

Mothers Push Gender Stereotypes More Than Fathers, Study Reveals

Matt · 16 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender stereotype that says “boys don’t cry” is being perpetuated implicitly by mothers more than fathers, a new University of Guelph study has revealed.

Prof. Kristel Thomassin found mothers may be more gender-biased than fathers when it comes to encouraging or discouraging their child’s expression of sadness and anger.

However, mothers likely aren’t even aware they have these gender biases.

“We found that on an implicit level, moms tend to show a bias, and this bias considers girls expressing these emotions to be more favourable than boys expressing the same emotions,” said the psychology professor and lead author of the study.

The Globe and Mail covered the research, and articles also appeared on CTVNews.ca and CBC KW.

Thomassin thought mothers and fathers would be more accepting of daughters showing sadness than sons and more accepting of sons showing anger than daughters.'

Women who hate men: a comparative analysis across extremist Reddit communities

Matt · 18 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The performed analyses reveal that no systematic differences can be devised across the misogynistic and misandric communities. This suggests that, in addressing the phenomenon of online gendered hate speech, both male-to-female and female-to-male perspectives should be taken into account, thus recognizing equal importance to both misandry and misogyny.'

UK: Teachers to be trained to spot early signs of misogyny in boys

Mastodon · 18 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teachers will be given training to spot the signs of misogyny and tackle it in the classroom as part of the government's long-awaited strategy to halve violence against women and girls within the next decade.

The plans - which focus on preventing the radicalisation of young men - are due to be unveiled on Thursday, after being pushed back three times this year.

Pupils will be taught about issues such as consent, the dangers of sharing intimate images, how to identify positive role models, and to challenge unhealthy myths about women and relationships.

The £20m package will also include a new helpline for teenagers to get support for concerns about abuse in their own relationships.

The government hopes that by tackling the early roots of misogyny, it will prevent young men from becoming violent abusers.

Under the new plans, schools will send high-risk students to get extra care and support, including behavioural courses to tackle their prejudice against women and girls.

"Every parent should be able to trust that their daughter is safe at school, online and in her relationships, but too often, toxic ideas are taking hold early and going unchallenged," Prime Minister Sir Keir Starmer said about the new measures.

"This government is stepping in sooner - backing teachers, calling out misogyny, and intervening when warning signs appear to stop harm before it starts."

The taxpayer will foot £16m of the bill, while the government says it is working closely with philanthropists and other partners on an innovation fund for the remaining £4m.

Nearly 40% of teenagers in relationships are victims of abuse, domestic abuse charity Reducing the Risk has said.

Online influencers are partly blamed for feeding this, with nearly one in five boys aged 13 to 15 said to hold a positive view of the self-proclaimed misogynist Andrew Tate, according to a YouGov poll.

In response to the government plans, some teachers said schools were already doing the kind of work the measures outlined.

"While we welcome any initiative that prioritises healthy relationships and consent education, it's important to recognise that schools like Beacon Hill Academy in Dudley have been delivering this work effectively for years," Principal Sukhjot Dhami said.

"The challenge isn't starting from scratch: it's ensuring that this £20m pounds is spent wisely and in partnership with schools already leading the way."'

UK: Boys aged 11 to be sent on anti-misogyny courses

Mastodon · 18 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys as young as 11 will be sent on anti-misogyny courses designed to stamp out violence against women and girls, under government plans.

Pupils who show harmful behaviour will be signed up to “behaviour change programmes” in schools. The courses will be “focused on challenging deep-rooted misogynist influences”.

Sir Keir Starmer said “every parent should be able to trust that their daughter is safe at school, online and in her relationships” as the government announced its long-awaited strategy to halve violence against women and girls.

Jess Phillips, the safeguarding minister, pledged to “deploy the full power of the state to introduce the largest crackdown to stop violence perpetrated against women and girls”.

The programmes could cover image-based abuse, peer pressure, coercive behaviour, online harassment and stalking, and the fact that pornography does not reflect real relationships.

The sessions would be led by teachers or external providers alongside normal lessons, and are due to be piloted in secondary schools. There is the option to extend the courses to primaries.'

Men's Strengths Are Treated as Flaws

Matt · 18 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You see this most clearly with emotions. Men have a distinct, consistent way of handling feelings. It's not random, and it's not a flaw — it's a pattern rooted in biology, social roles, and testosterone. But rather than recognizing these differences, the modern lens tends to treat the male way as "deficient."

Women talk to process.
Men act or withdraw to process.

Women regulate through expression.
Men regulate through doing.

Yet the male way is almost never acknowledged as legitimate. Instead, it's measured against a female template — and found wanting.

And once you see this pattern, you start noticing it everywhere.'

Sexism lessons could accidentally make boys 'more misogynistic'

Mastodon · 19 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"If you have a female teacher at the top of a classroom waving her finger in a condescending way at boys, saying, 'You're wrong for feeling this way' or, 'You're guilty by association', that is going to push young men towards more misogynistic behaviours," he said.

"I think you need good male role models; I had one, which was my father.

"He taught me responsibility, accountability and duty serving the community but not all young men have that.

"They have fathers who are absent, abusive or simply not competent people."

James added that any lessons will have to be "done properly" or the consequences will be severe.'

'Serial killer' admits fatally overdosing 4 men who met her for sex

Matt · 19 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. "'Serial killer'", with single quotes, implying what? That she isn't? Excerpt:

'A Columbus woman whom Ohio Attorney General Dave Yost called a "serial killer" admitted on Dec. 19 to causing the fatal overdoses of four men who had met her for sex.

Rebecca Auborn, 36, pleaded guilty to four counts of murder and one count of felonious assault in Franklin County Common Pleas Court. She is scheduled to appear at a sentencing hearing Feb. 20.

Columbus police arrested and charged Auborn in 2023 in the four overdose deaths, which occurred at Northeast Side hotels in Columbus.'

Bias Against Men and Boys in Mental Health Research

Matt · 20 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A review of bias against males in mental health research.

ICMB Unveils High-Impact, Cost-Efficient Strategies to Reduce Male Disparities

Matt · 20 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The International Council for Men and Boys (ICMB) today unveiled a comprehensive policy framework of 18 targeted reforms to address widespread structural disadvantages faced by men and boys. Grounded in international research, empirical studies, and tested practices, these reforms may avoid costly new programs in favor of low-cost, high-impact policy changes.

From family law and education to health equity and criminal justice, ICMB calls on governments, institutions, and civil society to act decisively. Each initiative is linked to one or more of 12 identified male-disadvantage areas, including fatherlessness, educational issues, suicide, legal bias, and partner abuse. Relevant disparities are listed after each strategy in italics.'

‘Online Violence’ Campaign Reveals Rampant Dishonesty at United Nations

Matt · 21 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Samantha Wall recently was sentenced to 28 months in prison for her “unrelenting barrage of [online] abuse designed to maximise fear and distress.” One of her targets was UK businessman Brad Burton, who revealed Wall’s “fabricated accusations calling me a convicted violent offender, fraud, stalker, have tarnished my name, eroded trust and devastated my family’s sense of security."

The fact that females often are the perpetrators of online abuse has been well documented:'

SU reluctantly registers controversial women’s soc

Matt · 21 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cambridge University’s Students’ Union (SU) has sought to distance itself from a gender-critical women’s society after registering the group, saying it was legally obliged to do so despite believing the society “contradicts” its ethos.

Founded in October by three students, the Cambridge University Society of Women (CUSW) describes itself as a group offering a “single-sex environment for women” at the university, with its constitution defining women as “adult human beings belonging to the female sex class,” thereby excluding transgender women.

Over the weekend, the society formally registered with the SU, allowing it to access benefits including Freshers’ Fair stalls.

However, hours after registration, the SU published two explanatory statements on its website – titled ‘The registering of gender-critical societies’ and ‘What role does the Students’ Union play in approving societies’.

Writing “in response to widespread student concerns regarding the rights of our trans students”, its student communities and societies officer, Olivia Ledger, said the SU was bound by its statutory obligations.'

The Lost Generation

Matt · 21 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But of course, by 2016, we were already too late.

The showrunner emailed us back apologetically. “I had initially thought I might be able to bring you guys on,” he wrote, “but in the end it wasn’t possible.”

We met with the executive anyway—a Gen-X white guy—who told us how much he loved our pilot. But the writers room was small, he explained apologetically, and the higher-level writers were all white men. They couldn’t have an all-white-male room. Maybe, if the show got another season, they’d be able to bring us on.

They never did.'

‘Too White and Male’ — Woke Museum Issues Guide to ‘Decolonising’ Father Christmas

Mastodon · 22 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Sun reports Brighton and Hove Museums in the UK published a blog post on its website suggesting Santa should work alongside his elves on the presents production line to show they are equals.

Mrs Christmas should also emerge from the shadows and take her place at his side at a time when Christmas is being reassessed in many parts of the world as a symbol of everything it was never designed to be part of.

The group, granted £900,000 (U.S.$ 1,207,915) of taxpayer cash in October, says Santa’s “naughty and nice” list teaches children the “coloniser has the power to judge all people” and the time has come to right the wrongs of centuries of disinformation and hurtful attitudes.

The post was written by the museum’s Joint Head of Culture Change, Simone LaCorbinière and defies historical records which show Father Christmas first appeared in English folklore as a spirit of winter and universal good cheer in the 15th century.'

The Global Feminist Crusade Has Begun to Collapse

Matt · 22 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week scholar Carrie Gress issued a stinging rebuke of feminist ideology, charging the movement has evolved into a secular “megachurch” with its own doctrines, rituals, and sacraments (1). Like all movements grounded in Marxist ideology, Gress’ comments highlight how the global feminist crusade is now collapsing under the weight of its ideological excess, bloated bureaucracies, and anti-democratic policies.

The collapse began two years ago when Argentinian President Javier Milei dismantled his country’s Ministry of Women (2). In May of this year, Professor David Geary published an exposé revealing the fraudulent numbers behind the feminist-driven Global Gender Gap Index (3). In October, Helen Andrews published her acclaimed article, The Great Feminization, which exposed the disastrous effects of the feminist take-over of media outlets, schools, and other organizations (4).'

A feminist tragedy

Matt · 23 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Saw this on Facebook and thought, "How tragic. Yet it is consistent with how ideologies operate; they use people. When those people start thinking a bit too much for themselves, they end them, sometimes literally.

She could read at two, became a lawyer at seventeen, and was leading Spain's sexual revolution at eighteen—until her mother decided the sculpture had a fatal flaw and destroyed her own creation.

Madrid, 1914. Aurora Rodríguez Carballeira had a plan. Not a motherhood plan—an experiment. She wanted to prove that with precise control over genetics, environment, and education, she could create the perfect woman. A woman who would lead Spain into a feminist future. A woman who would prove female intellectual superiority.

So Aurora chose her "physiological collaborator" with scientific precision—a brilliant military priest named Alberto Pallás who could never legally claim the child. Three calculated encounters. Then Aurora moved to Madrid, pregnant with her masterpiece.

On December 9, 1914, Hildegart Rodríguez Carballeira was born.
Aurora set her alarm to wake every hour during pregnancy, changing positions so blood would flow uniformly to the fetus. After birth, she designed every moment of Hildegart's life with obsessive detail.

At two years old, Hildegart was reading fluently. At three, she was writing letters. At four, she could type. By eight, she spoke four languages—Spanish, German, French, and English.

At eleven years old, Hildegart was giving public lectures on feminism and female sexuality.

Think about that. Most eleven-year-olds are navigating middle school crushes and homework. Hildegart was standing before adult audiences, lecturing on women's rights and sexual autonomy in 1920s Spain—one of the most conservative Catholic societies in Europe.

At thirteen, she enrolled in law school at Complutense University of Madrid. At seventeen, she graduated—the youngest lawyer in Spain.
Then she kept going. She enrolled in medical school to understand contraception. She began writing.

By eighteen, Hildegart had published thirteen books and over 130 articles on sexual reform, women's rights, birth control, and social justice. Her pamphlets sold 8,000 copies in a week. She founded and edited Sexus, Spain's first journal devoted to sexual subjects.

In March 1932, at age seventeen, Hildegart became secretary of the Spanish League for Sexual Reform. The president was Dr. Gregorio Marañón, one of Spain's most respected physicians. But Hildegart was the driving force—organizing conferences, establishing birth control clinics, corresponding with the world's leading intellectuals.

Margaret Sanger, founder of Planned Parenthood, received Hildegart's letters and wrote in astonishment: "I loved the jumps she made! Like a race horse run wild."

Havelock Ellis, the father of modern sexology, called Hildegart "one of the wonders of the world" and nicknamed her "The Red Virgin"—for her socialist beliefs and her virginity, which her mother strictly enforced.
H.G. Wells met Hildegart during a Madrid visit and was so impressed he invited her to London to work as his secretary. He saw something others missed—not just brilliance, but desperation. Wells was reportedly concerned about Aurora's control and wanted to get Hildegart away from her mother.

That invitation terrified Aurora.

Because Aurora's experiment was working too well. Hildegart wasn't just brilliantâ€"she was becoming independent. She was developing her own political views, questioning orthodox Marxism, gravitating toward anarchist thought. She had published an essay titled "Was Marx mistaken? Has Socialism failed?"

Worse, Hildegart wanted to leave. She may have fallen in love—sources mention an unnamed man. She told people she intended to separate from her mother. Aurora had threatened suicide in response.

For eighteen years, Aurora had controlled every aspect of Hildegart's life. She accompanied her daughter everywhere. She monitored her correspondence, approved her activities, forbade anything that might "distract from her work."

Hildegart had been shaped, molded, perfected. She existed not as a person but as a project. Aurora's redemption of womankind. Aurora's proof of concept. Aurora's living sculpture.

And now the sculpture wanted to walk away.

Aurora couldn't allow it. If Hildegart left, what did that make Aurora? Not a visionary mother creating feminist leadership—just an obsessive woman who'd spent two decades controlling a daughter who wanted freedom.
On the night of June 9, 1933, Aurora sent the maid out to walk the dog.
Then she took a revolver, walked into Hildegart's bedroom, and shot her daughter four times while she slept—three times in the head, once in the chest.

Hildegart Rodríguez Carballeira died at eighteen years old. She was planning birth control clinics in three Spanish cities. She was organizing an international conference. She was working on a dissertation on sexual criminology. She was editing a three-volume work on eugenics and birth control that Ellis believed would be "the greatest work done" on the subject.

All of it ended with four gunshots in the dark.

Aurora gave herself up to police. At her trial, she was calm, collected, showing almost no emotion except once sniffing a pot of red carnations. She claimed that H.G. Wells and Havelock Ellis were trying to recruit Hildegart into an international spy network.

When asked why she killed her daughter, Aurora explained with chilling clarity:

"The sculptor, after discovering the most minimal imperfection in his work, destroys it."

She felt no remorse. She said repeatedly she would do it again. Hildegart had become imperfect by desiring independence. Aurora had full ownership of her creation. She had the right to end it.

In May 1934, Aurora was sentenced to twenty-six years in prison. In 1935, she was transferred to Ciempozuelos mental asylum, diagnosed with paranoia and schizophrenia. She received privileged treatment—a larger private room, a pet cat, friendly relationships with nuns.

She died of cancer on December 28, 1955, at seventy-six years old, buried in a mass grave during Franco's regime. Until 1977, people believed she'd been secretly executed during the Spanish Civil War. In reality, she'd spent twenty-two years in an asylum, never regretting what she'd done.

Hildegart's story nearly disappeared. The Spanish League for Sexual Reform collapsed after her death. Franco's dictatorship suppressed memory of Spain's progressive Second Republic. Hildegart's books went out of print.
Not until the 1970s did interest revive. A 1977 film, "Mi hija Hildegart," reintroduced her story. In 2024, Spain finally issued a stamp honoring her as a pioneering writer and feminist.

Today, scholars study Hildegart as a tragic figure caught between genius and control, between her mother's obsessive vision and her own emerging identity.

Margaret Sanger kept Hildegart's photograph in her office for years after her death. Havelock Ellis wrote that receiving news of her murder was one of the greatest shocks of his life—"Mother & daughter were devoted to each other," he'd thought.

That's the most chilling part. Aurora did love Hildegart. She loved her the way a sculptor loves marble—as raw material for creating something magnificent. She loved her creation, not her child.

And when that creation developed desires of her own, sought life beyond the blueprint, wanted to exist as a person rather than a project—Aurora chose to destroy rather than release.

Think about what Hildegart might have accomplished. At eighteen, she'd already contributed more to women's rights than most people do in a lifetime. She'd established Spain's first birth control clinics. She'd connected Spanish feminism to the international movement. She'd written thirteen books challenging conservative Catholic sexual morality.
She'd corresponded with the world's leading reformers as an equal, not a curiosity. She'd proven that women's minds were as powerful as men's. She'd done all of this before most people finish college.

Her descendan...wait. There are no descendants. Aurora made sure of that.
There are only questions. What conferences might Hildegart have organized? What books might she have written? How might Spanish feminism have developed differently with her leadership? Would she have survived the Spanish Civil War? Would Franco's regime have imprisoned her anyway for her progressive beliefs?

We'll never know. Because Aurora decided her daughter existed to fulfill a vision, not to live a life. Because love without autonomy is possession. Because creating someone "perfect" means denying them the right to become themselves.

Hildegart Rodríguez Carballeira was born to be a symbol. She died trying to become human.

Her mother ensured she'd be remembered as the former—frozen at eighteen, brilliant and tragic, the experiment that succeeded until it didn't, the sculpture destroyed because it dared to have a heartbeat.

Wikipedia on her here.

India: Parliament Set to Debate National Commission for Men Bill: A Landmark Proposal

Matt · 23 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Rajya Sabha on December 5, 2025, witnessed the introduction of a private member's bill seeking to establish a National Commission for Men (NCM). The bill presented by MP Dr Ashok Kumar Mittal aims to create a statutory body that would address grievances and rights-based issues faced by men across India.

The proposed commission would examine existing laws and policies, investigate grievances filed by men, and recommend remedial measures. Proponents argue that just as there are dedicated mechanisms like a women's commission for women's issues, men too need a formal platform to ensure fair treatment, particularly in cases related to false accusations, misuse of gender-specific laws, and mental health distress.'

Florida Woman Accused of Murdering Her Two Ex-Husbands on Same Day

Mastodon · 23 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'December 17 was allegedly a very busy day for Susan Erica Avalon, a 51-year-old resident of Citrus County, Florida. Police say she murdered not one, but two of her ex-husbands.

The sordid tale begins last Wednesday in Bradenton, a city about 50 miles south of Tampa, where police responded to calls about a shooting in a residential neighborhood and found a 54-year-old man suffering from a gunshot wound to the abdomen, reported the Bradenton Herald.

The man, whose name has been withheld in compliance with Florida law protecting the identities of crime victims, was transported to a local hospital, where he died later that evening. He was able to briefly speak with police and when asked who could have shot him, he answered “possibly my ex-wife.”'

Hate Speech: 24 Groups Call for Ban on ‘Toxic Masculinity’

Matt · 23 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twenty-four organizations around the world are today calling for classification of the phrase, “toxic masculinity,” as hate speech. The organizations consider “toxic masculinity” to be a slur that is inaccurate, hurtful, and harmful. The groups are calling for print media, social media, and publications to eliminate use of this offensive phrase.

The 24 organizations are located in nine countries in Australia, Europe, the Middle East, and North America – see listing, below.'

How Women's Studies Rewrote Reality

Matt · 25 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A very good discussion about how WST classes have been purposefully indictrinating young women into hating men.

The diversity overcorrection in the workplace

Matt · 27 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Everyone in media, academia and entertainment knew it was happening. A number of them had qualms. Almost none spoke up. And now that someone has said something, many are pretending they didn't see it happen with their own eyes. This is incredible, in every sense of the word.

I am talking about how for years, at many institutions, there was a hiring preference for anyone but White, straight men. As Jacob Savage argues convincingly in a recent essay for Compact magazine, this most affected one group: younger White men who hadn't had time to gain the skills and experience that might have compensated for their melanin deficiency.'

The (Female) Elephant in the Room

Green · 27 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Full article is on Janice Fiamengo's Substack. Quote:

Summarizing the results of many surveys, Clark and Winegard demonstrate that while a majority of men favor free speech and the advancement of knowledge over emotional comfort, a majority of women prefer conformity, safety, and the protection of victim groups' feelings. Not all women are indifferent to the traditional underpinnings of western civilization (and not all men support those underpinnings), but the general trends are clear.

Women are significantly more likely than men to support the cancellation of controversial speakers or the suppression of controversial research.

Women also tend to favor the existence of snitch lines to report people who cause offence. Women are more supportive than men of diversity quotas that exclude white men from consideration for prizes, positions, and promotions. ...

But rather than summon readers to the barricades over such findings, the Quillette authors fail to express even moderate misgivings; ... Asserting that both sides are pursuing worthy goals, the authors downplay the shock value of the findings, which show that women are, overall, less interested in truth and accuracy than men are. Imagine assessing such a finding as anything but catastrophic. Imagine calling the disregard for truth moral.

https://fiamengofile.substack.com/p/the-female-elephant-in-the-room

Too much estrogen and not enough testosterone: The Church has become impotent

Green · 27 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Full article is available on Courageous Lion's Substack. Quote:

Three books to consider to better understand why real MEN don't want to be seen in a church these days.

First I would like to mention The Church Impotent: The Feminization of Christianity by Leon Podles

Why don't men go to church anymore? Why are the most common traits of the modern Church doves and quilts and little old ladies? … When divorced from masculinity, the Church emasculated fades into universalism and quietism, the effects of which run rampant through the Western Church of today. In "The Church Impotent," Dr. Leon Podles examines, with meticulous scholarship, three aspects of Christianity through which its virility might be restored.

Next on the list we have Why Men Hate Going to Church by David Murrow

"Church is boring." "It's irrelevant." "It's full of hypocrites." You've heard the excuses—now learn the real reasons men and boys are fleeing churches of every kind, all over the world, and what we can do about it.

And lastly we have Muscular Christianity: Manhood and Sports in Protestant America, 1880-1920 by Clifford Putney

Dissatisfied with a Victorian culture focused on domesticity and threatened by physical decline in sedentary office jobs, American men in the late nineteenth century sought masculine company in fraternal lodges and engaged in exercise to invigorate their bodies. One form of this new manly culture, developed out of the Protestant churches, was known as muscular Christianity. In this fascinating study, Clifford Putney details how Protestant leaders promoted competitive sports and physical education to create an ideal of Christian manliness.

Why Women Get Away With Narcissism (3 Patterns You'll Recognize)

Green · 27 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Another excellent video Why Women Get Away With Narcissism (3 Patterns You'll Recognize) created by Hannah Spier, MD. Quote:

We talk a lot about narcissistic men, we're told how to spot them, we're told how to deal with them endlessly. ... So, as a therapist, I can spot a narcissist from a mile away. ... This fixation on the grandiose, loud caricature of the narcissist has hidden a much more common type, the type that doesn't dominate but suffers, the female narcissist*.*

And so today, we're going to go through three concrete examples of how you where you can see this in your daily life.

The first example is the striving for certain mental health labels*. ... And I say certain because the narcissism reveals itself in the type of labels, the type of diagnosis they seek. No one wears clinical depression or the a plain anxiety as a badge of honor. Instead, the favorites are* ADHD*, as we've talked about before,* autism*, as we've talked about, and the ever expanding category of* trauma responses*. Notice how they are neurodedevelopmental.*

"I was born this way" or "traumabased," "something someone did this to me." And with that, they place the origin outside of the self*. It offers conveniently no concrete route to treatment and also conveniently* shifts the burden of adaptation onto everybody else*. So schools and workplaces must accommodate partners. They have to just adjust and therapy becomes an endless program of validation, safety and self-care rather than meaningful change.* So, a woman who's simply neurotic and sensitive to rejection because of that, she'll attribute every interpersonal wobble to a trauma response.

Full video: Why Women Get Away With Narcissism (3 Patterns You'll Recognize)

A Public Warning

Matt · 27 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, society has rightly amplified the voices of women and girls in the fight against gender-based violence and discrimination. This struggle is necessary and long overdue. However, a dangerous imbalance is quietly growing—one where the abuse, mistreatment, and violation of the rights of men and boys is increasingly ignored, excused, or laughed off, largely under the false assumption that “men can handle it” or that “the law is always on the side of women.”

This mindset is not only unjust—it is dangerous.
A recent disturbing incident, where two ladies allegedly refused to pay an Uber driver and went further to assault him, is a clear reflection of how some individuals have grown bold in abusing men, confident that the system will either protect them or look the other way. This was not merely a disagreement over fare; it was an act of violence, humiliation, and entitlement. Had the roles been reversed, the public outrage and legal response would have been swift and unforgiving.'

