Let's call it what it is, though. It's a story where bad things happen. Rape is bad, but the killing is just fine?

Sometimes stories reflect reality- that includes rape. You can't just deny rape exists.

It's like being mad at the news because there's reporting on crime.

GOT isn't endorsing rape, it's trying to tell a story.

Planned Obsolescence – The Rational Male

2 upvotes · 21 September 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

There is a fundamental fear women experience in just the prospect of not having 100% control over their sexual selection, sexual strategy and ultimately optimization of their Hypergamy. Anything that challenges women's unilateral control of their Hypergamous power – such as prostitution, male hormonal birth control, female viagra, DNA testing for paternity and now sexbots – must be ruthlessly and preemptively legislated against if feminine social primacy is to be maintained. Even the idea of sexbots destroying women's monopoly on sex, however fantastical, must be eliminated before it becomes a threat.

It's such an interesting lens to look at this stuff through, things that should be obvious to the public but fly under the radar.

Also in other news, Rollo, drop me a line when you get a chance about that project.

Point of difference with main sub

You have to admit though that there's more to rp than anger, and it's clearly overtaking the signal to noise ratio.

Anybody who asserts something like this clearly hasn't been on TRP since the beginning. The ratio is just fine.

It's a god awful idea to ever give your woman a loaded gun and let her hold it to your head. Even with air-tight game.

It's not a bad idea to have a LTR, and certainly if your goal is to start a family, you could do all the things normal married couples do-

But getting the government involved and letting a third party into a contract that only benefits her and can never (ever) benefit you is just a bad idea. Anybody pretending it can be a good idea under any circumstance is either lying or unintentionally naive.

No, What happened was there was some god awful blue-pill advice being handed out by a few users. I didn't seek to moderate or change this subreddit, I merely looked to correct the idiocy.

A mod here banned me for doing so.

I told them that so long as we didn't agree, we wouldn't support this sub.

Eventually the mod apologized and unbanned me and asked to be listed on the sidebar, which I said no, because I didn't trust the current mod team, and as long as I didn't moderate this sub, I couldn't speak to the enforcement of content that would end up here, and the mod team here had demonstrated poor judgement in the past. So I don't endorse the community.

Anti-Rape Program Teaching Women how to say "no" Halves Number of Campus Assaults

2 upvotes · 18 June 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

Women's liberation can only be achieved through a radical restructuring of the current capitalist economy, in which much of women's labor is uncompensated.

Engels (1884) argues that a woman's subordination is not a result of her biological disposition but of social relations, and that men's efforts to achieve their demands for control of women's labor and sexual faculties have gradually become institutionalized in the nuclear family. Through a Marxist historical perspective, Engels (1884) analyzes the widespread social phenomena associated with female sexual morality, such as fixation on virginity and sexual purity, incrimination and violent punishment of women who commit adultery, and demands that women be submissive to their husbands. Ultimately, Engels traces these phenomena to the recent development of exclusive control of private property by the patriarchs of the rising slaveowner class in the ancient mode of production, and the attendant desire to ensure that their inheritance is passed only to their own offspring: chastity and fidelity are rewarded, says Engels (1884), because they guarantee exclusive access to the sexual and reproductive faculty of women possessed by men from the property-owning class.

As such, gender oppression is closely related to class oppression and the relationship between men and women in society is similar to the relations between proletariat and bourgeoisie.[1] On this account women's subordination is a function of class oppression, maintained (like racism) because it serves the interests of capital and the ruling class; it divides men against women, privileges working class men relatively within the capitalist system in order to secure their support; and legitimates the capitalist class's refusal to pay for the domestic labor assigned, unpaid, to women.

If you read that and said "sounds like feminism," you'd be right.

If you read that and said "sounds like marxism," you'd also be right.

One in the same buddy, and they've hijacked the left and the social consciousness in general.

Evolved behaviors exist because those who had those traits tended to reproduce more than those who didn't. That's all evolution is. The fact that we find sex enjoyable is one such evolutionary trait, which suggests nothing of its reproductive success- a man who is unwittingly sterile may still have a high libido. It only speaks to the behaviors we're driven to do. Evolution wasn't and isn't forward looking. You might consider brushing up on this.

What is Alpha?

2 upvotes · 12 December 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Oh you better believe betas will act out in completely ineffective ways in a spurt of jealousy.

The difference between an alpha and a beta, is the beta will come from a position of weakness. His actions will look sad and pathetic. He is coming from a position of no attraction, and his hope to is clasp onto what he can through bargaining. He wants to negotiate attraction. He thinks he can "win" attraction, even by acting out.

That's not exactly mate guarding, but again, I'm just trying to consider a situation in which it would be beta.

What is Alpha?

Stop being afraid of offending people.

2 upvotes · 11 December 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Equating violence with insecurity is accepting a feminine primary culture in which anything masculine must be inherently bad. Insecurity, by the way, is a projection women use against things that are not in their favor, because for women, most of their problems are rooted in insecurity, they assume that it is the same for men.

It isn't.

Listen, alpha does not mean good, it doesn't mean role model, it doesn't mean anything inherently positive. Alpha and role models can overlap quite a bit, but don't necessarily.

For instance, Charles Manson is undoubtedly alpha. He's also insane, and a killer.

Ok, so the comparison here is that women pretend to avoid their nature (which is wanted to be dominated) by saying it's just a switch up from their day-to-day which is apparently being in charge. (The average woman pretending to be a man).

And you've compared it to a small select number of CEOs that have a kink.

What's "decent amount"? Are these guys going to their wives and girlfriends looking to get respect via the natural order of things? Wife cracking the whip? Are they getting respect for it? Do they seek out dominatrices specifically because it would lose them respect?

I wouldn't call fucking women an end-goal. I would call being in a state of maximum options my goal-

For instance, knowing I am able to fuck women. Physically, mentally, and otherwise. This is as much a goal to provide for my needs as feeding and clothing myself. If I were fat, I would know my options are limited.

My own pursuits beyond that are for me. And I make no mistake when I say that I understand the difference. I go to the gym, and yes, it makes me feel good. But I'd be lying if I stated it was solely for the great rush of "improvement" without admitting that the improvement leads to something (by definition of what improvement is). It improves my standing to best serve my needs- women, food, shelter, life.

But I also do play video games on occasion. And I moderate a website forum. I acknowledge the underlying motivations that drive human happiness.

When somebody says to me, "just do it for yourself bro" they're merely trying to shield themselves from negative outcomes that may arise out of failure.

I do it to win. I do it to not only be the best me, but to be better than you.

Is TRP falsifiable?

2 upvotes · 2 August 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Academic philosophy deals with actual truths, which the Red Pill fails immediately because exceptions exist that do not disprove the general statements and evidence that support our claims. Outsiders believe TRP members actually think these claims succeed 100% of the time, but this is not true either. TRP is based off thousands of anecdotal evidence averaged into generalities about each sex given our common experiences.

For example, take your local weather. If you lived in California all of your life, you have a fair idea of how the weather will be in any given month or day (warm summers, mild winters). Some days fluctuate a lot, (really hot, really rainy), but on average, the weather remains consistent as far as you're concerned. No one claims that heat waves don't exist, nor do people claim torrential rainfall is the norm. Those facts are irrelevant to our claim that California has nice weather.

Fantastic analogy. ♂

Rollo seems to say it is ALWAYS non-verbal cuz you need to speak womaneeze. If you start being overt you have lost your frame and adopted hers. I respectfully disagree with the master on this point. I think this is part of setting boundaries and the terms of the relationship.

I think his point is that overtly communicating an ultimatum means you've let it slip too far in the first place. If you successfully communicate covertly that you have options and can leave, she's less likely to bring you to a point of ultimatums.

But, you are right in that verbally setting boundaries and ultimatums is better than nothing at all. I, personally, have had to get explicit with my instructions sometimes with my current ltr. Sometimes you just gotta wade through the muck.

Are the women who can change themselves exceptions? Is the inability to change yourself a feminine quality? Are the men who can't change themselves feminine? Among men, are they an exception?

And I suspect you're not a good reader, because I do address quite a bit of that. But if you were curious, or needed elaboration, you know how to ask. Right?

Those are the questions you needed to answer, instead of resorting to a - dare I say - feminine reaction by throwing a catty fit, telling people to shut up and cherry picking their comments, conveniently stripping them of their criticism. It reeks of intellectual dishonesty.

I have always, and will always call out tone policing. This is not new. If you didn't like it, go elsewhere.

According to my experience, the answer would be either "No" or, most likely, "I lack the means to know the answer". I'm a med student, and I see men failing to change themselves everyday. Classmates who are too lazy to study, patients who don't take their medication as prescribed, or refuse to stop smoking, drinking, or doing dope, to start dieting and exercising. The bitch thing is that they know that adopting such behaviors would increase their life quality and health considerably, but they refuse to do so.

According to you, no generalization can be incorrect. It is as if I said that RP members like to literally suck cock because some of them are gay. Wouldn't you say that this statement is incorrect because gay men are not a majority here?

You can continue to ignore the context of the subreddit, and the context of my point. My job is just to get people in the right frame of mind, and turn away those who refuse. Which is it going to be, mack?

Why you need to shut up and listen: A litmus test you all failed.

One of the commenters reframed your post and made it about what men should do in response to this behavior and I think that is useful. But your entire post was about how women can't change... and that was it. If that had been the intro to a post about what a man's response should be, I think it would have been much more helpful.

The point was that these are the factors leading to the behaviors- and the reasons for them, and why to expect/lookout for them.

The comments beneath the post rightfully took the baton and continued discussion from there. There's nothing wrong with that.

I'm addressing specifically the tone policing and concern trolling.

You're already at legal risk of ownership of the kids. Most states recognize out-of-wedlock fathers if no other men (in wedlock) are present when considering custody. Marriage is a lose/lose no matter what. Having kids out of wedlock is shit. But it's a hundred times better than being in wedlock.

My obsession with TRP is fucking with my head

2 upvotes · 3 July 2014 · /r/askTRP

Make the decision to act with your gut when you're around people - if you find yourself thinking while you're out, stop it, and dedicate no more than 5 - 10 minutes at the end of the day to reflect on your behaviors. Examine how your day went, and ask yourself what you might change. Then make an action plan for one behavioral change tomorrow. Repeat.

Any time beyond that that you start obsessing, remind yourself you made a plan that will take care of these issues, and sticking to the plan is what's best.

Eventually, as you start relying on your gut feelings- your behaviors will become more natural. Reflecting on your behaviors is important to keep yourself in check, but ultimately, many red pill behaviors should eventually internalize and become second nature to you. You've learned a lot here, it's time to trust yourself to make decisions, and don't worry about making mistakes. We all do it.

Also, welcome to being obsessive compulsive.

4th of July: Ideas and Plans

2 upvotes · 1 July 2014 · /r/RedPillWomen

I'm terribly excited - every year, there's a great small town festival with a huge car show nearby, and a great fireworks display. I basically grew up at car shows, and my husband loves cars (shocker), so we'll probably go to that. After he goes to sleep, I'll probably head to my parents', since they're having a 4th of July party. I may end up making a frosted brownie with a white frosting and raspberry/blueberry swirls. :) If I can't, I'm definitely going with those fruit kabobs, thank you! :)

As luck would have it, you're also getting a point for this post!

My tradition for the 4th ever since I moved out on my own (which, granted, was only four years ago), has been to bake multiple apple pies to bring with me to whatever festivities we attend. My apple pie is how I originally got on the good side of my husband's dad before we had gotten engaged. He was a tough egg to crack but I knew he loved apple pie, so I baked an extra one just for him and I think my plan worked ;)

Have a point, since I'm testing our bot.

We tolerate a large amount of ideas and disagreements on TRP. Disagree with the topic? Present your opinion. Flesh it out. No problem.

Concern trolling, on the other hand, is shit and lowers quality for everybody. See everybody else in this thread talking about their experiences? Some saying they don't mind confidence in women, or prefer it, while others present their points.. all an interesting conversation.

Then we have trolly-mcgee here saying that the article is bad, and that it was posted because the moderators have a secret money making scheme where we trick the board into donating money.

If he thought the content was poor, he could contribute content. He didn't. All he did was complain. He accused the moderation (me) of posting my own blog (not true) to make money (not true), and then when confronted, he didn't back down, he just kept swinging. Somebody here must pay for the inconvenience of him not liking something!! RPS must have a back room deal to get at those millions!!

The mod team doesn't have to tolerate baseless accusations like that. And we won't. And we don't. He can get bent.

As you can see, there's a stark difference between trolling and disagreeing. He trolled. He got banned. Period.

through each logical step to understand it yourself.

In case you're wondering- the reason there's a big nature verses nurture debate is because it's not settled. But that's irrelevant, since I couldn't give two shits about whether it's nature or nurture. Men and women are effectively different, and either you understand it, or you don't. 2 upvotes · 2 June 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Where is all the negativity coming from? The fact that you cannot reasonably discuss this indicates you have an emotional issue that is your own problem to work out. Hopefully you can see a therapist to work out the trauma.

Gone.

Look at this example right here folks. The lure, "in a strong relationship" and we're both the same - I want it just like you do, there's no difference! In a strong relationship- what? Are you afraid to see if our relationship is strong? If you dissappoint (i.e. open up to her) then maybe it wasn't a strong relationship to begin with.

But here's some shame to try to further my point since my points don't stand on their own. "Get yourself a therapist."

This is an analysis of a woman who is retconning a 5-year relationship to avoid admitting that his behaviors were attractive to her (for whatever reason).

Women will always paint exes to be abusive. In fact, I don't know one ex girlfriend I've ever had that didn't try to bad-mouth me to others by calling me abusive. You need to learn to read past this and see it for what it is.

This is a great example of just how people will change the story to fit their needs. Think about this for a second- why would somebody who clearly believes the guy was a jerk and a shitty guy- why would she enter the relationship, let alone stay in one for 5 years?

This is stuff to analyze.

What did he do wrong?

What did he do right?

How much is she making up to back her point?

This is absolutely what our community is about, and has always been about.

I'm very skeptical when somebody gives feel-good advice like "just add value to your life, the rest will come naturally..."

If there's one thing I've learned in life- it's that people with goals are the ones that succeed.

Going to the gym every day is "increasing value." Deciding that you want to get buff is a goal.

Without the goal, there is no drive, and no failure for missing your target.

You should concentrate on alpha traits because simply increasing your value isn't the same as reaching a goal.

A woman can decide (out of necessity or experimentation) that she wants to date somebody new and different, perhaps a beta. The only way to interpret what I wrote incorrectly is to purposefully believe I wrote that "I think women want to be raped" and not "want to be attractive enough to be raped," which clearly implies the importance is she would like to have the proper status to be rape-able (from my original comment), and does not imply that they actually want the rape to take place, as that is illogical and doesn't even make sense on it's own.

Yale makes girl's life a living hell for being naturally thin [Fat movement needs to be stopped]

2 upvotes · 9 April 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

It should be noted that if she has an insulin resistance (in the opposite direction of obese people) her bad eating habits to try to gain weight would be fruitless but the high carb, high sugar diet would still lead to similar health problems that obese people have- including cholesterol (LDL) problems and potentially heart disease.

Folks that are naturally skinny are not immune to heart disease, don't eat like an idiot just because you're skinny.

Nipping the problem in the bud. Right now it's working well, actually. But I realize that what the senior members say carries a lot of weight in the community, and if the red pill doesn't get their confidence, the new guys will quickly gain that attitude and suddenly you're seddit again.

I know we can avoid the demise that seddit suffered- but it means that members who once saw value in the red pill can move to other conversations without blasting the original sub- I see it a lot here, and it can and will shape public perception until the original sub really is shit. Calling it amateur hour, or overrun by betas and idiots- that attitude will destroy the sub quicker than any actual amateur betas.

Edit- as an homage to seddit, I frequent askseddit and try to chime in whenever possible. I feel honorbound to provide value back to the community that helped shape who I am today.

The idea would be that people's flair would show (+17 Endorsements) and any comment that's great, endorsed contributors could reply with a delta to up the score. We could just not pay attention to votes altogether.

Likewise, if endorsed contributors did an anti-delta, they could either get the comment removed, or explain to other people why the comment is junk.

I'm just not sure you're reading me here. You can win the lottery, but at the end of the day people still have and need jobs, and nothing has fundamentally changed about people just because you had an individual experience. Women are the selective gender was my point, and you're not making it past your you filter. If a woman approached me (it does happen occasionally), I wouldn't just turn her down because she approached. But I'd understand that it isn't the norm, that it didn't change the fundamental nature of women or men, and that I still wouldn't give advice to other men to sit and wait, because it's a bad strategy understanding that women are the selective gender. Are you following?

1. If a man has presumably consensual sex with a drunk girl he raped her because you cannot consent while drunk.
2. You can rape irrespective of whether or not you are drunk, drunken status has no effect on whether you can be charged with rape.
3. Because he is the rapist and she is the rape victim, it doesn't matter if he was drunk or not.

Being raised with it is not the central thing; It's about what I want the world to be like. I know this is part of TRP rhetoric, but I am going to ask you to please refrain from what is ultimately just persuasive propaganda. "You've been brainwashed by society!" You can use that to justify many things just like the above reasoning with the biological urges.

But why do you want the world to be this way? It's not propaganda- I'm asking you to think about why these things are the way they are in your mind.

Imagine if I said that I'd prefer to live in a world where the sky is green and water was red! Would you not tell me that these things are ridiculous and that instead of killing myself I should learn to adapt to the reality that the sky is not green and water is not red?

You don't need anybody but yourself to determine who is brainwashing who, just look at the internal inconsistencies. What lead you to believe women are or should be like you describe? Are you so vain that you believe your preference should dictate reality? Why would you think for a second that 1. you can change the world at your whim, and 2. it should be changed to your whim and not somebody elses?

If you believe you haven't been given unrealistic expectations, then answer me this: Why have none of your expectations been met? And more importantly, when confronted by men who have what you want (access to sex) and they tell you the world isn't as you hoped- why would you discredit them? We have what it is you seek, and we're telling you it works differently. Your method is a fairy tale, and you don't need me telling you this- you're involuntarily celibate. You live in a fairy tale, and it rewards you the way all fairy tales do: with absolutely nothing. You are not having sex, and other people are.

This argument doesn't move me. Like I said, I am trying to change the world not adapt to it. The idea I can change it and live on my terms is the only thing that brings me joy. Everything else is just another form of death. O and I'd argue that's far more critical stance than the "just accept how it is!" stance of TRP.

I'm not going to try to change your mind, only tell you that eventually you will have to if you want to find happiness instead of die.

There are many things that could be framed in the same way. A murder's blood lust. A pedophiles appetite for children. A thief's addiction to the game and the loot. When broken down, all things are rooted in biology. We don't give these people free passes. We don't give men who can't control their polygamous urges and become rapists free passes either. Why should women have that benefit with their cruel hypergamy?

Perhaps in a Utopian future where everybody is awarded one wife or one husband, we can all stop playing the games of our ancestors, but right now society supports women's urges- moreso than ever before thanks to feminism and hookup culture- so you either adapt, or you fail. This isn't an excuse any more than blaming gravity for falling is.

Again, this idea "We all go through this stage" is another propaganda piece. Implicit to it, is the idea that what I am thinking and feeling is all understood and part of the normal course, that the end game is already determined and that I already fall into TRP framework. I am sorry, but these things don't work on me.

Then go somewhere else. I really don't care. You think that I'm trying to indoctrinate you. You are the one with a problem that seems unsolvable. I gave you some simple tips to fix is, and as a guy who has a lot more sex now than he used to, I can say- you should go to the guys who figured it out for advice- but it's up to you if you want to take it.

This isn't propaganda. We all did go through this. That's why we're here.

But fuck you for suggesting this is some fucking cult. Really, I don't know you. If you rather off yourself then adapt to reality, then you're mentally ill and lack the will power to improve yourself. More pussy for me.

At the end of the day it's your choice. But don't fucking rationalize it like killing yourself is the bold sacrificial selfless step that you take to make yourself a martyr. You are not a martyr, you're a kid who can't figure out how to relate to women, and when asking for advice you close your eyes, plug your ears and say "surely this isn't right!" If you had any sense to know about women, you wouldn't be an incel.

If you kill yourself because of this- we will remember you- not as the kid who couldn't have sex or relationships with women, but the kid who wouldn't.

I will kill myself if I don't lose my virginity in the next 3 months.

I agree that it takes time, but I'm going to be 25 soon. My prime and youth gone... I've already lost the best time to experience my sexuality. Nothing will give me that back. And that is without taking into account how all this makes me feel on a day to day basis.

First of all, your prime isn't gone. I'm older than you, and last night I had a pretty hot date with an 18 year old girl. This is a girl I'd never have had a chance with when I was 20. You are in your prime now, and as you age, your value on the market will continue to rise. A common theme around here is that life starts at 30 for guys.

That's absurd to me. I just can't take that idea. I just can't. Evil bitches if it's true. There's no good in them if this is how they view open, honest and powerful emotions.

Don't think this is a conscious choice they're making. They're ruled by prime emotions and urges that they can't control, just like you.

I have to find them evil. They operate in ways that are opposite to my moral framework.

So because you were raised to believe something that completely doesn't match reality- you continue to try to frame reality within this framework? You are holding on as hard as you can to try to fit the mismatch of your observations to your upbringing. And right now it's leading you to suicide. Man, you gotta take a step back and think about that one with a critical mind for a second.

Where I want acceptance they want selectiveness. Where I want love they want mystery. Where I want simplicity they want games. Where I want to work towards unconditional things they make lists of every increasing nit picking conditions. Women may just be evil to me.

It seems like they're evil, and terrible creatures. We all go through this stage. But there is light at the end of the tunnel. Once you learn and learn to accept them for who and what they are, there is love and real relationships to be had. You just have to learn the language.

These women aren't bad people, they want acceptance and happiness and love just like anybody else. It's just that their programming won't let them meet these conditions in a direct straight-forward way. Our society is doing a good job of lying to women about their goals and needs too- just visit /r/redpillwomen to see this in action.

That's the flip side of why suicide ain't such a bad option in my mind. I'm not sure I want a life in a place like this.

You may very well think that, but just remember that the only reason you think these things are bad and wrong is because you were taught to believe that. In Plato's allegory of the cave, do you think that normal people wandering around the world were mad at reality, all three dimensions of it? So why were the people trapped in the cave so mad at reality if people exposed to it their entire lives were fine?

That is simply the truth. I would end my life some what happily just to be a silent martyr against this evil, cut throat, mating game.

Then you die, not a martyr, but a loser in the game- the game that tricked you into killing yourself by teaching you falsehoods about reality and then letting you loose to fail. The game was to figure out how reality really worked and adjusting.

I will kill myself if I don't lose my virginity in the next 3 months.

2 upvotes · 24 January 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Similar to above, I don't know how long I can wait.

The thing is, if you're really looking for success, then you're going to have to accept that the wait takes time. Everybody wants to be rich, but if you ask any self-made millionaire how long it takes, they'll say: patience and persistence is key, you don't just get rich one day.

Now I realize this is a little different, but the idea is the same. Who you are and what you've been doing hasn't worked so far, so it's time to work on something that does work. This will take time, so there's no point in setting unrealistic goals.

If I want to say something like "You seem like the type of a girl I'd marry" on the first date or "I love you" a month in, I hate that I shouldn't. Other than that emotion denying aspect flirting is fun and hot I think.

It's just a fact of life- you don't want to be a commitment slut, it turns women off. They want you to be reserved with your affection, which shows that other women have a hard time getting it too.

Yea, I have been doing cardio. I'm actually looking for a good no equipment routine. If you know of one or have resources I would appreciate it.

You might try /r/fitness. Bodyweight exercises aren't bad- like pushups and pullups. You do want to get a routine. Body building will do wonders for your mood and your confidence.

I have read the sidebar of TRP and I knew basically all of it already. There are just somethings I disagree with too much to go with.

I'm not going to tell you the stuff in the sidebar is biblical, but you should ask yourself- why do you disagree with those things so much? Or, more importantly, why is it that these beliefs and views you hold so dear have never rewarded you with intimacy with a woman?

We don't necessarily like the way the world is, but if there's one thing you can count on, it's that we won't sugar coat it either way. Sometimes the cold facts seem like they're heartless, like they lack soul. It sucks, it really does. But reality isn't fair, and it doesn't hand out free meal coupons. If you know what you want, sometimes you have to take it.

Why girls have to make it so needlessly hard? We are all after the same things in the end...

At the end of the day, we don't want the same things. Women are looking to get the highest quality partners they can- this means rejecting a majority of potential suitors to get the highest quality one. This is based on their limited capacity and high cost for reproduction (as opposed to men). Men's strategy is to spread seed as widely as possible, as evidenced by men's sexual tastes verses women's.

By rejecting as many men as they do, they can keep the price for pussy as high as they do, allowing them to artificially inflate their value and potentially demand commitment, giving you the feeling of artificial scarcity. What if you never find another woman? You better settle down right now!

Stick around and read the red pill, you'll find there are a lot of guys who have been in your position, and they're all making a similar journey to yours.

And for heaven's sake, drop the suicide rhetoric. While I realize that's how you feel, and trust me, I've been there, it's not going to help you on this journey. It's time to get serious, if you really want this, then put away your childish notions of what should be, and start embracing what is.

Here's what I told you in PPD

Most of the blue pillers here won't recognize anything about your problem as a genuine problem. So far I've read that you're being passive aggressive and selfish thinking that the world "owes you sex," which is hardly what being involuntarily celibate is about, but that's their take on it. It completely ignores the reality that people crave intimacy to feel like humans. Desiring it and getting frustrated over failure is perfectly natural, and unlike the blue piller's opinion that it's entitlement-minded that you want sex, I believe it to be one of the most important cravings and desires a man will have.

Let's look at the next view: That sex won't change your life. That sex isn't that important, and that losing your virginity won't change anything with the source of your problem.

This fundamentally ignores a very real part of your life- this is something that they will deny exists. The reason they deny it is simple: it's easier to change your goals and expectations than to have goals and expectations and fail to reach them.

Having sex, especially the first time, is not easy. So they say, well here's a guy getting so frustrated with his celibacy, let's just convince him that life is good that way and maybe he'll shut up.

This is a similar tune we hear with the fat acceptance movement, and the feminist movement. They do not strive to better themselves, but instead strive to change the status quo, so the fat, obnoxious you should be considered sexy and shame on anybody desiring somebody skinnier.

This view fundamentally denies the male experience.

Assuming you're not a troll, or just looking to spark a conversation on PPD, my advice to you is actually very simple: Realize that you are not alone with this problem, and that your problem is very real. Despite what these people here have said, I understand that your identity is inextricably tied to this. I swear sometimes people try to play macho or pretend as though social validation has no effect on them whatsoever. Either they try to present the best version of themselves online, or they've never been without social validation long enough to realize what a crippling experience it truly is.

Desiring intimacy is normal, and simply lowering your expectations is a stop-gap solution. At the end of the day, we are programmed as men to want to find relations with women. That's what drives us, that's what makes us happy, and it's perfectly natural to become depressed and upset if you can neither find a way to do it, nor come up with a decent path to bring you out of this hole.

Not seeing a light at the end of the tunnel is the most crippling part of the experience. Knowing that based on your experiences, it doesn't even matter if you meet another girl next week, you know exactly how it goes. You meet, she's not interested, you say something wrong but you're not sure what it was, you never connect romantically or sexually. You don't see how it could change, so what's the point?

This is a dark spiral that you can get into. And the people here are plenty happy to tell you it's your fault, nobody owes you sex.

But there's more to it than that. On the surface, what they're saying is true, it's just not particularly constructive. It's the same tired advice I used to hear from my friends and family, and I'm not sure if they realized this, but it drove me deeper into the hole. Hearing that not only am I having no luck finding a girlfriend, but it's entirely my fault- well that's not easy news to hear.

They say, involuntarily celibate doesn't exist, nobody owes you sex, it's up to you to get what you want out of life. And it's interesting because while that seems to make sense, it ignores the very point of involuntary celibacy- it's a frustration with celibacy because you don't want to be celibate. If it were voluntary, wouldn't an incel simply stop being an incel and just have sex??

And there we uncover the crux of the problem. Sex is not easy to get, and as men, sex is one of the most important parts of our identity and lives.

I know every person is different, but I will say personally, I am not very happy if my sex life isn't booming. Even short periods of celibacy can drive me to depression. And no amount of rationalization or goal realignment will magically change this. It's a drive programmed deep within my self. I've spent many years trying to deny it, but this only made my depression worse. You cannot deny who you are. It won't work. And I think you know full well that's true, since when you read the advice here, you instantly get the same feeling I do... "that sounds like a solid analysis, but I feel further away from happiness than before..."

It's the same as "just be yourself" and other tidbits of advice people like to give. They seem so helpful on the surface, but ultimately add nothing to the conversation, and it never truly takes your experience into perspective. If being myself worked, I wouldn't be involuntarily celibate.

For the onlookers reading: involuntarily celibate means going without sexual relations with a woman and not knowing how to fix it. It's not because women owe you sex- but because everybody desires intimacy, but not everybody knows how to go about getting it.

And that's where I'm going with this.

It's important to know that you're not alone, and this problem is very real. The best of us have experienced it, and I can personally tell you it was the single most crippling experience of my life, and suicidal thoughts are not uncommon in this realm.

But now it's important to point out that there is a solution, and it's somewhat counter-intuitive. Ultimately, as men, we are in charge of forging our destinies. This is both a blessing and a curse. You've already discovered the curse part- but let's talk about the blessing. The blessing is that happiness is something you can attain, and all you need is hard work to get there. And if you're honestly considering offing yourself, you owe it to yourself to first put in some work and give it a try.

Three months may happen, but it's a bad goal to have. The path to self-improvement takes a while and results are rarely instant (although a boost to your mood is usually pretty instant after a week or so of working out). I would not put such an artificial time constraint on learning how to be a man. For me, it was a multi-year experience, and I'm still learning all the time.

The basic tenets of the red pill are: get into shape (lift), and learn game (flirt).

I will kill myself if I don't lose my virginity in the next 3 months.

2 upvotes · 23 January 2014 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Most of the blue pillers here won't recognize anything about your problem as a genuine problem. So far I've read that you're being passive aggressive and selfish thinking that the world "owes you sex," which is hardly what being involuntarily celibate is about, but that's their take on it. It completely ignores the reality that people crave intimacy to feel like humans. Desiring it and getting frustrated over failure is perfectly natural, and unlike the blue piller's opinion that it's entitlement-minded that you want sex, I believe it to be one of the most important cravings and desires a man will have.

Let's look at the next view: That sex won't change your life. That sex isn't that important, and that losing your virginity won't change anything with the source of your problem.

This fundamentally ignores a very real part of your life- this is something that they will deny exists. The reason they deny it is simple: it's easier to change your goals and expectations than to have goals and expectations and fail to reach them.

Having sex, especially the first time, is not easy. So they say, well here's a guy getting so frustrated with his celibacy, let's just convince him that life is good that way and maybe he'll shut up.

This is a similar tune we hear with the fat acceptance movement, and the feminist movement. They do not strive to better themselves, but instead strive to change the status quo, so the fat, obnoxious you should be considered sexy and shame on anybody desiring somebody skinnier.

This view fundamentally denies the male experience.

Assuming you're not a troll, or just looking to spark a conversation on PPD, my advice to you is actually very simple: Realize that you are not alone with this problem, and that your problem is very real. Despite what these people here have said, I understand that your identity is inextricably tied to this. I swear sometimes people try to play macho or pretend as though social validation has no effect on them whatsoever. Either they try to present the best version of themselves online, or they've never been without social validation long enough to realize what a crippling experience it truly is.

Desiring intimacy is normal, and simply lowering your expectations is a stop-gap solution. At the end of the day, we are programmed as men to want to find relations with women. That's what drives us, that's what makes us happy, and it's perfectly natural to become depressed and upset if you can neither find a way to do it, nor come up with a decent path to bring you out of this hole.

Not seeing a light at the end of the tunnel is the most crippling part of the experience. Knowing that based on your experiences, it doesn't even matter if you meet another girl next week, you know exactly how it goes. You meet, she's not interested, you say something wrong but you're not sure what it was, you never connect romantically or sexually. You don't see how it could change, so what's the point?

This is a dark spiral that you can get into. And the people here are plenty happy to tell you it's your fault, nobody owes you sex.

But there's more to it than that. On the surface, what they're saying is true, it's just not particularly constructive. It's the same tired advice I used to hear from my friends and family, and I'm not sure if they realized this, but it drove me deeper into the hole. Ensuring that we have a community that welcomes men with all the emotions that come along with it is a crucial and integral part of the red pill. It's not brash by accident. Our culture is so fucked, and so anti-male that there are no male spaces for guys to just be guys. You know, the fact is, sometimes guys need to vent, or need to be able to say what they're thinking. The red pill simply wouldn't exist as it is today if we didn't allow that to be this space.

Suggesting that we should curb this is concern trolling and against the very spirit of the sub.

It doesn't address why men would go to these reward centers, and it certainly concentrates on an addiction-as-a-victim mentality that I think as men we should be wary jumping on board for.

Unless somebody has tied some strings to your hands and dick, and forced your eyes open to watch porn, you have the ability to make conscious decisions.

Now I realize that some people become alcoholics, and some people wack off more than others, but the question isn't what's wrong with masturbation, porn, or alcohol, but what's wrong with you, and why is there this push to demonize everything that might reward people. Follow the money.

Furthermore, ask yourself why it is that anybody would prefer such a reward system as porn and masturbation when most certainly any one of them would likely prefer a real woman if it were available.

I have literally no idea where he got this idea about dinner date prices. The argument we got into was that I said that red pill stuff really only applies to women we find attractive, and he went on a tirade about how we should alert the presses that redpillschool admitted "it's not all women, just the women you choose." He then repeated this point seven times in bold to make some weird point. When I tried to explain that this was not new information, but was pretty common knowledge on the red pill (had he read it), he screenshotted it and condescendingly proclaimed "I took the liberty of memorializing our peace accord" asking me to announce to all of our users this new change of heart.

It was condescending and dramatic, and yes, I'll call it a circus, but it was he who invited the clowns.

You know as well as I do that it's not an all-or-nothing concept, when I said we might be wrong, I mean there's likely a more accurate theory out there waiting to be discovered. That doesn't make our theories wrong, only less precise.

We can claim to understand humans with more accuracy than others if we have the results to back it up. And at the end of the day, it's about sex, not teaching a phd course. I think it passes a reasonable enough test to give it a try and see if it works.

Listen we could be wrong about everything, but until something comes along and gives us better results, I see no reason to abandon this line of reasoning.

If you got dates without putting in much effort (not being unattractive), of course you didn't think of it strategically. Now consider it from the point of view of somebody who has tried a lot of different things and has had zero luck with getting a date, you'd start to feel really hopeless without some sort of plan or strategy. Covert communication: You start building muscles, people notice you're good looking. She picks up that your options are increasing.

Overt communication: "I could date anybody I want! I don't need you!"

The covert is subtle, can boost attraction with no bad side effects. The overt just seems needy, probably not even true if he has to say it out loud, and just mean. Will likely damage attraction.

he doesn't understand that her attraction to him isn't rational

This is contempt.

This is absurd. Attraction isn't rational. If it were, we'd be more attracted to ugly people because they probably make really good husbands and wives.

You are trying as hard as you can to twist what I'm saying into your preconceived ideas. I will address more here, but I implore you to open your mind and try to understand what I'm saying before letting your mind run off.

It's important not to try to "fix" what she says is broken,

This is stonewalling.

No it's not. I'm not saying that taking out the trash is bad. Do it, fine. Obviously people in relationships communicate expectations. This is a completely different scenario. We're talking about negotiating attraction. You don't say to her "if I take out the trash will you love me again?" This is trying to bargain for attraction and it won't work, so you avoid the behavior.

instead you work on your own game and improve your standing in the sexual market.

This is disengagement and what Gottman codes as 'turning away'.

Not even remotely. You don't have to be distant or unfriendly to start dieting.

It can make your mate try harder.

This is negative emotional reciprocity. Partner A reacts with withdrawal, and Partner B reacts with anxiety and insecurity.

You've reframed partner A as withdrawing, so when you understand your mistake, you'll see that's not what's happening at all.

I really can't carry on until I get a sign from you that you're willing to understand this.

"Problematic" is a nebulous term that allows SJWs to sidestep the legwork of designating an actual problem with the behavior and instead use a thought-terminating cliché to label something they don't like as something nobody should like.

If something could possibly lead to problems, they can sweep it in with the rest of the thought-crimes.

I have literally used the term "paradox" in the past on this subreddit to explain the thought experiment, because it really does throw you for a loop!

Thanks for taking the time to understand my position. Ironically, in one of the big debates about this, I think the one that started the shit storm, people asked me point blank how I feel about rape and my answer was simply: My opinion doesn't really matter, it's a thought experiment. They were hellbent on making this about me liking rape from the get go. This wasn't a misunderstanding, it was a smear campaign. It's not an uncommon tactic, I've seen it before, and it's especially nasty. It's one reason I don't trust the blue pill. I mean, maybe, just maybe the red pill is very wrong. If that's true, the blue pill is still worse.

But venting every time you're angry is basically building a bad habit

Not at all, it's a way of working through issues and gaining perspective if somebody is listening/giving input.

If you're angry, there's an issue that needs to be dealt with. Venting is perfectly natural and healthy. Bottling it up is bad.

2 upvotes · 27 November 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It really was a shame. Some of the more vocal blue pill members over there are so convinced that their understanding is the only perspective, that they will completely disregard a red piller saying "but that's seriously not what I think..."

Their response? "Yes it is! Because you're wrong, and I have to disagree with you, so this must be how you think..."

Ironically, it's just another example of how a group that is supposedly anti-hate embodies the very sort of hate they're purporting to fight. Nobody trivializes rape more than a feminist by making it into a meaningless joke.

2 upvotes · 12 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

If you'd like to believe that, fine.

I am not alone. I am backed up by the very fact that tomorrow Jimmy on his 18th birthday is required to sign up for the selective service. Congress agrees that he should because of emergency preparedness.

It's you who is in the minority at this point. The few who understand so little about national security that they entertain the idea of doing away with selective service registration out of a naive desire for social justice.. as if it will make fuck of a difference should we be in a third world war.

Well the good news is men and women are finally being treated the same, we've done away with all gendered names. From now on, everybody's name is "Yan". On the downside, our country is being occupied by a new dictator.

And chick flicks are the last place you should be looking for a realistic portrayal of relationships as (surprise!) their goal is not to promote gender understanding/equality, but to make money, generally using a tired cliched script.

The movies are a great place to see what's culturally acceptable. But if that doesn't do it for you, just check for Marilyn Monroe quotes on facebook... "if don't like me at my worst... "

For me, the term "involuntary celibacy" or "incel" implies a lot of sexual entitlement. These men feel the world has failed them because they've yet to get laid.

At the end of the day, no matter how much men do to try to get laid, the final decision on whether or not they get sex isn't actually their choice.

Involuntarily celibate is a very basic concept. They want relations with women, and can't figure out how to do it. It's not for a lack of trying. In no way does this imply they think they're entitled to sex. It signals that they're not celibate on purpose. This isn't a hard concept to grasp.

I'm sorry, there are professionals out there who will take care of your needs.

Good point, guys, if you're unhappy with your lot in life because you can't find any way to have relations with other humans, just break the law. See how easy it is?

As a side note, I would never use the word "problematic" in the first place, it assumes too much about everybody's views and values. I find it's rarely used by anybody other than social justice warriors.

Edit: I have to add, it's not that we specifically choose to socialize women this way. It's a free market principle. Some people will try to hold women responsible for their actions- but it doesn't matter, because there will always be a sex-starved idiot further down the bar who will tolerate any action for access to sex. You won't change this with a campaign- this is how the human species has survived and prospered.

2 upvotes · 9 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

There is some amount of racial talk I leave up, for instance a few of our more prominent endorsed contributors are black, asian, and middle eastern. I find comments on their cultures interesting. I have to add that when I see discussion about, say, black women, that it's a reference to the american black culture and not an actual intrinsic property of women who are black.

I don't doubt that there might be differences between the races but based on the amount of time humans evolved genders vs races, I doubt they're very big differences mentally (if at all) and I don't think it's relevant to our discussion.

Talk about cultural differences are encouraged though.

If you see any real racism where somebody is actually hating on a group by color, message the mods so we can

Should women have the same voting rights as men if they have the same responsibilities given to men in order to vote?

Yes.

Further, I understand that voting and conscription were never inextricably tied together, but I believe from a political standpoint there was much of a feeling at the time that voting and conscription were tied together which is why they lowered the voting age to 18-- because we were sending our young men to die at that age.

That said, aside from whether or not there is any real tie between them, I personally believe that women should have the same responsibilities as men in our country, and an appropriate action if women as a group rather not sign up for the selective service would be to remove their right to vote.

I see them as linked because voting has an effect on our wars, they are not separate. Anybody bearing the burden of responsibility to fight a war we get into will be more conservative with their voting in that regard.

Furthermore, enforcement of unjust laws (or lack thereof) makes no argument regarding the laws themselves.

Here are some gendered examples of female hypoagency from this site:

WAR – This is the claim that “men start wars” and that war is a male problem that men foist off onto innocent civilian bystanders. This relies on a completely uninformed and naïve understanding of war as some kind of sport that all those rough boys go off and do and the stray rounds fall on peace-loving innocent bystanders – in other words a complete denial of the benefits that women and others on the winning side derive from war, and a denial of women's role in sending men to war.

POLITICS – This is the claim that men have all the power because they hold the majority of political office, despite the fact that women outnumber men as voters, so are responsible for all these male politicians being voted in. This ignores the troublesome fact that women make up the majority of voters. The engrained belief in hypoagency is what makes this denialism possible.

BENEVOLENT SEXISM – Every time women enjoy any kind of advantage due to gender – “privilege” – that has to be spun as being due to male action, or else it has to be spun as some kind of disadvantage. Labeling an advantage “benevolent sexism” accomplishes that.

And here's KarenStraughan's take on female hypoagency

Sexual relationships as adversarial?

2 upvotes · 1 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Women get approached a lot, especially at bars and clubs. They have their defenses up. Pickup has a calibration stage. It's when you open and then modify your tone to match hers. Some have major bitch shields, some are friendly. You calibrate to match.

Anybody who has done enough approaches realizes that approaching and attracting mates has very war-analogous feel to it. That doesn't mean that when you talk to a woman you're literally attacking her.

Sometimes the "defenses" you're breaking down are her innate tendency to brush off male attention in general. You have to find a way to be novel enough for her to be interested.

There's no literal war here.

That said, male and female mating strategies are somewhat at odds with eachother, so when you pull back and look at the bigger picture, it does start to look like war.

Just the other night I was out with a woman and we bumped into an old friend of hers, who proceeded to talk about how I should show my appreciation to my lady because I'm lucky to have her. The conversation went on for a bit, and I played along just enough to get rid of her, but the point remains, this is something I've seen women do a lot. Wouldn't you like to understand why this happens? Why it's common? What the effect is, intended or otherwise?

These are the questions we attempt to address.

Rape is special because there is no requirement for proof (no dead body to point to), the accuser can stay entirely anonymous, and can basically be used as a weapon by women. Men accusing women is a much different scenario. Women's names are by default kept private, even often in cases of statutory rape by females.

If I were a woman, and I wanted to ruin somebody's career/life/marriage, this would be the easiest, least expensive way to do it with no repercussions.

At no point did I claim that his television show was a source, only that Bill Nye can't be discredited for making a television show, since stephen hawking also made one.

I linked to his scientific work outside of television.

In fact, I argued that stephen hawings show would also not make a good source, once mrsa introduced the absurd idea.

He then used that as proof that I agree that popular media is not a good source. I was merely arguing that Bill Nye is not untrustworthy despite his contribution to popular media because stephen hawking also contributes to popular media.

You're missing the point. If someone links to an episode at Bill Nye the Science Guy to support their claim, then they are idiots.

(first introduction of usage of a television show as a source, instead of the original discussion about the men themselves)

Because Bill Nye would lie to his audience?

mrsa:

No, it's because a children's TV show is not a valid source of scientific information. Do I really need to explain this?...

me

By the same criteria, neither would Stephen Hawking's show be.

(acknowledgement that the shows themselves would not be a valid source)

Exactly. Hence why someone shouldn't rely on popular media for their scientific information and instead should look at academic sources, like Hawking's published articles (which Bill Nye does not have).

(This does not preclude that Bill Nye is considered a scientist, nor that he knows what he's doing.)

Me:

You said that trusting pop psychology is like confusing the work of these two scientists. Upon further inspection we see you devalue Bill Nye's work because he has a television show. When confronted with the fact that both have shows, you mistakenly assume that Bill Nye's entire career is on television. Believe it or not he's a very credible scientist, which is precisely why nobody here is taking you seriously when you claim to have any knowledge as to the authenticity of sources.

Accepting that kind of delay gives the female power over the interpretation of the event.

This is a brilliant point. If she were truly raped, she shouldn't have trouble coming forward instantly. But forcing her to make a split second decision to lie about cheating when she's not sure the info will get out, that takes away her plausible deniability if she wanted to use the rape excuse later.

We recognize falsifiability in a different way.

Let's say a group of 15,000 guys got together to talk about how their sex lives suck. They all admit having gotten bad advice, and taking it, and it not working. It almost sounds like they've been fed the same stuff.

Well a few of them try some new stuff and report success. They share that info with others. They start to realize success. They share that info with more.

The falsifiability in our book is: does this info reflect what I observe? Does it predict what I observe? Does it make me more successful.

Of course, there's room for error. There's a possibility that our advice works but for none of the reasons we suggest. That's ok. We're a group talking about sexual strategy. The theory behind it is to sketch in the details, to try to attempt to create a cohesive world view. It's not required to test our hypotheses, but it does help us develop new ones.

The Red Pill does not represent a complete, coherent system of thought and any attempts from either side to portray it as such will end in pointless argument. Discuss.

The recent pair of posts from /u/redpillschool [1] and /u/spermjackalope [2] accusing each other's respective positions of misrepresenting them and not knowing what they themselves are representing, respectively, got me thinking on this topic.

I agree that there was a miscommunication, though I'm not convinced it wasn't intentional. But I don't think either of us would agree that don't know ourselves what we're representing and I think you should strike that.

the red pill itself does not agree on the position it represents.

I already presented the core concept of the red pill in the other post. It's simply: pursue the truth. It relies heavily on experience, and takes the position that there is heavy interest in the mainstream holding incorrect views, so people often believe and repeat lies.

Beyond that, you're right, there is no universal laws within the red pill. A lot of us agree on certain aspects. I personally try to steer conversation towards the Rollo Tomassi brand of reasoning, but technically it's just guys talking about what they think is the truth and either agreeing, debating it, or disagreeing altogether.

Mind you, this doesn't make it any less valuable to us. It's a fraternity, and we find value in it.

I think blue pillers have projected their own version of the red pill to argue against, and have yet to accurately describe our position

Broadly, you seem to think that feminists have taken over the world, to the detriment of both men and women.

Well, westernized countries, but yes, working on the world.

You believe that someone's gender is one of the most (if not the most) important factor in determining their behavior.

Regarding interpersonal relationships, yes. I don't think it effects their ability to be a doctor.

You believe women respond to dominance (alpha) behavior, and that men who disagree with you are "betas" who aren't getting laid.

Incorrect. Betas can get laid, but for different reasons. Furthermore, people who disagree are not betas. There is no correlation between disagreeing and being beta. Betas are less likely to attract women on primary sexual features, but instead tend to rely on provider features. They are also usually walked over by women.

You think marriage is generally a bad idea (I say generally because there is some variation in opinions) and gives the woman too much power over the man. Ditto babies.

Yes, yes.

Game does not exist.

2 upvotes · 13 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

That's fine by me. We go beyond the game and try to figure out how to improve not just pickup, but relationships in general. Then we try to pencil in a theory that patches all the ideas together. It's a rough sketch and really doesn't prove anything, it only helps us build a framework in which to hypothesize and test.

For instance, confidence is a positive trait in men. Sure. We don't really know why, but there are a lot of theories regarding the male gender role throughout evolution. They are just-so stories that help us pencil in the details, but they're not necessary to understand that confidence is a positive trait in men.

We don't mind that people don't like our vernacular and theories. It really isn't for everybody. I learned a long time ago that how I communicate with women is different from how I communicate with men. We communicate in adages and with hyperbole. People come in and draw the wrong conclusions, and we just kinda shrug it off.

I rarely see anybody in the blue pill or here accurately portray our position before trying to take it down, so it really doesn't bother me that people don't understand.

Our experiences are unique and it's very likely a lot of women won't see things the way we do. And that's ok. They don't have to.

Game does not exist.

The word "cold" has a broad meaning, doesn't make it less useful.

And, yes, women can work on being attractive. But guy game and woman game are not the same.

Being a normal human being with interesting stories and hobbies is not game.

Again, you are bringing a very limited perspective to the table. If being normal were sufficient to get girls, why would there be an entire industry dedicated to helping men get girls? Shouldn't it just be easy?

You cannot dibs the entire spectrum of actions that positively affect attraction.

If you find something that boosts your chances, share it and we'll try it in the field. Some things work for some, and not for others. You adapt what helps and drop what doesn't.

No, game includes everything in my post, and can benefit people who aren't socially inept.

Your example is a brand of game by a PUA. I won't defend his ideas, some are more effective than others. If I thought throwing rocks at girls was effective, I'd call it game. We'd try it out and determine it doesn't work. Game has a very large trial and error component to it.

2 upvotes · 28 August 2013 · /r/MensRights

To the onlookers who may read this later, what soulcakeduck here is attempting to do is misrepresent a point in an effort to attach a stigma to a group of people who would otherwise have nothing to do with it.

A great example of this is this very argument, where she attempts to define my position, and then tells me I'm wrong when I clarify my position. Precisely who defines my position, her or me?

Her argument style is low effort on accusations, requiring high effort responses. I've explained in great detail exactly why we discussed rape: the question of contractual consent. There's no reason to rehash it every time a troll decides to falsely accuse me of something.

What she does is take a quote slightly out of context to skew a position. For instance, a quote from me such as:

Rape became a crime historically due to the nature of fidelity and marriage, which was likely due to concealed ovulation, putting into question paternity..

And she skews it into something like:

You believe rape is merely theft of fidelity

Or the position on marital rape. It's very simple:

The question being asked was how long you could give consent for, and whether it could be done contractually.

The outcome was:

You believe wives shouldn't be able to say no.

Again, a very low effort troll here. Basically she equates the discussion on contract law as a de facto endorsement of the crime known as rape.

As you can see from this dishonest debate tactic, there is absolutely no real reason for me to defend myself, as I've never declared a position such as this in the first place. There is literally no reason anybody should be forced into stating they think rape is bad. This is a normal default position for most normal people. It seems to me that souldcakeduck just likes forcing people to do things against their will. (That was a joke).

Why is /r/mensrights so opposed to /r/theredpill?

2 upvotes · 28 August 2013 · /r/MensRights

The context, which you have clearly left out, was regarding the debate on whether consent could be given by contract for long periods of time. I added that it would be bad people skills to exercise your right if the contract existed. I also added that the supreme court ruled in 1970s that consent could not be given by contract. (or at least that the marriage contract did not contain any implicit definition therein).

You've done what you could to skew the argument, but you're wrong in every way shape and form.

What are the steps to becoming a redpill woman?

2 upvotes · 8 July 2013 · /r/RedPillWomen

Let me illustrate it for you.

Say a guy looks good. He's moderately attractive, maybe a 6 or a 7.

You'd say, well this guy will get girls because he's attractive. Not because of game.

But check this out, do you think if he'd be successful if he approached a woman and said "I'm interested in you but only for a serious relationship, I think I'm already in love..."?

That might screw up his chances.

He shouldn't text her 30 times after getting her number saying "I think I may love you?"

But how could it be that his actions and attitude could have an effect?? How could this be?

As The Harem Turns.

2 upvotes · 8 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It's true that looks have an effect. The problem is, there's no way of knowing how much your looks are having an effect, and how much it's your attitude. Other than getting into shape and having a good haircut, there's not much you can do to change your looks- so that's why good game advocates pushing forward like you look good.

Basically it means, let her say no, don't do it for her. I'm regularly surprised when women who are high on the scale tell me I'm hot. I'd never think we'd pair up. I just act like I'm hot and I get into places I had no idea I could.

If I had thought it through, I'd probably not have approached half the girls I have because I didn't think I was good enough looking.

He created the child as well as her. If she accepts responsibility for the child's life

Because he helped create the child, he should take responsibility without the option to opt out.

Let's reverse the genders.

Because she helped create the child, she should take responsibility without the option to opt out. We should outlaw abortion.

And she is a single mother with little chance of professional advancement because you BOTH fucked up.

No, it's because she didn't use her legal options, of which there were many. Just because she didn't like the way her options jived with her didn't mean she didn't have them. You keep implying that just because she doesn't like her options she's in the same spot as a man who literally has no options..

AGAIN: the solution is to NOT get a girl pregnant.

That's not a solution: as evidenced by the plethora of single moms. It's like saying we can stop cancer by avoiding the sun.

YOU helped to create one which makes YOU liable

At the moment, yes I am liable. I'm arguing that a man's liability should be no greater than a woman's.

, along with her.

False, she has zero liability, she can abort if she chooses.

The Hamsters take to the wheel: No amount of logic will solve the abortion/child support double standard, it's an emotionally charged issue

2 upvotes · 6 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

You both have options. A man's options are on how to prevent pregnancy and a woman's is both how to prevent and what to do if it happens.

It just so happens that women have more options, and each one of her options obligates the man.

they get to choose if they want to carry it or not, no way around that.

Yes there is, we could make abortion illegal again. They didn't always have these rights.

Use good judgement in general when sleeping with women.

Because women shouldn't be held accountable for their actions, you continue to try to blame men for women's actions. If a woman lies to me, why is that my fault?

Women do have last ditch options (abortion, adoption) but they come with emotional baggage

Boo-fucking-hoo. Working the next 18 years of my life as a slave to a woman who I did not want a child with has emotional baggage.

So while a man might be stuck paying out once the pregnancy actually happens, the woman is stuck no matter what-she has no choice but to find a way to deal with a problem you both created.

So what you're saying is, there's emotional backlash, and physical backlash, but only the woman's matters?

Women have the right to abortion. My body, my choice. I don't need to carry a child to term if I don't want. Women's Rights!

But the guy should take care of it if I do have it, because it's not what's in the parent's best interest. It's for the best interest of the child.

(If best interest of the child were really the factor, you'd outlaw abortion).

2 upvotes · 17 June 2013 · /r/RedPillWomen

I'd like to add that anger surrounding the article itself is attributable to the difference in communication styles - whereas men need black and white examples and metaphors, we often use hyperbole to get a point across. Obviously women aren't actually 11 year olds.

But, when a guy sees his girlfriend lash out in an emotional tantrum, he tries to apply logic. If he sees the relationship as two copilots, then it's confusing when he applies the reasoning "but if I did this, you'd be mad."

It's much easier to illustrate it as such: of course if you did that she'd be mad. But you don't have that luxury. That is not going to be part of your relationship.

I personally support mensrights, and consider it an important movement for all men, including us. That said, I think we have similar goals, but different approaches. While the people of mensrights believes there to be an eventual equality that can be found, we're more apt to say that men and women aren't equal biologically, so we treat equality (beyond equal treatment under the law) as more of a pipe dream.

