Beta traits can lower your SMV if done wrong or too often. But beta traits don't necessarily lower your SMV- they are the provider traits.

For instance, a strong head of household still brings home the bacon. Alpha + Beta.

Women have a duality in their mating strategy: Alpha fucks, beta bucks. If they can get both in one, that's the sweet spot for them.

The True Nature Of Women

A girl who has known only one container her whole life—a good container—can instantly change containers upon meeting me if my reputation happened to proceed me, and give me the worst of who she is in instant time. I have seen this too many times to discount, and I didn't have to be a scientist for six years to conclude that if men can not keep women in the right container at the right temperature by force, through application of law or shaming, and if men can't manage the environment in their favor, but instead allow women to have unbridled freedom and choice, their women will fall so fast that they will notice the change not in years but in months.

Folks, this is why I'm anti-marriage. Because Roosh speaks about if you cannot control the container, you lose. But in Westernized countries, the question isn't if you can control the container. The question is for how long.

No, seriously, guize. Women can't get laid any easier than men.

The problem is the inescapable ego boost women get from their wild sex years. If they just keep getting that validation with nothing to ground them, they'll have unreasonably high expectations and her ego wouldn't make for good stock. Imagine dating a super model during her career, and her not giving you the time of day because she thinks she's more important (because she knows her effect on men's dicks).

It makes for a useless woman.

When she grows older, her ridiculously high expectations, coupled with her diminishing looks will leave her single and unhappy, and re-evaluating her life isn't one thing most women are apt to do. Instead they just complain "Where have all the good men gone?"

Men in their early 20s are observing that marriage and girlfriends aren't in the cards, and this reduces their incentive to work hard to demonstrate provider status. "I hear you on dealing with the humanity in dude's choice, but the issue is that he couldn't deal with the humanity in my request. "

You want to use a man for sex and defend your objectification of another human by claiming to be a sex positive feminist. Your hypocrisy is off the charts and I really wish you would see men as equals who are free to react to sexual request in the same women do. Men don't have to justify their rejection anymore than a women would.

If we are going to generalize about gender norms your injection of privilege into a discussion about sexual power dynamics is comical because women have always had the upper hand in this particular area. It's men who generally are expected to initiate. That fact is only reinforced by the newness of women asking men for sex.

Let me give you a tip for the uninitiated, if you become a initiator your going to have to deal with rejection. This is something men figure out how to deal with when they are very young and it's sad it took you this long to find out. Perhaps if you made more of an effort when you were young it would not come as such a rude awakening.

Your frustrated response resembles that of men who can't get it when they want it and blame women for being deficient in any number of ways. It's the wrong path and I suggest you find a more mature way of dealing with sexual rejection in the future. The personal is not political in this case. That human being who your asking has to actually want to have sex with you.

Women should pursue careers if they want, rather than putting family first, if that is their preference. We also want to change the way women are portrayed in the media,

There is literally nothing stopping women from doing this. That's what feminists don't get. It's a cruel world out there where you sink or swim. Men make up all the classes, highest and lowest. Women are absolutely clueless how well they've got it. And why shouldn't they be clueless? Oh I disagree verily. Women simply do not crave sex as much as men.

Patently false. A healthy male produces between 12 to 17 times the amount of testosterone a woman does. It is a biological impossibility for a woman to want sex as much as, or as often as men. Trust me, when a woman says, "I don't understand why sex is so important to guys" she's speaking the literal truth. No woman will ever experience 17 times the amount of her own testosterone levels (barring steroids). Amongst it's many other effects, testosterone is the primary hormone involved with stimulating human libido. I should also add that, on average, and barring environmental variables, a mans testosterone only declines 1% per year beyond age 40, so even at age 60 the average, healthy male is only dealing with an average 20% deficit in testosterone.

This would be heavier if it weren't the go-to phrase for every breakup ever. I hear this "emotionally abusive" bullshit all the time. The problem is that women shoehorn almost everything they perceive as bad as emotional abuse.

Just because we got in an argument doesn't mean it's abuse, nor does it mean I'm the one perpetrating the abuse. Jesus fuck.

The short answer:

What women want in men is different from what men want in women.

Imagine each side of the gender divide holds something the other side wants. The desires are mostly subconscious, but their mating behaviors reveal them.

What women find attractive in a man are qualities that coincide with evolutionarily advantageous behavior. The crave sperm from alpha males to obtain the highest quality sperm and increase the likelihood of survival for their children.

They also crave commitment- but not at the same time. They will grant sexual access to betas who fill the commitment role.

A great article to read is in the sidebar called schedules of mating.

So men's trump card is commitment. In fact- women are turned off by men who give away their commitment too soon (saying I love you early in a relationship.) This is because of the fear of commitment sluts, which in the long term demonstrates they lie about commitment.

So if commitment is men's trump card, what is women's trump card?

Sex.

Women hold the sex card. The value they bring to the table is sex. They are the gatekeepers of sex.

Much like a commitment slut is a turn-off to women for long term relationships, a sex slut is a turn-off to men... for long term relationships. Men value chastity (innately) because it increases the likelihood their offspring is actually theirs. Obvious in today's age with birth control, it's not really that relevant. But evolutionary psychology isn't exactly going to disappear in 100 years.

Neither has a problem hooking up on the other schedule of mating. But now you see what values men and women place on the opposite sex for long-term mating and offspring survival strategies.

It's not a double standard. It's two different values being brought to the table.

The long answer: read the sidebar.

BTC is somewhat fungible- if I receive a coin from a drug deal, and a coin from a legitimate sale, put them in the same wallet, and then spend them each independently, it's impossible to say which coin was the drug coin.

However, if you happen to know the transaction for the drug deal, you can follow the trail and if the feds want to get nasty (and they do like getting nasty) they can blacklist that transaction and have all future transactions inherit the blacklist status. (meaning a dark coin can taint clean coins if you share a wallet between them).

The blacklist itself doesn't do anything until pressure is put on exchanges which currently have to follow KYC laws. If the feds decide KYC laws include filtering any coin that's downstream of a blacklisted transaction, this puts the trust and faith of bitcoin on serious rocks.

Suddenly vendors accepting bitcoin are going to start scanning the transaction tables above you to make sure they're not on the blacklist.

Sure, some people will ignore the blacklists, but enough people will be afraid of holding the bag that they won't risk taking "dark" coins.

In this sense, it's not fungible enough.

It's already happening, certain addresses have been blacklisted on exchanges for being known to be part of hacks.

Alpha widow.

Higher the count, the more likely she's alpha widowed. And as the number grows, you reach what I call the "Insatiable Alpha Widow"

Women tend to be hypergamous, that is, their goal is to get the highest quality partners they can. The easiest way to measure "higher quality" is by comparing mates to each other.

First guy makes $10/hour. Second guy makes $20/hour. Second guy wins.

First guy is strong, second guy has abs. Second guy wins.

And so on.

Women like men who are better than other men. This should not be a surprise to you.

Well, over the years, women might date a lot of guys. Some buff, some rich, some charming, etc.

Eventually over time, she will start comparing new men, not to a previous partner, but instead, to all partners.