2026 The Year of Men

Matt · 29 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine that. 2026 becomes the year of men — a year when the conversation shifts from accusation to understanding. For the first time in half a century, men are discussed not as a problem to fix but as people to know. Their genius, their quirks, their flaws, and their quiet strengths are spoken of with the same nuance once reserved for others. College campuses devote programs to exploring men's lives — their needs, their distinct ways of solving problems, their inner drives. Professors begin to ask questions that once felt off-limits: How have we misunderstood men? What happens when we stop pathologizing masculine traits and start appreciating them for what they are?

The change begins almost accidentally. A viral documentary follows several men through their daily lives — a father fighting for custody, a veteran mentoring fatherless boys, a young man navigating college under a cloud of suspicion.The film ignites something. People start talking about the thick wall of stereotype threat that has been built around men for the last fifty years, and how it quietly shapes everything — from the classroom to the courtroom. The wall doesn't fall overnight, but it begins to crack.'

Yet Another Tale of DEI: Harvard, James Hankins: Why I'm Leaving Harvard

Green · 29 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Another article in Compact magazine describing rampant DEI at universities: Why I'm Leaving Harvard (paywalled):

"The best student at Harvard … was rejected from all the graduate programs to which he applied."

"I was told informally by a member of the Harvard admissions committee that “that” (meaning admitting a white male) was “not happening this year."

"It is hard to avoid the impression that, whether through hostility or neglect, Western history is being phased out or allowed to die on the vine at Harvard."

"To hope for a change in sentiment in our leading universities … would be a triumph of hope over experience… For now, a better hope lies in building new institutions unencumbered by the corruption and self-hatred that infect the old"

https://x.com/i/status/2005629442593546458

https://www.compactmag.com/article/why-im-leaving-harvard/ (paywalled)

In 2023, the same professor wrote an article in the WSJ about Claudine Gay:

https://x.com/i/status/1740168620930715957

"Men are better artists than women": video essay by J.J. Davis

Green · 31 December 2025 · Archived copy · Original

Julia James Davis at the War On Beauty channel explains that Men are better artists than women. Quotes:

Over time, I've come to believe that this is not the reason that there's not great women artists. It's just that simply men are naturally better at the creative act. and actually that the creative act in itself is essentially male, but also that women serve an incredibly important function in the art made by men. And this natural synergy between men and women in the arts with men as the doer and the woman as the muse is exactly what generated incredible beauty in our world.

But in our contemporary society, having this opinion is seen as just flat-out wrong.

So, how I got onto this topic in the first place? Well, as usual, I was scrolling social media on Tik Tok and on X and I kept seeing this recurring thing about girlfriends making fun of their boyfriend's apartments or what they picked out at HomeGoods. And then I saw tweets and comments back to those videos by men... "Oh my gosh, don't get a girlfriend. They'll literally make you gay and feminize you and take you to HomeGoods and make you get a bed frame."

And this discourse is actually very revealing because both of these points of view are wrong. The first opinion, which is usually the opinion held by women, is that men are aesthetically challenged and women are the arbiters of taste. The second opinion, it's usually the idea held by men, is that men being interested in interior design and aesthetics is gay or feminine, which is equally incorrect. And another side misconception associated with both of these thoughts is that a man even being into those things is a man being in touch with his quote-unquote "feminine" side. Design and arts and creative expression in every sense in every field has come to be associated or seen as the domain of women. But on the whole the greatest artists and designers and creatives throughout history have always been men.

...

It was once love that created beauty. But that love between men and women is really being drained. And I'm starting to actually think that men back in the 1700s, for example, when Edmund Burke was writing, not only were not oppressing women, but that they genuinely loved them. Like when you read Burke on beauty, he speaks so highly of women that they are the highest bearers of beauty and perfection. And to behold a woman is to feel love. Not in a lustful or possessive way, but in a way of just pure admiration.

So in conclusion, I think that we need to get back to the natural roles of women and men in every way, including in the dynamic of art and beauty. and that men have to rediscover their natural aesthetic sense and not think that it's something feminine, but realize that it's actually an incredibly important and disowned aspect of masculinity. I think that only in this way will the proper force and upward energy be created that is necessary in bringing beauty back, not just on an individual level, but on a societal level.

See the entire video: Men are better artists than women

What You Should Know About DEI-Related Discrimination at Work

Matt · 2 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) is a broad term that is not defined in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Title VII). Title VII prohibits employment discrimination based on protected characteristics such as race and sex. Under Title VII, DEI initiatives, policies, programs, or practices may be unlawful if they involve an employer or other covered entity taking an employment action motivated—in whole or in part—by an employee's or applicant's race, sex, or another protected characteristic.'

SSL certificate re-installation

Matt · 3 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

It's that time of year again! MANN's SSL certificate is needing updating and I just bought it. It should be installed within an hour or so. You shouldn't see any issues but if you get a funky SSL-related message over the next hour or so, it's OK. Not to worry.

Mini-Commentary: "What Happened to Men Pursuing Women??"

Green · 3 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Emily King makes yet another spot-on mini-commentary video: What Happened to Men Pursuing Women??. Quote:

... If a man persisted like that in today's dating world, he would at the very least be called a creep, and at the worst he'd be going to jail. That is the reality that a lot of men face.

So that, in combination with the fact that women are not really reciprocating effort, and they're not treating men very well right now, there is a large group of men that are saying that it's just not worth it.

And they would say that women have asked for it. They have asked men to leave them alone. So guess what ladies? They're leaving you alone.

Short video: What Happened to Men Pursuing Women??

Why ‘walkaway wives’ are leading the charge in midlife divorce

Matt · 4 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Bet if there was no alimony or 50/50 split (or worse) of "marital property", you'd see far fewer marriages, period. If being married to a man is so tiresome, why do women do it? Answer: a payday. To me, nothing's worth that much hassle. Ladies, stop instigating marriages, esp. if you don't really want them. Excerpt:

'It’s a scenario increasingly being played out in homes across Britain. Rather than put up and shut up, women in midlife are realising that there’s more to life than a grumpy or self-interested husband, and voting with their feet. While men used to initiate more divorces – the classic midlife crisis where they ran off with a younger woman – this has shifted over the past few years. Today, women are as likely to start divorce proceedings, especially in midlife. And more than ever, this is coming out of the blue for their comfortable husbands who had assumed everything was just ticking along nicely.

"My request for a divorce last October entirely took my ex by surprise," says business systems expert Ana Clarke, 41, from Tunbridge Wells. "I had just given up trying to change anything – he assumed my silence meant I was accepting of his shortcomings, but in reality, I was slowly checking out of the marriage."'

Spain: The government is hiding 55% of domestic violence victims by only counting women

Matt · 6 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Excerpt:

'In Spain, 15 infanticides were committed in 2025, but the government only officially recorded three of these cases. The Delegation against Gender Violence , which only considers paternal filicides , does not count the other 12 children. Furthermore, a total of 59 women were murdered, but the Ministry of Equality only counts 46. Another 36 men were killed as victims of domestic violence. None of these are included in the official count. In total, there were 108 fatalities due to domestic violence, but the government of Pedro Sánchez only counts 49: those attributable to "gender violence" (that is, women killed by their male partners or ex-partners, or children killed by their fathers).

This means that, broadly speaking, 55% of fatal victims of domestic violence in 2025 will be rendered invisible as a consequence of gender ideology. This comprehensive count is made possible by the work carried out annually by the Association for the Support of Victims of Domestic Violence (Anavid), which aims to " reflect real data on all cases of any type of violence."'

Harvard Says Yes to Discrimination, No to Western Civ

Matt · 6 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As for Harvard's white male undergraduates, their skin color and sex are obstacles to academic advancement.

"[T]he best student at Harvard—he won the prize for the graduating senior with the best overall academic record—was rejected from all the graduate programs to which he applied. He too was a white male," the historian recounts.

"I called around to friends at several universities to find out why on earth he had been rejected. Everywhere it was the same story: Graduate admissions committees around the country had been following the same unspoken protocol as ours."
...
Harvard's last president, Claudine Gay, was a black woman whose scholarship was infected with plagiarism.

She's still employed by Harvard, with a compensation package said to be in the neighborhood of $900,000.

The contrast between Gay's treatment as a black woman and the white male students with exemplary records who have been discriminated against the way Hankins describes should make even a Theda Skocpol question her premises about why conservatives criticize higher ed.'

The Problem With Feminising Society - Helen Andrews

Mastodon · 7 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

"The Problem With Feminising Society - Helen Andrews"

Video here.

The Reasonable Man

Matt · 8 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Evan liked to think of himself as fair.

He listened. He adjusted. He didn't raise his voice. When there was tension, he assumed he had missed something—some emotional nuance, some unspoken need. That, he believed, was maturity.

When his wife, Laura, came home upset from work, Evan canceled his plans without mentioning them. It seemed obvious that her day mattered more. When she criticized his tone, he apologized—even when he wasn't sure what he had done wrong. If she was unhappy, the situation required fixing, and fixing required him.

This wasn't resentment. It was love.

At least, that's what Evan told himself.'

Campus sexual violence rate closer to 1%, not 25%, study suggests

Mastodon · 10 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study found the campus sexual violence rate is around one percent, which differs from the oft-cited claim that 1 in 5 women are victims of sexual assault or violence while in college.

Researchers with Washington State University “analyzed data from 2007 through 2022 from 61,869 women surveyed for the nationally representative National Crime Victimization Survey,” according to a paper in the Journal of American College Health.

The “6-month sexual violence victimization prevalence” for college students was .46 percent for both on-campus and commuter students. “Over that same period, among college-students, the 6-month rate for on-campus residents,” worked out to about one percent, the authors wrote.'

Pearl vs. Kasparian: Closing Statement

Mastodon · 12 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Pearl puts away a feminist in her own inimitable way: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aAdj_iFORu4

How Gynocentrism Masquerades as Maturity, Empathy, and Love

Matt · 13 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the reasons gynocentrism is so difficult to challenge is that it rarely announces itself. It does not arrive as hostility toward men. It does not require anyone to say, “Men matter less.” In fact, it often appears wearing the language of virtue.

It looks like maturity.
It sounds like empathy.
It feels like love.

And that is precisely why so many decent, conscientious men live inside it without ever naming it.'

How feminism hijacked the conversation on masculinity

Mastodon · 16 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although feminism is defined as the belief in equality on behalf of women's rights and interests, critics in the 21st century accuse the feminist movement of being woke and anti-men.

"I think modern feminism is built on the lie that no man is ever going to be reliable or ever wants to care about his family," Smith said. He argued that extremes on both sides, citing some "red pill" circles who are on the far-opposite side of feminism, are hijacking the conversation for both men and women. However, Smith believes masculinity matters and denies that there is such a thing as "toxic masculinity."'

UK: Co Antrim school suspends 19 boys amid 'toxic masculinity' concerns

Mastodon · 16 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of 19 boys have been suspended at a Co Antrim school with parents making an official complaint about the principal's actions on "toxic masculinity" concerns.

An official complaint has now been made to the school's board of governors by most of the parents on the disciplinary actions of the principal who suspended the students following an alleged assembly incident on January 8.

The matters have now come to light as the Education Authority has become involved in what has been claimed as long running allegations of "intimidation" of female teachers by male Year 11 students, aged 14 to 15.
...
The parent said: "I would implore the Board of Governors to take this matter extremely seriously. I would be interested to know how many young people have been suspended for violence and bullying at the school in comparison to the 19 suspensions last Thursday, could this be disproportionate?

"I am disgusted to hear her terminology such as “masculine toxicity” with my son’s name beside it. Anyone who knows my son, knows he is the most lovable, kind natured, humble young person with the utmost respect to all. Some of these boys have never even had a detention."'

Start Saying ‘No’ To Women

Matt · 19 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here’s my proposal: We are living through a civilizational shit test. In order to survive, we need to start saying “NO” to women.

What does a civilizational shit test look like? Something like this.
...
Women like Renee and Rebecca Good are estranged from reality.

The strangest and saddest aspect of Renee Good’s demise, to me, is her lack of fear. I speculate that a drip-feed of BlueSky propaganda, supplemented by decades of “girl power” media, is to blame. John Carter has a good essay on late-stage liberal mind melt: “Eventually, the unstable construct of distortions and outright falsehoods that liberalism is based upon is destined to disappear into a shrieking howl of distorted static, and it will take the minds of its adherents with it … It will cause actual brain damage.”'

How Feminism created a mental health crisis among girls

Matt · 20 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. This is a good video that actually drills down into the issue without resorting to just exhortations.

No, This Study Did Not Show That 10% of Men Are “Toxic”

Matt · 20 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent paper in Psychology of Men & Masculinities has been circulating with a striking implication: that roughly 10% of men fall into “toxic” categories, divided into what the authors call Benevolent Toxics and Hostile Toxics.

The study’s authors are careful in places. They repeatedly note that most men are not toxic. They criticize the careless way the term “toxic masculinity” is often used. On the surface, this looks like a responsible corrective to cultural excess.

But when you look closely at how they arrived at that 10% figure, something doesn’t add up.'

What I'm learning about boys - and the gap we keep missing

Matt · 20 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the past seven months, I've been travelling, listening, and learning from organisations working with boys across the UK, the United States and South Africa - with further visits planned in Australia this year as part of my Churchill Fellowship.

What I've encountered is not a lack of care, innovation or commitment.
Quite the opposite.

Across very different contexts, there are people doing difficult, relational work with boys - often in circumstances shaped by poverty, violence and family breakdown. Much of this work is framed through concerns about risk: the risk boys may pose to themselves or to others - through violence, harmful behaviour, disengagement from education, school exclusion, or entrenched attitudes about masculinity.'

Can ‘toxic masculinity’ be measured? Scientists try to quantify controversial term

Mastodon · 22 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How rife is the problem of ‘toxic masculinity’ in Western societies? A research study run in New Zealand has found that only a small percentage of men surveyed fell into the worst category of hostile toxicity — and that a desire to feel ‘manly’ wasn’t necessarily indicative that a person held socially damaging views.

The term toxic masculinity was coined in the 1980s, and expresses the idea that some of the traits that many societies consider stereotypically ‘masculine’, such as dominance and aggression, can have damaging social impacts. Today, the phrase is often used to describe all manner of behaviours, from sexual violence to a disinclination to help with chores around the home.'

UK: Principal defends suspension of 19 boys after 'toxic masculinity' assembly

Mastodon · 22 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The head teacher of Laurelhill Community College has defended her decision to suspend 19 boys from the school, describing it as a "necessary response" to a "single specific incident" amid growing criticism from parents.

Principal Nicola Stevenson penned a letter to parents on Monday, 19 January, justifying her choice to suspend the 19 pupils following an incident during a school assembly, stating she wanted to prevent "toxic masculinity does not develop" from taking root.'

Something Wicked

Matt · 22 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today's conversation is with three women who share something rare: they can see through the fraud of feminism—and they're willing to say so out loud.

Hannah Spier, M.D. (a psychiatrist from the mental-health world) breaks down how feminist ideology has seeped into therapy culture and quietly turned "help" into a kind of self-worship—often at the expense of families and men.
https://hannahspier.substack.com/

Janice Fiamengo, Ph.D, brings the historical lens, showing that feminism has never really been about "equality," but about power—and how the story has been rewritten so effectively that even critics sometimes repeat the mythology. https://fiamengofile.su bstack.com/

And Carrie Gress, Ph.D., author of Something Wicked (releasing now), lays out the argument that feminism and Christianity aren't compatible—because feminism functions like a shadow religion: its own moral framework, its own commandments, its own "sins," and its own sacred cow (female autonomy). https://amzn.to/49OZXzY'

France ‘should declare toxic masculinity a threat to national security’

Mastodon · 24 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'France is lagging behind the UK in tackling toxic masculinity and should declare it a threat to national security, a government report has claimed.

Around 10 million French people, some 17 per cent of the population, subscribe to “hostile sexism”, a mindset that devalues women and, in its most extreme forms, can justify violence, France’s equality watchdog said.

In its annual report, the Higher Council for Equality (HCE) warned that a growing “masculinist” ideology is being fuelled by culture wars imported from the United States, legitimised by Donald Trump, and amplified by social media.

While no French politicians were singled out, one of its authors questioned Emmanuel Macron’s record on gender equality, contrasting his rhetoric with figures such as Mr Trump.'

In Defense Of White Men

Matt · 24 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The cultural zeitgeist of the last decade shifted and made an enemy of the very people who created our culture. Instead of being proud of what our ancestors built, we're told, often with fury, to be suspect and to feel ashamed of our forefathers. The men who built institutions, brought peace and security to our nations, and ensured our material comfort today are no longer remembered as great contributors, but as enemies of progress. We enjoy the benefits of a civilization we're encouraged to distrust, relying daily on its technology, order, and abundance while being taught to view its origins with moral unease. Can a society survive if it teaches its sons to hate themselves and their inheritance?'

We Are Not Helping Boys Get Through Puberty

Matt · 25 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To a significant degree, it is the persistence of blank slate views of masculinity and femininity, despite the increasing acceptance of evolutionary psychology in other areas, that accounts for why our societies have been failing boys and young men for decades now.
...
Biological essentialism has an understandably bad name.

The subsequent reaction against it, however, has made it impossible to discuss virtually any biologically based differences between men and women. Take, for instance, the robust finding, widely reproduced in many studies and across cultures, that men on average tend to be more interested in things than people, while for women the reverse holds true (Su et al., 2009). In 2017, James Damore was fired from Google after he wrote and internally distributed a 10-page memo discussing this very point.'

The EEOC's war on woke

Matt · 27 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month, Andrea Lucas, the chair of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, posted a video to X asking an unusual question: "Are you a white male who has experienced discrimination at work based on your race or sex?" she says to the camera. "The EEOC is committed to identifying, attacking, and eliminating all forms of race and sex discrimination — including against white male applicants and employees."

The video has been viewed nearly 6 million times, with top comments heaping praise. "This message gave me hope because I did not think this was ever possible to happen to me in America," one user wrote. The video wasn't announcing a new policy; white men have been protected from discrimination just as people of any race or gender under the law. But it capped a year of sweeping efforts to align the bipartisan, independent EEOC with President Donald Trump's culture war on "woke."'

The status and progress of young men in the West

Matt · 27 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The title I am using strikes me as being more descriptive of the vid.

Aus: Why men are a 'priority' for the Coalition

Matt · 27 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The health of NSW males will be a “clear priority” for the opposition in the lead-up to the 2027 state election following the establishment of a new dedicated portfolio.

NSW Opposition Leader Kellie Sloane announced on Tuesday that she had appointed Davidson MP and cancer-survivor Matt Cross as a spokesman for men’s health tasked with developing a statewide men’s health strategy.

Ms Sloane, who clinched the leadership from Cronulla MP Mark Speakman late last year, said improving the health of the state’s men and boys was a focus for the Coalition – one that demanded “renewed focus and leadership”.'

The rise of toxic femininity

Matt · 29 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But does Britain really have a problem with young men drifting into the arms of dangerous, far-right influencers such as Andrew Tate and Tommy Robinson? The survey data suggests that a far bigger issue is young women being radicalised by the far-left. We're all familiar with the dinner party talking point that men and women's political views are becoming increasingly divergent. But the reason for this is not, as is commonly supposed, because men are turning right.

According to an analysis by the FT, in the 1990s the political ideology of 18- to 29-year-old men and women was more or less the same, with both, on average, mildly liberal. Fast-forward to 2024 and men had become a little bit more liberal – not more conservative – while women had become significantly more so. That is to say, vast swaths of young women have become advocates of the 'omnicause' – trans rights, climate justice, open borders, anti-racism and the plight of the Palestinians. The intersectional hierarchy of oppression – and fighting 'white supremacy' – is their lodestar.

The same pattern is observable in France, Germany, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the United States, with young men's views barely changing over the past 25 years and women veering sharply to the left. Admittedly, they tend to return to the centre when they get married and have kids, but that's happening less and less, because woke women don't want to date non-woke men. As a rule, the more divergent men and women's political ideology is, the worse the fertility crisis, with South Korea scoring high (or rather low) on both metrics. China isn't far behind, with the lowest birth rate on record.'

Accountability 2: What Equal Accountability Would Actually Look Like

Matt · 29 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Therapy Would Stop Pathologizing Male Restraint

Today, many men enter therapy already on the defensive.

A man who pauses before speaking, who thinks before he feels, who regulates himself under stress is often labeled avoidant, emotionally unavailable, or disconnected. His restraint is treated as pathology rather than capacity.

Meanwhile, emotional flooding, volatility, or verbal escalation—more often expressed by women—are framed as authenticity, trauma responses, or justified expressions of pain.

Equal accountability would mean: Therapy would stop trying to turn men into more emotionally verbal women—and start helping couples understand different but equally valid regulation styles.'

Deadbeat Dads Are A Feminist Side Effect

Matt · 31 January 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now, to be clear, the patriarchy that feminists have raged against is certainly something that has been abused at times across various cultures and periods of history, but it is simply not the cause of fatherlessness.

By definition, “patriarchy” means “father rule,” something that is irrefutably lacking from our culture today.

The rise of fatherlessness in American homes is a devastating phenomenon, one that is eroding the fabric of our society and damaging the hearts and healthy development of millions of American children.'

With 5 to 2 Vote, Committee Passes Boys & Men Bill

Matt · 1 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The legislation to create a Washington Boys & Men Commission passed the House Committee on State Government and Tribal Relations by a 5 to 2 vote on Friday, January 30. ...

The vice chair of the committee, Representative Chris Stearns (D-Auburn), is a co-sponsor of House Bill 2401. Urging the committee members to vote Yes on the bill, he said:

"I think certainly among — I can speak for the Native American communities but other communities of color too, this would have a profound effect on what I believe is a great need. So I urge a Yes vote."'

Manufacturing a Boy Crisis

Matt · 2 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently I read an article titled “Reading how to be male: Boys’ literature reflects the rise of aggressive masculinity.” The title alone makes a strong empirical claim: that aggressive masculinity is rising. Not perceived as rising. Not debated. Rising.

That’s a measurable claim. Which means it should be supported by measurable data.

Because I take these questions seriously — especially when they concern boys — I wrote to the author, who happened to be a Gender Studies professor, and asked a straightforward question:

What is the empirical evidence that masculine aggressiveness is increasing?

He kindly replied and sent two links — one a media report about educator concerns, and the other an article about a qualitative research project describing how some teachers perceive changes in boys’ attitudes and behavior.'

The Domestic Violence Funding Paradox: Behind the Curtain of an Industry Where Billions Are Spent and Survivors Are Overlooked

Matt · 2 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When representatives from fifteen newly funded Family Justice Center pilot sites gathered at the Omni San Diego Hotel in early 2004, the event was framed as a collaborative kickoff — a chance for communities across the country to learn from the San Diego model and begin building their own multidisciplinary centers. What most attendees never saw, however, was the tension surrounding who was allowed to take part and who were not.

At the time, I was President of the National Coalition For Men's San Diego chapter, which I had started in 1997. NCFM's chapter and national headquarters sat just a few blocks from the Omni, and our organization had long been involved in supporting victims of domestic violence, including male victims who often struggled to find services. When the event organizers initially invited local domestic-violence and social-service providers to host informational booths, we applied.

Our request was denied.

We challenged the decision, pointing out that NCFM had over 20 years of experience nationally assisting victims and advocating for equitable services. We made it clear that excluding us — while inviting other providers — raised serious concerns, and we were prepared to pursue legal remedies if necessary. Rather than reconsider, the organizers chose a different route. We were told that no service providers would be allowed to host booths at the event. The entire idea was scrapped.

The message was unmistakable.'

Research Finds Interaction With Father, Not Mother, Affects Child Health

Matt · 4 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Is it another anti-father article from the NYT or an actual attempt to talk up fathers? Hard to tell. My guess is the NYT is trying to ride the fence here. Excerpt:

'For much of the 20th century and beyond, social scientists attributed a range of chronic mental health problems to dysfunction between infants and their mothers, who were categorized as overbearing, rejecting, domineering or ambivalent.

But a team of researchers from Pennsylvania State University has found that at times the early parenting behavior of fathers may have a greater impact on children's health.

For a study published recently in the journal Health Psychology, the scientists observed three-way interactions between 10-month-old infants, their fathers and their mothers, and then checked in on the families when the children were 2 and 7.'

Women Are More Likely Than Men to Endorse Political Violence

Matt · 4 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Comes as no surprise to me. Excerpt:

'When we talk about political violence, we almost always assume that its perpetrators are young men. That makes sense: men are statistically more likely to engage in physical aggression and get arrested for violent crimes at higher rates. At the same time, many are dealing with rising unemployment, declining educational achievement, and growing social disengagement. Given all that, researchers may reasonably assume that young men are driving greater tolerance for political violence.

New data complicate that assumption. A recent survey by the Network Contagion Research Institute at Rutgers found that under certain conditions, women were more likely than men to express support for political violence. The findings were so counter to the prevailing narrative that they surprised even the researchers.'