Monogamy is actually a pro-male institution. Or was when the culture tried to heavily suppress female hypergamy and promiscuousness. Today, monogamy is sort of only on the surface. There isn't any substance to it, so it doesn't perform its original purpose.

Monogamy as a concept isn't pro-male, it was pro-female as she was the one who required dedicated provisions. It was our attempts to control and suppress female hypergamy that were pro-male. (correct)

I have a lot of respect for guys who can accept that responsibility.

Just so we're clear, one of women's sexual strategies is getting men (providers) to take care of other men (alphas) children.

One such way they ensure this strategy is making sure the social narrative praises taking care of other people's kids as noble, worthy of respect, and something that a real man would do.

Also understand that it's basically the same as the guy in OP's link: providing resources but receiving nothing in return.

The guy in OP's story provided money and didn't feel like he was getting value in return. Providing good parenting and resources to raise somebody else's kid is similar in that your genetic legacy does not benefit.

When a selfless task is praised, follow the money to see who benefits.

I've always hated the phrase "better be ready to deal with the consequences."

Consequences are something that are unavoidable. A direct result of your actions.

That's like saying, well you got strep throat, time to deal with the consequences. NO! We have modern medicine, and have been altering "consequences" for a long time now!

The fact of the matter is, a baby is not a consequence of pregnancy anymore. Women have 100% option there, so it's no longer a consequence, it's a choice.

Here's a much more likely illustration of the caveman:

Smart caveman was able to create traps which meant he didn't need to hunt, had a lot more food available, could take care of more children. Women flock to those with more resources.

During the night when the cavewoman is feeling rambunctious, she gets bored of provider caveman, and sneaks out and has an sex with the strong caveman because she's turned on by him.

Smart caveman raises 4 children, a few of which aren't his.

His legacy carries forward, but the desire for brawn does not vanish.

Strong cavemen who have some smarts manage to outperform both the smart and strong categories, thus being the most selected for.

I'll ask another, bluntly, and phrased specifically to prevent your jerkoff word-games

I guess where I come from, the specific meaning of words is very important to a debate.

Do you or do you not have a problem with a man forcing himself on his wife, as long as his doing so is not legally prohibited?

I have answered this a number of times.

http://www.reddit.com/r/GameOfDolls/comments/1fbt7l/why_i_am_not_a_feminist_even_if_patriarchy_does/ca9olt6

http://www.reddit.com/r/GameOfDolls/comments/1fbt7l/why_i_am_not_a_feminist_even_if_patriarchy_does/ca9noo8

http://www.reddit.com/r/GameOfDolls/comments/1fbt7l/why_i_am_not_a_feminist_even_if_patriarchy_does/ca9nsla

Do you think that it should be the case that individuals forcing themselves on their spouses is legally prohibited?

As per my comments above, I do not believe non-consensual sex should be legal.

Do you support or do you oppose that legal definition? Do you agree or disagree with it?

The legal definition of consent? That was the debate- whether somebody can legally consent to surrender their bodily autonomy.

Since 1975, you cannot with sex. Today, you still can in the army. Should you be able to? I think sure, you should be able to consent to anything you want. But drugs are still illegal so I don't think "anything you want" will ever become a standard.

But the real question I was posing was different- why can you surrender one autonomy but not the other? I wasn't making any personal judgments on either. I personally would not consent to either- so what does that say about my opinion? Right, that it's irrelevant. I also don't like potatoes. Not going to stop people from eating them.

Do you think that marital rape is wrong (as in, a wrong thing for someone to do) only because it's illegal

As the definition of marriage stands today (no implied consent) then entering into that marriage and then raping somebody is morally wrong, as per my values. If this were not the law, and two people entered into a mutually consenting marriage, then it is not morally wrong to have sex with previous stated consent. If a woman or man withdrew the consent after the marriage they would have broken the contract. That would be grounds for a divorce.

It would be bad people skills to make your wife have sex with you when she wasn't in the mood- but understand that if the contract had included consent for sex, then she would not have entered it if she wasn't prepared to have sex while not in the mood.

Under these rules of contract law, having sex against the immediate will of the other party would still be considered consensual because of the nature of consent having been signed away earlier- which means no crime had been committed. I don't think that's necessarily an effective way to engender a romantic relationship, but again, I've already explained quite a few times, I wouldn't enter into a relationship contract.

The idea that having sex against the immediate will of somebody who consented to sex in exchange for a marriage partnership is somehow a heinous crime is ignoring the very real choice and consequences of the person who consented. If you think you'd ever be uncomfortable signing away your bodily autonomy, then don't do it. But if you do it and didn't enjoy it, that's nobody's fault but your own. It's a free world, and if you're an adult, you can make decisions that you eventually regret. That's part of being an adult.

Until 1975, where they decided women should be protected from their own decisions. So now it's illegal to enforce that contract.

My personal opinion on it is irrelevant, aside from what I've already stated, which is that I wouldn't enter into the contract because it's not my cup of tea. But I wouldn't preclude that others might prefer it.

If you were in a position where the government was in the process of reworking marriage, coming up with Marriage 2.0, and all preexisting marriages had been annulled and no more would be granted until the legislation was passed (so it wouldn't change any preexisting "contracts"), and for whatever reason you were in a position to cast the deciding vote - in secret, say, so there would be no fear of retribution one way or another - on whether Marriage 2.0 was going to include a prohibition on forcing your spouse to have sex with you when they didn't want to, or whether on the other hand marriages under Marriage 2.0 would entail ongoing consent to sex - which way would you vote?

I'm not the head of state or the church so I'm really not qualified to make the vote. However, if I were able to draft the bill, I would remove the state's involvement entirely from the marriage contract (as they are currently the third party), and I would allow for personal provisions to include outlines of consent- what is and isn't acceptable, how and on what terms these terms can be revisited or renegotiated, and for fucks sake- asset divisions that the court won't throw out.

You can't be "on the list twice". It doesn't work that way.

And no, I'm fairly certain you banned me before that. Regardless, this is what I know: the first time I opened up this subreddit, I was preemptively banned.

Then it was a technical error on my part.

But whether I'm misremembering the exact timeline of events isn't the point, is it? The point is that you complained about being censored, as a person who preemptively bans people who have never posted in your subreddit. Little hypocritical, don't you think?

Not at all. I banned en masse a group of users who had publicly made their intentions clear to troll our sub. Believe it or not, we don't exactly care to waste time on trolls.

What happened to "If I'm wrong my words will have no effect, no need to censor me"? That's the way it works, isn't it?

I unbanned you, why are you still going?

but you're continuing to be evasive. Should I take this to mean that you have zero intention of answering the simple and specific questions above?

That's a disingenuous question. I have answered every question, you simply have no idea how to ask it. You're asking if I believe in marriage is the same as asking if I believe in vegetarianism. Yes, vegetarians exist, no I am not a vegetarian. My belief, I would hope, best reflects reality.

If you ask me what they should eat, I would say by definition, they should eat things that aren't meat. But that's not my opinion.

Then you ask me what I think they should eat. I just told you what vegetarianism is, my personal opinion is so irrelevant that it's not even a question that can be asked! I would answer, well I think meat is delicious, so I eat meat. But that makes me not a vegetarian... so the question is nonsensical.

You're doing a great job demonstrating how the disagreements between your camp and, well, everyone else, are because feminism and postmodernism.

Yes, this is fantastic stuff. It's like chasm between us and no meaning can jump it.

Truer than you think. We're already seeing the castration of men in the social imperative lead by feminism, and the direct result is the battle to be alpha is moving towards crime. In a culture where being a man is a crime, the only alphas will be criminals. Making the only path to genuine success with women a legal liability further serves this goal.

2 upvotes · 22 May 2013 · /r/MensRights

It really is meaningless. For instance, if I say that women are less strong than men, I am making an observational comment about women. I believe it to be true. On average, it is true.

But if a woman takes offense because she doesn't like a man saying what she can and cannot be, it's classified as misogyny, even if I love women.

Takes away all meaning entirely.

Additionally, the term "hate" is meaningless, because it carries the connotation of an irrational dislike of somebody. What about a rationally disliking somebody? Like, for instance, strongly disliking the person who committed a crime against you? That seems like a rational reason to dislike somebody. But call it hate and we lose the ability to have a reason to do so.

I dislike feminism, but it's not hate because I've got some damned good reasons for it.

You know Gentle-Mang, I'm disappointed. I've been watching your discourse and have really enjoyed what you've been adding to the sub. You've made some good points, and carried yourself well.

One of the hardest parts of moderating a subreddit like this is ensuring the signal to noise ratio stays high, and ensure that people who are not here to engage in honest discussion and debate are removed quickly, so that real discussion can take place.

When people show up and start trolling- when they pretend to be here for honest reasons, but instead fling shit and logical fallacies- in order to try to discredit a point, it adds to the noise, and not the signal. One of the biggest threats to a subreddit is when the voice of troll or the misguided becomes louder than the voice of purpose.

Imagine Christian's having more say on /r/atheism than the atheists, under the banner of "honest open discussion."

So, as you can imagine, it's difficult to know who's here for an honest debate. We want to know the people who have a legitimate point. In this sort of debate, the hope is that at least one party walks away having a changed mind, or a broader perspective.

Of course it's difficult to do so when that's how the trolls get through. It's even more difficult to do so when every ban associated with these sorts is followed with accusations of impropriety.

Of course, you're not privy to the conversations the mods have behind closed doors, so I can't blame you for not understanding my decision to make a public debate like that. But I can blame you for the lapse in judgement in making this post. If you had a question or concern, you know how to reach me.

Today, you make my job just a little harder. I just took 10 minutes out of my day to type this out, because I truly care that people here understand the actions of the moderators. During this time, four more posts lined up in my moderator's queue, half of them with the word "misogynist." More trolls to deal with. I want that to sink in. The moderators here do a public service to ensure the topics stay on-course and aren't overrun with trolls.

You want to know why I made a public debate? Because he was committing a multi-faceted fallacious argument with many users and managed to completely hijack an unrelated thread. It's important to understand not only that he was trolling, but for the sub to understand how he was trolling, and more importantly to know how to identify similar trolls, and diffuse them.

I'm not going to ban you Gentle-Mang for this lapse in judgement. I'm going to leave this here so all can see. But I do offer you two choices: I suggest you apologize for being a dick, or you walk away on your own volition.

if you think there is no such thing as spousal rape then you do support rape.

First of all, this sound byte is a fun chunk, that one of our mods does not believe in spousal rape, because we use it to open debate. I've posted the moderators official explanation over a dozen times in the past, and am planning to do a more comprehensive discussion over it in the very near future. Anybody familiar with our concepts knows we don't actually advocate rape. But somebody who shows up and has no fucking clue what they're talking about.. well they think it's true. It's the easiest way for trolls to self identify. It's like putting dye in the river, you can see where it comes out.

Here's the discussion:

http://www.reddit.com/r/MensRights/comments/1bw6c6/what_on_earth_is_rtheredpill/c9blkzt

Women are certainly oppressed and going through all the examples would be like going through examples of how black people are oppressed or explaining how water is wet.

The myth that women have been systematically historically oppressed is fantastically narrow minded. This recent speech by girlwriteswhat really nails it. Here's an excerpt:

Traditional ways of providing for and protecting women that were necessary in the pre-industrial past, were reinterpreted by feminism as male oppressors keeping women down all through history, for men's benefit. Domestic violence--a social problem that has ALWAYS been gender-symmetrical--became synonymous with violence against women. A husband's historical right to conjugal relations was redefined as marital rape, while a wife's identical right--one that for centuries if denied was legal grounds for divorce and could even get a man excommunicated from his church--that part of history was essentially erased from modern scholarship, even as it is upheld and reinforced by feminist activism. In fact, according to current feminist theories on domestic violence, a man withholding sex or affection from his female partner, whatever the reason, is a form of domestic abuse, and a man in France was recently required by a judge to pay his ex-wife over $10,000 in punitive damages because he didn't give her enough sex during the marriage.

The traditional obligation of a woman to defer to her husband's authority was defined as "oppression", but her husband's obligation to die in a trench to protect his country and family...that became "male privilege" and when enough people protested the hubris of that assertion, it became "Patriarchy hurts men too."

Under The Patriarchy, all men are privileged by their maleness, and all women oppressed by their femaleness. And if men are, as a class, the privileged Bourgeoisie, if men hold collective power over society, then all men are culpable for the oppression and exploitation of all members of the female Proletariat, and any discrimination a man might face in society is just his own privilege backfiring on him.

Right in the OPs post you can see he says "men are the real oppressed gender"

You've got me there, I didn't see that he wrote that. He is a random throwaway account. It does not reflect our intention, which is very nicely laid out in the sidebar, had you read it.

This would've been enough to further the argument, but you add:

you are experiencing group think right now and are completely blind to your own errors.

Which is functionally useless to this argument and is little more than rhetoric aimed at getting a leg up where pure logic should do the job. I won't address your manipulative debate style, but I request that you at least try to keep that out of it.

2 upvotes · 24 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Clever, but no. Getting sex isn't what makes a person sexy, it is corollary to their being sexy.

If getting sex isn't an intrinsic property of being sexy, then the man not getting sex isn't inherently unsexy.

Following that, not getting sex isn't was makes a person unattractive, it is corollary to their being unattractive.

So if he changes something about himself and it results in sex, it stands to reason that he became attractive.

Returning to your original argument that selling something that you aren't is lying for sex, I posture that your reasoning indicates that if you sell something that results in sex, it cannot be a lie, because it indicates that you were in fact attractive enough for sex.

Unless you feel that having sex was an intrinsic property of attractiveness.

A very nice usage of completely moving the goalposts while simultaneously not addressing one word of my argument.

To be clear, you're still trying to fight the argument of who my argument might apply to (regarding sexual objectification) rather than if the argument itself has merit.

Which is, in itself, moving the goalposts.

I could argue with you regarding logic for the next 30 posts, as it seems you're content to do. But I must put an end to this. If you choose to argue over the definition of feminist instead of address the question of sexual objectification, then by all means, do it with somebody else.

But make sure you take a look at your last post, and realize you've done nothing but argue semantics regarding who could accurately constitute feminists without once stopping to ask yourself-- "wait a tick, is it possible that regardless of which feminist group is making these terrible accusations.. there is indeed a strong internet presence online claiming to be feminists still making the argument?"

But no, you prefer to detract from the conversation by arguing (incorrectly might I add) over logical fallacies.

It ends here.

If you want to discuss the very real presence of people claiming to be feminists making these arguments, let's talk sexual objectification. If you're here to ensure that no real debate can take place because no words have meaning, leave now. I have no time for you.

Yes, those women are asshats, but that doesn't make the plea of feminists wrong at its core. It makes, without a doubt, those women asshats.

You say I'm doing no true Scotsman, but I'm not.

The ones who are asshats, yes, they are not feminists. Because feminism is anything that isn't what I've attacked. Oh, don't like something? It's not feminism.

You again move the goal posts. You say you're not a feminist, but you argue like one.

Like one what?

I've demonstrated with ease throughout this argument that feminism cannot be tacked down. I've said their definition of objectification is unfalsifiable- you retort with the worst counter-argument: That feminism is unfalsifiable! (There is no way to truly identify a feminist, therefore there is also no way to truly remove oneself from the group!)

Further proving my point and not even touching on the original debate. It's clever to move the goal posts, but did you a disservice in this case.

Guerrilla warfare is what this amounts to. Create a movement so shrouded in mystery that nobody can point to any particular attribute or member. Attack men. Claim that the attackers were unrelated to the undefined group.

I don't give half a shit if they're feminists, white knights, jews, black people, or damn invisible pink unicorns.

They march under the banner of feminism and are so prevalent that any "true feminist" is outnumbered 10 to 1 with these goons. These are the statements they make on jezebel and huffington post. These are the statements of self proclaimed feminists that come here to comment.

And my argument was simple: If the people making these claims truly believed what they said, then they are objectifying women.

If they're not feminists, there's certainly no feminist talking head denouncing them.

Before you click reply and say, "there is no leader" that's my point.

If you are judging a group, you should judge them by what makes them a group. Judge the feminists at SlutWalk for what they do, not the feminists that aren't at SlutWalk by what the ones at SlutWalk do.

Would you say, then, that feminists disagree with slutwalk?

What you are doing is called the fallacy of composition: "assuming that something true of part of a whole must also be true of the whole."

We can keep doing this all day. What you're doing is fallacy of no true scottzman. If nobody can define feminism, it remains above reproach.

Read that again, you didn't give a circular argument, you defined a term "X" that means "what all women do".

It's a tautology, which is a form of circular argument. It's like using the word in the definition. What's misogyny? Actions, thoughts, or words conveyed from a misogynist.

Your argument basically enticed that women are objectified if their freedom to do as they please is removed.

Or if they are shamed for having agency.

This is not the goal of feminism

Do you speak for feminsm? It seems to me you cannot speak for feminism, as you are not a feminist.

From your post:

I do not call myself a feminist

If you can come back to me and show me a certifiable way to define feminism and find a way to speak on it's behalf, I will accept your argument. The very mechanism by which you argue I cannot criticize feminism is the same mechanism that disallows you from defending it.

Instead their point of view would be that it's morally wrong, both for you and for the woman you're having sex with, to sexually objectify each other.

If the definition of sexual objectification was something that could be defined in a falsifiable way... (meaning, there is a way to prove I was not objectifying somebody) I would be open to listening. But there is not. Not based on feminism's definition.

Not to legally remove the right for you to do so to each other

If feminism stopped at gaining rights for women, they'd have stopped long ago. You see, women already have equal rights of men. Now they spend time spinning their tires and insulting people like me for having sex with multiple women. Feminism should be over if it were merely about rights.

Maybe nobody told you, but it's been hijacked by what we call the "third wave" and they're pretty damn nitpicky. Check out this link:

<http://www.tumblr.com/tagged/i%20need%20feminism%20because>

They oppose an ill defined objectification while actively campaigning against the agency of women. It doesn't matter if they fight for the legal right to do so, because their internal point is irreconcilable. It's inherently inconsistent. It cannot hold up under it's own weight.

Everybody is looking for meaningful interaction.

And everybody defines for themselves what constitutes meaningful.

That can only happen when trust is placed in somebody. People lower their boundaries a little to form a relationship, its a little vulnerable to place faith and trust in someone. A relationship begins at first contact. In healthy human interactions that trust is expected to be mutual.

You don't get to define healthy, but in any relationship I will agree a certain amount of trust is required. Not necessarily mutual. In fact- I'm going to argue the entire subreddit exists because people made the mistake of mutual trust.

We're talking about seduction here. The outside communities see us as trying to sleep with as many women as fast as possible. Thats fine and dandy. Women who quickly sleep with a man are typically shamed. Society is a dick, our community here both encourages it and berates it, and women destroy each other about it.

Sex is our goal here, yes.

Now here is where the problem happens, when we take a well intentioned person on that trust and LIE to them(you present yourself as someone else with different thoughts feelings or values), we aren't returning the trust, we're returning a perverted trust. Its no longer honest and its now manipulation. That comes before negligence. Only in a perfect world would women have the foresight to see when she is being toyed with. But that would render some content here mundane or ineffective, wouldn't it? That most intimate level of trust is a big deal, and everyone's integrity is sabotaged when you take the power you know you have and abuse it.

You're making two mistakes. 1. You're assuming that somehow there is a code of honor in mating. There is not. The high standard you would hold yourself to is not one that women will ever afford you. 2. You're assuming that there is a standard morality in mating. Again, by suggesting that there are basic rules to be adhered to, you serve the feminine imperative. Men who act with honor serve at the feet of women. They live by the code to do only what is honorable while women investigate their hypergamous tendencies. Remember- women will never consider honor before doing an action.

That is not redpill. That truly is sociopathic.

While I disagree that getting what you want is truly sociopathic, take a look at the dark triad, and understand why sociopathic tendencies might be beneficial.

- Women are attracted to confidence.
- Narcissists are the most confident men.
- Women are attracted to calm strength rather than anxiety.
- Sociopaths are the least anxious men.
- Women are attracted to men who are dominant and who embrace risk.
- Disagreeable/violent men are the most dominant, and in dangerous settings are the most comfortable with risk.

Mating is amoral. You may not agree with the qualities of the dark triad, but for all your honor, for every scrap of decency you believe you put forward in your life, it won't stop women from being attracted to these qualities.

I'm not arguing Redpill here, but I'm saying that this is a fundamental issue, this is where drama starts. Others see this as who we are, and there are some users who encourage second rate behavior. You say, you aren't manipulating because people should just know when they are being manipulated, therefore its their fault, therefore you hold no responsibility.

I'm not saying that somebody who lies about stock tips is blameless if a man loses his life savings over the tip. I'm saying the man to lost his life savings made the decision to listen to him. At the end of the day, personal responsibility is the only thing you can rely on for you. Furthermore, if we are to grant freedom to all persons including women, we must not only accept that she has the choice to believe lies, but we have no place in stopping her if she does.

That's your hamster. We have a hamster, and it shits. Feminists see "manipulation". I say, manipulation isn't a part of redpill, which I watched evolve from manosphere since 2006.

All interactions are a form of manipulation. You argue as though there is such a thing as a black and white "good interaction" vs "manipulation." Your intention of writing your post is simply an attempt at changing my mind. If not trying to persuade me to your way of thinking, why write it? You are indeed attempting to manipulate me.

Ah, but you put the caveat that being persuasive is only manipulation if you are lying. Define lying? If I lie about confidence, is that not effectively confidence? If I lie about charm, and she believes it, is that not effectively charm?

Redpill was to be a higher form of man's rationality in social, professional, and sexual lives. Evolved men, real men. Above this, above women's bullshit and the pitfalls of being a man. The issue you seem to be arguing here isn't redpill, or I'm not as redpill as I thought I was.

The latter. The red pill was not about a higher honor. It wasn't about loyalty or integrity. All the truth, honor, and loyalty in the world is meaningless if women would still prefer to sleep with the sociopathic, narcissistic, violent men of the world. The red pill was recognizing what place these traits have in our world, in our lives, and how they effectively curtailed our mating instincts while those who took what they wanted, got what they wanted.

Mating strategy is amoral. Those who fuck, breed. Those who do not, don't. There is no legacy for valour. There is no legacy for honor. There is no legacy for truth.

Women have recognized this since the dawn of time. These are qualities they do not even purport to have! Check out the book, the way of men by jack donovan some time, it really goes into depth on this topic.

Women will always serve their own imperatives, no matter what. If she loves you, it is an opportunistic love that will last until you provide no more value to her, or until she locates a mate of higher value. This is the cold hard reality that we live in. This is the red pill.

Attempting to use shame and concern to convince men to live by a code of ethics that simply does not exist will only serve to benefit women, as they will come and go as they please, with all the honor-bound betas waiting their turn when they're done on the cock carousel.

The reason we encourage our own sluttiness and discourage theirs is not based in a double standard. At the end of the day, we want to be the alphas who's children women have, not the betas that raise other's children. That's the core of the psychology there.

I personally, prefer honest game because for me it's easier than lying. But I do not condemn lying, nor those who employ it. If sociopathy is an effective mating strategy, we would be wise to understand that, and learn from it. Not shun it, and pretend we are somehow holier.

masculinity and femininity are not entirely biological

Where else do you think they come from?

Listen I don't mean to dismiss you- but frankly men and women both select for specific traits based on evolutionary psychology.

Heterosexuality is not the same thing as being attracted to currently-accepted ideas of masculinity and femininity.

What? Are you actually trying to detach sex from gender right now?

Men tend to select for women who display traits that signal fertility. This is commonly known. Men do not select for traits that are masculine- they do not signal fertility.

Women are not one person. Women are not hypocritical as a whole because one speaks on behalf of all, and then another does the same thing and contradicts it.

I didn't say one speaks on behalf of all.

Look at the nice guy trope. It's a guy who thinks being nice and supplicating will net him a mate who will love him for it. He's wrong, women don't reward that behavior. Yet so many men have it wrong. Why is that? It's such a prevalent behavior that there's a book called "No more mr nice guy" specifically to untrain men from acting like that!

But why did they act that way to begin with? What were men taught? Our society forces it down our throats- treat women like princesses. Last time a friend of mine who is female got dumped, she cried on my shoulder saying "why can't more guys be nice... like you?"

She's blissfully unaware of the imperative she just drove forward. She just signalled that her mating strategy is that she wants nice guys, yet her actions speak differently- she didn't date the nice guy. She didn't date me either!

You do understand that neither of our experiences defines all women, right?

I'm not going to argue that I know everything about women. That said, I acknowledge that patterns can be found.

There are two camps. The camp that understands that there is causality in the universe- that there are causes and effects. We can both agree that going up to a complete stranger and saying "I love you let's get married" is a turn off for both men and women. So we both agree that there are, indeed, things that are basically universally true regarding attraction. If we agree on this, then, this leads to prove that there must therefore be things that can be found more attractive.

This camp agrees with this reasoning, and suggests that patterns can be found. It suggests that things do not happen at random. Attraction and the causes for it can be discovered and known.

The other camp, by way of reason, must therefore believe that interactions are completely random.

Again, I'm not saying I know everything. But I am saying that everything can be known. Maybe not by any one person at any one time. But it certainly denies your assertion that generalizations cannot be made nor reasoned.

I was not saying that it was my personal view, only that it's one of the common views.

I believe there is sufficient reason that women should not have been given the right to vote... without the responsibility of conscription.

I find the more sexual partners a woman has, the less she is able to find happiness in a long term relationship.

I think this is probably true of men as well, if they're extremely attractive. Most men don't have the constant validation that women will get in their twenties, as most have to work to gain access to sex- this, I feel, keeps most men quite grounded.

You seem to be missing what's important to men and women.

To men, what's important: young, visible signs of fertility, high chance of success with childbearing.

To women, what's important: provisions: money and protection. The ability to provide for offspring and protect them. Signs of alpha male are best way to detect these traits.

Notice these values do not look for male traits such as intelligence, maturity, or status in women. They're simply not necessary.

I don't think anybody currently supports removing women's right to vote, but there's been significant talk about the problem of having a segment of the population who have the right to vote, but none of the responsibilities attached.

At the time the fear was that the economic burden of future policies would weigh on those in the working class (men).

Currently there's still the argument of conscription. Women were given the right to vote before some of the men who had been conscripted to die for our country.

Having as much power over the vote as women currently have, you can already see the destructive nature of the short-term thinking that has happened from the feminist movement. (liberalism, economic collapse, anti-capitalism)

Obviously the way forward isn't taking away the vote. But you can see the far reaching effects today.

I truly believe that since most women still have a hard time grasping the concept of true consequence and responsibility, they still vote with their emotion, and not with the actual well-being of the american people in mind.

Feminism and the myth of male privilege rises from a core misunderstanding of how many real life consequences and responsibilities men actually deal with.

The main problem is that people neither understand nor want to understand. And that's ok, it really has no bearing on what we accomplish.

If we were to listen to the types of people who disagree with us, they'd have us convinced that there is no way of knowing anything. That every single person is so very complex that no patterns could possibly emerge.

This is a common argument used against both psychology and evolutionary psychology.

But we know that cause and effect is real. And while we may not have all the variables, we do know that the variables exist and just need to be learned.

The problem that gets most people all twisted up inside is that they think somehow that our belief system is predictive in nature- and since everybody is a special snowflake, their actions cannot be predicted, it's offensive to them to consider a group of people with such assumptions.

What they fail to understand is that red pill belief, as with any psychological effect, is probabalistic, not deterministic.

We take a step back and look at the picture from afar, we notice patterns, and we make life decisions on these patterns.

It's not a simple set of theories to understand, and unless these people really invest the time to understand why we believe them, they're simply not going to understand them at all.

To quote Morpheus from the matrix:

"The Matrix is a system, Neo. That system is our enemy. But when you're inside, you look around, what do you see? Businessmen, teachers, lawyers, carpenters. The very minds of the people we are trying to save. But until we do, these people are still a part of that system and that makes them our enemy. You have to understand, most of these people are not ready to be unplugged. And many of them are so inured, so hopelessly dependent on the system, that they will fight to protect it."

The female, not the male, determines all the conditions of the animal family. Where the female can derive no benefit from association with the male, no such association takes place.

There are a few corollaries I would add:

- Past benefit provided by the male does not provide for continued or future association.
- Any agreement where the male provides a current benefit in return for a promise of future association is null and void as soon as the male has provided the benefit (see corollary 1)
- A promise of future benefit has limited influence on current/future association, with the influence inversely proportionate to the length of time until the benefit will be given and directly proportionate to the degree to which the female trusts the male (which is not bloody likely).

Maybe you can find a snowflake, but searching for one is a bad investment, and 99/100 times, the guy who just got left in the dump thought he had found a snowflake, too.

Now that we've got that out of the way, Western Culture.

While I agree game is more necessary in westernized cultures where feminism has taken root, that doesn't mean red pill theory is less true world wide. Evolutionary psychology is relevant to the entire human species. The difference being that non-western countries often recognize more traditional gender roles. (Which is why most guys here have a tentative plan to move to europe or asia).

The feminine imperative is a well known effect here on the red pill. This is what he is mistakenly discussing as "female superior logic."

No doubt the feminine imperative is well adept at serving females, and of course it grants females the prerogative to do and say what ever need be done to better serve their goals..

But the big problem here is that he's then saying, this seems logical, therefore women are being more logical.

I'll start by explaining that just because we break it down logically, does not mean they themselves are utilizing conscious logic to behave how they do. We can analyze cause and effect, and we accept our conclusions solely on whether or not they make logical sense.

However, for women, a majority of the feminine imperative is propagated through unconscious mechanisms. The schedules of mating is an unconscious cycle where women are more likely to want alphas during ovulation.

A woman studying her own ovulation can improve a her chances at accomplishing her goals, and certainly if she did, she could approach the situation very logically.

But the question still needs to be asked, why exactly is her goal to retrieve alpha sperm and beta provisions?

The answer isn't "logic". We are biological creatures that spend a significant amount of time attempting to placate our own brains, attempting to maximize self-happiness. A purely emotional evolutionary mechanism to ensure the survival of the species.

A woman could just as easily have sex with the beta, get his provisions, and raise his child. Logically speaking.

So why this longing for alpha sperm? It's an unconscious desire, driven by instinct.

Upon analysis, we see that this behavior provided women with more robust offspring, a solid survival plan for her genetics. The mechanism is logical, but how it applies to women is not a conscious effort in the realm of logical thinking.

Women are not seeking alphas because they want robust children. In logical terms, the current world we live in with modern science and technology, "robust" children aren't necessary! Nor has anybody seen it their personal goal to ensure maximum genetic lineage. Though through emotional drive, lust for the alpha, women still perform the task necessary for these goals to be achieved.

Women get wet for alpha traits. They do not simply decide to get wet.

Likewise, comparing their achievements to ones of men and concluding that men must therefore be less logical is just a poor train of .. well.. logic!

Men's goals are varied and different, but we all have the same core desire- to be happy. Certain behaviors and decisions can help maximize this happiness.

Men have a tendency to be able to delay gratification in order to achieve longer-term goals. In a way, you could say this is men taking a logical route over the purely emotional. Of course, it may be more effective (men are more effective at many things), but at the end of the day, it serves the same biological impulses that have caused the species to carry on generation to generation.

Sure betas get duped. And alpha chaser women do too. There are winners and losers in the mating marketplace.

His conclusions show a core misunderstanding of exactly how evolution works, why the feminine imperative exists, and mimics the vernacular of common SRS trolls.

There's a whole intellectual movement to take away personal responsibility from eating.

There certainly is. It starts with misinformation.

For all the demonizing people do of "unhealthy" foods, people flip it over and misinform on "healthy" foods.

Well I only eat organic... - FALSE. Organic is a marketing term with little bearing on how healthy the food is.

You eat greasy food? That's unhealthy - FALSE. The term unhealthy is meaningless and arbitrary. "healthy" is a relative term based on what goals you have. High blood pressure? Sodium is unhealthy. Low blood pressure? Sodium is healthy.

I eat an extremely high fat diet, and have lost a considerable amount of weight. I sometimes stop by KFC and get their grilled chicken if I'm in a rush. My blood work is perfect.. because I don't get the mashed potatoes.

No, not really. Africans have a lot of genetic variation from one group to another despite mingling for 300k years. Humans are not a martini — you can't just stir us and say "there you go."

Sorry for the poor sentence, let me reparse it for you.

Two groups were segregated from each other. They reproduced over time and the direction of their genetic variation diverged between the two. Some from random causes, some from environment.

Similarly their cultures did the same.

After a long period of time, the two groups meet, notice physical differences and cultural differences.

The cultural differences are astounding- some have strange accents, different languages, different customs, even eat different foods!

The genetic differences are different- they may have been selected for different body types or genetics that could withstand diseases that the others were not subjected to.

And therein lies the problem of "race."

Side by side can you tell the genetic difference between two white people with different immunities? No. Different genetic predispositions? No. Different genetic diseases? Not until they surface.

But you can tell the difference between the color of their skin and body build, even if they have similar genetic predispositions/immunities/diseases.

Basically RACE exists because it's real, but is only differentiated because of the visible implications of it.

For women, they're just extremely turned on by high-status alphas, increasing the chances they'll have a kid with them. You'll notice a lot of women on the carousel use birth control, so having the baby is in itself not one of their most major goals. To cure the evolutionary "itch," they just need the dick.

They do eventually opt for a baby, if they've hit the wall, or know they're approaching it. I'd say this can definitely be a conscious decision now (but only because of contraceptives).

it's very obvious that women don't respond to the most logical thought process.

I like to look at certain behaviors and ask, how did this behavior weigh-in during evolution? The guy who settles down has less kids. The ones who didn't don't. Therefore alpha + unlikely to settle down are heavily represented in our evolutionary family tree.

I'm not sure what you mean. If you mean the emotions can be logically traced back to their evolutionary roots, then sure. But if you mean emotional thinking is similar to logical thinking, you are mistaken.

If I want happiness, then I make goals I think will bring me the longest-term happiness. Like a diet, for example.

If I then eat cake because it will maximize my happiness for the next 10 minutes, I have made an emotionally based decision. Using bounded rationality (say, within the time frame of 10 minutes) I am making a good logical decision. Within the time frame of my lifetime, I am making a poor decision.

Our understanding of diets means eating cake is likely a poor choice if my goal is losing weight. However this is, again, bounded rationality, because it hinges on the science that says sugary foods make me fat, which could (unlikely) be ruled false in the future. Or the cake I'm eating could be poisoned without my knowledge.

Do it with $10,000 and nobody would argue against taking the money.

The problem you're missing is this- women in our country have been given equal chance to do what they want. I'm not arguing that a man trying to think up the next google is going to have a harder time than a woman doing the same. What I am arguing is simple: Women didn't know how hard it was - and never truly will, so long as their tits will buy them servitude from betas. So when equal rights came along and they thought they'd just become the next CEOs, and it didn't happen, they looked around and said, huh, must be the patriarchy is still keeping us down.

So they continue to legislate because they feel discriminated against. They cannot fathom that in the real world, this part is hard for everybody. They assume it's easy for men because men are used to it and rarely complain.

You guys clearly don't know not-psycho women. Dear god! You assume every woman is going to do that?!?!

The problem is any woman could do that.

We're not going to see eye to eye on the double standard. In no way. I think you're dead wrong and you think women who like to have sex are sluts, whatever.

See, you're missing the point again. It doesn't matter what you think. It only matters what men think. Unless you're a lesbian. That's the point. If you're going to fuck around and then think you're going to marry afterwards, you're in for a big surprise. High value guys don't want used goods. Oh sure, you'll find a chump to marry, but you won't be happy.

At the end of the day, we decide who is a slut and why it matters, not you. In the same way women decide what's attractive in men, not us!

. In terms of this sub as by men for men, but what about redpillwifey? She's not welcome here then, I guess.

She's not dense like you, so it's not a big deal.

You came here and started with shaming language, and haven't grasped a single concept thrown your way. We're happy without you. We don't need you here to accomplish what we're doing. This is a courtesy.

Regardless if we're in the real world or just the internet, if you're trying to present an argument, don't be a dick...show me the facts instead of resorting to name calling.

That's what I did in the /askmen thread. But on our turf, we will do anything we want and will not be shamed for it. You bust into a man's club and complain that how we speak offends you, do you really think we'll give a fuck?

I didn't come in here and say "MEN ARE FUCKING DICKS, YOU GUYS ARE SEXIST PIGS!" Not at all. I came here calmly trying to understand, and I get called a fucking bitch. That's so childish...

Because you're number 3,124,258. Every day a woman comes here thinking she'll be the one to change us. We're pretty sick of people with no rational or critical thinking skills trying to challenge our theories that we test ourselves!

and I thought women were the overgrown children?

Indeed. Your inability to grasp even the simplest of concepts demonstrates this.

HAHAH, that's all you've got? If all else where the same (behavior, society, gender norms, etc) except women had dicks and men had vaginas, that wouldn't be said. That's a weak argument.

Not a weak argument at all. In fact, it's the most telling argument I've made. You should study this, you just got a glimpse in a man's head. This is why we don't like sluts. It doesn't matter how you feel about it. I've seen fat chicks claim they're sexy too, doesn't make it true.

In essence, the women are challenging men more and more, to the point that men have to risk more to demonstrate dominance. Essentially, your regard for self-preservation has to be non-existent. If you're not willing to risk prison, losing your job, or getting beat by the cops or an army of white knights, you're not dominant enough. Now this isn't the whole story, but I've noticed it growing as well. They like it because it's a weed out method for anyone not willing to risk those things. Risk more to get laid less.

You can't be because women fundamentally lack the ability to fully realize, much less appreciate the sacrifices a man makes to facilitate her reality. I think you'll find that the words he used were a bit abstract but in line with evolution. Our genes do seek to replicate. So much so that they create bodies with minds that think about sex. It's quite elaborate. Make no mistake, we are replicating machines.

People who feel happiness and pleasure follow the instructions of their genes. Lol wut? People who feel happiness and pleasure follow the instructions of their genes. Genes can instruct your cells to become cancerous. Therefore happiness = suicide by cancer? This is absurd.

We are programmed evolutionarily to perform behaviors that maximize our likelihood to reproduce. Eating, sleeping, drinking, these are all means to survive long enough to reproduce. Once you have basic needs taken care of, mating becomes one of the strongest drives we have as adults.

Cancer exists, not as a purposeful tool, but as a side effect of evolution- which is that the things that kill us only get weeded out if they are able to kill us before we mate. Cancer exists because most people who get cancer are after baby-making ages.

Do you remember being a child? Reproduction wasn't remotely on the horizon. I felt a lot.

The emotional feedback system of a child is in place to allow parents to keep it alive. You may not know why the road is dangerous, but you know you're sad when mom or dad yells at you. This exists because the ones who were more sensitive to mom and dad's wishes lived long enough to reproduce.

This is somewhat agreeable. I'm not so sure about "just" it may have some bonding purposes.

What is bonding beyond a means to ensure survival of the offspring?

There is no higher meaning (or any meaning for life). Depends. You can always make one.

You could. That doesn't make a higher meaning for life.

We exist due to reproduction and reproduction makes us exist. Tautology.

Objectively the universe is a tautology. Doesn't make it less so, just gives us an inability to logically describe a cause that began us. That's actually a big reason religion exists! We do exist due to reproduction. FACT.

We and our 'souls' are just biological machines. Souls are biological machines?

Unless you're religious- most of us consider the "soul" to be our consciousness, which is a product of our biological machine called the brain.

The question, 'how can I get laid?' is the essential question of an organism. Let's leave plants, fungi, anemones, and various asexually reproducing organisms out of this.

It may not be a conscious effort, but each creature has either a mechanism or a drive to reproduce. Source? They reproduce. We don't consider plants sentient, so I would describe their reproduction as a mechanism that is successful nevertheless.

In humans this is -not true for women (~50%).

Oh it's absolutely true, but it's an unconscious drive. They want alpha cocks. They want mates. Some call it love, others follow lust. All of it a basic drive to have children. (or a basic drive that results in children).

Also not true for prepubescent children or the geriatric population that does not have a sex drive.

Children have drives that allow it to survive long enough to mature sexually. Anybody who does not have any sex drive after puberty is an evolutionary anomaly that weeds itself out in exactly one generation (i.e. genes not passed down, evolutionarily defunct, non-viable genes)

Even for men it is not simply 'how can I get laid?' , if it was everyone would just go to prostitutes or settle for fat girls/ugly girls.Its also about the manner in which one gets laid.

Survival of the offspring is an unconscious factor in the question of getting laid, yes.

People's self worth is invested in the manner not the simple fact of getting laid.

You're mistaking abstract layers for different motivations. Why does a man opt for success in his life? Because he is evolutionarily programmed to do so, because in evolution, females go for successful men. Yes, he may derive satisfaction from accomplishment, but make no mistake, this is because accomplishment is beneficial in sexual selection.

There is nothing true to be comforted by, only lies can comfort. My house is not on fire today.There's a beautiful woman in my bed. I have money saved for a rainy day. I have skills that will always remain with me even if everything I have built falls apart. And so on and so forth.

And you will die. And it can happen tomorrow. The comfort is believing your skills remain with you, because reality is you could be crippled in a car accident tonight. Sure some truths are comforting if they're benefiting you right now, but a certain amount of delusion is necessary in a functioning mind. (see: believing one will live)

You're either being purposefully obtuse, or you don't understand evolution and the theories behind sexual selection. Either way, check it- this article is spot on.

Can you really diagnose a woman with Narcissistic Personality Disorder, when a majority of women have it?

Is our field of psychology tainted because we are judging women as mentally the same as men?

Maybe you missed this, it is not because they are black that black culture exists.

Literally.

For instance, there are many cultures that have black people. In the united states we have a culture that is mainly identified as black culture, but hardly represents other cultures with black people.

It is not their race that causes the culture- it's that culture and race develop in the same way, so people make the mistake of believing that race is inextricably linked to culture. It isn't.

How to cope with having lost your youth to the blue pill?

2 upvotes · 30 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Categorically? It sounds like you're leaving some room for "some of them out there".

Take the fastest woman on earth. She won the olympic for women's 500m. Her top speed was the bottom-line entrance speed for men to qualify for their race. She is faster than some men, but she is slower then men as a category.

Now I understand some areas are grey. Some women may have more honor than a male thief. But as a category, no, women cannot live up to men's standards. I do not believe there is even one exception where a woman measures up in all categories, even if she excels in one or two.

I'm not talking about "beta tendencies" per se, but being a humane human being. Maybe being a decent human being results in being "beta"..

Belief in a common "decency" is rather beta. At the end of the day, sexual strategy is amoral. No matter how decent you are, no matter how honorable your intentions, she's going to fuck the guy who gets her wet.

OK, neither sex has control over what it finds attractive, but why are only men capable of living up to "man standards"?

Because men are men. Not women. Women have a different scale. It's the women scale. For instance, a selection of a woman's peers (both men and women) would not think poorly of a woman for being unable to change her tire. A man, however, in the same circumstance would be judged poorly. Different scales. Do not apply the men-scale to women. It will only leave you disappointed.

As a decent-human-being-guy, you see a woman you find attractive and you wouldn't mind having sex with her, but not only that, you're interested in her personality too, right?

Her personality for sure is on your list. But remember "decency" or what you're calling "decency" is a beta-trait that women insist they want. But that's the feminine imperative. If they wanted decent guys, they wouldn't fuck assholes, they'd fuck nice guys. It's a ruse.

It's logical that you'd be interested in her as a human being.

Yes, but your values for men and women are different. For instance, you value women in part because you want to have sex. You do not value men for that. Therefore there are differences in the value you have for different genders. Nobody said we should dehumanize women, only that we should judge them for what they are: women. Not men. If you want to judge them as men, you will be disappointed. No, women do not care about programming video games, changing tires, and fixing things. If you find yourself disappointed that women aren't like that, you have nobody to blame but yourself for having unrealistic expectations.

What sense does it make that only men would be capable of rational behaviour?

Women are the selective gender. Their access to sex is easy and plentiful. They have no reason to improve beyond the ability to score a mate. Their job is to select a mate based on how they feel.

Men on the other hand are the selected. There is fierce competition among men to be selected. There's a lot of evolutionary psychology behind this one. I recommend looking into it- there's a book I'll have to find the title of.

We're all the result of evolution, and it tends to take care of everything fitting together astonishingly well.. so why is human mating "broken" like this? So.. is it, really? :p Still holding on to some shreds of hope here.

It's only broken because you're looking at it from the wrong angle. The reason you think people are broken is the same reason you're holding on to shreds. Because you believe in something that isn't real.

Our motivations are similar in the sense that everyone wants instant gratification. Everyone goes for "immediate personal happiness" whenever they can. But maybe you meant differences in long-term thinking abilities or something?

Men set goals to maximize happiness. It's called delayed gratification. You'll see us slugging away at careers in hopes of a happy retirement. We'll postpone sex for months or years (depending on how beta we are) for a chance of sex with somebody we care about.

Women on the other hand use their emotions as justification. Doesn't feel right? Must not have been right. This is counter-intuitive to gratification delaying, thus more focused on instant gratification.

I don't see how this conflicts with the idea of women being irrational. Rationalizations are necessitated by a lack of Reason. Instead of emotions, they could base their "decisions" (if they can be called that) on thinking/reasoning/logic.

Well both men and women work on a bounded rationality (makes sense based on what we perceive). So to us men, women look very irrational. But to the inner workings of a woman, it all makes perfect sense.

See, the underlying problem I'm getting at here is that I need to like her for something. I want to enjoy cuddling and intimacy and to "make love" to women, but that requires having some positive feelings for her. Otherwise she's just a hole, and that's just.. sad.

What you're describing is the love a child has for his mother. Please read this:

http://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/15q8vw/a_very_insightful_analysis_of_the_nature_of/c83z3qx

Of course, being with a woman can be a great experience. What attracts you can vary. Looks, personality, a lot of things. But do not seek comfort in that love as a child would his mother. Women are incapable of loving a man the way he wants to be loved.

Please read the following before responding:

Women in Love

Men in Love

Of Love and War

Schedules of Mating

If I can't respect a woman as a human being, if she's just a wild animal adrift on a sea of impulses, incapable of controlling her actions, incapable of making decisions based on thinking/reasoning/logic.. then it's really quite difficult to like them.

Looking for a woman to be intellectually stimulating is judging women on a man's scale. Women will let you down on that front. You may find a stimulating woman, for sure, but ask yourself this: If you found a very clever woman with a great personality and hobbies.. but she was 400 pounds, would you date her then? Really think about what you're attracted to and understand this.

It sounds like you "finding her feminine traits endearing" might be related to this, but I don't follow your point about them.

You can either accept feminine traits endearing and enjoy what you're physically attracted to, or you can settle for a woman who acts like a man and is physically repulsive (fat, ugly, so on). If you can find true happiness with those traits, go for it. I think you'll find you cannot.

Is your average woman incapable of learning something more challenging than cooking? Or is she just not interested in acquiring knowledge or skills?

Not incapable. An average woman is able to attract mates with ease, and has no need for trivial matters such as the inside of a computer. That's the point. She has no drive, no pressure to do so, because she can easily maximize her sexual potential by going shopping and getting her hair done.

Consider that there are many variables that contribute to sexual market value.

Looks, personality, status are all items that contribute. If you have a lot of looks but no status, you can probably get along. If you have an alpha personality and some status, you'll probably get along. Consider that being age 35 is a +3 on status. In fact, consider that no matter what your status is, it can't reach maximum until your thirties, even if you were maximum in other categories.

That said, it's rare to be high in all categories, so usually somebody deficient in one category will work on boosting another.

I've hinted at it before here and there, but yeah, I personally don't see any reason to lie to women. Being honest and up front about not settling down is far more alpha and makes them hornier. For some reason, they think they can change my mind. I rarely leave a woman on bad terms. It's usually a "well I can't keep doing this, I need commitment" and me going "i'm sorry it wasn't a good fit, but I wish you the best."

That said, the reason girls usually finally take the plunge and stop fucking me is because her friends poison the well. They'll whisper in her ear about how I'm an asshole if I don't commit.

What women don't understand is that sometimes there are times you have to put yourself out there and risk being judged. We aren't judging women harsher than men. Men face it too. They just have the courage to do it anyway. And that builds confidence.

There is no patriarchy enforcing this. Women don't know that the hard way to confidence is trial and error and sometimes failure.

As long as she's attractive enough, and obedient enough, intelligence never really factors in. Is she saying stupid stuff? Just tell her to be quiet.

Whereas I've met far more enlightened women that simply fail the boner test (as in, couldn't get the standing salute).

You have to embrace the fact that how men love women is significantly different from how women love men. You think that you could never be attracted to a man if you considered him dumb (and I agree with you), so it must be hard to internalize that we have no such qualm.

Don't get me wrong, intelligence used to be in my list during my blue pill days. I even remember rationalizing for girlfriends to my friends and family. "You know, she really is super smart! I'm glad I met her."

But in the back of my head, I would always think.. "...for a girl." Because let's face it, when a girl says to me "You know why there's so much more wind in the park? Because there are more trees and trees make wind!" I have to pretend she's smart.

It was her eyes and awesome sex that kept me around. The lie I told myself about her smarts was just to appease the feminist culture that we lived in, to appease the guilt I suffered from internalizing the feminine imperative to have a "deeper" appreciation for women because the way I am naturally attracted to women is shameful.

You want smart to pass on to your kids, but not so smart that she's a threat to your social dominance. Sound about right?

Honestly, men have shown they couldn't give half a shit about social dominance. Which is why we've got so many betas, running around with out a clue, with dominant wives who hate them and divorce.

It is women that demand social dominance. They simply do not find less intelligent men attractive. Men, competing for the top women, invested in intelligence.

This presents a dichotomy.

If women prefer smarter men, simply put, men cannot have a preference for smarter women. Oh, they can, but they get ruled out of the evolutionary chain.

There's a great book about it called "The Mating Mind: How Sexual Choice Shaped the Evolution of Human Nature" - Miller, Geoffrey

I'm afraid a lot of the knowledge I draw upon for this sub reddit is based on a huge amount of reading I've dedicated myself to recently. I wish I had more free unbook resources to share..

2 upvotes · 9 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

The child may be taken from you at any time for any reason, or for no reason, by the mother and the state. The extent of your involvement in the child's life is purely at their leisure. The mother has exclusive rights to raise the child exactly as she pleases. Your input is nothing but suggestions. If you object, you may be summarily banned from further contact, just because she says so. Never forget, you are a guest in your own family.

I've seen this countless times with friends. Don't become a statistic.

You're feminizing the argument. Nobody said anybody was "guilty" of anything. Hypergamy is a sexual strategy which is characterized by being selective. It means maximizing rejection vs male strategy which is maximizing attempts. Women are the selective gender whether or not you like it.

How a man expects to be loved

2 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I realize that suggesting "women should shit test" is probably a very unpopular opinion. ;) I'm still learning here, trial and error.

Actually, I think you'll find that aside from our moderate distaste for women who take men to the cleaners via divorce, we really don't comment on what women should or shouldn't do. We mostly just comment on what women do do.

I'd never bother telling a woman I don't think she should shit test. I just assume she will and act accordingly.

Female sexual strategy is more or less passive and innate. You cannot remove these qualities from a woman without destroying what it is that make women who they are.

Don't feel alone in the depressing realization. For a lot of men, taking the red pill is swallowing the bitter truth that they can never experience their mother's love again. Trust me, it's not easy for us either!

Older generations taught this to boys. It made men. My generation wasn't taught that.

How a man expects to be loved

2 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Nice post, Capt. I want to take it a step further. All guys want to be loved- not just like the beginning of a relationship, but like their mothers loved them.

First, an excerpt from Rollo's Of love and war:

A Place to Rest

Peregrine John summed it up best on Jacquie's blog comments recently:

We want to relax. We want to be open and honest. We want to have a safe haven in which struggle has no place, where we gain strength and rest instead of having it pulled from us. We want to stop being on guard all the time, and have a chance to simply be with someone who can understand our basic humanity without begrudging it. To stop fighting, to stop playing the game, just for a while.

We want to, so badly.

If we do, we soon are no longer able to.

This is a realization that men don't make until they are in a 'love relationship' with a woman. For men this is (should be) the catalyst for maturing beyond that want for an idealized unconditional love. At that point they come full circle and understand that the conceptual love they'd hoped they could return to (or could be) with their mother doesn't exist in the woman he's 'in love' with, and ultimately, never really existed between he and his mother from his infancy to adulthood.

And two bits of reading that are going to change your world:

Building rapport via text to minimize flake rate

2 upvotes · 6 January 2013 · /r/seduction

It must be coupled with direct game in person and in other conversations. It's switching gears on her, being indirect to build rapport, then switching back to direct escalation once you have the rapport.

Only necessary if you didn't build enough during the initial meetup.

A lot of people here think that being alpha isn't knowing when you can switch up what you're doing.. and assume that you should expect flakes.

I take a different approach. I know what I want. I didn't ask her questions like .. do you want to play a game?

Instead i told her, lets play a game. If I'm bored I do what suits me. If that's a game over text then thats what i'm doing. Alpha, but non escalating to let down her defense long enough to build rapport.

If you come off the gate guns blazing you have two outcomes, there was already enough connection that she responds to date and doesn't flake, or two, there wasnt enough connection and she blows you off.

Feminists seek to ban sex-bots

2 upvotes · 4 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

But hold on a moment. If an 'image' now includes the three-dimensional shape of a sex doll or a sex bot, then surely the multi-billion dollar cosmetics industry is going to go bankrupt overnight? Given that most teenage girls are fully developed at age 16 or 17 these days, an image of a person looking under 18 must include any woman who attempts to make her skin or her body as youthful and as perfect as possible Ulrika Johnsonn, recently paid over £50,000 to 'have the body of a 16 year old girl'. Now why isn't she in prison being raped by butch lesbians for 'creating the sexual image of a person under the age of 18'? This is the logic that follows from the creation of these absurd feminist laws designed to restrict sexual competition to themselves in a widened free sexual market – in other words, the rape of the male.

I have yet to hear a good refutation of the underlying theory. Obviously "never" isn't correct, it's more of a guideline for people who have trouble feeling out situations. If you're more in tune with a woman's attraction, you can wing just about everything. Do you agree with this?

Women are Incapable of Change.

1 upvotes · 31 January 2023 · /r/TheRedPill

I think that true change that stems from well reasoned belief is not a gradient.

I used the hand-on-stove example because most people, if they touch a hot stove, will not make that mistake twice. There's no process to go through where people say "I'm really trying to change, I know I shouldn't touch that stove but I backslide sometimes."

When you have fully reasoned a position that you believe, it no longer becomes a choice or a process, but instead becomes a set of behaviors that you will change because... in this case you don't want to burn your hand again.

Now not every problem is going to have such immediate and dire consequences as a hot stove burning your hand. But think about the problems in your life and ask yourself what you really believe about them. If you keep going back to burn your hand on whatever problem you face, then you have not fully reasoned your position or you don't believe it.

You've falsely assumed that generalizations are hard and fast rules and that traits and characteristics exist in a linear fashion rather than having bell curves that often overlap.

It's such a cartoonish interpretation of Schopenhauer to say that all women must be stupider than all men... you must consider that more people at the low end of the IQ spectrum are indeed men and that contradicts your faulty assumptions entirely.

But I know what bothers you, it's the fact that more people at the high end of the IQ spectrum are also men.

Now, these are simply facts. You can dislike them all you want, but it doesn't concern me when somebody wants to take a swing at reality.

A lot of the decent content for the sub was discussion about these manosphere blogs but any that kept going turned very black pill or political. A shame, but then again, how long can you talk about sex? Politics has a lot more meat to pick at.