She dated a rich guy, a funny guy, a strong guy, and now if you don't compete in all 3 categories, then she thinks she can do better. And she has done better... just not in one guy.

But for her, that doesn't matter. She is now subconsciously comparing you to multiple guys and will be disappointed when you don't rock her the way each one did.

The strong guy was better at sex. The funny guy had a better sense of humor, etc.

She has been alpha widowed. But not by one guy. By all the guys.

War time (from days of old, not modern warfare) usually reminds them where their real priorities lie.

We've given them such creature comforts that their idle minds have nothing else to do but blame the very men that give and protect their freedoms.

I think this part in particular is interesting:

The second category of sexual exploitation is what Susan calls “verbal or nonverbal pressure”, which the UT Austin paper defines as:

Pressure involves relentless persistence, threats, or coercion to induce an individual into having sex.

Notice how salesmanship is subtly compared with rape. Men pursuing their own desires in the SMP is deemed unacceptable. Only women can morally do so. Men who are moral are expected to understand this and only hookup based on the motivations of the HUSies.

The next category is deception, which the UT Austin paper defines as:

Deception is dishonesty about intentions, likelihood of further commitment, or personal characteristics such as those sought by members of the opposite sex—a phenomenon well documented in human mating (Haselton, Buss, Oubaid, & Angleitner, 2005).

Like Dalrock says in feminine imperative revisited: "The feminine imperative has warped our very ability to think morally."

Framed as morality, commitment to women is considered the default and therefore moral act. Subverting this expectation even if unspoken is considered deception.

It can only be framed as such because of the feminine imperative that permeates western civilization today.

The question I think you're asking is are we selecting for the kind of people who hook up- not necessarily for ones in higher / lesser SMV categories.

I'm less concerned with how many cocks makes the cock carousel, and more concerned with the effects of it.

For instance, many of my observations pre-TRP were with women who had actually very few partners at the time I observed them. My biggest observations with them were less to do with one night stands and more to do with failed long term relationships. For many, I was their first.

It wasn't until comparing notes with others that I realized that what I witnessed was a larger issue than just my small sample.

I love this passage from The Masculine Principle

There's a difference between how a married man knows women and how a bachelor comes to know them. The married man, through the course of spending his life with the same woman, will naturally come to know her individual quirks and personality flaws. We all have them, and so does his wife. The married man therefore believes that Not All Women Are Like That.

The bachelor starts out from the same place as the married man. He falls in love with a woman, discovers her quirks and flaws, and as the relationship spirals out of control he thinks to himself, "I must have just been unlucky and ended up with a faulty one." And so off he goes and finds another, thinking that she will be different. When the second love ends the same way as the first, he starts to doubt himself. Maybe he is the problem. After all, he is the constant factor in this equation. And so, off he goes through life until he loves yet another, and this time he focuses on changing his behaviour. Then he loves another, and another, and still, they all end up being remarkably similar experiences - often even down to the very words she says when in the same situation.

Finally, he comes to the amazing conclusion that yes, something is wrong with them! All of them! And thus, with enough notes to compare from various women he has known intimately, a pattern begins to emerge, and once he begins to identify it and map it out, he starts to see it everywhere. Further, as he ages and his old friends disappear into the void of marriage, he begins to hang out with more and more bachelors, and as they compare stories he discovers they've had similar experiences as him throughout their lifetime too, which begins to solidify his conclusions.

Many of us have been in LTRs before resorting to spinning plates. And I can't speak for everybody here but the behaviors I saw in each woman were very much the same. Both LTR and Plates.

Question regarding male SMV

13 upvotes · 22 January 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I'm not suggesting men shouldn't do dishes or the laundry.

If your man shits on the floor he's not attractive for other reasons, least of which is that you had to nag.

My experience is when a woman loves and respects a man, she wants to take care of him. And not in a motherly way, but in a loving way.

That doesn't absolve men of their duties in a relationship. He must stay strong. Handle maintenance tasks. Mow the lawn. Protect the family. And if you're both working and pressed for time, there's no reason why a man in a relationship can't do dishes or laundry. If a diaper needs changing, I don't think there's any pro or con to doing it for either parent.

I think that a lot of people get confused and assume that nagging is the problem. Nagging is the canary in the coal mine, not the source of the problem to begin with. Women will not be attracted by chore-play. But if you lose attraction, nagging will take place.

I think it's very shortsighted to see all the warning signs and not care.

Today we have the ability to discuss men's issues.

But if the tech companies continue their purge, I'm not sure we're going to see the same freedoms tomorrow.

Whether or not TRP survives in the long run, the most important thing for men is to be able to communicate.

I suspect feminism's stronghold up to the 90's was due to the lack of communication between men.

The book, Mating Mind: How Sexual Choice Shaped the Evolution, suggests a sort of feedback loop: Between two men of equal physical fitness/looks, one of them can gain an advantage through intelligence- either by gaining more resources via intelligence, or by displaying higher intelligence which signals the likelihood of being able to access more resources.

This advantage turned into a preference for intelligence.

One would argue that displaying prowess in the arts is peacocking of the brain. The book suggests that this competition was inevitable, and lead to the development of human intelligence.

Negativity, and Confusion over the Red Pill

13 upvotes · 5 August 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

There's no doubt about it, taking the red pill is difficult. A lot of times we just look back at our old lives and misremember it as blissful ignorance.

But it's important to remember that the catalyst to taking the red pill is usually pain, not bliss. Most of us are here because we had to learn the hard way that blissful ignorance doesn't lead to the outcomes you want. Informed decision making does.

It's not just about getting laid, it's about embracing the reality of what women are attracted to.

There's no reason to lose your friends, there's no reason to distance yourself from your family.

The red pill can be a lot to swallow, and I can see how having it on the mind can really disrupt every-day life if you're distracted by it. Take your time. Internalize it. Realize that every conversation you have with people isn't a battle that needs to be won, there are a few times here and there that red pill truths will show up, and you'll already recognize them when they happen- because you were prepared.

Having a vagina certainly does give you value to a lot of men - to those who give a shit. The problem is when women come here, and see that we don't value you for your vagina, and since many women don't bother trying to bring something else to the table, become very insulted when we say we see little value in them.

I see value in the girls in my life- I wouldn't have them around if I didn't. But they didn't just get to show up with tits and a vag and say, show me the respect I deserve.

A lot of women on reddit are surprised and insulted that we won't give them vag cred.

Get the fire extinguisher! This hamster is on fire!

Be normal and straight, fuck as many guys as you want.. and then once you're completely used up and have literally no value to men.. go lesbian. It's just nature man! I don't even know how heterosexuality happens in the first place!

(Well you seemed to get it for the first 60 years of your life!)

This is a great example of the rationalization hamster and solipsism spinning in place and invalidating one's own life. They cannot get attractive mates at this age, they wasted the time they otherwise could've used to secure a husband, so at the end of the day, the only option is other used up old hags. Think about this for a second, it's the problem that men have when they're unattractive or unsuccessful. They have to pick from the losers.