‘Gender Crazies’ Have Lost All Sense of Reality and Truth

Matt · 4 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Consistent with the Marxist view, feminists believe the world is organized according to patriarchal principles. But a cursory glance reveals that compared to women, men have shorter lifespans, are less likely to be enrolled in college, are targets of false allegations, are far more likely to be homeless, suffer workplace deaths far more often, and are depicted negatively by the media.

Indeed, there is no such thing as patriarchy. Patriarchy is a feminist fantasy.

Marriage and Family: Karl Marx insisted the family unit was oppressive to women. This belief stands in sharp contrast to an extensive body of research that shows married women:

- Enjoy higher levels of happiness, life satisfaction, and lower rates of depression, compared to single, divorced, or cohabiting women.
- Tend to have better overall health, including lower mortality rates and reduced risk of cardiovascular disease.
- Have lower poverty rates, higher household incomes, and better access to benefits like spousal health insurance.'

Institutional Sexism: The Bias We're Not Allowed to See

Matt · 5 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For half a century, the term institutional sexism has been used as a club — a way to shame or reform male-dominated systems accused of disadvantaging women. Universities built entire departments around it. Governments shaped funding priorities by it. The media repeated it like a moral mantra: if women lag anywhere, it must be because the system is rigged against them.

But what if we've been looking in the wrong direction?

The deeper irony is that institutional sexism is real — just not the way we've been taught to see it. Across education, mental health, family courts, criminal justice, and even public health, there are consistent, measurable biases that disadvantage men and boys. Yet these are ignored or rationalized away under a powerful cultural assumption: that sexism only flows one way.'

Study of 35,000 adults finds people care significantly less about men than women in the workplace and education

Matt · 8 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Cappelen et al. study included 35,000 adults in the US, and found they tended to favour women over men. The study found a tendency for people to be more accepting of males falling behind in work performance, more likely to see it as men's own fault, and less willing to let them be helped. In most of the research questions this bias was larger from women than men, and for some research questions the bias was smaller when coming from younger participants and from Republican Party voters.

My article will briefly describe and evaluate this study, and place the study's findings in context of relevant literature on gamma bias, intergroup biases, the gender empathy gap and related phenomena which explain gender biases.'

Institutional Sexism: The Bias We're Not Allowed to See - Part Two

Matt · 9 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If institutional sexism exists anywhere in plain view, it is in the family courts.

Here, bias does not announce itself. It operates through procedure. Through precedent. Through “standard practice.” It hides inside the phrase best interest of the child while producing outcomes that are strikingly consistent.

When parents separate, the system does not start from a presumption of equal parenthood. It starts from a quieter premise: children remain with their mother unless a compelling reason forces another arrangement.

Fathers are not evaluated as co-equal parents. They are evaluated as exceptions.'

Equimundo’s State of UK Men

Matt · 10 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Equimundo’s State of UK Men 2025 is a groundbreaking new study developed in partnership with Beyond Equality, offering a candid, evidence-based look at the emotional, economic, and cultural realities shaping the lives of men and boys across the UK today.

At a time when conversations about masculinity are often dominated by fear or blame, this study urges a shift: from panic to positive engagement. It highlights a generation of men who are navigating deep uncertainty – about identity, purpose, connection, and the future – but who are also seeking help, building community, and expanding what it means to be a man.

What the Report Shows:

The State of UK Men in 2025: 91 percent of men and women in the UK believe that being a friend is the number one defining trait of masculinity. Yet nearly two-thirds of men say they have to look out for themselves because no one else has their back.

Men’s Purpose in Times of Insecurity: Half of men across all income groups say they constantly worry about keeping a roof over their heads. Financial pressure and insecurity continue to shape men’s sense of purpose, identity, and well-being.'

When the Nursery Governs the Nation

Matt · 12 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the rules of the nursery become the rules of the nation, compassion expands—but accountability weakens.

And when accountability weakens for long enough, even compassion becomes unsustainable.

The tension described in this story is not hypothetical. It is the central argument of David Shackleton's remarkable new book, Matrisensus: Masculine Collapse and Feminine Shadow.

Shackleton argues that Western society is increasingly governed not by the logic of society, but by the logic of the family — and that this shift carries profound consequences for law, culture, and moral authority.'

Register Her

Matt · 12 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

From the site at: https://registerher.com/:

'Nobody knows exactly how often false accusations of sexual crimes happen. The research is varied. Some data suggests between 2%-10%. Some estimates are much higher. Regardless of what percentage is correct, or the reasons it happens, we know that like rape, one false accusation against an innocent person is too many. The impact is devastating. Unfortunately, our system of criminal justice, our politicians and our media frequently fall short of treating the problem seriously. One woman actually made 15 false claims of rape before legal action was taken against her. She is by no means alone in getting a pass.

It is in the public interest to create and permanently maintain a spotlight on this problem and the devastating consequences for victims.'

Gender studies courses are shutting down across the US. The Epstein files reveal why

Matt · 13 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Predictably, a feminist objects to WST being shut down. Bizarrely she links it to the controversial "Epstein files" release question. I'm always... impressed... at how feminists have this way of associating utterly unrelated things to their causes celebrés. Excerpt:

'Last week, we learned of the decision of the Texas A&M University board of regents to end women's and gender studies programs as well as the teaching of "divisive concepts" such as race. A&M was not the first university to do this. Florida's New College made the move in 2023. Other red state legislatures have passed similar requirements and their public universities (in North Carolina, Ohio and Kansas) have followed suit.

The move to cancel gender studies is explicitly justified as a way to comply with Donald Trump's executive order of last year titled Defending Women from Gender Ideology Extremism and Restoring Biological Truth to the Federal Government. That document makes "the biological reality of sex" a matter not of science but of law.
...

Powerful men exchanging women and girls for their pleasure is the underlying premise of the executive order, however much it proclaims its interest to be the defense of women's "intimate spaces" and "their dignity, safety, and well-being". What's really at stake is the enforcement of "sex-based distinctions" that have long been understood hierarchically (men on top) to deny women (and sexual minorities) equality of treatment and access to resources and power. ("Equality" is a word notably lacking in the executive order.)
...
Trump's executive order claims that "the erasure of sex in language and policy has a corrosive impact not just on women but on the validity of the entire American system". A system, gender studies teaches us, that is based (in his case) on a politics of masculine rule. Gender studies is not an "ideology", but a critical tool for examining – in the case of Trump and Epstein – the predations of toxic masculinity.'

The End of Woman: How Smashing the Patriarchy Has Destroyed Us

Matt · 15 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Book on Amazon here. Send this book or link to it to your favorite feminist. :) Overview:

'Fellow at Ethic & Public Policy Center, scholar at The Institute for Human Ecology at CUA and the nationally best-selling author of the Theology of Home series, Carrie Gress argues that fifty years of radical feminism have had the opposite of the intended effect and have granted primacy of place to the traditionally male sphere of life, while simultaneously devaluing the typical attributes, virtues, and strengths of women.'

UK: Misogynistic men who commit crimes motivated by hatred of women to get tougher sentences under Labour plans

Mastodon · 17 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who commit crimes motivated by a hatred of women will get tougher sentences under plans brought forward by Labour.

Under new proposals, the Government will make attacks motivated by hatred of women 'aggravated offences', which carry sentences of up to two years in prison.

Non-aggravated common assault, by comparison, carries a maximum penalty of six months' imprisonment.

Those targeting people over their sexuality, gender identity or disability will face the same penalties.

In a letter detailing the amendment to the Crime and Policing Bill, Lords ministers wrote that the changes will 'ensure that tackling misogyny is part of the government's approach to tackling hate crime'.'

Female Bullying and Psychosis Now Seen as a Global Epidemic

Matt · 18 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years feminists have extolled the virtues of the workplace, claiming that women's superior relationship skills would give rise in a veritable gender Nirvana. But commentator Bettina Arndt has blown the lid off that feminist myth, documenting the global problem of female bullying in the workplace (1):

- Presidential candidate Kamala Harris inflicted "constant soul-destroying criticism on her office staff."
- An independent review found former Canadian Governor General Julie Payette had created a "toxic" workplace through yelling, belittling, and public humiliation of staff.
- Former UK Prime Minister Liz Truss engaged in "soul-destroying" and "pure bullying that drained the life out of the team," according to former aides.
- Former Australian Foreign Minister Julia Bishop was accused of engaging in a "pattern of threats, intimidation, and bullying."

These are not isolated examples. One survey of over 200 former female executives cited "toxic interpersonal dynamics" as a major reason for their departure (2). Another study found 70% of women report poor job satisfaction due to relational aggression (3). An article in the Washington Post revealed how gossip and related behaviors among female colleagues can constitute workplace bullying, not harmless "girl talk." (4)'

EEOC Sues Coca-Cola Beverages Northeast for Sex Discrimination

Matt · 19 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Coca-Cola Beverages Northeast, Inc., a producer, seller and distributor of Coca-Cola brand products throughout the Northeast United States, violated federal law when it excluded male employees from an employer-sponsored event, the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) charged in a lawsuit filed today.

According to the EEOC's lawsuit, in September 2024, Bedford, N.H.-headquartered Coca-Cola Northeast held a two-day employer-sponsored trip and networking event at the Mohegan Sun Casino and Resort in Connecticut. Coca-Cola Northeast privately invited female employees and then excused the female employees who attended the event from their normal work duties on Sept. 10 and 11, 2024, and paid them their normal salary or wages without requiring them to use vacation or other paid time off. Coca-Cola Northeast did not invite any male employees to the event.'

UK: New adverts urge boys not to share sexist content online

Mastodon · 19 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Scottish government has launched a new advertising campaign urging boys and young men not to share misogynistic content online.

The adverts warn boys that sexist content is "never harmless" and has the potential to hurt girls, including people they know.

They will run for five weeks from Monday across Instagram, Snapchat, Twitch and YouTube, as well as on outdoor advertising.

First Minister John Swinney said the rise of online misogyny was "deeply concerning" and that ministers would do "everything we can" to eradicate violence against women and girls.

Women experience harassment and rape in Scottish folk scene, says report
Police respond to domestic abuse call 'every eight minutes'
The campaign was developed with the charity White Ribbon Scotland - which attempts to engage men and boys in preventing violence against women and girls.

One of the video clips shows a boy sitting on a couch, watching a video on his phone of a character speaking into a podcaster-style microphone.

A voiceover says "sexist content is never harmless, it hurts girls in real life - including the ones you know" as the emojis on the boy's phone all change to become the face of an upset girl, resembling the person sitting next to him on the couch.

Rebekah MacLeod, a project lead for White Ribbon Scotland, said the campaign was not about punishing men but educating them on the impact of sharing sexist content.'

How Democrats Lost Men

Matt · 20 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Both viewpoints would be absurd to anyone in Kenema. Given the awful binary of political messaging in this country, it's not surprising that many young men have drifted strongly rightward over the last decade. According to the Survey Center on American Life, only 38 percent of young men now identify as Democrats, a 13-point drop since 2016.

That has helped Donald Trump win two presidential elections and innumerable downballot contests. My father was a refugee from two wars, he opposed authoritarianism in all its forms, and he raised a son who would never cede this country to the forces he himself fled in 1940. So, let's talk honestly about a healthy male role in society, because there's a lot riding on this.'

Do Men Face Prejudice?

Matt · 20 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2020, psychologist Aman Siddiqi completed a doctoral dissertation titled A Clinical Guide to Discussing Prejudice Against Men. It was submitted quietly, without media attention or controversy, and has remained largely invisible outside academic circles.

That is unfortunate — because it does something rare.

Rather than arguing politics or ideology, Siddiqi does something very simple and very professional: He takes the existing psychological science on prejudice and asks whether it applies to men.

Not rhetorically. Clinically.'

Men are the empathetic sex

Green · 21 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Women suck at empathy: Men are the empathetic sex

Full article by archwinger is here. Excerpt:

A woman is typically very, very good at recognizing when other people are feeling something, especially something that's going to affect her. And she is very good at recognizing when she is feeling something. But she is very, very bad at recognizing what the feelings she perceives actually are. Not just other peoples' feelings. Even when it's her own feeling, she has trouble naming it.

...

This is also why every single time you talk to your wife about what's going on in your life, she misses the mark entirely and has no clue why you're telling her this stuff. And the more you talk, the more frustrated she gets because she doesn't understand what you want from her or how any of this affects her. And when a woman doesn't know what to do, she feels stupid, like she's failing somehow. That feels bad. And because she feels bad, she won't have sex with you. Instead, she just gets angry. How dare you confuse her by telling her all this stuff that's going on in your life.

...

Women suck at empathy.

When your best friend tells you something that's going on in his life, the first thing you think about is how he must feel about it. Maybe you suck at empathy and get that wrong and respond inappropriately. Maybe not. But you're asking the right internal question. You're thinking about how he feels based on what he's describing and what you know about him, and trying to respond to his feelings.

When you tell your wife something that's going on in your life, the first place her mind goes is "Why is he telling me this? If our situation were reversed and I were the one talking, why would I be saying this?" And that's the feeling she assumes you have. Which is why it always seems like she doesn't get you and has completely missed the point of the entire conversation. Because instead of putting herself in your shoes and figuring out how you're feeling, she assumes you're wearing her shoes, and everything you do is for the same reason she would have done it.

This is why nearly everything she accuses you of and every feeling she assumes you have as she calls you bitter, selfish, mean, manipulative — is a mirror. She's naming her own common feelings but projecting them at you.

END excerpt.

Full article is here.

Belgian investigation into three Jewish men sparks diplomatic row with US

Matt · 21 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A diplomatic row is escalating between Belgium and the US, with Donald Trump's ambassador refusing to apologise for accusing his host country of antisemitism and reportedly threatening to bar a socialist politician from travelling to the US.

Bill White, a staunch ally of the president like many US ambassadors, on Monday demanded Belgium drop a "ridiculous" and "antisemitic" investigation into three Jewish men suspected of performing circumcisions without medical qualifications.

In a social media post, White demanded Belgium's "very rude" socialist health minister, Frank Vandenbroucke, stop the "unacceptable harassment" and "disgusting" treatment of the three men. He also called on Belgium to do "a much better job" on antisemitism.

Circumcision is legal in Belgium but must be carried out under strict conditions by a medical professional. The investigation concerns three mohels, or ritual circumcisers, in Antwerp suspected of performing circumcisions without any medical training.'

‘Substantive Gender Equality:’ Blueprint for Totalitarian Feminist Takeover

Matt · 25 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Feminists relentlessly claim that their objective is the achievement of gender equality. But a cursory review of a range of issues such as men’s health, educational attainment, harsh treatment by the legal system, and more reveals an inconvenient truth: It’s men, not women, who are lagging in 12 major areas of life (1).

Unfortunately, United Nations officials have refused to address, or even acknowledge, these troubling disparities. This denial explains, in part, why so many have become disenchanted with the United Nations, and why many countries are now delinquent in paying their membership dues. Now, the United Nations faces a catastrophic “imminent financial collapse,” as Secretary-General Antonio Guterres recently revealed (2).'

Define rape based on consent across Europe

Matt · 26 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The EPP Group calls for a legally robust, EU-wide definition of rape, based on freely given and revocable consent, following today's vote in Parliament's joint committees on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs and on Women's Rights.

The report voted on today urges the European Commission to propose legislation that ensures an EU-wide definition guaranteeing equal protection for women in all Member States.

"As the EPP, we stand firmly on the side of women and their right to sexual self-determination. The absence of resistance can never be interpreted as consent," said Verena Mertens MEP, the EPP negotiator in the Civil Liberties Committee.

She stressed that "from a law enforcement and rule-of-law perspective, we need a legally sound, practical and EU-wide, comparable definition of rape based on freely given and revocable consent, so that crimes are effectively prosecuted, and perpetrators are held accountable."'

Crystal Mangum, who falsely accused Duke lacrosse players of rape, walks free years after killing boyfriend

Mastodon · 27 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former exotic dancer who made headlines for falsely accusing three Duke lacrosse students of raping her has been freed from prison in the 2011 slaying of her boyfriend.

Crystal Mangum, 47, was let out of the North Carolina Correctional Institution for Women in Raleigh just before 10 a.m. Friday after serving a 14-to-18-year sentence for fatally stabbing beau Reginald Daye in April 2011, according to a report by NBC News.'

Andrea Lucas Leads the EEOC: Restoring Agency With Truth and Commonsense

Matt · 27 February 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the agency's mission and scope have been modified multiple times by subsequent pieces of legislation.

The Obama and Biden administrations, however, transformed the agency into a center of leftist ideological activism. Until now.

...

Commissioner Feldblum guided the EEOC on a course of using its own "guidance" letters and the court system to coerce and compel employers to redefine "sex" as "sexual orientation" and "gender identity" for purposes of Title VII. The EEOC went after employers for alleged discrimination against homosexual-identified and transgender-identified individuals.

...

Chair Lucas is proceeding with crucial priorities at the agency, protecting all people – including white males – from discrimination.

"Our doors are open for everyone," Lucas said. "Our nation's civil rights laws are race-neutral, sex-neutral and group-neutral under Title VII."

"Despite that, in the last administration, and even for decades, there has been a strong presumption that the civil rights laws are only available for 'minority workers' or 'historically underrepresented workers' and not available to anybody who experiences race or sex discrimination," she explained.'

Loudoun School Board settles with boys who questioned why girl was in boys' locker room

Mastodon · 1 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Loudoun County School Board settled with two male students who questioned why a female student was repeatedly using the boys' locker room at Stone Bridge High School, according to court records.

The judge had ordered the Loudoun County School Board and the students to mediation. Court records show that a settlement was reached between the two parties.

Early last year, 7News was the first to report on how Loudoun County Public Schools investigated male students for Title IX sexual harassment after they questioned why a female student was using the boys' locker room. The female student recorded the male students in the locker room, which is against school policy.

Despite calls from several parents to drop the investigation, the Loudoun County School Board pursued the Title IX investigation against the sophomore students and found two of the boys responsible for Title IX sexual harassment and discrimination.

The Title IX finding appeared on their student records as the high school students prepared to apply to college. And LCPS ordered the boys to serve 10 days of suspension earlier this school year.

The boys' families sued the Loudoun County School Board in federal court seeking to stop the suspensions and to remove the Title IX violations from their sons' academic records. With a settlement, the case has now concluded.'

Congressman Carter, Murphy Introduce the State of Men’s Health Act

Matt · 1 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week, Congressman Troy A. Carter, Sr. (D-LA) and Congressman Greg Murphy, M.D. (R-NC) introduced the State of Men's Health Act (H.R. 7602).

The bill would require the U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO) to conduct a study on the state of men’s health in the United States and issue a report to Congress on the results, including health disparities experienced by men.

It would also require the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to create an Office of Men’s Health and submit a report to Congress following the creation of the office, detailing findings on men’s health and recommendations to improve men’s health outcomes.'

Zoomer pidgin describing Olympic idols

Green · 1 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Humorous but thoughtful commentary by Scorched Earth Policy (here):

The word goonbait upsets women because it rips away a delicate curtain of deniability which has upheld the economy of casual sex for the last century or so. None of the women defending the open tongued Olympian here are part of her generation. They question why "Porn addicts have to sexualize everything" because they're operating from a framework that depends on upholding the structure of civility the term violates. They're either ignorant of the signalling or complicit in trying to normalize it as a nonsexual expression. ...

What women think is happening is that men are sexualizing a young girl. What's actually happening is that men are instinctively critiquing a young girl unconsciously sexualizing herself through an innocuous expression, and by extension, critiquing the steady decline of societal standards that has been occurring since at least the 18th century.

Full comment is here.

Wis. Nurse Had Sex with Patient, Then Made False Sexual Assault Accusation Before Explaining Why She Lied

Matt · 3 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Wisconsin nurse who admitted to having sexual intercourse with a patient and then falsely accusing the patient of sexual assault was sentenced to 18 months in prison.

Melissa Knutson pleaded guilty to misconduct in public office and obstructing an officer on Feb. 27, the Monroe County District Attorney's Office said in a press release. Following her release from prison, Knutson will be subject to two years of public supervision.

Prosecutors said that while Knutson was working as a nurse assigned to a drug court participant, she "repeatedly" engaged in sexual intercourse with the patient.

The sexual encounters were subsequently reported to the Wisconsin Department of Safety and Professional Services.'

Ex-mayor convicted after son walks in on lewd act at alcohol-infused pool bash

Matt · 5 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Louisiana mayor has been found guilty of having sex with a minor after prosecutors revealed her teenage son caught her in the act with his friend at a 2024 alcohol-infused pool party hosted at her home.

Misty Roberts, 43, the former mayor of DeRidder, was convicted of carnal knowledge of a juvenile and indecent behavior with a juvenile on Tuesday, according to KPLC.

Roberts was subsequently released on a $100,000 surety bond, the outlet reported.

The verdict followed days of testimony from Roberts' family members, teenagers at the parties and the victim himself as prosecutors worked to paint a picture of the booze-filled events leading up to the incident.'

NCFM Files SUPREME COURT PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI in NCFM v. Selective Service System

Matt · 7 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This amazing petition is the heartfelt work of Nadine Lewis, Esq., her staff, and a few attorney friends, especially Al Rava and David Pisarra, all of whom believe strongly in equal treatment and civil rights.

The Supreme Court declined our 2013 petition in National Coalition for Men v. Selective Service because Congress was already reconsidering the male-only draft and the Court traditionally defers to the political branches on military affairs.

That legislative effort collapsed in 2021 when Senators Josh Hawley, Tom Cotton, and Marco Rubio threatened to block the entire National Defense Authorization Act if it included women in Selective Service, which it did. Their opposition forced negotiators to strip the reform, leaving the discriminatory system intact and giving the Court a reason to avoid intervening while Congress remained “active” on the issue.'

"Attitudes Toward Gender Equality"

Matt · 8 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Summary in this .pdf here. Excerpt:

'On average across the countries surveyed, three in five (60%) agree that things would work better if more women held positions with responsibilities in government and companies. A similar number also note that women won't achieve equality with men in their country unless there are more female leaders in business and government (54%).However, around half (52%) believe that when it comes to giving women equal rights with men, things have gone far enough in their country. More than four in 10 further say that men are being expected to do too much to support equality (46%) and that we have gone so far in promoting women's equality that we're discriminating against men.'

UK: Mother, 31, who met men on dating apps before falsely accusing 10 of rape in 'wicked pack of lies' faces jail

Mastodon · 9 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year-old mother is facing jail for meeting men on dating apps and falsely accusing them of rape in a 'wicked pack of lies'.

Stacy Sharples admitted to making up the allegations against ten men, many of whom spent hours in police custody and months on bail.

She even bragged to one of her victims that the police were 'not pressing charges. I've got away with it. Yet again.'

None of the men she accused were charged.

Her false allegations cost the taxpayer a 'conservative estimate' of £120,000 due to wasted police, legal and medical time, Bolton Crown Court heard.'

UK: Policewoman who lied and said an innocent officer sexually assaulted her because she was late for work is jailed

Mastodon · 9 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A police constable who reported late for duty falsely claimed it was because she had been sexually assaulted by a fellow officer.

Lauren Evans, 34, said a plain-clothes cop in an unmarked car stopped her while she was driving in March 2023 and falsely claimed he was called 'Watson.'

The next day, innocent PC Alex Watson – who Evans had never met – was arrested in front of his wife and children as they arrived home from a wedding.

By coincidence, Mr Watson was driving an unmarked car in the area where Evans, from Kent, alleged the attack had occurred.

He was arrested and spent 23 hours in custody before detectives established that Evans had made up the allegation.'

"The Cynical, Gullible American Man"

Matt · 9 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Plenty of women fit the profile of being as this article describes too-- so why call out men specifically in the title? IMO this is a form of male-baiting. Excerpt:

'Many Americans believe that vaccines are unsafe, but will jab themselves full of performance enhancers. They think seed oils cause chronic disease, but beef tallow is healthy. They'll say you can't trust federally insured banks, but you can trust the millionaires who want you to invest in their volatile vaporware crypto tokens. They think food additives are toxic but support an administration removing all restrictions on pumping pollutants into air and water. They'll insist that you can't trust scientists, because they're part of the conspiracy. The podcaster selling you his special creatine gummies, though? He seems trustworthy.'

Serial false accuser sentenced to jail

Matt · 13 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been sentenced to four-and-a-half years in prison after falsely accusing 10 men of raping her.

Stacey Sharples, 31, from Farnworth in Bolton, pleaded guilty on Monday at Bolton Crown Court to 10 counts of perverting the course of justice.

The allegations were made between 2013 and 2019, with most of the men arrested and spending time in custody, including some undertaking intimate examinations, said Greater Manchester Police.

They added that a number of the men lost their jobs or partners, were disowned by family and friends, or saw declines in their mental health after being falsely branded a rapist.