Sure. I like them as women people.

Do you deep down see women as equals?

No. Because they're not. I can't give birth. Equal is a dumb meaningless word.

Do you think women and men can connect intellectually and that such a connection is the basis for a relationship?

It can happen. But I think people put too much emphasis on shared hobbies and interests as the only way to connect intellectually. I don't need to understand brain surgery to be friends with a brain surgeon.

The board itself is about sexual strategy, but I think opening your "third eye" is a personal journey which ultimately ends with finally understanding that most things are unknowable and that we're all just making heuristic guesses in a dark void.

I don't know what the big conspiracies are, but I know nothing I've been presented is truth.

I think the cultural importance of sexual strategy and the blue pill (sexually speaking) is paramount when you consider systems of control- sex is one of the primary purposes and urges of humanity. Harnessing this control is harnessing the power of the very fabric of society.

Everything stems from this- who you are as a sexual being.

To put it another way- natural selection made sure we could survive long enough to fuck. Sexual selection drove us to fuck successfully to survive as a species. Every facet of our minds, society and culture are an offshoot of what we did as a species to outcompete those who did not (could not) fuck.

1 upvotes · 30 August 2021 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Believe it or not, when somebody comes in and demonstrates good faith, I've always had the policy of publicly disagreeing with them so onlookers could watch the argument play out.

The ones who get banned are the ones who sidestep the argument or mis-represent the opponent's argument and then argue against the straw-man version of it.

I always enjoy a good debate. My history shows exactly that.

One of my pet peeves is reading anything where I have to google, look up, or ask for clarification because it is written in insider code, for example: FDS, MGTOW, PUA, N-Count, AF/BB, HVM, LVM, ASPD, OD, DID, 3dR, BP, TRP, PPD, p2p, 80/20, etc...

Surprisingly, it bugs the shit out of me too. I try to minimize it but I do occasionally use acronyms without thinking about it.

Dude, you want thousands (or even hundreds of thousands) of people to use your site.

Let's get one thing straight- I don't want anything except one thing: I want reddit to stop censoring us, and for us to communicate freely.

Everything beyond that is a group, community effort to salvage what we have left after the censors come to town.

I've laid out clear cut reasons why I don't like the site. You're obviously pretty defensive over some criticism.

Calling things "ass" without being constructive isn't criticism. It's just a passerby insulting the great effort a team of dedicated folks put together as a life raft for ungrateful asshats who want to call things they don't like "ass."

I'll let Twitter know it's trash when you can convince me and others that your design is a "superior communication platform" lmao.

Don't have to. You don't like twitter-type layout, don't use trp.red. We developed forums.red for just such an occasion.

Your site is not currently very mobile friendly.

We've put a great deal of time and effort into ensuring EVERY feature of our site is 100% responsive and functional on mobile. Take a look at this, and by all means, tell us what we did wrong.

Remove the issues of censorship and admins targeting this subreddit and I doubt the vast majority of this community would ever leave the platform. You're delusional to think otherwise.

And how do we remove the issues of censorship and admin targeting the subreddit? You're delusional to think we could.

A lot of guys put a lot of time and effort into making a safe landing space for the censorship that's happening here. A "thank you" is in order.

You want to stay at censorship central? Be my guest. I don't care if we end up with only 100 users. It's going to be 100 users dedicated to building something good, for men to communicate, and to join together for the greater good of men. Whiners, complainers, and those who prefer censorship should by all means stay away from our "ass" site.

The discord is monetized heavily.

The discord is for a fraternity that a group is trying to start in real life. Like, with real, rented buildings and such.

TRP isn't monetized and we've done a hell of a job keeping it that way.

The IRC is open and free, help yourself to chat.

TRP.RED includes FREE chat rooms for any and all tribes.

Marriage is a contract. There's nothing wrong with marriage if the contract is fair

And there's the problem. No marriage contract is fair. It's a 3-party contract which rewards one party from withdrawing and the third party (the state) can intervene whenever it wants and disqualifies any agreement you thought you had.

Even with Red Pill men, the number who can easily get and transfer bitcoin is not that high. There's also a complication factor to it. Some who can, might not, because it's just a bit too much work.

It's the reason why microtransactions in games are easy, because you don't even have to pull out the credit card, you just click yes to google play.

The harder it is to make a payment, the less likely somebody will do it.

The good news is, you only need enough to run and develop the sites. But, when I said critical mass, I meant as an alternative to twitter.

I do come up with the solution towards the bottom, which is not to compete with twitter.

You'd have to ask GLO why he decided to start attacking everybody associated with red pill, including people who support his positions and cause.

I still would like to see him develop his ideas- bringing philosophy to TRP. My disagreement with him is academic.

I don't think he knows how to disagree gracefully.

What, so not having contributed a lengthy post themselves means they can't criticize others for what is obviously some far out bullshit?

Yes, that's exactly what it means. If you're unable or unwilling to put in the effort to make things better, and all you do is bitch at others to make it better.. well, there's a better subreddit for you.

Don't let TRP turn into an echo chamber, please

Says the guy asking me to censor our contributors.

Don't you think it's extremely, and I really mean extremely, hypocritical of the moderation team to be screaming at Reddit for censorship and 'wrongthink' policy, but to then do the exact same thing on their own subreddit?

Absolutely not. Subreddits have topics. If you start posting kitten pictures, then that will be removed as well. Why? Because it's off topic.

Now, this operates under the understanding that there is somewhere to post kitten pictures. Reddit, on the other hand, is trying to prevent the conversation happening in any sub.

Not only am I not hypocritical for embracing tight moderation in a particular sub, but since I see the writing on the wall for this and many other topics, I've invested heavily into a life raft which can host ideas I personally disagree with.

Think you know better than us? Make a "TigerXtrm TRP" tribe on trp.red and show us. That's how anti-censorship I really am.

TRP Raising Children Series: Controversial Study on Rapid Onset Gender Dysphoria and Transgenderism: transgender behavior in children developed rapidly as a result of factors like peer pressures, soci

1 upvotes · 22 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Anybody following my recent posts will know that I've been focusing on the trans-trend recently, specifically in my focus discussion having children in today's climate.

It should be obvious the reason this is important - it's not because we're at risk or because I particularly care about what a grown adult does with their own body. It's because one of the biggest threats to the health and safety of your children is the indoctrination of your children by the establishment, and the trans-trend is one such indoctrination.

TRP exists to address multiple generations of boys raised without fathers or with feminist dogma running the show in their households, giving future men no direction and understanding of a positive identity.

The threat new generations are facing is much more sinister. Instead of teaching boys that they're defective girls, they want to teach boys that they're simply not boys at all. They are girls.

And with television, school, teachers, and other students flooding your kids with this information, it's going to be an uphill battle making sure your child doesn't jump on the bandwagon - as kids are apt to do.

The trans movement is being fought on many different fronts- it's being injected into pop culture and schools to convince young kids that it's normal- but it's also being pushed on the legal and medical fronts to prevent parents from being able to do anything about it- lest you be accused of child abuse if you don't use your 8 year old's preferred pronoun.

This issue isn't exclusive to boys either. The chart shows how much more affected girls are than boys- and this is to be expected. Girls are far more likely to try to fit in with social groups. There is enormous pressure for girls to follow trends. If that trend is cut off your hair and pretend you're a boy... well, they're going to do it.

Why using just one word 'love' to describe a wide spectrum of phenomena has mislead a generation. All love belongs to either need or abundance.

I think you're missing the point- when it's close to a 2:1 ratio, the top 20% of men are stretched much more thin (and includes uglier people than before). Don't forget the 1950s had locality in play (no tinder yet). Your options were limited to what was near you and who you met at locally in your community.

With a shortage of men, a wider selection of men were getting attention. Top 20% in your community may be a very different selection than it would be with a 1:1 ratio. Furthermore- top 20% is not the limit for female attention. It's a rough estimate we use to determine "alpha fucks." With a 2:1 ratio you better believe women were racing each other for the beta bucks, which was in limited supply.

I can't find it right now on mobile but there's a study that showed imbalance of gender ratio on college campuses tended to determine more LTRs vs Hookup cultures. I'll look it up later.

This, exactly. It's not about the sex- it's about what attracts women in the first place.

The "be yourself" and "be a good man" bullshit doesn't attract anybody, but it's useful for women as they approach the wall and want some beta-bucks.

TRP Debate - Debrief Thread

1 upvotes · 20 February 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I appreciate your neutrality.

Here is the criteria on which we determine good faith / bad faith arguments. TGP continues to hinge his argument on how PPD define civility, but it was in plain text on our civil thread that we expected not only civility, but good faith arguments.

<http://sntjohnny.com/front/how-to-smell-out-a-bad-faith-debater-and-recognize-a-good-faith-one/865.html>

They begin to psychoanalyze.

He assumed our motives quite a bit.

They constantly fail to respond to the point you're actually making.

In TGP's science thread, he constantly ignored people's responses to him, substituting them with his own version- claiming we had made the claim that TRP is science. Nobody has made that claim in that thread, but he's kept this ruse going even on PPD.

In this thread another user tries to establish a common definition of science using an offsite dictionary. TGP refuses to accept or agree on a common definition, let alone make a good-faith concession that most people use a common definition of science.

They are unwilling to give you a graceful way out.

"A failure to appreciate that people have lives and time commitments that are obviously hidden by the nature of the Internet to the other individuals is usually the mark of someone who thinks that by getting in the last word they've won an argument."

I mean this entire thread on PPD is an example of this- but I already linked you to his goading. People step away from the computer from time to time. His "Why aren't you answering? Is it because you can't?" shtick is a prime example of bad-faith. His childish argument with another user definitely wasn't good faith, ending in a re-ban on PPD. That thread was the final reason we kicked him from the civility thread.

He's come to PPD claiming that we closed the threads to keep him out. Only him. Not only a ridiculous claim, but incorrect. We closed them as the threads died down, just as we told him we would. But he's unwilling to give us a graceful way out.

They continue to make it very clear that they are much, much smarter than you are.

"I've just made RPS and a bunch of ECs look like twats. It was easy. Thy are not used to debating and haven't 1% of the experience of debating RP that we have."

While he did say this on PPD and not the civility thread, it clearly demonstrates what his motives were on the civility thread.

Signs that the person is debating in good faith:

They allow you to make clarifications and qualifications without hitting you with a 'gotcha.'

You can look at this thread here

I engaged him in good faith and gave him the answer I thought was relevant. He kept demanding a yes or no answer from me- meanwhile I was trying to establish a common understanding of what he even means by "science."

Demanding the yes / no is a false dilemma and one he was clearly setting up for a gotcha. Refusing to entertain a conversation to agree on common words.. is bad faith.

He finally goes for the gotcha anyway, and posts this screed rebutting as if I had said we think we're science.

At this point, he's not even arguing with me. He's arguing with his own positions. I don't know if he's trying to show off but he wasn't having a conversation with me.

At this point I bow out. Not because of any of the bad-faith reasons he posts here such as:

It appears they initially tried to continue even though they realised they'd bitten off more than they could chew.

or

They've thrown in the towel and refused to have an open debate. They're running scared, it only took 24 hrs and they've retreated in cowardice. They can't stand an open debate and are abusing modly powers in a way they agreed not in order to avoid questions they can't answer without looking like fools.

or

I've just made RPS and a bunch of ECs look like twats. It was easy. Thy are not used to debating and haven't 1% of the experience of debating RP that we have.

No, it's because he wasn't debating anybody on the civil thread in good faith and literally everybody got sick of him throwing gotcha-questions and propping up his own straw men to knock down.

Now you might say- isn't that the point of this exercise? Why yes- in the Lion's Den, where there are no rules.

Instead, he posted on the thread that required good faith to participate. He did no such thing.

inferring motives based on his use of the word "squirming"?

I don't know his motivation for using it- but from a moderating standpoint I see that phrase from trolls more than I see it from anyone else.

All of this aside this does not excuse TGP from coming here and lying about the length of time of the event- which he uses to bolster the lie that we cut the debate short to avoid arguing with him rather than for the reason that the debate was over. Really? After over a thousand unmoderated comments we closed it because we were afraid of him?

Further- he claims he was unable to debate, but was free to use the rules-free thread as agreed upon and simply did not. Showing he is acting even here in bad faith.

And finally, he claims that we abused mod privileges to remove arguments we thought made us look stupid. He has exactly zero proof of such a wild claim.

Over a thousand posts in the Lion's den unmoderated. Over 400 in the civil thread unmoderated. The evidence is to the contrary. We held our end of that bargain hard. And we even kept the threads on our board after they were closed for posterity. Certainly not the behavior of mods who were afraid of how they looked.

Take a look at this thread:

https://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/aq797q/the_sea_of_civility_official_noban_freeforall/egirm4q/

Almost entirely there. What kind of stuff did we remove? Almost all of the removals were insults to TGP. Of course that goes against the narrative he was painting. We were being quite fair.

Jesus Christ, are you just going to stuff this thread lecturing us about the pedantic semantics of the word science day after day, professor? Wow. Go get laid.

Maybe try goading your wife into wanting to fuck you and give us a FR about how that goes.

Is he talking about this thread?

https://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/aq797q/the_sea_of_civility_official_noban_freeforall/egfc44q/

You'll notice the missing comments say "deleted" not "removed." Not mod actions. I don't know what those comments said but the author removed them.

I think the evidence falls directly on one side of this. TGP is not being truthful in his descriptions here.

I'll just warn you that when confronted with any of these details, he just kept repeating himself - over and over, hoping to make his points true through sheer force.

I think that at the end of the day the best indicator of who is telling the truth is whose interpretation of events doesn't require mind reading...

For instance in the OP he states:

As far as I can see they did so first by "deleting their own ECs answers when they thought the ECs answers made TRP look like fools"

Even if it were true that we removed EC answers for anything but rule breaking (we didn't), how do you come to the conclusion that's what we were thinking when we did it? It sure fits his narrative nicely. But you'd have to know what is in our minds to make such a claim about our motivations.

Just a paragraph or two before this extraordinary claim, he claims "They haven't communicated to us directly at all." But now he also knows what we're thinking? Very curious.

Of course that's a blatant lie as well. I've been in contact with them via modmail. They're free to respond.

banning people asking questions they found too difficult

Did we find the questions too difficult? You would have to read my mind to make such a claim, given that I have never said anything of the sort- nor have I read anybody on TRP's side making this claim.

Once again, fits his narrative nicely, but you'd have to read minds to know somebody's motivation and internal thought process.

If the truth were on his side, why resort to mind reading?

when they realised that it was obvious to any observer this is exactly what they were doing they did so by "Crying uncle, unsticking and locking their threads, and taking their ball and going home with a big pouty flounce

Is this a realization we've had? Does he have some insight into my thought process I'm unaware of?

Once again- mind reading. The colourful language definitely paints a nice picture though, doesn't it? It paints a picture of overgrown man children who got overwhelmed by his masterful debate skills and then ran away when the going got tough.

But if that were true, why would we be here clarifying what happened? I thought we ran away. Which is it? He doesn't make this clear because he's not telling you the truth. He's weaving a narrative to bolster his position as the red pill diety on PPD.

But he also used the word "squirming" in reference to my analysis of the events. The only people I've seen using that phrase are straight from TBP. Methinks you've got a troll masquerading as a red-piller doing as he pleases on the PPD mod team.

I could go on and on- he does this quite a bit. Even in this thread. But I think you get the picture. He makes extraordinary claims about our motivations and thoughts, but consider to yourself- would he actually know these things without reading minds?

It seemed like his point was that he thinks we all think it's science when nobody made that assertion. Didn't stop him from continuing the argument with himself then coming back to PPD to declare himself the winner.

Technically most of that thread is breaking the rules since there's a ton of women posting and people questioning trp dogma.

No, not our normal TRP rules. This thread wasn't subject to normal TRP rules, but we did stipulate a few at the top of the thread, which required good-faith arguments and did disallow incels.

It does seem like you guys are renegging because you don't usually discuss stuff to that level of detail.

He's not banned. Most of his content is still there.

But goading/taunting users and playing semantics with word definitions (which he refuses to find common ground even after a user copies and pastes the definition of science) is not arguing in good faith.

Clearly PPD thinks playing dirty, moving goalposts, and false dilemmas are good faith. But we didn't just post that the thread needed to be civil, we needed good faith- (as stated in the rules)

Which requires users to give charitable interpretations of their opponents when debating.

I guess you guys have gotten so used to the "strawman" part that you all got caught up.

Even in a thread where I do not say I think TRP is science, he marches forward with

"So.... this is the problem all you're fucking about trying to pretend RP is a science is causing."

At which point I give up. I didn't say it was science but he needed to have the argument he was having in his head. So he kept arguing with voices in his head?

Listen- I agree these rhetorical tactics are great in a balls-out flame war. But in a thread that says "all arguments and rebuttals must be made in good faith" it's just not welcome.

He is more than welcome to post in the Lion's Den where no holds are barred.

For the record we had to remove a lot of TRP users' content because of this as well. Sucks, because otherwise good comments were spoiled by partially disingenuous or bad faith arguments. Tis the nature of a good-faith rule.

But again, no renege here because there is literally a thread that says "no rules" that he hasn't even tried to use. Instead, he went into the rules thread and broke the rules. Did you all think we wouldn't remove content that breaks the rules?

I can, but I won't get a civil debate there either.

I guess that's a risk you'll have to take.. for science! If you don't, then you haven't tested your assertion.

You're not interested in debating the point. You don't want to answer the questions and discuss the issues these reveal.

I gave you my good faith response to your science thing, and you went off the handle about vocabulary. After watching your interactions with others - literally denying the dictionary to one of them- the mod team recognized your bad faith.

You created this problem for yourself, I have no desire to solve it for you... because I was happy with the offer as it was.

The offer hasn't changed. You are not banned. Good faith arguments in the civil thread. Anything goes in the lions den.

You've found your bad faith arguments removed. Those were the rules. We will continue removing bad faith arguments from that thread. This is the last I'm going to respond on this matter because I don't even believe you're arguing in good faith now.

Also, side note, you'd save time by being more concise instead of typing up books every comment.

Well it looks like /u/-TheGreasyPole-, after being reinstated, couldn't resist bad faith trolling on the civil thread. So we've decided to stop letting him comment on the civil thread and told him to go to the Lion's Den where there are no rules.

His response: That we're breaking our word. and now he's threatening to tattle on us here on PPD.

Well TGP, here's the thing, you broke the rules and now you're being a crybaby about it. You're not banned, go to the rule-free thread because you apparently can't follow the civility rule.

Edit: If TGP claims this "breaks the assurances we've given" it does not. The rule "arguments and rebuttals must be made in good faith" implies that arguments that are not will be removed. He is more than welcome in our Lion's Den thread, which has no such stipulation.

I'm being civil. You just don't like how I'm being civil.

No, you were goading and presenting arguments in bad faith all over the place.

It was in the rules, arguments and rebuttals must be good faith.

Some of it was just on the edge of bad faith, like the science argument where you wouldn't even agree to a common definition with users, let alone let them speak for their own positions. When people took your argument as good faith and tried to answer earnestly, you hit them with gotchas on vocabulary, instead of addressing the spirit of the discussion.

Of course, you're pedantic enough to think pedantry was the spirit. To that I say, knock yourself out in the Lion's Den.

But the goading you did, that was purely bad faith. As if the lack of answers was a forfeit or some sort? That's bad faith.

And I'm not doing it to prove I'm "the king shit" as you put it.

Opportunity missed, I suppose!

You told us TRP mods/ECs suggested this to you.

False (more bad faith?). From the modmail that you were party to:

"I asked the mods / rpecs and they think that one thread will be civil enough and that the EC team intends to ignore troll comments and address genuine attempts at questions. I'm not sure but they're almost entirely unanimous that two threads will cut down on momentum."

I did it because of members concerns here- my team was convinced it was unnecessary.

You've now got to live with the modding decisions you and your team made, and your commitment to us to keep your word. If you don't, you can change your mind, it is your right. It's only your word that you're breaking.

We kept our word, you are terrible at good faith arguments which was a prerequisite of participating. In essence, we're keeping our word and protecting other PPD users from you.

You're not banned, feel free to participate in the Lion's Den. #promiseskept

But you are far from civil enough to participate in anything requiring good faith arguments.

To onlookers reading this:

It should say something that all of TRP mods and ECs disagree with him, despite his claims to have bested us all. Either he managed to be more red pill than anybody on TRP, or he's exhaustingly pedantic and nobody wants to engage his lengthy off-topic screeds.

For those curious, greasypole was banned for being uncivil in the civil thread (and the other guy was removed too). However, we did say that wouldn't result in a ban.

Our original plan was amnesty was for one day only (the AMA DAY). But we've made the decision to leave the threads live as long as they're active, and not all of the mods got this message.

Amnesty is still in effect- however we've asked greasypole to move to the Lion's Den where he can be as ruthless as he likes.

I've been hearing this same complaint at 10,000 users. And 20,000 users. And 50,000 users.

And 250,000 users.

You'll have to do better than that. 4 paragraphs in they get us wrong.

"but it often starts with the idea that feminism is toxic, men are oppressed and emasculation is ruining society."

I don't know anybody who thinks that. Maybe men's rights.. but TRP believes our failures are our own, not because of oppression.

They think that any increase in women's sexual agency is a threat to their dominance in the dating scene.

A mischaracterization of the position, presenting it as though we think we deserve dominance, or that women's agency is a problem.

So basically you changed nothing in terms of presentation of your material or anything people actually object to. Hence, you changed nothing that initially caught my eye as being off-putting as well as the eyes of others.

We changed what the people that mattered objected to. You seem to think we owe you and other people something? What value have you given me?

No, you showed one gaff.

I would be hard pressed to find one media representation of TRP that's correct. And there are dozens of articles about us.

All someone needs to do to confirm the media is mostly right is read a piece on you and then go to your forum for that confirmation. That's it.

So why don't you show me which one is correct?

And as I said, sometimes it's how you deliver your views rather than the views themselves that people find off-putting.

But that's part of the theory here. We are aware that the feminine imperative takes over male spaces by changing the language. That is exactly why we don't.

For instance, our language works fine for us. It's not working for you- but you're not us so why should we care?
From Rollo's Male Spaces

Once the feminine-primary in-group dynamic is established a 'feminine correct' social frame follows. This feminine correction restructures the priorities of goals, and validates any accomplishments, in terms of how they reflect upon the feminine as a whole.

It offends women so we should change it?

You haven't given me a good reason why I should care.

who are actually qualified to give advice

[to red pill women]

is much smaller than here

[here being the sub that he said it, theredpill, whose advice is to theredpill]

This isn't an ambiguous statement, you've either misinterpreted or you're being disingenuous. Either way, I know whisper's opinions of TRP's "chucklefucks" so I promise you he doesn't believe most TRP members know jack about RPW advice.

He was involved in drafting the rules on RPW. I assure you whisper and I are on the same page.

My attitude was 100% directed at a male user who was not giving good RP advice and he had no business giving it. The fact that the mods all saw that bad attitude as an affront to them personally says they value rando dude over woman with good post history and constructive advice. That's your legitimacy issue. If the good users are able to call out when bad advice is given, what's even the point?

although the percentage of users who are actually qualified to give advice is much smaller than here.

I'm sure you're familiar with math. That doesn't mean zero are qualified. It means that there are fewer well versed in RPW theory.

I, an endorsed user on that sub, verified married successful female (okay I was still in a cohabiting LTR at the time) was banned for calling out a male user on the sub giving bad advice. I was not breaking any rules, but I could see why the mod thought I was. So I messaged the mods with an explanation of what was happening. I was insulted, permabanned, and muted. Stories like mine are not uncommon.

Ahh, typical - you give a half story. I just looked up your little argument (which was removed from both sides and both of you were admonished). You also weren't an EC. Based on your attitude here and in that thread, I'm not surprised you got the boot.

The mod who banned you accidentally send her final message as a private mod note, so I'll copy and paste it here for you:

You are not an EC as far as I'm aware, but you are an arrogant and presumptive little so and so.

You came in here thinking you were hot shit, you have been argumentative and uncooperative and you think "well I've been here for so long!" means shit when you go off the rails?

You attempted to minimize your behavior and deigned to comment instead on what should or should not happen to another user as though you are a moderator of the sub.

You cannot attack another user on a thread, walk around with a chip on your shoulder and now that you haven't gotten your way (again) you are appealing to some noble "look at all I have done" bullshit?

You created this mess. First by going after another user, then by barging into modmail with an agenda, then again by not taking the hint and continuing to argue.

Even now you can't find the breaks because your ego is bruised.

Your entitlement and attitude have been an issue today, and in the past, with multiple mods. The only reason you weren't permanently banned prior to this is because of your history. You don't seem to understand that you have already cashed in your reputation chips.

You cannot honestly claim that you 'just wanted to open up a discussion' and play innocent.

Your ban is now permanent.

Goodbye.

1. is the site focused on one subreddit.
2. is that subreddit controversial and one the admin are trying to get rid of?
3. Is that subreddit pushing or featuring the remote content that can't be featured on reddit?

The reddit admin are good at applying rules inconsistently.

My software was always able to archive it, but getting a hold of lists was the hard part. The reddit API let us sort by new, hot, etc, but the lists were limited to 1,000 posts. So we ran it on hot, new, and best every 3 months for the past few years for different time frames (including all time).

But gaps definitely occurred.

The Big Query resource you pointed me to has the lineup of every postid since the beginning, so I ran some queries, dumped the ids into my software and let it run. We still have a lot of time left before it completes, but it's going strong.

I appreciate your help.

It's a tired and false argument.

Nobody is being deplatformed by us when our members decide to remove their own content for their safety and well-being.

As for rule-breaking material, I'm far less concerned about that floating in the wild, but on reddit we cannot and will not be able to post it due to reddit's rules.

As for moderation of a subreddit, mods have a requirement and duty to remove off-topic, low-quality, or rule-breaking material. This is not censorship as you put it, otherwise our front-page could be full of cookie recipes and pictures of dead animals.

Moderation is not the same as censorship.

You have to trust that the guys who have brought this subreddit as far as we did aren't trying to step on your rights. If you want to talk about cookie recipes and dead animals, you can do so where it is on topic. But here it is not. And it will be removed. No matter how much anybody cries censorship.

Don't you find this... staggeringly hypocritical, in light of your elsewhere vehement calls for free speech?

Jesus on a fucking pogo stick...

Not even a little bit.

There are two core reasons:

1. Reddit admin have strict rules about disseminating rule-breaking material. The mod team has done a lot to remove rulebreaking material from this sub. (That includes death threats, etc.) If reddit admin found that we were actively participating in distributing both the active content but also the deleted content directly from our subreddit, that could easily be used against us.
2. Members (such as the one in question in the thread you are referring to) have removed their own content in order to prevent doxxing. This usually happens when somebody's opsec isn't air tight and they find out later down the road and try to cover their tracks. While we understand that removed content is likely somewhere in the world (such as google big query) we are honoring our users' requests to have their information removed from the subreddit to protect life, jobs, and their families.

We requested that he simply delist deleted content from his dataset, and he refused. We simply cannot assist in making doxxing easier and potentially breaking reddit TOS in doing so.

Are you for these things?

Also, the chron search there only works one way, which makes it useless for historical searches.

Yes, we're making the search much better in the new update coming soon.

or reference, the link you posted to forums.red shows 173 comments by you there.

It shows 1,753 comments by me, but I get your point.

There are some limitations of the reddit api, which I don't believe dream-hunter is using. On the plus side, we can get 100% of comments from a thread, whereas his appears to be missing the "load more comments" sections (or there's a javascript bug).

But the API itself doesn't let us go too far back in a search. So we made the decision to grab only posts that reach top-post status.

While I understand that does lose some of the low ranking posts, I think it was mostly noise.

By the way, I'm not adverse to getting 100% of the posts, if anybody with knowledge of the api can direct me to how to get past their limits.

The reason I created was is because almost everyone was disappointed with the current official one and it gave TRP a bad image.

I haven't heard such complaints. And I disagree wholeheartedly that it gave trp any such image. The site has a very comprehensive archive, with full comment threads, speedy search, and a redesign underway as we speak.

If this helps, I'm willing to remove anyone as author of any post on my archive if they ever PM me about it.

No, it doesn't. We want the deleted posts removed.

Now I'm scared to continue to contribute anything to the forum as a web developer (they are rare in TRP, especially good ones) knowing full well that you might remove them as well,

We've given you a fair justification. If you were worried about expending time and effort towards something fruitlessly, you could have coordinated with us before doing so. You would quickly find that you are duplicating efforts that have already been underway for quite some time.

I understand this content may be available elsewhere and there's not much we can do about it.

But in the interest of serving our members' desires for privacy, we will not assist in disseminating deleted content.

Couple that with the fact that some content is removed for rule breaking, we've decided it best not to encourage sharing of deleted content on reddit.

I would never argue that additional archives can hurt, but it is strange to me that you've put this effort in knowing we have an archive system already in place.

Wow, reading this removes all doubt for me, JP is a cuck in cuck's clothing.

What matters is that there is very widespread opposition to his candidacy, much of it generated not by people's belief in his innocence or lack thereof but by their objection to the manner in which both parties handled the nomination process.

The manner in which both parties handled the nomination? Does he mean how Republicans brought forward somebody and Democrats attempted to assassinate his character? "Guilty on both sides" is such a copout and gives the very veto power to the power-hungry SJWs he pretends to oppose.

It's not a good thing when there is general discomfort with the manner in which something as important as the naming of a new Chief Justice is undertaken. It doesn't bode well for the stability and peace of the state (and perhaps—perhaps—there is nothing more important to preserve than that).

Then you've given agitators a free gift. Anytime they want to disrupt the process, create general discomfort and override the entire system.

Perhaps the Democrat opposition would mount a similar campaign against my putative successor. But that would provide virtually unassailable evidence for the purely manipulative and political motivation of the accusers, forcing them to duplicate their strategy a second time. That would help reveal the machinations for what they were, in a manner that would be virtually undeniable.

Apparently he missed what they did to Roy Moore. There's already plenty of evidence of the purely manipulative and political motivation of the accusers. They were empowered by imbeciles thinking like JP.

This guy says a lot of words in place of critical thinking.

It certainly does. That's how topics work, unless you advocate for moving goalposts, which is what this fellow did.

You gratuitously and repeatedly asserted that the allegations were false and baseless. If it is not fair game and/or it is not germane to your point and/or if you don't really believe it, then leave it out.

My point does not rest on his innocence. I've said as much. Do I think he's innocent? Sure. But that's not where u/breyerw was bringing it. He decided that accusations of plenty of unrelated crimes was now on topic.

Which is where I shut it down.

Having chosen to put it in, it is fair game for others to comment on, particularly when, in your own words, the issue that YOU first injected into the discussion is not relevant to the original point. "Keep up" LMAO. Bye.

In the context of this thread, my assertion was that Jordan Peterson had shown his true colors by simply throwing Kavanaugh under the bus, before any findings were shown... and even in spite of a lack of findings. JP literally suggested that Kavanaugh step down regardless of findings.

I made an assertion that at best Kavanaugh hasn't been proven guilty. My opinion is that he is probably innocent given the lack of evidence.

What I have not done is speak to the character of Kavanaugh, which is why I don't care for the conversation u/breyerw is trying to have in which he asserted:

"And Cavanaugh acted like a scared sniveling child on the stand."

He then moved the goal posts (to change the subject, which is Jordan Peterson, not Kavanaugh), to this:

"Kavanaugh broke multiple laws. Even if they didn't have proof of the initial allegations, he lied to cover it up multiple times. Making shit up off the top of his head."

This is something that I do not care about, do not have an opinion about, and does not address my original assertion.

I still do not give a shit. If he wants to argue about this, he can do so elsewhere.

My original assertion that Jordan Peterson threw a man under the bus for an accusation before it was proven true shows that Jordan Peterson does not stand for the interests of men, because false accusations ruining lives are a real part of it.

My original assertion remains true even if Kavanuagh is found guilty of his accusations. Which is why debating it is off topic.

You do have an opinion. You repeatedly refer to "false" or "baseless" allegations. If you're going to post stuff on here, have the sack to own it.

How Pre-selection Affects Online Dating

1 upvotes · 27 December 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

If you get to the point where you're getting matches regularly (i.e. high value), then girls will start messaging you first. I am no isolated case. My experience really isn't that different than other men who've written Tinder guides posted on the very forum that you moderate. If anything, I'm less successful than they are.

So what you're saying is, the best strategy for online dating is to be attractive. I'm sure you read my post, because that was my conclusion.

On tinder, you can't even talk to somebody until you match. Somebody getting matches regularly isn't because of your hilarious one-liner.

Moreover, you conveniently ignore the case of Bumble, where girls must open the conversation. The "rules" that you posit don't apply there. Again, I'm saying nothing new. The advantages of using Bumble, where girls must risk rejection themselves, has been pointed out many times.

Bumble, where there are 14 women altogether. (it's called hyperbole)

Once again, attractiveness reigns supreme. Even on Bumble. None of this pertains to how preselection works.

False as I've explained. And even if you do, it is no different than approaching in any other venue...aside from the differences in medium, obviously.

You're making an assertion, but you haven't addressed a single point in my original post, nor have you supported your assertion with much more than "but bro, I get laid so you're wrong."

It is my contention that the only sure-fire way to reliably excel at online dating is to demonstrate the actual traits that would normally lead to pre-selection in real life

This I agree with.

Then you didn't read the whole post. Because that's my fucking conclusion.

Then why did you spend the preceding paragraphs trashing it?

It's called a critique. Surely you understand nuance?

This argument is hot garbage, like much of the material written trashing online dating. Author obviously has no idea what he's talking about and presumes to lecture others on the subject.

I would insult your argument but I have yet to find it.

I just explained to you how rape is objectively off topic and counter to red pill theory.

And yet you persist, without proof.

Rape is the antithesis of gaining a woman's true and genuine desire.

If you think there are hidden rapists around every corner, that's on you.

You didn't actually answer my question about what the benefits are of "removing wrong think" (assuming the people are not genuinely offended like you claimed).

I didn't see a question mark.

I don't see any benefits from removing wrong think.

If it's wrong people can disregard it. Censorship takes away the control from people to be able to decide for themselves. And that means those who censor think they are the purveyors of truth.

Talking about feminism's effect on male sexual choices has always and will always be on topic. We talk about the cultural and political powers that affect men in many places, including the USA (where a majority of our members are from.)

We also talk about the UK and India.

The Difference Between Sexual Strategy and Politics

1 upvotes · 9 October 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

You and others are trying to push The Red Pill from a movement into a brand.

My core goal is to keep the conversation going and facilitating a place that's free to do so.

given most new guys coming in are broken and/or high chance to be in the Beta Bucks category, it's only going to polarize them because it rolls the perception of objectivity. It becomes it's own unspoken shit test. They'll stop seeing women as the only threatpoint and eventually will start to see the vanguard as a threatpoint as well.

I'm not sure what you mean by this.

Abundance is not something we can discuss into being. The world is not going to change for us. Men need a dual sexual strategy of their own. To honor our biological imperative to provide and protect and to procreate. "Enjoy the decline" is going to sound like stick your dick in a pumped out emotional terrorist who is waiting to shit down your throat to most of these young guys. They need a methodology where the game they employ is hard, but the goalposts won't move on them.

Many of us are in long-term relationships for just this reason. We even have a flair to discuss this strategy.

1 upvotes · 15 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

I have a few datapoints- one comes to mind. A woman I know very well was on the fast track. She went into higher education (Masters), got the job in the city, making the big bucks. Crossed over into 6 figure territory and passed on a lot of men that she just wasn't happy with. (Broke at least one engagement, and turned down one more)

They weren't high enough status for her because truthfully she was higher status than most men period.

She finally meets a guy, owns a large multi-million dollar company and she locks him down by the time she's 34.

She's miserable, not even remotely attracted to him, and she's popping out babies as quickly as she can because her clock is ticking.

This is her life now. Antidepressant cocktails and a lavish lifestyle.

On one side, it looks like she got what she wanted. But somehow I think she thinks the grass is greener elsewhere.

Yes. This is the convenience of the AWALT theory: "I can't get a woman to truly love me, so I'm going to blame it on the fact that all women are terrible thus unworthy of me."

If you're using this as a rationalization to embrace rude, pushy attitudes around men, you're going to have a bad time.

Mind you, you've got a terribly inaccurate picture of TRP and seems like you don't really understand the point of RPW either.

My point wasn't to get into the ins and outs of climate change but understand the absoluteness of the claims and why to be skeptical.

If you want the book I read a lot of these claims in - The Politically Incorrect Guide to Climate Change: Marc Morano

I personally don't care about the climate debate. I will say, though, that it sheds light on why the USA got into such bad deals such as the Paris Accord. Makes you wonder when the treaty itself doesn't really help the climate, but the media and left parrot that leaving the accord is akin to murdering mother nature. That builds skeptics out of people.

That said it really seems like you're chomping at the bit to get in an argument. You've completely missed the point I made in favor of getting into a discussion about climate change.

1 upvotes · 20 March 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

I agree with Rian on this one, I use the example of travel abroad.

If your girl wants to travel abroad alone or with her girlfriends (undoubtedly she is seeking cock). You can't tell her don't go. You just say "you can do as you please but don't expect me to wait around for your return."

Sure it's a soft ultimatum, but the truth is you're not exactly in a good place if she's seriously considering travelling abroad without you anyhow.

It does manage to make your ultimatum look at least 30% less powerless because (as rian points out) it operates within your frame and focuses on your own actions.

I liken it to a frame you can set at the beginning stages of a relationship: I don't need to go fuck other girls if you're here to fuck me.

If you set that expectation at the beginning, then a subtle "Sure, travel all you want, I'm still going to do me" is really operating inside a frame rather than setting explicit and powerless ultimatums.

The truth is, if she's that interested in foreign cock you probably didn't have a tight grip anyhow.

Gave my LTR an ultimatum

The feeling of dread comes from her suddenly realizing her man is totally fine without her and pursuing other activities and possibly other women. Dread is specifically there to communicate that you have options and you're not afraid to use them.

Dread goes entirely out the window when you explicitly state an ultimatum.

When it's time to say Fuck TRP

1 upvotes · 27 October 2017 · /r/TheRedPill

I will make up a post soon about it, it's a topic that interests me.

The short of it is that attitudes and markets have changed.

In the 90's, women had to leave the house for social validation. That means meeting somebody was somewhat easier because everybody had a limited amount of exposure to new people.

Consider how celebrities act today, being so busy and important they don't have time to deal with "nobodies."

Fast forward to the digital age where every woman is a quasi-celebrity with 10,000 followers on their instagram where they post their cleavage and duck lips.. Now they don't need anybody for validation.

The idea of simply walking up and talking to a girl at a bar was so novel and bold pre-2000 (hell, pre-2010) that the strategy worked relatively well. As the market shifted, this advice still worked but was getting less effective as time went on.

Even when this forum was started (and r/seduction) meeting new people was a matter of striking up a conversation with somebody.

But in today's culture, attitudes are just that much different. Night game is a waste of time. Your only hope is to approach during daylight in places where women might have their guard down. And even then, the game itself is that much harder. You're not competing with a few other guys in her life. You're competing with an iPhone that delivers hundreds of thousands of followers' validation 24/7.

My understanding is that it wasn't a DMCA notice, so I don't believe it was a copyright dispute. Further, one could argue it's a transitive work under fair-use for parody. If it had been a DMCA, they would have had an opportunity to make that argument.

Up until now, most domain takeovers were due to viruses, botnets, illegal drugs, child porn, and unquestionably illegal things.

Today, we have a new precedent in USA and UK registrars blocking content based on the nebulous "hate speech," claiming that all hate speech is a call to violence to justify the removal.

The fact that it seems like maybe this is reasonable is likely the exact purpose of small baby steps like this. We know their end-game, this is how they accomplish it. Everybody should be worried that addressing is being attacked for content they do not host.

Remember, the server itself is where the content resides. All domain registrars do is pair a name with an ip address. They don't have to be in the content censorship game to begin with. But now, they are.

they are trying to sail with the wind and as they see it, "hate speech" is so politically charged that they are scared shitless of anything they do, sell, or associate with being tarnished with that label.

They had some level of protection before they got into the domain censorship game. Just say "We provide an addressing service, not the content."

The parties are poorly defined these days anyhow. Trump ran as a Republican on a circa 2001 democrat platform with a few tweaks.

The social conservatives are slowly being phased out of the republican party, and the new popular members of the party are pushing fiscal conservatism while accepting a mostly liberal social policy.

Oh, don't get me wrong. I have zero faith in our justice system.

California is an at will state and google will give some none reason to get rid of the writer with more than enough enough ambiguity to give the jury a way to judge favor of google.

I believe Google has released a statement of exactly why they let him go. They'll have a hard time backtracking on that, and if this guy's lawyer is smart, they'll make a good argument that google's real reason is published online for all to see. That said, you're not wrong that the justice system won't be serving any justice.

Emotions are fickle.

To add to this, they're fickle, and for a solipsistic woman, they define reality. If you seal the deal in the heat of the moment, you have established a rapport that she may rely on later for future connections. If you do not seal the deal, she will later rationalize that she didn't really want to fuck you anyway, and her feelings will cool down so she won't remember that she ever wanted to fuck you in the first place.

We need to talk about social media.

A big reason why I prefer the MGTOW community over the "self-improvement" TRP community

1 upvotes · 30 June 2017 · /r/MGTOW

Most of the time TRP seems to blame the guy having problems getting laid (ie not lifting), rather than giving him the advice of moving to a more favorable place (with better ratio).

I think the biggest reason for that is because it's the easiest factor to change for most people. But I agree, finding a place for a good ratio could have a huge difference, and it's probably why some guys on TRP think getting laid is impossible while others think it's a walk in the park.

I started /r/geotrp to try to get a leg up on that but it hasn't really taken off the way I had hoped.

The culture is that sex with multiple women is the end game...and it's not.

TRP is about sexual strategy. I happen to believe MGTOW is a possible strategy if you accept not having sex. But don't bemoan other men for following their evolutionary instinct to want to satisfy a very real urge.

The other side of the 'red pill'; why don't we talk about male evo-psych?

1 upvotes · 9 May 2017 · /r/TheRedPill

We aren't concerned with having sex with men so models about their promiscuity and so forth aren't very helpful. what we do have to worry about, and is discussed in depth is the myriad of psychological traps a man can fall in when hung up on "the one". in that respect there's a lot of evo psych for men. Its this very ability to change behavior to suit the situation that is lacking in women.

infidelity is just one risk of an LTR. Much more immediate failures result from the loss of frame it can create.

Lets discuss "women are children"

1 upvotes · 7 September 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

It's kind of a pointless distinction to make though. Like, let's say men and women are equally protected by family. We still have a majority of homeless being men. So, women must not rely on family if all things are equal.

Doesn't mean my brothers don't have the exact same safety net I do, and it's certainly not an indication that men never get support from their families.

But it is an indication that men have less access to such safety nets.

For example: we can point to a male billionaire as an example of somebody who is rich, but surely you understand that this does not make all men billionaires.

CMV: Solipsism is the foundation of TRP

1 upvotes · 17 June 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Yeah, by your logic, you must think that even one who has met every person on the planet is solipsistic for thinking they can draw a conclusion based on it.

I've met enough women to draw conclusions that 160,000 other men that I've never met have also drawn. I think there's a strong reason to believe we've noticed a real trend about women. Corroborating these details with 160,000 other men seems like the opposite of solipsism.

This is good, but I suppose I should add, she's a little closer to the autistic side of the spectrum and my normal covert game has so far done jack-shit with her.

I'm going to give it another try just in case I'm missing something, but generally speaking her interpretation of covert communication is a miss every time. (She is constantly confused about how others act). She doesn't see or understand body language or unspoken words. (Or hasn't, so far in my experience).

I'm hoping her proximity to me will help her pick up on covert communication a little better.

I've been in LTRs before where I have been able to gain control rather easily, but this has been an uphill challenge.

A father cannot be ordered to pay child support without having parenting rights.

I suspect this is just a difference between our locations. Around my parts, you can easily be on the hook for child support with no presumption of rights. I wish I could link you some articles but I'm afraid I do prefer my anonymity. I do work in this sector, so practice also might also vary slightly from the rule of law.

CMV - RPWives are mistaken, if a man submits to marriage, he cannot be high value.

1 upvotes · 29 April 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I guess what I'm saying is that even in states where natural rights are presumed- it's always been at the mercy of the mother. Even in cases where a divorced father has rights through marriage, she can decide she doesn't want him seeing the child anymore, and his only recourse is court, where they more often than not side with the mother out of "best interest of the child."

Now functionally, there may be an extra step in determining paternity in your jurisdiction. But in mine, if she wants to challenge it, she can do so regardless of the marriage status when the child was born...

Except in one case: collecting child support. He will be presumed father for that no matter what their status was if she says he's the dad.

CMV - RPWives are mistaken, if a man submits to marriage, he cannot be high value.

1 upvotes · 29 April 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

A putative father (a man alleging he is the father) has no rights.

Again- the only reason this would be challenged is if a woman who was previously cooperative decided to change significantly their arrangement. But again- she could do this to a divorced father as well. His only recourse is the family court. He does have presumed natural rights, but it's up to the court to decide whether to enforce them (the police won't). Unfortunately, that part doesn't usually go the man's way (divorced or unmarried).

CMV - RPWives are mistaken, if a man submits to marriage, he cannot be high value.

1 upvotes · 29 April 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I recognize that the law changes from state to state, country to country. A lot of states that I've personally dealt with, the law specifically presumes the father to have equal custody and joint decision making powers. If they want to change that arrangement (having previously not put anything into courts), they can either agree on a handshake, or take it to family court, where they will rule based on paternity and evidence. By the time it gets to family court, the unwed father will be in about the same position as a divorced father.

Before that, however, parental rights are assumed and inherent.

This is the key, and this is why Whisper and RPS have been spinning furiously in RPWomen to convince women they should all just give up on the idea of marriage.

Since you haven't read what you're critiquing, I'll correct you. Both Whisper and I are proposing methods of meeting men to commit and marry. In my address a few weeks ago I posted that I thought that marriage still benefited women the most and it was a worthy goal.

I assume your version of RPW is based on second-hand nonsense you read here.

For the reference, this CMV was bouncing a hypothesis that I have. I'm not sold one way or another at the moment.

there is literally ZERO status for aging bachelors in the world of men or the world of women. the idea that patriarchs wont always outrank bachelors is foolish. and no one respects a man with a "Forever girlfriend", it shows she's low value

Atlas is making the classic mistake of stating how she thinks things should be as how things are.

The world is changing, and there are a lot of people in high positions who agree with my viewpoint. Marriage is dead. No amount of shaming will change men's opinions on this one. - that is what you're doing- trying to convince guys that the only path to higher status is through marriage. It's awfully convenient that this path benefits women.

That said, it's rather typical that your debate is on the status of men rather than the success. Women do like their status, it's like currency to you at the weekly wine-and-book club.

Right, it seems like a silly question, but it does shed some light on the quandary. If you could have an intelligent man that commits, you'd prefer it over one that isn't. So intelligence isn't not a factor.

Now, people have pointed out that I may have presented a false dichotomy here between smart and unwilling to marry, or dumb and willing. But I think that all else being equal, a man who takes the risk must not have the same analytical skills as the man who does not.

Now you: you have 2 girls willing to have sex with you, who will you pick. Hotter or uglier one?

I know this one, the hot one!

This doesn't make sense and I don't know what you are talking about. Women know how to get sex. It's easy, and requires no effort.

Correct, so the conversation is about securing commitment, not sex. You can admit that you just haven't read what you're critiquing. I think everybody will believe you.

The false dichotomy you presented, by the way, was this:

There's no reason to talk about the validity of being a plate

It's not that there's a reason- or no reason- it's that the discussion wasn't about the validity of being a plate to begin with.

The sub specifically deals with the female sexual strategy. Normal women don't need advice on how to acquire sex. Being a plate is all about having sex and maybe hoping he someday commits. It's a horrible strategy, but what's more, it's something women can do without needing any advice about it.

If you keep painting the roses, of course they'll look red to you.

You can be an ugly mofo with no money and marry an ugly broad with no money and the most "high value" hot that will now want you, because plain and simply a woman wants a man who's willing to commit

I don't think that has been demonstrated.

If you treat her right and put the work into a marriage your woman will know that you could do it with someone else if she fucks up and the other women know what you can do for them too.

And she knows she can take his stuff on his way out, so the next woman won't get nearly as much.

Claiming that all women MUST start as plates is not that.

I think the miscommunication here is suggesting that he's prescribing platehood rather than analyzing the beginning of relationships. Perhaps there's a better word for it than "plate." Early-relationship risk is what he's describing.

I understand your position and I tend to agree, if there is a way to secure commitment without having sex, this is a valid and less risky approach. It obviously worked well for you, and for many others. This approach puts more risk on the man than the women. (which an optimized sexual strategy for women should do).

The reason there's even a conversation taking place is that there is some debate here about how much of the risk will need to start to shift from men to women as the market changes, and I think that's what Whisper is getting at, certainly he is not saying women should strive to become plates- nor would that topic be allowed on this forum.

That is damaging to them. Because of what I already said, about pair bonding. It's taking a woman who has not already given herself to too many men, and convincing her she must if she wants love. A really old, sad trick.

This is absolutely why there's such a risk involved. I agree entirely.

I'm going to make it clear here and now that Whisper's approach is clearly more about asking the questions than it is actionable advice right now, and that as a subreddit we don't have an official position on what he's saying, rather we're welcoming him to continue the discussion so that some answers can be found.

The lesson we learned on /r/theredpill was that sexual strategies of years past no longer work today. What worked for our fathers don't work for their sons. What worked even ten years ago seems to have changed. Feminism is changing the landscape in ways we can't completely measure today.

Sex without commitment is risky and a bad idea for women.

To compare to the male side, a majority of our options are risky and bad ideas for men. Increasingly so compared to the options of our fathers. The discussion must continue to evolve.

We're learning now what needs to be compromised to find success, and what doesn't.

It's a very small portion of men with that weird fetish, and it's an even smaller number of high-value men who are going to look past nude photography as simply "art" with no sexual component to it. I'm not suggesting they're going to unzip and start wanking it when they see it. But they will count it as part of her sexual history. Like it or not, your opinion on 'fine arts' is irrelevant.

Giving the advice that since you don't see anything wrong with it, it should be fine, is simply bragging in front of women to convince them that, once again, their past shouldn't matter, they aren't responsible for their decisions, and they should be loved no matter what they do.

So why is the default it was the woman vice what did I do and does this really matter? You aren't developing a system where responsibility and introspection are the immediate 'go tos' you are breeding men who keep reaching for examples as to how the world is out to get them.

Again, my only response to that is that you simply don't read my sub, which is clear by your mischaracterization here, as well as your ringing endorsement of marriage.

But you would, which is why MRP is not on your sidebar. I don't see why you wouldn't put MRP on the sidebar and just say, don't promote marriage or let your subscribers upvote and downvote the material accordingly.

If I wanted to run a sub called "thebluepill" then that would be on topic. But as a red pill sub, somebody coming in selling snake oil of the pros of marriage, and trying to shame men who reject it, that's off topic. Of course I won't link to it. You're absolutely fucking nuts if you think what you're saying is solid red pill advice. It's not.

You don't even link here, which bothers some of our guys

How could I? At least one mod here is enthusiastically pro-marriage and has demonstrated a clear inability to separate his personal choices with advice for others. Your entire thread here reads like a giant rationalization to convince yourself you've made the right decision.

Now, don't get me wrong, I'm not saying your marriage will fail. And I sincerely hope it doesn't. I have faith that if anybody could be successful in a marriage, it would be somebody getting advice on a red pill sub. But I also have the presence of mind to remind others that signing the marriage contract is unconscionable.

You shouldn't censor the discussion as look what has come of this thread. Hundreds of comments with guys discussing the angles as to why it is good and why it is bad and how some have made it work while others haven't.

If the discussion was about how to make it work, I'd expect the disclaimer that "by the way, marriage is a bad idea to start with, but here's the discussion on it." I'd leave that up on TRP. In fact, I have had discussions like that.

But if an endorsed contributor, or worse, a moderator, started preaching that marriage is good for you and it's all peaches and cream. I'd get him off my team right the fuck away, because he doesn't know jack shit about the red pill.

That is the masculine approach to it, not saying don't marry – end of discussion TRP would improve with the inclusion of MRP and it's not because marriage would be promoted but rather, the discussion would be held and men would decide for themselves.

No, the masculine approach isn't entertaining blue-pill ideals with a red pill sticker over the label.

Saying you are 'improving' and 'finding yourself' via these two titles (MGTOW/MM) - negative. They are hiding from women. Embracing masculinity means expressing those desires.

You don't have to convince me that MGTOW or Monk Mode are bad strategies to get women. I happen to agree. I'd never do either. But some guys have different goals. If a guy doesn't want women, it's not called hiding. And the universal term "improving" doesn't come with an asterisk next to it saying "but only if it pleases women." If a man's goal is to build a cabin in the woods and live out his days in solitude with his dog and trusty shotgun, then improving to him might be growing a long-ass beard.

You've got a group on TRP who are just fucking angry at the world and receive pats on the backs saying, Yes buddy you are a victim of society - it is pitiful, then they are encouraged to blame women for their inadequacies.

I suggest you spend a little more time reading what you criticize rather than taking TBP's caricature at face value. Every single post is about how we, as men, control our fates and nobody else. And yes, there are angry people. Did you forget about the full range of emotions? Does a REAL MAN(TM) not experience anger?

I agree, it's a man's job to keep his woman interested and attracted. And if she leaves, he should look inwards and think about what he can do differently. But let's not absolve women for their actions. A cheating wife is still a cheating wife. Women aren't magical, they're people, and sometimes they are wrong.

I am not telling guys to run off and get married and I am not telling them that marriage is impossible. I'm telling them that it can work if you do all the shit you need to do.

I take exception to this because there is enough outside your control that it's simply not a good bet. I get that you're married and want to make it work, I applaud any man who stands by his word. But "I would do it again" is telling men, "it's such a good deal, you shouldn't not get married." If that's not the message you intended to send, you should edit it. You're young, and your marriage is going well. And I'm happy for you. But that doesn't mean you control the weather, and pretending you do, you just need enough Alpha Magic is selling snake oil to anybody on the fence about marriage.

You are failing to lead your sub as you are failing to recognize that they are in charge of their own fate. Don't tell them what they can or can't do and don't create an environment where certain ideas are cause for being ostracized.

If I didn't keep discussion on topic, it'd be the total nonsense we see here, a bunch of guys pretending to understand the red pill, but rather, they're rationalizing poor choices.

You should be able to entertain ideas without agreeing.

Like I said, I would never MGTOW or go into this so-called monk mode.

You have a guy on red pill who has his lady and is owning his shit and wants to take the step of making her his wife, that's his call and his problem to manage for the rest of his days. All you should be doing is encouraging him to own his shit and never be deluded that her love is 'unconditional'.

If you told me you understood the risks and you wanted to make that dumb ass plunge here's my response: It's dumb, you'll regret it, good luck. I wouldn't stop being a friend, but I'd give my boiler plate warning.

Now if you came on the sub and started suggesting to others, "hey guys, I'm under thirty and the worst part of marriage hasn't hit me yet, but it's awesome and you all need to try this.." I'd kick you the fuck out for selling snake oil to my subscribers.

When you spin plates you may end up in prison because you 'raped' her, paying child support because she got pregnant, or watching your dick shrivel up because you've got the clap.