And then to rationalize to make herself feel better, she explains to herself that this was the best choice all along and it just took her 60 years to realize it. Heterosexuality is the glitch! Un-fucking-believable.

"I want to know that there's something I can eat."

There is nothing more telling about Western women than their self-important fad diets. There are very few women that I know who don't have lists of what they will and will not eat. They even use the term "I don't eat that" instead of "I prefer not to eat that" or "I don't like that."

Whereas most men will have a preference for certain foods, women will have lists of eats and eat-nots. Their diets are almost entirely fad-based and rarely involve any science.

I actually heard a woman state the other day that she stopped drinking soy milk because of "all the hormones they add." (Realizing that's also why she stopped drinking cow milk as well.)

I remember just before we were quarantined, Reddit accidentally leaked our real numbers and it showed they were artificially limiting our subscribership (and a few other controversial subs).

After the quarantine, they stop letting us know but we can use stats to count up from the last known good number.

We've stopped tracking the daily additions (which is why the number hasn't changed in a while) but I wouldn't be surprised if the number is much larger.

Unfortunately, even with a large subscribership, the reach is severely limited thanks to their Quarantine restrictions.

12 upvotes · 22 August 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Physical, and actually all harsh punishment, only serves to severe ties.

I disagree entirely. Further, your description:

I am being punished by my dad. This is a bad thing. But my dad is good. So I must be a bad kid, and that's why I do bad things. My dad is right to punish me. It's a terrible thing, but I depend on my dad, so he is good, so he's only doing this because I am a bad person. Oh, I guess I must keep doing these kind of things, otherwise my dad will have punished me for no reason, so he would be bad. I cannot have a bad daddy, this is too scary. Let me justify his actions.

Only works if the punishment does not fit the crime, is inconsistent, sporadic, or worse- unjustified and random.

Your "aversion to authority" rationale doesn't stack up when you consider that aside from the physical portion of it, it's no different than any other discipline.

Do something bad = dad punishes you. Whether it's sitting in a corner, being sent to your room, losing toys, or getting a spanking, all of these punishments establish you as an authority and establish guidelines and boundaries in which the child must operate or be punished. This is all an appeal to authority until he learns how the world works. (That comes much later in life).

When he gets older, I agree, fatherly disappointment may be all it requires to teach the child a lesson. But before that, he must know real consequences if he talks back to mom, throws things at the table, steals a cookie, etc.

You haven't divorced spanking from other punishment in your counterpoint, except to say it's scary.

If there isn't at least some fear, the child won't take the punishment seriously. What happens if he decides to test your theory? He won't stay in the corner because he doesn't believe your punishment?

An easy answer is this: I'm bigger than you and you will do what I say. You can pick him up and put him right back in the corner. Would you not do this to avoid your child being afraid? What little respect he will have for you then.

I suspect you have a caricature of an angry, abusive dad in your mind. One who lashes out in anger and tries to strike fear in the hearts of all around him.

But there is obviously subtlety to this. You cannot lash out, and you cannot be angry. As I described above, the punishment should be a show of embarrassment and disappointment. The spank itself does not need to hurt much more than a small slap on the bottom. But you do so with sadness in your eyes for his indiscretion. "Sorry son, but this is necessary because you broke the rules. I wish it were not so!"

The truth is that ALL authority flows from force and resources. Whether you get from A to B quickly or not is irrelevant. The fact is, as the head of the household, you keep this position by being strong, providing resources and protection for those inside the family. The unspoken understanding is that what's out there is dangerous and DAD is the one big enough to protect us from whatever it is. While it comes from a place of nurture and love, it doesn't change the implicit understanding that without dad = danger or starvation. Piss off dad enough to leave, and you're subject to violence whether or not dad would spank you.

It may not be an explicit thought in anybody's head, but the natural aversion to biting the hand that feeds you is clearly borne out of a desire to eat.

You're trying to divorce the two but I do not see a way logically in which it is divorced without giving a special ethereal quality to spanking that I don't think you've demonstrated.

Rollo says it best- they see men improving themselves as a direct threat to their hypergamy. They want men who just get it, who are already self-made. If a man can learn to be like a natural alpha, it undermines their assessment ability:

Men becoming aware of the nature of women is a Threat; and that threat is primarily dangerous because it deliberately confounds women's accurate assessment of a man's true value in satisfying her Hypergamous doubt. Educating men about Game, about Red Pill awareness, must be prevented on both a personal level and a sociological level if women are to maintain a feminine-primary, feminine-correct and feminine-dominant social order.

It makes it another strategy, one that can be considered along with all others.

Not all strategies are equal. For instance, putting a fork in a toaster is a bad strategy. It's so bad, it doesn't belong on our subreddit.

Negative, I'm implying that anyone who skips an LTR or Marriage, or anything because of TRP vice what they truly desire is fucking weak sauce

So somebody who reads a well-reasoned rationale on why marriage is a raw deal for men and makes the informed decision not to marry is... weak? Is there an argument you can make that doesn't rely on shame?

Yet when they come saying shit went north they are chastised as some cuckold fuck.

No, they are not. There are a lot of men who come here for help, and it's cathartic to discuss where things went wrong.

You must be referring to a straw version of the red pill that you read about somewhere else-- perhaps your subreddit? I wouldn't expect objectivity there anyhow.

Spinning plates can get you diseases, everything has risk some people view marriage to be worth that risk.

Yes, everything has risk. Some are more risky than others. You seem to think that because there are varying levels of risk, that they are equally risky. Which doesn't make much sense at all.

Why does everyone bring age into this? When you hit a 400lb deadlift does someone say, Well, you're not 45 yet when it gets harder to maintain your muscle mass? No, because that's fucking stupid, if I'm owning it now that's all I have to show, the same as anything.

Except in weight lifting, a sign of success is how much weight you can lift. In marriage, your success is based on happiness and how long you can keep it going. That's literally the measurement. Anybody can stay happy for a few years in marriage. That's not special.

The physiological response of smoking is almost universally proven, marriage is interpersonal, entirely different

You can actually just read the marriage contract laws to see the flaws. It's not hidden or covert, and it's not special on a case-by-case basis.

Field Report: "Team Woman" Moment Denied

12 upvotes · 20 October 2014 · /r/RedPillWomen

I run into team woman a lot in my day-to-day with late 40's female divorcees who believe themselves wise (I suppose it's their rationalization for why they chose to divorce).

It would always happen when I was with a woman, they'd try to co-opt her, bring her into the misery. I had one woman try to teach me a lesson on how I should treat women, in front of my date!

"You always have to buy her nice things, and do nice things for her. She doesn't need to put up with your bullshit. So you better get your ass into gear. She can get better so you better be glad for what you've got, it won't last long if you don't do everything right!"

She was trying to inflate the price of female SMV. I didn't much care for this, but for some reason, every 40+ woman thinks it's her place to condescend to me (I'm not much younger, mind you). I don't know if it was the drinks but I wasn't very nice to her after that.

"Wow, that's a lot of advice. Let me ask you, are you married?"

"Divorced, hun. I learned these things about men. I have a lot more experience than you two young'ins."

"Divorced! Well, I'm really sorry to hear that. How long ago was that?"