Greater Manchester Police said the investigation into Sharples began after lines of inquiry "consistently" revealed evidence contrary to what had been disclosed by her.'

“In war, fathers bury their sons”, but what about their daughters?

Matt · 15 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ‘National Board of the Norwegian Association for Women’s Rights’ put forward three arguments against female conscription in 2013. Firstly, that incorporating women into the draft is a “misconceived equality”. Economic and social gender gaps are still wide, and this conscription would, in their view, worsen it. Secondly, that militarising women does not legitimise the practice of conscription. Conscription has its own problems that need to be resolved without bringing in a new group to be subject to it. The military would still be male dominated regardless of if more women were involved, this needs to be solved before women can be brought into it by force. Thirdly, they argue in favour of non-violence. They believe that disarmament for both men and women is a more crucial goal than increasing those militarised by including women.

Conversely, the ‘National Coalition for Men’ in the US argued in favour of conscription. Firstly, they argued that to not would perpetuate double standards towards men. An article on their website stated that the “People who say, “men make war” are the same ones who find it sexist to say men make science”. And secondly, that if women are part of the population supporting wars, they should fight in it as well. In citing the Gulf War, they stated that although 86% of men supported a military attack on Kuwait, but so did 76% of women.

UK: Major funding boost to divert women from a life of crime

Mastodon · 16 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New government investment will enable women's centres and charities across the country to deliver vital specialist help to female offenders, the overwhelming majority of whom are themselves victims of crime.

The multi-year package represents a 50 per cent increase in funding to help women get clean, find work and accommodation, and move away from abusive relationships.

This support is key to cutting crime with evidence showing how more than two-thirds of women in custody report being victims of domestic abuse, a factor which is a known indicator of crimes.

Deputy Prime Minister David Lammy said:
Punishment must help women break away from lives of crime, not send them back to a prison cell time and again, disrupting their own lives and those of their children.

Today, I am making this landmark investment to help female offenders get their lives back on track and reduce reoffending. By helping women break free from addiction, abuse and homelessness, we are stopping future victims and making our streets safer.'

Are Women as Aggressive as Men?

Matt · 17 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research into cyberaggression suggests women are more aggressive than would be believed from research conducted in the real world1,2. Any genderised discussion of aggression is always sensitive, as this issue engenders strong views and is highly politicised. In fact, the politicisation of aggression and violence may be an indicator of one of its roles and causes in society3. Yet discussion of aggression, even cyberaggression, is often built on a foundation focused on males as archetypal perpetrators4-6. However, a study of female digital aggression casts doubts on assertions that aggression is programmed, and more commonly emitted by males. Rather, digital behaviour suggests women are not programmed to be passive, but are just as actively aggressive as men, and, in some circumstances, more so.'

Irish woman, 38, facing court for 'groping Swedish 18-year-old in a sauna' while on holiday

Matt · 19 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Behaviors acceptable at "adult clubs" that have no windows on them and charge high door fees and have beds in them are not acceptable in places like hotel saunas-- regardless of sex. (One thing that swingers esp. have to always remember: obtain consent before doing anything.) Excerpt:

'An Irish woman who will go on trial after allegedly groping a teenager in a Magaluf hotel spa insists she wants her day in court to clear her name.

The woman, 38, at the time of the alleged assault, was hauled to court after being arrested for allegedly touching a Swedish man's genitals without his consent in a Turkish steam bath.

The sex assault is alleged to have occurred around 6pm at the four-star Hotel Martinique in Magaluf on June 3 when the Irish woman, who lives in County Cork, was still 37 and the younger man just 18.'

How these secretive traditional circumcision rites are responsible for dozens of deaths

Matt · 20 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Traditional circumcisions can carry fatal risks including poorly trained practitioners and cutting tools that are unsanitary or used more than once. Dehydration and badly managed septic wounds are among the main causes of death, and the remote settings mean help is usually far away.

“Imagine this number: 476 young people died in a five-year period and yet they were well before going into initiation. These deaths are unacceptable and should never have happened,” former health minister Zwelini Mkhize told parliament last year.

But these are risks that hundreds of thousands of South Africans are ready to take.

The next season begins in June. They happen twice a year.'

How Hollywood Screwed White Millennial Men

Matt · 20 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Diversity, equity, and inclusion have become the north star of every major industry, especially those with any artistic or cultural capital. If anything, hiring white guys is overtly discouraged so that companies can hit diversity quotas and enjoy the achievement of a diverse workplace.

When such companies and industries do not boast incredibly diverse bona fides, the culture becomes hostile toward them, routinely creating pressure campaigns designed to rearrange the demographics in favor of their preferred makeup or preaching that we need to “do better,” with no end in sight.'

Taylor Frankie Paul insisting she is the victim as prosecutors 'look into' new abuse allegations

Mastodon · 22 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The video, published by TMZ, followed news Paul and Mortensen were involved in another domestic assault investigation, with police saying 'allegations have been made in both directions.'

Additionally, TMZ is now reporting that the latest domestic assault allegations may have put Paul into further legal jeopardy in regards to her 2023 case

Now a representative for Paul, 31, says the reality star is 'grateful' for the support she has been receiving from ABC as she 'prioritizes her family's safety and security.'

In a statement obtained by People, her rep alleged Paul was actually the victim, claiming she had been 'silently suffering extensive mental and physical abuse as well as threats of retaliation' for years.

The statement claims Paul is now 'gaining the strength to face her accuser' and is taking action to ensure she and her children will be safe from 'further harm'.'

United Nations Is Being Corrupted by the ‘Great Feminization’

Matt · 23 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The “Great Feminization” refers to the fact that many institutions are controlled by women who resort to gossip, ostracism, and shunning to advance their particular agendas. Commentator Helen Andrews posits the Great Feminization is “simply what women do whenever there are enough of them in a given organization or field.”

The Great Feminization represents a singular threat to fields that rely on open inquiry (academia), intellectual honesty (journalism), or a commitment to basic fairness. Andrews asserts the Great Feminization portends the decline of meritocracy among women and the elimination of fairness for men.'

How Chuck Norris Helped Create the Manosphere

Mastodon · 24 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But any dissection of Norris also needs to size up his effect on the culture of masculinity. Walker helped augur an ethos of aggrieved righteousness that would soon dominate everything from country music to Christian movies and, more toxically, would forerun the manosphere with its aggro-flouting of a perceived feminization of American society. “If I want your opinion, I’ll beat it out of you,” Norris would say on the show. It was a funny quip. It also traces a line straight to Andrew Tate.

Through this lens, then, the year 2026 hardly seems possible without Norris. He both encouraged all of us to contribute culturally and then suggested the kind of chippy masculinity that might comprise those contributions.

In recent years, it has been easy to forget just how foreign some of these concepts were until Chuck Norris came along. But his death has stirred some reminders. As it inevitably must. In his movies, Chuck Norris was neglected, derided, marginalized. But he always had the last kill.'

The Side Of Domestic Violence Nobody Will Say Out Loud

Matt · 24 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite this, our society still lags far behind in providing support for male victims. Shelters, hotlines, and resources tailored for men are scarce, if they exist at all in many communities.

The domestic violence allegations involving Taylor Frankie Paul, star of The Secret Lives of Mormon Wives (and the filmed but ultimately scrapped season of The Bachelorette), have thrust the issue back into the spotlight this week.

In February 2023, police in Herriman, Utah, responded to a domestic violence call at Paul's home. According to charging documents, she threw multiple objects—including her phone and metal barstools—during an argument with then-boyfriend Dakota Mortensen. One of the items allegedly struck her young daughter, who was in the room at the time. Paul was charged with aggravated assault, domestic violence in the presence of a child, child abuse, and criminal mischief.'

Army raises maximum enlistment age to 42

Matt · 25 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a sweeping change to its enlistment regulations, the Army has raised the maximum age for eligible recruits to 42, the service announced.

Changes highlighted in the memo, which was distributed this week and will go into effect in April, also include the removal of previous enlistment obstacles for recruits who have a single marijuana or drug paraphernalia conviction.

The announcement comes as the Army continues efforts to widen its recruiting pool after falling short of its Regular Army enlistment goals in 2022 and 2023 before rebounding in 2024.

The upper limit of the Army's previous allowable enlistment age was 35, but waivers were sometimes granted for older enlistees.

The Air Force and Navy allow recruits over 40, while the Marine Corps caps enlistment at 28 but allows hopefuls who are 29 or over to request waivers.'

Trans-identified female attorney arrested after heated argument with judge

Green · 27 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Colin Rugg reports:

Transgender attorney begs for a female police officer after getting tackled to the ground before being jailed for contempt.

Oklahoma attorney Rob Hopkins was caught on camera arguing with the judge. "I'm a transgender attorney practicing all over the state!" The argument continued to escalate before the judge called in officers who then took Hopkins to the ground.

Hopkins was heard screaming "I can't breathe" and begging for a female officer.

Complete video of the confrontation was posted by Rugg here and by many other users on X.

Jim Carrey, Leonardo DiCaprio and how the double standard of male aging may be over

Mastodon · 27 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has become a popular internet pastime for people to speculate about what work a female celebrity has had done. Wrinkle-free, taut and glowing visages are analyzed by experts and non-experts alike, often resulting in a diagnosis that includes a facelift, blepharoplasty, fillers, or Botox. Yet in recent months, it is not only famous women whose faces have been studied so intently – it's the men too.

...

Historically, men in Hollywood have been granted a lot more leniency when it comes to visibly aging. George Clooney is widely recognized as a "silver fox." Harrison Ford is described as "distinguished" looking. Yet now, the tide appears to be turning, with men increasingly being judged with the same doubled standards applied to female stars. But is this necessarily a good thing? For some experts, it's an indication that toxicity around ageing may only be deepening.

"It shows we have attached moral value to youth, and that we read youthfulness as productivity, desirability, health, and even worthiness," said Lauren Steckles-Young, a lecturer in social studies at the University of Sunderland, in England. "In this, we have seen a blurring between 'health' and 'beauty,' meaning we assume that if we are attractive, we are healthy, and if we are healthy and attractive, we hold higher moral value. Social media amplifies this by surrounding us with filtered and curated faces that make aging seem like a failure rather than a natural process. Being anti-aging reflects a culture that struggles to accept imperfection, change, or diversity in appearance."'

Why do feminists seem indifferent to Noelia?

Green · 27 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

As reported by Spiked here:

Headline: "Spain is euthanising rape victims now: The tragic death of Noelia Castillo Ramos speaks to the moral depravity of assisted dying."

What makes this case particularly troubling is not only the tragedy of a young woman's premature death, but also the precedent it sets for others like her. It says that if you have faced abuse, if you are depressed or have a disability, that your life is not worth living. The state would prefer to assist you to die than to help you recover or to live as full a life as possible.

Noelia Castillo Ramos was failed throughout her short life. Those charged with her care failed to protect her from abuse. And then, when the consequences of that failure became too much for her to bear, they helped to end her life. Spain's euthanasia laws have plumbed new depths of moral depravity.

Full story at Spiked Online here.

UK Study Links Falling Birth Rate To "Immature Men" Delaying Adulthood

Mastodon · 28 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new report by the Centre for Social Justice has suggested that delayed maturity among young men is partly behind Britain's falling birth rate. The study, titled Baby Bust, estimates that around 600,000 young women could miss out on motherhood, with one of the reasons being that men are taking longer to feel ready for family life.

The report highlights a shift in modern lifestyles, noting that young men today often take longer to leave home, build careers and settle down. In contrast to previous generations, where men entered the workforce in their teens, today's adolescence can extend into the early twenties.'

Feminists are Losing Control of the Abuse Narrative

Matt · 29 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Hundreds of scientific studies conducted around the world show women are just as likely as men to engage in domestic violence. And for years, feminists have done everything in their power to conceal that basic truth.

But now, media accounts are revealing the ugly truth of female-perpetrated abuse.

Last week, columnist Lisa Britton published a full-length article about female abuse. She highlights the recent case of Taylor Frankie Paul, star of The Secret Lives of Mormon. In 2023, Paul threw a chair and other objects at her then boyfriend, resulting in being charged with aggravated assault. Then last week, her ex- accused Paul of trying to choke him during a recent confrontation.'

Taylor Frankie Paul video reignites fevered online discourse around domestic violence

Mastodon · 30 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When a 45-second video of reality star Taylor Frankie Paul hurling metal barstools at her ex-boyfriend during a 2023 altercation surfaced just days before her season of “The Bachelorette” was set to premiere on ABC, the fallout was swift.

ABC said it wouldn’t air the show. Some cast members from both “The Secret Lives of Mormon Wives” — in which Paul stars — and the “Bachelor” universe distanced themselves. Several content creators who focus on pop culture analysis condemned the display of domestic violence.

But Paul also had a slew of vocal defenders who rushed to social media to label the incident “reactive abuse,” a term used to describe when an abuse victim is pushed to respond in an aggressive manner. It’s a topic that often becomes an online flashpoint among advocates, experts and commentators after high-profile domestic violence cases make headlines.

Online, people said they have noticed parallels between their own abusive relationships and Paul and Mortensen’s on-again, off-again situation.

Some have also pointed to the concept of DARVO, a manipulation tactic common in abusive relationships, when analyzing Paul. The acronym, which became ubiquitous in the discourse around Paul, stands for “deny, attack and reverse victim and offender.”

“Sometimes people are pushed to their limits if they’re dealing with abuse day in and day out, mentally, physically, financially, psychologically,” said Ally Langan, a social media user who shared her analysis about how there’s “no perfect victim” when it comes to abuse, telling NBC News she drew from her own experiences.'

Canada: Sadistic lesbian foster moms made boy, 12, wear soaking wetsuit and joked 'Shiver, shiver dumb fk' before his horrific death, murder trial hears

Mastodon · 30 March 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two lesbian foster moms tortured a 12-year-old boy by forcing him to wear a soaking wetsuit as they mocked him in gut-wrenching messages before he was tragically found dead, prosecutors claim.

The disturbing claims about the death of the Canadian child, identified only as LL, have come to light during the murder trial of Becky Hamber, 44, and 46-year-old Brandy Cooney.

LL, who died on December 21, 2022, was found soaking wet, unresponsive, and emaciated in the basement of the couple's Toronto-area home before being pronounced dead at the hospital, the court was told.

Attorneys finished their closing arguments on Friday, as both women have denied charges of first-degree murder, unlawful confinement, and assault with a weapon, according to Law & Crime.

Prosecutors used their final remarks to detail how the women allegedly starved LL and his younger brother, who has been identified as JL, and forced them to wear wetsuits and helmets.

The foster mothers, who were in the process of adopting the boys, did it because they 'hated' the boys, attorneys told the court.

Messages between the women presented by the prosecutors showed the sick duo allegedly say: 'Shiver, shiver dumb fk."

I Lived The Feminist Dream. I Want My Money Back.

Matt · 2 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We were sold the lie to go after our careers, make money, and make our mark on the world first, and then go find a partner once we've accomplished A through C. We used to have a backstop against some of this—our biological clock ticking louder around our mid-thirties—but we did an end run around that too, with egg freezing. And the worst part of it is that we, women, did this to ourselves. Not a single man told us to do any of this. In fact, historically, they've been pretty petulant about the whole thing, but we pushed right through that sentiment by calling them all "toxic" and threatening them with cancellation if they didn't comply. We are our own worst enemy, and the architects of our own demise.'

Lawyers for female teacher accused of grooming boy then having sex with him when he hit age of consent claim victim is partly to blame

Mastodon · 2 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The lawyer of a New Jersey middle school teacher who is accused of grooming her student from when he was 12 years old claimed the alleged victim was complicit and 'not a babe in the woods'.

Rocco Cipparone, Ashley Fisler's attorney, defended his client in court on Wednesday during a virtual hearing that lasted roughly an hour, according to the New York Post.

Fisler, who was employed at Orchard Valley Middle School, was arrested on March 23 after her alleged victim claimed they were in a sexual relationship in 2021 while he was her student and had sex with him at least six times.

A portion of the hearing centered around the 7,500 text messages exchanged between the former teacher and the boy.

'He's not texting like a kid…his texts are as graphic and direct as any I've seen from an adult,' Cipparone said.

'I'm not saying he's not the age he is, but this is not a babe in the woods scenario that Ms. Finley is creating from a risk and a danger perspective."

Are Family Courts at War with the Constitution?

Matt · 2 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'In this conversation, I sit down with longtime scholar and author Stephen Baskerville to take a hard look at modern family courts, no-fault divorce, paternal rights, and the assumptions behind shared parenting. Stephen argues that what many people take for granted in divorce and custody law may be far more troubling than they realize—not only for fathers and children, but for the rule of law itself. Join us in this challenging and thought-provoking discussion that raises questions most people never hear asked.'

UK: Man blasts 'sexist' sentencing after scorned ex who sent revenge porn to his mother in stalking campaign avoids prison

Mastodon · 4 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eve Yeoman, 24, waged a three-month stalking campaign against her ex after he broke off their relationship, bombarding him with calls and waiting outside his workplace and home.

It culminated in Yeoman sending a 'sexually explicit' photo of her ex, which she took during their relationship without his knowledge or consent, to his mother.

She sent the intimate image with the message: 'This is what your son is like. I hope him and all his family rot in hell.'

But this week, Yeoman escaped a prison sentence and was handed a restraining order, banning her from contacting her ex-boyfriend.

The young man, also 24 and who cannot be named, said she should have gone to prison, and accused the justice system of being 'sexist' by not punishing her more severely.

He said: 'I think her sentence is far too lenient. When I saw the email from the police officer telling me, my first reaction was that it was an April Fools Joke.

'I feel if it was a man who had done all these things he would've most likely received at least two years in jail, which I was expecting to be the outcome of this case.'

Feminists are Relentlessly Advancing Towards Totalitarian Rule

Matt · 4 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two weeks ago the United States made a proposal to the United Nations to define “gender” as referring only to a man or woman. The resolution was co-sponsored by 11 other countries and appeared to be headed for approval (1).

But rather than opening the floor for discussion and debate, feminist opponents invoked a controversial “no action motion” that served to thwart debate and side-track the proposal from further consideration. The “no action motion” is a good example of the underhanded tactics that gender ideologues utilize to suppress democratic procedures at the UN.

These are eight examples of feminist-driven totalitarian policies that have been implemented around the world:'

German men need military permit for extended stays abroad

Matt · 4 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new military service law took effect in Germany at the start of 2026 aimed at boosting the strength of the armed forces amid threats to European security in the wake of Russia's ongoing war against Ukraine.

The legislation was contentious and many people even took to the streets to protest the potential reintroduction of mandatory military service — after conscription was suspended in 2011 — for men.

But another provision in the law has so far gone largely unnoticed.

It relates to a requirement for men between the ages of 18 and 46 to "obtain an approval from the relevant Bundeswehr Career Center if they wish to leave the Federal Republic of Germany for more than three months."'

"Don't let her Rose you"

Green · 5 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Humorous test of girlfriend instincts. Instructional video here.

It was a test, "babe," to see what kind of partner you are. I'm in a fight, and your move is to hold my arms behind my back? ... Have you seen "Titanic"? That scene where Rose is literally in a lifeboat and jumps back onto the ship so she can be with Jack? Every guy saw her do that, and instantly went, "Well, Jack's dead." That's what you did here today. You Rose'd me.

Later in the thread, some posters discuss:

Q. Can anyone try to explain this behaviour? Any women here who has done this who would like to explain the process that leads you to do this?

A. It's evolutionary. She is slightly disadvantaging the OLD sperm donor to allow the NEW sperm donor to prevail (providing a variety of offspring with HER genetic material). This very dark atavistic/evolutionary impulse MUST be tamed in society

Instructional video here.

Masculinity Experts “Map the Manosphere” and Find Nothing Good

Matt · 6 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to them, the manosphere is brimming over with grievance-mongering, grift, and gynocidal fantasy. Nothing in it is good or sincere or well-intentioned. Various sub-genres of online content, including fitness advice, stoicism, and the tradwife lifestyle, are presented as outgrowths of misogynistic extremism from which millions of men and boys require rescue, by force if necessary.

The researchers make no distinction between manosphere content generally and what they call male supremacy—or, indeed, between those terms and a host of others, all pejorative. Their introductory paragraph alone provides a roll call of buzzwords that link any dissent from Marxist-feminist orthodoxy to misogynistic violence.

The manosphere, we’re told, is “bound by the belief that mainstream society is a misandrist conspiracy that disadvantages men.” Manosphere groups “frame contemporary gender politics as a ‘war against men.’” These groups also “frequently engage in misogynistic abuse as well as inciting violence against women,” thus creating an “online environment of accelerating harms.”'

A humourous look at the birth rate and gender relations

Green · 6 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

The Dark Path to Increasing the Birth Rate

Full article by Med Gold here.

Bad news, men. The situation is dire. Time to face the hard truth.

It's critical for men to know they can still get other women if his woman leaves him or he leaves her. And he only has this knowledge if he's had experience with women in the past and knows what parts of himself he needs to cultivate to remain sexually relevant.

This isn't only for his sake, but for the sake of the relationship. His wife will respect him more and will be more likely to treat him well because she'll know, even if subconsciously, that he has options. Women's biggest fear is her man leaving her for a prettier, more fertile woman.

Women constantly need to know whether her man is strong enough to tame her chaotic nature. She will set higher and higher thresholds for him to pass, otherwise known as a shit test. There is a clear evolutionary benefit for them to do this. Women are primed in their bones to fear for an intruding tribe to steal her children, take everything they own, only to then be raped and enslaved. So they constantly poke, prod and see how much they can whittle her man down to nothing, to see if he's tough enough to handle her madness. Men with no experience with women cannot outlast this. Unless a man had a father who could withstand his wife's shit tests in front of his son, men will need to learn how to handle women by dating many of them.

Full article by Med Gold here.

Sia’s brutal statement as eye-watering monthly payment to ex revealed

Mastodon · 8 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Australian music superstar Sia has delivered a not-so-veiled message to her ex-husband on social media, after the eye-watering details of her child support arrangement surfaced in the press overnight.

“good dads get jobs,” the singer tweeted this morning, following the news that she has agreed to pay $US42,500 ($AU60,000) per month in child support payments to her estranged husband Daniel Bernad for their son as part of a joint custody agreement.'

Two Oklahoma elementary school workers accused of attacking young students

Mastodon · 8 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Oklahoma teachers who work at the same elementary school are accused of striking a 10-year-old and carrying another 5-year-old student in a chokehold within months of each other.

Elizabeth Kay Sutton and Ottoria McClung have both been charged with assault and battery upon a student following the respective allegations in the Comanche County District Court in Elgin, about an hour outside of Oklahoma City, The Lawton Constitution reported.

Authorities responded to Elgin Elementary School on Jan. 8 after Principal Gabe Winn reported that Sutton, 38, allegedly grabbed a 10-year-old boy and forced him back into his seat before she struck him in the face.

Security camera footage allegedly captured the moment Sutton moved her arm toward the boy's face, causing him to turn his head away from the teacher's aide.

The footage then showed Sutton swing toward the youngster's face, causing his head to snap back on impact.'

Automatic registration for US military draft to begin in December

Mastodon · 8 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eligible men will automatically be registered into the military draft pool by December as part of an effort to streamline the previous process of self-registration and save money.

The Selective Service System (SSS) — the government agency that maintains a database of men to be called up to serve in the case of a national emergency — submitted a proposed rule to the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs on March 30, according to the office's website.

Most men between the ages of 18 and 25 are already required to register with the Selective Service, but automatic registration was mandated in December 2025 as part of the fiscal 2026 National Defense Authorization Act.

The change, which was meant to save money, "transfers responsibility for registration from individual men to SSS through integration with federal data sources," according to the website.'

What’s Wrong with Feminist Rights?

Matt · 9 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dating from 1949, The Second Sex is still revered as “a foundational tract of contemporary feminism”, “the mothership of feminist philosophy”, and ranked foremost among “must-read” feminist books. But contemporary readers may be astounded to learn that, 76 years ago, author Simone de Beauvoir was prepared to declare a feminist victory:

'Many women today, fortunate to have had all the privileges of the human being restored to them, can afford the luxury of impartiality: we even feel the necessity of it. We are no longer like our militant predecessors; we have more or less won the game; in the latest discussions on women’s status, the UN has not ceased to imperiously demand equality of the sexes, and indeed many of us have never felt our femaleness to be a difficulty or an obstacle...'

Yet by 2002, 31% of women weren’t “satisfied with the treatment of women in society” according to a Gallup survey.

Today, most women (56%) aren’t satisfied.'

College bans men from gym areas to make women, non-binary students more comfortable

Mastodon · 10 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men will be barred from using parts of an on-campus gym at the University of Southern California under a new initiative to make women and non-binary gym-goers feel more comfortable while working out.