Literally any woman can falsely accuse you. Literally any woman can have an STD. And of course your cheating wife can just as easily give you an STD.

Fuck MGTOW, fuck 'Monk Mode', how about each man does as he pleases, regardless of how well that sits with other people.

So every man should do as he pleases, unless they want to go their own way or monk mode, because these are bad.

I'd point out again that I'm finding joy and am satisfied in every aspect of my life - there are other married men who made it work and are doing the same.

It is possible and in some situations I'd say go for it. For 99% I'd say no, but for the few - fucking go for it.

So? That sucks, but the knowledge is out there. The signs are obvious. There are failing marriages everywhere you look. If a man is going to get married, and doesn't take the time to look at these marriages and see what's wrong, that's his fault. There's a clear pattern even if someone doesn't want to see it. Any man that gets married is no victim. He made a choice, whether informed or not. That's on him. He has nobody to blame but himself.

I'm not comfortable with simply giving women a free pass on that. If a woman wants to trash marriage vows, that's on her too.

I don't know whether you have kids or not, but I have full access to mine which is pretty nice. Tax breaks are cool too. So is this shiny ring.

I see no reason you can't get listed as the father and wear a ring without a marriage contract. I admit the tax break is the big difference, but I don't see it as a big enough difference to take that risk.

What is the best way to exact revenge on a woman? Or what is the best way to hurt her?

I doubt that many that have been here for a while would consider themselves victims. Masculine men don't tend to blame others for choices they've made or even the circumstances they're in.

No, it's true, the married men here are owning their mistakes. I do, however, consider men who unknowingly get married victims. It's not like everybody had a father to pass down red pill knowledge.

That's a shitty argument. At best? Is your imagination that limited? Is your knowledge of what you're arguing that narrow?

Is there some way that the paper contract makes your relationship better than my paperless relationship?

I would do it again.

1 upvotes · 7 April 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

No, I don't read MRP very often. I don't know why you brought up STEM.

You really are just tied to studies being your rationalization for marriage. I was simply chiming in on the contract, which is bad no matter how many studies you might have saying marriage makes rainbows come out of one's ass hole.

I would do it again.

1 upvotes · 7 April 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

My issue is that you're just not making a compelling case for me to take you seriously waving superficial understandings of the scientific record

That does not impress people who live and breathe research. Most particularly when you're making specific arguments about the record that are easily falsified by RTFA.

He had made his point without linking an article for me to read, so I suggested that IF it includes divorced people, that could skew the numbers. According to the article, it does control for that. Fair enough, doesn't mean I've suddenly become the anti-christ of science.

My point was that no amount of evidence of "happiness" would convince me to sign a marriage contract. That's not "alpha posturing" as you put it, but simple logic and what I thought was common red pill sense.

For somebody accusing me of "STEM"-ing too hard, you certainly are putting a lot of value on a study of how married men in Korea feel. Am I being too autistic if I say TFA didn't have any mention of unmarried long term relationships causing happiness?

I would do it again.

1 upvotes · 7 April 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

You said that they lumped divorced and single people in the studies. You hadn't read any studies and we're repeating bullshit from the echo chamber. Own it.

My words: "if we're comparing happy married couples to everybody else, everybody else includes divorcees."

I think it was quite clear I was simply commenting on what you wrote.

The only major criticism of these studies is what I mentioned, that the single men and women included unmarriageable weirdos. It's a real flaw, but not so big that the results should be ignored.

And that marriages that are unhappy often dissolve, selecting for happy marriages.

Listen I get it, you need to rationalize why marriage is a good choice. But don't bring others down with you.

I would do it again.

1 upvotes · 7 April 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

If signing a marriage contract were analogous to an awesome road trip, you'd have a good analogy.

I would do it again.

1 upvotes · 7 April 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

I'm not talking out of my ass. I'm just responding to the lack of actual studies you sent me.

That said, I don't need research to trick me into signing a bad contract.

I would do it again.

1 upvotes · 7 April 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

it(marriage) is a risk I decided was worth it.

Let's be clear here. It provided you great risk with zero reward. You can start a family without that contract. You should absolutely not recommend anybody take that risk.

1 upvotes · 5 April 2016 · /r/RedPillWomen

Oh lord. Alpha and beta on humans is such Bullshit. You are not strictly one or the other at a given time. Situation dictates. Besides the guy that created the distinction (about wolves not people) doesn't even believe it anymore

Of course they're not people. I think I posted about the words being used to describe qualities rather than people. I don't think you can just lump somebody into alpha or beta category. Like, people seem to agree trump is "an alpha," but he's married. Does that make him a beta??

It makes way more sense to use the terms interchangeably with the qualities "attractive" or "provider."

You can have alpha qualities and beta qualities. In fact, that seems like the jackpot for women if he has a perfect balance of both.

Rollo seems to think men should avoid beta qualities, though I wonder if that's because he thinks you should err on the side of caution.

Getting pissed is how men conquered, how men built, and how men created. But they did... Something

It's disingenuous to think that because there are a number of angry men on TRP, that all men who are angry do nothing but. There is plenty of discussion of how to improve one's standing, you don't have to go far.

I do take the time to address the anger-phase complaints, because I find they tend not to really dig that deep into exactly how and why TRP functions.

You're seeing anger as an impediment to success. Framing it as irresponsible or immature (malcontent child) is buying the feminine frame hook, line, and sinker.

Anger is the catalyst by which real changes occur.

If feminists reaction is the goal

Feminists don't want men angry, they want them docile and defending the status quo. We are no good to them outside of the system. They need us to fight their wars, to give them provisions, to pay the taxes and pay the child support. Angry men are a threat to their way of life.

Rp is a man's answer to living as if feminism didn't exist, and he wanted to pick his own path.

Yes, it is. And the first step to living one's life is admitting that it's okay to be angry about things when somebody has wronged you, not use shame to curtail it. Real-man(tm) is an appeal to the feminine imperative.

There is absolutely nothing wrong with their view that marriage is the best and ultimate goal for women. It's a sure bet if you can get it.

From what I was linked, they were upset about a conversation regarding sex 2.0 and the fall of marriage as a viable option for men. The question needed to be asked, how many high value men will continue to see marriage as an option. This was the discussion that was censored. I, for one, really wanted to see the discussion play out.

Being stoic has nothing to do with a "lack of personality" or any other bullcrap that apleases other people. Seeing reality for what it is instead of being deceived by the charade of mundane nonsense we all typically experience.

We've got an entire culture trying to feed us complete straight up shit, like for instance, in this post, where the hivemind is trying to convince a dude that having sex with another dude who calls himself a chick is totally hetero and normal.

If nobody calls out the bullshit, then we've all lost our collective minds.

I don't think anybody here particularly cares about what trannies do with their spare time, only that the PC culture we live in is trying to convince us that penises aren't a male thing and that vaginas aren't all that important for sex.

You don't have to like RPW, and you're entitled to your opinion CIS, but I do want to correct you before you continue.

RPW really serves a considerably different purpose than TRP. TRP focuses on discovery and understanding of the truth behind reality and how to exploit this knowledge for maximum personal gain.

RPW serves to give women a space to discuss their sexual strategy absent the corrosion of feminism. They don't need help getting on the cock-carousel, that's just nature to them. Rather, they are attempting to learn from our discoveries to make effective and positive decisions that will provide them long-term happiness rather than the short lived, hot burning flame of the early twenties carousel.

That they don't understand red pill theory is a bit of a misdirection. Like her or hate her, wingnut has a solid grasp on theory and sometimes cuts to the core better than many members here. I specifically made her a mod on asktrp because she was so effective (and the board itself was buried deep in absolute trash advice). She can be stubborn and a bit abrasive, and my conversations with her can sometimes be more frustrating than fruitful, but I do consider her a friend, and a good moderator of her domain.

I don't think a thorough knowledge of trp theory or even a propensity for positing their own theories is really a requirement to discuss the best way to secure long-term commitment over the impatient gimme-gimme culture that women live in today.

For them, their strategy could better be summed up as, don't make things worse- you can already attract men. Whereas male strategy is, make things better so you can attract women at all.

Anyway, you're welcome to think it will be a fruitless endeavor, or that they're all steering in the wrong direction, but it's a bold statement to flatly call them stupid or sluts, as they are earnestly looking to solve problems rather than ignore them. That's a far cry from stupid.

Even if 90% of single mothers are completely shit people, nobody is encouraging the users to put in the personal work to figure out how to find the 10% or even look for.

Because it's a fools' errand. The principle here is to avoid single moms entirely because it's close to impossible to find that diamond in the rough, hard enough, in fact, that she may not even exist.

I don't see TRP as a place that generally encourages people to grow. It's a lot easier to be mad at someone else than to be mad at yourself. I see it as a place for people to collectively wallow in objective reality based anger and misery. Sometimes, there's some golden posts on how to be a more valuable person and that's why I encourage everyone here to read them.

The difference here is that we're encouraging guys not to hitch themselves to sinking ships and rebranding it as "self-improvement."

The fact is, most women are not worth your time, and abundance mentality is the most important aspect of keeping a woman's attention in the first place.

There's plenty of self improvement advice on TRP.

You left out the fact we have repeatedly offered to co-mod whoever you name.

After my experience, why would I trust a group that sits at the helm? An honorary position? How sweet, no thanks.

Like me or hate me, I have a vision for my subs. You may disagree with my methods but my experience has been that when major decisions are up to a democracy, that democracy fails to maintain a signal and a message, in such a way that I envision.

Call it ego if you'd like, I call it security of my vision and project.

What exactly would you change in the posting guidelines on MRP?

I would start by advising the members here not to write off anger as simply immaturity. You do more service to the feminine imperative than feminists could hope to achieve.'

Can we end this stupid dispute started with a moderator who resigned coming up on a year ago?

Your reluctance to disclose how passwords are stored is deeply troubling. Kerckhoffs's principle says that knowing how a properly designed system operates should not compromise its security. Your reluctance to disclose your security measures can only indicate either ignorance or malice, and I hope it's the former.

I don't take advice from some rando that I've never seen contribute on this forum. I don't know you, and you certainly haven't built up any sort of credibility to come in here and start calling people ignorant or any sort of name.

The passwords are individually salted, and encrypted. It's an internet forum, not a bank. If you're doing things right then you're not reusing password so there's little risk...

If you're still that paranoid that you really think somebody's going to take the time to try to reverse engineer a salted blowfish encryption with a high algorithmic cost to recover literally zero financial or personal information but instead just a random ass password for an anonymous red pill account, I got news for you, you're not that important. But do us a favor, just don't log in. Easy as that.

Just because I didn't explain it to you doesn't make me ignorant or malicious. And if you really think malice- then think about the fact that unless you've logged into the server itself to inspect the code, anything I tell you could be a lie. I could be harvesting all these sweet sweet passwords so I can control every red pill account on my website. If only there were an easier way for me to do that.

You gotta think twice about who you're calling ignorant. Because what you've just implied here is stupid as fuck.

But as far as main functionality of the redpill forums and the future of said forums, access will remain free and the content on said forums will always remain unbiased and based on voting/content policy and will never include sponsorships. The forums themselves will exist because of generosity of the members.

Fact Vs Opinion: Why it IS Important

1 upvotes · 3 August 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

What you need to understand isn't necessarily that you're wrong, it's that there's no point in making your point on our forum. You discuss that generalizations and opinions should be prefaced with modifiers to demonstrate that they are opinions or generalizations, but what it actually does is put us in an endless race to the bottom of political correctness to modify each thing we say to appease some special interest group.

When somebody posts a generalization or opinion on TRP, the context of the locker room talk is already that we are speaking in generalizations and opinions. It doesn't need to be beaten to death with modifying language.

In fact, it's been written about before- a hundred times.

https://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/2blu7c/why_you_need_to_shut_up_and_listen_a_litmus_test/

https://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/3fd3jt/generalizations_and_truth/

Trying to modify the language here to be more correct- or politically correct is a fools errand and one we don't take kindly to here. Understanding fully that this means the language may be more imprecise, you're more than welcome to ensure your own language is as precise as need be.

But once you start policing other people's language, we have now given an inch to the political correctness monster, and given an inch, it will continue until it takes every mile we've got.

We do not allow for it even 1%, lest we allow it to take over our entire discussion.

It is already understood what is meant when somebody says "women aren't funny." It's inherently subjective. Prefacing it with "I think" gives no additional information to the reader who can easily surmise that it's an opinion. Suggesting that others do is modifying language and tone, which for our protection is against the rules. Because that's exactly how feminists get a foothold in a forum

I'm slightly discouraged that a respected member of the RP community feels this way.

You should be really fucking happy that the head moderator of RP feels this way, because otherwise you've got yourself a shitfest of a fucking useless forum instead of a place where men can talk like men without fear of being too politically incorrect. There's a reason we've grown, and it's not because we're sensitive to micro aggressions. Women aren't funny, and now we have a place to talk about it..

Too drunk to consent? You're still the rapist.

Final Warning: Keep Your Damn Morals To Yourself

1 upvotes · 25 June 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

That totally depends on the set of ethics a person have.

No, not really. If you have a set of rules that changes every day, it's not a moral system. Unless words have no meaning, in which case blitvtippy nooble.

The morality you describe sound religiously motivated, at least deontological. Others reason from principles of consequentialism, contractarianism or utilitarianism.

Of course there are many types of moral systems, it's irrelevant to my point.

Final Warning: Keep Your Damn Morals To Yourself

1 upvotes · 25 June 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

Morality as a system often mirrors what tends to be beneficial... not necessarily what's beneficial for an individual, but what benefits society (or sometimes a particular caste).

When we say sexual strategy is amoral, we're not saying that taking action is inherently moral or immoral, or is not subject to moral systems, but instead that all morality is relative and subjective based on the culture and individual's belief system (and therefore is not universal).

Our discussion of cause and effect is not affected by anybody's morals, the physics of cause and effect remain unhindered by any moral system regardless of whose belief system it is.

However, we can certainly speak of which decisions and strategies will be most effective at reaching a particular goal. We would use the term "beneficial" to describe such strategies, using the very relative and possibly changing goalpost of an individual's immediate or long term goals.

Could you consider one's goals to be a moral system of sorts? Perhaps so, but I think morality applies more to an immovable set of right and wrong ideals rather than changeable goals.

For instance, if my goal was to learn to swim for a mile, then steps I take towards that goal are beneficial, but I don't think anybody would mistake my goals or steps as a morality system.

One of the key differences is that my goal and strategy don't really apply to how I see others. Not everybody shares my goal, nor do they need to.

Whereas a morality system would suggest that I think the goals and strategies are universal, and while not everybody follows them, it would be my opinion that everybody should.

But, putting all that aside, it still does not change the fact that discussion of whether or not strategies will be beneficial towards certain goals is in itself amoral.

No hamstering needed, just some philosophy 101.

I don't believe criticizing someones morality over TRP should be immediately bannable - as long as their points are unbiased and encourage discussion, analysis, and are not a blatant personality attack.

If you make a good case for or against a behavior, just back it up with evidence.

For instance:

Don't have anal sex, it angers the gods.

is nonsense bullshit and will be deleted.

Avoid anal sex because infections will make your dick fall off.

is a point I disagree with but is nevertheless valid on the board.

Without digging too deep into it, I think we're in a time of remarkable prosperity. Men are able to make a living with very little skill and without being born into riches. Many guys are able to find mates in scenarios that men historically would not have been able to.

There was a statistic that said that we historically came from twice as many female ancestors than male. I would venture that if we narrowed the scope of that, it's gotten much closer to an equal number of men and women procreating.

I think you misunderstand why we take such a hard line on who we call "beta" men, (and I really use the term beta lightly, because it's more of a description of traits than the person).

I think the reason why a majority of us ended up on TRP (including myself) is because we were the beta men. We had these problems. We had bad behaviors. And we knew how it ended up treating us.

Our goal is to encourage growth by doing what men do- we're rough on each other to build thicker skins and train ourselves out of bad behaviors.

I think the beta-abuse gets bad press, because I'll be the first to admit the reason I'm there is my beta tendencies.

On to the false comparison you made- you've compared our discussion today of sexual strategies, to the behaviors that shaped who we are today.

The behaviors that shaped who we are today are only behaviors that eventually lead to children and the survival of children. That said, the strategy for a male may be at odds with a strategy for a female's. What we have today are two competing strategies that have ended in a strong species that has survived.

That doesn't mean those same behaviors and strategies, played out today somehow become less competitive, or desirable for different genders/people. Today, these very behaviors are being acted out, regardless of future generations (for instance, many women are on birth control).

Regardless of this, they will behave in ways consistent with the way evolution shaped us.

So yes, brush up on your understanding of evolution, and enjoy your time at /r/thebluepill or wherever it is you're going to link this discussion.

I don't care much for anybody who doesn't take the initiative and then wants to clutter my sub with their uninformed inane bullshit. It makes my job harder, and it makes the experience worse for everybody else.

If she's looking to hook a beta that will put up with the no-sex clause, she better get him on the hook. Marriage is a win/win for women. Of course women want that.

BTW, in my opinion, virginity is not an asset, it's a liability, there's nothing worse knowing your gf who was a virgin when you met, is now 'wondering' about what other guys are like in bed ... it's natural and very threatening to a male mate. It can cause some major drama which is why a girl who's had 'good sex' but not "great mindblowing sex" is preferable to me! Plus inexperience can be a turnoff, there's nothing worse than a girl who becomes a starfish in bed

This belongs in /r/thanktrp, but I'll leave it because I'm going to add my feelings on the matter.

Before TRP, I was actually pretty down and felt rather alienated by the observations I had been making. I saw people interacting and women acting like hypocritical assholes, and I thought, Jesus, I can't be the only one who sees this, can I?

But I was the only one I knew. And I began to wonder if I'd ever relate with somebody. I was mistakenly looking for a soul mate who might understand this stuff herself. That was getting me nowhere.

At the peak of my frustration with women, I googled "why are women so narcissistic?" and I stumbled across a few blogs that really resonated with me. Not too much later, I made contact with the founder of TRP and the rest is history.

What TRP has brought to my life is a sense of belonging and understanding. It's surprisingly important to have comradery and understanding. Two things missing from my life that I didn't even know I was missing. But once I found it, I realized how important it was, and what was even better, it made my outlook towards women more realistic. I no longer look for these things in a woman, and instead I can enjoy women for being what they actually are. Not what I had hoped for in a best friend.

Power shuts off mirror neurons in the brain, reducing empathy.... Women are attracted to dark triad because it correlates with power.

Spitting out the red pill..there is no going back

1 upvotes · 16 October 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Again, evo psych doesn't require outcomes, but instead predicts reward model behavior.

For instance, we get hungry and feel happy when fed. We particularly like high-calorie food. That's not a coincidence, we do it because as we evolved, food might have been hard to come by. Getting a quick amount of energy and storing it in fat was advantageous.

Video games hot wire our reward centers in ways our brains were never prepared for. They're relatively new in our evolution. But they sure as heck play off the very evolutionary drives we have as people.

For instance, before video games, people were to strive for a sense of accomplishment. Whether or not they realized it, those who accomplished more were more likely to be chosen (that's sexual selection). Many realize this, especially when their ability to have sex is less so than others. Thus game was born- to help boost one's SMV.

The reason why accomplishment is so rewarding is because we are driven as a species to do what positions us best to procreate. It's not a conscious behavior.

Nobody eats sugar thinking, "good I'll have fat stores for the winter!" They eat it because it activates pleasure.

Spitting out the red pill..there is no going back

1 upvotes · 16 October 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Just understand that not everyone feels the same as you, and while it would be fantastic to be able to just explain away our every action as biologically motivated by survival and sex, our species has gotten to a point where that isn't the case anymore.

I guess what I'm explaining is that reality stands as it does regardless of how you frame it. My suggestion is simply to understand why you frame it the way you do, not to argue whether reality exists the way it does.

We've already established that your self-improvement is decidedly SMV-based in nature. Why you decide to tell yourself anything else is a question you're going to have to answer for yourself.

This isn't a way to "explain away" behavior, it's to explain that "for myself" is a platitude, it's a way of adding a layer of abstraction on top of a base instinct and drive.

It's fine that you do it, and it certainly isn't going to hurt your outcome. But it is a layer of abstraction.

As a side note, you must understand that human psychology is based on evolutionary drives not because of their outcomes, but as a mode of operation. You don't have to procreate to have evolutionary drives.

Spitting out the red pill..there is no going back

1 upvotes · 16 October 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

I find it really difficult to agree that every man who has risen to the top of his field was really just motivated by his instinct to fuck women.

It's called sexual selection. Our wit, our drive, everything about us as a species (and all species for that matter) are intrinsically sexual. Our drive is to survive long enough to procreate (natural selection), and to compete with others to mate (sexual selection).

If it wasn't, we simply wouldn't exist.

I recognize that as a personal choice you can decide what you want to do with your life, and some choose to go their own way. But again, there's a distinct reason your chosen self-improvement goals just happen to give you higher SMV. Doesn't matter how you rationalize it.

It's of my opinion that rationalizing puts you at a disadvantage. Recognize who you are, what you do, and why you do it. No sense in lying to yourself.

Evolutionary drive isn't necessarily something people are cognizant of, but that doesn't change its features.

Spitting out the red pill..there is no going back

1 upvotes · 16 October 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

But that's because almost every productive, character-building, worthwhile activity a man can engage in increases his SMV.

That's my point- there's a reason you choose SMV building activities over non SMV-building activities. (such as playing video games).

You're not doing it for yourself, you're doing it specifically to boost SMV. Telling yourself that it's just merely self improvement for self improvement's sake is clearly a lie, as you've mentioned you avoid non SMV building activities. It's a lie that you can use to avoid failure. Because if you don't admit you're doing it to get laid, then you don't have to feel bad when you don't get laid.

Every man who seeks power, riches, fame, inevitably is following their instinctual drive to position themselves in the best scenario to provide for themselves and their offspring.

Some may choose not to create offspring, but the evolutionary drive is still there.

Spitting out the red pill..there is no going back

1 upvotes · 16 October 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

The fact of the matter is, the majority of my time spent on this subreddit is to break out of the complacency and laziness of my former years and learn how to motivate myself to becoming the best, healthiest, strongest, socially and mentally intelligent human being I can be.

Good on you for having that drive. Just don't pretend that these aren't the particular characteristics that increase your SMV.

Listen, I can rationalize that I could eat McDonalds for lunch because I want to and I deserve to be happy. But I'd be lying to myself if I claim it won't make me fat.

Spitting out the red pill..there is no going back

1 upvotes · 16 October 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

I think you missed the point he was making. Why is one activity inherently "improvement" unless it leads to a goal?

For instance, I really enjoy video games, and if I practice, I can get faster and better. I could improve my reaction times and be very happy with my outcomes. Why isn't this self improvement?

The point I think he was making is that the desire to mate is intrinsically linked to our being evolutionarily. The qualities we usually call self-improvement when improving them are not coincidentally ones that women are attracted to.

Simply doing things that make yourself happy will not inherently attract women.

So you can hamster it any which way you'd like. I, for one, rather not sugar coat it and rationalize to myself. I like sex, I like getting laid, and I like doing the things that help me get there.

My goals have the potential for failure. Yours don't. If you don't have a way to fail, you don't have to feel bad when you fail. You were just "doing it for you."

1 upvotes · 14 October 2014 · /r/askTRP

Indeed. Anything short of this advice is a half-measure at best. The writing is already on the wall. Anything short of this is just rationalizing that you can negotiate attraction. Something OP has already lost.

You might... might... regain control by plating her and gaming other girls (dread), but I wouldn't count on it. The reason you start gaming other girls is because you're going to need to be ready to walk. Because it's already over.

beating one's self into the shape of an "alpha male" is a sucker's fight.

For some, the benefit is the satisfaction of discipline, while for others, the satisfaction is simply getting laid for the first time.

The pursuit of "alpha" is not an end game or a goal, but instead a philosophy and mindset. Obviously it is nebulous and therefore not necessarily objectively defined as any one thing. But when you understand the point that we're getting at, you understand we're using the word to convey an idea and mindset, not a specific person.

Many people here disagree on the pros-and-cons of beta behaviors as well. It's not a law of physics here, just opinions on personal philosophy.

All I'm saying is that some of us play checkers and some of us chess, and even among them we do not all play the same way. Better, perhaps, to not dictate what masculinity is, or to project one's interpretation of another's words, especially when there is no given context. Principles are not intrinsically zeal, and zealots are not inherently principled.

LTR is creep shaming me

1 upvotes · 19 August 2014 · /r/askTRP

I agree that it's a shitty precedent to set, but OP didn't really set himself up much plausible deniability. It is a little creepy to just randomly add her friends on facebook if he doesn't really know them.

When we talk about passing shit-tests, we're usually talking about unprovoked, random, irrational tests. This is a case where OP did something that's questionable that has few plausible excuses, so trying to pass the test still leaves a weird question in mind: Why did he do it?

He could try your line- which might work. That might be the line I'd use too. I'd absolutely use it on a plate. But in a LTR, you do need to embrace some amount of cooperation and build some comfort or it won't work. Dread is supposed to be a subtle hint that you could fuck anybody... not a bunch of huge clues that you're trying to.

Frankly, I have a hard time thinking through this one, because it was kind of a stupid move in the first place. If you're doing things right you wouldn't be in this position. Most of the time, once you meet your girl's friends, they'll add you anyway.

Let me use Whisper's definition of troll to explain:

Basically, someone who assumes you are sane, tries to understand your argument in the most compelling interpretation he can, and then tries to refute it, is a debater.

Someone who assumes you are insane, or tries to find weak interpretations of your arguments that will be easy to refute, or reifies metaphors, is a troll.

1 upvotes · 2 August 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

TRP is not a philosophy. It's a venue for discussing sexual strategy. It just so happens that our strategy frequently crosses over into philosophy and how to present yourself.

The information provided here simply leads many people to alter their philosophies based on new information they previously did not have proper access to.

Stoicism is - I believe - the most rational school of philosophy to subscribe to once you've swallowed the pill. It's avoiding the so-called "passions", which are primarily anger, envy and jealousy. TRP knows this as "holding frame". It's also about self-improvement by aspiring to the virtues - wisdom, courage, temperance and justice.

- New Zealand and Australian women seem more laid-back and less chomping at the bit to shit test/annoy people with bad attitudes.

I fucked up...

1 upvotes · 15 July 2014 · /r/RedPillWomen

Well, the factors for me were many-

1. I live in a sellers' market, with as few as 1:10 ratio in most public places. Due to this, most guys are striking out, and night/day game becomes a burden.
2. After my last batch of plates concluded, I didn't have the energy to replace them. (last summer I had 3 plates).
3. I wanted to experiment and see what maintaining an LTR would be like.

Ultimately, my experience thus far has been mixed. While I am learning the steps to maintain a LTR, I'm not sure it's more fulfilling, at least not with the woman I'm with. While there are some perks to a long term relationship, I'm finding her american entitled attitude may very well get the best of us. She tends to get ornery and demanding. When she gets in a bad mood she expects others to put up with it. It's really nothing new- this is what I'm used to- but usually I just plate that shit.

No, I haven't met a woman I consider to be high enough quality to marry (not that I would). It's simpl:, just a dash of personal responsibility, and perhaps taking a teaspoon of understanding that one is in control of one's own actions- that would be great. But that's not what I get with american branded women.

I fucked up...

1 upvotes · 15 July 2014 · /r/RedPillWomen

No offense taken. And take a good look at it, because it's true. And worse yet- it's true because women as a group have destroyed the benefits to relationships, and have decided to shirk their gender roles.

Consider for a second how many of these poor guys who end up on TRP who just wanted to settle down with a nice wife and start a family, like his parents, and their parents. Consider this guy's shock when he realizes he can't get that any more- and that women become indignant in the face of these gender roles. That a woman could, let alone should want to satisfy a man is so foreign to women now...

These guys wanted what post-wall women want: a relationship.

But feminism and the matriarchy let you all down. It let us all down. Because when women shunned their gender roles- so did men. And it wasn't that men started being the stay-at-home moms. Instead, what feminists didn't realize was that the gender role men would break was being a provider in the first place. Men are going their own way.

I know it sounds disparaging when I say this, but basically women priced themselves out of the market, and nobody wants in on it. Men willing to settle down are now at a shortage. Men at TRP are learning very quickly- either you keep the upper hand (refuse to commit), or you will lose your hands altogether (and your house, your children, your dog, and your things..)

It's a rough situation right now.

Can we put something in the sidebar to explain how we're not even remotely related to the red pill?

1 upvotes · 5 June 2014 · /r/MensRights

You clearly don't understand sexual dimorphism. Men and women have literally different chromosomes allowing for them to have different characteristics, and sexual preferences (men prefer women, women prefer men-- pretty stark difference). Now I'm not to say that I think heterosexuality is innate or learned, because frankly I don't know.

But I do know that sexual selection exists, and it does select for traits that are best able to attract a mate. And that does make changes over time.

So we know that women prefer to mate with men more often than not.. and we know that's innate...

What exactly are you denying here? That this could possibly be genetic?

Doing it for yourself, the pervasive hamster

1 upvotes · 21 April 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Obviously, at the end of the day, you decide your goals and work towards them. Only you will know if you set your goals according to your needs and desires, or tried to subvert your needs and desires by setting contradictory goals to your biological programming...

But if you limit your ability to reach your goals because of an imposed morality, the questions you need to ask yourself are:

1. Who designed this morality?
2. Who benefits from this morality?
3. When other people succeed at my goals by breaking this morality, how do I benefit?
4. Can I succeed with this morality?
5. If only the people who break the morality succeed at these goals, are my goals wrong, or is my version of morality?

If you are the sole arbiter of your morality, why would your morality stand in the way of your goals? (Or more aptly, why would you allow your morality to impede your progress on self-set goals?)

If your goals can only be accomplished by other people breaking your morality, then ask yourself, why would your goals be wrong if you're the sole arbiter of your goals?

Eventually something has to give. Most people question the goals when they find something too hard.

Maybe climbing a cliff is too hard for you, so you change your goals to a small mole hill. But if you ever want to climb that cliff, you should really wonder why one of your values is "don't use rope."

A good portion of culturally acceptable moral values shoot yourself in the foot. "Don't date younger women, it's wrong." Who is that benefiting?

When mod capabilities were used, we were accused of having Red Pill bias (and blue). We've tried moderating like that before. It just pisses everyone off. We can't mod like you do, or we wouldn't have a sub.

The difference being, those blue pillers complaining the loudest were trolls, as evidenced by their participation on /r/thebluepill, doing things just for the lulz, whereas the red pillers genuinely have a set of ideas they wish to discuss. We didn't make a sub dedicated to mocking people, we made a sub dedicated to discussion of the very subject you guys decided to debate. If anybody had an interest in a debate happening honestly, it was the red pillers.

The blue pillers took advantage of the moderation team's "impartiality."

People accuse me of censoring and banning dissent. What they don't see behind the curtains is that we ban trolls who come in under the guise of plausible deniability ("I'm not here to troll, I just think you guys are misogynistic for..."). They knew the rules going in, and got banned for it.

People will always retell their version of the story in a slanted manner. "All I did was ask a simple question and got banned!"

If dissent or disagreement got you banned, you wouldn't be here now!

I realize that trying to appear impartial is important to a debate sub, but haters gonna hate, and bending over to appease them is one of the weak links trolls take advantage of. It's one of the oldest tricks in the book.

I've had it done to me after a fight, she gave me an ultimatum- I did the classic walk away freezeout. Of course, when I walked, she chased me afterwards. But this is an alternate shit test- she isn't testing my man-meddle, she's testing my resolve to blindly commit so she can do her thing. "Why did you give up so easily? I wanted you to fight for me.."

This isn't false- you're just reading it half way.

See, protein intake isn't a problem in the first world- you won't find yourself with too little protein. Your body produces (and requires) far less glucose through gluconeogenesis than it gets when you eat carbs.

I'm not arguing that ketones are the end all be all, but what I am saying is that adapting to ketones allows you to go longer without food (which means you're less likely to overeat), and keeps you from running out of energy when you've got low blood sugar. That's how our ancestors did hunts for weeks with little food!

Anybody who has to carb up before workouts or they run out of energy has got to try ketosis for a month. I've improved all my running speeds and continued my normal gains at the gym.

Being addicted to carbs is a problem. If you eat properly you won't slow your gains by cutting carbs. I've seen how some of my friends shovel in carbs for "energy" and I promise you they're layering on fat with that muscle.

Literally speaking, carbs contribute nothing to muscle building aside from energy, which if you take too much will end up storing as fat, and can be gotten through ketones if you take the time to adapt.

That's not the reason. At all. It's creepy because it creeps girls out.

Instead of refuting my points, you just go with the tautology- "it's creepy because I say it's creepy!"

As an aside, you can really go fuck yourself for claiming otherwise.

Ah, yes, fuck me for correcting your ignorance on the subject.

Look, the rhetoric TRP espouses is based in the paradigm of "my sexual strategy vs. hers" and it sees women as "targets."

See, here you are getting stuck on this again. What on earth are you going on about? We see women as people we enjoy having relationships and sex with. If love is a gun, then consider them targets... but you must understand that everybody has a sexual strategy whether it's conscious one or not. Just because we've talked about it out loud doesn't mean it's unique or wrong. Women have a strategy that maximizes rejections, men have a strategy that maximizes approaches. It's not an option, last time I checked, to just say, women your sexual strategy is irrelevant, you are no longer allowed to reject people, now have sex with me because trousertorpedo says so. You don't like the word strategy, I get it. That makes zero difference in reality. Welcome to it, buddy.

This casts women as opponents.

You are projecting. They are no more opponents in mating than my best friend is my opponent when we play chess. The game itself has moves, maneuvers and jousts. That doesn't mean I hate him, no matter who wins. I think you might need to take a deep breath and realize your interpretation of this stuff is plainly wrong before you start accusing oh wait..

You are creating a psychopathic response in your brain. That is terrifying.

You're nuts.

Becoming better with women is fine. Practising to do it is fine.

I'm glad we agree.

The kind of shit you see on [/r/theredpill\[2\]](#) is based in analytical socialising and forced behaviours which subcommunicate some very "creepy" things.

I have yet to see you refute a single point in my description above so I have to assume you either don't have a point here, or you're just stupid.

Feminists tearing down posters advertising Thursday's talk by Girlwriteswhat

Game as creepy is your conclusion, which rides on the presuppositions of manipulation and whatever else you've said above.

I would have to detail how all human interaction exists as a form to communicate, overtly and covertly information, with specific intents whether conscious or something unconscious for you to grasp why these particular interactions are not manipulation per se- as in, not inherent to game interaction.

Game it the concept of intentional communication as opposed to unintentional. For instance, if I am unaware of my communication, I might slouch and tell a girl that I really like her within minutes of meeting her- I may not realize but I have covertly communicated a number of things that she may not realize she picked up.

You use the term creepy to denote something you disapprove of, but if you were to use the term properly, you could say that the actual creep is somebody who displays attraction to somebody who does not reciprocate those feelings.

How would you modify this behavior? Well, first of all, slouching seems like a poor choice, it displays a lack of confidence and makes you appear meek or shorter. Recommend not covertly communicating this by not slouching. Now over-ambitious-feeling-sharing may not seem like a terrible thing, but when you communicate with somebody strong desire to commit to somebody as soon as they give you attention, it covertly communicates that this person is desperate or has no options. You may not like what this implies, but it's obvious that women don't like desperate men. If women don't like desperate men, it stands to reason that you want to display traits that don't make you appear desperate. But how does one appear confident and not desperate if they are actually both not confident and desperate?

You analyze exactly what communication covertly and overtly communicates these things and you train yourself not to use them. For better or worse, your choices of how and what you communicate affect how people feel and think about you. So you do what a prudent man would do, you learn to master your communication skills and become intentional.

Now some guys are naturally confident and are not desperate, I'd argue this often comes from having a long lifetime of experiences that build confidence- but not every guy has that to build off of. Or worse- some guys lose their confidence after a bad breakup or divorce.

So what do they do? They have to learn to get back on the horse and learn how to be attractive to women. Build muscle and be intentional on what information you want to convey when communicating.

Now, this is a simple beginners building block on explaining to you what game is, and trust me when I say, if you jump ahead and try to lead with more conclusions, you'll wind up just as confused as you were here. There are some advanced ideas and concepts but they all build off this notion. Ultimately, they all work on these principles.

I have already but if you want to be super-alpha and never let up, I can explain again here.

We've already established you're an asshat, you should drop the insults if you are really open minded enough.

Except, we have not agreed on the foundation you have presupposed, and I have attempted to correct you, but you refuse to listen, and instead employ shame. Of course nobody will listen to your conclusions when you have such faulty logic.

My ideology tries to connect with men who feel disenfranchised, unlike your tirade here. Imagine how many friends I'd make if I just started calling all guys creeps for trying to get better at sex and relationships. I bet they'd feel great. These guys are loveless or recently divorced, just looking for an identity in a world that isn't giving them one. But male casualties are fine by you, so long as we protect the women from the terrible creeps! How white knightish of you.

You know what's destructive? A culture that is so anti-male, that men are thirsty for any simple advice just to relate to women. And with white knights like you so desperate to protect women, that you actually rally against guys being guys... you can imagine why they went to the red pill for help instead of you. Hear that? If you truly think the red pill is destructive, you're pushing men towards it, not away. For heaven's sake... creep shaming? Please.

But that wouldn't cross your mind while you're too busy placing us into a little box that you can neatly store in your mind next to "things I feel superior to." Who cares if you haven't taken the time to understand it properly? You feel good about yourself, and gosh that's important.

Until you demonstrate that you're willing to see our perspective long enough to realize your entire argument is that you naively take offense to our words, there will be no discussion with you. Just you continuously making assertions with no proof, and incorrectly interpreting our strategy as something it isn't.

The term hate implies that the alleged perpetrator of the hate strongly dislikes somebody or some group. This means that by definition, if someone were to say "I don't hate" or "I love," this would be sufficient to disprove hatred, as only the owner of said feelings could be the authority on their own feelings and state of their hearts.

For example, I eat meat, which means I am ok with killing cows for my sustenance. This does not mean I hate cows, but I assure you if cows had a support group they would likely call meat eaters haters.

Edit: Now obviously the cow example is crude, since my gain is their loss. In the context of discussing sexual strategy, my hope would be that a successful pairing between a man and a woman would be equally positive for both. The only perceived negative is that a group of people may not like being critiqued on their strategies. I personally believe that if somebody does not like a critique of a particular strategy, they do have the free will to change their strategy, or ignore the critique. No hate implied.

1 upvotes · 23 January 2014 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I don't care for them one way or another, but I do find some very similar argument tactics which is why I tend to lump them together.

For instance, passive-aggressive arguments, I see this a lot on here:

BP: Did you rape and kill an 18 year old woman in 1996?

Me: That's absurd.

BP: You have to explain yourself, you can't just dismiss this.

Me: It's a wild accusation, and there's no need to address it.

BP: The fact that you're unwilling to entertain our question means you're being slippery, evasive, and probably did rape and kill a girl, which we will believe until you prove otherwise.

Me: Why are you guys so obsessed with this? I've never done that and that's a wild accusation.

BP: It's not an accusation, it was a simple question. All you had to do was say no. Why do you assume it's an accusation??

See there's two arguments happening here, and I've been studying this for a while on here. There's the one of inference which is a battle of popular opinion. If somebody can make the debate take place and make somebody have to deny an accusation, you can make the accusation stick without proof or need of evidence. And when called on it, you can passive-aggressively hide behind plausibility. I never accused him of anything. I was merely asking a question.

The second argument is the very text, in which I address both the text of the argument, but the spirit of the meta debate. And this, of course, leaves me vulnerable to such attacks as "he's evasive and frustrating because he jumps around and addresses things I didn't say! For instance, I never accused him of raping and killing an 18 year old! I don't know why he's so defensive!"

Now, I don't really care one way or another, I find this battle of the debate styles to be infinitely interesting- so please don't get the idea that I'm sitting here sad that the accusations took place. But, I am curious to see if I can break through to the other side with reason.

My question remains- was the person in my screenshot being fair on PPD? For instance, he never made an accusation, he simply had questions...

Is this attitude appropriate on PPD?

1 upvotes · 23 January 2014 · /r/PurplePillDebate

That is exactly not what I said, and why you can be so frustrating to speak to. Where did I say that all you do is circlejerk? I'd honestly like to know where you read that in my post.

You provide some interesting input and viewpoints at times, and then the next post you're making a circlejerky comment or condescendingly telling people that they don't know what they're talking about.

This would suggest at least 50% of my posts are circle jerks.

No, this is an unfair assessment. Of course I will address the points you made, you can't now complain that makes me frustrating to deal with- that's another unfair assessment. Should I just let your assertion go unchallenged if I disagree, lest I be labeled more frustrating?

So let people waste their time, what does it matter to you? That sub is not this one, if someone demonstrates here a willingness to debate you, debate them. If they're being hostile, report it.

Where on earth did I say it matters? You suggested I had disdain, and I corrected you with my opinion.

Imagine you had a guy who got rich because he won the lottery or maybe inherited some money. Or maybe he was at the right place at the right time and just got a well paying job that he wasn't overly qualified for.

The red pill is men who are not that, who haven't had these experiences, and can relate to the pain of not getting what they want.

Because at the end of the day, they know pain, they know struggle, they know desolation and scarcity in the sexual marketplace. Just because you haven't experienced it doesn't mean the effects aren't real, and that the causes can't be known. And just because you're not personally experiencing the downsides, doesn't mean our analysis of the causes are wrong, only that there are a lot of market variables to consider. That's not evading description, it's attempting to describe. It's looking at the world around us and trying to understand and synthesize reasonable models.

"if it's legal then it's not rape", which was verbatim from your remarks.

This is wholly untrue. I said that the law's definition of consent defines rape as a crime. In other words, if the law defines consent as two people agreeing to have sex for 5 minutes, and two people have sex for 5 minutes, it was consensual whether or not the woman changes her mind afterwards. Likewise, if two people have drunk sex that was supposedly consensual, the law may state this is rape because of its definition of consent. THE LAW DEFINES CRIMINAL RAPE.

The problem everybody got up in arms about is that they thought, well what if president satan changed the law to say all unwelcome sex is legal now!??

As if the discussion of the law was my wholesale endorsement of any law no matter how ridiculous towards sex and rape. Fucking absurd. They were looking for a witch to burn, and when holding a torch, everything looks like rape to a blue piller.

It's not ridiculous at all. My experience has been that just about every woman I've dated expected men to pay for dates.

It's quite intuitive to think that somebody who demands a higher price in the sexual market will utilize all her options available to her, and put up as many hurdles as she sees fit. Maybe this guy won't pay, but that's ok, there's a hundred drooling guys who will.

As with most things in the sexual market, the expectation to be payed for is relative with relative sexual market values. For instance, a hot woman may consider herself high enough value to demand the most ridiculous things- but the guy who comes along and refuses and keeps frame may be able to demonstrate a higher value. In other words, the expectation to be payed for is a shit test for alphas, or a qualifier while shopping for a provider.

This discussion, frankly, has nothing to do with rape, I don't know why you brought it up.

The male counter-part to sperm-jacking in order to make a baby would be a man raping a woman to make a baby. Even if he didn't do it forcibly (secretly turkey basting her while she sleeps) I think you'd still rightly call that rape.

that this is something primarily done to men by women, is incomplete and dishonest.

It's something that is legal for women to do, and not for men. Therefore, it is definitely a men's issue. Not only does it happen to men more than women, there is only a legal system in place to protect women against it.

Reproductive coercion is not legally actionable for either gender, I would be interested in seeing if you could demonstrate otherwise.

You better get an abortion or I'm going to "xyz." If that xyz is a threat of force, that's right there's illegal. If the threat is "I'm going to leave you" that's not coercion.

I don't usually do same-night bangs a la roosh. I day game, get numbers, get drinks, then bang. I attempt to get them into the rotating harem, which I try to keep at least 3 plates spinning.

At least where I live, night game is terrible, and I think takes 300% more effort because you have a higher flake rate if you don't bang in the bathroom within minutes. Fuck that shit, I'm getting too old for clubs.

1 upvotes · 20 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Are you comparing the ease of access women have to sex with the access men have because men can just hire prostitutes? Even a $10 hooker is $10 harder to get than free sex with somebody who wants to fuck you.

Getting laid isnt all that hard.

The point is that, no, a prostitute does not substitute for a mate that wants to have sex with you.

Are you attracting mates at an acceptable rate?

Question for the Blue Pill

1 upvotes · 20 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Umm...you can make predictions off of probabilities, that's why they are predictions not certainties.

I think you get what I mean. Nobody thinks women are just robots and if you push three buttons soda comes out. But it's likely if I go up to women and tell them they're ugly, most will be offended.

In regards to the self-fulfilling prophecies I am more referring to the negative assumptions of women held by TRP, such as the women are children idea. You treat someone like a child and they are going to act like one. And I'm assuming redpillers don't actually want women to act like children, so that's why I am saying be careful with it.

I think this doesn't take into account that red pill theory is what we apply after trying other things. We compare results now to our old way of life. Women were already acting like children, only now we've got a way to understand it.

Question for the Blue Pill

1 upvotes · 20 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

You can have guidelines on social interaction but you need to be ready to behave differently when a person behaves differently than you predicted

This is called calibration. Nothing is predicted, we're just going into situations with strategies that are probabilistic, as in, more likely than not this will work.

But you also need to be careful of self fulfilling prophecies and confirmation bias.

If our self-fulfilling prophecy is "this will get me laid more" and it worked, then I'd say it's a pretty decent strategy.

If our strategies aren't working, then .. abandon them.

I suppose I could gain a confirmation bias and say, "every time I pick my nose, girls have sex with me," and heck, if it's true, it doesn't really matter to me that it was in spite of picking my nose.

Question for the Blue Pill

1 upvotes · 20 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

So, you understand that it isn't circular reasoning? That's a great way to concede, don't bother mentioning it at all!

But like I said, "aloofness" is supposed to be alpha too, a term that so broad it can encompass both aloofness and outgoingness is not a predictively useful term.

It's been explained a number of times. Certain traits may boost or detract from attractiveness. Some are contradictory, you can have two very different people exhibit very different or mutually exclusive alpha traits.

You cant build a falsifiable hypothesis off that.

We can, but it's not precise. But that's ok, because it doesn't need to be all that precise, it's only used to try to emulate or adapt attractive traits. But here's a simple one: does stabbing women make you attractive to them? Yes or no? Well, if I run at women with a knife I think we can say 10/10 will be turned off by it.

John Gottman's relationship research, and the inefficacy of "dread game"

1 upvotes · 20 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

If dread game simply means going to the gym more, then it is stupid to call it 'dread game.'

Well, you're entitled to your opinion, but yes, even this is dread game.

If dread game means what it is usually held to mean

Usually? You've demonstrated here that you have absolutely no understanding of dread game, so how on earth could you even possibly suggest you know how it's commonly used? You are clearly not an authority on the topic.

withholding attention

No, and...

and implying to your partner that you'd be able to get someone else

Becoming attractive enough to have options signals two things: 1. That you're more attractive and may appeal to her senses, and 2. That she may now consider life without you which can boost attraction if she realizes it's not a good life. This is not an overt communication and can be achieved with something as simple as going to the gym or dieting. It's that simple.

then it matches exactly what Gottman describes

So, in other words, not at all.

Read the studies, if you think I'm reading him wrong.

I think you've got the studies right, I just think you're trying to put a square peg in a round hole. What he describes is not dread game. It may be dreadful, but I would agree the antisocial behavior would be ineffective at boosting attraction.

John Gottman's relationship research, and the inefficacy of "dread game"

1 upvotes · 20 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Gottman's studies show that, using his methodologies, that's how the behaviors you've described would be coded.

His descriptions and your descriptions do not match dread game in any way. I feel like you're just brute-forcing this and ignoring my points here.

But if your response to an unhappy partner is to ignore the partner's verbalized concerns and start trying to improve your ability to find another mater, that suggests a broader dynamic in which the partner's expressed concerns remain unaddressed and the partner is left to feel more anxious about the relationship -- i.e., dread game.

It's not an actual attempt at getting a new partner, it's an attempt at rekindling your flame with your current partner.

Withdrawal is defined as a partner who responds to conflict by not engaging with the partner or addressing the subject of the conflict. How does this not apply here?

- Dread game is not a situation-based conflict resolution method. It is used to improve attraction in a relationship where attraction is being lost.
- This does not presuppose agreeing to take out the trash if you have an argument about it. This is only for addressing broad-spectrum loss of attraction.
- My point was not to ignore the other person's complaints as though they're invalid- it's to understand that their complaints are a symptom of a loss of attraction and you cannot renegotiate attraction by addressing their complaints. You cannot just start taking out the trash more in return for the love you lost. You either improve attraction the natural way, or brace for impact.

Question for the Blue Pill

1 upvotes · 20 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

This is not begging the question at all. There is a mechanism by which we determine what is and isn't: what traits gets you laid.

You could replace it with "totally radical guy-ness" and it would be no more or less coherent.

Just because you don't think certain traits can contribute to attractiveness to women doesn't make it incoherent.

Imagine two guys who walk into a bar, one is loud and obnoxious and turns women off with his dumbass personality. The other is cool and quiet and women are turned on by his manly stoicism/aloof game/mystery. Who is the alpha?

I think you can answer the question yourself: who gets more sex?

edit: I really do want to address this, it's not the first misuse of begging the question or tautology I've seen referring to alpha. You're really misusing the term. If I said: Alpha traits are traits attractive to women. And you asked, "why?" and I said "because they're what gets men laid." That's a tautology. In this context, we are not suggesting to even know why certain traits are more attractive than others, only that we observe them to be so and have labeled them for ease of communication.

Divorce law- the common arrival of no fault divorce meant that women could divorce men without any reason at all and still get alimony, where previously there was a small set of conditions that allowed women to collect alimony (including but not limited to if there was evidence he was cheating).

So now, they can divorce if they're just not entirely happy and still get a paycheck. Actually incentivizes divorce instead of incentivizes marriages to stick with it.

I think the more likely scenario is that it actually makes us more successful with women, and for some reason.. you don't like the idea of men realizing their own potential in the sexual marketplace. It just doesn't seem right to you when men are empowered.

If you suppose that the blue pill is advancing the claim "the red pill is wrong" and refuse to define what that is you're asking TBP to prove a negative, which is of course impossible.

This entire sub is built around proving the red pill wrong- since the red pill already exists to discuss why it's right.

Blue pillers are invested in this because they believe the red pill is wrong.

I'm not asking anybody to prove a negative. I'm saying, if we're wrong, what specifically have we said that's wrong? And for the most part, the answers are pedantic, never broach the meat of the red pill, and often include "well you never explained your entire theory with us so we don't know." Knowing what you disagree with should preclude you saying we're wrong.

Logical Fallacies in the TRP Sidebar: Part 1

1 upvotes · 5 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I think for there to be a fair and honest debate here, people should drop the pedantic tone, like the whole "women aren't really children" line and "feminism isn't a sexual strategy according to the dictionary..."

I think it's disingenuous to make these arguments, because they misrepresent exactly what we're getting at. Obviously we don't think women are literally children, and feminists wouldn't say they're doing this for sex. The point is realizing the context of our conversation- that we're looking at things from a sexual strategy standpoint and interpreting what effect they have on this.

There are some good arguments to be made one way or another- and none of them are literal interpretations of our views.

Interesting interaction with the feminine imperative while out with a date...

1 upvotes · 1 November 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I mentioned that I believe there to be an unconscious strategy. The feminine imperative, as you will learn on the side bar, is not one in which women gather together and have secret meetings to conspire against men. But it, in itself, is a viable component to sexual strategy for the species and specifically women.

Obviously she's domineering. Obviously she put her nose where it doesn't belong. These are incredibly superficial observations. I was hoping for a deeper analysis on the implications of such behavior. This is a subtlety apparently lost on you.

I was with a group of friends a few weeks ago. One of the girls got way way way too drunk while we were pregaming, and she was so wasted they didn't even serve her for an hour when we got to the bars. Eventually we made our way back- stayed in the group the entire night. The next day she claims she must've been roofied because she swears she's never gotten that blackout drunk.

Her description of the night is missing a good hour before we started drinking.

She wasn't roofied, she was with us the entire evening.

Imagine if we hadn't kept tabs on her, who would be getting the rape accusation because she doesn't remember last night. It's a good thing it was a group of friends, and not just one of us, she probably would've accused one of us of something!

You said that trusting pop psychology is like confusing the work of these two scientists. Upon further inspection we see you devalue Bill Nye's work because he has a television show. When confronted with the fact that both have shows, you mistakenly assume that Bill Nye's entire career is on television. Believe it or not he's a very credible scientist, which is precisely why nobody here is taking you seriously when you claim to have any knowledge as to the authenticity of sources.

So "blue pill" literally means "so successful with personal relationships you cannot fathom how people could be unsuccessful"? Have I misunderstood or is this an admission that blue pillers are more successful?

This is not a personal attack, this is point blank- if you read my comment then you are clearly intentionally misrepresenting my point and doing it in a very rude snarky manner.

If the mods decide my post was inappropriate for addressing your absolute left field comment that 100% misrepresents my point, then I'd argue that your misrepresentation itself is a personal attack and should likewise be removed.

First of all, sometimes you won't get it on the first try. It happens.

The goal to overcoming last minute resistance is put her slut alarm to rest. It's clear by her text the next day "i don't do sleeping around" that it was on full alert.

She's nearing the wall and knows she needs to lock something down asap. So her anti-slut defense is on maximum. In her head, she's looking for somebody to value her because she doesn't want more pump and dumps. Of course, in her head she rationalizes it as "moving on" from immature assholes that she used to date, and now she has a more refined taste in men. In reality, she's just hitting the wall.

The correct response to "I don't do sleeping around" is "Good, I like that. Dinner tomorrow?"

Don't mistake anti-slut defense as a shit test. She wants to feel validated, and in this area, you gotta do it if you're going to get access.

Keep treating shit tests the way you would, but put her at ease if her anti-slut alarm goes off again.

Once she feels more comfortable that she's not being a slut, she can rationalize away any sex she has with you as earnestly attempting to find this new refined type of man, while simultaneously curing the itch she has for some quick dirty alpha fucking cock.

Edit: Source: I find women nearing the wall or that have kids have heightened anti-slut defenses because in all likelihood they are trying to lock somebody down.

I think that the effects we complain the most about were not intentional, but instead incidental side effects that would naturally surface because of biological imperatives. (greed).

That is to say, anybody who can gain power will abuse it. People can seek power with the purest of intentions, it makes no suggestion what they might do once they get it.

men are not acting afraid to express their sexuality. Both my friends being frank about sexual stuff and random guys making suggestive comments to me on the street, leads me to believe that a good number of men are not at all shy about that. At least not in the way that women are expected to be. I am sure some guys are shy about sex (because everyone is different) but I think that comes from their personality (being a more private person) or a desire to not be like those creepy guys who proposition people and taking it too far in the other direction. I would argue that the guy who can't get a date in the way that we are discussing has more to do with expressing their sexuality (or at least desire for sex) too much, to the point of making anyone they are talking to uncomfortable.

I'm sorry if you thought I meant all men act this way. I don't. I project my sexuality.

This guy does not, which is why I recommend he does. Hiding it behind plausibly deniability of friendship isn't going to help him build that confidence.

It's possible you've never been a man trying to meet a woman, but I'll tell you something about it. It's not easy. You can approach 10 people. Maybe 20 people. Sometimes 100 people. Roosh suggests you approach 100 before thinking about giving up.