"Ten years!"

"Ten years! That's a long time ago... How has your love life been since? Have you found anybody new?"

"No, because my ex husband wasn't the only one- they're all immature idiots. I rather be alone!"

"You'd rather be alone? I don't think we should be taking your advice then!"

I can't stand women like this.

Well, Mack, you're nuts.

You know what the difference between a troll and a debater is?

Basically, someone who assumes you are sane, tries to understand your argument in the most compelling interpretation he can, and then tries to refute it, is a debater.

Someone who assumes you are insane, or tries to find weak interpretations of your arguments that will be easy to refute, or reifies metaphors, is a troll.

12 upvotes · 3 June 2014 · /r/MensRights

Without getting into an argument about specifics or whether or not we're right or wrong, would you ever consider a viewpoint that said that men and women are fundamentally different and therefore act differently?

You can disagree with these ideas- whether you think women to be emotional or logical. That means you've got interest in a conversation.

But if you want to hold the position that something that may offend your sensibilities must be wrong because it's offensive, then you've got a mental block impeding the way.

Listen, you can understand and disagree with us all you want. In fact, I like disagreements. But the vitriol, demonetization, and finger-pointing is just unnecessary.

Do women have an emotional need to complain?

12 upvotes · 30 May 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

As roosh once noted, women are like water, they fill the container they are in. How do women know their container? Shit testing those around them, complaining to see how their complaints are addressed. Notice that in countries where people are starving to death, women aren't complaining about their purses or earrings... they recognize their container.

An abundance of complaining exists when it works- when we give them what they want, then they reach for more. They want to know their boundaries, and we haven't given them any.

Sorry, but women are dependent on men.

12 upvotes · 25 March 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

You're new here. Take a seat, read some of the sidebar, and take a breather before starting up again.

Also, for onlookers- this is basically par for the course over at PPD. I'm going to parse through this to show where this guy went wrong.

First of all, it's pretty contextual here at the red pill that we understand men and women have differing sexual strategies- where men try to maximize approaches (sowing oats) and women try to maximize quality of mates (maximum rejections, being selective). What philo here does is translates this into some sort of social justice speak where he thinks this stuff is being preached as though we think the world should act one way or another, instead of how it is.

He then extrapolates that since he thinks we think this is a recommendation, not an observation, that we encourage women to have lower partners via analogy- instead of what it is: an understanding that women hold the sex card, and men hold the commitment card- a woman who gives away her hand quickly lowers her value. This is intrinsic in the market as we understand it.

But this understanding would require a requisite knowledge of the red pill before even understanding the context of the analogy.

He further attempts to twist the definition into nonsense by suggesting that this is a suggestion for chastity or an assumption that women have few partners- neither of which can really be inferred without a real stretch- it tells me this guy isn't really trying to discuss something, he's trying to twist something into a nonsense blue pill nothing is knowable circle jerk.

It wasn't hard for them. Is that what your interpretation of the analogy is? That dicks are keys and vaginas are locks because getting into a vagina is hard work?

He then finishes with an absurd reduction of my argument to try to cap off his rhetorical bravado, as though he could just gallop around me until I was too dizzy to retort.

No, people here understand the context, and you have completely (without losing irony) missed the entire point of both the analogy as well as the overarching point of my post.

For that, yes, I've banned you. Read the side bar and get back to me another day.

Burnout. Been there, man.

It's not that you have to spit 100% perfect game 24/7, but sometimes you really feel like you have to. Women, like ErinLA down here, have literally no clue just how hard it really is. You may not need to be perfect, but when you face a number of rejections, you start to wonder how much you're messing up. You start to wonder how on earth do other guys have any luck at all?

Getting with women is definitely a chase. Don't let anybody tell you otherwise. Sometimes I get so desensitized to the whole process, I feel less like pursuing. Sometimes I just have to take a break.

I mean, what's the point if you've just replaced one shitty lifestyle (blue pill) with another that doesn't give you what you want? (red pill)?

Well, there's a question for you. It's what you make of it, really. The red pill isn't a magic bullet to bring you happiness. That's your job. The red pill just teaches you the pitfalls of the blue pill lifestyle.

Once people learn what's really happening in mating, some people write off dating altogether. I don't blame them. Some end up neck deep in pussy. I've been there. I've also had terrible dry spells.

Maybe I'm not the happiest I could be. Maybe I'm worn out. But I'll tell you one thing: I could never go back to the previous lifestyle knowing what I know now.

My immediate recommendation to avoid burnout is to approach girls with the intention of turning them down/blowing them off. Don't go in looking for dates. Just go in and chat. Not for some feel-good bullshit, just to get the vibe of conversation under your belt without fearing rejection.

Ultimately, people may tell you that this is evidence that you've bitten off a philosophy that won't treat you well. All I can say to that is: It's a philosophy where the strong survive and the weak fail. Sometimes the only thing keeping me going are my goals, no matter how shitty I feel.

Is there anything wrong with gay people? no.

Is there anything wrong with a full grown man wearing women's clothes? No, so long as he understands most hetero women are going to think he's a creep and avoid him like the plague.

The point is simple: Teaching gender roles to children, (not bashing them over the head with them, but teaching) helps them grow into successful sexual adults.

12 upvotes · 25 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It's easy to misunderstand, game doesn't make attraction, it just keeps you from damaging attraction. Most guys don't realize that they take themselves down 4 points with their lack of game alone.

Here's a quick exercise to prove game:

You meet a girl, you hit it off, she gives you her number.

Do you send her 80 texts saying "I love you" the next day?

Why not?

Because that would be needy, she'd call you a creep and never talk to you again.

Se we know right off the bat a great example of how not to act.

If we can define a behavior we know will cause a loss of attraction, it stands to reason we can define a behavior that will not cause that loss of attraction: Don't text "I love you" 80 times to a girl you've just met.

And there is the basic building block of game.

12 upvotes · 15 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I mean to say this impartially. Most of your argument revolves around the fact that women objectify men as well.

No my argument does not revolve around that, it uses women as a counterexample to show the inherent absurdity of the original argument.

Your main argument is that it is each person's business what they do, but that doesn't change anything regarding the point that objectifying is morally wrong in general.

No, my argument was that objectification, as feminists define it, is a misnomer and has no falsifiable definition.

Feminism, despite its name, is supposed to fight for equality of the genders, not "girlpower" (though in the current day it is used as a tool by many females for self interest, since it's established and can be taboo to argue against once certain terms have been used).

Feminism isn't "supposed" to do anything.

What is probably identified as misogyny here intrigues me.

These guys were wording the issues as though women are less skilled and this was new territory for the women. But they were attempting to be understanding. Instead of saying "these people are completely unqualified for this job" they said, "well they're women, so we're going to have to take some time to explain it."

Without pointing at who is to blame for women being unskilled, these men still had a real dilemma to deal with. Women were different and unskilled, and those hurdles needed to be overcome if there were to be female workers.

In other words, the opposite of misogyny. A real attempt at overcoming barriers.

You best believe a man coming into that job would get treated terribly if he was unqualified, unskilled, and had an attitude.