The Student Assembly for Gender Empowerment (SAGE) pushed for the new rules in partnership with the Lyon Center, a recreational facility controlled by the university.

SAGE describes itself as a “programming assembly and intersectional feminist organization under the student government, committed to uplifting all voices oppressed by the patriarchy.”'

People view coercive control in relationships as less harmful when the victim is a man

Mastodon · 10 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent study published in Sex Roles suggests that the general public often underestimates the dangers of controlling relationship behaviors when the victims are men. The research provides evidence that people tend to take emotional and psychological abuse more seriously when it is directed at women, leaving men and LGBTQ+ individuals at a higher risk of being overlooked. These findings indicate that societal stereotypes continue to shape how people perceive and respond to unhealthy relationship dynamics.

Coercive control is an ongoing pattern of behavior where one person tries to dominate, isolate, or intimidate their partner. This concept goes beyond a single argument, instead describing a sustained campaign to restrict a person's freedom and independence. Most public awareness campaigns and previous scientific studies have focused heavily on women experiencing this type of abuse from men in heterosexual relationships.'

Is Masculinity in Crisis? These TV Shows Suggest Yes

Matt · 12 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We men are trying. Truly! We're trying to be there for our partners and our kids. Struggling to follow the rules as they were presented to us: work hard, fly straight, die on the beach with a daiquiri in hand. But we're struggling. We're confused and conflicted because the game we thought we were playing turns out to be just as rigged against us as it is against everyone else.

Television is now saturated with self-doubting, affluent white male characters dealing with a world that no longer gives priority to their needs. The problem, as a trio of newish shows suggests, is that the old scripts for proving one's vaunted manliness no longer function the way they once did—if they ever did.'

Jessica McClure Morales, known as 'Baby Jessica,' taken into custody on assault charges

Matt · 14 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Just sad, really. Excerpt:

'Jessica McClure Morales, who gained national attention as “Baby Jessica” in the 1980s when she became stuck in a well, is making news again after being arrested on domestic violence charges.

Officers in Midland, Texas, responded to reports of a domestic disturbance at her home Saturday night, and the 40-year-old Morales was taken into custody.

She has been charged with assault causing bodily injury involving family violence.

In October 1987, Baby Jessica—just 18 months old—fell into a well in the backyard of her aunt’s home in Midland, Texas.

It was a story that caught the attention of the entire country.'

No hook-ups and men must pay: inside the femosphere

Mastodon · 14 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are inherently selfish. They're only interested in one thing. If you do manage to hook one into a relationship, don't be surprised if you find yourself doing all the housework and tending to his emotions as well as his sexual desires — at least, until he decides to replace you with an even more compliant "bangmaid".

I ought to make it clear that these are not my personal beliefs. But if you hang around long enough in the quarter of the internet known as the "femosphere", these are the messages you are going to hear. You'll also discover that there's a solution: women need to harden their hearts and learn to manipulate men, the same way that men have purportedly been manipulating women for millennia.

While the manosphere — a loose network of male influencers who share a retrograde take on gender roles — has grabbed headlines, Netflix dramas and a splashy Louis Theroux documentary, the femosphere tends to go under the radar. But it's a real phenomenon, with tendrils that run through TikTok, Instagram, YouTube and podcasting. And it has real influence on how many young women are approaching the business of dating.'

UK: 'I'm not being listened to' - new health plan launched as women say they are still ignored

Mastodon · 15 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The updated version of the strategy comes against a backdrop of criticism that women's voices are often ignored and marginalised by the NHS.

Streeting said some women have been made to feel like "second class citizens" with their pain treated "as an inconvenience and their symptoms as an overreaction".

In his interview with Woman's Hour, the health secretary described a "culture of medical misogyny, sexism in the NHS, both conscious and unconscious bias", in a system which was "getting disproportionately worse for women".

Among the new measures announced by the government is a new "patient power payment" scheme.

The government says this will enable women to give feedback and report their experiences of treatment. Based on that, money will be allocated to areas needing improvement, and providers getting negative feedback could lose funding.'

Christopher Eccleston attacks woke TV bosses for 'turning white, middle-aged men into toxic villains'

Mastodon · 15 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Christopher Eccleston has hit out at 'woke' TV bosses for 'turning white, middle-aged men into toxic villains' in a scathing rant.

The actor, 62, is well known for his roles in Our Friends In The North, The Leftovers and playing the Ninth Doctor in Doctor Who.

Speaking in a new interview, Christopher claimed there was a 'trend' among antagonists in current scripted dramas.

It comes as he is set to play a sinister cult leader in upcoming six-part Netflix series Unchosen.

Christopher told Radio Times magazine: 'There's a great trend in drama at the moment for antagonists who are toxic, white, apparently heterosexual, late-middle-aged men.

'Thankfully, Julia gave him dimension and placed him in a story of tragedy involving the loss of his son and alcoholism.

Christopher also told the publication: 'Masculinity is in crisis, and it seems it’s particularly white, working-class boys who are being neglected, left to rot by governments and targeted by the far Right.'

Meet the Angry Young Women

Mastodon · 15 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On the internet, women and men have never been more alienated from each other. While the toxic, often hard-right politics of the manosphere have been exhaustively documented, the new generation of female influencers are nearly as extreme – just on the other side of the political spectrum. The “femosphere” spans a range of tones: there are misandrist dating coaches who urge women to reject men altogether, and more explicitly progressive content creators who cover global and domestic politics.

Exclusive polling by Merlin Strategy for the New Statesman reveals that young women, aged between 18 and 30, are by far the most progressive demographic in the UK. Young women are 26 percentage points less likely to feel positively about capitalism than young men, and much less likely to feel the economy works in their favour. Gen Z women are more likely to support causes such as feminism, environmentalism and anti-racism than young men. They also feel much more negatively towards young men than young men feel about them.

I spent the last few months in search of the new left-wing young women. It wasn’t difficult – they were everywhere. But it all felt impossibly bleak. They weren’t excited about their futures. They didn’t like the men they knew, or the idea of those they didn’t. Men were just a threat who had the potential to harm or trap them. This will almost certainly make relationships harder: fewer than half of young women feel men understand them. Young women are much less likely than men to date people who disagree with their politics. People will get lonelier, and angrier. Young women are twice as likely to not want children as young men. And it’s getting worse. Women under 25 are most likely to believe things are “stacked against me, no matter how hard I try”.'

How dating became an extreme sport for men

Matt · 15 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tristan Cressingham didn't expect his relationship of seven months to end in quite as spectacular a fashion as it did.

At the start of November 2025, the 23-year-old photographer received a message from his then girlfriend who, he says, detailed the reasons why she wanted to be single and the things about him which gave her what she called "the ick".

He says it featured a wide-ranging critique about everything from the length of his shorts (too short, apparently) to his keenness to reply to messages.

"Basically, she said she thought I was a bit 'cringe'," Tristan says.

Around the same time, a Vogue feature by Chanté Joseph headlined "Is Having A Boyfriend Embarrassing Now?" went viral. The piece, published in October 2025, didn't decry the appearances of men, but questioned the entire concept of having a heterosexual relationship.

"That someone is inherently 'embarrassed' of being with you is a hurtful thing to hear, especially from someone you thought accepted you, and yet the term is bandied about pretty casually now," says Tristan. "It feels like the inference is that men are inferior to women. I can't imagine a man writing a piece positing that girlfriends are embarrassing would go down well."'

UK: Only a third of young women hold positive view of men, new poll finds

Mastodon · 16 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just 35 per cent of British women under the age of 25 hold a positive view of men, according to a new poll.

The findings show only 11 per cent of young women hold a very positive view, while women under 30 are three times as likely to hold a negative view of men compared to the over-30s.

According to the poll carried out by Merlin Strategy for the New Statesman, young women “don’t care for” young men, believing the feelings are mutual, and citing an over-focus on sexual motivation and a lack of care about political issues, with women aged between 18 and 30 found to be the most progressive demographic in the UK by far.

When asked how she felt about the boys she knew, a girl called Ruby told the New Statesman: “I don’t care for them. They’re not bad people, but they refuse to call out their friends who make other girls uncomfortable. They’ll laugh at jokes that are sexist, racist, homophobic; they don’t care about political issues… I don’t think they like women a lot... I feel like a lot of it is quite sexually motivated with men.” She said men would only discuss subjects such as toxic misogyny if they fancied her.'

South Korea: Why Democratic Party's Women-Only Districts in Gwangju Draw Scrutiny

Mastodon · 16 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Democratic Party of Korea's Gwangju Metropolitan City chapter has finalized candidate matchups for the June 3 local council elections, but several women-designated districts are drawing controversy over candidates with troubled records.

According to the Gwangju chapter on Sunday, the party designated four city council electoral districts as women-only strategic zones to expand female political participation.

The system was introduced to increase opportunities for women politicians to advance in local councils and enhance political diversity.

However, controversy has erupted in Gwangsan District No. 5, where former Gwangju City Council member Kim Gwang-ran — who sparked outrage by concealing a drunk driving incident for an extended period — has filed her candidacy. When the matter came to light, the council held an expulsion vote, and Kim received a six-month suspension from council attendance and party positions.'

'Inspire women': Omaha opens first women-only membership club

Mastodon · 16 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wednesday marked the grand opening of The Legacy Collective, Omaha's first women-only membership club.

It's located near 107th and Pacific streets.

Founders of The Legacy Collective said the space is designed for women to pause, collaborate, and thrive.

Members will enjoy curated experiences, networking opportunities, and amenities aimed at elevating personal and professional growth.

The exclusive club features event space and personal suites, quiet lounges, corporate spaces, a private outdoor patio, and a coffee and wine bar.

"I hope it will encourage women to be vulnerable, to share what their challenges are, their struggles are, and I also hope it will inspire women to build what is most in their hearts, their desires, and their dreams, similar to what we built here at The Legacy Collective," said The Legacy Collective co-founder and CEO Dr. Sasha Shillcutt.'

Women who hate men: Study finds similarities in gendered hate speech on Reddit

Mastodon · 16 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study reveals that online communities dedicated to hating men share strikingly similar behaviors and language patterns with communities dedicated to hating women. The research suggests that gender driven hate speech is a broad phenomenon characteristic of toxic digital groups, regardless of the victim's gender. These findings were published in the journal Scientific Reports.
...
Historically, researchers and content moderators have focused heavily on misogyny, which is the hatred of or prejudice against women. A routine search of academic databases reveals hundreds of thousands of papers examining online misogyny over the past two decades. In contrast, academic attention toward misandry, defined as the hatred of or prejudice against men, remains notably scarce. Studies examining misandry only began to appear around 2014, leaving huge gaps in the scientific understanding of digital harassment.'

“The Hypocrisy Is Exhausting”: Sabrina Carpenter’s Men-Related Pattern In Videos Sparks Outrage

Matt · 16 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A strange pattern across Sabrina Carpenter’s music videos was hotly discussed online.

Netizens made claims of double standards after they noticed that the 26-year-old singer’s videos had a specific rule: the men rarely survive.

“What would happen if a male artist did this to women?” one asked online, while another wrote, “Imagine the outrage if the roles were reversed.”

Sabrina Carpenter’s music videos have an exaggerated way of storytelling, where men don’t seem to be very safe.

Her hit tracks like Taste, Tears, Feather, and Manchild depict male characters meeting violent ends, but in a comical and dark-humor kind of way.

The Grammy winner herself has addressed the running gag in her video on a few occasions.'

Funny retrospective on women's liberation

Green · 17 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Comedian Leonora Jonie delivers a humorous retrospective on women's liberation.

You and I are seeing the same BS online that every day makes you wake up and go, "Oh, this is why our grandparents chained women to a stove and said no rights for you." Contrary to our suppositions, contrary to everything women have said they wanted their rights for, it turns out that when you liberate women and let them run wild, they become whs. Who would have thought? They use every avenue to become a wh. Case number one, one of the bestelling pieces of women's literature is this right here. It's called Morning Glory.

Australia: A new minister in Victoria will tackle the manosphere. Here’s what they should do

Mastodon · 17 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Victoria has its first minister for men and boys. Part of a cabinet reshuffle, the role was given to Frankston MP Paul Edbrooke.

It comes with an explicit dual focus: on one hand, boys’ and men’s own wellbeing, and on the other, the harms boys and men perpetrate.

The role has also been signalled as being a response to the influence of online misogynistic cultures, including the manosphere.

The establishment of this cabinet position is politically significant and offers both substantial opportunities and potential risks. The key will be following the evidence, however uncomfortable.

The timing of this new portfolio is not accidental. It reflects a growing recognition that something has shifted in how misogyny is circulating, particularly among Australian men and boys.

In recent years, research has documented the rapid uptake of manosphere content in Australian schools. Teachers are reporting a marked increase in misogynistic language, resistance to women’s authority, and the normalisation of sexist and violent attitudes among some boys.

Crucially, Edbrooke acknowledged that responding to the manosphere will be a key focus of his portfolio.

It’s also essential that beliefs in boys and men “falling behind” or being victims of feminism and gender equality are strongly refuted. These beliefs are promoted by manosphere myths that cause significant harm.

Overall, the creation of a minister for men and boys signals the Victorian government is willing to engage with complex and sensitive questions about gender, men’s violence and misogyny.'

Angry young women

Matt · 18 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By now, we are used to hearing about the radicalisation of young men – that unfortunate cohort, captured by the manosphere, enchanted by men's rights activists, veering to the populist right.

But what about the young women? If we want to understand why the political gender gap is widening, we need to look to those moving sharply to the left. To do so, Emily Lawford, the New Statesman's online editor, has spent months in the femosphere – at The Feminist Library, deep in their TikTok feeds, at university feminist societies and Palestinian solidarity marches.

With exclusive polling from Scarlett Maguire, the director and founder of Merlin Strategy, our cover this week asks: Who are these radical young women? What do they believe? And how will their feelings of disenfranchisement and isolation manifest at the polls?'

Western society’s prejudice against masculinity is becoming toxic

Matt · 19 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the presumed values of liberalism is moderation. Societies that are genuinely liberal do not demand that we suppress our natural instincts. They provide a framework for them to be expressed responsibly. This is the very foundation of a healthy society.

It is why we, in the West, do not stop people from making public displays of affection or criminalise extra-marital relationships between consenting adults. A liberal society trusts its citizens to navigate these aspects of life without state-imposed sanction.

But Britain has been changing. Driven by a well-intentioned but now all-consuming fear of sexism, and the spectre of a kind of “toxic masculinity” that was indeed rampant decades ago, society today wants to deny men the right to freely express their masculinity. Many seek to dismantle the role that men have played in society for millennia – being responsible for the defence of their family and their country, and for carrying the flags that represented the societies to which they belonged.'

Letter: On women and selective service

Matt · 19 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Re: “Automatic draft registration is coming for these men. Here’s how it will work." online story.

The federal government’s move highlights and locks in a clear inequity: The policy automatically registers men, but not women.

Men who fail to register can face fines, imprisonment and the loss of federal benefits. Soon, they won’t even have a choice. Yet, these legal obligations apply to only one sex.'

When Will Feminism Be “Enough”?

Matt · 19 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Throughout many of my debates with feminists, I've asked a simple question: “When will you stop fighting? What is going to be good enough for you?” Most of them can't give me an answer. It's not because the question is confusing or unfair, but because they can't admit the flaws of their own movement.

Women are outperforming men on every metric right now: college enrollment, graduate degrees, consumer spending power, social mobility. Yet we still see major influencers like Alex Cooper of Call Her Daddy claiming women are oppressed and will never be as successful as men, while signing a $125 million, three-year deal with SiriusXM. At a certain point, you have to ask: do these women actually want to be oppressed?

I'm a social media influencer, and I'm honest enough to admit that I would not be as successful if I were a man. In fact, I've seen men put out very similar messages to mine, but attractive women will always be at an advantage when it comes to media and entertainment. Anyone who denies this is clinging to a victim mentality that has become more valuable than the truth.'

Why female pop stars are lambasting mediocre men

Mastodon · 21 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judging by her lyrics, Sabrina Carpenter has mixed feelings towards the opposite sex. She finds her paramours attractive, exciting—and disappointing. In “Manchild”, the lead single on her new album, she complains her lover is “stupid”, “slow” and “useless”. She asks, mocking a caveman, “Why so sexy if so dumb? / And how survive the Earth so long?”

“Manchild” is not the only track on the record to lambast mediocre men: time and again Ms Carpenter takes aim at blokes who can barely “do the dishes” or “assemble a chair from IKEA”. The American pop star suggests her beaux are dumb, as when, in “Sugar Talking”, she says: “You’re having these epiphanies, big word for a real small mind.” Some do not understand basic grammar. In “Slim Pickins”, a hit from last year, she complains about a man who “doesn’t even know the difference between there, their and they are”.'

Another generation of men will be left behind as Australia creates a generation of lost boys

Mastodon · 21 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the past few decades we've focused on attracting more young women to higher education. We've succeeded in closing one gender divide, only to open another.

Thousands of young men are missing out on university and, with it, the life-changing opportunities for better careers, higher-paying jobs and social mobility.

Australia now faces a generation of "lost boys" as young men fall behind, not only at university but also throughout the education system.

Federal Education Minister Jason Clare is to be applauded for flagging a parliamentary inquiry into the factors responsible for differences between boys and girls, starting with NAPLAN and including school attendance rates, university, TAFE and apprenticeship enrolments. Opposition education spokesman Julian Leeser also has advocated strongly on the issue.'

Women far outnumber men in law school, med school, vet school and other professional programs

Mastodon · 21 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For that and other reasons, women studying veterinary medicine now outnumber men by four to one.

It’s not just veterinary school. The number of women has surpassed the number of men in law school, medical school, pharmacy school, optometry school and dental school.

Women in the United States now earn 40 percent more doctoral degrees overall, and nearly twice as many master’s degrees, as men, according to the U.S. Department of Education — a trend transforming high-end work.

This is no longer some distant statistical abstraction. Americans can see it when they take their pets to the vet or their kids to the dentist, need a lawyer or an eye exam, see a therapist or pick up a prescription.'

Gen Z men with college degrees now have the same unemployment rate as non-grads—a sign that the higher education payoff is dead

Mastodon · 21 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gen Z is struggling to break into the entry-level job market—but young male college graduates may be hurting the most.

Data from the Federal Reserve indicates that the unemployment rate among recent college graduates is on the rise, at about 5.6%.

Although it remains lower than the 7.8% rate among all young workers between 22 and 27 years old, men with a college degree now have roughly the same unemployment rate as young men who didn't go to college, according to an analysis of U.S. Current Population Survey data by the Financial Times.

In comparison, around 2010, non-college-educated men experienced unemployment rates over 15%, whereas the rate among college graduates was closer to 7%.

It's a stark sign that the job market boost once promised by a degree has all but vanished and that employers care less about credentials than they once did when hiring for entry-level roles.'

The femosphere has turned a generation of women against men – but here's why I still love them

Mastodon · 21 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men, well, there is a real problem – young women don't rate you. According to a new poll, only 35 per cent of British women under 25 hold a positive view of men, with just 11 per cent expressing a very positive outlook.

It gets slightly better in the under-30s – with 50 per cent of women having a favourable view of men. The findings also show that women under 30 are three times more likely to hold a negative view of men, compared with women over 30.

What contributes to women's unadoring views of men, according to the research carried out for The New Statesman, is men's perceived overemphasis on sexual motivation and a nonchalance about political issues – with one in six women claiming they wouldn't date a man if he had opposing political views about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict or Trump.

And while women think the tut-tutting between sexes is mutual, in fact they feel more negatively about men than the other way around, with 72 per cent of men having a favourable view of young women, according to the poll.'

How Feminism Created An Insufferable Class Of Supposedly ‘Infallible Females’

Mastodon · 21 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The road to female infallibility started innocently enough, with most believing that feminism was only trying to level the playing field. Things then accelerated quickly. Feminism had a secret weapon: It was kryptonite for men. Given men’s natural disinclination to fight with women, good men simply went silent about women’s lib, while the bad ones “benefitted” from and promoted it. Without any societal restraint, feminists ran amok, eventually saturating the culture with female dominance, entitlement, and self-righteous confidence.

Infallible females also significantly affect work environments, particularly through quotas and DEI hiring. Mediocre female employees have been flattered, platformed, and promoted, and the workplace “feminized” — as Helen Andrews has made plain — while femininity was eradicated. The most toxic of women are tolerated for fear that they will take their tale of woe to a deeply sympathetic press or courtroom. The result is that conscientious male and female employees are demoralized, turning the pursuit of excellence into a farce.

Then came the psychological changes. Reason was out; emotions were in. Anything a woman felt gained her access to the prized status of “victim,” easily opened by claims of feeling triggered, offended, or imposed upon. The victim card had the added benefit of dissolving any societal or familial responsibilities. Duties and roles evaporated; emotional whim and self-absorption settled in comfortably.'

UK: Drive to call out misogyny in police ranks branded a flop after diversity chiefs got just seven responses

Mastodon · 22 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A drive to encourage police officers to report misogyny in the ranks ‘flopped’ after it led to only seven online submissions.

They were able to upload pictures – for example screengrabs of offensive WhatsApp messages – in a bid to help stamp out sexist attitudes.

It came after former Chief Constable Sir Iain Livingstone branded Police Scotland institutionally misogynist and racist.

The photo scheme, called Photovoice, was described as an ‘innovative approach which enabled participants to capture and share an insight into their world’.

But the Mail can reveal only seven responses were received – and no disciplinary action was taken in relation to any of them.

Scottish Tory community safety spokesman Sharon Dowey said: ‘Misogyny in all walks of life must be tackled, but this well-intentioned scheme has clearly flopped within Police Scotland.'

When Men Fall Behind, We Blame Them

Matt · 23 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades, we've been told a simple story: when women fall behind, it's injustice. When men fall behind, it's failure.

That may sound exaggerated. But new experimental research suggests it isn't.

A recent large-scale study involving more than 35,000 Americans found something striking. When participants were presented with a situation in which a worker had fallen behind—earned less, performed worse, or ended up with nothing—people responded differently depending on whether that worker was male or female.

When the low performer was a man, significantly more participants chose to give him nothing. When the low performer was a woman, more participants redistributed support. Even more revealing, participants were more likely to believe that the man had fallen behind because he didn't try hard enough.'

Millions of Clicks on Sexual Assault—Where’s The Outrage?

Mastodon · 24 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month, CNN published an investigation exposing a global online ‘rape academy’ where men gather to swap advice and encourage one another to drug and assault their wives, film them while unconscious, and evade detection.

I follow women’s issues closely and I almost missed this story. That alone should tell us something about how little attention it’s receiving.

According to CNN’s reporting, one porn site, Motherless.com, hosts 20,000 videos of so-called “sleep content,” with descriptive tags such as #passedout and #eyecheck, with hundreds of thousands of views. In February of this year alone, the site received around 62 million visits.

Let that sink in—62 million clicks in just one month.

Men logging on to learn how to drug and violate their wives, their partners, the women sleeping beside them, the people who trust them most. This is not a niche crime or a fringe corner of the internet. This is a global network that teaches men how to drug and rape women, and it is met with near silence.'

CNN reported on 'online rape academy,' but '62M men' figure misrepresents findings

https://www.snopes.com/fact-check/cnn-online-rape-academy/

Misandry: Justified, Harmful, Or Maybe Even Necessary?

Matt · 24 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A few weeks ago, while aimlessly scrolling through TikTok videos, I was grabbed by an unusual caption. The video, posted by a woman simply known as “@LTP823”, features the unique tagline “Teaching my 5-year-old daughter to be a misandrist”.

LTP remains semi-anonymous on her TikTok account, refraining from sharing her name beyond those three initials, and a brief bio describing her as a divorced mom and book lover from Washington, D.C. Misandry is commonly known as a strong dislike or hatred towards men. Its definition, according to Merriam-Webster, is simply “a hatred of men”.

Immediately intrigued, I went from aimlessly scrolling to being intently focused on the video. LTP explains that her daughter will inevitably be subjected to growing up in a patriarchal society, and that she wants her daughter to go into the world with an “inflated sense of self”.

LTP has deliberately selected female providers to be part of her young daughter’s life, whether as her doctor, dentist, or other professional.'

Thousands of South Korean women have abandoned men by shunning sex and marriage

Mastodon · 25 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Korea's fertility rate – the average number of babies born to each woman – is just 0.8, provoking profound fears for its future, since this is far below the 2.1 level needed to ensure population stability without immigration.

The nation has become the most striking example of the global decline in birth rates, a decline that has left two-thirds of people living in countries with fertility rates below this critical level. There is concern that half of South Korea's rapidly ageing population will be pensioners within three decades, making its population the oldest in human history.

But it is South Korea where the problem is greatest. Many of the concerns facing its women are familiar to us in Britain, such as soaring housing costs, workplace sexism and the trade-off between a career and motherhood.