Do you know why?

Because guys experience rejection. A lot. A lot a lot. I have a lot of success with women, and I can say in the past month alone I've been rejected at least 30 times.

The reason TRP encourages the idea that women are plentiful and disposable is because if you don't, you will lose all confidence in a matter of minutes. You have to detach from dating or you'll get your soul crushed. It's a terrible experience. It's debilitating. It's so bad, that there's an entire industry dedicated to helping guys get through it. It's god awful. I don't know how I can describe just how terrible it is.

This doesn't preclude that women are people. It certainly does not deny women's agency, so the conclusion that this treats women as objects is incorrect.

Women do date who they're attracted to, and not who they aren't. It's not going to be easier if you pretend that's false.

You know the term "friendzone" that people like to pretend doesn't exist? Starting as friends is a great way for a guy who is socially awkward to get himself stuck there.

This is a bad thing but not really relevant to the current discussion.

It is relevant, because my point was that women tend to project their sexuality. I'm not saying there isn't some traditionalist shame across the board, but every time I go out Friday night, I see girls wearing skimpy dresses and makeup. If I stare for too long, a bouncer kicks me out. One of us takes a social risk expressing their sexuality.

You really miss the point. It's not directed at them. Nobody's calling up women and saying "hey you're bad because you're a slut."

We're analyzing what worth they are to us. Sluts are not attractive to us, and we've every right not to be attracted to it.

I also find the TRP talking points about SMV (sexual market value) to be utterly absurd (i.e. the result of bad analysis used to justify the holding of misogynistic views).

In this context, you're defining misogyny to be things you disagree with? Because having a desire for hot women is hardly hatred.

The sexual market is easy to demonstrate. For instance, why is nobody surprised that this girl:

There is nothing more frustrating than realizing you have a problem and asking for advice where somebody tells you that having the problem is the reason for it.

I believe that people can make conscious decisions on how to act. The nebulous fear that somehow your feelings will always come across in how you interact with others completely precludes the ability to overcome the feelings- which requires successful interactions!

I'm sure it wasn't intentional, but this is really makes things harder to hear.

I agree with Rollo Tomassi's writing 100%. I obviously agree with my own writing. There are some brilliant points in the book "the manipulated man" but it's chock full of hyperbole, so you take it with a grain of salt.

"Sexual Utopia in Power" is an important read because he really nails the cultural power struggle and change. His "solutions" are hypothetical and regressive, but I think he does so to prove a point. He uses hyperbole to prove a point, and I think the general outlay of that one is pretty obvious to most men. I don't really care how women interpret it.

The no ma'am article about women being teenagers is clearly hyperbole to address an important aspect of male/female relationships. It's obviously not factual, nor scientific, yet it does reflect a lot of our experiences with women, especially for the married folks on our board. It's more of a mindset piece- to put guys into a better frame to handle interpersonal relationships. The guys who discuss it seem to grok this. Others see it and take it literally. That's not something I care to "fix," it's working as intended.

1 upvotes · 16 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

You are still missing my point. I see nothing morally wrong if both parties knowingly enter into a contract of perpetual consent. The legal definition of consent is important because it would define what actions you took.

For instance, if the legal definition of marriage included perpetual consent, I would expect people who don't like that idea to avoid marriage.

I think that any country that does not have a clearly defined way to decline consent is unjust, and that would be a totally different discussion.

If you would stop suggesting that characterization is a misrepresentation and then repeating it every time the topic comes up, there would be fewer headaches related to it. But that's your call of course.

I was very clear about this the first time it came up. Everybody's been so hellbent on proving that they think they know my position better than me, it's been a pain in my ass rewriting the same thing over and over, of course I'm not going to waste my time defending against baseless accusations every time it happens.

Where'd TRP and rape post go?

1 upvotes · 16 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

The reason I think you misrepresent me:

I don't really care much for the marriage contract. I think that religious people who see the bible saying "don't deny each other" is an interesting concept, and so we started up a discussion on whether or not such a sex-contract would even be feasible. That was why I was talking about it. I haven't heard anything that makes a long-term consent contract feasible yet, but it's an interesting thought experiment.

As you already know I lean libertarian, and consider the idea that if a man or woman wanted to get into a shitty contract, it should be their right. Who am I to say what people can and cannot do?

There should always be an escape clause, in my opinion.

I also would never get married. I'm not religious.

I wasn't engaged in the conversation because I endorsed husbands beating their wives and having sex with them. I was engaged because it was an interesting concept, in the light of other long-term consent contracts that currently exist.

The reason a lot of people dislike blue pill argument style is because the very discussion is interpreted as endorsement of the concepts discussed.

I've been purposefully difficult over the past year regarding this question because the very accusation that I endorse rape was completely unfounded and missed this very point. Why would I answer to stupid setup questions regarding rape when the only people asking were doing so in bad faith?

Where'd TRP and rape post go?

1 upvotes · 13 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Don't pretend you speak for me.

Rape is sex without consent. Rape is immoral. Therefore the definition of consent is important in determining what sex is moral and what sex is not.

Sex without immediate consent in marriage is wrong, and I agree with this position. I wrote that. Months ago.

Edit: Obviously if our culture said everything is consent, even the word "no," then we could argue that the system is unjust. That is not the case. The case today is that both men and women need a framework to communicate consent. There are pretty standard guidelines that say that lack of consent, or dissent, is rape. So, we need to ensure both parties are operating on the same definition of consent. Which is why the legal definition effects the morality of the position.

If a woman says "yes" because she thinks she can just say what ever she wants and call it rape, it is not immoral for a man to perform on that consent, because of the legal standard of the concept of consent. She may not have truly wanted it, but she would've done better to abide by the legal standard of consent if that was her intention and say "no".

This is, of course, leaving out compounding factors such as coercion or threat of force.

Most people agree a hundred texts and being emotionally slutty is negative. But you'd be surprised at some of the behaviors men do that they don't understand is hurting their game.

We have established in this discussion here that, in fact, actions can have an effect on attraction. You can disagree about specifics (like peacocking) and that's ok. Most people within the community don't really agree an overwhelming amount.

"Alpha" really is meaningless without the context of sex.

I think it's pretty pervasive here that the path to happiness revolves around sexual success. That's not necessarily it for everybody, but look at our goals: fitness, hobbies, alpha status... these all contribute to sexual success.

I would posit that most lifestyle tips you'd have would inadvertently boost your sexual success if they're effective at boosting happiness. That's how we're programmed, after all.

I'm just going to copy and paste this response to you all, because you didn't read it:

Evil Is The Defining Attribute Of Women's Attraction Toward Deviant Men

Evil, not power, is theorized to be the primary attribute that the subset of [women who are attracted to deviants] find attractive, otherwise they would go for normal powerful men, not deviants. Therefore power itself is not a sufficient quality.

In the subset of women who go for deviant men.

I'm going to leave this, troll or not, it's a good question. After a breakup, the feelings of anger don't just subside that quickly, and sometimes you might really be looking to do this.

These are the steps to winning this scenario:

1. Cut ALL contact with her. Entirely. If she finds a way to get through the barrier, do not engage, do not return contact. Cut all contact. Discard anything she might send you.

2. Hit the gym.
3. Spin new plates.
4. Who gives a shit about the first girl any more? You certainly won't at this point. But rest assured if she ever sees you again, she'll realize what she's missing. The guy who was able to cut communication cold turkey. A rare breed indeed.

You were lamenting the lack of a group advocating for men to talk down a dark alley. Either that or you were attempting to use that lack of an advocacy group to make an attack on feminism.

I was making a very simple point: men don't advocate walking in dark alleys because it's stupid.

Yet, when a woman does something stupid, feminism (yes: feminism) is right there ready to slap the hand of anybody willing to say that what she did was stupid. They coined the term "victim blaming" to accomplish this.

Feminism is incredibly relevant. So relevant in fact, that as part of the comic- they wrote the word "feminism" in it.

If I walk down a dark alley, it's because I chose to walk down it, and I accept responsibility for engaging that risk.

And if you spent a few minutes to read what everybody here is saying, they're saying simply that- your right to agency is coupled with the responsibility of consequences. And here you are criticizing us for holding her to that standard.

We've kinda stolen the "puerarchy" term and embraced it.

Technically, the puerarchy are people who didn't push success beyond "good enough" for their purposes and it's detrimental to society.

Our application of it is "we each define what's good enough for ourselves, not society." If that means getting a degree and getting rich, fair play. So long as you do it for you.

Furthermore:

Can we come together to create a red pill subreddit that doesn't cater exclusively to men or women with the goal of keeping the riff raff to a minimum?

This really ignores that mating is a zero sum game. At the end of the day, yes, men and women should cooperate. But that doesn't mean they do.

This sort of concern trolling is used to temper a message, not enhance it.

This is concern trolling.

- If you don't like the content, you are allowed to submit content you like.
- We realized early on that there may be too many red/blue pill examples or too many field reports. Which is why we added the flair. You can browse TRP by category using the category links at the top of the page. We spend a lot of time as mods just adding flair to everybody's posts so that your specific complaint wouldn't happen. Want to see Red Pill Theory Posts? Look somebody spent Countless Hours Categorizing these for you
- Discussing alpha traits does not mean you have to act alpha while discussing it. Making the claim of "faux alphas" is stupid. I have nothing more to say on that.
- My response: "game is a part of red pill" holds true. Men invented game specifically to counter the changing tides. You might not like game, but every red pill man should be aware of confidence and it's effect on seducing women. The Red Pill is about sexual strategy. Learning game is a sexual strategy.

isn't it a red pill man's obligation to not contribute to the racking up of a woman's count?

This is a good question. I think you'd do well to stop trolling if you want to discuss it.

1 upvotes · 6 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

lol men have all the responsibilities? The woman is raising his child and paying way more to do it.

You obviously are completely unaware of the legal climate we live in. Women can legally surrender their children at safe-surrender houses. They can do so anonymously and with impunity, if the going gets tough.

Men have no such option.

One of us has responsibility. The other has options, options, options.

There is no way to make the options equal,

Yes there is. Legal parental surrender.

but there is damn sure a way that YOU can prevent having a baby

No, there is damn sure a way for a woman to prevent it if she wants. A man has no recourse after pregnancy, and no birth control is 100% effective.

Deal with it.

Said the slave owner to the slave, "we're both slaves, don't you see?"

The Hamsters take to the wheel: No amount of logic will solve the abortion/child support double standard, it's an emotionally charged issue

1 upvotes · 6 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Your personal views don't mean you didn't have the option legally.

But it is the man's responsibility to find out what kind of woman you are sleeping with. Is it one that lies about taking BC? Then you chose poorly and that has consequences.

You're attempting to shift the blame of a woman lying onto the man with no legal recourse. That's insane.

You have differing responsibilities

Read: Men have all the responsibilities

but is impossible to have totally equality.

Wrong, legal parental surrender.

We both have to own up to it.

That's literally false, women have legal options: adoption, legal child abandonment, and abortion. Men have ZERO legal options and face possible jail time.

If you want full proof no babies- get a vasectomy or don't have sex.

How would you feel if I decided women didn't deserve reproductive rights. If I want a baby, you must carry it to term. Even if I raped you. You can have no say in it. And if you don't like it, well women shouldn't be having sex anyway.

The Hamsters take to the wheel: No amount of logic will solve the abortion/child support double standard, it's an emotionally charged issue

1 upvotes · 6 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

You must understand that you're literally saying "it's both your responsibility to take care of them" right after saying, "if the woman doesn't want to have an abortion."

She had the right, and the responsibility of her choice. He had no right, and the responsibility of her choice.

You can easily have sex with somebody who is pro-abortion, and she can change her mind.

1 upvotes · 6 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Of course you want medical attention. You get to do a procedure that keeps you from dying. Sure it costs money, so do abortions.

The point is that babies aren't the only outcome of pregnancy, and neither is death the only outcome of a car accident, because we can change the future instead of calling what is our fates.

We use the terms Alpha and Beta loosely here, mostly because human social hierarchies are not really all that rigid in comparison to the animals we use the terms to describe.

Instead, we use them to describe actions and behaviors, not people. When somebody says "this guy is alpha" it's shorthand for "this is an alpha thing to do" or "he exhibits a lot of alpha traits."

If it's all about economics, why not just get a hooker for 100$.

Question of the century my friend.

I understand your point of view that withholding sex is a way to regain power of a male, but one should realize pretty quickly if a woman is only there to game you for resources or if she just has a very shy personality. If you feel like her intent is using you as pit stop or a ATM machine you should leave immediately.

I'm not saying all women have horrible intentions. I'm saying that their unconscious biological imperatives do. She might not really have a logical reason for delaying sex.. she probably doesn't understand it beyond "it feels right."

She also won't have a logical reason why she fell into/out of love, she'll just know it happened.

On the Universality of Briffault's Law, The Sexual Utopia and Michael(sidebar)being a racist

1 upvotes · 22 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

1)Both the Briffault's law and the Sexual Utopia in Power(article) base their arguments on the historical divisions of labour within sexes in propagating a species - i.e males being a provider/females for nurturing children(domestic labour etc)

Now it is important to note that though not common there are species with more varied gender roles, which leads me to the next point.

2)If seen from through the lens of evolutionary biology, equality of sexes in division of said labour in modern society becomes a must, if human species is to survive. Here's why(and I am ofcourse simplifying it) a)Post industrial revolution, the rise in "standard of living" has meant that well off humans consume/degrade more resources per capita than any other species on earth.

b)This may eventually put a limit on our quantity in various ways, but what it does pressurize is the quality output per capita.

Briffault's law is not about how the work is to be split or where currently resources come from- it's about the ingrained psychology of a species that evolved with a certain gender hierarchy. Whether the hierarchy is relevant today is irrelevant when commenting on how men and women will feel about the mating process.

Today, a very weak man with a terrible disease that would've killed men not more than 100 years ago can now survive and live a full life. He can learn computers and become a successful programmer. He can live a comfortable life. So having big strong muscles is unnecessary to perpetuate his life. And yet- the man with bigger muscles would most certainly win the attraction of a possible mate if they were side by side. Because despite the economic pressures in our culture today, they haven't been around long enough to have an evolutionary effect on our mating desires.

Individually humans cannot be on top of the food chain(like in a jungle). We are at the top because of our quality (our ability to use intelligence to make everything from fire to modern weapons, and ofcourse constructing artificial environs at the expense of natural ones to further help our quality per capita) which leads to dominance over rest of nature.

It's true, we are a cooperative species. But individuals are able to maintain relative safety and remain a very serious predator in any environment, just with far smaller success rate than a group.

c)Now tell me, in this scenario wouldn't it be more efficient for both females and males to contribute to this quality output to help our species survive?

Sure, but we're not facing extinction. Even the minimal output today will land you a comfortable life when compared to the living conditions of virtually any living creature that ever lived.

If you say No, I would like to know why, but as a studying bio technologist, I have found little evidence that gender dimorphism will restrict a woman's ability in a workplace/to innovate/to provide society said output quality at an equal level as a man.

... a woman will still struggle to find herself able to do many jobs that are currently primarily men. Coal mining, construction, deep sea fishing.. many jobs still require a good amount of upper body strength that very few women have. So while women can still produce similar wages as a man, that doesn't mean their effect on our economy if they dropped out is the same as men. In other words: men still make the world go round.

As for the social constructs of the traditional roles of men and women that were undoubtedly passed on from lower animals (like argued in sexual utopia in Power), I seriously contend the authors view of meeting fire with fire.

If men can understand that all their intellect that has been used as a display for women to choose, we must reconcile with women who Are using their intellect to bring value to the table (and please don't say you haven't met such a woman. Just because it is their inherent trait to choose doesn't mean they canNOT defy it, it is man's inherent trait to display(woo) but this sub is obviously proof that we may curb that instinct because of rational/logical thought borne out of intellect(think celibacy for a start)

We are all ultimately in control of the choices we make. Consider evolutionary psychology like this: A man is faced with two options: A very sexy woman and a very ugly woman. He is asked to choose one of them for a date. He is not bound by evolutionary psychology to make one choice or the other. Instead, the emotional response of his choice is bound by his programming. He may choose the ugly woman to prove his free will, but his mind will not let him find the level of happiness he knew was possible with the other one.

His choices are his own, but the emotional response to his choices are evolution's.

If our sub teaches that ugly women are the path to happiness, he can ignore his emotional response for the hope of delayed gratification. And he may even be able to condition himself to find things to bring him happiness that were not originally things that made him happy.

We understand this- but know if you want to cast the widest net- as a woman who wants to be selected, she will attempt to be pretty and not hold out for the man who attempts the delayed gratification strategy.

Feminism may not represent all such women, but gender equality is needed. Gender blindness may not seem practical, but I think at an individual level, we as men must try to find those women who actually represent this ideology(those who see Suits-not the best of shows- and are familiar with Harvey Spectre-an amazing character- is told by a woman "You don't respond to weakness Harvey, you respond to strength" while explaining her actions(which were intended to woo him))

Equality in rights, sure. The right for a woman to choose her own future is fine. A woman who wants to work is fine. But you cannot suggest that we will suddenly start finding ugly women attractive, and nobody here is buying the delayed gratification line you're trying to sell. If a woman wastes her youth on a personal pursuit, it is her prerogative. It's my prerogative not to be attracted to her in her 40s when she wants to settle down.

.....it's true we may not always find this lady.

But again Michael's story ends with him claiming that he would rather have fun as a bachelor than marry a 30+ woman empowered by feminism.

I think we should engage women, trust them (especially childhood friends) and generally be less hostile/cynical about feminism.

Trust them about what? Left to their own devices, feminism takes all it can and has no such egalitarian aspirations. Just look at how it precludes equilibrium- divorce cash prizes, pregnancy traps, welfare, VAWA.

Rather than risk being labeled anti-feminists, we should be aggressively pro-gender equality in our application of our ideology, both individually and our collective outlooks/actions and reach out to like minded women.

I sincerely believe a common sexual utopia is in the offing provided we recognise that women can bring value to the table.(Read On Value and the Value of Women on sidebar to understand the reference) Saying it is impractical seems like a cop out(something a lazy guy/misogynist would do as an excuse)

Nobody here says a woman can't bring value to the table. Since I wrote the value of women on the sidebar- you can see that, yes, women can bring much value to the table. If they do try to bring something to the table. My only argument is that simply showing up with a vagina does not grant you value. Many women in our culture think it does.

What's impractical is kowtowing to the implication of feminism that the vagina is an equal value-bringer to the hard work and life-risking that men brought to the table, without some sort of concession. In the past, the concession was marriage and women becoming mothers. Now they label that oppression and abstain, but refuse to make up the difference elsewhere. Men are still the primary victims of war, men still account for 90% of workplace deaths, men still make this world run. Women pulled out and want the free ride with no obligations.

If you want sexual utopia, you must find an equilibrium. Feminism is strictly anti-equilibrium. You are preaching to the wrong group.

Frankly, it seems to me you don't understand that most women do not fit the minimum criteria as men to get into armed forces. They actually have to lower the standards for women.

1 upvotes · 30 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I think it is. At the end of the day, standing by your morals will do nothing for you, and only help my gain. Remember this: sexual strategy is amoral. When women succumb to hypergamy, they don't consider the morality. Instead, they use their emotions to rationalize morality.

This is why nobody here takes our critics seriously. Feminists take note.

1 upvotes · 24 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

The guy had no critique of the sub, instead opting to say it "scares" him, assuming we're a bunch of "hurt" dudes. Following that, countless baseless accusations of misogyny and such. That's not critique captain, that's just pointless blabber.

And what did you bring to the table? "Feminists aren't the only people who can criticize."

What you did was try to mis-color what I said as though it is only feminists that disagree. False. You then have the gull to concern troll saying that we're just a bunch of flippant dudes waiting for the next thing to jump on and eat.

You haven't pointed out genuine critique, and somehow defend the right of trolls not to be torn limb from limb. To my proverbial face.

There's a reason I told you to leave if you don't like it. Because this isn't freedom america. This isn't your grandma's house where everybody gets along. This is the sub where we discuss unpopular ideas and have learned to quickly dismiss or dismantle trolls. There are thousands of them, nobody's going to take the time to deal with each one.

Make no mistake, what you've done is not critiquing, it is concern trolling. You have not brought anything useful to this table beyond "people are critical of the sub" and a strong implication as though we treat those critical unfairly, instead of what we really do, analyze those who oppose and evaluate them for logical thinking. Those who wish to bring interesting viewpoints logically are discussed:

http://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/1czk6c/games\_credibility\_is\_shattered\_right\_here/

Where people who levy nothing but insults and baseless accusations are dismissed entirely and without a second thought.

So which one are you deciding to be?

The one who generally labels an entire sub "toxic" to the mod, a useless critique, or somebody who's here to make positive contributions?

The only thing toxic about a sub is when the concern trolls aren't dealt with. And you are 100% classic concern troll, without missing a beat.

Because you're playing stupid I'm going to ban you. But for the rest of the crowd curious here are the contentions:

- Insult men by calling them a neckbeard. The concept here is implying man with said neckbeard is unaware of social conventions, thus his unattractive appearance. Unattractive indicates unsuccessful, at least with ladies. Neckbeard = bad with women, no experience with women.
- Claim that neckbeards advocate abuse. Emotional abuse requires one to hold a level of control in a relationship. If a woman will not talk to a neckbeard let alone fall in love with one, no relationship takes place. There is no emotional blackmail in a non-relationship with only one participant.

Today you learned logic, son.

Introvert, one of my first replies to you was this:

I'll give you a few minutes to work out what the point of this piece is. I'll give you a hint- I'm not showing off to women, since this is a primarily men's sub.

Since you've been unable thus far to work it out for yourself, I'll spell it out.

This is not an attempt to debate a feminist. If you follow the sub, you'll see I rarely think women are capable of this level of reason in the first place.

This is a thought-piece to arm men with knowledge and understanding of the logic and reason behind the red pill on every level.

Whether we like it or not, a great number of accusations are hurled our way regarding our lifestyles and theories.

It is important, even if the accusations seem trivial, to reason through, to understand, and gain perspective on your own views to ensure the accusation holds no merit.

Intellectual honesty requires you to build arguments using other people's presuppositions and follow them to their logical end to see if there's any internal consistency to them, and measure their viewpoints against your own.

This is a service I provide on TheRedPill, articulating calculated arguments logically and extrapolating them to their logical conclusions so that other men can learn from it. From both the thought process but also from the very subjects themselves.

This is why this is posted in TheRedPill and not on a feminist sub, or in a letter to an editor somewhere.

This isn't a debate or argument.

The redpillsub isn't a frame, and it's not about winning. It's about learning and gaining better perspective and understanding of our theories.

If we didn't entertain opposing viewpoints long enough to find their logical inconsistencies and inherent weaknesses, we would be guilty of the very "circle-jerking" you have just accused me of.

Forbid alimony and child support paid to the wife. Any payments must be made to a third party that can demonstrate no conflict of interest and particularly no alliance to the wife.

Forbid divorcing mothers to get any kind of child custody or visitation. Even if the father doesn't get the kids, they go to an orphanage.

Not so picky any more. Comedian hits wall and regrets her choices.

1 upvotes · 3 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Your understanding here is flawed.

Women select for security and provisions. Big and strong, preselection a plus! Weak men are just as fertile but passed over.

Also, mind you I'm not advocating marriage, only talking about the psychology of mate selection. Whether the man plans on 8 babies or not, the option to do so is enticing and triggers that part of his brain.

Not so picky any more. Comedian hits wall and regrets her choices.

1 upvotes · 3 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Men select women for fertility, the drive behind the selection is majorly an unconscious process. That's why fine skin, healthy breasts/ass, good hair, and certain other characteristics are selected for.

It's not just picky to choose a younger mate for men, it's programmed into men to have a preference for younger women.

Whether or not you think it's acceptable by our society's incredibly feminized view, a five year difference will certainly have an effect on the selection process all else being equal.

Not so picky any more. Comedian hits wall and regrets her choices.

1 upvotes · 3 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Compared to a male of the same age, a woman at 27 has the upper hand on a man of 27.

But as a man at any age where he has the upper hand, he will select for younger. 27 might not seem old, but compared to a 22 year old girl, she has 5 less childbearing years. That's a big deal.

In the context of my comment I was very clear that the problems that arise from age are all in the number due to the psychological effect of knowing it... not in the age itself. You've done a nice job missing my point.

You further misquote me by saying you're free to disagree. This isn't freedom america. This is my sub and my rules. I said you're free to bring forward your point, which your post severely lacked. My job is to sort the signal from the noise. When you post insults but no coherent point, and argue obtuse misrepresentations of our points, guess what.. you're not signal. You're the noise.

And you made the mistake of doing it directly to the mod, making my job easier.

There is more than one way to pass a shit test. He ejected early, which is something I'm more keen on doing myself. There are a billion women out there I can hit on, no reason to reward a bitchy one with flirting.

Now, sure, you can keep grinding on, but I think the author is pointing out something I agree with. You can deal with shit tests to a degree without losing self respect. The woman blurted out the boyfriend line, she didn't work it into conversation. One is a shit test, the other is just plain rude.

If you stay around somebody with such a disdain for manners, it is you who is the sucker proving you'll hang around a bad mannered chick.

Ejecting without making a scene (which is what he did), and making a small effort to discipline girls is a necessary component of night game when you're around hard mode bitches. And yes, having the gall to say no and walk away will eat at their brains.

That's why she spent the night bad mouthing him. He got to her.

I've done similar things to women. They eventually learn to respect me for it, and tone down the bitch shield 100%. I've slept with a number of girls who needed swift discipline at the beginning.

This wasn't a shit test, it was a poor-mannered presumptive bitch.

Here's what he means: We all have genetic variations that differentiate us. We happened to find people who were segregated and co-mingled for a period of time which meant the variation between their genes was less than that between one of theirs and one of ours.

But labeling the distinctions is in itself mildly subjective, since almost all racial distinctions are based on how they appear to us, not necessarily genetic deviation. Thus they have very real implications and can be scientifically quantified, but did not necessarily stem from said implications.

Birth control was invented in like the past 60 years. That's not enough time to undo evolution.

No, it isn't. Which is why women still get wet and go after alphas. But it demonstrates that the baby component wasn't conscious, because they're still fucking the guys on birth control.

Roughly, this means it was the sexual urge to fuck alphas that drove forward women. Not the urge to have babies. Exemplified by the fact that they're taking birth control and still fucking the alphas.

I haven't seen it thus far on this sub. Explain it to me so I better understand, please!!

Most of us regard marriage in today's society as too big of a risk. That said, a lot of us were into the idea of marriage- we just want it with somebody who won't take our money and run. That's why a lot of us are leaving western countries and marrying in non-feminist countries.

We're all about for-better-or-for-worse. I haven't seen any examples of somebody saying you shouldn't honor the vows of marriage. We do say that the vows won't be honored here, and you shouldn't enter them.

Cool, but name call? And women are the overgrown children? That's silly.

We aren't name calling outside of our sub. You'll see we're very well behaved and try to get our point across in a politically correct way when we're discussing on askmen or elsewhere. But in our sub- for men, by men, we'll call it like we see it. A woman who fucks indiscriminately is gross to us: We call her a slut. That's what she is to us. Double standard? Sure is. Doesn't change the reality of it.

A key that opens a lot of locks is an impressive key. A lock that opens to any key is a terrible lock.

You're trolling. Prove otherwise.

Active targeting of men by women is what I observe.

As I said, there are exceptions to every rule. If you're extremely good looking, there's a very good chance you don't even know reality.

They don't leave it up to chance (by just being visible) all that much.

They don't just spin the bottle and fuck a guy. They do, however, select. I'll just keep repeating it until you read our sidebar: women select, men are selected. Of course women take a proactive approach. They may even select a guy that didn't approach them: but it is her doing the selecting, he is being selected. Again, this scenario is still the exception.

Unfortunately, this knowledge takes a lot of observation so most men don't see it this way. Our egos also stand in the way quite a bit.

I think you're suffering from selection bias. If a majority of your hookups are women approaching you there are two factors: 1. You're very attractive and/or 2. The market you're in has more women than men.

At the red pill we take a far more pragmatic approach. Understanding the principles of evolutionary psychology and applying it to real life. What I'm explaining is the well held extrapolation for evolutionary psychology- not my "frustrated" feelings at a bar.

I'm guessing women are still frustrating to you? They are not to me.

You should really check who you're talking to.

Advice for women. Advice for men.

I don't think we're talking about different things. By being the selective (not the selected) they maintain plausible deniability. That's the risk aversion I'm talking about. Having the protection of plausible deniability is the risk aversion.

I never said women weren't proactive. Only that women are proactive in the same sense they dress up and put on makeup. Their job is to be visible to the highest mates possible- even if that means contriving a weird scenario.

Advice for women. Advice for men.

I am not denying that women will poise themselves for maximum success. In fact, I already said that.

That said, she offloaded the risk onto him. You're looking at this very strangely, I'm genuinely wondering if you're trolling at this point.

The fact that she did everything, including manipulating him into asking her out, but never actually putting herself in a position where he would do the selecting, that's what I'm talking about.

Women are naturally risk adverse. In this case, it wasn't a huge risk for Jobs, but it was certainly an offload of risk.

You seem to be circling the drain on this, trying to make a point that isn't fully developed, and backing it up with the fact that you've had women approach you. That's fine- I have too. But that doesn't change the dynamics at play. There are exceptions to every rule, and a woman approaching a man is just that: an exception to the rule.

You're doing some interesting mental gymnastics, but failing to grasp the very basic evolutionary psychology here.

Women aren't using telepathy to pick men up. The act of walking across the room is the risk. Men approach. Women select. Men are selected.

Advice for women. Advice for men.

Women will contrive scenarios to increase their chances, for sure. At it's very basic, it's the same as putting on makeup. That said, they are risk adverse and will avoid the risky behaviors. In this scenario, anything as simple as making him do the actual asking (so she is in a position of doing the rejecting not being rejected).

It's subtle for sure, but it's the basic psychology.

I'm seeing in a few threads that you believe women are not wired to be picked up. I'm going to say that completely contradicts what we think here, which is that via hypoagency, women have always sought refuge is being objects and allowing men to take on the risk of being agents. This is obvious as women are the selective gender. (where as men are the selected).

As women were able to avoid risk, they were able to increase their chances of survival. This is demonstrated by the evidence that we descended from twice as many women as men! (Most men were too busy risking and half of them dying!)

Just because he's rich and she traveled to be approached doesn't mean the basic principles have changed.

He asked her out, that's the social risk. Granted for him, it's a drop in the bucket. But for her it would've been a huge risk- which is why she didn't take it.

Aside from that, the rest of her actions were pro-active, sure, but not risky.

See, what you're not seeing here is the basic principles that guide both men and women's actions. She did a lot more than most women will do, sure. But her actions were in the same vein as putting on more makeup or wearing a pushup bra. She was poisoning herself to be approached.

The social risk was on Steve. She positioned herself to attract the highest value mate, but still left the onus of the social risk on him.

Who took the risks here? Who had more to gain? Steve was already a millionaire, she was just another pretty girl in college.

No, my definition is incredibly clear and narrow: Do not conflate culture with genetics.

No, you did that. You have rejected and prohibited discussion, which is all I claimed. Again, stop with the distractions.

No, I have prohibited racist discussion.

Well, it appears you've already failed to follow that rule you're so vehemently brandishing in my face now.

It's my sub. If I want to, I'll take a giant shit on the front page. Deal with it.

How was my comment inaccurate then... you're rejecting discussion on reality.

That right there is exactly how you're inaccurate. I'm focusing our group on sexual strategy, and rejecting discussion on racism.

Any time you try explaining the reality of women to a blue-pill white knight, you're met with behaviour similar to yours now. Raging, burying one's head in the sand, and strawmen as a debating technique. Can you really not see the similarity?

I am explaining point blank there is ZERO SCIENCE behind conflating cultural norms and race.

By me right now in relation to how this sub will be moderated. In the same vein this may not be society's definition, I don't care. We also buck the trend on misogyny, but I think we define it well.

But expanding the definition of racism to cover "everything that might be offensive to someone somewhere" is just bullshit.

Did I say that? No, I didn't. I was VERY specific about what I said.

So, in essence, first you rejected (and prohibited) discussion on issues of race.

Again, I did not say that.

Then, because that would be a bit of a bad start for discussing free speech and what can and can not be discussed, you're rejecting that discussion too.

Anything that detracts from conversation regarding sexual strategy will be deleted. No exceptions.

I certainly agree that if there were a genetic link to behavior found, we could certainly analyze it.

That said, the types of speculations made are unlikely because, as I pointed out in the last thread, the evolution (and deviation) between the genders has progressed for MILLIONS of years, whereas race is in the hundreds of thousands.

Obviously race and culture will be closely tied together because both develop by being separated from other cultures (thus why they're called cultures), however drawing an inextricable link between the two is naive at best given what we understand about genetics.

The likely findings will be differences in aggression, differing levels of certain hormones, but none that even approach the differences between the genders. (a black man and a white man's testosterone levels far closer than between a man and a woman.)

I've seen it on this sub a few times, and I have deleted it. Comments like "that's what she gets for dating a black guy" is racist and will be deleted. If it was "that's what she gets for dating a thug" then we're golden.

Freedom of Speech?

1 upvotes · 12 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Do not paint yourself the victim. Red pill is embracing reality and objectivity. Racism, which inextricably links race to culture, is neither logical, scientific, nor welcome.

Let me demonstrate:

A majority of street crime is perpetrated by black people. (statistical correlation).

The fact that he's black is why he is likely to commit crime (incorrect assumption from correlation).

A culture that consists of mainly black people today promotes crime. (Verifiable correlation).

A majority of black people commit crime (False, inextricably links race to culture. Racism).

He's black so he's likely to commit a crime (False, inextricably links race to culture. Racism).

Freedom of Speech?

1 upvotes · 12 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

This is why I kept going in the other thread, and I feel like a few of you guys are really missing the point. Yes, genetics includes race. Yes cultural differences includes ethnicity. Racism is making an inextricable link between the two. This is what is not allowed.

I also made a very good point as to why race and gender are two very different beasts. Do not make the mistake of saying the differences are equal. The term 'racism' may be misused in some contexts, but in this context I use it properly and what I describe is rightly banned.

There was only one interest group lobbying for divorce reform. That was the feminists. Sure third wave feminists are the worst of the lot of them, but second wave feminists pushed the bar far past equality.

In today's climate, a woman who divorces young enough isn't damaged goods. A man who owes half his paycheck to somebody else surely is. A woman who divorces late in life might be damaged goods- but that's because she hit the wall, not because of divorce.

But let's keep adding to this. What's the history of divorce in the UK?

The 1857 Matrimonial Causes Act allowed ordinary people to divorce. Before then, divorce was largely open only to men, and had to be granted by an Act of Parliament, which was hugely expensive, and therefore was also open only to the rich. (Long before then, of course, Henry VIII was granted a divorce by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and church courts retained the power to dissolve marriages.)

In Athens while a woman seeking a divorce had to go before the Archon, a man could simply send a wife from his house. (Plutarch, Alcibiades,8)

That doesn't look like it favors women!

Let's turn to the bible, arguable a large influence on law in our history:

Romans 7:2-3

For the married woman is bound by law to her husband while he is living; but if her husband dies, she is released from the law concerning the husband. So then if, while her husband is living, she is joined to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband dies, she is free from the law, so that she is not an adulteress, though she is joined to another man.

(Looks like men don't even have to be faithful!)

Matthew 19:6

"Consequently they are no longer two, but one flesh. What therefore God has joined together, let no man separate."

Matthew 5:31-32

"And it was said, 'Whoever sends his wife away, let him give her a certificate of divorce'; but I say to you that everyone who divorces his wife, except for the cause of unchastity, makes her commit adultery; and whoever marries a divorced woman commits adultery.

(Women were untouchable afterwards, divorce was a death sentence to women.)

Listen I'm not saying it couldn't or didn't happen. I'm saying that up until this past century, it very very rarely happened, and when it did, it was almost always a sentence for women- once they were spoiled they were no longer marriage material. And back then, without marriage, taking care of kids and getting food was close to impossible.

I wasn't going to bother with you, but time for school.

Up until the mid fifties in the USA, divorce was uncommon and the grounds for divorce had to be concrete, which enabled the ostensibly innocent or injured party to get relief in the form of the actual divorce. (grounds being unfaithful etc).

In the 1950s, several court rulings and state laws clearly recognized the many instances of no-fault reasons to end marriages. These included long-term separation, instances of incompatibility and loss of sanity. In practical terms, though, no-fault legislation was hard to use to actually provide a divorce for couples.

It wasn't until the 1970s that the US instituted no-fault divorces that were easily obtainable.

Understand, and make no mistake, this was one of the rally cries of the second wave feminists. These changes were absolutely being pushed through by a very vocal feminist movement.

I already explained this a few posts back.

The development of personality in the brain has millions of years on race in terms of evolution.

The difference between men and women has evolved for millions of years.

The difference between races is a measure of evolution in the thousands of years (hundreds of thousands, but not millions).

A white male's brain is more closely similar to a black male than either is to a woman.

I will not deny it's a place of study- and there are studies now. But there is also very ready material you can study right now: How different races integrate into other cultures. It's most obvious when you take adopted children, it completely puts the nature vs nurture argument to rest in a sense.. As most of the behavioral observations racist make are not necessarily wrong - a lot of them stem from real observation- but they misattribute it to race, instead of culture- because both grow in the same way: isolated groups.

Make no mistake, one is observation, the other is just prejudice. One is acceptable here, the other will never be.

Go forth and spread the word.

Good luck though, you'll find people still plugged in are more likely to fight you than the problem. In the words of morpheus:

The Matrix is a system, Neo. That system is our enemy. But when you're inside, you look around, what do you see? Businessmen, teachers, lawyers, carpenters. The very minds of the people we are trying to save. But until we do, these people are still a part of that system and that makes them our enemy. You have to understand, most of these people are not ready to be unplugged. And many of them are so inured, so hopelessly dependent on the system, that they will fight to protect it.

Even though red pill is more selfish and inwardly focused, I think you can still have honor and be a good man. I have never cheated on a woman. There's no need.

Frankly, I found I can keep girls hot longer by refusing to commit. And yes, they do wise up and leave, but I'm starting to wonder if that's really happening sooner because of my refusal to commit than the girls who left after I did commit.

At the end of my life, I think we'll find my average relationship span was longer with harems than it ever was monogamously.

At the end of the day, all good things come to a close. It's far less stressful for me when I'm right.

Just a few months back I had a "breakup" with a girl whose friends finally convinced her I was no good because I wouldn't commit.

We parted ways and I asked her if she was angry. She said, "no, you've never lied to me, I knew what I was getting into."

Sure it sucks, and I definitely miss her some times. But I feel no guilt.

So far I've been ok. But here's my opinion because I know I'll get herpes before long-

Herpes is a social disease. It isn't fatal, has very little effect on quality of life. The only real problem is that other people don't want it because it has the social stigma of promiscuity.

Basically, people don't want it because other people don't want it.

So I've never treated it as a seriously negative thing.

I wear condoms, and would probably avoid the sexy time if I saw herpes sores, but for the most part I just ignore it.

When I get tested, they don't even bother with the test for herpes. And you know what? I'm ok with that. The doc literally said, the worst part of herpes is knowing you have it. I agree with him.

No sir, I never lie to women*. I find being brutally honest is even better.

First comes the pickup. Relationship talk never comes up the first night, so just do my normal thing. We end up at my place, wine and music. Eventually we fuck.

She contacts me again, wants to get together. It'll happen similarly the second time. More sex.

After about 3 or 4 of these, some of them start asking about relationships.

I just say this, "you know I really like you and I genuinely like being with you, but I just don't think I can do a relationship at this point in my life."

I lose maybe 3/5 girls this way. But it's never on bad terms.

The other 2/5 stick around.

Obviously after that talk the implication is that I am not exclusive with them. I don't lie to them, but I just never talk about my life outside of when I'm with them. They don't know who I was out at lunch with yesterday. They don't even know what I did yesterday. All they know is right now. And they usually get the hint not to ask.

It works pretty well. Sometimes when I'm in a group a few friends slip up once or twice and talk about times with other girls. You'd think it's awkward but it's not.. instead that's major preselection. She knows you've got options. Makes her hot as hell. Best BJ ever after one of those moments.

- (I don't lie about exclusivity. I do sometimes lie during pickup about where I'm from and my name, but I don't think that matters)

But saying white girls deserve what they get hanging around black guys is just racist with no bearing on reality.

How to cope with having lost your youth to the blue pill?

1 upvotes · 26 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Well here's what I did. I decided that the reason I was upset was that my expectations were set wrong. Now I don't blame myself for that- it really was society, my parents, my friends, even my girlfriends.

I can identify a lot of times in my past where my beta behavior fucked me over. Or worse, my expectations fucked me. I screwed up relationships because my expectations were for a fairy-tale relationship that doesn't exist.

The point is adjust your expectations so you can be happy.

Ok, shit wasn't what you thought. Now it's time to make some goals that are attainable. Apparently winning a woman's heart by being a noble white knight is out. Time to put that away with the other fairy tales.

Here's a goal I can achieve. Meet a girl. Game her. Enjoy her company. Nothing more. Don't expect commitment, don't give it. Don't expect her to live up to man standards. She will always be a girl, she will always be hypergamous. She will always rationalize.

Instead of hating her for it, expect it from her and smile, because man- the hotter they are, the more they'll be like that. So treat those qualities like they're endearing to you. Because they will be. It's cute.

Once you reach that level, you can explore more things that can make you happy.

I think it's important to note that most red pill wisdom is based on logical mechanisms. It's not that I just happened to meet ten women named Jill- that would certainly make me start thinking all women are named Jill. Instead, it's about looking at society, how it functions, and what pressures are put onto men and women. For instance, a safer bet is to say women are not named Mark. And that's not because I met 10 people not named mark. It's because I understand Mark is not a woman's name.

*Disclaimer: Obviously if somebody replies that they know some girl named mark, that does not change the meaning of this post.

Never Listen To A Woman

1 upvotes · 9 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Here's how I see it. I don't "select" women. I approach every damn woman I meet.

Now, certainly, my experience has been women in my particular area are bitchier than women in other areas I've visited, but the basic consensus among men in the manosphere is doing some confirmation that the problems we describe here are more widespread than just one-offs or selection bias.

Never Listen To A Woman

That's fine, keep your pragmatic approach. Just make sure you don't swing the other way and discard data that upsets your sensibilities. It happens both ways, I know.

Sometimes I don't always write out the entire path I use to reach my conclusions. I've studied quite a bit on these topics, and draw upon knowledge not everybody has.

I'm welcome to discuss mechanisms that cause observed behavior. I'm not as willing to operate under the premise that my observations themselves are wrong. That's how I ended up plugged in for so many years.

Never Listen To A Woman

1 upvotes · 9 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Here's the issue- almost everything we have in the red pill is either evolutionary psychology or anecdotal.

We find the information presented here incredibly good at predicting behavior, and there's a pretty good consensus as to what works.

Some of us, such as Roosh who has met and fucked thousands, or someone like me whose count is much smaller but still not small by any standards, see enough of it with little variation, that it becomes part of our world view.

The problem with anecdote shame is that as a marginalized group, that's all we have.

Never Listen To A Woman

1 upvotes · 9 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

You're not off. I agree with you. It's not that I'd treat a woman like her opinion didn't matter, it's that I'd give her opinion the respect it deserves. At least in areas of expertise that men find useful. (Which is to say that intelligence isn't just an apples to apples comparison, different sexes find different things important).

For instance, if I dated a nurse, and she gave me medical advice, I'd take it seriously.

If I dated a waitress, and she opened up one of her little advice chestnuts like "you can't say those things to your dad, you need to apologize" I will not respect that opinion.

When it comes to crucial life skills, I simply have not heard good advice from a woman.

That said, I sincerely believe that women are mentally capable. I believe it to be more a matter of necessity. There's a reason most women don't know how to fix cars- they never needed to learn.

I have met one or two women who I'd consider to be very intelligent (in man oriented things). And they have two very distinct markers- 1. They were old and single, unable to find a mate, and 2. They volunteered the least amount of advice of all the women I know.

A Feminist's Meltdown: Cognitive Dissonance 101

I think it's something more benign but almost as scary.

You've used the word scary twice now.

I think it's important to note that what you are doing, how you are reacting is exactly as predicted by our theory.

It is the female imperative's job to label things that disagree with it, in order to engender a public disapproval of it.

"Scary"

it's a lot like "Creep."

Nobody wants to be either of those. It subconsciously entered your writing. It's there, like a big check mark that says we're right.

Nobody is infringing on women's right to pursue happiness. Instead, we're giving women exactly what they want. Quite the opposite.

Again, it only serves your imperative to ensure that we don't understand this. But we've wised up too far to believe this tripe.

On glance though, anybody sufficiently plugged in will feel content. "Ah yes, my white knight days haven't been in vain, just look here! Girls find this behavior 'scary' therefore it mustn't work!"

I'm not an expert, so take this with a grain of salt, but I'm under the impression that sometimes it can't just be "reasoned" away.

But assuming that this is entirely psychological, wouldn't it make sense to at least try it to jump-start your confidence, so you don't feel so anxious?

how to be alpha while suffering from erectile dysfunction?

1 upvotes · 7 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

as some of you might know, the heavy use of porn from an early age on, can cause erectile dysfunction.

I've never heard a reliable source say this. Does anybody have further insight on that?

I'm sure it's more common than anybody wants to believe. I discovered that I have a really hard time (lol) with even an ounce of alcohol in me. I've learned various tricks, like pretend to drink, or sip my drinks slowly.

All-in-all, ED becomes a feedback loop. I remember the first time I had a problem (it was medication related but I didn't know it at the time) it seriously fucked with my head. Then I had anxiety the next time, which of course causes it to get worse, not better.

Have you considered Viagra?

One thing that I have done - when it happens and I'm not expecting it, is to do oral/hand stuff on her, and then turn the situation around.

After she has one or two orgasms, look at her and say "we should take it slow.."

Building rapport via text to minimize flake rate

1 upvotes · 7 January 2013 · /r/seduction

You started a game in which the point is to ASK QUESTIONS.

Surely you understand the difference between asking permission and asking a question.

You're trying to prove your value to her before you have any idea of the "connection" she's actually feeling.

Yes, and there's a reason for this. It's almost like everybody here skipped the first paragraph of my post.

If you didn't build enough rapport with her when you met, you need to do something or accept the close to 100% flake rate.

Here are some examples:

- You meet a girl at a club, as she's on her way out. You flirt, manage to get her number, but her friends whisk her away. You do not have much rapport. Do you a. never see her again? b. attempt to build rapport with a few unassuming lines.
- You approach a girl at a party, she's super into you. Unfortunately, she passes out because she's had too much to drink, which means she probably even forgot you exist. Do you a. never see her again? b. attempt to build rapport with a few unassuming lines.

See the problem with a "Hey I'm going to party xyz, you should meet us all there..." is that without rapport, you still won't get that chick to come out. The problem with "Let's get coffee" is that if she's not comfortable enough with you, she's simply going to decline.

Again, nowhere in here did I say you shouldn't focus on good game to begin with. But anybody who's been picking up for a while knows that there are a lot of girls that slip through the cracks just because the timing was wrong or the circumstances weren't perfect. If you've got a lot of experience, you can usually feel in your gut the ones who will likely flake. You should know how to pick up the vibes, and be aware when you didn't quite do it right.

But this right here is advice that I have put into action over the last month, I can say has given me a considerable boost. Despite the fact that people repeat the tripe on here that they do sometimes, it never hurts to know when to switch up your game in a counter-intuitive way.

Building rapport via text to minimize flake rate

1 upvotes · 6 January 2013 · /r/seduction

It's like you didn't read. Obviously you want to focus on good game from the start. But there are always scenarios where you might want to pursue somebody that didn't start in perfect conditions. This is just how to use text to build rapport. You have to have some rapport. If you listen to some people here, they'd convince you the best way to score a date is ignore chicks altogether.

When children have legal authority over their parents, chaos will ensue, just as in Marriage 2.0 where women hold supremacy over the husbands, the practice of matrimony will only harm and bring resentment to all parties involved, making one ill-advised to seek such an arrangement in life.

Fuck it, I'm posting this.

Women are Children

1 upvotes · 5 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

In the same way, a woman's love for a man will never be equal to a man's love for a woman. The natural order and a woman's hypergamous nature dictate that the man must be on a "higher level" than the woman. A man can love a woman just as a woman can love a child, but the reciprocal love is returned only in the form of honour and respect.

The feelings slut

1 upvotes · 4 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I've found vulnerability early in a relationship makes my life so much richer.

The likely reason is that for you, being "alpha" is a natural state. For you, the only thing you do is modify your behavior when you feel like it to be more vulnerable. That's a great position to be in, and props to you for being a natural.

I'm sure you can understand most guys here do not share your experience -- yet.

For people who are good at reading and sending vibes and naturally trend towards alpha behavior, it's likely most of our theories never even cross their minds. Who needs it when you're already successful.

The feelings slut

1 upvotes · 4 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

So when a girl shows serious interest they think they love her when in reality what they love is the validation.

I agree.

If they learn to be vulnerable from the beginning rather than play Alpha dog all the way up to the L word, I believe they will be more happy and more understanding of what's going on in the relationship. They also will communicate better.

I disagree that vulnerability is something you want to encourage, nor do I advocate "playing" alpha, instead of internalizing the behaviors.

I think that a better way to think about these things is to interrogate your own emotions instead of just following rules.

For sure these rules should never be applied without any discretion. I think an apt way to view the advice on this subreddit is to say to yourself, "is this action against the red pill rules?" if it is, that doesn't mean you have to categorically not do it- it means you should figure out WHY it's bad practice, consider WHY you want to do it anyway, and then make an informed decision.

I can imagine a scenario where any rule we come up with can be broken. But often, trusting our own intuition is what got us in trouble in the first place. That's why we make these guidelines, to replace intuition until you've practiced it enough to learn your own discretion.

There is one good facet of the men's rights movement, and that is marriage reform. One of the reasons we're in the mess we're in right now is the imbalance of power between women and men caused by feminism.

I definitely agree with you to an extent- the men's rights movement does make sure its entire platform coincides neatly with the feminine imperative, and a lot of times they modify themselves specifically to avoid outrage. To that, I say, that's why we have the red pill.

But if they can do half the damage feminism did for women, it may still be beneficial to us as a gender.

I know people like you live with a post modern worldview, most likely programmed by years of indoctrination by the Marxists who infiltrated our systems and schools with the leftiest of leftist ideologies, and that you most likely believe that "free speech" has limits or that there are gradients of free speech that should be allowed or disallowed, and that ultimately there should be a way to govern and control the speech and thoughts of others.

Just know that free speech is either free, or it's not. Anybody purporting to have jurisdiction or authority over my speech is not just a well meaning busybody with too much time and too little sense. No, they are an active threat to my freedom as a sovereign citizen of a free country. They are the dripping wet stink from the ass crack of Lenin, the collective scrapings of filth, taken from between the asshole and ballsack of a sweaty, unshowered Hitler after months or conjugal visits from Big Tony's Little Tony.

"Well, in the future I'd like something serious, just not right now."

0 upvotes · 29 January 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

You have done a great job showing that women seem to "prefer" for LTRs/marriage. Womens' POV.

I'm talking strictly about what men seem to prefer. Mens' POV.

Since these relationships take both men and women, you seem to fail to grasp that the statistics of said relationships can draw conclusions on the preferences of both.

Men marry up more in education. Want to tell me this is all due to the fact that there are just more college educated women for them to choose from? You can't because only recently did women overtake men in education level! 2015 or so, not 2011!

That's a poor point to make. College educated women almost doubled from 1980 to 2005. Don't have to overtake men to have a higher population than before.

I found that 46 percent of the women with BAs who married men without BAs still had a husband who earned more than them. That is, marrying down the education ladder didn't stop them from marrying up the income ladder.

So what you're saying is, 46% of men who married an educated person still preferred to marry down.

So you're not moving goalposts, here is my assertion:

men aren't attracted to your career or earning potential. source

Now, back to education. You're making a point that BA men prefer BA women. But it's not shown that they care for your career or earning potential.

In 2017, 33% of men had a BA, and of those who got married, 72% married a BA or higher.

23% of all men are college educated and marry a woman who is educated. Almost half of those marriages, men make more than women. 11.5% of all men are college grads that have married up in both education and income.

This doesn't really support an argument that it's a well established preference among men.

It supports that career and income-wise, men marry down and women marry up. Which is well established:

<http://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2017/09/20/americans-see-men-as-the-financial-providers-even-as-women-s-contributions-grow/>

I realize you may not have been arguing against my original assertion, I apologize it gets very confusing when there are multiple people on one thread.

In the end, if increasing female power in education and income increased the viability of pairings, the total number of pairings would increase. Since the observed trend has decreased, we can ascertain that it either has no effect or a negative effect on pairing viability.

I still stand by my original assertion.

College education for women is huge plus for LTRing men with college education

But you haven't shown this, at all.

I have backed my assertion with statistics and an economist who agrees.

- The more educated a woman is, the less likely she is to find an LTR.
- Women tend to marry older men. (In case you didn't get it, that means men tend to marry younger women.)
- Age is directly correlated to both education level and earning potential.
- If men preferred education in marriage, the age gap in marriage would be reversed or non existent.

This does not support your hypothesis, nor do any of your sources.

This is proof of women not choosing certain men, not the other side of men not choosing certain women. Again, you're confusing these two concepts.

Thing is- for an LTR to work, both parties have to join it. Marriage statistics show what both parties agreed to.

0 upvotes · 29 January 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

My assertion is that college education is not a requirement for LTR.

My proof is in the fact that the more educated a woman is, the less likely she is to be able to find such mate / marry.

women not being educated enough to have LTRs with college educated men. I'm talking about the latter.

More women are college educated than men today, and marriage is at an all time low. Jon Birger surmises it's that women want somebody of equal or higher education. Their options are dwindling.

This flies in the face of the idea that it is men who desire equal or higher educated women.

If this were true, women's education would result in higher marriage rates, and women would be uniformly rejected during the 50s and 60s.

Further, the very source you used stated plainly that women tended to marry up in age, which de facto is tied to men having higher education and earning power, even for women in the same education path that the men themselves are in.

The only way to draw the conclusion that college educated men prefer college educated women over non, is to say the statistics aren't real and that men who prefer college educated women only prefer so if they're behind a few years first.

In which case my original question stands: if men require education, but won't marry women of higher status (or those women won't marry them), then how educated do they require?

1 year? 2 years of college? Where do you draw the line?

Because one exists, according to you. Arbitrarily so, it would seem.

there is no species wide cooperation, or sex wide cooperation, humans are male dominated hierarchical band apes.

Luckily, there are no species-wide or sex-wide orgies, so this is completely off topic.

There are a lot of competing strategies for evolutionary success. Your assertion is not sufficiently evidenced.

The Myth of the Alpha Female

0 upvotes · 15 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

That's such an out though, because now we're talking about the possibility of a potential trait maybe hinting at high status males caring about divorce rape. Elon Musk has done it multiple times with the same woman. He doesn't seem to think about it.

I think it's fair to say that while some might consider it (as I mentioned in the post above) it's not going to be a statistically high number. Nor do I think it will actually help you become an 8 from a 7.

If you're in a pool of a bunch of 8s, then maybe it will put you above the rest, but really this is about timing and actually meeting somebody before somebody else does.

The high status males I know tend not to get married. Alimony fixed.