But women think it's wrong to treat them the way you'd treat a man in the workplace.

Women, on the other hand, are limited to the eggs they were born with, maturing one a month and not much past their fourth decade of life. The precious few shots that women have at reproduction may drive them to seek the best mate for prospective offspring -- though the decision might be wholly unconscious.

This notion is bolstered by the "sperm wars" theory, in which Britain's Dr. Baker has noted that sperm of two different men can effectively battle over the spoils of fertilizing the egg in a woman's reproductive tract.

In 1999, a questionnaire in Britain found that most women tended to be unfaithful to their long-term partners around the time they were most fertile.

The Red Pill Dilemma?

12 upvotes · 12 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I think it's all about how you approach and think about women.

If you expect women to be men with tits, you'll be sorely let down by them all the time. Their lack of honor, their lack of courage. Their lack of dedication to truth, justice, or loyalty.

So the best way to deal with it is to really really understand that women are not men.

Women are women. They have different values and are not men. The best way to put it is that they're overgrown children. Obviously you wouldn't expect honor and loyalty from a child. You might be disappointed when a child steals cookies before dinner, but you're not surprised. In the same vein, be disappointed, not surprised when women violate men's rules.

When you look at women as things to trifle with, but not respect as you would a man, they become fun and actually a joy to keep around. They do what they do well. They just aren't men.

If you feel yourself hating women, it's because you're expecting them to be men.

I have a lot more theories on crypto that I didn't pack into that comment. I actually think bitcoin achieves everything the government wish they could pull off that they hate about cash. It's not fungible (even though it appears to be), once you get a few data points you can track A LOT of information, you can blacklist transactions and kill any resulting transactions downstream of it..

I suspect the CIA actually invented bitcoin and then pretended it was independent in order for it to gain the mass adoption they knew they couldn't get people on if they announced a replacement for cash.

I know if I were the CIA, I couldn't have planned anything that worked better than what Bitcoin is doing right now.

If the generation watching wallstreet bets right now wants in on something bigger than themselves, the number one thing they need to focus on is fungibility, because make no mistake- the world governments will be (or are already at war) with fungibility.

Here's what I see.

Sexual dynamics are important to learn but once you have them under your belt it's nothing new. For instance, I've been here a while and almost no post here is fresh to me.

What is fresh is developing successful life strategies for men once they have the building blocks necessary to get started.

Some of what I'm working on for the new site include tools for coordination among smaller groups of men. I think communication between men is going to be the biggest point of contention in the coming years and I want to get in front of it.

The broader picture is that I think every man should have a mission and work on gaining the power and community to make it happen. Strength is in brotherhood in my opinion.

My personal goal is facilitating this connection. What will your goals be?

I want to open a discussion about modern feminism and some of the things that are wrong in this movement.

11 upvotes · 26 July 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

The telltale sign of any post-modern, liberal, or traditional religious movement is the strict adherence to the original sin doctrine. You wouldn't think that these are so similar, but they all operate the same way.

Any time a movement or group appeals to an original sin, you know they're not making rational arguments but instead are trying to control your thoughts, behavior, and money.

Feminism: Being male / patriarchy is inherently evil, even if you're an "ally" you are still poisoned with the original sin of privilege which you cannot shed, only repent and feel guilty.

Liberalism: Being White / Male / American / Higher on Totem Pole is inherently evil, even if you're an "ally" you are still guilty of original sin of privilege which you cannot shed, only repent and feel guilty.

Environmentalism: Trees / Forests / Animals / Climate is dying / changing and there's simply nothing an individual can do to change it, but you are privileged and 100% the cause of it (don't research this) so you should still feel guilty about your existence, and repent/vote/send money.

Traditional Christianity: Human? You're inherently evil and guilty of - you guessed it - original sin. Only hope of redemption is to adhere to this list of rules we made up and give us money.

Edit:

I think there are two components to this insidious original sin: 1. That it's non-falsifiable, and 2. That it ascribes a morality to its bearer.

Patriarchy isn't defined well enough to be falsifiable. You cannot define a world in which the patriarchy has been abolished. And all of its members do not just share traits but are morally wrong for being part of the group that they cannot choose.

I never understood alt-right obsession in seeing Marxism as main driving force behind everything bad happening in society, considering that said Marxism is supposed to be "happening" (one way or another) in capitalist country that so far, economically, has been always moving toward less equality (both opportunity and distribution).

Essentially, what you're seeing is a political ideology that matches the feminine imperative. The ideology pushes forward political ideas and eventually legislation that supports more freedom for women's sexual strategy (alpha fucks) while simultaneously punishing men or limiting their options (beta bucks). A woman 50 years ago would have had a harder time being a single mom, now it's becoming the standard. It will become much harder for men as this trend continues. Even if you never have your own child, if you live in a place like the USA, you're already daddy to quite a few kids courtesy of the IRS.

Individualism keeps us more competitive and speeds up the pace of implementing new technologies (which always had the primary impact on changing the society). Intellectual diversity/pluralism are the tools of evolution, be it biological or technological.

I think you've used the word "individualism" in not the best context, b/c I highly doubt you meant "groupthink is the strength of the other groups". Perhaps you meant putting national interests first or something like that.

Somewhere down the line Western culture did its best to divide male comradery in favor of individualism. I don't mean to say that groupthink or witchhunts are a bonus- these problems still exist in our very individualist society. What I mean is that brotherhood has been demonized and downplayed to the extent that except for a select few existing older fraternities, most men have nowhere to turn to for a local tribe. They are instead told that going to work and buying a house and living in a country that doesn't benefit them is a positive lifestyle.

Jack Donovan writes about who we consider our "we" when we speak. For instance, sports fans often say "we" when referring to their home team. Patriots refer to the country and its interests when they say "we." "We are winning the game!" "We are winning the war!"

He suggests in his book "Becoming a Barbarian" that one should consider some of the following when deciding who you consider "we" when you speak.

- Do the other people in this group know they are in a group with you?
- Would the other people in this group acknowledge you as a representative member?
- What would other members of this group do for you if you needed help?
- Do the majority of the people in this group share your values? Are you sure?

Capitalism already has mechanism for this - it's entrepreneur and startup culture (techo-economic innovation), which by disrupting markets, changes the culture. It's primarily male driven b/c it has competition built into the mechanism itself.

Yes, specialization is not new to the field of economics. But ask yourself this, how many men can truly say to themselves they exist as a tribe with brothers who they can rely on? Does every tribe meet the criteria of a startup business? I really don't think so. If a major storm happens and my heat goes out, do I have friends to rely on, or am I at the mercy of a repair man who can charge top dollar during an emergency who might not make me a priority? Does he care about my survival as I care about his?

The most successful and desirable still end up married, generally with kids though.

Repeating this lie doesn't make it true. High value men are learning every day that marriage is a no-go, and they're passing it on to younger generations.

The myth that a marriage is required to even reach the higher echelon is false as well.

RPWo seems to be struggling to figure out how to push the 'plate' agenda in a way that won't alienate

This trope gets repeated by you and your cohorts, but doesn't seem to ring true. I think you know it's not true, but maybe you're just looking to shit-talk the sub you left.. judges?