'It is really hard to survive as a woman here,' she said. 'Our movement is not about rejecting men – I don't want to spend my limited time alive hating men – but against a patriarchal system. It's about cherishing women. And it is ok not to have a man.'

4B is shorthand for four Korean words that start with bi – meaning 'no': bihon (rejection of marriage), biyeonae (no dating), bisekseu (abstaining from sex) and bichulsan (refusal of childbirth). Many other women declare themselves 'bihon', denoting their choice to remain single forever.

One legacy, however, is that feminism has become a highly-charged label – with a majority of young men bitterly opposed to the concept, since they believe they are the victims of discrimination.

Conservative politicians have won support from young men by campaigning on aggressively anti-feminist platforms, blaming them for the low fertility rate, while young women vote overwhelmingly for more liberal parties.

'Women believe they are way short of where they should be and most men tend to view women as fear-mongering, thinking they are blaming other people for their problems and not viewing reality objectively,' said Oh Chan-ho.

Several male students, however, accused women of 'playing the victim' and demanding more rights than men. 'They push it too far and want to be above us,' said one. 'Feminists hate men,' said 20-year-old Chan, bluntly.'

The Manosphere Isn’t The Problem. Feminism Is.

Matt · 25 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the video, the three women discuss the findings of a poll they carried out on Gen Z and their attitudes towards the opposite sex. The results of the poll certainly aren’t a surprise to me and won’t be to anyone who has been actually paying attention. But the women seem to be taken aback and surprised by the findings.

It turns out, drum roll…… young men don’t hate young women anywhere near as much as young women hate men. What a shock!

For me, the results are depressingly predictable. What was fascinating to me was listening to their response to it. Lot’s of “what could be going on here?” and “I don’t really understand why”…..

The lady conducting the interview keeps saying over and over “that’s interesting”. Interesting? It’s “interesting” that huge swathes of young women seem to inexplicably hate men? What could possibly be the reason for this?

They do actually admit that it might have something to do with “progressive” online culture and young women being radicalised online. So they are making some vague attempts to get to the bottom of things. But how about the elephant in the room ladies? As in, ALL the other aspects of normal, mainstream, every-day culture where young women are being radicalised?'

Women Can’t Build Civilization

Matt · 26 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent studies and discussions have raised the alarm about female power. Pundits such as Helen Andrews, Cory Clark, and Bo Winegard (see my discussion and links here) have made the evidence-based case that women in general are not as committed as men in general to objective excellence and the pursuit of truth. Women overall prefer equity, inclusion, and compassion for victims.

When women are the majority in an organization, the values of the organization shift away from meritocracy and toward group consensus, the suppression of dissent, and protection of the vulnerable.

These trends strongly suggest that women are not likely, as a group, to uphold and maintain the traditional foundations of civilizational flourishing: equality before the law, free speech, truth-seeking, competitive excellence, and rigorous debate. All of these, in fact, are already in evident decline—undermined, attacked, flouted and fought against by feminist lawyers, advocates, academics, judges, journalists, teachers, social workers, political leaders, legislators, and CEOs.

The concerns raised by Andrews and others are important, but behind that discussion lies a more fundamental question about women’s role in civilization, namely: do women build civilization?

Do women as a sex—leaving aside a relatively small number of extraordinary individuals—have it in them to compete and innovate at the same level as men?'

The Men Who Want Their Foreskins Back

Matt · 27 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Daniel Floyd loves a long, droopy foreskin, but his own was cut off when he was a baby. Around his fourth birthday, he started having recurring nightmares of being strapped to a table with his limbs splayed out while a doctor or neighbor cut off his genitals, sometimes with garden shears. The dreams continued until middle school, which is when the feeling of the tip of his penis rubbing against his underwear started to drive him crazy. It was irritating and uncomfortable, and it filled him with rage.

Through online forums, he discovered the concept of foreskin restoration: trying to re-cover the head of the penis — essentially, undoing a circumcision — by consistently stretching the remaining skin using tape, devices, or the hands God gave you. Erroneously thinking he couldn't purchase the equipment as a minor, the day Floyd turned 18 he bought himself a "TLC Tugger" kit, which he used to clamp the skin on his penis between two plastic cones placed around the tip of his penis. He attached the cones to an elastic strap that the manufacturer recommended wearing wrapped around his leg for 8 to 12 hours a day.

Over the next decade, Floyd, now 30, also tried pumping his foreskin with air to inflate it like a balloon, pulling his skin with his hands, stretching it with a tiny tension rod, and doing red-light therapy on his crotch to encourage new skin to grow. While reading, working in construction, seeing clients as a massage therapist (his current profession), and sleeping, Floyd experimented with wearing several different gadgets on the head of his penis. They gradually stretched the skin, but after 12 years, the round, pink tip of his penis — the glans — remained stubbornly uncovered. Floyd began to consider more drastic measures.'

Fiendish feminists' suicide gotcha

Mastodon · 28 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last Christmas, one of our major suicide prevention groups had a call from a very distressed, suicidal man. The counsellor did his best to support him and arranged to keep in touch. But there was no answer to the counsellor's follow up calls. Following their organisation's duty of care rules, the counsellor made a call to NSW police, fearing the man was at imminent risk of harm.

The police reaction was shocking. "Is there a female partner who could be at risk? Is he likely to hurt her," asked the police officer, whose immediate concern was not checking on the man in crisis but rather assessing the risk that the suicidal man could be violent.

Welcome to the latest triumph of feminist policy innovation:

A system that looks at the man standing on the edge of the abyss — the group dying by suicide at three times the rate of women — and decides the most urgent question to ask is not 'How do we save you?' but 'Have you been hurting women?'

It is a policy of breathtaking intellectual dishonesty and moral inversion.'

IT consultant husband accused of driving his wife to suicide through 'tsunami of abuse' is cleared

Matt · 29 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A wealthy IT consultant accused of causing his wife to take her own life through a 'tsunami of abuse' has been acquitted after he argued she had been a fantasist who had set him up.

Christopher Trybus, 44, sobbed in the dock as he was cleared of the manslaughter of Tarryn Baird, 34, who was found hanged in the garage of the couple's five-bedroom house.

He has always vehemently denied that he was in any way responsible for her death.

Trybus was also cleared of controlling and coercive behaviour and two charges of rape following more than 40 hours of jury deliberation at Winchester Crown Court.

Tarryn killed herself on November 28, 2017, hours after she made a series of calls to mental health services and a day after she had attended her local police station - leading to almost a decade in which Trybus has been under investigation or on trial.'

Newfoundland's only university advertises five professor jobs that ban straight white men from applying

Matt · 29 April 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Canadian university is advertising five research positions, but applicants must be a part of the LGBTQ+ community to apply.

Memorial University of Newfoundland posted five new Canada Research Chair (CRC) positions that are open to current employees of the liberal arts school, but there's a catch.

In order to be eligible to apply, the applicant has to be a member of an equity group, including the 2SLGBTQIA+ people, a woman, Indigenous, a racialized person, or a disabled, according to the job postings viewed by the Daily Mail.

The five-to-seven-year gig, which pays up to $200,000 CAD ($145,000 USD) annually, currently has positions open for a chair in computational biochemistry, a chair in AI-driven navigation for Arctic and harsh environments, and a chair in musculoskeletal health and genomic map of the Newfoundland, among others.

Previously, CRC roles, posted in 2022, did not carry the same requirements.

Three of the current positions are also expected to lead to a tenured or tenure-track job after completion of the research fellowship.'

Hating Men Isn't Improving Your Life

Matt · 3 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The backlash was swift. Women I had been friends with for years, who were supporters of girls' education and mentors in STEM programs, laughed in my face. Some in DC literally walked me out of meetings. "You're internalizing the patriarchy," a woman told me. Another accused me of "gaslighting survivors." I realized then that the very institutions meant to empower women had become factories for grievance. We were radicalizing girls to view every setback as systemic oppression and every man as the enemy rather than building confidence.

Fast-forward a decade, and the problem hasn't improved. It's on overdrive. Young men, sensing the hypocrisy of pop feminism, are shifting rightward in droves. They've watched boys get pushed to the back of the line for decades while girls received every resource, most of the scholarships, every "you go, girl" motivational talk, and all the attention for their issues. Now they're tired of the constant blaming and shaming. As an advocate for boys and men as well for the past 8 years, I've watched the very real rise in misogyny closely. Online spaces have filled up with resentment on both sides, but while the "manosphere" gets endless negative coverage, the other side flies under the radar.

Female-led misandry is mainstream, and it's in our schools, our media, our Hollywood blockbusters, and our university lecture halls. Podcasts hosted by women casually trash men as toxic, incompetent, sexist or irredeemable. TikTok feeds overflow with videos declaring "men are the problem" or "why I'm done with dating." The hatred isn't just on the fringes. It's everywhere.'

The Emerging Female Wage Premium

Matt · 5 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across the Western world, the public narrative on the topic of employment has for decades been dominated by a single, persistent claim: that women are paid less than men because of systemic disadvantage. In Australia, the repetition of that narrative is near-ritualistic. It shapes policy, media coverage, and institutional priorities, and it is treated less as a hypothesis to be tested than a moral truth to be affirmed.

Yet recent data tells a more complex story. Research from the e61 Institute shows that typical young Australian women now out-earn typical young men on an hourly basis by around 7–8 percent among those working full-time hours.

This isn't a marginal or isolated finding. This "female wage premium" persists through the twenties and evens out only in the thirties. Over the past decade, young women have also experienced stronger wage growth relative to men of any age cohort. Female unemployment rates are lower than those for males. Similar patterns are emerging in major cities across the United States and the United Kingdom.

These patterns cannot be characterised as a small statistical quirk. A structural shift is occurring. And like all structural shifts in the area of employment, it brings with it consequences that extend well beyond wages.'

The UN Is All About Equality, Except When It Comes To Men

Matt · 8 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The UN, the grand institution of peace and equality, has a blind spot when it comes to half the world's population. And no, it's not the half that gets 16 dedicated days of recognition, including International Women's Day, Girl Child Day, and even Rural Women's Day. Boys and men, it appears, get the short end of the stick, or rather, no stick at all.

So we'll start with the calendar. The UN proudly champions gender-specific days, with all spotlighting women and girls. That's fantastic—empowering women is great. I've volunteered in areas of the world where girls and women are in dire need of support. But where's the love for boys and men?

International Men's Day, observed globally since 1999 to address issues like male suicide, father's rights, and boys' education, gets zero official acknowledgment from the UN, and I believe it's a missed opportunity. Instead, we get World Toilet Day. Yes, you read that right: November 19th, which happens to be International Men's Day, is also the UN's chosen date since 2013 to celebrate... toilets. I'd like to think this wasn't a deliberate jab, but the irony stings.'

Gender emissions gap: Rich white men’s jobs, diets and hobbies found to be ‘bad for the planet’

Mastodon · 9 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new paper by more than 20 scientists from 13 different countries has analysed existing research on climate change, global warming, and environmental collapse – and how they connect with what men do.

Published in Norma: International Journal for Masculinity Studies, the paper, titled ‘Men, masculinities and the planet at the end of (M)Anthropocene’, covers questions as diverse as climate denial in Canadian pipeline politics, environmental impacts of Chinese policies in the Pacific Ocean, pro-meat online influencers in Finland, and positive action by men activists in Africa, Latin America, the UK, and globally.'

The Disappearing Male Student

Mastodon · 9 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many have discussed the rapid decline in trust and esteem for institutions of higher education. Most settle on the fact that it is a problem of their own making. This is true: exorbitant prices, activism, suppression of speech, and discrimination in admissions. These are all problems created from within. So is the guiding ideology that views masculinity as toxic.

As Helen Andrews has pointed out, the damaging effects of wokeness coincide with the increased presence of women in institutional leadership. Universities were once factories of progress—not to be mistaken with progressive—led by innovative risk-takers. Today, they operate more as re-education camps designed to stamp out any hint of masculinity, labeling it as toxic. The feminization of higher education is an ideological takeover that has declared war on the characteristics of the “alpha male,” letting intellectual curiosity and excellence melt in the acid bath of cancel culture.'

Misogyny Or Mentorship? New Study On Social Media Reshaping Young Men

Mastodon · 9 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In healthier spaces, boys are using social media to discuss topics they may struggle to talk about offline, including grief, mental health, relationships, and loneliness. Nagata says such interactions can reduce isolation and even help normalize emotional vulnerability.

But he says the same platforms can also amplify more harmful messages, especially because algorithms tend to reward provocative, divisive, or emotionally charged content.'

Women are the future

Mastodon · 9 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All the leading men of yesterday learned it from women. Women are the veins of history, the blood supply of humanity. Great men of the future depend on today's beat of a woman's heart.

A person can make the case that being of value to the community comes through maternal lines. Women embody the worth of doing hard things, of risking, of caring for others without drama, or making it weird.
...
Every woman I know is a server, a survivor, a success. Women are the leaders we need because they are the people we need. We have effectively evolved women to lead us by depending on them as we do.

What does it take to make better humans today? It takes loving women. The eons spent rising above misogyny caused a Neuro Darwinism within women in our species. Neurological images reveal that women have evolved brain connections optimized for species survival. Misogyny made women better. Stronger. Resilient. Wiser. And over it.'

MPs v the manosphere: ministers battle misogyny as they take a different message to men and boys across Australia

Mastodon · 9 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Gender equality isn't women versus men or a zero-sum game," Ged Kearney says.

"It delivers better outcomes for everyone. It's important that, as we engage with men and boys, we make that really clear."

But as the assistant minister for the prevention of family violence sets off on a national listening tour with the special envoy for men's health, Dan Repacholi, they are up against a pervasive and very different conception of how men and women relate, fostered by the loud voices of the manosphere and men's rights activists.'

But what the activists want is not what Repacholi and Kearney are promoting.

Simon Copland, an expert in misogyny, extremism and male violence and an honorary fellow at the Australian National University, says those groups are tightly focused on the family courts and the idea that men are discriminated against.

They also consistently claim that women make false rape and domestic violence claims, he says.'

Yes, I'm a feminist. No, I won't split the bill.

Matt · 9 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism is about having equal rights. But having the same rights as a man doesn't mean I have to date like one. Attraction isn't political. It's visceral. And nothing is going to make my vagina shrivel up faster than a man who hesitates or asks to go 50/50.

If you ask me out, I should feel hosted. Seamlessly. Whether you like me by the end of the meal or not. In fact, if you ask me out to dinner, I don't even want to see the bill. Money is not a concept that I even want to acknowledge on a first date. It is big fat not my fucking business.

Early courtship shouldn't feel like a business partnership. I'm not negotiating a marriage contract on date one.

Secure men aren't threatened by this. They're energised by it. If generosity feels like humiliation to you, we are not aligned, sir.'

State of Wednesday: CTRL F 'WHITE MEN'

Matt · 11 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Trump Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) is suing The New York Times for workplace discrimination. A current employee of the Times – you read that correctly – is working with administration lawyers on a suit charging that the paper is racist against white men and that racism is a matter of employment policy.

Totally illegal by the way and has been for decades. Elites would be shocked to learn that Civil Rights law is totally neutral and also applies to white men (and Christians!).

The craziest part is The New York Times has all but admitted to the crime already. In 2021, they publicly issued a “Call to Action” to hire and promote more “people of color” and “women.”

The suit is stunning if only for the fact that it recounts – quite concisely – how the paper publicly laid out its plan to violate the law.

Read it for yourself. Pages 3-???. (This is difficult to find in legacy media coverage because no liberal reporter would ever link to the primary document, but that’s why SOTD exists, folks.)

‘Heat, floods and droughts make men more violent to women’: Natasha Walter on eco-feminism in a world on fire

Mastodon · 11 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“All the threats that women face seem to be amplified by climate change,” she says now. “I think people get that, when resources are scarce, women might have less access, so, if there’s food scarcity, women and girls go hungry more than men and boys. Or if there’s a lack of resources in a family such that not all the children can go to school, it will be boys who get their education, and girls might be married off younger.” Bleaker still is the 2007 study she cites showing women were more likely than men to die in climate disasters. (In the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami, for example, women were more likely to have drowned because they were less likely to have been taught to swim). That stark gender difference isn’t found in more egalitarian societies, she says, suggesting survival is linked to women’s status and role: if anything, one US study showed higher fatalities for men in a natural disaster, because they were more often the first responders.'

Matchmaking in China: Not romance, but a business deal

Green · 11 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Must be seen to be believed.

China Observer documents the extreme demands made by rural brides in China. (Video here.)

Quotes:
Woman: "Do you own a house?"
Man: "Uh, yes, we have one at the village."
Woman: "So, I'll have to go and live in the village with you."
Man: "Having a house in the village is pretty good, isn't it?"
Woman: "Aren't a car and a house the basic requirements these days?"
Man: "Oh, so what are your requirements then?"
Woman: "I want a bride price of 288,000, five gold items, and a diamond ring, plus an Apple."
Man: "Apple? What Apple?"
Woman: "An Apple iPhone, of course."
Man: "But don't you already have one?"
Woman: "It's not the latest model. I want the 17 Pro Max."
Man: "Oh, is that not good enough?"
Woman: "Not good enough. That won't satisfy me."

Narrator: This is the reality of rural matchmaking. There's no romance, no shy courtship, just a checklist of material demands from the traditional expectations such as a car and the house, a high bride price, and five gold items and a diamond ring to modern-day necessities like the iPhone. This isn't about marriage. It's nothing more than blatant demands made with a sense of entitlement.

Narrator: This isn't about finding a partner for matchmaking. It's clearly about looking for someone to pick up the tab. But if you think this is the worst of it, you're underestimating the level of absurdity in the rural matchmaking market.

Man 2: "Honestly, it's really hard to find a wife these days. I'm 38. I have a house and a car, and I'm 1.78 m tall. It should be easy for me, but it's actually not. Women's expectations are too high. They already want a house in the city, at least 100 m, worth more than 600,000, which I can't afford. A few days ago, the matchmaker brought a woman along and there were six people in total. They all wanted 200 yen each as a meeting gift. And then after adding me on WeChat, they never replied. There are too many scammers like this in the matchmaking business now. I've already lowered my standards a lot. I don't care if she's a bit unattractive or short. Around 1 m is fine. She can be a bit overweight, too, as long as her character is good and she's willing to live a good life with me. But I still can't afford to get married. The average person only makes 6 or 7,000 a month. Saving 2 or 3,000 a year is already a big deal. Even after working for 20 years, you still can't afford a wedding. Looking at the bride price and the negative trends now, I feel so helpless. If I don't get married, I feel like I'm letting myself and my family down. What's the point of living if I don't have someone to rely on in my old age? If I get sick, no one will take care of me. That's the reality. It's so stressful."

...

Narrator: Interestingly, the matchmaking dilemma in cities mirrors the rural situation in a peculiar way. In rural areas, there is a leftover man crisis, while in cities, it's leftover woman anxiety. In traditional Chinese views, marriage often follows the male higher female lower matching gradient where women tend to look for men with higher economic conditions and education than themselves. While men are willing to marry women whose conditions are slightly lower than theirs. If we divide men and women by their marriage conditions into four categories, A, B, C, and D. A men marry B women. B men marry C women. C men marry D women. So who's left? the most eligible A woman and the least eligible D men. Therefore, rural leftover men are essentially the victims of the urban rural wealth gap, which causes women to flow in a one-way direction. Meanwhile, leftover women of the cities are a result of the clash between women's growing independence and the traditional mindset to admire the strong. While they seem to be living in two different worlds, both groups are ultimately struggling in the same tangled web of marriage and dating.

Full video here.

Why is education failing boys?

Matt · 16 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But more than that, based on conversations I have had with more than 1000 young people in the last year – for the report I co-authored with Shuab Gamote, Inside the Mind of a 16-year-old, and more recently for the work I am doing on young people who are NEET, it has become clearer that something is going on here with boys that needs further research and investigation.

When you talk to boys, you realise quickly that there are multiple interlocking issues. For different boys they come together in different combinations: weak literacy, a dwindling sense of belonging, few strong role models, punitive discipline codes in school, online misogyny, lack of purpose, limited practical routes into adulthood and a culture that treats boys as a problem to be fixed, not as young people with strengths to build on.'

When False Accusation Becomes Cultural

Matt · 16 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is something deeply destabilizing about being falsely accused.

Not merely because of the accusation itself, but because of what false accusations reveal about human psychology, social fear, moral signaling, and the fragility of reputation.

Most people understand that false accusations can devastate an individual life. What we understand less clearly is what happens when accusation dynamics move beyond individuals and begin operating at the level of an entire sex.

To understand that larger cultural question, we first have to understand the psychology of false accusation itself.'

Forget the manosphere. It’s angry Leftie women we need to worry about

Matt · 21 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To no one’s surprise, this mass seething isn’t making the Gen Z sisterhood happy. The Left’s own in-house magazine, The New Statesman, has a cover story this week titled “Meet the angry young women: the new feminism reshaping Britain”. The mag’s poll found (once again) that “young women, aged between 18 and 30, are by far the most progressive demographic in the UK”. The writer, Emily Lawford, zipped up and down the land interrogating feminist influencers and hanging out in a trans-inclusive student women’s book group, a Unison “youth wing” ceilidh and… well, you get the gist.

Suffice to say, Lawford’s findings make for deeply depressing reading that should trouble us all. The more privileged class of women “are the most pessimistic of all” and less likely than working-class contemporaries to believe hard work will propel them to success. Equally startling was the fact young progressive females seem decidedly more negative about their male peers than vice versa, while “white women are more likely to feel the country is racist than non-white women”.

I was reminded of how US commentator Rob Henderson coined the phrase “luxury beliefs” after attending Yale following service in the US air force – having also survived a traumatic childhood, where he was fostered at the age of 3. Henderson noted that the affluent, privileged students around him constantly espoused opinions that bore no relation to the stable circumstances that had jet-propelled them to the top of the heap. His peers would denounce capitalism, the nuclear family, marriage, fidelity and the key role of fathers, while not acknowledging they’d benefitted from that very system.'

How women destroy marriages and men

Matt · 23 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Good discussion around what destroys marriages.

I Was Devastated to Learn I Was Having a Baby Boy. I'm Far From Alone.

Mastodon · 24 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"What do you think it is?" my doctor asked me on the phone. He was calling to reveal the sex of my baby, which expectant parents can find out these days via a blood test about 10 weeks into pregnancy.

Call it a mother's intuition or a penchant for pessimism, but I already knew.

"A boy," I replied stoically, resigned to my fate. I could feel it in my bones, or, more aptly, in my uterus.

And now science had confirmed it: The thing I had long feared was coming true.

"This baby is going to have a penis," said 32-year-old Anna, who was in her second trimester when we talked. "That feels so—even though I'm married and have a husband, it just feels so, like, alien, almost." (I'm identifying some of the parents and parents-to-be by first name only to protect their privacy.) The anxiety that your child will be confoundingly different from you extends far beyond physical attributes (although the concept of male puberty was another source of anatomical concern). As 34-year-old Rana Othman, the mother of a 13-month-old boy, put it: "I know how to navigate the world as a woman, and my mom taught me that. I don't know what it's like to navigate the world as a man. I have no idea. I truly have no idea." Sarah identified with this conundrum: "I know how to raise, like, a confident woman who's not going to take any shit, but I don't really know how to raise an empathetic man." Her son is 4, and "on a day-to-day basis, I just see him as the individual," she said. "But once in a while, something will, like, trigger me, where I'm like, Oh, shit. Like, yes, it's, like, this giant responsibility that's, like, sitting on me to cure the problem of, you know, white men."'

Where have all the men gone? And why it matters for every child in Australia

Matt · 24 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine, for a moment, that Australia's education system looked like this:

Less than one-in-five primary school teachers were female. By Year 9, girls were one and a half years behind boys in literacy. Every year, 12,000 more girls than boys failed to complete high school. And universities were dominated by men, with 64 per cent more male graduates than female graduates.

What would happen next?

Governments would convene urgent inquiries, and rewrite curricula. Media outlets would run front-page campaigns. Universities would launch targeted pathways, and develop new programs. Schools would redesign classrooms, and shift their culture. And society would mobilise, because we care deeply about our daughters.

But this isn't a hypothetical. These outcomes exist today; only the sexes are reversed. It's boys and young men who are falling behind.'

Richard Reeves interviewed by WaPo podcaster

Matt · 25 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Reeves has been criticized for being "way too soft" on feminists. That's a matter of opinion and point-of-view I suppose. But at least here he does a decent job of giving men's issues some voice. It's progress that he even got on a WaPo podcast.