Even if it shifted your chances with a high status male by 1%, I think it's a dangerous myth to bandy around because it's this thinking that leads to spinsterhood- that focusing on education and career is the path to marriage. Many career women I know don't reach that 6-figure spot and education until well into their 30s.

For men, reaching these heights in their 30s makes them prime goods on the market. For women, it was a waste of their most important quality: youth.

0 upvotes · 5 September 2017 · /r/TheRedPill

I'm not sure the content breaks their TOS. Here's what their TOS says:

Instra Corporation prohibits unlawful use of a registered domain name or product/service we supply, in a manner that is harmful, threatening, abusive, harassing, defamatory, or hateful against another party. This includes, but is not limited to, hate speech, discrimination or harassment on the basis of gender, religion, sexuality or race.

Now I'm not a lawyer, but it seems to me their TOS says "unlawful use of a registered domain" and then they go on to qualify that unlawful use as harmful, threatening, etc.

The problem is, what about the hateful speech that is not unlawful? It would seem that this does not apply to this clause. Unless, of course, this clause is just a smokescreen and they really don't care about laws.

Here is what was censored: <http://a.trp.red/censored>

Not even remotely. I've been here making a well reasoned argument.

But for someone so secure in his convictions, much of what you've written here reeks of authoritarianism and intellectual dishonesty.

Not if you bother to read the argument that took place. You'll see quite a few people agreed with me, before many just resorted to petty insults and trolling.

What we're having here is a meta discussion about the original argument, so of course you won't see much substance here. But TFA knows exactly where we stand on these issues.

What do YOU want to do?

Part of learning the truth is embracing is and rejecting comfortable lies. Something this sub has a poor track record of, though admittedly TFA's move here was actually a step in the right direction.

I can only conclude that they have ulterior motives

My motives are to protect the community from a society that constantly attempts to temper and modify our tone and message. With TBP or Feminists, this line is easily drawn. With groups like this, full of both people I respect and people I have no respect for (who have openly admitted they dislike TRP and what it stands for), it's difficult to give it a pass or an endorsement (sidebar) when I can't easily tell if the tone or message is getting watered down.

0 upvotes · 29 April 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

If traditional marriage is too risky for men, what relationship types can evolve that are satisfactory for both sexes?

Precisely. When I founded RPW, in my address I said:

We had a radical idea- what if men and women learned about their natures and took proactive control of them, came up with a compromise that made both parties happier in the long run?

That doesn't mean what RPWives is thinking, which is "be unrelentingly stubborn about what we want to our own detriment" but instead "be realistic about our options given current market conditions, make compromises if necessary."

I, for one, think being a plate is a bad idea. The fact that they're pushing that we're a "plate school" is nothing more than malicious propaganda to try to sway people to their new sub.

If they wanted to keep the members, they had no such requirement to leave in the first place. By the way many of the ex-mods speak here, it seems they have very poor opinions of the entirety of the manosphere anyhow, which gives me the feeling it's a good thing they left.

But I do want to address, that access to sex question is probably a good part of the schism. Ultimately, I believe whether people want to accept it or not, there have always been evolutionary winners and losers.

I think that in today's age, we have a lot more winners than ever before, but there will still be some frustrated chumps who don't get it, get stuck with the bag, or end up alone.

At the end of the day, wanting equality is a very positive and idealistic goal, but there's a line that everybody draws in their lives where they decide that their own personal happiness needs to be a priority.

For the record, despite the typical anti-MRA vibe on TRP, I am a strong supporter of men's rights. But at the end of the day for my own personal life, I need to focus on what will bring me and my endeavors the best outcomes.

And for every advantage I get in my life, that means somebody else isn't getting it. It's not meant to be evil, it's just reality.

Your argument is insulin spikes are necessary. I am explaining to you that they are not.

Your entire point on glycogen stores are moot if you are in ketosis. It's not a personal view, it's just science.

If you haven't already, get rid of sugar, Gentleman.

If you control your intake properly, you shouldn't be having insulin spikes. An insulin spike means that you have too much energy and will now put some away as fat.

What is insulin, you might ask..

Insulin is a peptide hormone produced by beta cells in the pancreas. It regulates the metabolism of carbohydrates and fats by promoting the absorption of glucose from the blood to skeletal muscles and fat tissue and by causing fat to be stored rather than used for energy.

But, when does insulin exist in the blood stream?

insulin is provided within the body in a constant proportion to remove excess glucose from the blood, which otherwise would be toxic. When blood glucose levels fall below a certain level, the body begins to use stored glucose as an energy source through glycogenolysis, which breaks down the glycogen stored in the liver and muscles into glucose, which can then be utilized as an energy source.

Now that you've learned what insulin is and does, you'll probably start to wonder- but redpillschool, if my muscles need energy, how are they ever going to work without me guzzling ten tons of carbs? What ever am I going to do?

Good news honestdouche, we've discovered these little things called ketones, which can be metabolized more efficiently than glucose. Indeed, there is no clear requirement for dietary carbohydrates for human adults at all. What's crazier still, since we're on the topic of completely and totally debunking your bullshit: insulin is not needed for glucose uptake and utilization. But that's not that important, because we aren't debunking insulin's necessity to keep you going, we're debunking your stupid-as-fuck idea that you have to carb up to cause an insulin spike in order to bulk, which I will now link to you the study that summarily dismisses your entire point.

If you are causing insulin spikes on purpose, you will absorb as much energy as fat (and glycogen) as you don't burn. Run, don't walk to the gym after your spaghetti dinner.

Next time, try not to be such a douche when debating, because sometimes you might be wrong. Like this time.

Reputation and character have always been important considerations. Mob rule is an old god.

Don't get me wrong, you'll be smart to embrace these realities to get ahead in life.

But we are talking about very different things.

I am speaking specifically to the trend of one's status being more important than logic or reason when arriving at a conclusion.

For instance, being a red piller would make me wrong in any other subreddit, no matter what I say. Even if it were " $2 + 2 = 4$ "

But rather a scholar with credentials can make shit up with no evidence and start a movement.

There's a difference between an echo chamber, and a group of people who don't care to hear the same tired arguments over and over.

If you run a sub about tasty food, and somebody brings up fasting, they should rightfully get banned for being off topic. If somebody goes to an atheist sub and tries to convert people to Jesus, they rightfully should be banned for being off topic.

Likewise, coming here and arguing that we're misogynists gets you banned.

Having alternate views and opinions is allowed. Arguing from a moral standpoint and trying to 'convert' users is noise.

Marriage and Kids... How to do it the RP way?

0 upvotes · 2 January 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

In any case I'm sure there's a happy medium between extreme financial risk for the man and extreme financial risk for the woman. Would love to hear your thoughts.

I wish there were, but obviously divorce reform saw to it that there can be no middle ground. As somebody who will not compromise my views and preferences on the matter, it's something that disadvantages women, and they can deal with it.

The fact is, I am a man of my word, and if I made a decision to commit to this person, then any risk she's taking on is if she voluntarily ended the relationship without regard to me.

Obviously, that's not entirely true, she's taking the risk because it's impossible to predict my future behavior. I really wish there was an answer to this, but as it stands, feminists have so gutted the meaning and purpose of marriage, there just simply isn't another option. And for a man, taking on the marriage contract is not an option, period.

Marriage and Kids... How to do it the RP way?

0 upvotes · 2 January 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

You avoid Threatpoint, which is the power imbalance that I think destroys the marriage. It's not the same as keeping your game tight and hoping she stays in love with you, it's that the knowledge of the power she holds over you (that's to incentives for her to trash the marriage while you must uphold the marriage) corrupts her and grinds away at her respect for you. No woman will truly respect a man she has absolute control over.

Marriage and Kids... How to do it the RP way?

0 upvotes · 31 December 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

So have you found a traditional, conservative girl and built a family with her without her wanting to be married? Has anyone in this sub?

I found a very nice conservative girl who has entered into my fame and accepted that I will not marry her. We will see how it plays out.

In a lot of cultures marriage means joining of two families together. It's not about individual. She will ignore all that, despite her strong, traditional values just because you said so? Even though surely a nice, decent, good-looking girl will have other men who are willing to marry her before having kids?

I don't know if you noticed, but you can't just will our current western culture into submission into your romantic view of how it used to be.

Newsflash- having a child out of wedlock is not something a traditional, conservative girl who is close to her traditional, conservative family does. No traditional conservative father will say sure, have a child with a man who will never marry you.

Newsflash, women are water, and will take the shape of the container they are in.

Dig down- many of these states don't even really recognize it- for instance a few only recognize common law marriage in death (that is after one partner dies, redistribution of assets can take place as though they were married).

Men and women are wired differently. Us men have a sense of ego and dignity to maintain. Women, as I've come to notice, simply don't care and only work for what's best for themselves. They're not wrong for that, evolution and basic primal instincts have instilled in them a need to thrive so their potential offspring may thrive. Although this is just what I see, so I could be completely wrong.

I agree with this assessment. Though Russell's public persona depends a little bit on his honor, he may have realized it puts him in a better public position not to take the money. But realistically, it's emasculating to take a woman's money in a divorce, most guys wouldn't do it without feeling some level of shame. Women have no such inclination.

The feminine imperative predates feminism. Further, saying that attraction to pre-18 year old girls who are post pubescent is "pedo" or that "ephebophilia" is a slippery slope is absolutely complete bullshit worthy of a leftist blue ribbon.

Having a natural attraction to beautiful women is natural, and only a fem-centric society would try to shame men for having feelings.

0 upvotes · 1 April 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

but that shouldn't matter to you if you're operating under a mindset of outcome independence and of abundance mentality.

That's the point- you can embrace these things- they're red pill 101. And then you can use your training to look at situations realistically.

Have the mentality of abundance, but realize that sometimes the market is stacked against you. Your abundance mentality does you no good if it forces you into an incel situation. You must adapt to your market to best exploit it. (The best example of this is Roosh's "bang" guides, where he illustrates just how he has to change his approach for different cultures and markets).

What isn't obvious is why I should start jumping through hoops. If you hold the attitudes of abundance mentality and outcome independence, there's no reason to start jumping through hoops for a woman - she's replaceable.

This thoroughly misses the point of my essay- which is that you need to judge the market for what it is, and not be afraid of exploiting it. On the red pill, people are so balls-to-the-wall alpha-bro, they forget that some markets don't have that demand! You can charge 200% more than the next guy, but eventually you gotta think about why you're not making sales.

I'm not saying drop game- or your attitude. I'm saying calibrate to your market.

You would have me adapt to the market I'm already in, when I would rather just change markets.

No, not at all. Changing markets is a fine option too.

I'm a big fan of his. I think he's more emotionally honest than people would like- you get these faux-alpha-bro types here that claim he (or others) aren't alpha enough just because they illustrate their mental thought processes. I think it's a shame that those trolls do that- I like hearing his through process on his outings, his self doubt, his understanding, his decision making, it's very raw.

Anybody claiming to be successful without an inner monologue like his is trying to sell you some snake oil. Roosh admits his own shortcomings and owns it.

When you treat interactions with women like they are a game to be won, you objectify women, rival men, and yourself.

It seems that the study of anticipation of other's actions and reactions appears immoral to you. It's a bold accusation to make, to assume that studying to become better with women would be so bad. Perhaps you could tell my friend John who has never been loved and wants nothing more to find himself a long time partner to have kids with- you should explain that learning how to interact with them in an attractive way is evil. Maybe he should just keep doing what he's doing now, that's working well for him.. right?

Yes, game got a bad reputation from girls who demonize manipulation. This is because game is an effective strategy against their own sexual strategy.

So basically you don't like the words. I'm sorry you're so easily offended. I'd explain to you what that quote means but it seems you're too busy policing our nomenclature.

A) /r/TheRedPill[1] is full of people who demonstrably hate women. It's not universal, but it is the primary selling point of that subreddit.

I disagree wholeheartedly. It's full of people who like women and want to learn how to be liked by women. If that's your version of hate, then you and I are not using the word in the same way.

B) Claiming you don't hate a group is not enough to prove that you don't hate a group.[2]

By definition of hate, this is false, despite your example. I'd like to make special note here that getting together groups to talk about the most effective way to discriminate against other people isn't the same as talking about the best sexual strategy. Even if you disagree with one's sexual strategy, that does not serve as sufficient proof of hate.

You see, the fallacy here is that you think a group of men somehow need to prove they don't hate, but again, I haven't seen any proof that they do. I certainly don't.

Edit: I should make a distinction that there are guys who are misdirected and angry at women, but I hope you'd take the time to understand this isn't our goal, and in fact we aim to redirect that anger into understanding and personal growth.

Ensuring that we have a community that welcomes men with all the emotions that come along with it is a crucial and integral part of the red pill. It's not brash by accident. Our culture is so fucked, and so anti-male that there are no male spaces for guys to just be guys. You know, the fact is, sometimes guys need to vent, or need to be able to say what they're thinking. The red pill simply wouldn't exist as it is today if we didn't allow that to be this space.

Suggesting that we should curb this is concern trolling and against the very spirit of the sub.

0 upvotes · 17 January 2014 · /r/PurplePillDebate

You fail to consider that a woman may not see things from that perspective, your perspective

Not only do I not fail to consider this, but red pill theory is based entirely around the concept that they don't and won't.

Many women find the latter example high pressure, intimidating, and even objectifying. Why do you think clubs will offer free cover to women? Basically what I am saying is that both men and women have challenges, often unique to their gender, to deal with when it comes to dating, sex, and relationships. Don't tell me one minute that women are not men with tits and then turn around and analyze the female experience from only the male perspective.

It seems to me like you're arguing with somebody else, or trying to give me a red pill 101 lesson. Women are the selective gender, I've always acknowledged this. Nobody is suggesting women have it easier in all ways than men. Men want sex, women have it. Women want commitment, men have it. You're making some assumptions here about my views but I don't think you've actually asked me about them. All these issues are of course compounded by people with varying values in the sexual market. I think there's probably nothing harder than being an ugly/fat woman.

When things are good, he is the most amazing person to be around. When things are bad, they are really bad. They are hell. I'm sure you can carry a pleasant, light-hearted conversation, but the veneer will eventually wear off.

You're making such a leap here. You're assuming that because you disagree with our views, then we must therefore be abusive, and therefore we must eventually be abusive! That's not only incredibly incorrect, but incredibly presumptuous and downright wrong.

Furthermore, a lot of guys weren't insecure, but instead just not knowledgeable. They were quite secure in bad habits!

That's insecurity.

That is literally not insecurity.

You love what you believe women can do for you, because that's all you believe they are good for: sex, domestic duties, light-hearted companionship. Other than that women are useless.

This is the most presumptive thing I've read so far. You know, people demonize the redpill for making generalizations to try to predict other people's behaviors, but we're just attempting to take best-guess actions to maximize attraction. You, on the other hand, are just straight up bigoted, and I'm certainly glad not to be like you at all. "Women are useless." I saw a good quote just earlier today. "Marie Curie and Norman Borlaug are more valuable to humanity than pretty much everyone, man and woman, that I've ever met. Neither has any sexual value to me whatsoever."

Obviously if you think we have the views you so sorely misattributed, you'd think we hate women. Because honestly you don't want us to like them. Unfortunately for you, we're going to do what we want independent of you and your bigotted views.

If your mother touts traditionally feminine traits as inferior, she is not a feminist.

Let's see, feminism never talks about how submission is demeaning, or how being a stay at home mother is beneath them. Women never wore shoulder pads in the 90s. Feminists never cut their hair short or burn bras. Please..

Blue Pill isn't "beta"

0 upvotes · 16 January 2014 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Maybe we are committing the same problem, solipsism. The difference between men and women as I see it is that women won't suffer the same ill-effects. They may be absolutely clueless what and why works in the sexual market, but they would nevertheless be at least moderately successful. Whereas a man in a similar position who believes mistaken concepts about the nature of attraction would at most be rewarded with random and rare success. Men might be completely wrong about women loving trenchcoats, but he's not going to be rewarded with sex for such a mistake. Women will get sex in spite of such a mistake. (I will add that women may make bad decisions that lead them to never get a decent relationship- and I think a lot of women do come to terms with this, but I think that only happens later in life for women, because they mistakenly believe their ease of access to sex will eventually translate to ease of access to commitment when they feel the timing is right).

TRP is for insecure men who are tired of being insecure, but mistake the alternative to insecurity as being a bully.

I disagree entirely. For instance, I think you've read into "don't be nice, be an asshole" and assumed that means don't be pleasant to be around. Furthermore, a lot of guys weren't insecure, but instead just not knowledgeable. They were quite secure in bad habits!

I thoroughly believe that unless you are a sociopath (which some Red Pillers certainly are, even admittedly so), taking TRP's view of women, sex, and relationships will not solve any of the issues you think it will because it is just a different side of the same coin, it is the opposite extreme of the spectrum. Same shit, different package.

I think that it only seems sociopathic because most people don't analyze personal interaction this thoroughly or as obsessively. But that doesn't make it wrong, just unusual. As somebody who has always had moderate luck with women, I didn't really look at most of this myself until a few years ago. So I can see why anybody would consider it weird. I took one look at the seduction community and said, "ugh, there's a bunch of people I'm glad I'm not." But one day, shit hits the fan and you just look at the pieces left over and you can either pick yourself back up, try again, and hope for a different result- or you can try to understand where things went wrong in the first place.

I love women, I truly do. The best part of the red pill for me was accepting them for who they are instead of expecting them to be men with tits. I was trained by a feminist mother to expect masculine traits from women and was taught that feminine traits are beneath women. Ironically, she also taught that feminine traits were perfectly normal and healthy for me. I'm glad I escaped.

What does that even mean as directed toward me?

The entire frame against the red pill is basically that we don't have sufficient proof for our views and that we therefore should not have them. Choosing not to explore and theorize about the world because you're afraid of offending somebody or because you haven't seen a double blind study on it is resolving to chalk life up to random chance or magic. Instead of being proactive with one's life and making calculated decisions in mating, it's just crossing your fingers and hoping.

To be blunt, these messages seem a little incoherent (if not outright contradictory).

For example, if blue pill advice was to be yourself, and you got laid, it wouldn't be because you followed the advice. People who aren't getting laid who try it out will continue not to get laid, and people who were, will continue in spite of it.

.but if you believe the majority of people are gonna get laid and/or pair off anyway, why do you tout RP theory as the one true road map to sexual success?

Because I believe the majority of men are not successful in their relationship endeavors. Divorce is at an all time high, many guys can't find a mate, or marry the first woman who will pay attention to them, and many guys get brought to the cleaners in divorce court.

Having sex, and having sex on your terms are two different things. The worst part is men thinking that feminism was their own terms, and getting bitten on the ass for it.

I think most people, including myself, may eventually get laid or end up in a relationship/marriage without red pill strategies under their belt. But finding happiness and being intentional towards goals and outcomes is not nearly as common.

Before I discovered the red pill, I was in a multi-year relationship despite myself. Looking back I saw what I did wrong and what I did right. But back then it was closer to luck. I just threw stuff at a wall to see what stuck. If you had asked me then how I was good with women, I'd probably say something like "oh I'm just being myself."

Maintaining frame doesn't mean dominating a women in every day life. It's internal, not external.

Also, our sex was not kinky bdsm. Imagine a sex scene from a movie where two people are really into eachother, so the guy picks up the girl, puts her on the bed, while they make out and they frantically disrobe and go at it, while he takes the lead. When you're in the heat of the moment, you don't go at it gently, there were moments where you pick her up and put her in a position you want, don't ask for new positions, just put her there. This is not kinky, this is not bdsm. The roughest part was some spanking.

And yes, I would call TRP relationships being dominated in life.

And, well, you've got yourself a visceral reaction to something you don't understand. I'm sure as hell not going to put the effort in to explain this to you if you didn't put the time in yourself to understand it.

if you, the creator of red pill, can't explain what red pill hypothesis is to your own followers, then it's more the rantings of angry men rather than some sort of special truth.

Who said I can't? I do it all the time. The sidebar and discussion set the framework, and discussion takes place. It's a working set of theories, nothing is set in stone. Just because you can't fathom this, doesn't mean it's not taking place. Again, we have a lot of subscribers that manage to pick through it quite nicely.

The fact that everyone seems to arrive at vastly different conclusions with the exact same material means that the resources do a shit job at explaining red pill hypothesis.

Let's be fair here, what you mean to say is that the blue pill with a clearly biased objective has managed to interpret the red pill differently than red pillers, who seem to find consensus just fine. Color me surprised.

I'm not "admitting" anything. This is not a secret in the red pill.

This is just a verbose way of pointing out that different women like different things, and that plays a role in attraction.

Are you suggesting that every individual person on this planet has 100% unique preferences and there is zero possibility of improving one's own attractiveness because it's impossible to predict?

If different women like different things, how do the "red pill" generalizations possibly hold up?

Understanding that there are factors outside your control does not preclude that you can still utilize factors within your control. Furthermore, uncontrollable factors do not imply uniqueness.

I've never doubted that the "red pill" ideology works on some women.

Well, I don't think it's that red pill ideology works on a subset of women, but that all relationships are a result of confounding factors, and if we were able to enumerate them all (which we never will be able to), the factors would all be considered red pill theory. And while they would all make sense, personal application of these ideas would still only net an individual an increase in probability of success. (due to factors outside your control, perhaps looks, sense of humor, understanding of language, so on and so on).

How can you account for every single factor?

We can't.

What if the majority of women you hit on just don't respond well to RPT?

We tweak the approach and try some more.

There are always going to be factors outside our control. Our individual looks, the woman you're approaching, moods, time, hunger, personal life, heck, even what's playing on the radio at that moment can have an effect.

That's why we try adjusting one idea at a time and approach many women. It's a probabilistic theory, not deterministic.

For example: we posit that something like working out will increase your success rate. It certainly has for me.

You still never gave me the "red pill" ideologies' definition of "truth", by the way.

Our philosophy values knowing the truth, no matter how painful, as the first priority- before making decisions which focus on best possible scenario for the self. (somewhat hedonistic, but with long-term goals in mind).

Other philosophies may not necessarily preclude truth, but may not put as much importance on finding it.

For instance, most religions are based in part on the idea that you cannot test some of the claims. (nor should - "faith")

Some philosophies recommend that you ignore the wants of the self to find enlightenment. This does not preclude truth, only ignores it in the context of how it may effect your desires.

If you came up with a philosophy that says, "I will act only on facts, and only after I can verify by double blind experiment" then you could just as easily take the red pill moniker.

She still didn't go out with him but he made his intentions clear and stuck to his guns. It's not dishonest, it's covert communication. She knows he's not a push over. If he is interested in sex (or relationships) then he needs to ensure new relationships start on these terms. (and unfortunately in dating, you don't just be friends with every person who rejects you). Most importantly, settling for friends when you think you might convince them otherwise in the future is just spinning your tires if you show them your terms are negotiable.

This is just a key lesson in confidence, and how it might play out in a conversation.

I just want to comment that I'm glad you've been able to work on your body. The comments so far have not offered you better advice, but instead commented on why the red pill isn't good advice.

nwob says we're like racists.

saintmorning believes that you can vent elsewhere and people won't tell you you're a misogynist for being angry.

meanttolive presents a false dichotomy of treating women like people for the best results, as though our advice precludes this. It does not. His advice: stop trying to find companionship and focus on friends. In other words, set your goals lower. Sounds like advice you've gotten before. I think you know how effective feel-good politically correct advice works.

TRPdebateSN, here's what I think you should do.

I think you should take a deep look at what people are calling misogynistic. We show the actions of women and don't bother casting them in better light for a reason. Because these examples are there to show you that a healthy dose of skepticism is an important tool for navigating interpersonal relationships without being taken advantage of.

Pick up Roosh's day bang for the elderly opener, which is a great way to break out of your bubble. I've seen it used by guys who have never spoken to a girl in public before. It's nerve wracking, but no pain, no gain. We've all been through it. It sucks. Balls up.

enough. There's a distinction between saying "I observe X and it influences my behavior in manner Y," which is what everyone does, and "I observe X so it should influence your behavior in manner Y," which is what you often appear to advocate.

The people who end up at my sub read my view, and connect with it, perhaps a lot have similar experiences.

It implies that there is no consent in a perpetual consent contract. This relies on the definition of consent.

This can keep going in circles till the cows come home.

- You cannot force somebody to enforce a contract, you can only sue for breach of contract.
- This means that consent cannot follow contract law, because breach of contract in the wrong direction (one party withdrawing consent but the other party continues is criminal), giving a non-civil definition of consent.
- If consent followed contract law, then having sex against the immediate will of somebody would be considered sex with consent under a consent contract, thus negating any rape having taken place (rape being defined as sex without consent).

This was the outlay of the discussion, which was a thought experiment. I have not endorsed forcing anybody to have sex. I literally said, "I see nothing morally wrong if both parties knowingly enter into a contract of perpetual consent."

Arguing that this translates to "nothing morally wrong with sex against the immediate consent" fails to understand the meanings of the words I've written. Entering a contract is not the same as forcing somebody to have sex with you. You should be able to understand this difference.

All of this is hypothetical, because there is no such thing as a consent contract. (at least perpetually).

It was a thought experiment. I guess you think Schrodinger actually wants to kill cats too?

Final Edit: Filled out a bunch, finished now.

Pretty fair, I would add one nitpick to the interpretation- albeit it's not one the no ma'am guy presented. It's commonly held on the sub that this is not an intrinsic property of women, but instead the result of a lack of economic forces.

For instance, it is not all women who are less mature, but instead the prettier the woman, the more she gets away with, the less pressure she has to learn to mature.

This is a trend that we noticed, and exceptions always apply.

Put away the word marriage for now. Marriage does not include perpetual consent. It's unrelated.

If I make a contract that says "you and me will have sex at the whim of the other no matter what for the next year" and we both sign it, then in this thought experiment, this is consent. You can't just pretend that it was somebody else signing the contract one day, and then the lack of desire the next day means there wasn't consent.

Again, in a thought experiment.

But without those controls (and make no mistake, they do not currently exist today), monogamy is entirely for the benefit of women and only women.

I think you missed the target there- 100 women would be better sharing bill gates? Then 1 woman owning bill gates is even better. What does he benefit with 1 woman verses 100? What does she benefit?

He can impregnate 100 women, she can carry only one child at a time. She wants to monopolize resources that is her goal- monogamy from him is her tool. Mind you, that doesn't mean she will adhere to the same standards- she may cheat and get better quality sperm from an alpha, but monogamy from him serves her, not him.

Red pill is just silly and is doing no favors for the MRM

Anti-intellectual blanket dismissals like that do nobody any favors.

Women have concealed ovulation. One of the most prominent theories for the prevalence of concealed ovulation in high-offspring-investment species such as ours is ensuring that paternity will be difficult to determine (and therefore minimize the risk of losing resources from a provider when raising children with genetically superior dna). Not knowing when a woman is in heat accomplishes such a goal.

That cultures set up and maintain certain narratives that best serve themselves is nothing new- the idea that knowing paternity can have an effect on the offspring's access to resources, a few different strategies have been used- again ambiguity in paternity, cultural honor in raising children that are not yours, and even in extreme cases (France) making paternity tests themselves illegal.

You may not like looking at human mating the same way scientists have studied other species for as long as they have- but to outright try to ignore or censor an entire group because you don't like the message is.. well, it's a lot like what everybody else does to /r/mensrights.

So, by your logic, you should never have sex with any girl you meet because she might accuse you of rape.

Well I do take precautions. It helps if they don't know your name. Or if they do, I get morning-after texts. It is scary, you're right..

I made the value/risk assessment and landed a little higher on my list than you.

False rape accusations are scary, though I think I've got a pretty good system to thwart them- and I think the risk is still cheaper than marriage with negligible added value (for me).

I would argue that marriage to the right woman is of more value than casual sex.

I take exception to the concept of "the right woman," every single man who has ever been taken to the cleaners by a woman thought he found the right one until she wasn't.

The benefits of casual sex are self-satisfaction and personal pleasure. The risks are STDs, pregnancy, child support, rape accusations, clingy women, and many more.

A lot of these risks can be mitigated on my side: Pregnancy/Child support - Vasectomy (Condoms). STDs are a risk in any involvement with a woman. Don't think that just because she says she's monogamous means she is. Many married men get STDs just before the divorce.

Again, I'm not claiming there's any right way to live- at the end of the day you have to make the value judgement to find happiness yourself. I'm often jealous that MGTOW can find happiness with their philosophy. I personally can't do it without some sex.

but enough are that we see noticeable differences in trends when we use red pill theory to make choices

Not when it has such drastic repercussions like the ones I've mentioned.

What? I don't understand what you're saying.

've already explained how it's deceitful manipulation. You're misleading a woman into a relationship under false pretenses. Normal people are up front about their expectations for the relationship, they don't try to manipulate their partner into it.

You've explained why lying about a relationship is deceitful manipulation. Which is a straw man, as I mentioned I agree lying about your expectations from a relationship is deceitful manipulation. I also mentioned we don't really advocate that. I feel like you didn't read my reply. Because you're arguing with somebody who isn't here.

You're assuming there's a preference when they indicate otherwise, and basing this assumption on the belief that women lie about it. There's absolutely no scientific validity to this. If you can find a decent study that proves all women are attracted to masculinity, then I'll accept this statement as true.

From my reply: And of course nobody is saying a woman can't date a skinny timid boy, we're saying that being a skinny timid boy is a poor strategy if you want to find a date.

Misleading a person into a long-term relationship for the purpose of sex or utility is incredibly unethical.

I agree, that is certainly not a common motif on our sub.

Believing something doesn't make it true. Some people are happy in their egalitarian relationships. Sometimes women lie, but you're assuming they all do. Again, you're generalizing the female gender, which is wrong.

No, generalizing isn't wrong, it's simply how we process the world around us. Making decisions on a day to day basis requires generalizations. You're right, not all women are like that... but enough are that we see noticeable differences in trends when we use red pill theory to make choices.

If I say humans have teeth, I'm not denying that some people have lost theirs. That's not how generalizations work. Arguing against a generalization as though it implies 100% or 0% is fighting a straw man.

Deceitful manipulation is a masculine trait? Because that's what you're doing, and that's the only thing I'm taking issue with.

No, you're the only one suggesting that. This is the first time I've seen anything about it.

I'm aware a lot of women like masculine men, I'm not refuting it.

Good.

What I am refuting is that they all do, which is scientifically incorrect.

Again, you fail to grasp what a generalization is.

Some women prefer men without masculine traits, or value other traits over it.

Some women end up with men without masculine traits, but that doesn't mean there's a preference. For instance, if I'm in a tribe with 50 women, I might marry one. But that doesn't mean I wouldn't choose a different woman had I been presented 100 options. There's a lot more to the theory than simply "women like big muscles," market forces play into it as well. And of course nobody is saying a woman can't date a skinny timid boy, we're saying that being a skinny timid boy is a poor strategy if you want to find a date.

Whisper comments brilliantly on why /r/TheRedPill exists (a subreddit for the discussion of sexual strategy in a culture increasingly lacking a positive identity for men)

If you can find a woman who is willing to adopt the gender roles you prefer, then I have absolutely no problem with this at all. However, the guides on that site instruct viewers on how to manipulate women into adopting them who might not prefer it. Traditional gender role should always be a choice between both parties, if not then the relationship isn't meant to be.

There's a curious mistake you're making, and I'm wondering if you're aware of it.

manipulate women into adopting them who might not prefer it.

This seems to imply that women are incapable of making decisions for themselves, that they lack agency and are only objects to be controlled. Whereas my experience with women is that ultimately, they control their actions.

The idea that we are somehow tricking women who do not prefer our views into.. preferring them is ridiculous.

You do realize that if we approach a woman who doesn't like us, they have free will and can walk away.

I know you're not trying to be inflammatory, so please understand I don't mean this with offense, but it's a strange phenomenon I keep seeing- people claim that our sub is somehow misogynistic and objectifies women-- and then go on to do literally that- objectify a woman by assuming she lacks agency.

If we are to presuppose that women are equals, then we must accept that it is their choice to take action.

Furthermore, I want to explain that most of them men on the red pill (myself included) didn't really give two shits about traditional gender roles. I know I didn't care. I wanted a relationship to be a fair partnership. I wanted the new-age marriage where sometimes dad stays home while mom brings home the bread.

You know, the contemporary relationships and marriages that women keep talking about, the future! Equality!

And you know why our sub exists? Because all these men, myself included, discovered that women had no respect for it. They said they wanted it, but they didn't. Spend a few days on deadbedrooms or even ask women and you'll start to notice a trend. When women get what they say they want, they begin to hate you for it.

Enter masculinity: So, we posited a theory. If we embrace masculinity, what happens?

I'm talking about being decisive, bold, brash, even sometimes foolhardy. Don't worry about offending people's sensibilities. Be a man. Make a mess when you eat. Enjoy life.

Turns out, women started responding very positively towards that. Despite the fact that our culture all but demonizes masculine traits, we found that women respond very positively to masculine traits.

Understand that we did not choose this, we reacted to it.

Some of our posts are ridiculous, or use hyperbole to make a point. But this is in essence what we're about. It's not absurd, and it doesn't hate on women. The posts where we highlight women being hypocritical is to ensure that we do not slide backwards to our old ways. You see, when a woman looks you in the eye and says point-blank: "this is what I want," we used to give it to them. And that's when the relationships would start to fail.

We've learned this concept: they test boundaries. They do it because they want to know how manly you truly are. Part of being a man is knowing how and when to say no. And of course, knowing how and when to say yes.

These ideas seem outwardly misogynistic, don't they? And that's why it took us so long to understand them. Because when the thought police tell you not to even consider an idea because it's so wrong, you tend not to consider it! Ask yourself this: I've described masculine traits... why is everybody's gut reaction that being masculine is evil? It's ingrained into all of us, isn't it? Where did it come from?

bills. The sleeping in your car while you spend your last thousand dollars on a last ditch advertising campaign. Eating McDonalds dollar menu so you can afford to pay your employees.

No, sir, you've got no idea just how much blood sweat and tears goes into starting a business.

You see the Sam Waltons on the top of the food chain, looking comfortable, so you never realize what it took to get there. From your perspective, it looks just like dumb luck.

It's not luck. It's perseverance. It's getting through the dip, and knowing when to quit.

But let's pretend that it was dumb luck for a second, that would imply that anybody has equal chance of making a business. Which means my original argument: Don't like it, start your own, could still stand.

See the problem with censoring these things- and trust me we've had a lot of discussions regarding it- is that men have rarely had a place to discuss, rant, and vent freely without the overwhelming politically correct crowd saying "hey stop it, that's wrong. That's misogynistic!"

If you shut it down, they'll just go elsewhere to complain. And that keeps us from having a place to constructively move forward from that anger.

A lot of the more senior members will repeat this- accepting red pill theory is a lot like the stages of grief. You have to push through denial and anger before acceptance.

There's just no clean or easy way to do it.

But the least effective thing to do would be to censor it, to tell them they're wrong for having these feelings. Because, well, that's how they got into this mess in the first place.

Sexuality and social climate are different things.

But you're advocating for both- that we can condition people not to be attracted to particular traits (masculinity or femininity).

I don't know what women you've talked to, because I've met plenty of women who don't select men for strength and don't find feminine men totally abhorrent.

That's what we call the feminine imperative- the ability to convince society at large that women just want a kind, gentle, sensitive man.

Just look at the prevalence of sales to see Magic Mike or the book 50 Shades of gray to realize that women commonly find things attractive that they'll say they don't!

Most women would balk at the suggestion that rape fantasy turns them on.

I know many women who don't select for strength. They cheat on their husbands with guys like me.

The right to vote should be tied to not only the responsibilities, but the maturity that comes from having the responsibilities. Until women have the responsibilities, they will not understand the consequences of their actions, and thus make poor decisions when voting.

If you Discriminate, then you are a Racist.

Why should that sentence hold value or meaning if not acknowledging the implicit logic chain you just built?

And if logic is therefore a useful tool, then it must be consistent with itself.

(See what I did there? Another logical condition and implication.)

You cannot say: If you discriminate, then you are a racist. If you discriminate, then you are not a racist.

This is internally inconsistent- without even addressing the question of whether or not discrimination in itself is racist.

If logic is consistent, which you are assuming it is, because you just attempted to use it to change my mind about something, then you have to acknowledge that the only way to do disprove or dismantle somebody's logic is to point out where the logic breaks down.

But, you see, here's what you did instead. You just waved your hands and said, "whatever, you're just using words, don't mean nuthin'."

Of course the problem with that argument is that it's self defeating. If words mean nothing, your post means nothing.

It's absurd, and you appear illiterate. It does nothing to shake either my point, my understanding, nor the understanding of any onlookers who have just read this thread and watched me give you the metaphorical beat down of your life.

They teach logic in school, by the way. This time it's free, next time I'm charging.

Not sure who you're talking to. I said "Nothing racist about having a preference for ethnicity."

Roosh made it clear he has a preference for both whites and white culture.

Roshaboro here thinks that's racist.

I made the analogy that it's the same as having a preference towards gender or weight (i.e. a preference and a right).

And you're telling me I'm asserting that makes not being white negative.

Sure the genes were passed on. Throughout evolutionary history, betas have played a role in mating just as alphas did. But that doesn't mean marriage itself was instrumental. It was more of an afterthought.

How the feminine imperative hurts teenage women...

Our genes and the human species evolved over hundreds of millions of years. Homosapien over hundreds of thousands. Marriage over less than 10% of that.

Marriage has been useful in building society, but not necessarily our genes.

That's why we compare our results to well known evolutionary psychology.

It's pretty well known that I can pretty well screw up my chances with a new fling by going up to her, declaring my love, and telling her we should get married on day one. Makes me look desperate?

That's universal. Will ruin my chances 100% of the time.

Why is that? We ask ourselves...

So we turn to evolutionary psychology. Women want high status males. Since women want high status males, high status males will be wanted by other women as well. If he's wanted, he's less likely to be desperate.

It's social proof.

It's a simple form of logic that we use.

Sex as a weapon...losing interest

0 upvotes · 21 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

We don't actually know what women have, biologically, always done. Red pill is about evidence, not about what we heard from others, or want to be true.

We've got a very strong indication through evolutionary biology. Male bodies are larger and stronger, as they were the protectors, women being the protected. Hypoagency.

I personally find it difficult to believe, however, that natural selection favors a species half-composed of useless dead weight.

Women weren't dead weight. They made babies.

I think that in societies where there is such a thing as women's work, and women are held responsible for doing it, they can live up to that.

No arguments here. The only argument I would make is that women's work minimized risk, vs men's work took on maximum risk.

We have allowed our women to run wild instead of spanking them when they misbehave. As a result, we have spoiled women. I don't propose to let us get away with shifting blame by claiming spoiled women are a universal phenomenon.

It's true, left unchecked they act like spoiled children. But their nature hasn't changed, just our culture.

Everyone needs boundaries drawn for them.

Ever see Game of Thrones? The new king is a child who hasn't matured yet. Because he hasn't matured, he needs discipline, but since nobody can discipline the king - he just keeps getting more and more spoiled. I view women that way.

All we need to do is give them nothing until they earn it.

This would work, but only if all men were in on it. As it stands, that doesn't seem possible.

Sex as a weapon...losing interest

0 upvotes · 18 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I disagree. Biologically, women have always used hypoagency to effect their survival. Women are biologically objects, whereas men are biologically agents. There will never be a market shift which brings women primarily into the role of agents, thus the risks and responsibilities associated will never be fully realized by women. They are this way because of evolution.

Don't get me wrong, I manage to keep my harem fresh, and I still meet the occasional lady worth a damn. But my frustration is the increasing occurrence of the bitch type, and how it's permeated old ways of meeting new people.

Unfortunately, as the social scene gets worse, the problem is exponential. For instance, you suggest hanging out and meeting people through friends as a form of vetting process. But imagine that all of my friends are running into the same shortage as I am, that means they have less people to introduce into the group.

Where I am, classes aren't the solution, day game isn't the solution, friends aren't the solution. Imagine the landscape after the nuke already dropped. Sure there are a few people alive afterwards, but they've mutated.

This is why i ignore SRS private messages

0 upvotes · 16 January 2013 · /r/MensRights

Insults are not debate. This is not an opinion.

To believe they should or could be used outside of an argumentative context is to ignore the core reason they exist. To cause damage. Why would you cause damage to something you agree with? Ah, you wouldn't! You would use them against somebody you disagree with- preferably as a way to either dissuade them from having an opinion or view, or to ensure public view is not swayed by said opinion or view. (Through a variety of mechanisms i.e. shame, fear).

Within the context of an argument, insults themselves do not constitute arguments and are therefore superfluous. The only reason to use them is to elicit an emotional response, typically to attempt to "win" the argument by either making the other side fail by being overwhelmed with emotion, or lose by public opinion (shame).

you managed to out-arrogance yourself with your edited statement speaking of your astonishment that somehow people could disagree with you.

I have already established that insults are not debate. It seems that you've run out of legitimate arguments, so you've turned to insults (i.e. presuming my arrogance and proceeding to say I've topped it!). Of course my point stands, insults are the last refuge of the out-argued. You've done little but prove my point.

I think what's most interesting is the blanks she fills in during the discussion. She assumes what we do is degrading and then asks women, "hey do you like being degraded?"

Of course that question would come back with a resounding "no."

There are subtleties to seduction that women will never grasp, because when spelled out they do sound kind of ridiculous. That's why it's counter-intuitive.

Wake Up and Take The Red Pill

0 upvotes · 14 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

You know, I understand the MGTOW movement. I even applaud it because it represents a shift of balance in today's sexual marketplace. But one thing should be known- it is giving up.

I know that this form of protest can be potent, and- given enough momentum- might have an effect. But frankly, these guys have calculated that women are more trouble than their worth, and I worry that this is quitting during the dip.

For instance, I consider myself going my own way in the fact that I will never enter a relationship, let alone marriage. But I'm not ghosting by any means. Instead, I fill my evening with sex. It seems a good portion of these guys are ghosting, and I'm not sure that's the most beneficial thing for them to do (for themselves).

I think a marriage strike will just as much send a message.

But who am I to blame these guys? Plus, it thins the pool a bit, makes my job easier.

That's also a load of crap. These women didn't "have to stop"; they choose to because they are no longer interested in casual flings. Their focus shifts - they'd rather invest in their career, they start thinking about solid relationships and starting a family, and they leave immaturity behind. And most of them still manage to find someone they love and settle down, despite your insistence that they're ugly and nobody wants them.

There's some mental gymnastics.

What I meant is that women want men smarter than them, I agree with that. Men want women smarter than other women, but not smarter than themselves.

I would be fine dating a woman smarter than me, though I know full well it wouldn't work (she would have no respect for me, not the other way around). That said, I do not select for intelligence. Most men do not.

If everything else was equal between two women, I would select the more intelligent of the two. But physical beauty ranks much higher in the list for men. So high, that they put up with dumber-than-average chicks all the time. That's why the stereotype of hot models and sexy women is that they're completely air headed. (Because they get selected no matter what- no need to work on brains)

Women who lack hot-qualities may engage men on an intelligent level as a backup approach, but they will not compete in the market place well, nor will their knowledge improve their attractiveness level nearly as much as a good pair of breasts.

I mean, would you really be ok with an unintelligent woman being the mother of your children?

Based on the caliber of ladies I've met in my life, I've already come to the realization that if I have children, their mother won't be a source of knowledge for my kids.

Oh, by all means, I have no desire to leave what reddit was when we started up.

But that's not reddit today. Our forum is massively censored by the higher ups, and our team has been picked off one-by-one as they try to subvert our purpose.

Today, there are certain topics that are strictly prohibited. That we used to talk about regularly.

We have to censor words regardless of context to prevent anti-evil from shutting us down. TRP proper is already a shell of what it used to be because of these changes. It pains me to watch a conversation that can only have one side because the other side is censored.

This isn't "easier" to use. It's ideologically incompatible with the red pill.

We're keeping trp proper on reddit as long as we can. But the writing is on the wall.

And, for lack of a better metaphor, anybody who doesn't see the truth on this one is.. taking the blue pill :)

I look at it this way, believing there's a mythical unicorn out there is as much a fairy tale blue pill as anything else we discuss here.

If you want to have kids, which is a decision I think one is free to make, then you need to look at the world realistically and ask, "What risks am I willing to take?" "What will make a good mother?"

And I'm not sure I have an answer to that second question. But I think I've got the experience necessary to know a lost cause when I see one. At that point, we start over again with a new woman.

That said, believing there's going to be a relationship without hitches is naive at best. The problems I run into with this woman are mole hills compared to the mountains most plugged-in guys face.

She knew she crossed lines and approached me to apologize and thanked me for setting boundaries. My current concern is making sure that she respects the boundaries rather than apologizes after crossing them. And like any child, it doesn't help that she didn't have somebody teaching her boundaries when growing up. I don't know any women who had quality parents these day.

Still going to make the best of it. Going to have kids. Much respect for anybody who decides not to, but I want them.

Tips for the young married alpha

-1 upvotes · 5 May 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

So I've been dating this LTR for 1.5 years (my RPW flair was wrong, just fixed it). She and I moved into a new place together just a few months back, and I am noticing a larger than usual number of "tests" though not quite as obvious as the ones you've listed here.

I'm getting things like her getting irrationally upset about something at work, and then getting upset with me for "not being supportive."

My response to this has basically been to say "if you wanted support and comfort, you know how to get it. Acting out like this won't work. Sometimes my response like this drags out the fight a few hours. But I never back down.

What I'm wondering is, why the tests keep coming, despite my putting my foot down every time. She's seeing my boundaries, and just won't get it.

Last week she gave me some attitude while we were spending a day out together, and I immediately changed our plans, drove her home, and went out to the bar alone. She knows my boundaries.

But I'm not feeling confident that these tests are going to be subsiding...

Am I doing something wrong? Should I be providing more comfort than I am?

TRP on Border Erosion

-1 upvotes · 5 May 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

I know it's one of the few rp places you don't have control over, and that's OK.

It's not that I don't control it- it's that the activity here greatly resembles TBP trolling- it's a free for all here, and it looks like the advice could take you down either rabbit hole.

I've always been in favor of content being judged on its merit. And there are some really good posters here. In fact, a month or so back, I was re-analyzing the sub to put on my sidebar.

But there's a damn witch hunt right now, in this very post, that is very SRS. Regardless of who its directed at (me in this case), it's behavior that falls far below the threshold for the quality that belongs on our sidebar. That my post managed to bring the trolls out of the woodwork, and moderators here entertain and join in- well it makes me confident in my decision.

Fact Vs Opinion: Why it IS Important

-1 upvotes · 3 August 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

This reads an awful lot like tone policing.

We already operate under the understanding that a majority of our statements are nothing more than each individual's opinion. We already operate under the understanding that generalizations are generalizations.

This is a call to modify tone and language. I would rather our board communicate the way men tend to communicate than to focus on political correctness.

These posts are not allowed. Please do not concern troll. The race to political correctness is a race to the bottom.

For the record, women aren't funny.

Edit: I think your heart's in the right place, so you're not banned, but we're extra sensitive to tone policing. You can write your opinion on the pros and cons of powertalk vs straight talk (Because that's what you're actually doing here), but don't make the value judgement for me, I decide how I'm going to talk.

What I just realized about feminist's obsession with changing the laws.

-1 upvotes · 5 January 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

Feminism is women's attempt at maximizing female sexual option, both in alpha fucks, and beta bucks. (more opportunities for women, less responsibility, free money for kids, free money for divorce)

It's also their attempt at minimizing male option. (less opportunities for men, risk of false rape claims, divorce rape, legal liabilities).

Marriage and Kids... How to do it the RP way?

-1 upvotes · 31 December 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

I would go through precisely what a marriage contract really means, (how little it means), and explain how modern feminism destroyed marriage, and explain how you do not believe in taking part in said institution when it is inherently anti-male. Tell her that if she respects you and loves you, that no piece of paper will make a difference.

It's simply not a trap I'd be willing to step into, and it would be a deal breaker for me.

Then you delete them and you don't make a rookie mistake like that again.

Remember- you shouldn't be apologizing that often... unless you literally do something dumb like add a bunch of your girlfriend's friends you don't fucking know.

So, here you are, validating her feelings, completely side-stepping the creep line (because it's a red herring, don't address it), and being proactive, and building comfort.

Edit: Phrasing.

Double edit: ikillu up here has some good advice too- but be forewarned, treating aggressive shit tests and compliance tests should be in context of whether or not they're unprovoked, or if you've actually done something stupid. I recommend the backpedal in this case because OP really did something stupid. He could try to fly off the handle and beat this like a power play, but remember, on an issue when you just did something really stupid, it might not be worth it.

Can we put something in the sidebar to explain how we're not even remotely related to the red pill?

-1 upvotes · 4 June 2014 · /r/MensRights

I won't make any snap judgements and say I decide what traits are good and what traits are bad.

It seems, in a round about way, the world is sexist for thinking that women aren't special for making babies.

People see the words we write, but don't really understand them, so I understand why you'd think we're implying that women are inferior to men. Except that's a completely and totally meaningless phrase that presupposes that qualities can be ranked on a scale, where male qualities are better than female qualities.

The fact is, men are superior to women in a number of qualities: strength, agility, speed... these are all physical characteristics, and men win against women hands down.

But the other side of the coin never gets quoted. Women still win the biological race. While men are busy competing for attention, a majority of women will still breed. Men are simply less valuable. Biologically, men are nature's experiment. Our DNA varies more greatly, our differences are greater (there are more genius and more idiot men than women, women tend to stick to the middle of the bell curve, on average we are basically the same), and men simply tend to die more before spreading their genes, or never get a chance in the first place.

And that's the reason we march men out to war. Because a village with a few women and a thousand men will die in a generation. But a village with a few men and a thousand women will flourish.

Women are inherently worth more to society.

Now, in recent times, this valuation may not be as necessary, we actually spend a lot of effort keeping ourselves from making babies (birth control, barriers, abortion), but the ingrained ideas that women are important and require protection didn't just go away. They're still there.

Also, I'd like to add that it's not that women aren't capable of honor- it's that honor is a construct of men. It's meaningless among women (to a degree). Obviously there are women in the military with much honor. But they are fulfilling traditionally masculine roles. There's nothing wrong with that, by the way. I'm just demonstrating where honor is derived.

I can see you really are intent on trying to shoehorn us into the square of hatred you've set out, but it simply isn't so. If you want to keep talking I'm happy to continue.

And, frankly, this common accusation that all I do is circlejerk is unfounded. It perpetuates itself. The red pill isn't a simple or concrete idea, it's still being formed via collective consensus and experiences, but for the most part, the side bar is a pretty good introduction.

I am regularly convinced that people haven't done that bare minimum.

When I respond with "you don't understand" it's because for the most part, you've got some regulars here who are only here to troll, and do things like continuously label me a rapist when it's been clarified hundreds of times.

So it's incredibly offensive to even suggest that I am just evasive. On the contrary, I'm sick of explaining it to blue pillers who have demonstrated time and time again absolutely no respect for the subject at hand. No, I will not do the leg work for you.

If I asked, loki, can you prove you didn't rape and kill a teenage girl in 1996, is your silence on the matter proof that you in fact did rape and kill a girl? Or is it more likely that the insinuation I'm posing by asking such an absurd question shouldn't even be entertained?

Mark Manson critiques and breaks down RP mindset on "manipulative women"

This is a debate sub, and for the purposes of debate, you need to have an agreed upon definition.

It's been said before, that the red pill has made the claims, so it must defend them. But it's my contention that the claim here is that the blue pill thinks we're wrong, and when pressed to find out why, they say "well you never explained it to us.. so ..you're wronger now!"

without honest criticism you end up with an echo chamber.

I don't consider any of that to be happening on this subreddit, which is basically full of pedants missing the forest for the trees. People's insistence of arguing with me on every single little detail instead of the broader points has lead me to this. I don't think any group with as much vitriol as the blue pill could ever bring honest criticism when they're so hell bent on us being wrong.

As proof- despite my high karma count, I've gotten downvoted enough here that I have a 7 minute lag between posts.

I'm going to break it down for you.

I prefer young women, preferably between 18-22. I enjoy tight bodies, and prefer them to be kind and gentle. I find the attitudes of women 22+ to be less tolerable. This is merely my experience.

Here are the assumptions you have just made, which are uncalled for entirely:

1. I do not approach a wider net in order to test my theories.
2. That people do not appeal to me that might lie outside of my briefly stated preferences.
3. That I only approach young people
4. That the girls who would have sex with me must be insecure
5. That I prefer insecure.
6. That I only have casual sex.
7. That only girls interested in casual sex are interested in me.
8. That this approach is not effective outside of your theoretical group.

Furthermore, I do not do much club or bar approaching. If you actually talked to me or asked before making your absurd conclusions, you'd know I prefer day-approaches at coffee shops and grocery stores.

If TRP is ineffective, what sexual "strategies" do work?

-1 upvotes · 16 October 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Frankly, women call me a jerk all the time, but it's always playful. I wouldn't recommend being actually unpleasant. That said, sometimes you have to be unpleasant when confronted with a temper tantrum or the like.

Edit: I'll add- When it comes to really hot bitchy girls, though, you do sometimes actually have to insult them before they ease up.

If TRP is ineffective, what sexual "strategies" do work?

TRP works for getting sex from young, dumb, malleable women who are already out looking for sex. I wasn't denying that.

There's that shaming language. Any woman enjoying herself with a guy like this must be young dumb and malleable.

It's a question regarding the nature of consent.

The reason it's posed as a thought experiment is because I think sex against somebody's will is wrong.

Now, if I gave blanket consent and took it away, that would raise two questions:

1. If consent is a legal contract, then you would have permission to have sex, therefore there would be no rape.
2. If consent is a legal contract, then you cannot force the other party to participate, only sue if they refuse.

These are two conflicting ideas, which brings us back to the thought experiment. What is consent?

In no way do I endorse carrying out an experiment on these ideas.

The point is simple, the submission was removed because it is not red pill. I do this every day. You cannot shoehorn deleted stuff saying "but some members voted for it!" In fact, a lot of blue pillers talk about how our subscriber rate isn't that large because most people are there just to troll and watch us act like idiots.

If we define the word rape to mean bananas, it would be:

If consent followed contract law, then spousal bananas would be considered sex with consent under a consent contract, thus negating any bananas having taken place.

This is why it's a hypothetical thought experiment. We're not talking about what is, we were talking about what if perpetual consent could exist?

Edit: You do understand why I'm using descriptive words in a discussion about definitions, right?

-1 upvotes · 24 July 2013 · /r/MensRights

No, the term circle jerk is impossible to define, that's what makes it unfalsifiable. Circle jerk is indistinguishable from a forum that stays on topic. Any forum with a narrow scope will inevitably be called a circle jerk, but it serves no purpose other than attempting to give a negative context to an otherwise on-topic and potentially good discussion.

Concern trolling is very easy to define, and therefore very falsifiable:

Is this content on topic, or discussing what should be on topic?

The meta conversation is concern trolling and is treated as such.

Typically speaking, we don't ban people for concern trolling, as it's not usually done out of malice, but it does detract from discussion when there's a weekly post "hey guys can we not do this??"

Finding somebody who compliments you doesn't mean you can find one worthy of your trust. That's the worst part of this- you never know who you can't trust until it's too late. And the legal system is put into place to ensure the least trustworthy will be rewarded the greatest.

You see different risks than I do comparing our lifestyles. My opinion is simple: Even if I eventually resolve to monogamy, I see literally no additional benefit to marriage than I would have in just a monogamous relationship- and a lot of added risk.

Any involvement with women carries risk. Marriage just adds a ton more.