Both our subscribership and active user count is larger. It seems like this entire comment was just a propaganda piece to try to convince everybody (possibly even yourself) that what you've said is true.

The question was posed: What happens when high value men take a marriage strike? Are the highest value men always going to marry? And finally, is delaying sex a strategy that might filter out high value men that might otherwise commit?

What's funny is, these aren't really answered questions. But I have yet to see your group even try to address it, rather than shut it down in a hissy fit or call it "plate school."

A subreddit with the name "red pill" in it should be more dedicated to finding truths rather than hide behind convenient lies.

Why most of today's women aren't worthy of your commitment.

11 upvotes · 22 April 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

I'm serious, based on what you wrote why bother?

I think that's a question you need to answer for yourself. There is no easy answer to that. For some, the answer is that they won't bother.

I think to answer it you need to be very realistic and honest with yourself. It's okay to admit that your happiness is tied to sexual success. I, for one, wouldn't have gotten involved in TRP and the manosphere if a fleshlight gave me the same pleasure as attracting and fucking women. If I'm completely honest with myself, I need women. It's my biological imperative. Any substitute for me simply doesn't do it.

A lot of guys will powertalk like they don't need women in their lives. I think they rationalize because they don't want to need women. Or they can't be successful with women. I think they're lying to themselves.

But if your libido is low and you don't crave the validation, maybe you don't? I can't speak for others.

CMV: "Don't ask fish for advice on catching fish, ask a fisherman" is a flawed analogy

11 upvotes · 19 April 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

An analogy's purpose is to demonstrate the relationship between two things, not construct an entire alternative universe that must be logically consistent.

For instance, if you come up with a different analogy that is unrelated that seems to suggest the opposite - it doesn't "disprove" the analogy any more than an analogy proves the original point. (that is, it doesn't prove any point, it helps illustrate the relationship between two things)

And, by the way, fish don't want to be caught. A woman's sexual strategy is to maximize rejections (be selective), while a man's sexual strategy is to maximize approaches (be selected).

#IBelieveYou - Insanity about the supposed 'rape culture'.

11 upvotes · 1 September 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

Ninety-seven percent of sexual assaults go unreported.

But if we know that 1 in 4 women get raped based on reported stats, that means 97% of 3/4 of women are actually raped and just not reported. That leaves us with just around 4/4 women are raped.

Rape culture complete!

This is really fascinating because it continues to hinge on the same principle that the rest of feminine imperative hinges on- which is that women are holier than men, and should be trusted, and why ever would they lie about something, so you should trust and not bother verifying.

Essentially they want to normalize the idea that verification of a woman's testimony is akin to misogyny, so they can lay shame and ostracize much more easily. I mean, when you think about it, just critical discussion of women is hateful and dangerous. People believe that the conversation taking place here is literally causing rape. So they just gotta make sure it's wrong to question the rape.

Now the question is, will this be effective? Who knows. Maybe, somewhat.

The thing about the feminine imperative, is that it's a mode of operation. In their heads, this just feels right- this lends real credibility to potential victims, so how could it be bad?

It's not an intentional end-goal of making all women in society always right so they can lie without being questioned. It's just that the ideas and social constructs that most appeal to women happen to create pervasive cultural shifts that create pockets of plausible deniability for their actions... and that's just how they've always worked.

So while we analyze the endgame on these campaigns and their effects, it's important to realize that they themselves are likely unaware of why it appeals to them, or why it benefits them.

I would agree with the assessment that it's better to err on the side of alpha than to mistakenly do what Rollo's saying-

"If your personality is predominantly Beta, any sporadic flashes of Alpha will seem like emotional tantrums "

So, what we're talking about in this thread is certainly not beginner stuff- and I wouldn't recommend it to anybody who hasn't already learned to spin plates. But once you do, and you learn the downsides to being uncompromisingly alpha, you learn that you do need to scale it back a little to make a relationship work.

I suspect there's a more fundamental reason why a lot of guys dislike tattoos-

It shows a proclivity towards risk seeking behavior. This also demonstrates why women tend to be attracted to tattoos.

Now obviously, this doesn't apply to all men. Like Rollo Tomassi says, men will gain a preference to whatever success they have. If tattoo chicks tend to like a guy and others won't, he'll gain a preference, (or at least rationalize one), since it worked in the past.

At the end of the day, I've never seen a woman that would look better because of a tattoo. Some girls work with tattoos, but only in spite of it, not because of it.

Why don't more people have self-awareness/agency?

11 upvotes · 11 March 2014 · /r/askTRP

There's a theory that our consciousness and abstract reasoning abilities were not born out of necessity- many animals have bare minimum mental capabilities and survive. Instead, our rational abstract thinking skills were a result of sexual selection. There's a book worth taking a look at called "The Mating Mind" by Geoffrey Miller that discusses how our advanced cerebral skills may have been shaped by our desire to compete with ourselves for sex, and not for survival at all.

Of course, the lines blur when you consider many clever things we can do to get resources help us get sex, but this is in comparison to natural selection, which merely states we have to not be killed before mating.

So the question isn't why aren't more people self aware? But instead, why has anybody at all become so self aware?

It's no mistake, in my mind, that our increased introspection comes hand-in-hand with frustration in the sexual marketplace. Not that the frustration itself gives way to intelligence, but that intelligence plus frustration will filter out a group like us, the people who think to get laid.

Some of us may have lost the genetic lottery, while others may have a difficult market or surroundings. But that doesn't mean all who fail are intelligent, only that our group will be the only ones intelligent enough to fail and introspect - others would never look for us in the first place.

Then they can become a type of manboob. Manosphere-boobs who prefer to blame the bitches for being unlovable and pump and dump them rather than go through the pain of maturing their LTR and interpersonal skills.

I don't much approve of xplat's shaming technique here since it takes a very holier-than-thou attitude, as though there is a magic answer to happiness and most of us are just too stubborn and ego invested in our (ironically) new ego-breaking world view to "mature" and.. what.. man up so we can finally pursue those high quality relationships we've just been too blind to see?

I posted this because I think there is some real thinking each of us have to do individually to really consider exactly what it is that we want out of this. At some point, a personal decision needs to be made. It's true that there's a possibility of getting stuck in a rut here- pumping and dumping, nexting and nexting... But the question is, is there a higher quality life? Is his version of this closer to our former lives? Is he just too high to realize that not everybody will enjoy his success? Is this success real? Can these things be realistically achieved? Or are we being fed the same lies that got us here in the first place?

I don't purport to have the answers here, but I think I detect a hint of shame tactics coming not only from some of the manosphere bloggers but a lot of people here who don't quite grasp it.

Just because our path is dark and hard to see- doesn't mean there's a light at the end of the tunnel. We decide what the light is. Sometimes you have to realize that life is limited and make do with what is good enough. But sometimes you re-prioritize your goals altogether. Why strive for this version of "mature" relationships?

Well it's a personal choice. Anyway, take it for what you will.