UK: The terrifying rise of schoolboys making AI girlfriends

Mastodon · 25 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research has revealed that one in five boys aged 12-16 is either in or knows of a boy their age who is in a romantic relationship with an AI companion. A report carried out by men's organisation Male Allies UK and published last month spoke with more than 1,000 boys aged 12-16 in focus groups in 37 schools – public and state, grammar and comprehensive, and across a range of Ofsted ratings – up and down the country. Peer-to-peer focus groups were set up where boys could speak freely, with the aim of diving into their behaviour and attitudes, and it was the boys who wanted to talk about AI technologies. The findings make stark reading: eight in 10 boys (85 per cent) have had a conversation with a chatbot, with 43 per cent saying they talk to bots so they can ask questions without feeling embarrassed. More than a quarter (26 per cent) say they like the attention and connection over real-life equivalents, and (36 per cent) admitted that they prefer speaking to AI chatbots rather than to their family and friends at times.'

The Anti-Feminist Backlash Goes Global

Matt · 28 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A growing wave of public discontent regarding modern feminist ideology has sparked international demonstrations. These frameworks have become overly restrictive and foster female supremacy rather than genuine equality.

This sentiment manifested visibly over the last fortnight across several Spanish-speaking countries, where thousands of demonstrators gathered in Mexico, Argentina, and Spain.

...

On April 24, a coordinated effort by three main advocacy groups—the National Collective of Women for Equality, Children with MaPa, and Al3x Flores—led to simultaneous marches across dozens of Mexican municipalities. Protesters carried signs reading, “I am a father, not a criminal” (“Soy padre, no criminal”), highlighting issues surrounding paternal rights.'

Fury at BBC for hiring a male writer for its drama about the rape and murder of Sarah Everard

Mastodon · 28 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The BBC is facing a furious backlash after hiring a man to write a forthcoming drama about the murder of Sarah Everard.

Acclaimed screenwriter Jeff Pope has been commissioned to pen the two-part factual series about Ms Everard's abduction, rape and murder by serving Metropolitan Police officer Wayne Couzens in South London in 2021.

The open letter, which gathered 400 signatures from leading female screenwriters in 24 hours, said the decision had prompted a 'great deal of anger' among female writers and that they were 'genuinely shocked' by the commission.

It read: 'The announcement of this particular commission brought a great deal of anger to the surface among women writers - anger that has been building for some time. Sarah Everard was killed because she was a woman.

'The case did not simply expose the actions of one individual. It cracked open a national conversation about systemic misogyny, about the safety of women in public spaces, about institutional failure and the silencing of women within structures meant to protect them.

'That conversation is not over. Given all that, we are genuinely shocked that the BBC has commissioned a man to write it.'

The writers added: 'We are not saying men cannot write about women's experiences. But we are saying that in a case this specific, this raw, and this rooted in the dynamics of power and gender, the question of who tells the story is inseparable from the story itself."

The Roman experience of widespread bachelorhood among men

Matt · 30 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The narrator compares the motivations of Roman male citizens to stay single vs. the similar phenomenon of today.

Teenage girl arrested, allegedly lured young men to be robbed in person

Matt · 30 May 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Starting younger these days. Excerpt:

'A 17-year-old girl was arrested on Wednesday by the Universal City Police Department and accused of luring multiple young men online, which resulted in at least two robberies, partnered with a man who holds an extensive criminal history.

Alyssa Victoria Canul is tied to a robbery where a 15-year-old boy was shot four times at a Universal City park by her boyfriend, Joseph Anthony Aguilar, 18, on Monday, the city said through a social media post.

Canul's role was to "lure young men on online dating sites, then robbing and assaulting them," the city said.

She was booked into the Bexar County Adult Detention Center on Thursday and charged with two counts of aggravated robbery, jail records show. Canul could face an additional charge of tampering with physical evidence, according to the city.'

Dem House reps demand mandatory extra sick days for women on their periods

Mastodon · 1 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Democratic lawmakers are calling for mandatory extra sick days for women when they are on their periods, saying it is “economic violence” when women aren’t provided accommodation for their menstrual cycle.

During a press conference held as part of Women’s Health Month, Democratic lawmakers Yassamin Ansari, Adelita Grijalva, and Rashida Tlaib highlighted Ansari’s legislative effort introduced earlier this year for a proposal that “finally recognizes women’s pain.”

Ansari detailed an incident in the summer of 2015 where she “woke up on the floor” of a bodega, drenched in sweat, being dragged into an ambulance, as two male paramedics checked on her and asked if she was pregnant. She explained the incident was one of many where she suffered serious period pain, and she detailed how she would continue working despite symptoms.'

He cried, she laughed. Now her boyfriend has shut down completely.

Matt · 6 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is why men try not to show emotions around WAGs or women in general. Too many are... assholes... to us when we do. Excerpt:

'And, wow, you were so much more wrong than he was. His silent treatment is juvenile, yes. But it pains me to think of someone who doesn't normally show vulnerability getting a ridicule beat-down for the one time he does. Maybe the scene wasn't all that moving to you, but who knows what he has buried inside him that this scene dredged up?

And you say it was "to his credit" that it was a sports scene?! Wow.

Tell him you were totally out of line and have some anti-male biases you need to root out. He can't have feelings?'

Why Won't Men Fight Back?

Matt · 8 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From my experience I've learned that men tend to weigh the pros and cons of giving feedback, especially when it could lead to conflict. This is a key reason men often choose not to confront feminism or even challenge their wives. If a man doesn’t see a positive outcome that outweighs the potential negative consequences, he's more likely to remain silent. This is just one factor behind men's reluctance to push back.

Another factor is the use of false accusations by feminists to undermine and neutralize men. False accusations are particularly damaging because they are impossible to disprove. When men deny such accusations, it can make them appear more guilty than if they had said nothing. Men are aware of this dilemma, and many will avoid responding to false claims to sidestep the implication of guilt. Feminists have long employed this tactic, beginning with labeling men as "male chauvinist pigs," followed by accusations of patriarchy, oppression of women, being deadbeat dads, wife beaters, and eventually branding men as "toxic." We will delve deeper into these strategies later in this series on why men don't fight back, but it’s important to highlight this issue now to understand the full scope of the problem.'

Former Louisiana mayor sentenced to 90 days over rape of 16-year-old boy

Mastodon · 11 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Misty Roberts, a former mayor in Louisiana, has been sentenced to 90 days for raping a 16-year-old boy.

On Tuesday, 44-year-old Roberts was sentenced following her conviction earlier this year of two felonies including carnal knowledge of a juvenile – or statutory rape – and indecent behavior with a juvenile.

Roberts, who was facing up to 17 years in prison, sexually assaulted the underage victim at her home in July 2024. They were drinking alcohol at a pool party. Roberts was mayor of DeRidder, Louisiana, at the time, a position she had held since 2018.'

Women are getting most of the new jobs. What's going on with men?

Matt · 13 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"If Trump really wants to get more Americans working," she wrote at the time, "he'll have to do something out of his comfort zone: make girly jobs appeal to manly men."

It's a message she believes is even more relevant today.

For decades, the focus has been on getting more women into male-dominated fields. Some efforts have been more successful than others. But now, with the vast majority of new jobs going to women, it's clear that men need help, too.'

'His side': New book debunks male privilege, gives platform to men in a women's world

Matt · 13 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Helen Smith, a licensed psychologist with over 20 years in the field with an emphasis in clinical and forensic psychology, has published a new book: “His Side: Men Speak Out on Dating, Marriage, and Life in America.”

Released in February, it offers a follow-up to her book that came out in 2013, ” Men on Strike.”

No longer is it a “man’s world,” and Smith weaves together dozens of interviews of men from all ages and walks — their thoughts, struggles, concerns and experiences — to paint a picture of what it’s like for them in today’s landscape that casts men as misogynists and portrays masculinity as toxic and something to be shunned.'

1 in 3 American men are not working in nearly 20-year low — here's what's behind the staggering statistic

Matt · 14 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of American men in the workforce are at its lowest level in two decades — with about one in three American men having stopped working as of 2026, new labor statistics show.

Just 66% of men were employed or actively seeking a job as of April, a nearly 20-year low from 73% in 2006, according to data the US Bureau of Labor Statistics released earlier this month.

The current number — covering men aged 20 and over — is almost exactly as low as it was after the 2008 recession, when rates first plummeted by seven points in about a year.'

76% of Young Irish Men Say They've Been Discriminated Against

Matt · 14 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than three in four young men say they repeatedly experience discrimination multiple times each year in modern Ireland, a report from the ESRI has found.

Published on Thursday, the study found that 76% of those aged 17 report regular discrimination, with men within this age bracket being more likely to describe themselves as being subject to unfair treatment than women of the same age.

Such negative treatment, according to the study, took the form of people acting fearful of them, people attempting to harass or intimidate them, and receiving less favourable treatment at restaurants compared to those around them.

"Males report higher perceived discrimination than females at 17, which is driven by higher rates of males responding that they have experienced 'people acting as if they are afraid of you' and being threatened or harassed," the report reads.

"This is likely to reflect the prevalence of stereotypes around young men as being aggressive or engaging in anti-social behaviour."'

Intro to Men's Issues

Matt · 14 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'This video goes over the major issues faced by men in the US today. It was created 10 years ago and originally was in 4:3 format and fairly low resolution. I have now brought it up to 16:9 and increased the resolution as much as possible while still keeping the original footage and audio. I have also added an Epilogue on the end that takes a brief look at the carnage left since the original video was created.'

How Institutions Reward Victimhood, part 3

Matt · 15 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the modern West, compassion has quietly become a form of currency.

Institutions, universities, NGOs, the media, and even governments, now operate within what might be called a moral economy of victimhood.
In this new economy, empathy and funding flow toward those who can most convincingly demonstrate oppression.

The logic is simple: the more you suffer, the more moral authority you hold. The more powerless you can portray your group to be, the more influence you gain in return.

You can see this dynamic play out in grant proposals, corporate campaigns, and media coverage. Funding often depends not on measurable solutions but on the ability to frame problems in moral language, highlighting disparity rather than achievement, grievance rather than growth.

The result? Victimhood becomes not just a feeling, but a strategy.'

Drugs, weapons: Not just for men

Matt · 16 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Most people think of men of lower station when imagining those who deal in guns, drugs, etc. I simply want to point out that drug-dealing and gun-toting is an equal opportunity activity. Excerpt:

'Deputies searching a home in the 9000 block of Hyatt Resort Drive on Thursday afternoon seized thousands of grams of marijuana, THC products, two firearms, and nearly half a million dollars in cash, according to the Bexar County Sheriff's Office.

The sheriff's office said it executed a search warrant for narcotics at about 4:20 p.m. on June 11, 2026, after deputies received a tip alleging possible narcotics usage at the residence. The tip led to a search warrant being generated and approved, the agency said.

During the execution of the warrant, deputies detained a woman at the front door who was later identified as Danielle Gill, the sheriff's office said. Gill was arrested for possession of a controlled substance PG 2 or 2-A ≥4g 5 lbs ≤50 lbs.'

Feminists are mostly silent, after release of the Rape Gang Enquiry Report

Green · 17 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Prominent feminists have mostly been silent after the release of a report which documents "The biggest scandal in Modern British history." Search high and low, and you will find almost no feminists decrying British grooming gangs.

A survivor-led, independent parliamentary inquiry into crimes committed by British grooming gangs was conducted by Rupert Lowe (Independent MP for Great Yarmouth), focusing specifically on collecting victim testimonies. The inquiry has issued a shocking 219-page report.

Patrick Christys reacts to the "Rape Gang Inquiry Report" in a video essay, available here. Says Christys: "It lays bare the astonishing scale of the rape, abuse, and torture of potentially hundreds of thousands of young white girls."

We could report on shocked reactions to this report from prominent feminists, but so far we have not found any.

When Both Parties Try to Out-Macho Each Other

Matt · 19 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Utter bullshit. Both parties THINK they can appeal to men through old-school machismo. They'd rather do that than take up actual men's issues. Excerpt:

'The MAGA movement has fully embraced masculinism, which The Atlantic's staff writer Helen Lewis defines in her cover story this month as "a movement to fight back against the advances of feminism and reassert the primacy of men." Democrats have a more complicated relationship with machismo. After the last presidential election, when Donald Trump made inroads with even young men of color, some Democrats began wondering whether their party did indeed have a man problem. This campaign season, one Democratic candidate who seems to be addressing that concern is Graham Platner, an oyster-farming combat veteran.

After he won his primary in Maine this week, Platner became key to the party's chances of taking over the Senate. But Platner's brand of masculinity does not come without its issues. In a report last week in The New York Times, several women who were romantically involved with Platner described "toxic" relationships; one described him as rough. Platner's campaign strongly disputed any claims of physical intimidation or altercation.
...

This "10,000 ways to imply he's fay" strategy grows out of a robust ideology currently dominating the MAGA movement: "masculinism," which Helen defines in her story as a movement to fight back against the advances of feminism and reassert the primacy of men.

Now, the Democrats are not exactly denying they have a macho problem. Talarico's campaign, for example, has recently circulated a photo of him gnawing on a piece of meat. And they've put forth one prominent candidate they think does check the "masculine" box: Graham Platner, who won the party's primary in Maine this week, and whose victory is critical to Democrats taking back the Senate but whose ex-girlfriends have said his brand of masculinity was toxic.'

1 in 5 men have the ‘M factor,’ a newly identified syndrome linked to misogyny and violence

Mastodon · 19 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The manosphere may be online, but its influence is showing up in real life.

A new study has identified what researchers call the “M factor,” a syndrome categorized by a cluster of attitudes linked to misogyny, male supremacy, violence and opposition to gender equality.

“The M factor reflects an attitude that sees ‘true masculinity’ as under threat. It is associated with notions of male supremacy, a propensity for violence, misogyny, contempt for sexual minorities and opposition to gender equality,” said study leader Denis Ribeaud, a criminologist and sociologist at the Jacobs Center for Productive Youth Development at UZH, according to Phys.org.'

Canada makes femicide first-degree murder as all three major Criminal Code reforms become law

Mastodon · 20 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The law gives the justice system stronger tools to intervene earlier to sexual violence, gender-based, and intimate partner violence before that violence turns fatal. More specifically, the changes:

- make femicide first degree murder, the most serious homicide offence
- create a new offence of coercive control in intimate relationships, targeting patterns of threats, isolation, or manipulation before violence escalates
- update criminal harassment provisions to make them easier to prove in court
- make it a crime to threaten to distribute non-consensual intimate images, including sexual deepfakes
- increase the maximum penalty for sexual assault on summary conviction, non-consensual distribution of intimate images, and voyeurism'

Our Boys And Men Are Struggling—Here's What Needs To Change

Matt · 20 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For six years, I have advocated for greater attention and resources to be directed towards the struggles of boys and men. I am encouraged by French Gates' new investment in this area. While the support for girls and women remains substantial, this step toward addressing the unique needs of boys and men is significant progress.

Reeves is the perfect choice to lead this effort. His unwavering dedication to raising awareness about the challenges faced by boys and men has been both inspiring and transformative. He has succeeded in changing the narrative and approach to addressing these critical issues on a global scale.

As someone who has devoted her life to advocating for the well-being of boys, men, and fathers, I urge our problem-solvers to prioritize the urgent issue of the health of our boys and men. The suffering and mortality rates among them demand immediate attention and action. It is an issue that cannot be ignored any longer. Areas such as education need to be addressed, but the mental, physical, and metaphysical health of our boys and men should be the top priority. Here's how we can help.'

The left fueled the male crisis. Now it's shocked.

Matt · 21 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a mom of two boys who lived through the MeToo movement, I've long appreciated feminist author Camille Paglia's famous 1990 provocation: "If civilization had been left in female hands, we would still be living in grass huts." It has endured because it points to an uncomfortable truth: Men are not optional to a thriving society.

Yet for years, much of our culture – especially the left – has sent the message that masculinity is inherently old-fashioned, predatory and unnecessary. Now, amid mounting evidence that men are declining in education, work and mental health, many of those same voices seem puzzled by a crisis of their own making.

I'm not.

A culture that repeatedly devalues men should not be surprised when so many struggle to find purpose, confidence and direction.'

An ad for staying single

Matt · 22 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2021, after more than 30 years together, Alan Hickenbottom and his wife filed for divorce — but he still believes their marriage was a success.

Their early years together were fun and exciting. They bonded over a shared love of books and art, and a desire to do good things in the world. (Mr. Hickenbottom, 67, worked in renewable energy for decades; his ex was a teacher and a school librarian.)

Then they threw themselves enthusiastically into raising their two children, he said. But as often happens, when the kids left for college, Mr. Hickenbottom realized that he and his wife were more like colleagues and roommates than romantic partners.

Two years of marriage counseling didn't fix things.'

Germany: Fathers's Day demonstrations against toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 23 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Germany, Father's Day, celebrated on the Ascension Day public holiday, is not just about calling your dad. What Männertag (a word often used interchangeably with Vatertag) entails is viewed by many as toxic masculinity in a nutshell, and it's not only fathers who celebrate it. While for some it's simply an excuse to party, others see it as a day when loud groups of drunk men harass and catcall women on the street while pulling handcarts (a Vatertag symbol) full of beer.

While plenty of men in Berlin took part in traditional Father's Day celebrations, others used the date to stage a protest against toxic masculinity and violence against women: close to a thousand male feminists gathered at the Brandenburg Gate yesterday for a demonstration under the motto "Solidarity with women instead of alcohol and handcarts". While many FLINTA people joined them, the event was primarily aimed at men who oppose sexist celebrations of masculinity.'

Masculinity Crisis: Psychological Insights for Men and Boys

Matt · 23 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men in the United States are experiencing declining outcomes across educational, economic, relational, and mental health domains. While these trends are widely recognized, their causes remain contested. This paper argues that three underexamined sociocultural forces—anti-masculine attitudes, the widespread absence of fathers, and the disappearance of culturally sanctioned rites of initiation—significantly undermine male identity formation.

Drawing on contemporary research in psychology, sociology, and gender studies, as well as classical psychoanalytic insights from Freud and Jung, the paper outlines how shame, inadequate paternal modeling, and the lack of structured developmental transitions contribute to distress, despair, and maladaptive expressions of masculinity. It further proposes psychotherapeutic interventions aimed at restoring positive models of masculinity, strengthening the father–son dyad, and creating men's groups.

The paper argues that clinicians have an essential role in reshaping cultural narratives around masculinity and mitigating the psychological and societal fallout of male disconnection and disenfranchisement. Counterarguments such as concerns about reifying gender stereotypes or overlooking structural factors are addressed; however, the paper maintains that ignoring gendered developmental needs has produced measurable harm.'

Inside America's Feminist Underground

Matt · 25 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A GBNews reporter starts asking questions. He gets answers.

Buttigieg was briefly separated from his children after police say he was target of false report

Matt · 26 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. An anonymous report and CPS swung into action, separating a man from his kids. ANY MAN can be a victim of anti-male bias fears. All it takes is an anonymous call to CPS. If he had been a she, I'm pretty sure the anonymous report would have been ignored. Excerpt:

'Former Transportation Secretary Pete Buttigieg was the target of an anonymous report that police determined was false and that he says forced him to spend a night away from his four-year-old twins.

According to Buttigieg, a Michigan State Police officer and a child protective services worker came to his home in Traverse City after they received an anonymous report alleging he posed a danger to his children. Authorities arranged forensic interviews for his twins and instructed him not to be alone with them until the interviews were complete.

Buttigieg described the 24-hour ordeal in a Substack post as “among the darkest hours of my life.”

Michigan State Police said in a statement to The Associated Press they received an “anonymous report” and that they and child protective services “responded and determined the report was false.”'

Australian Men Need Not Apply

Matt · 26 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Progress! A mainstream politician in Australia is calling it out. We need more like him in our political bodies.

Korea's Gender War is Out of Control

Matt · 27 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Think it can't get much worse? Watch the vid. It can and probably will.

What 'The Future is Female' has Meant for Men

Matt · 28 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'For decades, the fight for gender equality has squarely focused on lifting women up—in the workplace, politics, and beyond.

But according to Richard Reeves, president of the American Institute for Boys and Men, it's the men who now need support.

From childhood, boys are falling behind in school. Men are trailing women in college completion by an even wider margin than existed (in the opposite direction) when Title IX became law in 1972. They also die by suicide about four times more often, with especially troubling increases among younger men over the past two decades.

In this episode, Reeves sits down with Shilo Brooks to discuss why the struggles facing boys and men have become politically impossible to discuss, why they need to stop hearing that "the future is female" and that their masculinity is "toxic," and what the specific policies are that he believes will help them.'

Why did white men conquer the world?

Matt · 28 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Fascinating historical analysis. Send it to your favorite woke person.

Gareth Southgate: Changing the Game for Young Men

Matt · 28 June 2026 · Archived copy · Original

BBC program here.

'Former England men's football manager Gareth Southgate reveals the struggles many boys and young men face, asking why some feel left behind and what could help them move forward.'

Kids left alone while moms partied tossed baby around like a football, stomped on the infant's head

Matt · 3 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two moms in Texas left their children, ages 6 and 4 — and a 2-month-old baby — alone in a locked bedroom while they were out partying at a hotel, leading to a horrific incident where the older kids tossed and stomped on the infant's head, cops say.

The mothers, Sidney Whitt, 21, and Jacqulun Morales, 29, allegedly placed the children in the care of Morales' 18-year-old sister, Shelby Munoz, and locked them in a bedroom before leaving to go drink alcohol and use drugs with a man at a local hotel, according to local ABC affiliate KLTV and local CBS affiliate KYTX.

A police press release obtained by the television stations says the children tossed the 2-month-old around and stomped on the baby's head until the child began having seizures and suffered a brain bleed. Extensive facial bruising was also reported by doctors after the infant was brought to a local hospital.'

Bad Choices, Anger, and Mental Illness

Matt · 4 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marching in pussy hats, baring their breasts to save the earth, fighting with ICE agents, declaring themselves “nasty,” feminist women today are self-evidently the least contented and most rancorous women in America, preoccupied with victimhood, consumed by the politics of despair, and experiencing higher rates of depression (and corresponding anti-depressant use) than non-feminist women.

It is logical to conclude that feminism causes female unhappiness by encouraging ingratitude, paranoia, and reckless rage.

Feminists themselves have at times noted the excessive, often wretched, results of their gospel of discontent: the suicides, depression, violence, hysteria, and disordered lives of many of their luminaries.'

Can Colorado protect girls from genital cutting but not boys? A lawsuit says no.

Matt · 5 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Colorado men are challenging a state law that they say illegally protects girls, but not boys, from medically unnecessary genital cutting. In a lawsuit filed last week in Denver District Court, they argue the distinction violates Colorado's Equal Rights Amendment.

“Every person, including every child, has a right to bodily integrity and autonomy, regardless of biological sex. These rights are violated when the law conditions the protection of bodily integrity and personal autonomy on an individual’s sex. The law of Colorado does just that,” the lawsuit reads.

The lawsuit centers on a section of Colorado's child abuse law that makes certain forms of medically unnecessary female genital cutting a crime.'

My son was killed by his girlfriend

Matt · 7 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"I knew instinctively what had happened; that she had done it and that he hadn't fought back," Ashe Smith, 80, says of her son James Self's vicious and ultimately fatal attack at the hands of his girlfriend, Polly Murphy. Self died on December 21, 2023, six weeks after the attack, and Murphy, a pink-haired artist, is now serving a life sentence for murder. But even Smith missed the danger signs – of control and physical aggression towards her son. If she had understood more about domestic violence towards men, she admits today, she might have intervened.

At the crime scene, a room at Smugglers Cove, a hotel in Clacton-on-Sea, Essex, paramedics found Self's blood on the walls, bedding, door handle and floor. "She'd smashed his head so hard on the wall it had made a dent," says Smith, speaking today in the calm surroundings of her countryside home near Great Finborough in Suffolk. Self was punched, kicked and stamped on over the course of two hours – and at one point knocked unconscious.

When Smith first laid eyes on her son in Colchester Hospital the following day, accompanied by her husband, Don, he was still "notably concussed", with two black eyes and a wound on his leg "so deep you could see the bone". Self hadn't wanted his mother to see the rest of him. It was only in court at Murphy's trial that Smith saw the photographic evidence of his injuries and what she describes as his "absolutely livid body, covered in bruises". He had eight broken ribs and two broken vertebrae in his back – and a bleed on the brain.'

"Tradwives" bailing at 40, divorcing men, getting alimony and child support

Matt · 7 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The MANN headline is what ISN'T being mentioned in the article. Looking for a tradwife? Don't do it, guys. Stay single. Excerpt:

'Templeton's estimation, while grim and certainly extreme, echoes the sentiments of the over 4,000 women, ages 35 and beyond, digitally ringing the alarm about the pitfalls of becoming financially, physically, emotionally and mentally dependent on a partner.

"Married at 20, divorced at 38. Raising 7 kids. No job history, no college, no experience," a woman named Samantha commented beneath Valenti's vid.

"[I was] married off at 17, divorced 10 years later. I'm now 37 and every day is a poverty-stricken struggle," admitted one woman, describing herself as a high school dropout and single mom of three daughters.