Whisper comments brilliantly on why /r/TheRedPill exists (a subreddit for the discussion of sexual strategy in a culture increasingly lacking a positive identity for men)

Men and women are both susceptible to being manipulated. And they are both capable of discovering they're being manipulated by their partner and that weeks or months of their romantic lives have been wasted on a heartbreak.

You've got this idea that there's a secret passcode to women's panties? How would I manipulate a woman? Tell her I'm Jesus and then let her in on the secret later? If a woman decides to have sex with me, it's her choice. You might think that I'm overpriced goods, that's your opinion. People also have the right to buy apple products even though they just throw an apple logo on a PC and charge twice the price. Is that manipulation? Where does personal responsibility come into play?

At what point do you draw the line and say, "hey redpillschool, you're not just responsible for 100% of your actions, but you're responsible for 50% of everybody else's actions."

If driving a fast car makes me attractive to women, I'm going to do it. Call it manipulation if you want. I'll argue that it sure is manipulation- those damn manipulative women tricked me into buying a car!

No, some women want it. Others want an egalitarian relationship, or even to be in the dominant role. You're generalizing all women and assuming every one fits your narrow criteria, and if they don't then they don't realize it and need to be "taught" it.

If this were true, the red pill wouldn't exist. We'd all be happy in our original egalitarian relationships. Sometimes women lie about what they like.

It's not ingrained into all of us, it's ingrained into most of us and to different degrees.

Look at every accusation on this thread that I'm a misogynist. Tell me it's not pretty well ubiquitous.

Not all men or women are the same. Part of it's biological, and part of it is socialized. You appear to be assuming all of it is biological, and that gender traits are universal for everyone.

Turns out, evolution is a bitch. Whether or not you like that you see colors, we've evolved the ability to see colors. Whether or not you like oxygen, we've all evolved the need for it. You might think we're all special snowflakes, but we're not really that different at all. I'm not assuming anything. I'm positing a theory: When I treated women with the reverence they demand, they hated me. When I act like a masculine man, women loved me. I'll let you theorize why that's true, while I go enjoy it.

My battle and reason is the education of the red pill. Look at my name. Look at my sub. This is my dedication.

I think that on a really fundamental all humans are looking out for their own interests and that a lot of logic and rationality is misapplied because we are subservient to these drives (I fully accept that this applies to myself as well).

This is entirely red pill thinking.

Disagree. If you discovered a formula for happiness, would you then not want to use it? But if you did, you must accept the inherent logic in that sentence. "If, then." Logic is but a tool. I see no reason to demonize the use of it.

I believe the truth behind the red-pill lies in human biology and that we should use logic and reason to learn more it in order to better navigate the world.

Uhuh... so, did you notice the thousands of posts we have on our sub?

IMO an internally logical constructed red-pill / masculinist philosophy will not achieve anything unless it is backed by a strong frame.

How do you establish a strong frame if you simultaneously denounce open discussion of other people's frames?

IMO you're picking the wrong battle to fight.

I'm not fighting a battle. I'm providing data points for a little theory we call the red pill.

But of course you are free to do so.

Yes, yes I am.

This is your thread. I've said my piece. We can agree to disagree.

The only retort feminists and feminized knights can come up with is insults, not arguments. One of the most common means for feminists to "win" arguments is shaming the opponent. It's kind of an unfair advantage in arguments, since being shamed by women has traditionally had quite an effect on public perception of men.

The fact that we're standing firm in light of that is a new force with which they must now start reckoning.

Ironically, you demonstrate your value due to your access to sex, and they try to dismiss that as a form of validation by attempting to devalue you.. by using the same frame. (You don't get sex, therefore you're a loser.. because access to sex isn't important).

Are you honestly telling me that you think that Sheryl Sandberg, Marissa Mayer, and Meg Whitman are all immature children?

I'm telling you that the way male traits such as honor, integrity, and loyalty develop are through the the incentivizing motivation that is pressed upon men.

In situations that we normally consider character building, men are forced to deal with very real consequences of their actions and inactions. No such pressures are put upon women, who need do nothing more than appear hurt or upset to receive instant aid from white-knighting men.

Because of this, the attributes we typically consider to describe a mature male are ones that most women never adopt. Commonly noticed through short-term planning, lack of long-term consequential thinking, temper tantrums, lack of diversity in character (personality), and lack of traits such as integrity, loyalty, and honor. (strictly men's traits).

This is, of course, a gradient, as I think the less attractive a woman is, the more pressure is put on her to do things for herself, the more male maturity she will adopt. Thus the reason why ugly girls can make great friends.

Do I deny that there are female CEOs? No. I'm happy for them. They're the exception not the rule.

Of course, women will become more successful as pressures change- the less we assist women, the more they'll develop male traits.

Would I deny women the right to vote? Well as I established earlier, I wouldn't advocate for taking away the vote. So I'm not sure who you're arguing with. I would say that without knowing the real consequences of their vote, these female CEOs still have no idea what it's like to sign up for conscription, we could easily get ourselves voted into a war that women want fought, without participation from said women.

I think that's a dangerous prospect.

Ok so you're pretty thick. Let's parse this.

Discrimination based on race is, without a doubt, racist

Nope. Let's google:

rac-ism

- The belief that all members of each race possess characteristics or abilities specific to that race, esp. so as to distinguish it as...
- Prejudice or discrimination directed against someone of a different race based on such a belief.

He doesn't want to have sex with non-white people. He doesn't find them attractive. Does that project a belief that they possess characteristics or abilities specific to that race?

Further, does he discriminate because he believes they have characteristics or abilities specific to the race?

No. Discrimination in itself is a term that means "selective," as in "doesn't prefer all." If I don't drink all brands of cola, you could say I've got discriminating tastes. Perhaps towards Pepsi. But then, do I hate Coke? Do I hate Coke drinkers? That's absurd.

I already made the analogy but you seem to have completely missed it. Intentionally, I hope (because you're trolling). Because if it wasn't intention, you're just really really daft.

why discrimination based on race is not racist

Because he doesn't presuppose anything about them nor is he prejudiced. Here's a small english lesson for you: It's called context. Words have different meaning in different contexts.

For example: Dad won't let his daughter date black men, which is discrimination. (Racism, assuming qualities of black men are unfit for his daughter).

Dad isn't attracted to black women or their culture, he has discriminating tastes. (Not racism, stating a preference).

Also, comparing the difference between a man and a woman to the differences between a white woman and a woman of another race is beyond idiotic. Take two women of the same weight/body type, but different races, and rip their skin off. They are going to look exactly the same. Take a man and a woman and rip their skin off, and you get a whole glossary of anatomical differences.

For a man, having sex with another man is going to be extremely different than having sex with a woman, whereas having sex with a white woman would not be extremely different from having sex with an Asian woman, or a Hispanic woman, or a black woman. It would still be a penis going into a vagina, with a pair of breasts (as opposed to a penis going into an anus, or being penetrated by a penis). The fact that you'd even try and compare the differences between a man and a woman to the differences between women of different races speaks volumes about your level of education.

You've simply got no understanding of analogies. How old are you? This will be covered in your middle school english class.

Let's simplify because you're retarded:

John doesn't find fat women attractive. Should he ignore his preference because it insults your sensibilities? Is his discrimination against fat people somehow unfair? Should John have any say in what he's attracted to?

This is where I normally leave my argument.. but since you're thick I'm going to draw the connection for you.

If you think it's ok for John not to date women he doesn't find attractive, then implicitly in your argument, he must therefore not be forced to date women he doesn't find attractive.

Read that twice. It's not even different words. It's the same sentence twice.

To force him to do otherwise would be oppressive. If he had no choice and you took control of his life and forced him to have sex with somebody he doesn't like.. you could call that slavery. Sex slavery.

And your argument is that the opposite of your slavery is racism?

Hmmmm...

Absolutely not. We don't condone rape. We run a forum dedicated to getting consent. As a "historian" I assume you see the contradiction there. If TRP was pro-rape, we wouldn't need a forum. There's no strategy to discuss.

Do you truly believe you deserve any other title? You may feel you can fall back on the effort you've put into TRP to create some sort of 'reputation' here, but that is not the case.

I'm sorry you don't see a legitimate argument over the pros and cons of a marriage license as anything worth while. You drank some serious coolaid and you were sharing it with friends.

That you wouldn't recognize my work on /r/trp is really your shortcoming, not my own. If your goal is helping men, then you'd see we are quite aligned in purpose- heck, you guys even used my sub's name to name your own.

If you doubt that I'm on reddit to help men, then this would also be your shortcoming. You'd do well to pop onto TRP and read up. You might even learn some stuff while you're over there.

It isn't about you declaring what is and isn't 'RedPill' - it's about men reclaiming their masculinity from the female imperative that has been pushed for far too long.

I think you severely misunderstand the metaphor of the red pill. It means opening your eyes to the real truth that's been hiding in plain sight. The blue pill represents returning to your life of comfortable lies. Inherently part of this distinction is a requirement to suss out and understand what constitutes truth, and what constitutes lies.

Yes, it's about men reclaiming masculinity from the feminine primary society that has been feeding them untruths their entire lives. One such untruth is the topic of marriage that we've been on about.

My entire purpose on TRP is to help formulate theory and understanding of the way the world works. Which is why it's been in my interest to ensure a sub with "red pill" in the name isn't just repeating verbatim the lies that women told them.

By the way, I consider the argument itself quite moot, I think you've done well to step down as a moderator and clarify that you wouldn't recommend marriage to others. That actually cures my issues I had with you. I have no personal beef with you, by the way. I only take exception to those flying the red pill flag doling out blue pills.

It doesn't matter if she's not on the lease. Once someone has lived under the roof for 30+ days or has received mail at that address, they are automatically granted tenant rights. You can't lock her out or block access to common areas no matter what she does without 30 days notice. Because she's a woman and laws like VAWA and primary aggressor laws, she can now say you said something in a 'threatening tone' or cry abuse/rape, kick you out of the house while you still pay for the rest of the lease.

You're going to take some risks when it comes to starting a family. This is the least of my worries.

You're saying you're vetting her, but it seems she already failed based on what you said.

What I've said doesn't speak to the entire relationship, nor does it speak to how she's gone about resolving it.

I've never been in a relationship that didn't occasionally have some testing/tantrums, and if I were to be honest, I've never met a woman who wouldn't fail the standards put forward by this community. Women are notoriously awful creatures.

The girl I'm dating right now is actually quite good, except for this past week of outbursts. And I am looking to see if she's trainable and understands why this behavior is unacceptable.

If I need to next her, I have no problem doing so.

Think about it, if girls at 15 were in the market, no 40 year old woman would compete, and the average demand for 18 year olds would decrease.

Let's talk about bias. If you actually posted this question on TRP, you'd get an array of opinions, such as- dating in non-western cultures is a better experience, never get married unless you're in a non-western culture, westernization includes feminism and causes the forces we describe. There are a number of members who live in Eastern countries (and middle eastern too), who regularly talk about differences in their cultures (/u/tokyopickup being one of the more notable members). Furthermore, we commonly accept that most of these issues we describe are results of western culture, and are not necessarily indicative of all cultures. A quick search would show you this...

-2 upvotes · 19 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I think women act in the way that they feel best serves them (no different from men). They don't need malicious intent for the consequences to play out like they did.

I don't think any feminist said, "hey let's take the vote, morph our country into a socialist nightmare, and end up in 2013 where the government bails out big corporations -- fuck the economy!"

But that's what happened because for better or worse, the feminine imperative sees other values as necessary and (in my opinion) is less likely to think of the long term financial outcomes of policy making. Did other factors play into our economy? For sure. But you cannot overlook feminism's role in this.

For instance, look at welfare, child support laws or violence against women laws. On the surface they appear to be positive contributions to our country (usa), and they are undoubtedly the result of giving half the vote to women. I don't think they got together and conspired to say "hey if we can get the government to step in and be dad, we can be less loyal to the men who father these children!"

But there you have it, marriage is dying, child support is up, and dads being wrung out by family courts can't find anywhere to turn.

However, if she fails her duties as first officer, discipline is necessary. The first officer never disciplines the captain, however she may privately counsel the captain about decisions and even disagree.

Honestly - even if the benefit wasn't financial, but it also wasn't a risk, I think most men wouldn't have written off marriage entirely. I have enough money that this is a serious fear for me. I've seen many good men torn down by family courts.

There are other factors for me- such as having children. I've seen how false accusations of child sexual abuse can destroy a man, his reputation, his career, and deprive him of his child for long enough that it takes hundreds of thousands of dollars to get him back in court.

Simply put, the landscape which enables this is too risky.

Now some people ask me, red pill school, you know it's not that common. My point is simple: If you design a car that steers into oncoming traffic every so often, it doesn't matter to me that it's only 1 in 10, or 1 in 100. The question I have is : Why have the feature at all?

Like the fucking kindergarten teacher who gives everybody a gold star whether they fail or not, what you don't understand is that your attitude makes things worse.

"They don't deserve failure just because they're beta!"

What you're not taking into account is that they will fail because they're beta.

It's called the school of hard knocks. Most of us are here because we had to lose a family, our children, or half our money to learn this lesson. Babying men isn't going to help them learn.

The best way for men to learn to succeed is to challenge them to do so, not coddle them.

Mission accomplished

-2 upvotes · 1 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Well we advocate internal value and the attitude of manliness... but what value does society see from me?

I hardly contribute to the economy, finding it unnecessary to earn more money than what I need to take care of me, because I no longer see a future with a family.

I hardly contribute to community because I see beta traits as an easy way to be taken advantage of. I don't go out of my way for anybody but myself.

I do nothing to help defend our country because the "honor" and "value" is meaningless. Women will steal your money and trash your house when you're overseas, the country won't pay for your medical bills, and your taxes continue to father children you never had.

I am a selfish consumer that does little to nothing for anybody or country because there is zero reward for traditionally male activities.

Sure there's "value" for society in men being blue pill, but by that they mean they need somebody to foot the bill for feminist lawmaking, and funding children of the state.

There are very few who actually hold value because of art, even fewer who do so successfully.

Do you think appealing to a woman's "innate psychology" requires training and contrived techniques?

For some people, yes.

Ever wonder why there's a stigma attached to homeschooling? Kids look at homeschoolers like they're weird. Because they are.

Not everybody is well adjusted, and some people have very poor social skills. Look at /r/creepypms as an example. These guys want love, or a date, and have literally no clue how to get there.

Now our theories go beyond simply having poor social skills, and understanding how to maintain sexual attention in other scenarios that you'd find yourself in even with good social skills- such as a marriage. The fact that there's a sub called /r/DeadBedrooms indicates that trouble interfacing the opposite sex is not an uncommon problem.

Dealing with reality isn't always easy. Imagine if I posed this question:

You have two options, appeal to a woman's innate psychology, or don't.

If you appeal, you can have a long relationship, if you don't, you won't.

What option do you take? The one you deem "honorable?"

What if I told you that the "honorable" one never works for anybody? The concept of honor only holds meaning for those that it controls. For instance, the women who like these men, who appeal to their psychology.. they don't seem too upset about ignoring you with all of your honor.

At the end of the day, providing what a woman likes is the only way to be successful with women. You either accept it, or you fail to be successful with women.

Acronym and Glossary Thread

-2 upvotes · 5 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I'll start with a disclaimer: Women are women and always will be women. Even when a woman manages to excel in one category, that doesn't mean she'll drop her other female attributes.

That said, a good example of a woman who sets herself apart would be redpillwifey, she's around here somewhere. Watch how she interacts with people.

One of the girls I see regularly totally internalizes the red pill. I consider her to be special in the sense that she's different and doesn't usually succumb to the feminine imperative or rationalization hamster.

That said, I still approach her as a woman. She will still rationalize. She will still have emotional outbursts. She still needs me to treat her like a woman so she'll get wet. And I know just how to do that.

It's not that we're denying women can be different. It's that everybody wants to be a snowflake because they want to deny their urges are programmed. The fact is- nobody's a snowflake, we're all programmed by millions of years of evolution. Not even me.

If you want to stand out, just see what redpillwifey does. Accept that you're a woman, and accept your drives and urges. That's natural. Be feminine.

Never Listen To A Woman

-2 upvotes · 9 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Ignoring a very big difference between values women and men put on practical knowledge is either very blue-pill or attempting to redress redpill to be easily swallowed by the feminist collective.

The book I sent you isn't a dissection of intelligence, it's a dissection of motivation.

Instead of assuming that this insults women, it may help to come from the direction that understands women simply have different motives and goals. Men might find it insulting to say to a woman that she doesn't know how to change a tire, but that's because that's crucial information men need to know. Women have no such need for that knowledge. How could they take insult when access to that information is as readily accessible? They make value assessments on what knowledge to attain.

Recognizing that women will not have information that you find important is a big step towards taking the red pill. Especially when you consider that women will still readily give advice. Like their dating advice "if you like her, just tell her how you feel!"

Blue Pill isn't "beta"

-3 upvotes · 14 January 2014 · /r/PurplePillDebate

It's literally not directed at women. I'm not being dense or dishonest- I've made it very clear that I think mating is a zero sum game, and my advice is to best benefit men in a culture/society that is currently tilted towards women.

Men want two things: Easy sex, and/or relationships.

So I give advice on how to get either or both.

If a woman wants to come along and read our stuff to maximize her access to one or the other, good for her. It's not conflicting advice. Guys don't want to ONS with the type of girl he'd marry.

Likewise, we already understand women's dual mating strategy.

The only contradiction here is when blue pillers show up all high and mighty pretending that these dual mating strategies don't exist.

We already know that following blue pill's narrative won't get anybody laid or get anybody respect from a woman. We know they try hard to tell us that our way is wrong wrong wrong, look we're on a subreddit dedicated to just this.

But we know better. We do it anyway, and look, we're successful at it!

Blue pill's advice is don't do what works, and embrace what never worked for you. It's damned if we do, damned if we don't. But that's ok, we're smart enough not to listen to you.

Edit: I will add, the red pill doesn't deal in "shoulds." Women will act the way they act. We just observe and react accordingly. If a woman has a particular goal in mind, she should embrace certain lifestyles. There are consequences to actions. If the guy she really really likes doesn't like sluts, welcome to the real world. Doesn't matter that it insults your delicate sensibilities.

Because you can't disconnect between a discussion and one's personal views? This is a failing you may want to look into.

It is clear that TRP advocated rape as a group.

Categorically false.

Edit: It occurs to me you don't know what a thought experiment is.

A thought experiment or Gedankenexperiment (from German) considers some hypothesis, theory,[1] or principle for the purpose of thinking through its consequences. Given the structure of the experiment, it may or may not be possible to actually perform it, and, in the case that it is possible for it to be performed, there need be no intention of any kind to actually perform the experiment in question. The common goal of a thought experiment is to explore the potential consequences of the principle in question.

Famous examples of thought experiments include Schrödinger's cat, illustrating quantum indeterminacy through the manipulation of a perfectly sealed environment and a tiny bit of radioactive substance, and Maxwell's demon, which attempts to demonstrate the ability of a hypothetical finite being to violate the second law of thermodynamics.

Because you're really just missing what I'm saying. I'm saying, what if a perpetual consent contract could exist?

You say any sex against immediate will is immoral.

But, this disregards one's right to enter into a consent contract.

Morally, the person would hypothetically have already agreed to the terms of sex at a future time, regardless of potential emotional state.

Again, I'm not even advocating this. I don't think perpetual consent contracts would work in practice. We were literally just debating the morality of said contract.

Again, if a breach happened, it would result in a law suit, not in forcing somebody to have sex.

But if that were the case, then the definition of consent needs to be revisited.

That was why we were discussing it, because the implications of the concept consent. It was intriguing to me. There was absolutely no reason to bring this topic up everywhere on reddit every time the red pill was mentioned. This was being pasted to me as if somehow I advocate rape.

I want to hear you say you don't think I advocate rape.

Well, the good news is, the least concerned people on this sub are mods!

People will put words in your mouth so that they can claim you are oppressing them.

It's true. I've had a few debates about whether or not it should be allowed to "consent" to sex in advance, or to give up one's autonomy for consent. (marriage).

The argument usually has two sides: 1. you should always be able to withdraw consent to sex. 2. you can give up autonomy if you join the army... so it's legal to do so in certain ways.

So I find it an interesting debate. I personally would never enter into a marriage contract, but I find the topic of consent interesting.

One thing's for sure, currently marriage legally doesn't include consent to sex.

But nevertheless, every little busybody on reddit wants a reason to hate me, so they purport that my part in the debate is a de facto endorsement of spousal rape.

They ask if it should be ok. I say, it's not legal, so no. They say, but if it were legal. I respond, then it's not rape, it's contracted consent.

But, no, I'm pro-rape, right guys?

I think you'll find, if you really dive into this, is that the term "manipulation" is a terribly meaningless term that holds more value to the person using it than to those they describe.

For instance, if I hear that women prefer skinny jeans, and I start wearing skinny jeans and women like me for it, have I manipulated them? Sure, in a very loose sense.

By writing convincing words here I'm hopefully changing your mind. Am I manipulating you?

The term manipulation is nothing more than attempting to change somebody's mind. The only reason people use the term manipulation is to convey the stigma attached as changing somebody's mind for personal gain. Which is an unfair characterization of what we call "game."

Game is just another word for learning the social skills necessary for being attractive. Is it to have more sex? You betcha! But is it solely for personal gain? If women are attracted to you and decide to have sex because of game- have they not also gained from the experience?

Anybody saying that this activity is manipulation completely denies the agency of women, and their right to decide who they want to have sex with and their right to act however they please.

There is no trickery here, just learning not to be dumb idiots who don't know how to talk to women.

not and if TRP keeps censoring certain opinions

We have always and always will remove anything that breaks the rules.

A majority of those removed here today broke the rules. You can defend JP's ideas without concern trolling and without insulting others. The kids banned today apparently needed a reminder.

We don't remove well reasoned and polite posts and comments that simply offer a different viewpoint.

People attempting to conflate the two are concern trolling and will be removed.

You were banned for trolling, nothing more, nothing less.

You literally made the "not all women are like that" argument, and refused to read the referenced material as per our sub reddit rules.

Nobody was doubting your wife can make grown up actions. In fact, that wasn't the point of the article at all. You took the generalization personally and assumed a few exceptions to the rule change the rule.

Our definition of troll:

Basically, someone who assumes you are sane, tries to understand your argument in the most compelling interpretation he can, and then tries to refute it, is a debater.

Someone who assumes you are insane, or tries to find weak interpretations of your arguments that will be easy to refute, or reifies metaphors, is a troll.

You fit squarely into the second category, and you were banned rightfully so.

If you want to come back and discuss it without throwing around stupid phrases like "RPS you're losing frame."

Ain't nobody trying to win you over by holding frame. It's an internet debate, not a pickup scene.

By your actions, I have to assume you were doing it on purpose to get yourself banned so you could make a post about it here.

You're right that men lack a positive identity in our culture, largely due to masculine qualities being widely unnecessary.. I recommend reading Jack Donovan's The way of men if you're interested in the subject.

But if you think an artsy man has worth in our society, you'd be wrong. Feminist thinking, which is more and more pervasive today, basically says.. "hey what do we need men for? Nothing!"

And that's that.

If you don't embrace masculinity and manliness, you are neither useful to society, nor are you useful to women who want sex. You're useless.

You know how when huffingtonpost makes yet another article saying that men's rights is a hate group, and no matter what happens, nothing you can do or say will make them actually sit down, read, and try to comprehend the theories?

Well, welcome to your cursory glance, your superficial viewpoint on what you think the red pill subreddit is about because you spent 10 minutes looking it over and deciding it's too extreme for you. You let your emotions and sensibilities dictate your behavior instead of really giving it a chance and wondering, maybe beyond this offensive language there's a point here.

I mean look at this conversation, I'm being perfectly reasonable, and you can't withhold your gut reaction for long enough to try to reconcile our differences. I bet, once explained, you'd agree that our views aren't actually that unreasonable.

I say that because you've already mischaracterized a number of our views. "Blind sheep?" and "alpha beta" dichotomy are two ways you've turned off your brain. It's like you saw the word alpha and then your brain went haywire and you just started screaming obscenities.

I'm more than willing to discuss, but only with people who care enough to have an open mind and turn off the gut-reaction first.

Female soliphism

I'm going to shed some light, because I feel your review is a bit unfair, not understanding where this guy is coming from.

"I read shallow chicks' profiles.."

come on man. you don't even know these girls. unless they specifically write in their profiles something like "you have to be 6 ft tall, look like a model, etc to get with this.." you can't just call them all shallow and vapid.

It's easy to see that online dating really does reduce the "magic" of dating to a checklist. I think the defining differences between an average man's profile and a woman's profile is that a man is advertising himself, a woman is posting requirements on hers. Not that this is inherently bad- it mirrors what we understand about the selective gender. But it's a rude wake up to somebody who was plugged in.

"Not a single one of these egotistical shallow bitches..."

just gets worse and worse.

Waking up can be rough.

"I did exchange a few messages with a chick who had a masculine brain (she was an engineering student like me).."

holy shit dude, that's one of the most misogynistic statements i've read in this sub, and that's really something. i shouldn't have to explain why, but, liking math isn't exclusively a male thing. i'm majoring in photography, do i have a chick brain?

Again with the "misogynistic" word. It's true, STEM fields are primarily male. And not because we have a "no-gurlz" sign. They just don't typically care for it. Is this author articulate and well-spoken, well no. But misogynistic? I don't think so. We regularly see there are endeavors that men care for, and endeavors women care for, and they do not overlap a whole lot. To acknowledge this is not misogynistic. Please stop misusing that term.

"Typical bimbo pretends she's smart because she read shit off the best seller list, visits museums, and claims she is into travelling because she once visited some random tourist resort somewhere."

again with the unnecessary name-calling.. everything else is again just you giving these girls bad characteristics in your mind with little justification as to why except being butthurt.

Yes, he's definitely hurt. This is a very difficult realization to come to, the nature of women.

I don't necessarily disagree with your post, but you have to understand, okcupid might just be the biggest unplugging zone in the world, since it really highlights the reality of female dating strategy (in ways the feminine imperative regularly denies).

My recommendation to the OP is to stick around and learn what he can to improve his game. I understand why you're upset, we get it. We've all been there. Now learn to improve and understand women instead of being angry.

What on Earth is r/TheRedPill?

-6 upvotes · 11 April 2013 · /r/MensRights

The terms of marriage before it was redefined in a secular sense (and in a modern liberal christian sense) were actually quite explicit:

<http://dalrock.files.wordpress.com/2012/05/reframingmarriage.png?w=640&h=1760>

They cannot wake their husbands at 1AM and demand they till the fields immediately because that is what they want and the contracts entitles them, nor do wives or the contract get to determine the husband's employer, line of work, work schedule ("must be third shift!"), and so on.

Well actually, she could demand sex at 1 am, but it was his job to lead the family so she was not in a position to dictate when and how he tilled the fields.

So what provisions does the contract provide? All that's left is some vague intent to try to secure some provisions at some time--no specifics on the what, where, when, how, and no recourse for failure or future disinterest.

You've got a good point in that the expected provisions were not explicitly outlined, except to say if somebody's about to die, it better be the husband first. So basically, anything that avoids death. Be it bread and a hut, or goats and a mansion.

The contract is not (has never been) annulled by infertility even though an infertile woman effectively cannot provide access to a womb, or her womb has "no value"--so, combined with the clearly general terms for men, this doesn't even seem like a new concept of the obligations of marriage upon women.

Recognizing the sacrifices women made (losing virginity) within the marriage, I'm not surprised there is no option for divorce on the condition of infertility on either side. Marriage is indeed a risk. "For better or for worse."

An additional problem is that consent is always a present-progressive, developing characteristic. Surely, outside of marriage, past consent does not imply present/future consent for sex. And within marriage, men can break or change their consent to provide provisions any time they want--a divorce does not guarantee alimony (especially not historically) and alimony payments don't always flow from (ex) husband-to-wife.

And what would occur when women couldn't leave marriage because they felt like it and be awarded cash prizes? They stayed in their commitments. Something we aren't seeing today. Alimony would be paid to the woman if the man had violated the covenant of marriage.

The did back then, as men were the sole breadwinners. Today, the genders can be reversed. But again, I'm not arguing that marriage hasn't changed.

For men, we see a general contract that can be broken freely and provides some vague idea of provisions.

Not freely broken. Very expensively.

For women, you provide an explicit requirement for services on demand that must never be broken.

Her biggest risk was being unmarriageable outside of divorce and not receiving alimony.

Even if you think that's how marriage has historically worked, that isn't how it should or must work, which is why marriage has in fact survived the legal concept of spousal rape.

That is absolutely how marriage was. Marriage has not survived the legal concept of spousal rape. We have something today. It's not marriage. It's commitment from men, cash prizes for women. Nothing more.

What on Earth is r/TheRedPill?

-6 upvotes · 10 April 2013 · /r/MensRights

A modern redefinition of marriage much like spousal rape is a modern definition.

I can see why homosexual people would want the equal rights marriage affords them, but beyond that, treating marriage as a declaration of love instead of a contract of commitment is a relatively new concept. Gay marriage is not biblical, and marriage itself was a religious institution.

If I were gay, I'd opt for civil union seeing how the religious community feels that homosexuality is a sin. But since we've redefined marriage outside the context of religion in our society, I guess it doesn't really matter much.

The guy genuinely wanted a relationship with women. We've all been there. Just wanted to connect and be happy. And if that worked, we'd all be doing that and this sub wouldn't exist.

But what happened instead was his expectations weren't met. Because his expectations were wrong. Who set the expectations? Society. We can go into depth on exactly how the feminine imperative raises men to become betas to serve their own needs. But that's a topic for another thread.

What's important is that this man was raised the way a lot of us were. With unreal expectations that women were righteous creatures who loved truth and goodness and rejected assholes and bad guys.

And boy howdy, that guy had a real wakeup call when he saw the exact opposite happening on okcupid. Women have ridiculous requirements. They can have them because their social value is so high based on literally nothing but their looks, they can get whatever they want. They're not the princesses I was taught by mom. They're these selfish creatures who get whatever they want and I spent 20-something years being an altruistic giving man hoping to find love.. and this is all I get in return. FUCK!

It's enough to drive anybody crazy!

But let's look at this realistically. Right now he's angry because these women are contradicting his expectations. He wanted what society says is a normal down-to-earth girl, and he's discovering they don't exist. Of course he's mad at women. That seems like the first reaction you'd get.

The red pill is about being constructive and helping men like this to learn what realistic expectations are, the true nature of women is nothing to be mad at once you adjust your understanding and expectations.

But there will always be the stages of grief between being plugged-in and unplugging entirely.

That no more makes us misogynists (or this man a misogynist) than a poor widow cursing god for taking her husband is a satanist.

What on Earth is r/TheRedPill?

arises naturally from some other objective standard (such as human rights, dignity, autonomy, God, etc)?

Well first of all, certainly did not rise from god, as he is explicit in his instructions for wives to submit to their husbands (in the bible).

The concept of spousal rape is an interesting one. I don't think a marriage would be any good if they weren't both agreeing to sex. If she was withholding, I personally wouldn't force sex. But that said, given the nature of how marriages work, it was impossible for men to withhold labor (and provisions). So for women, the requirement to submit to husbands wasn't oppression but instead a trade that women would make to be taken care of.

The idea that you trade labor for money (which translates to room and board) is nothing new.

The idea that I can rent out my hands for provisions is very basic.

Now I know people like to ascribe magical powers to sex, but at the very basic level, women were renting out their physical labor in a slightly different sense: the womb. To deny that would be taking the provisions without giving their side of the contract.

Obviously there is some opinion that arranged marriages were then oppression. I'd argue that any social structure that was built to maximize the survival of women at the cost of men is not oppression. Sometimes to survive, you had to do what you had to do.

Nowadays this dynamic has changed. Women can leave marriages and get cash prizes for doing so. Women don't need marriages for provisions, as many many women are going to college and getting degrees and jobs. So, spousal rape becomes a thing, women renege on their obligations to marriage, and marriage loses meaning.

Don't get me wrong, I have no interest in re-instating the institution of marriage. It's a dead concept. Feminism killed it and it's not coming back.

But spousal rape in theory should not be a thing. If a woman does not wish to submit to her husband she should not marry him. The contract of marriage is the verbal and written consent for sex.

How to handle photography of you (nude)?

-8 upvotes · 14 April 2016 · /r/RedPillWomen

It could be argued that since we were born naked, the naked body shouldn't turn somebody on.

But at the end of the day, tits and a good ass turn men on. Trying to pretend this isn't the case is just sticking your head in the sand.

If I'm attracted to a woman, it doesn't matter how "tasteful" the nude art is. If there was nothing special about being naked, there would be no reason to make nude art.

If a woman I knew was doing nude art before we met, it would absolutely color how I see her. If it was in an art class, I would be very cautious that she was comfortable being nude in front of strangers, and be very skeptical that she wasn't doing it for validation. If it was in front of a single photographer in his studio, I will assume they banged.

The problem with statements like "Nudity is our natural state and doesn't need to be sexualized in every situation" is that you don't get to decide how other people view tits.

I'm not denying there are struggles on both sides. Women are getting a pretty shit end of the stick by being told to gain life experiences and go to college before considering settling down. Women hit 35 and realize their options are severely limited. If only they had known 15 years ago!

But that's not really the point here, is it? He's frustrated because his experiences fell short of his expectations.

The most constructive thing to do validate the emotions. "You know, it's ok to feel this way. Now here's how to fix it."

And then put him on a path towards fixing both himself, his approach, and his expectations. Happiness comes from not only accomplishing goals, but having realistic goals you can accomplish.

He doesn't really do much to outline solipsism, but as I mentioned, I don't think he's all that articulate.

The problem with using misogyny here is this: He's angry and frustrated because he can't gain access to .. women! A true misogynist would hardly base his happiness in access to women, nor would he get so frustrated that he had trouble accessing them. He wants women, and is angry that what he was told doesn't match what he's experiencing. He is mistrusting at this point, but a valid question here would be who is he mistrusting?

taking the red pill and waking up doesn't give someone the pass to act like OP

I'm not saying his actions are going to help him get from point A to point B, but there's no benefit for shaming him for having a quite natural reaction to learning the truth after being told lies for as long as he has.

Your post is the equivalent to telling somebody who just lost a loved one to cancer and saying "don't be sad or angry, it won't do you any good."

Well, yeah, in the long run, you have to move past the stages of grief. But nobody's telling somebody who loses a loved one to "man-up you misogynist!" It's not constructive.

you said you were angry at women for their selfishness. so should girls be angry at guys for wanting to fuck a bunch of other girls? because that's just biology, right?

You seem to be missing the point entirely. I was mad at their selfishness because I was told they were different.

You don't get mad a chair for being a chair. But what if you were told your whole life "son, chairs are not for sitting in. They're not made for that." Twenty years later you're tired and weak because you've never sat down to rest. You log on to a website and you see people sitting in chairs everywhere. Yeah, you're gonna be pissed that you were taught wrong.

As a woman, it makes me incredibly sad to read this. Without value, I am free to be raped, beaten, abused, murdered, and denied any rights or freedoms without anyone feeling bad about it.

Nobody here's talking about doing any of those things, so your fallacious feminist straw man won't get anything from me.

You say I am a collection of holes that exist only for men to fill with their penises. Does this mean I have no mind, no thoughts, no soul, no worth to anyone?

You should read the context. You have no value to him (not to yourself)... Though you could do something to fix that. Learn to cook maybe.

I have never used a man for money. I have never manipulated a man's emotions to get something I want from him (and I'm nearly 40, so this isn't a temporary phase).

Not all women are like that. ...

I avoid a lot of men because I'm scared of men like you and most of the posters in subreddits like this one.

You terrify me.

Oh wait.. nevermind, that old trope. Do you think you'll shame us into submission! Oh no, random internet hag used the word "terrify" maybe we're doing something wrong.

No, here's what's terrifying: Any minute an earthquake could take out my entire city without warning.

Here's what's not terrifying: somebody said something that disagrees with you but has made no threat to your well being.

Please, feminist, your arguments are tired and illogical. You do nothing but prove the OP's point. Where is your value? You've brought none to this conversation- your grasp on logic is faulty, so I can't see myself having an intelligent conversation with you...

You think women have no value except to please men sexually or have their children? I think there are a lot of men who think like you - men with a frustrated void in them that they try to fill with anger and aggression. Men who turn their frustration over the fact that they've been hurt emotionally into words and actions that cause pain in other people.

Men are frustrated, for sure. Women lied to them about what they want.

What should upset you is that what he learned after this- he now treats women like they have no value except to please men... and women reward the behavior!

And here with your shame tactics- you're trying to prove that OP is just disgruntled, that he can't possibly come to this with a sound mind. His behavior is pathological, right?

No, his behavior is the end game that women reward. Whoops, better go pow-wow with your sisters if you think that's wrong.

I moved away from home at a young age and I've supported myself ever since. No marriages, no children. I've never had the desire. Happy, stable relationships? A few. But there will always be this fear inside me. How many men think like you? How many men that smile and look me in the eye think I'm some hunk of meat with a hole in it? A thing instead of a person that they might have something in common with, might be able to share real emotions, real thoughts, their honest selves with?

Well let's see, you never stayed with a man, never got married, never had kids.. what use are you? You've proven op's stereotype.

You saw your mother throw your father out and had your heart broken as a teen and that changed you into someone who thinks women are valueless holes to be filled. That is your irrational belief. My irrational belief is a gut instinct inside me that says men are always potentially violent abusers, rapists, or murderers. I've never been raped or abused. I've never even been seriously beaten. I've been in relationships with men who are intelligent, giving, honest, loving, and fair. That gut instinct still hasn't left me. In a way you and I have something very big in common. We're both carrying a huge amount of bigotry around in our hearts.

Bigotry indicates hatred. OP made it clear, he doesn't hate women, he just doesn't value them.

I choose to withdraw, you choose to get revenge.

I wouldn't call sex revenge. I'd call it enjoying life.

So, let's take your argument to its logical end. Women have no value. Why acknowledge them at all? Rape them and move on. Beat them if they resist. Who cares? No one that matters. Shit on them, kill them if they try to call the police. They're just meat. Right?

He said no value "beyond their pussies." The pussy has value to him. As it does me. Who are you to try to educate anybody on reason or logic, you have failed miserably at applying it yourself?

And stop bringing rape into this, that's absurd and you know it.

Actually further more, just stop talking, nothing you can reply will add to this conversation.

Is there a paradox in learning seduction?

-22 upvotes · 29 July 2013 · /r/seduction

I disagree. First of all, there isn't really a tone of people trying to out-alpha each other. The term alpha is used to discuss particular traits, but it's used constructively, not as an insult.

It's a mischaracterization of the entire sub.

Why would the red pill be important if seduction already exists? Because we discuss beyond the pick-up. Does marriage work? Is marriage a good option? Should you have kids? What's the best arrangement to have kids? Where is the safest legal climate to do these things?

How do you keep a woman attracted to you?

Should you keep a woman attracted to you? Or should you spin plates?

Why do women appear to move on so quickly when you've invested so much into a relationship? Why don't all the things you've done matter at the end?

These are all topics of sexual strategy. They're discussed regularly.

You clearly haven't read much on the sub, and instead you've decided to try to color it bitter misogyny. The irony, of course, is that this is exactly what people do when trying to discredit you and seduction.

There is no merit to your accusations.

The Red Pill is apolitical

score hidden · 18 October 2024 · /r/TheRedPill

The red pill was and is apolitical because it's a set of tools. You can be left leaning or right leaning and still use the toolset to get yourself laid. Similarly I've made the argument over the years that it's amoral. These two points are largely related.

What you do with your tools is completely up to you. Whether you want to fuck your way through mountains of sluts or if you think you want to find a unicorn and try your luck at the divorce lottery, that's completely up to you.

The red pill has always represented opening your eyes and learning the truth, no matter how uncomfortable it may seem. It's about learning the secret rules of the game that everybody's playing but nobody wants to admit.

Once you learn the rules you can choose how to play, or if you want to play at all.

The choice you make is who you are as a person. The red pill is simply about taking off your blinders so you're not making uninformed choices.

It's true that the phrase "red pill" has been largely co-opted by the right, and there's a good reason for it. What we're seeing in the United States is a populist movement that is finally questioning a status quo from years of left/right uniparty rule.

Does that make the red pill right leaning? Not particularly. We have an overton window that prevents certain knowledge from being freely shared. This forum is dedicated to sexual dynamics and the broader implications of society for men. It makes sense that learning that other aspects of culture have unspoken, covert rulesets would be an inherently red-pill experience. If the overton window moved right, the red pill might just as easily appear left in comparison.

That doesn't mean your conclusions are right or wrong. Some political ideologies comport with objective reality better than others but eventually they all have their flaws.

It is the way of man to learn and study to master his environment and thus control his destiny as best as he can. The red pill is a discussion about doing so. Sex, politics, and religion will all be bridges we eventually cross as we explore our world. Stay skeptical and use a critical mind when analyzing things that have always been this way.

Right vs left is so small in this context.

By the way it doesn't mean you can't still vote Trump even if you believe (like I do) that the uniparty continues and that all of politics is a charade.

A bit of a ramble, but yeah, man, I feel this whole thing.

People (especially on PPD) like to pretend there isn't a common denominator between women and narcissism (or any trait, right?) but the truth is, you deal with enough women you notice a few things.

And I guess who wouldn't become a bit of a narcissist when you've two bags of fat on your chest that make the world jump through hoops for you and nobody dares tell you no for the first 20-30 years of your life?

Don't Hold Frame Do This Instead

score hidden · 7 February 2023 · /r/TheRedPill

This is A+ material from GLO. Spot on. What he describes in his example of a failed assertion of frame is an ultimatum. Ultimatums are made from a position of weakness.

Not to quote Rollo on a GLO post (sorry man) but Rollo does have some good stuff on this subject:

Ultimatums are declarations of powerlessness because you are resorting to a direct threat to get someone to do what you want them to, and in doing so you OVERTLY confess your weak position. If you were in a genuine position of control it wouldn't be necessary to resort to an ultimatum; you'd simply use that control. There are many ways to effect a change in another person, but ultimatums will never prompt a genuine change. If they change behavior it's prompted by the threat, not unprompted, organic desire.

As for Jack, well, Jack lost it in that video.

He gets pissy about it but he did write it. Seems like if he were going to do live shows he should at least come up with a planned response.

score hidden · 12 January 2023 · /r/TheRedPill

Girl shows up in /r/homeassistant which is a home-automation subreddit that I tend to follow for news on cool new home automation toys and such, and sure enough she gets pissy because people use the term "wife acceptance factor" which suggests women are so feeble minded that everybody should take offense to it.

And instead of defending what is quite clearly a real thing, the guys quickly cede territory and ask for more censorship on themselves.

A great example of a space men built that women invade and then immediately attempt to reshape themselves.

Doesn't matter that in most of this community, it is indeed men implementing these programs and automations, and it is indeed the wives of these men who will either use it or avoid it depending on how usable it is. Nope, can't be talking about wives now because that's an insult to all women!

As all self flagellating men do, they lock the thread before I was able to give my two cents (such a shame), I'm sure because too many free thoughts were floating around. They lock the post and close their address with:

score hidden · 13 September 2021 · /r/TheRedPill

"In CTR, resilience can be constituted through a variety of communicative actions that include making sense of one's lived experiences, stories, and discourses as a response to life's disruptions. Resilience, then, is enacted through five key interactional processes: (1) crafting new normalcy; (2) affirming identity anchors; (3) maintaining and using communication networks; (4) putting alternative logics to work; and (5) downplaying negative feelings while foregrounding positive action (Buzzanell, 2010). Furthermore, these processes are rooted in messages, d/Discourse, and narratives; as such, 'we can see resilience as dynamic, integrated, and unfolding over time and through events, evolving into patterns, and dependent on contingencies' (Buzzanell, 2010, p. 2)."

So wait, resilience is coming up with some ideas, deciding you like them, communicating them with others, defending the ideas with rationales, and then saying don't wallow in misery?

2021 Predictions for the Sexual Market [Warning Politics]

score hidden · 28 December 2020 · /r/TheRedPill

My Predictions for 2021:

- Tinder will require you upload vaccine proof to us it.
- A new list of words and ideas will be hotly debated as hate speech as the social networks solidify the old list (deadnaming, the f word (not fuck), election fraud, etc)
- Biden will start a war in 1st quarter.
- A new strain of Covid ignites rolling lockdowns, intro the new normal with a warning like smoky the bear. "Today is YELLOW, wear your masks and avoid Tier 2 businesses" ( Edit 12/30: I'm not saying I'm magic but here's the news one day after I posted this: New Covid strain just hit USA. <https://www.cnbc.com/2020/12/28/us-confirms-first-case-of-the-new-covid-strain-discovered-in-uk-.html> )
- The fight against 1A will move offline. Certain phrases will become national security risks.
- Social credit score (SCS) will be implemented via the tech industry. You will need to "voluntarily" participate to have FB, Twitter, Insta, etc.
- At first they will insist the verify process is private. But soon, your rep follows you to all accounts. Goodbye to anonymous users.
- Expect businesses to start complying with the SCS. Refusing to wear a mask or vaccinate will ban you from multiple businesses who sign pact. Doubting the election online will prevent you from accessing services and goods in unrelated industries.
- Mastercard (and the others) will participate in un-personing anybody violating the narrative. Violating businesses can't accept cards. Violating people can't use the cards.
- Biden will make a push for cashless society.
- Negative interest rates will be introduced.
- Banks will access SCS and close accounts.
- Dating websites will eventually access SCS and prevent usage without it.

- Jobs will monitor SCS and fire you for infractions.

As always, join our conversation at <https://trp.red> to avoid censorship in 2021.

Reddit tried to stop the spread of hateful material. Users turn to self-moderating platforms "an even more dangerous place." These self-righteous clowns believe themselves god, should have a say over what you think and say.

score hidden · 18 November 2020 · /r/TheRedPill

The words "hateful" and "hate speech" are stand-ins for "unapproved" speech. One of the biggest red pills you can swallow is the very fact that these asshats actually believe they should have a say over what you think and believe.

A man knows that nobody tells him what he can and cannot think and believe. If you didn't already think TRP was correct, look no further than where the thought police are targeting.

These ideas don't take hold because they're horribly incorrect and don't work. They take hold because it grants freedom and identity to men. Something the establishment desperately does not want you having.

There's a reason that censorship is targeting political speech just as much as it is censoring us. At the end of the day, the free exchange of ideas threatens their stranglehold on the culture. They need docile men they can control. Strong men are a threat to their plans because strong men stand on principle.

One such principle is free speech. The protection for men required for all other principles to matter.

This fight, I fight specifically for men to have a place to have unfettered discussion.

What they call "misogyny" is simply coarse language as a protection mechanism against the censorship of ideas. It's a trick to un-brainwash yourself from self-censoring ideas and thought.

When the matrix programs you, it teaches you not to think about certain aspects of the matrix. In religion, it blinds you to stark inconsistencies in the biblical stories. In politics and culture, it creates blind spots for men to prevent them from self-actualization and executing a high-return strategy.

You're taught that certain things are just "wrong" so you don't look further into it. Cutting yourself off at the knees. Things like:

- Large age gaps are "creepy"
- Men should not seek sex unless they are offering commitment
- Men and women are exactly the same

These are blind spots that do not appear to the common man unless he looks for them and inspects them.

Using language that breaks you out of the mental mold is the first step to challenging long-held beliefs. Words that you've been trained not to say are the very words that can break your conditioning.

The minute we self-censor the very words we use, is the moment where we capitulate to the thought-police and prevent ourselves from exploring every topic, blind spot and idea to its fullest.

When we capitulate on language, we capitulate on ideas.

Our language is the litmus test for free thought. It's not a bug, it's a feature.

They used to teach this in schools.

On the flip side, it's okay to be angry. Anger is a great catalyst for change.

You are allowed to have your full array of emotions. Use them to drive you. Never let any one of them take over and negatively impact your success of achieving your goals, always let them push you to reach.

For there is nothing more endearing and satisfying to a woman than to help a good man become great.

Have you met women?

learn to love the shit tests, appreciate the manipulation, understand the hypergamy

... Look, we can all agree that hating your dog for shitting on the floor is misplaced anger.

But you don't have to put on a fake smile and pretend that you love the smell of shit all over your house.

On Hubris and Humanity

score hidden · 28 September 2020 · /r/TheRedPill

if you can't even look in the mirror without seeing all the pain you've caused to our mothers, daughters, and sisters.

I think you've accepted the feminine frame by assuming somehow that sex is something taken from a woman, and by presenting anything less than the genuine article, you are defrauding them by not honoring your side of the contract. This is a smart play for team women, they know they can get men to damage their own strategies to the benefit of the female strategy. Sex as a means of securing commitment. The play as old as time.

Make no mistake, pain is part of the game. (a zero-sum game mind you). And they will not think twice about inflicting it on you.

That doesn't mean go out of your way to hurt women. But at the same time, don't cut your strategy off at the knees because one team wants to pretend there are rules while they flagrantly ignore them.

At the same time, don't be a soulless asshole because there are diminishing returns and surely some negative consequences if you're not careful. You may want a long term relationship, and lies and deceit are a bad recipe for long-term success. Calibrate your behavior for your intended outcome.

Getting caught up in whether or not you're a husk of a man because you told a couple white lies to a one-nighter is giving it more thought than she will ever think about you.

Fourth Generational Warfare: How Women Are Being Weaponized Against You And What You Can Do About It

score hidden · 19 September 2020 · /r/TheRedPill

Red Pill stop pretending that nothing has changed since the Red Pill's founding

For the reference, I don't think anybody in the know is pretending it hasn't changed. That's almost the entirety of my contributions today.

Effectively there are two kinds of shit tests: organic shit tests, which are a normal part of intersexual dynamics and inorganic shit tests which are ideas implanted into a woman's childlike susceptible brain to create conflict and division in order to destabilize a relationship

A great example is the lockdown doomer movement. Women in relationships in my circles are almost entirely operating as stand-ins for the govt, telling men they're being ridiculous for trying to stand for liberty or resist the lockdowns.

They are allowing the programming to get between personal relationships.

Women do both: tell men they're overreacting or being childish for caring about this topic (women are short sighted and don't understand that liberty exists solely because men stand against tyranny) and they push their men not to make a scene when it comes time to put on a mask at the local grocery store.

Of course the answer to this shit test is the same as others. Fuck you I do what I want.

Crosspost from PPD: CMV - Every attractive young woman will have an OnlyFans account by 2030 and be entirely undateable

score hidden · 9 September 2020 · /r/TheRedPill

I think this is an interesting topic- mainly because I am highly interested in sexual economic factors and futures.

It's clear that the internet, and the advent of the iPhone has changed the sexual landscape forever.

Online dating has had an effect as well, but not nearly as much as the validation machine of Facebook and Instagram.

So what does our future look like in the world of Onlyfans?

I am aware of a growing number of sexless 20-somethings that would have normally had at least one or two girlfriends but are instead virgins with no hope.

Women's attitudes in public have gotten visibly worse from what I've seen. Is the validation machine separating women from reality? What will men's options be? What is the future for men?

I think the poster gets it wrong. They don't become un-dateable because they're "used" goods. They become undateable because the alpha widow principle.

No man competes with all men. Being exposed to the fact that her skin flaps can bring in $3k a week, there's little to no reason she's going to have her head below the clouds. She will believe the golden vagina can demand not only top dollar, but top talent.

A lesson can be learned from this on the reverse side. Too many guys looking for a girl that shares his hobbies or a desire to talk politics / science fiction / whatever with.

The best lesson I learned was that I was failing to meet quality women was because I was looking for a guy friend.

"I have guys for that."

You don't need a chick to validate your star wars theories. Let go of the idea that your woman will be your best friend.

Pay attention to this- this is my prediction from years past.

Feminism (and now the greater left) has been hellbent on making it a legal liability to be male. (and now, white, but that's a topic for a different subreddit).

You have always been in murky territory when interacting with the opposite sex. They are simply pushing forward to close in the boundaries now.

The age gap has always been in the sights of the fempire. The following (faulty) reasoning always rears its head:

- An older man has more "power" so it can't be an equitable relationship
- He's taking advantage of her because she's inexperienced
- He's a creep for liking women younger than him.

Never forget that these are the same people saying that an 18 year old woman is equal to men and has autonomy and is allowed to make decisions for herself.

Nobody infantilizes women worse than feminists and marxists.

If a woman at 18 is a full grown and responsible adult then it is her choice who she mates with.

Unless women don't believe it. Which they don't.

10 Signs You're Dating a Red Piller - (Check the author bio)

score hidden · 31 December 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Shout out to /u/hjz1327 who brought me this article. Too funny. Some of my favorite bits:

Red Pill espouses ideas that advocate for rape,

It's a forum dedicated to learning how to be attractive enough that women want to fuck you. Why would you go through the trouble if it were pro rape?

[red pill] claims that women only want men who have money, and also maintains a strong belief that women are inferior and unable to determine what they want.

From author's profile:

Born in the Ukraine and currently a citizen of New York City, Sasha has become obsessed with makeup, fashion, and anything that keeps her svelte figure looking sharp. She hopes to marry a billionaire and have a lifestyle like Paris Hilton soon enough.

Further on:

He refuses to spend a single cent for you.

Oh, so a red piller both believes women only like you for your money... but also you have to not spend money.

He equates sex with success.

Here's the thing about being a Red Piller that most people don't want to admit. The Red Pill isn't for men who are healthy and happy; it's for men who are sad, insecure, weak, and lonely.

If they were happy with the way life was going, they wouldn't need to look up this kind of advice online. Part of being able to stop the Red Pill from spreading is giving men a happy life and showing them that they don't need to lash out at others.

That's a good point, if men were getting sex he wouldn't need advice on how to get sex. Maybe you should..

One of the final signs that you're dating a Red Piller deals with his attitude towards sex. Does he seem like he sees it as an indicator of success or as a way to dominate women? If so, he's a Terper—and he needs to be gone.

Oh, that's right, the issue isn't that he can't get sex, it's that he wants it and is therefore bad. So him being miserable is self inflicted? Of course it is!

This is not a critically examined piece.

Of course, maybe that's cause it was written by a girrrrl....

Anger is an appropriate emotion to feel in the face of injustice.

I don't know when schools started teaching kids that there were taboo emotions that you should avoid at all costs. I think anger operates as a catalyst to change. Without it there would be no transformation.

Also don't blame a web forum for your divorce / court case / whatever. You choose what actions you take.

The Rollo Pill

score hidden · 10 June 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

I've always liked Rollo and have considered his contributions to be some of the best, most important works for those unplugging. You can tell as much by his sizable inclusion on our sidebar.

The 21 Convention had a stink to it and everything related to Dream inevitably turns to cancer. We witnessed this and documented it when we gave Dream his ban and accurately predicted that others involved with him would eventually be burned as well.

Rollo hitched his cart to the wrong horse, and you don't need somebody like me or GLO to tell you that now. But it shouldn't have taken him that long to figure it out, given how painstakingly obvious Dream has made his personality disorders and snake oil sales (tactical soap?)

I really wish Rollo had come forward and added some transparency here. Because as the head mod of TRP my goal isn't to conduct witch hunts, it's to keep the topic moving and staying on course, and inevitably remove the trolls or blue pillers that want to detract from conversation.

I'm not a fan of gossip politics and everything surrounding 21 CON has been nothing but drama and politics for the past month, so I'm very interested in us moving past this and getting back to Rule Zero.

Before this place turns into a shit-fest of muckraking and girly gossip, I want to make it known that after this, we're not going to continue any threads on this topic unless Rollo himself wants to address the community and these claims.