...but what is worth noting is the way the woman is perfectly happy to burn down everything in order to get her way. I think red pillers have refused to define their position in a coherent manner and then fault blue pillers for not always immediately understanding their belief

11 upvotes · 17 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

The Red Pill position:

Men are realizing that the sexual marketplace has shifted away from what we've been taught. Men who grew up over thirty years ago are discovering the world has changed. Men who are still growing up- from the 80s, 90s, and even the last decade, they're starting to realize that what their parents taught them, what television and chick flicks taught them, what church and sunday school taught them... it's all wrong.

Our culture has become a feminist culture. A president cannot be elected today without succumbing to the feminist narrative and paying them tribute. How many times has Obama given credit for his manhood to his wife? How many times has the debate hinged on women's pay gap - which is a myth that gets lip service because if you don't you're a misogynist!

I'm not here to parade the concepts of Men's Rights- nor am I here to discuss self-improvement tips that /r/seduction now purports are to make you a better man, not get laid more often.

I am here to say, for better or for worse, the frame around public discourse is a feminist frame, and we've lost our identity because of it.

But this isn't the end of the world. The world is changing, but men are still part of it. We just need to make sure we're changing with it.

It's too easy to blame feminism for our troubles.

Men, our happiness is our responsibility. Culture has always shifted, it's dynamic and fluid. It has never and will never stay still.

Feminism was inevitable. Equal rights are something I strongly am in support of. For men and women.

Women have the right to pursue happiness. Nobody should tell them otherwise. Maximizing happiness is the goal of every living creature on this planet.

Men, we need to recognize that since women are rightfully seeking out happiness, evolutionary psychology is more relevant today than ever in the past century. (and possibly longer). We no longer run the show. And I, for one, don't disagree that marriage had to change if we were to see equal rights.

But now it's time to get serious and realize that our strategy needs to change. Feminism is a sexual strategy. It puts women into the best position they can find, to select mates, to determine when they want to switch mates, to locate the best dna possible, and to garner the most resources they can individually achieve.

The Red Pill is men's sexual strategy. Reality is happening, and we need to make sure that we adjust our strategy accordingly.

Welcome to the red pill. It's a difficult pill to swallow, understanding that everything you were taught, everything you were lead to believe is a lie. But once you learn it, internalize it, and start living your new life, it gets better.

As an introduction to the topic, I want to outline what our focus is here at /r/theredpill.

Mastering Game

Game is an important portion of a sexual strategy. A lot of you probably came here from /r/seduction and are probably wondering why we'd need a new subreddit if one dedicated to game already exists. The reason is simple: Game is a facet of The Red Pill's sexual strategy. Determining good game is impossible to do so without first understanding the context given by The Red Pill's framework. Something I keep seeing over on the seduction subreddit is a problem taking over most relationship and sex forums: the desire to feminize the discussion (basically making it sound politically correct if read by a female).

Yes, game got a bad reputation from girls who demonize manipulation. This is because game is an effective strategy against their own sexual strategy. I believe women's opposition to game can be attributed to the unconscious factors in women's sexual strategy (Please do read Schedules of Mating

When women started becoming vocal about their opposition to game, that's when men decided it would be necessary to make game more politically correct. "Oh, we're not here to manipulate women to have sex with us- we're here to become better men!"

And thus, the female imperative took over game. When men think they must define their own sexual strategy in a way that best delivers results to the female sexual strategy, you know your own strategy will suffer! In a game of chess, do I politely not take out the oppositions' queen in hopes not to offend or win the game?

Defining the Strategy

Because of the necessity to have good game, we must define what good game is. A large portion of Red Pill discussion revolves around evolutionary psychology. Understanding the facets of this psychology are key to developing a good sexual strategy. Because this strategy is useful not only in gaining the attention of the opposite sex, but continuing relationships, having children, and maximizing your own happiness throughout life, I'm going to argue that defining the strategy outside of just "good game" is an important facet of Red Pill Discussion.

Acknowledging Reality

Finally, I think our focus should always remain on ensuring that we challenge the reality we perceive and discuss precisely and objectively whether or not our beliefs line up with the testable results we can replicate. I am a firm believer that potential success can only be maximized by maximizing your knowledge of the factors surrounding your success. Keeping your eyes closed and ignoring evidence and facts will not benefit you. Opening your eyes and acknowledging everything no matter how good, bad, or painful it may seem, is instrumental in making decisions that will lead to the happiest, most successful outcomes.

This is what the red pill is. The rest is a fluid discussion about said strategy. There is no permanent or single theory, only ideas that are discussed between members who all agree on this fundamental premise. People discuss ideas and strategies, they try and succeed or fail. They share results. It continues.

Some commonly shared beliefs within the sub:

1. Marriage is a bad idea in westernized countries.
2. Feminism is an ideology that is fundamentally not in men's best interest (and not in the interest of equality)
3. Women's suffrage caused the shift to a more socialist state (bigger spending, more welfare oriented law)
4. Women are held in high regard in our culture, somewhat above reproach (this includes things like /r/pussypass, as well as societies expectations of women) 4a. Women in our culture have hypoagency. For instance a man and woman having drunk sex is rape only for the woman because the man has hyperagency.
5. Women are the selective gender, men are the selected. 5a. The female, not the male, determines all the conditions of the animal family. Where the female can derive no benefit from association with the male, no such association takes place. (Briffault's law)
6. Women are hypergamous by nature and their love is at the whim of this nature, which causes the things they cause a loss of attraction to be different from those of men.

The No True Alpha Fallacy

Committing adultery proves preselection and can be a DHV if you can maintain the frame.

11 upvotes · 11 September 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Denialism #2: Game is not genuine attraction, it's just a bunch of tricks

His reply is "tough shit, it works.." but Rollo Tomassi has said more on the subject. Women demand authenticity because hypergamy focuses on securing the best alpha seed available.

Game is a way to boost sexual market value. In a world where the feminine imperative does everything it can to ensure men do not boost their SMV.

This directly disrupts the female sexual strategy. Game puts a stick in their spokes.

To me PUA has always been a mixture of common sense, half truths, and a crap ton of guru-esque bullshit.

Most of the advice is really general advice. As in, doesn't work on everybody, but if your chances were 2%, you might get a small boost from each tip.

I found most PUA advice lacking, especially if you plan on going beyond a one-night pickup, it completely failed to address what to do in relationships.

One of the ways I discovered which PUA stuff works and what doesn't (or at least, what doesn't work for me) is by trying it out. I've never denounced pickup for it, I just assume that's how most people receive it. Try stuff, what works works, what doesn't, discard.

The methods you guys suggest are too inflexible, devoid of context and shallow.

The methods are taught as rigid and context free so that you can learn from them, and apply your own reason to them. Nobody expects you to go out and say word-for-word what somebody else posted as a conversation. It simply wouldn't work once you get past the first reply, the conversation can go any direction!

Every woman is as different as every man is, and that's why I can't quite get into it. Not every girl likes a buff guy, not every guy likes a stupid tanned blonde.

Of course people are different, to an extent. This just lets us exploit the similarities to increase our chances. Again, we're talking about low success rates to begin with. You go into a club, there are 150 women. There's probably 2 who would be into you if you play your cards right. These tips aren't going to get 150 women into, the tips help men not screw up the 2 who would be!