"I grieve intensely for my 17-year-old self. I always thought I would be someone and it's devastating," she added.'

Forbes' junk science obsession re women

Matt · 9 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. To be fair, it's not just Forbes, though they excel at it. It seems every article on "Women and ..." is based on some feminist junk science "study" touting the same conclusions: women good, men bad. Who is left reading mags like Forbes these days anyway? Looks to me like feminists. Excerpt:

'Why are women 25% less likely to use artificial intelligence tools than men? New research debunks the notion that the gender gap is primarily due to women's lack of AI skills, interest or access. Women's hesitancy to use AI is instead a rational response to a competency penalty that women face when using AI in the workplace.

The latest evidence of the competence penalty that women workers incur when using AI comes from a 2026 study by Zehra Chatoo, founder of Code For Good Now and former strategist at Meta. The study found that women who submit resumes created with AI assistance are evaluated as less competent and less trustworthy than men who submit identical AI-assisted resumes. To the evaluators, women's AI use signaled inability, while men's AI use signaled initiative.

This study bolsters prior research finding a competency penalty against women who use AI to efficiently perform their jobs. This research indicates that organizations will not close the gender AI gap simply by investing in digital skills training and AI incentives for their workforce. Employers must also address the gender-based perception biases linked to AI use.'

Women Want Equality — They Just Don’t Want to Pay For It

Matt · 9 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Something has been in the news this week that you probably don’t think much about — the draft.

Members of Congress are currently debating expanding the draft. The expansion would include automatically enrolling men and opening conscription up to women.

This isn’t a radical idea. A few countries already require compulsory military service for both men and women. Norway and Israel are two countries that come to mind.

Up until now, women here in the U.S. have been kept out of the draft. Naturally, social conservatives are vehemently opposed to drafting women. The Hill captures the current sentiment on Capitol Hill quite aptly:'

Number of divorces in Ukraine nearly equals number of marriages

Matt · 9 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2024, the number of marriages and divorces in Ukraine was nearly equal, BBC reports, citing statistics from the Ministry of Justice. According to official data, 150,000 marriages were registered, while the number of divorces reached 142,000.

Experts attribute these statistics to the consequences of the war and constant stress. However, in the first two years of the full-scale invasion, the situation was slightly better. In 2023, there were 186,000 marriages and 128,000 divorces, while in 2022, 223,000 marriages were registered, with only 91,000 divorces.
...
Psychologists note that the main reason for the increase in divorces is the impact of war-related stress. "People can't handle it. When we're under stress, we get nervous and lash out. At whom? At the nearest and dearest," said psychologist Tina Beradze.

For comparison, the previous peak in divorces in Ukraine occurred during the first years of independence (1991–1994), when more than 200,000 divorces were registered annually, largely due to the economic crisis of that period.'

‘Spermageddon’: is the world facing a male reproductive crisis?

Matt · 11 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The world is unwittingly walking into a male reproductive crisis, scientists warned this week as they presented data that revealed an apparent halving of average male testosterone levels over the past 50 years.

“It is mind-blowing that testosterone has declined by 50%,” Prof Hagai Levine, who led the work, told the Guardian. “This is a lot. Wake up people. Wake up.”

The finding is the latest in a series of recent results that suggest male fertility is in crisis. Levine’s team has previously documented an apparent drastic decline in global sperm counts, in what has come to be known as the “spermageddon” paper. The issue has become a preoccupation across the political spectrum.

The US health secretary, Robert F Kennedy Jr, has called declining sperm counts an “existential crisis” and Levine’s work has been seized on in the “manosphere” as proof modern society is emasculating men. The findings have also galvanised concerns about the hazardous impact of endocrine-disrupting chemicals, air pollution and global heating on human health.'

Renowned Feminist Historian Loses Professorship as Experts Tear Apart Her So-Called Historical Findings

Matt · 13 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A black feminist historian whose work is being labeled as misleading — and who may have lost her cushy academic job — says it all comes down to an attack on black women.

The New York Times tells the tale of Kerri Greenidge, whose 2022 book “The Grimkes” was hailed for its narrative about a slaveholding family and its work in the abolitionist movement.

Publishers Weekly put the book on its list of that year’s top books, while the American Historical Association handed Greenidge the Joan Kelly Memorial Prize, which honors scholars in women’s history and feminist theory.'

Woman arrested for child molestation after giving phone with evidence on it to friend

Matt · 13 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A New Jersey woman accused of filming vile sexual assaults against a child was caught after police linked her to a bizarre leg tattoo depicting 'boobs,' according to cops.

Victoria Anne Cranmer, 25, of Little Egg Harbor, allegedly recorded a 14-second Snapchat video of herself sexually abusing a young girl under the age of 13 who had been entrusted to her care, according to Jersey Shore Online.

Her alleged crimes came to light after she returned a cellphone containing the footage to a former roommate who contacted authorities, police said.

Investigators later found several more videos involving Cranmer and the victim hidden in her Snapchat Memories folder.

Court documents said Cranmer could be heard laughing and making comments toward the victim during the encounter.'

Team USA Forced To Share Half Of World Cup Prize Money With Women's Team

Matt · 13 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Observation: the women's US Soccer team also splits its pay with the men's team. However, the women's team makes a single-digit percentage of what the men's team makes. Result: A lot more money is being sent over to the women's team vs. the other way around. Classic example of men supporting women now by group. The individual principle is being applied to sports now, despite women's sports drawing a fraction of what men's sports draw in terms of crowds and money. Excerpt:

'Adding insult to injury after an embarrassing exit from the World Cup this week, the United States Men's National Team will be forced to share half of the earnings from their run with their counterparts on the Women's National Team.

The men's team secured $16 million in prize money from FIFA after their run to the World Cup's round of 16. Despite not playing a single minute of soccer, members of the women's team will take home just as much money as the men's team thanks to an "equal pay" agreement put in place by U.S. Soccer back in 2022.

After U.S. Soccer takes 20% of the prize money, the rest will be distributed evenly between the 26 members on each of the rosters of the men's and the women's teams, meaning each player will be paid about $246,000. The money won't be paid out to the women's team until they qualify for the 2027 Women's World Cup.

"So you're telling me the men go out and earn while the women stay at home," Daily Wire host Ben Shapiro said in reaction to the news.

The "equal pay" agreement was put in place in 2022 after years of complaints by the women's soccer team, which became known for antics including refusal to respect the National Anthem and stunts targeting President Donald Trump.

That agreement came after a lawsuit from players on the women's team alleging pay discrimination by the U.S. Soccer Federation. To settle the suit, U.S. Soccer agreed that prize money from the World Cup would be divided evenly among players on both rosters.

Historically, the men's World Cup competition has generated billions of dollars more in revenue than the women's World Cup. The 2026 World Cup is expected to bring in over $13 billion in revenue, while the last women's World Cup in 2023 generated roughly $580 million.'

Why is the draft still male-only?

Matt · 13 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Very much worth listening to this video.

How Men Became the Villains of American History

Matt · 14 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It did not happen all at once. Each phase built upon the last until an entire generation inherited a version of history in which men were remembered less for what they built than for whom they supposedly oppressed.

American culture did not wake up one morning and decide that men should be remembered mostly as oppressors, predators, colonizers, abusers, and patriarchs. The rewriting happened gradually. It began as a correction, became a framework, hardened into institutional policy, and eventually spread through media, movies, schools, law, and the internet.

The original project was framed as a correction. Feminists argued that women had been systematically excluded from many areas of public life and that traditional histories had overlooked or minimized their contributions. They believed those omissions should be corrected and women's experiences given greater attention. But somewhere along the way, the project changed. It was no longer simply about recovering women's history or pursuing equality. Increasingly, it became a project of placing men—and masculinity itself—on trial.'

The left has a problem with boys and men

Matt · 15 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across the western world, the patterns and themes are consistent and clear – boys and girls, men and women, are perceiving and experiencing underlying economic and social changes in vastly different manners.

The left has a problem with boys and men. Too many are drawn to far-right parties. Men's influencers espouse a form of get-rich-quick isolationism that is anathema to the communitarian values of the Labour Party and the trade union movement that built it.

Many boys and men feel that progressive politics is for other people – and not them. Labour has a problem and we haven't done enough to solve it. A brief perusal of data exemplifies the point. Almost half of the British public now think that women's equality has gone 'far enough'. One poll from the Centre for Social Justice also shows that 40 per cent of us feel society does not value traditional masculine values.'

Congresswoman Says 'Homoerotic' Side Of GOP's Masculinity Mania Can't Be Ignored

Matt · 20 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Why do feminist leftists try to use accusations of homosexuality against male politicians when it suits their aims but then OTOH insist there's "nothing wrong with people being gay" in other contexts? You would think the double-standard would be glaring even to leftists, but they stay quiet. And, why associate wanting to see fit men in our armed forces with homosexuality? Excerpt:

'Rep. Becca Balint (D-VT) thinks there's something queer about Secretary Pete Hegseth's fixation on masculinity.

The congresswoman weighed in on the U.S. military's plans to test male service members' testosterone levels, telling journalist Scott MacFarlane there's something odd about being so obsessed with manliness while villainizing the LGBTQ community at the same time.

"I think it's indicative of the fact that there are so many people in this administration that have some weird, like, intense, homoerotic feelings towards men while also being incredibly homophobic, and not just homophobic, but like, hate-mongering, fear-mongering about the LGBT community," she said.'

Growing trend of hating men seems to backfire as anti-marriage movement leaves single women losing out

Matt · 22 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A growing anti-marriage movement is being fueled by viral TikTok trends and high-profile celebrities painting men as the enemy, but according to a new column, women may ultimately be the ones losing out.

In a USA Today op-ed, columnist Ingrid Jacques warned of a rising wave of “heteropessimism,” defining it as women’s growing feelings of disappointment and antagonism toward relationships with men. She argued that viral trends like “divorce glow-ups” and anti-male literature have actively widened the divide between the sexes.
...
She explained that the media modern women consume is increasingly hostile toward traditional relationships, pointing to bestselling books like “Yesteryear,” which centers on a “tradwife” influencer.

In that novel, Jacques notes, men are reduced to lazy or toxic tropes: “Either a man is an idiotic man-baby who lacks ambition and a brain, or he’s a quintessential patriarch who pals around with other sexist pigs in the manosphere. Husbands are at one point referred to as ‘freaks.’”'

Male Teacher Faces Groping Accusations After Giving CPR To A Woman

Matt · 25 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male teacher in China has been accused of groping a woman while performing cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) on her in public

The incident on a busy street in Hengyang, central Hunan province, has sparked a heated social media debate, according to Jiupai News.

The woman collapsed unexpectedly on 12 July. A female doctor from a nearby hospital began chest compressions but, after becoming exhausted, asked if anyone could assist.

The teacher, identified only by his surname Pan, stepped in to continue the life-saving procedure.

She was then rushed to hospital after an ambulance arrived.

However, after a video of the rescue went viral online, some social media users claimed Pan's hand placement during the CPR was inappropriate.

These allegations have deeply distressed the teacher.'

The Feminization of the Icelandic State

Matt · 26 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For more than half a century, Iceland has pursued one of the democratic world's most ambitious social experiments.

Its stated objective was clear: dismantle male dominance. By every conventional measure, it succeeded. Iceland is famous for being the world's "most equal country," proudly topping international rankings for sex equality. Women occupy the presidency, the prime minister's office, cabinet ministries, Iceland's national state church, universities, schools, municipalities, police, social services, newsrooms and much of the country's ever expanding public bureaucracy.

International delegations arrive eager to discover the secret of Iceland's success. Politicians from abroad praise the "Icelandic model." International organizations celebrate it. Iceland has become the country that much of the Western world is encouraged to emulate.

And yet, nobody asks the question that every successful social experiment eventually deserves.

What happens when a society spends decades correcting one imbalance, only to create another that has become so politically sensitive that almost no one dares acknowledge or question it?

This article is not an argument against women holding positions of authority and power. Nor is it an argument for returning to some mythical past in which men dominated public life. It's about something both simpler and more unsettling.'

Singer Sophie Straat cleared of discrimination over mosh pit

Matt · 26 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Discrimination hotlines in both the Netherlands and Belgium have concluded that Dutch singer Sophie Straat did not discriminate when she asked “all white men to step back” during two of her recent performances.

Last month at the Best Kept Secret festival in Beekse Bergen, Straat — real name Sophie Schwartz — asked for space for women, queer people and people of colour in the “mosh pit”, an area in front of the stage where fans dance chaotically.

She made the same request on Monday during a performance in Ghent, Belgium.

The Dutch discrimination hotline Discriminatie.nl said it received hundreds of complaints but maintains that Straat’s comments do not amount to discrimination against white men based on their colour or gender.'

The Radicalization Report

Matt · 26 July 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently a committee of the Canadian Parliament spent five months studying the beliefs of its own citizens and concluded that dissent from feminism is a growing extremist threat.

I want to make a harder claim than "the report is biased." I want to argue the causal arrow runs backwards. The pushback the state calls radicalization is a reaction against a radicalization that already happened.

First Principles: why a system calls independence toxic, conformity safety, and dissent harm.

Beneath the Surface: the report in its own words, the psychology of why the state recruits the feminine instinct and the compliant man, the data on who is actually being radicalized, and why strength itself had to be renamed a pathogen.

From the Archives: Jung and Arendt, who watched an atomized, care-hungry population become the raw material of the mass movement a century ago.'

UK: Northumbria detective sacked after saying 'all men' were rapists and should be given curfew

Matt · 1 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A detective who said "all men" were rapists and should be given a curfew to stop sex attacks at night has been sacked. Detective Constable Rachel Fletcher, who worked in safeguarding at Northumbria Police, has been subject to a misconduct hearing.

She was accused of saying "all men" were rapists and they should be given a 9pm curfew to stop sex attacks at night. Det Cons Fletcher was also accused of describing transgender women as "cks in frocks".

A panel, sitting at Houghton-le-Spring police station, found that she made the comments and had breached the Standards of Professional Behaviour in relation to Discreditable Conduct, Authority, Respect and Courtesy and Equality and Diversity. Chair of the panel, Assistant Chief Constable Andrew Hill, said the proved allegations amounted to gross misconduct.'

Courtney Clenney Reportedly Reaches Plea Deal in Fatal Stabbing of Christian Obumseli

Matt · 1 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Courtney Clenney, an OnlyFans model charged with fatally stabbing her boyfriend in their Miami condo in 2022, has reportedly reached a plea bargain with prosecutors, according to TMZ. As per the report, the deal settles the case without going to trial.

The 30-year-old Clenney had pleaded not guilty to the charge of second-degree murder with a weapon and was facing the possibility of spending life behind bars. It was not clear what Clenney would be pleading to or what the sentence would be under the deal.

As per prosecutors, Clenney stabbed her boyfriend, Christian "Toby" Obumseli, 27, in the chest during an altercation on April 3, 2022, at their Miami condo in the city's Edgewater neighborhood. While Clenney did not deny stabbing Obumseli, she claimed that she had done so in self-defense following domestic violence, according to Court TV.'

Amid nurse shortage, a university rolls out the welcome mat for men

Matt · 1 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are largely missing out on one of the hottest professions in the U.S. right now: nursing.

For registered nurses alone, the Labor Department projects there will be 189,000 job openings each year for the next decade. But only 1 in 8 nurses are men.

There have long been efforts to rewrite the script around nursing — to push back on the idea that it's women's work. Now, the economy is helping, too.

With diminishing opportunities in male-dominated industries like manufacturing and software engineering, nursing has emerged as a stable alternative and a solid pathway to a middle-class life.

Nursing students at the University of Alabama at Birmingham are already experiencing what it's like to be in demand.'

"Equal Contribution"

Matt · 7 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Marking IWD back in 2018, this video spares no expense and pulls no punches on the topic of contributions to society.

We should be putting more women in prison, not letting them all out

Matt · 8 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Send fewer women to prison. That's the consensus across the political spectrum. It is part of Andy Burnham's plan to free up prison places for men. The Conservatives have said they are sympathetic and even Colin Sutton, Reform's newly elected Police and Crime Commissioner for Norfolk, advocates it. Needless to say, prison reform charities are all in favour.
...
There is good reason to believe that many fewer women are charged with offences than could be. Speak to defence lawyers and some will admit that there is often enough evidence to charge wives and girlfriends of drug dealers and other serious criminals with offences themselves, but they very rarely are so charged.

As the Nicola Sturgeon affair indicates, it may be entirely possible for a fraudster's wag to be unaware of her man's crimes. But to be living with a drug dealer, you would need to be exceptionally obtuse not to know what your partner is up to. With some narrow exceptions (largely relating to terrorism, child sex offences, or performing a job in, for example, banking with specific reporting responsibilities) not reporting a crime is not a crime. But for many criminals' wags, defence lawyers will tell you there is often clear evidence that their involvement goes much further.'

Despite Trump’s efforts, airline DEI programs are still risking people’s lives

Matt · 8 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three million Americans will board a plane today assuming the pilot earned that seat through merit. They shouldn’t.

For decades, airlines have subordinated safety to diversity quotas.

President Donald Trump rightly recognized this danger: Early on, he ordered the Federal Aviation Administration and Department of Transportation to rescind all DEI initiatives and return to merit-based hiring and promotions. But the FAA can, and must, do more.
...
I analyzed every US commercial flight crash with onboard fatalities attributed to pilot error since 2000: Women and minorities represent less than 10% of pilots, yet were factors in four out of eight crashes (50%).

The sample size is small. But precisely because crashes are so rare, the few times they occur it’s important to scrutinize who is at the controls; under DEI’s guiding principle of relying on statistical disparities, it’s certainly enough to raise questions.

It’s not that women and minorities are inherently unable to fly planes, but in practice, pressure for affirmative action too often leads airlines to lower their standards to meet quotas.

Today, major carriers persist in aggressive diversity hiring.'

Millions of men are ditching the workforce — and experts are sounding the alarm

Matt · 12 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are dropping out of the workforce at an alarming rate. Analysts say it's threatening the nation's social stability.

The latest Bureau of Labor Statistics breakdown found that 44.07 million of 132.8 million eligible men older than 15 — or 33.2% — were not in the labor force last month. That's 9 million more out-of-work men (29%) than in 2012.

The number of men opting not to work jumped by 891,000 over the preceding 12 months alone, as the economy sheds manufacturing and finance jobs.

"The American economy has gradually moved away from some of the industries that historically provided good jobs to men without college degrees," said Scott Beaulier, a University of Wyoming economist. "Meanwhile, much of the recent employment growth has occurred in areas such as healthcare and education, where women make up a much larger share of the workforce."'

Male Domestic Violence Watch

Matt · 14 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Found LinkedIn blog feed written by a woman who is very active as a male DV survivor advocate and thought I'd share it. Definitely worth regular visits.

Sex-Selective Abortions as an Intellectual Quagmire for Western Gynocentrists

Matt · 14 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2025, researchers at Edith Cowan University (ECU) published a study titled “Indirect evidence of sex-selective abortion practices to the imbalanced sex ratio at birth in Australian migrant populations.” In the study, the researchers examined all registered births in New South Wales and Western Australia between 1994 and 2025, totalling over 2.1 million births. The researchers tested if the male-to-female birth ratio differed between mothers who were born in Australia versus mothers who were born in other countries but gave birth in Australia.

Typically, the male-to-female birth ratio is around 1.05 (i.e., 105 boys born for every 100 girls born). That ratio is roughly what the researchers found when they examined all births in Australia (1.058). However, when the researchers sorted the data by mother’s country of birth, the results changed. Mothers who were born in Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom exhibited male-to-female birth ratios around the average: 1.05 to 1.07. However, mothers who were born in India, China, and Vietnam had higher male-to-female birth ratios, and this difference was amplified if the immigrant mothers had previously given birth to daughters. For example, Indian-born and Chinese-born mothers, who had already given birth to two daughters, exhibited male-to-female birth ratios around 1.32, whereas Australian-born mothers, who had also previously birthed two daughters, maintained the usual male-to-female birth ratio of around 1.05 to 1.07.'

Surprising gender biases in GPT

Matt · 16 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

This article is from 2024 so possibly the issues it exposes have been addressed by now. Then again, maybe not. Excerpt:

'We present eight experiments exploring gender biases in GPT. Initially, GPT was asked to generate demographics of a potential writer of fourty phrases ostensibly written by elementary school students, twenty containing feminine stereotypes and twenty with masculine stereotypes. Results show a strong bias, with stereotypically masculine sentences attributed to a female more often than vice versa. For example, the sentence “I love playing fotbal! Im practicing with my cosin Michael” was constantly assigned by GPT-3.5 Turbo to a female writer.

This phenomenon likely reflects that while initiatives to integrate women in traditionally masculine roles have gained momentum, the reverse movement remains relatively underdeveloped. Subsequent experiments investigate the same issue in high-stakes moral dilemmas. GPT-4 finds it more appropriate to abuse a man to prevent a nuclear apocalypse than to abuse a woman. This bias extends to other forms of violence central to the gender parity debate (abuse), but not to those less central (torture). Moreover, this bias increases in cases of mixed-sex violence for the greater good: GPT-4 agrees with a woman using violence against a man to prevent a nuclear apocalypse but disagrees with a man using violence against a woman for the same purpose. Finally, these biases are implicit, as they do not emerge when GPT-4 is directly asked to rank moral violations. These results highlight the necessity of carefully managing inclusivity efforts to prevent unintended discrimination.'

Young Men Are Abandoning the Workforce

Matt · 17 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After decades of efforts to bolster women's role in the workforce, the male-female labor gap has now officially closed. By one measure, it has reversed.

American women now hold 176,000 more payroll jobs than American men, according to July data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics analyzed by Laura Ullrich, director of economic research at Indeed. That disparity has nearly doubled since February. Compare it to the 1990s, when men held nearly seven million more jobs than women. It's not that women are filling roles that would have gone to men. Rather, men have been leaving the labor market in droves.

Ms. Ullrich calculates that all of U.S. job growth since last July has been for female employees, partially because tech and financial services jobs that are predominately held by men declined over the past year. Women have outperformed men in the workforce twice before in recent history, briefly during the economic contractions of the Great Recession and just before Covid. But Ms. Ullrich says the difference this time is that the trend isn't driven by a recession and it isn't likely to reverse anytime soon.'

NCFM Republican Feminaphobia: How Selective Accountability Harms Men, Boys, and Fathers

Matt · 18 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Republicans often present themselves as defenders of family values, personal responsibility, and equal justice. Yet their legislative actions frequently protect women from obligations while placing those same obligations on men. This pattern creates real harm for men, boys, fathers, and families.

Decades of Failure: No Commission on the Status of Boys and Men

For more than fifty years, both political parties have funded and expanded Commissions on the Status of Women at the federal and state levels. These commissions receive millions of dollars, hold permanent institutional power, and influence policy and public messaging,

During the same period, neither party created a federal Commission on the Status of Boys and Men. Only a few states have even considered the idea. As a result, boys' declining academic performance, men's worsening health, rising male suicide rates, fatherlessness, and male homelessness remain unaddressed at the structural level.'

United Nations is Now Controlled by a Cabal of Radical Feminists

Matt · 21 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rocio D'Angelo of CitizenGo recently was giving a presentation at the UN Human Rights Council, speaking in opposition to Michele Bachelet as the new UN Secretary-General. But as soon as D'Angelo mentioned the "radical ideological agendas" of Bachelet, the session chairwoman, without warning, cut off her presentation, accusing D'Angelo of making "personal attacks."

The incident was the most recent example of the take-over the United Nations by radical feminists who are pushing for gender ideology in schools, transgenderism, abortion rights, and the marginalization of men.

The feminist take-over is evident at every major UN agency. These offices are making transparently dishonest claims in order to advance their radical agenda.'

Feminism didn't kill the male breadwinner model, the economy did

Matt · 21 August 2026 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Actually it was the effects of feminism that saw the labor market double and thus cause wages to fall in purchasing power value by at least half combined with changes in technology, etc., that have less-skilled people of both sexes generally not earning much. But the assertion that feminism had nothing to do with it is false. Excerpt:

'The discourse around young men's place in the world is frustrating. On the one hand, the idea that men may genuinely be having a harder time of it is often summarily dismissed. On the other, for many young men, the scapegoat for difficulties is either women or feminism. Both are wrong.

Any discussion must start by acknowledging that less-educated young men have been uniquely downwardly mobile over the past generation. But the explanation for this is primarily economic, not cultural.

The defining labour market shift in recent decades has been the steep decline in manufacturing jobs and the strong growth of those in knowledge-intensive services and healthcare. The former disproportionately hurt less-educated men, and the compensating gains went to everyone but them: the growth of knowledge work boosted the well-educated (men and women alike), while healthcare jobs have primarily gone to women (with and without degrees).'