I don't care if Dream said this, or if Rollo said that, or if all of 21 Con guys are cuckold fetishists who like to be pegged. We already knew that blue pillers and opportunists were going to try to co-opt our language and brand (if you want to call it that) to move us towards the blue pill and to make a buck. I suspect everyone related to 21CON is lying through their teeth right now in a desperate attempt to stop the bleeding that, of course, is self-inflicted by all parties involved.

So we call it like we see it and we move on.

TRP is nothing if not a place of learning. I, for one, did not come to TRP because I knew everything, but because I had recognized my mistakes and decided to own them and work on moving forward.

I don't always agree with GLO's approach to things. He's aggressive and sometimes pushes a bit too hard in every direction regardless of his target. But that doesn't mean he's wrong about the 21 CON. I happen to agree with his analysis that this was to date the largest scale attack on our values we've ever seen. It was so strong it tried to co-opt a number of our members to lend it credibility.

I hope those involved can speak to this, as transparency, learning, and owning this is the only way forward.

Just so everybody's clear, I was away for a few days and the mods flagged potential issues and wanted me to weigh in before reinstating the post. GLO was not permabanned and he was told as such.

To make it completely clear- posting pictures of people is a really grey area for reddit tos. Are these photos public? Are the people considered people in the public spot light? Are they public with their names/faces/etc. We have in the past removed GLO posts and asked him to revise due to the images in use. We probably will again.

There's no big 21 convention conspiracy. I personally denounced it a few weeks ago here.

Everybody take a chill pill.

I think there's a lot to unpack with the content of 21 Convention, and I don't think it necessarily means going rabid on long-standing members here. Does it bother me that Rollo endorses this event? Yes. But I also have a masculine respect for the work he's done and the effort he's put forward.

And I think some people here would do well to remember how masculine hierarchies work. Do I think 21 Convention is a snake oil platform? Yes. But that doesn't mean I now attack everybody on the planet. Especially not guys who saw an opportunity and took it, even if it didn't work out quite right.

I think everybody involved (who currently has clout on TRP- not the instagram guys) should have the freedom and room to explain their positions so there isn't a ton of straw-manning being thrown around. And I think we should give them some time given that they may be under contract so they can discuss their real opinions.

And that means being a bit more mature than throwing around the SJW-style attacks.

The 21 Convention is open to being critiqued. It should be. But let's give our guys a little respect and let them answer before we all start burning witches. Shall we?

Do not say you're sorry for every wrong thing you do. It is a posture of submission that no man should reflexively adopt, no matter how alpha he is. Apologizing increases the demand for more apologies. She will come to expect your contrition, like a cat expects its meal at a set time each day. And then your value will lower in her eyes. Instead, if you have done something wrong, you should acknowledge your guilt in a glancing way without resorting to the actual words "I'm sorry." Pull the Bill Clinton maneuver and say "Mistakes were made" or tell her you "feel bad" about what you did. You are granted two freebie "I'm sorry"s for the life of your relationship; use them wisely.

Most men will eventually find themselves face to face with some sort of social pressure- whether it be a full scale SJW attack or simply the PTA meeting trying to get you to back down.

Your take up more space on our sidebar than anybody else and I'm always excited to see new posts by you because I greatly enjoy your insights.

TRP wouldn't be what it is today without your contributions. So I hope that you don't think that I'm simply shitting on you and the whole gang when I critique Dream.

All of this aside, Dream's behavior has been suspect for quite a while, and I think I'm putting it mildly when I say the way he conducted himself here just recently was way, way over the line. We had no choice but to judge him on his own actions and words.

I believe that your heart is in the right place. And I believe you when you say your dedication to objective truth continues to be your purpose. I think that it shows in your work.

The fact is, Dream's behavior has demonstrated to us, at least, that he's not above using people for his own monetary gain. As I'm sure you're quite well aware, this is something that TRP men are highly sensitive to, given the propensity of hucksters to use self-help as a means to prey on the weak.

It suggests that Dream thinks of you the very same way he thought of us. A means for collecting ticket fees. I suspect that's why some members here are apprehensive about your involvement. Surely you're aware of his behavior. And if not.. why?

As for me, I think your track record stands for itself and I know better than most that you put yourself out there to help others. I know your dedication is to growing the manosphere to reach more men. But others here are younger and may not have the same exposure that I do. And I think they question they want an answer to is why you've decided to hitch your wagon to a man who has outwardly demonstrated such disdain for your very goals.

I hope I'm wrong but I have yet to see anything that would suggest otherwise. The man doesn't appear have an ounce of humility nor the mental wherewithal to consider apologizing to our mod team. Of course at this point, as they say, too little too late.

The Extra Chromosome 21 Convention

score hidden · 2 May 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

For the reference, here is my modmail to him that he's responding to (regarding the fast car C21 patriarch commercial):

It's a blatant ad bereft of valuable content. (i.e. spam)

As the head mod, I think I should make this clear to you. I think it's great that you're putting forward the effort to make a convention for men (and fathers). On that front, I typically allow content creators a lot more leniency on our board because without them, what would we have?

You may even recognize that in the past I've stickied 21 Convention announcements and speeches recorded from it. When I think there is serious value to be gained I have no problem with your content.

That said- we don't want spam, and we certainly don't like the front page being littered with low-quality, low-content fluff pieces. It's a well produced teaser, don't get me wrong, but it is a teaser. It doesn't provide our members any benefit. /r/TheRedPill is a different medium than I think you're used to. It's not a flashy lifestyle marketing tool- it's a place to compare notes for men. Men who are wary of salesmen.

If you stick around long enough to notice- the creators we give leniency to are the ones who have already earned the respect of the community with their contributions. While some of your content certainly is good- it walks a fine line between content for the community and free-sample content for the exposure.

There are some in our community who question your motives, given this drive-by posting behavior of yours. Some very well respected members here are skeptical of your approach: alpha-soap commercials and convention teasers with fast cars. We see very little engagement with the community and no new insights to take away.

I think that if your goal is to appeal to this community, you're going to need to reanalyze your approach to it. You've ruffled a lot of feathers- including my own in your chat with my Redpillwomen mods. Flashing your subscriber numbers and calling my sub a joke isn't going to get you far with us - and it does put into question what sort of advice for men you approve of if basic social skills aren't in your repertoire.

The ban is temporary because we wanted to have this conversation with you before you continue. I hope you can take away something constructive from this.

This ban has since been made permanent.

You talk shit about women because you hate yourself.

Man I wish your 80-page story could've come to a point way sooner.

This is a lot of words for an overplayed platitude.

You can legitimately criticize behaviors that are hypocritical or run counter to the lies society tells you about them without hating yourself. We're in this position because society, the media, your parents, and everybody around you went to great lengths to conceal female mating strategies to put you at a disadvantage.

Most women will lie about their motivations as they show their true desires through action. To believe they are above reproach because "you hate yourself" is the bluest of the blue pills you could ever dispense.

I know what you're trying to say here, but you've done it poorly. Your goal was to teach inner peace with the world around you that you cannot change. And you're not wrong about that.

But the rest of what you've said here are un-examined platitudes that belong on /r/feelgood or some equivalent.

I often get people who ask me why do I dwell on divorce rates or politics that affect male sexual strategies. Do I hate myself, or am I jealous that others are getting married / divorced / etc? Why don't I just focus on getting laid?

I find it to be a marker of intelligence when somebody is able to distinguish a discussion from personal feelings. Many can't. They literally can't fathom the concept of a devil's advocate, let alone the idea that one could criticize others' strategies objectively while formulating one's own strategy. All of this without hating oneself let alone the target of the criticism.

You want inner peace? Learn to discuss topics without getting ego invested or emotionally involved in them. So you don't have to rely on shitty ass platitudes like "you only talk about this because you hate yourself."

An informed man does not shy away from any topic. There is always insight to be gained from analyzing the behavior of others. No amount of shame from others should affect that. Not shame from a moral authority, and certainly not shame from somebody accusing us of violating an inner authority.

Anything else is just sticking your head in the sand and wishing it not to be true. Thus the red pill metaphor.

score hidden · 18 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

"It indicates a culture of nonchalance around consent and women's safety. It's clear that the developer of the app's primary concern is not the safety of women nor is it to ensure that all sexual encounters are consensual. The primary concern is to protect men from accusations of rape," Ms Wilson said. Other students described the proposal as "toxic masculinity at its finest".

Classic postmodernism at its finest! The intention of the author is more important than what he says or does!

An app, dedicated to consent, which formalizes and memorializes consent so that there is ZERO misunderstanding or miscommunication between two parties is demonized because they guy who came up with it thought, "gosh this could protect men!"

And so the school gets their panties in a bunch - and without a hint of irony says, "wait a fucking second mate, you can't protect men with consent! ONLY WOMEN!"

Nevermind the fact that the net result of fewer accusations means fewer women who believe (wrongly or not) that they were raped. Meaning that women might take consent as seriously as men.

Of course, any way you slice it, formalized consent can only help both parties. (According to their perverse worldview- but that's a story for another day).

So, it betrays their real view. If it helps men as well as women, then it's not helping only women. Feminism seeks to increase power and choice for women only. The false rape card is a major play, and this would undermine such power.

Where did she get the idea she was transgender? From a school presentation—at a school where over 5 percent of the student body called themselves trans or nonbinary, and where several students were already on hormones, and one had a mastectomy at the age of sixteen.

5% - if they're not exaggerating - is an example of how brainwashing young children will make them jump on-board with new fads. Whereas a study from NIH suggested that the US national percentage of trans individuals was closer to 1 in 250 (less than half a percent), this school somehow deviates from the norm by an enourmous jump to 1 in 20 ... 5%!

But he doesn't stay and engage, nor does he provide value to the community.

We let someone like /u/gaylubeoil sell his T-shirts at the bottom of his posts because he put in the time and effort to gain respect in this community. If he wanted to start his own convention, he'd have my support.

But Anthony has put the cart before the horse with our community. He knows deep down that with our subscriber count of 330,000+, he can't afford not to at least try to break into our community. But without the legwork and earned respect, it's just an all-take but no-give relationship.

Misogyny Alert: Men's Brains Are Significantly Larger Than Women's Brains

score hidden · 11 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Here's a list of female biological advantages that are apparently not controversial in any way:

- Women have less body mass, therefore requiring fewer resources to men (and therefore can survive with less in case of emergency.)
- Women can have babies.
- Women have attention and adoration of the entire male gender, to the point where men organized to fight wars to protect women.

- Women live statistically longer than men (By almost 10 years)
- Because of two X chromosomes, women are less susceptible to diseases such as color blindness, hemophilia, and Duchenne's disease.
- Women are less likely to be murdered or to die while on the job.
- Women can have multiple orgasms.

These aren't just uncontroversial, you can say them anywhere at any time without even a small chance of being chastised or called misandrist, let alone your subreddit being quarantined.

But you suggest that men have larger brains, and that men make up a large majority of the highest IQ percentiles (ignoring that men make up larger majorities of the lowest IQ percentiles) and all hell breaks loose.

Ask yourself, when you read the linked article, was your gut reaction that you needed to point out that women have different skills or are wired differently, or perform better on other tests as some kind of defense of women? Did you feel like a statement as simple as this was an attack on women rather than observational fact?

Ask yourself what was the reason for your gut reaction when reading the linked article. Then ask yourself if you had the same gut reaction reading my list of female advantages. And then consider how unplugged you truly are.

I've never understood everybody's obsession with masturbation here.

I think nofap is a great way to blame your problems on something stupid instead of getting out there and accomplishing your goals. Masturbation isn't going to stop you from accomplishing your goals. People use the excuse as a crutch.

If you're masturbating 20 times a day to bdsm porn, your problem isn't masturbation.

Healthy masturbation is when you pleasure yourself but you don't fantasize and you don't look at pornography. What you are doing is tapping into your sexual self and learning to not feel shame and fear.

This is the most meaningless thing I've ever read.

Why do they hide the truth ?

score hidden · 22 February 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

I think you'll find some answers in our sidebar. Take some time to read it.

Notably Rollo's writings.

In short- the "mystery" has been party of the feminine strategy since the beginning. Heck- women have concealed ovulation making it difficult to determine who the father is. Mystery has been key to female's pluralistic mating strategy- alpha fucks / beta bucks.

Couple that with the need for women in early cultures (not to mention today!), it was easy for them to create social orders which prioritized females.

The disparity of sex drive between men and women have handed women a huge advantage on the playing field. Women get to choose, men get chosen. All else basically stems from here.

Read the side bar.

Women love travel. It's like crack to them.

For women, it's the best stand-in for a personality you can get. They can pretend to be interesting by simply never forging long-lasting relationships with anybody and having a lot of stories of places they've been.

I have never met women so annoying than those with wanderlust.

These women have the thousand-cock stare for sure. You will never capture their full attention because they've always got one foot out the door.

They talk about all these amazing places they've been, but make no mistake, they're referring to the dicks they've sucked.

APA's War on Masculinity

score hidden · 30 January 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Yes, it's a video, and yes, I think videos are low-bandwidth. If anybody had something important to say they could write it. But nevertheless it's good material.

I know we've talked about this before but its worth continuing discussion. Our mission statement has never been more true than it is today:

The Red Pill: Discussion of sexual strategy in a culture increasingly lacking a positive identity for men.

From the APA:

The main thrust of the subsequent research is that traditional masculinity-- marked by stoicism, competitiveness, dominance and aggression-- is, on the whole, harmful.

Dr. Smith discusses the ridiculousness of this statement, and analyzes the actual guidelines.

"These are just qualities. Qualities can have upsides and downsides."

"To say that they're harmful on the whole is just absurd. It's no different than saying that feminine qualities are harmful on the whole."

"I want to focus on how these guidelines were built, because they weren't built on anything resembling science."

From the guidelines: "Feminist scholars have argued that some men use violence and control in relationships as a way of maintaining sexist beliefs and dominance over women."

Dr. Smith: "Yes this is true lots of people have argued lots of things. I didn't know that I was supposed to build my clinical interventions around argumentation and opinion. I thought it was supposed to use reliable data and research but apparently not when it conflicts with the APA's approved ideology."

"Nothing in here about treatment, it's about advancing ideology and that becomes readily apparent in guideline number three where the APA charges psychologists with understanding the impact of power privilege and sexism on the development of boys and men and on their relationships with others. Again nothing here about treatment this is about me making sure that my clients know how powerful and privileged they are whether or not that squares with their experience and the money quote comes way down in the middle of page 10 and it reads like this:

"indeed awareness of privilege and the harmful impacts of beliefs and behaviors that maintain patriarchal power have been shown to reduce sexist attitudes and men and have been linked to participation in social justice activities"

"I take that to mean that the APA is creating a policy which compels psychologists to compel their clients to participate in a political agenda."

Especially scary how political the test questions are at the end.

The fact is, the words feminist or patriarchy should not even appear once in the text. This is all the evidence I need to know the APA is strictly anti-male. I will never allow myself or any of my children anywhere near this man-hating establishment.

Granted, I already knew they were anti-male before this, this is just more proof.

Despite my hatred of videos as an essay medium, it's worth watching.

So the question is: Who really is Paul Elam? What does he really believe? Does he think that women are manipulative whores incapable of empathy? Or does he believe that women should empathize with men's issues? He's taken both positions. Which one does he actually believe? Does he even know? All we can say conclusively is that Paul Elam is a mushy turd.

When Kavanaugh was in the hot seat defending against baseless sexual assault claims, Jordan Peterson declared:

Jordan B Peterson@jordanbpeterson

If confirmed Kavanaugh should step down.

Jordan B Peterson@jordanbpeterson

I'm not certain that is the right move. It's very complex. But he would have his name cleared, and a figure who might be less divisive might be put forward.

Jordan Peterson who champions the cause of the lost boys suggests backing down to false accusations - the Achilles' heel of masculinity.. What does he really believe? Does he even know?

Understanding the Emotional Language of Women (Part 1)

score hidden · 4 December 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

Women cannot distinguish actual reality from their own emotional interpretation of reality, and this is always present in their language and communication.

It's a very common theme in TRP. Women's reality is based on their emotional state. If a woman feels a certain way, she rationalizes it as being caused by reality.

Why would she feel angry if you didn't do something to make her angry?

Why would she feel sad if you didn't do something to make her sad.

Her own autonomy is a foreign concept to her. These emotional realities reflect the real reality outside her (in her mind).

Which is why cluster B personality disorders are so prevalent and dangerous in women. When her emotional state is so far removed from actual reality that she makes up conversations and hallucinates events to hold you responsible.

And as always, it's the core of my light-switch-effect hypothesis:

This is evidence that media has been doing their job to normalize in the extreme LGBT behaviors. With extreme over-representation, young, impressionable minds are apt to emulate the behaviors they see on tv.

Whether or not this primarily to confuse the next generation, it has certainly helped change the minds of family-court judges who rule that it is child abuse not to indulge your children in these behaviors.

The overestimation may also reflect prominent media portrayals of gay characters on television and in movies, even as far back as 2002, and perhaps the high visibility of activists who have pushed gay causes, particularly legalizing same-sex marriage.

I didn't respect her autonomy, her legal standing and personhood. As pathetic as this may sound, I saw her as my property, to be defined by my name and according to my legal standing. (She kept her name.) While this was not sexual assault, my insistence was a violation of her independence. I had inherited a subtle, yet still violent, form of toxic masculinity.

Take special notice of the fact that feminism has been on the warpath to redefine words to serve themselves. Notice the use of "violent" here, in a case that is distinctly not violent.

This is one of the most common examples of newspeak that they employ.

From Rollo's "Of Love and War:"

We want to relax. We want to be open and honest. We want to have a safe haven in which struggle has no place, where we gain strength and rest instead of having it pulled from us. We want to stop being on guard all the time, and have a chance to simply be with someone who can understand our basic humanity without begrudging it. To stop fighting, to stop playing the game, just for a while.

We want to, so badly.

If we do, we soon are no longer able to.

From "Man affections vs boy affections:" there are only two types of man-love our brain is wired for.

one, the love you got, wanted to get, hoped for, maybe experienced – from your mother, as a child. that's a key kind of emotional connection to the female. and, as much as that sounds fucked up, it's the type of connection most men are trying to find again in their adult life – from a girlfriend / wife.

seriously consider this. look at the few bullet points above. what kind of 'love' is that? let's not judge it, just look at it objectively. that's how most men view love. they don't think about it consciously, but that's the love they got to experience as a child.

here's some news: no girl will ever love you like your mom did.

before we get a bit more into that, let's look at the other type of man-love our brain has wiring for:

the love a father has for his daughter.

again, we have to remove all the incestuous, sexualized, weird bits of it, and just look at the emotional components that drive the type of interaction, expectation, dependence, and outcome. how does a father love his daughter?

Sokal 2.0 - The open secret of feminist philosophy

score hidden · 3 October 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

Postmodernists pretend to be experts in what they call "theory." They claim that, although their scholarship may seem incomprehensible, this is because they are like mathematicians or physicists: they express profound truths in a way that cannot be understood without training. Lindsay, Boghossian, and Pluckrose expose this for the lie that it is. "Theory" is not real. Postmodernists have no expertise and no profound understanding.

When I was young, I was taught that science and scientific theory must have falsifiability. In today's culture, there's a sham being presented as science. Feminism, gender studies, and general Marxism are being passed as facts and cogent theories. But there's a problem- none of them are falsifiable. This is how we know they are wrong. Not because we disagree, but because they are not falsifiable. This is postmodernism at its core.

Have you noticed you can't falsify institutional racism. Or patriarchy theory? Or sexism?

As an aside, I am absolutely loving the unfolding of all of this around us. The new topics on here are also refreshing. I think we neglected the significance of the anti-male world around us, while we were busy talking about self improvement.

score hidden · 12 September 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

You meander a lot in your writing. And I think you've got some interesting ideas. But then you kinda fall flat and I'm disappointed.

I agree, take apart the "forget about it" solution to problems. It doesn't work, and it is a pretty little lie to keep your ego nice and plump while you fail.

But that doesn't mean this is a hate group, and it doesn't mean women don't have anything to offer.

If women had nothing to offer, we wouldn't be talking about getting them. There is an evolutionary drive for men to want women in their lives. There are emotional and physical needs that women fulfill, and anybody who says otherwise is likely lying.

The point here isn't that women aren't important to men- it's that when you get stuck on one woman, you sacrifice your own strategy and will likely falter.

Additionally, it's worth noting that women really don't bring much to a relationship other than fitness and beauty. Men develop skills, careers, personalities, and resources in order to attract women. Women, on the other hand (as selectors) do not need to do the same to attract men. They simply need to be.

It's not a mental illness.

What you're witnessing is a combination of low-effort platitudes that rightly should be removed from the sub- and your own misunderstanding of red pill theory... which is readily available in the sidebar.

Why TRP can not stop Feminism

score hidden · 9 August 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

This isn't simply about a woman wanting to have a penis, but about women wishing they were men,

First of all, penis envy is a tone-deaf ego-boosting rationalization for what is happening. It's too easy to call it penis envy, because that makes you feel good. Women are just jealous they're not us. yeahhhh

I think it can better be explained by female solipsism, coupled with how mainstream culture works.

First of all, women are absolutely clueless when it comes to understanding what attracts a mate. Women will often mimic what they find attractive in a mate because they are unaware that the traits that make up attraction are not the same for men and women. That's why you see women getting shorter hair cuts, tattoos, and cultivating rough, masculine attitudes instead of the kinder attitudes men are actually attracted to.

Of course, since men are horny and there is a finite supply of women, most women will never receive negative feedback from these choices, or if they do, it will be only from a small portion of their potential dating pool, which they can promptly ignore. Women's sexual success will come in spite of their efforts. Men's sexual success is because of his efforts. Hypoagency/Hyperagency. Passive/Active.

Finally, women are herd animals. They need to follow in order to fit in. Their survival has always been dependent on not rocking the boat. So when pop culture says shoulder pads are in, most will blindly follow. Not because they wish they were men, but because they saw it on Oprah.

Fempowerment | Rollo: "Say no and you're a despicable misogynist. Say yes and you're tar-pitted in "yes, but" caveats – mansplaining – that are disqualified because you're a man. "

Jordan Peterson, Fallacies, and the Tragic State of this Sub

score hidden · 31 July 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

Man you chucklefucks really don't get it. My post was "debate ideas not the man" and you immediately run for a defense of a man.

Introduction There's been a whole charade of backlash and relentless vitriol against Jordan Peterson by a ton of members on this sub recently.

Just yesterday, the top, pinned post was the moderator making fun of Jordan Peterson's lecture on psychopathy and pick-up artists. He simply took a transcript from his speech during a university lecture and edited out all the punctuation to make it seem like a bunch of nonsensical ramble.

It was a copy/paste from youtube's transcription.

Anyways, I thought this sub was supposed to bolster good quality content, not turn it into a fucking dumpster fire.

Concern troll.

He's right. Pick-up artists are inherently psychopathic.

Ah, good point.

And the fact that the creator of this sub is upset about this is absolutely inane, and really goes to show where it's headed.

You know nothing of the origins of this subreddit if you think that's where we're "headed." We were already there, who the fuck are you?

Pick-up artistry doesn't actually fall in line, at all, with the "Red Pill."

I can already hear you yelling that it's not inherently psychopathic. Or that psychopathy isn't bad. But that's besides the matter.

Pick-up is inherently for low-status men, against that which embraces the flourishing of the masculine, and counter-productive for those who are attempting to truly ascend the male dominance hierarchy.

Ah, good point. The age-old advice: Just don't be low status. Be attractive, don't be unattractive.

Listen, I think learning about TRP is useful whether you're a natural chad with money falling out of your pockets or you're a loser with spaghetti falling out of your pockets. But let's face it, a lot of the guys who end up here are the ones who need the most help.

Even if you disagree with the caricature of pick-up artists as fedora-wearing sleaze-bags, you're missing the point. Pick-up doesn't focus on the actualization of the man. It doesn't further one's status or mission. Instead, it places emphasis upon the female and encourages the male to escape his true imperative. The intrinsic motive of "pick-up" and "Game" is weak and counter-productive.

"Actualization of the man." You are simply taking manhood and framing it in a feminine-primary light. You are doing exactly what we've been talking about on the red pill for years.

Game isn't weak and counter productive, it is a very useful tool that a lot of smart guys came up with to help awkward idiots learn how to communicate with women. That doesn't make you less of a man or prevent the "actualization of the man" or whatever newaged nonsense you're on about.

Learning things like agree and amplify aren't just cheap tricks, they're insights into human psychology that help you get a new perspective on how humans interact.

It seems like you think game is just sitting around memorizing pickup lines. That's fucking retarded, and the only way somebody could come to that conclusion is if they're new here and haven't read the fucking sidebar.

When you internalize concepts like agree and amplify, you aren't regurgitating prewritten lines. You're understanding why people like it, why it pushes the right buttons, and then you're using your own wit to talk with other humans while avoiding the pitfalls of being overly defensive, boorish, or antisocial.

For some guys that didn't have dads or role models, this is more important than you'd think.

But I'm glad your advice is just "be high value." Shut down TRP guys, this dude just solved sex.

It's not just semantics either. Pick-up itself encompasses a wide swath of beliefs, and all fall under an anti-masculine, manipulative sphere of ideology.

Who defines masculine in this scenario? Because if I decide to pick up women and use whatever I've learned here, I sure as hell am as masculine as they get. You don't get to decide if I'm a man or not. Neither does Peterson. Neither does the feminine imperative.

In case you didn't get it yet, that's the fucking point of TRP. To reject the notion that other people get to define masculinity in order to control you.

Still doubtful that pick-up is anti-Red Pill and anti-masculine? Great, cause I'm about to explain it to you.

The Male Dominance Hierarchy Men have their own evolutionarily driven dominance hierarchy. They compete, fight, and struggle towards its peak. The females sit idly on the side, waiting to choose those who emerge on top.

Men hold each other to a high standard. As does the individual. You have a personal obligation to become all you can be. To follow your true calling, listen to the individuated self, and righteously strive towards the metaphorical kingdom of God on Earth.

Jesus Christ that's some meaningless new-age drivel.

Your words: You have a personal obligation to become all you can be.

How do you get from point A to point B? So far your advice has amounted to "stop being low value." But how? How do you get an anti-social beta who doesn't know how to talk to women to suddenly become good at talking to women?

If only there were a forum dedicated to helping men solve that problem.... If only.

A real man engages his true mission up the male dominance hierarchy and focuses solely on himself and actualizing his pluripotentiality, narrowing a multitude of possibilities into one single frame of existence as he becomes who he truly is.

Ah, there we go again. Somebody telling me what a real man does in an attempt to get me to follow his rules. I've fallen for that trick before. That's what led me here.

Listen you're really on about this dominance hierarchy nonsense, but some guys just want to get better at maximizing their sexual strategy. Some to start families, others to get laid, while others do it just to know they can.

If a man tries to escape his evolutionary prerogative or that which calls his Being forward, he will suffer and never live a fulfilling, meaningful existence. It's natural law.

Did a voice in your head tell you that?

Seems to me we're driven to make babies, and beyond that there isn't much more evolution says.

Pick-Up How does pick-up fit in with that?

You're shying away from becoming who you can be, and attempting to circumvent the hierarchy by manipulating the highly-perceptive feminine into thinking that you are high status, when you're not. And that never plays out well—for the male. No male will ever be truly sexually successful through a facade of status, memorized routines and lines, and a weak masculine foundation.

Essentially, you're cheating nature. There are no shortcuts to the top.

That's where you're wrong, bucko. If I have more sex than you, and make more babies, then as far as evolution is concerned, I win. That's all there is to it.

I disagree that game is cheating - but then again I don't think anything is cheating because there are no rules.

But here you are again, trying to define proper masculinity by appeasing the fempire and saying you must only be high value or fuck off. Well, I don't play by their rules, and I don't play by yours either. If I want to do things my way, I'm going to. And if you don't like that, fuck you.

As a result, if the facade and veneer of sophistication succeeds, we get men who are inherently low status, unattractive, and have no real value fucking women who think they are high-status, attractive, and capable of climbing the dominance hierarchy. It's bad for society and men themselves.

Those poor hapless women. Society is truly doomed.

Wait.. but why? Oh because you said so?

"Pick-up" and "Game" masquerade as facades for any true imperative of climbing the male dominance hierarchy. It's a rationalized, half-baked attempt for men to cheat the rules of reality—one that will never succeed in the end.

I don't know if all you JP trolls are just the same guy but it seems like you hide the fact that you don't have a point in a "veneer of sophistication." Let's count the ten dollar words and see how it compares to your point.

You've used the phrase "male dominance hierarchy" a number of times- but your nebulous definition leaves much to be desired. Is it just the big eternal competition to see who gets the most access to women? But here you've presented us a list of caveats that exclude things like actually getting access to women in JP unapproved ways. Who gets to say what the fuck you mean? Muscles are approved, wit is unapproved. Dressing well is approved, but overdressing is unapproved.

Good god, we're going to need referees to play by your rules.

"The actualization of the man." Sounds to me like somebody just took a philosophy 101 class. If you had paid attention in that class, you'd remember the part about different strokes for different folks.

You've got your own idea of what self-actualization means. Fair enough, go do it and leave us alone.

"Pick-up" is for low-status men.

"Pick-up artists" and teachers of "pick-up" use routines, verbal tricks, and superficial elements with the "veneer of sophistication" to trick women into thinking they are something they are not.

What? Clever? I would argue if you're smart enough to work in jokes and beat shit tests then you probably are clever.

Gave my LTR an ultimatum

score hidden · 20 March 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

An ultimatum only demonstrates a position of weakness.

As Rian says in another comment- you are attempting to negotiate attraction.

First of all, these battles should have been fought much earlier on, when they were small battles. And you don't explicitly fight them with words such as "either you do x or do y."

When a woman does what's right in a relationship, you reward her with your time, attention, affection, etc. When she does something she knows she should not do, you remove said attention and affection.

That doesn't mean you'd have trained her over the past two years. But it does mean she'd have either shaped up or you'd have had the last year and a half to yourself without the dead weight.

That form of training conveys a position of strength. You reward only those who merit reward because you are high status.

Instead you spent 2 years telegraphing your low status. No wonder she gave you attitude at the end there. You don't call the shots in this relationship.

Keep an eye out for the light-switch effect which is undoubtedly coming. Make a clean break or suffer.

Dating girls does not equal happiness

On the flip side, when your veins are pumping testosterone, it's close to impossible to ignore the call of nature. For many (myself included) this means requiring me to fulfill my evolutionary duty to spread my seed in order to find happiness. And there's nothing wrong with that. If man wasn't built with this drive, our species would have died out long ago.

Don't make up excuses because you're stressed about not getting laid.

I consider this to be poor advice. High protein and fasting is a recipe for kidney stones (or worse). Protein has a higher insulin response than fat does, which means if you do this wrong your metabolism slows down to try to prevent weight loss.

Plus, popping out of ketosis and counting calories is a recipe for foggy-brain and hunger issues that may cause over-eating.

Try IF + Keto. And yes, if you're eating protein you can build muscles. If you feel weak, make sure you've adapted to ketosis. Don't believe anybody who tells you that you need to "bulk up" before you "cut."

You cannot negotiate Desire. Negotiated desire only ever leads to obligated compliance. - Rollo

score hidden · 9 January 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

One the most common personal problems I've been asked advice for in the past 10 years is some variation of "how do I get her back?" Usually this breaks down into men seeking some methodology to return his relationship to an earlier state where a previously passionate woman couldn't keep her hands off of him. Six months into a comfortable familiarity and the thrill is gone, but in truth it's the genuine desire that is gone.

It's often at this stage that a man will resort to negotiation. Sometimes this can be as subtle as him progressively doing things for her in the hopes that she'll reciprocate with the same sexual fervor they used to have. Other times a married couple may go to marriage counseling to "resolve their sex issues" and negotiate terms for her sexual compliance. He'll promise to do the dishes and a load of laundry more often in exchange for her feigned sexual interest in him. Yet, no matter what terms are offered, no matter how great an external effort he makes so deserving of reward, the genuine desire is not there for her. In fact, she feels worse for not having the desire after such efforts were made for her compliance.

Negotiated desire only ever leads to obligated compliance.

On Alpha & Beta, and the misuse of these terms.

score hidden · 9 January 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

ITT: people who didn't read the very short summary I posted above and continue to try to define the perfect alpha.

Why does red pill not talk about the "different" types of "alpha" It's always the same shit.

score hidden · 9 January 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

Alpha is the most misused word on this forum. It's a word meant to describe traits that are attractive to women and satisfy her alpha desires.

Women also seek out beta behaviors. A man who can satisfy both without losing balance is considered the ultimate catch for women.

The big problem is, women tend to grind away at men to bring down the alpha qualities, or test their mettle. They believe they want more beta qualities rather than alpha qualities. This would be a mistake if you fall for this shit test. If you do, you will quickly learn she's on her way to the next branch. This gives men here the impression that beta is all to be avoided.

An example: a father who leads the family and brings home the bacon, is fit, and knows when to say no to his wife. Notice there are a number of alpha traits here, such as fitness and saying no. But buying a house, or feeding your family? Beta traits. Does that make this man "beta" or "alpha" or does this show that these terms are meaningless in this context?

/u/rollo-tomassi suggests to err on the side of alpha. Displaying too many alpha traits is a safer bet than too many beta traits. He even suggests not even considering striking a balance, I suspect because he believes the beta side of things is too easy and natural to men that it will shine through anyhow.

But nevertheless, do not mistake these terms for descriptors of a whole person.

Some people here make shorthand of it to suggest an "alpha" is simply one whose alpha traits outnumber their beta traits. But as you can see, it leads to confusion like this post here.

TRP isn't Groundbreaking

score hidden · 5 January 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

Women - why are so many men focused on wanting a commitment from women? There's nothing wrong with taking it slow for a year or waiting for her to bring up exclusivity. When you force a relationship, it isn't her idea. The worst trend I've seen is people getting married/engaged in their early/mid 20s. You need to think logically. To this day I am still finding myself, let alone a "soul mate", why do you think she isn't in the same boat as you in that. Additionally, as men, you need to take more accountability for why the relationship failed ex. being too needy, controlling, not having a life, not working on your goals, revolving your life around hers, being boring, not being a man or just picking a low quality woman. And if she happens to screw things up just change the terms of the relationship (ex. GF to FWB) and just live your life and keep having fun. Wanted to focus on this first since TRP is focused around women.

Looks like somebody needs a trip to the sidebar! ----->

Overall, TRP just seems like common sense to me and is built for men who lack vision. Go ahead and hate but it's very true.

Some of our more controversial topics have become normalized in our current culture. That's the shift of the overton window. But you can't ignore that simply participating here puts a target on your back. If being here is dangerous to your life and career.. then is that sense really common?

Of course not. But from this little bit of shit you've just written here, it's clear to me you didn't spend half an hour reading up on what the fuck red pill theory is before spouting off your own bullshit.

Usually I remove concern trolls, but I'm leaving this up as an example. If you can't be fussed to do the legwork and read the sidebar, then you haven't earned the right to be heard here.

Dangerous Times – Part 2

score hidden · 3 January 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

A thought I was having while reading Parts 1 and 2:

The pushing of the social envelope of what constitutes rape/harassment is not only being used to normalize these "rules" in a social context so that future legislation will be easier to pass, but it's also being used to preemptively destroy potential threats to the feminine imperative.

Consider if we keep pushing consent to mean enthusiastic, to the point where some professions become a grey area:

- Pornography, clearly the leading force in undermining women's power in the market. As long as betas have a release, they hold at least some control. The MGTOW movement I think exists solely because the existence of pornography permits it. As these new definitions of consent begin to take hold, I think we'll see the transactional nature of on-camera sex be revisited in a legislative setting.
- Prostitutes. Currently illegal in most US states, it is the most distilled example of transactional sex. While there hasn't been much talk of increasing support for prostitution in the USA, it still poses a great threat to the feminine imperative. If consent is redefined to mean something that can never be given in a transactional setting (paying a prostitute), then the FI has successfully preempted legal prostitution before it even had a chance.

There's no way around what's happened over the past year. The increasing number of sexual misconduct allegations and consequently ruined careers, we are now in the new era of all-sex-is-potentially-assault. And thanks to this new influx of accusations, legislators will be all-too-ready to suggest the next big way we can fix masculine sexuality.

An additional note- I know Rollo mentioned it, but making sure that all sex can now be retroactively considered rape is important because it now puts Alphas in the same jeopardy that betas were. There is no such thing as a long-term alpha. Every woman gets sick of men eventually. And now, when the excitement wears off, they've got their threatpoint with the Alphas as well as the Betas. And we know that when that lightswitch turns off, every sexy encounter she's had with him will be rewritten to be abuse.

THIS IS FIGHT CLUB

score hidden · 5 December 2017 · /r/TheRedPill

What's interesting to me over the past 5-6 years is how we've started in a culture where simply discussing sexual strategy is considered "misogyny" because how dare you analyze interpersonal relationships. People are people, don't you know? You can't generalize people.

And now 50-60% of what we talk about is just considered "common knowledge" and if you bring it up, many will act like you're stupid for thinking any of this was a secret.

Seeing Hollywood implode like it is, the international conversation is now "We knew sex was transactional, but these poor women just didn't have a choice in the matter."

The overton window has shifted considerably. 5 years ago, the very discussion of transactional sex was such a hot-button you were instantly labelled a misogynist for even posing the question.

That said, I still think it's a bad idea to brag about it at work or on facebook. But the truth is, your sanity is going to come from finding like-minded friends who understand the world for what it truly is. My focus this past year has been defining my own tribe and working to bring it power. That means sometimes you gotta invite people to fight club.

How to Keep Donald Trump from Spreading His Toxic Masculinity to Future Generations

score hidden · 3 August 2017 · /r/TheRedPill

Our policy has been to keep political talk in /r/theredpillright, and we're not changing that. However, in some cases it's important to note that as much as you'd like to close your eyes to reality, the real red pill here is understanding that sex is everything and politics is part of everything.

Since the inception of /r/theredpill we've seen the general culture move from somewhat anti-male to openly sexist against men in all ways, including branding all masculinity as toxic, openly attacking our president in ways that have been historically inappropriate, and trying to tie a neat little bow around men as sexist, racist, alt-right members.

You can close your eyes to politics and live life in the dark as long as possible. But do not forget that there is a war against you and the traditional masculine identity.

Notice the nod at the end of this article:

Hug your boys tonight and tell them how much you love their kindness and their compassion. Ask them what they did today to help out someone else.

But today, a high status male just needs to post a good Tinder profile and then waits for the "ugly chicks" to do all the work pursuing them instead. Essentially, the modern Alpha just sits back and "waits for the easy lays to roll in".

I disagree. Even top rated men get a fraction of messages compared to women on dating apps. Good looking men not only have to work (albeit less so than their uglier counterparts) but they also are competing more for used/ugly goods than they ever had in the past due to the inflation of pussy prices.

currently aged 15-30. When the "Carousel Ride" ends for them, they will be far less capable of begrudgingly accepting a "Beta Bucks", for the sole purpose of securing a post-wall, survival position,

You're right but I think somewhat missing what's really happening. This isn't necessarily about notch counts. You're right that when these women get off the carousel they're going to be terribly alpha widowed and have a hard time accepting this new lower position. But there's more to social media than simply making it easier to get laid.

The problem is social media in itself as a validation machine replaces getting laid entirely. Even very young highschool girls who are just getting started with a very low n-count are going to have a severely inflated sense of self worth due to the validation they receive from social media. The women who coast through their twenties on Instagram don't need to fuck 1,000 men to think they could. The number of instagram or facebook followers for a chick who doesn't even get fully naked can be in the tens or hundreds of thousands, sometimes reaching over a million. The psychological effect of essentially making any woman with a youthful appearance into a mini-celebrity will fuck their brains over completely independent of whether they fuck 1 or 100 guys a year.

We are dealing with entire generations of women who were steered wrong by their parents and an emerging technology nobody really understood, who don't understand how the sexual market works over the long term. They have no idea that trading in the long strategy for the short is going to hurt. Nobody told them it was either-or. And you're not going to talk an addict out of being addicted.

Online dating and hook-up apps are certainly changing a lot about sexual dynamics today. But this is not the driving force behind the largest upset in the market to date. It is the validation machine of social media and iphones that have caused the market to destabilize.

The problem then becomes what you predict: a future of mental illness. Look at every single huge celebrity. After a while, during their decline, they eventually lose it. Tom Cruise, Britney Spears, Lindsay Lohan, Mel Gibson.. (etc). They eventually have a breakdown from the fame. It's not a healthy way of life, and certainly shouldn't be accessible to common folk.

But the problem isn't just mental illness. The problem is that the market is suffering from a demand issue during a fresh period of new technology that has never existed before. When the supply suddenly floods the market as all of this new instagram-generation ages into beta-bucks territory, there will be a new market crash. Not only will the supply be terribly mentally ill, and insatiable due to being alpha widowed by 1.4 million followers, the new supply of used-up hags will have little-to-no demand to match it. Essentially, the inflated price of young pussy will correlate to a deflated price for old pussy. The young won't settle and the old will be unable to.

Imagine if the Apple store tried to drive up prices by simply not letting anybody buy an iphone. Eventually they'd have thousands of old iphones that nobody wants. They wouldn't be able to give them away after a certain point.

What happens then? Either the government bails out Apple, or in this case, redistributes male tax dollars to single moms to give them a the glamorous beta-bucks lifestyle they used to get, or we let the market crash and a generation of women become the victims of the largest sexual recession in written history. Of course, the way politics have been going, I think we'll see the end of Western Civilization before the government ever lets women suffer the consequences of their own actions.

So look forward to life getting much worse for an average male. Not just sexually, but financially. This bailout will be monetary. Don't believe me? It's already happening: it's the Marxist movement's end goal.

My opinion is that the only future for men in this upcoming sexual and male-financial recession is for men to band together into tribes of like-minded individuals and utilize specialized skills to out-compete other groups. The biggest tool of cultural destruction was convincing the modern male that individualism is preferable. Individualism keeps us weak. Other groups have long understood this. The modern male is completely oblivious.

some ex-users even claiming that they were struggling to come to terms with the fact they were gay or trans.

It's confirmed. All Trans people are autistic! Thanks liberal media!

No one still active on the Red Pill would admit that they are simply lonely, young, or vulnerable.

Jesus christ stop feeling bad for yourself. Think Danny Devito didn't get laid in his prime? Of course he did.

Listen, being short sucks. We all agree, you lost the genetic lottery. But that doesn't mean you can't be great, it just means you're going to have to be clever. There's more to SMV than height. You're taller than everybody else when you're standing on a stage.

Generally this would be removed, but I remove so many of these I'm keeping this one (and stickying) as a demonstration to others on exactly what it means to choke on the red pill and spit it back up.

It's easy to feel defeated, especially after failing more times than you can count. I get it, I really do. I've been there myself. You can really burn out after a while. Start wondering what the point is.

We all have mental anguish in failure. There were times I thought to myself, "fuck the red pill, what's the point when they're all whores anyway?" And sometimes I still think that (heh). But the reality is that it's a mindset. It's one that comes from weakness and failure. It's sour grapes. And it's not constructive in the least.

Yeah, things can suck. Maybe you're too short. Maybe you're balding. Maybe you're shit with social skills. Maybe you're fat, stupid, ugly and sad....

Take some time off of approaches. Stop thinking about women. Do something energetic. Go rock climbing, hiking, swimming, running. Take a month to do this. Focus on it daily. Come back with a clear head.

You can overcome your obstacles.

One of my closest friends was having trouble with our area which is surprisingly sparse of good looking women, and he had his own challenges he was afraid he couldn't overcome. My advice to him was advice I've given here before:

Create a captive audience.

You're nothing special at a party. You've got a reason to talk to everybody at your party.

You're nothing special at a concert. Everybody watches you when you're on the stage.

You're nothing special at a bar. Everybody talks to you when you're the bar tender.

My friend went on to become a bouncer at a local club. With the captive audience of not only the patrons but the staff (hot young bartenders), he was able to overcome the first hurdle- getting women to talk to you long enough to build rapport. He now knows dozens of women and is better poised to choose his pick than I ever was trolling bars on weekends. (He also kept it flirty with all of them, using game you can learn on our sidebar)

Building rapport is fucking hard. Even harder when the market sucks and there's a 10:1 dude to women ratio everywhere you go. Women simply will not let themselves be subject to you long enough to work your magic.

Build a captive audience.

It's easy for movie stars, the whole world is their captive audience. It's hard to become a movie star. That's true.

But getting a captive audience isn't that hard. I am somewhat proficient at the piano. I looked around for wine bars I could play at. I played at one or two, and during my breaks I'd head up to the bar where undoubtedly other people opened me!

It's not impossible. Find your niche. Whether it's a job, volunteer work, a running club, learning an instrument, or pursuing fame, it's all doable.

You've got some good points here, but this breaks our rules on concern trolling.

To address the Endorsed tags:

We give this tag to users who have shown a pattern of quality contributions over a period of time. We do this to help steer discussion by showing other, newer users, who has their head on straight. It helped when we were much smaller because the noise was actually much louder than the signal. We've improved as a forum a lot since then.

Obviously we can't speak to each individual comment these people make, and nobody's perfect or right 100% of the time. If somebody appears to be abusing the tag we do (and have) revoke it.

As far as your concern, we hear you. The mod team constantly puts together ideas and plans to try to combat the never-ending onslaught of the next big thing that threatens TRP. (it has been this way since 100 subscribers).

What you can do:

- Be the change you want to see. Post quality content, downvote bad content, report anything low quality or rule breaking. Reports help A LOT. More than most users know.

Alternative answers that I've personally used in real life:

“We’re not having sex”

- Oh good, I was worried you were just using me for sex.
- I'm going to hold you to that promise later.

“Buy me a drink”

- Okay, I'll buy you one but you buy the first round.

(get them into your frame by making her comply, then make up silly excuses why you shouldn't buy the second round when you get to it. Frustrate her. Wait a second, I never got my drink from you.. unless, did you roffie me?)

“I have a boyfriend”

- Me too. Let's keep this a secret from them.

“I bet you say that to every girl”

- Only the good looking ones.
- If it works, I plan to...

“You’re too old/young for me”

- I'll make an exception, this time.

“You’re an asshole”

- You're welcome.

“Give me your number instead”

- I'll text it to you. (by the way, this line usually means her level of interest is pretty low. Still fun to crush the test)

“How much money do you make?”

- It's not about the money, it's about the joy on people's faces when I take away their garbage.
- An astronaut doesn't do it for the money.
- I get paid in sex, so I'll tell you later tonight.

These were all good responses when I lived on the west coast. Southern girls don't play as much hard ball.

The Exception to the Rule

score hidden · 12 January 2017 · /r/TheRedPill

I see a lot of people here talk about exceptions to the rule as well. For instance, when a guy describes a relationship gone wrong, I often see the response "well you dated a crazy, avoid those," as though men often get into relationships knowingly with a crazy bitch and crossing their fingers.

Even if a guy learns perfect RP game, and manages to get a good LTR going with a woman that adores him, she is not an exception to the rule. In fact, that's dangerous thinking- that he found the one good woman in a sea of awful ones.

The truth is, you can curtail a certain amount of their behavior with the strategies learned here. But AWALT doesn't sleep. Your woman is like that too, given the right circumstances. Just because you've got a good frame doesn't mean she won't walk all over you if she manages to break it.

AWALT doesn't just mean most women are like that and this is a generalization that doesn't apply to all women. AWALT means that all women have the propensity and instinct to be like that, and it's up to circumstances and timing to avoid those behaviors.

Just because you think you found a snowflake that respects you, doesn't mean she's treated her last boyfriend with the same respect. She'll still be a woman to other people, you just managed to gain her respect.

Stoicism gets bandied around here like it's a magic pill that makes you good at life.

First of all, stoicism is a lifestyle choice, but by no means is the only one. And for some, it really doesn't fucking work. Trying to put that square peg in the round hole, you'll drive yourself nuts.

Secondly, being quiet or lacking reaction doesn't give you a magic personality, nor does it make up for your lack of personality.

What's important is maintaining frame when somebody tries to knock you. That doesn't mean take a beating with a straight face.

How to Recognize Crazy BEFORE You're Targeted - A Guide to Identifying the Borderline Woman. (Part III)

score hidden · 27 October 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

Anybody who has actually been with a borderline (or is with one now), do yourself a favor and check out Out of the fog and click through all the behaviors. It might help with your sanity.

I made the mistake of getting myself involved with a borderline before I moved out of Cali (full of cluster b personality disorders). I didn't realize she was until I was in deep. I still wonder when she might come back in to my life to find a way to fuck everything up. She's the biggest mistake of my life.

Some of the behaviors that I experienced, and needed to escape:

- "Always" and "Never" Statements. Specifically in places that made no sense, or were easily debunked.
- Random bouts of anger over little things (or nothing at all).
- Baiting. She would go to any length to bait an argument or elicit a response. If she needed to kill my dog to do so, she would've, eventually.
- Catastrophizing / Chaos Manufacturing. Her life was a continuous emergency. There was never calm, only storm.
- Circular Conversations
- Denial and eventually Dissociation. By the time I found these, we were in deep. She didn't lead with this nonsense, she seemed normal at first. But that's how they get you.
- Emotional Blackmail - something you fall victim to if you keep your blue pill conditioning. Maintaining frame doesn't "work" on these types. Instead, holding firm against emotional blackmail turns into an arms race, where she keeps upping the ante when she doesn't get the response she wants.
- Gaslighting
- Causing you to "walk on eggshells."

And much, much more. (Check that list)

Mind you- she didn't start this way. She acts normal just long enough to hook you. At the end of the day, the way I got out was basically making her break up with me (that is, I became unattractive and made it her decision). It's the only safe way out. Because hell hath no fury like a borderline scorned.

TRP: A History

score hidden · 24 October 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

There's an interesting point this post raises, I wanted to comment on. Our early days were more conjecture than statement of fact, and we did spend a lot of time asking "what if this is how it is?"

I appreciate that there are a lot of posts these days with definitive language to help new subscribers understand which behaviors are advantageous and which aren't. (don't be a bitch, never let her see you cry, maintain frame, etc...)

The problem is that they don't always touch on the theory behind the scenes. Essentially, they act as shortcuts to the outcomes we perceive as advantageous, but they don't necessarily give new subscribers the tools and knowledge necessary to be able to synthesize their own theories and understandings.

TRP was born out of a group of guys realizing that things didn't happen the way society taught them, and then trying to find and establish what the rules really are. The only reason we have the theories we have today is that these guys wanted to understand the true nature of reality and wanted to piece together hypotheses that matched the data they saw.

The big uphill battle for them was being told they were nuts for even considering that women act in these ways we've observed.

Imagine, observing the lightswitch effect and wondering why and how this happens, but being told that it's sexist to even consider women might act this way, that women are wonderful and nobody would act this way towards you. Basically, you're crazy for seeing patterns where they just don't exist.

Except they do exist. And they keep happening to you.

Before the age of the internet, men had locker rooms and shop-talk, but that was about it. A few laughs over the shared experience that women were, and an understanding that other men knew.

But boys were growing up without fathers, instead looking up to televised surrogates further programming them into the weak, skinny jeaned, blue-pilled millennials we see today.

The few dads that were around were too afraid to say anything other than "happy wife, happy life." And that nonsense filled our brains for a few generations.

The internet has brought new opportunity to collective brainstorming, to let us compare notes, determine patterns where we're told there aren't any, and start to synthesize theories.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not complaining. The posts here are useful and provide a sense of belonging and community to the subscribership.

But I do like the posts that ask questions: Why does this happen? What can we learn from this? And has anybody else noticed this?

As an aside, I do despise posts that are imperatives (Do this, Don't do that). They always seem like overly platitude-ish garbage to make people feel good. We delete those on-sight.

The most interesting man in the world knows wine. If you want to be the elusive, mysterious type, always be the guy that knows something about everything. Never let on, never talk too much. Just know how things work and then continue your date. This drives women nuts.

A human being should be able to change a diaper, plan an invasion, butcher a hog, conn a ship, design a building, write a sonnet, balance accounts, build a wall, set a bone, comfort the dying, take orders, give orders, cooperate, act alone, solve equations, analyze a new problem, pitch manure, program a computer, cook a tasty meal, fight efficiently, die gallantly. As TRP generally doesn't consider a legal marriage contract as a terribly good option in Western cultures, these MRP flaired threads are specifically for help with these strategies for people who are either already married, have a family/children, in a LTR, or would like to start a family in today's culture.

Comments should not devolve into "never get married" comments. This is already understood.

Restore My Faith: A Heart-Broken Man Turns to The Blue Pill

score hidden · 20 April 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

The top comment on that thread really demonstrates the blue pill mentality too:

Your GF left you not because you're a "beta" (the amount of utter horseshit that comes out of TRP is staggering), but because she's a broken person. Her ex is a predator that knows exactly how to pull her strings, and she has such massive self esteem issues that she not only lets him pull her strings, she wants him to. It's awful, but she finds it familiar, and we all tend to drift towards what we're familiar with.

If we look into this, what they're saying is: it's not you, it's her. The circumstances in your life did not align properly for there to be a happy outcome. Wait around, maybe next time it will. Do absolutely nothing, learn absolutely nothing.

This is the hallmark of blue pill advice. When the central theme is that you are not an agent in your life, and that outcomes are not in your control. It sounds comforting until you extrapolate to the logical conclusion, which is that if nothing you do affects the outcome, then you should do nothing to attempt a better outcome.

Hugging her to death had nothing to do with it. When the next woman comes along, play it the same way!

Meanwhile, that "abusive" ex who is getting his dick wet and completely verifies red pill theory? Ignore it.

Ignore those who manage to get laid. They know nothing about getting laid. Do what you've always done, which so far is get dumped. It will work!

It's not that obvious in their fantasy speak, when they offload the blame to others. But the extrapolation makes no sense. It doesn't take a terribly critical mind to realize that's what's being said.

Even without TRP, you should be able to reason why that advice is shit.

Hey, watch who you're calling loser, loser!

But seriously, not all of us were losers. I would better describe our plight as failure.

I have always been good at negotiating relationships and people, it has always been second nature to me. People like me, and getting laid wasn't my issue. At least at first.

I started noticing two things- 1. I couldn't maintain a relationship (went too hard beta), and 2. In the past 10 years, the dating market has turned fun and sexy women into dark, rude, hags with terrible attitudes.

I've probably mentioned before how I stumbled upon the manosphere ~5 years back. I googled "why are women so narcissistic."

I was already seeing with my eyes, but didn't understand it because I still accepted the blue pill world view. What happened next was incredible.

I wouldn't say they're horrible for acting that way. Only that they're acting like women. I don't think they should get a free pass, but that would be judging women by man's standards- not women's standards.

Bluehat I think you severely misunderstand the term alpha.

What we're doing is studying gender behavior in society.

Selecting samples and discussing them is part of that.

There is nothing alpha nor un-alpha about it. In fact, trying to disqualify something by claiming it to be un-alpha is akin to creep shaming. It's a meaningless thought-terminating cliché.

We're not here to have a laugh at other's expense. We're here to broaden our understanding of the feminine imperative, and how it manifests itself through betas.

Oh, and I'm still curious.. Could you tell me more about those "feminine traits", and comment on my idea of needing to Like women to make sex worthwhile, etc?

What's this ?

Beta of the Month Contest

score hidden · 30 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Beta is not a healthy society. No matter how much you try to put the genie back in the bottle, it won't happen. Female hypergamy is loose, the only response it to alpha up.