Flirting is an art, not math. It has context, it has quirks, it has style, it has mistakes. You advocate that drawing well is the same as being a true artist, and are proud of that. I cannot agree with that. Every girl is a different canvas, and painting the same shit every time is just dull and boring.

You've drawn a few wrong conclusions: #1, the idea that if you don't know how to flirt, there's no way to learn, #2, that following general advice somehow causes your interactions to be less genuine and repetitive. Both are false. Some guys need a boost to learn how to interact with women, and just because somebody gives you advice doesn't mean the interactions are less genuine or interesting for both parties.

all that value is buried in countless of bitter-sounding anecdotes and stories that I can't even begin to emphasize [sic] with.

You know, your dismissal of angry men is exactly why they ended up here angry. Imagine you enter that club with 150 women every evening, and you go 5 years without so much as a kiss, you might start to think you're unlovable. Or imagine getting married only to find your wife cheated on you because she was bored. You might start to wonder what the fuck the point of marriage was.

Well, we encourage the anger emotion. Do not try to shame us for it. This is the only place it's welcome. Obviously we want to funnel it into something more constructive, but what we see here- by your own admission- you already think it's shameful. Why do you think these guys come here to do it? Because everybody else thinks men shouldn't have feelings.

Well guess what... if you fuck me over, god damned right I'll be angry.

“Your Son Is A Fucking Faggot”

See and this is where I think you missed the point of the article in its entirety.

It's crass hyperbole.

It said two things to me that made me post it:

1. Single mothers (and perhaps single fathers) can have an adverse effect on children's gender role understanding and growth (and identity) in relation to future success with mates.

2. Despite the cultural movement to let children do anything they want, even if it's abso-fucking-lutely retarded, we should perhaps pay attention to teaching our kids proper gender roles to ensure future success with mates.

3. Don't assume all boys are gay and treat them as such. Give boys strong masculine role models, and let them decide to emulate mom later if they want.

When it comes to upbringing, there obviously needs to be a balance between discipline and freedom, but the current climate is basically pro-cookies. Timmy wants a cookie? He should get one because hearing "no" hurts his ego.

That's what this damn fucking article is about, not about homophobia, not about child abuse and actually calling them faggots, not about telling other people their children are faggots, not about any of that.

It's because they are close in SMV. Young men are very low on the scale, and as women approach or pass the wall, their SMV starts falling as well.

"Nice" will get you in trouble with women if you're coming from 'submissive' or 'low-value'. Low-value means that you're intentions can or must be questioned because you 'must' or you're doing it for 'gain'. This is especially true for men because 'real men' are assumed to have advantages. Feminism reinforces this constantly in the minds of women. So women feel men with less money or are more submissive are less valuable partners because their motives are unclear, naturally. Feminism has a weird way of actually promoting 'patriarchal' attitudes in women. Continued...

The guy is frustrated. He's your average frustrated chump. And his complaints are valid when you consider that most of them are in contrast to what women pretend to like and advocate.

So when your expectations that are set by women, don't match what women are doing... that's plenty justification to be frustrated.

This isn't precluding women's autonomy or ability of sexual expression. It's literally just expecting women to be good people. Which, by their own standards, they are not.

Women are inherently solipsistic. Do you know what they value in men? Status, money, strength.

In the mind of a woman, she confuses what she desires in a man with what a man must desire in her, because fathoming another world view is foreign to her.

To consider that adopting male traits makes her less attractive makes no sense to her, because she is certainly attracted to the very traits she dons.

The fact is, he already knows something was wrong. Maybe it was subtle, but he's noticed the lessening attraction. Once it came to fruition like this, he was more confident that something was wrong.

Feeling left out, betrayed, manipulated, and contemplating what led to this in the first place. Booze is no excuse. Something deeper created this situation.

I'm a pretty low tolerance person when it comes to mistakes. I'm not sure, however, I'd have been in his position because I'm sure my relationship would be so totally different I wouldn't be at home with a kid while my wife went out with the ladies. That's always a recipe for disaster. The things women tell each other, the things they whisper into each other's ears.

I theorize that most women secretly attempt to ruin each other's relationships, not help. Dating is a zero sum game, and no woman likes another woman to have a happy relationship.

That's why women always harp on the boyfriend. You're defenseless if you're not even there.

Nine years is a long time, and I'm not sure I'd immediately go for divorce. That said, I would take this moment to wake up, start spinning some plates, up my married game, and get things under control.

She did something terrible, but hamstas gonna hamst. If you didn't expect your woman to do this sort of stuff, then you don't know what you're dealing with. Sure I blame her, but this guy needs to get his game in order. Otherwise we'll just keep seeing repeats.

11 upvotes · 8 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I do not think it's a social stigma keeping female sex drive down at all. In fact, in western culture, women having sex has become ok. Women naturally have lower sex drives. This is in line with their mating schedule and the increased risk and burden of childbearing.

That doesn't mean women won't have sex every day if they had the opportunity. But it does mean that men will think about it more often, will be aroused more easily, arousal will be triggered by more and more often, and frustration will be much higher when access to sex cannot be achieved.

My few big questions:

1. In the USA, would you consider the advice in your book "Bang" to still be relevant? I use the advice in Day

Bang daily with great results- I've mostly given up on night game.

2. You have a pretty negative view on social websites like facebook and the use of iphones. I agree with you, the validation it provides women is overwhelming. But the cat's out of the bag with social media. My question is this- since we can't undo what iphones have brought us, the attitude that preached for men doesn't seem to work as well.. the abundance mentality seems to have less effect when you end up next-ing through every girl you meet trying to keep your foot down and not put up with bullshit, and they don't care about your strike because they don't really need validation from you in the first place. What do you suggest would be a good way to counteract these forces, socially as a group, that isn't just spam more women?

The Arguments against the Red Pill

11 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

but for those who are not, life is an unending series of trying to navigate very difficult female-male relationships without hurting people and trying to succeed in life despite their position as being "naturally" less smart, capable and respectable than men.

This is what the feminine imperative would have you believe.

So take that as a backdrop to enter the Redpill mentality - the idea that women are either evil, or worthless, or animalistic and should be taken advantage of and manipulated to satisfy some sexual or psychological need of men.

Let's get the first part out of the way. Sexual strategy is amoral, so nobody here is making claims that anybody is evil. Happiness is something both genders strive towards, and one of the biggest drivers of this is mating. The drive is in both men and women. Satisfying our drive is no more or less good or bad than women doing the same. Sexual strategy is amoral.

Overall, what I see here is a group of people who have chosen cold logic and dissection over empathy. I think there is a place for both. Obviously being blind to how people operate and deluding yourself for "warm fuzzies" is stupid. But training your mind to break down people and their actions into a series of pre-defined memes is a sure way to cheapen your interactions and relationships. That really scares me, as someone who wants to maximize the happiness of the people I know and encounter.

This is how the feminine imperative works. They label their sexual strategy as good, and men's as inherently bad.

You hear it enough, that men just want to turn women into sex objects. You even came to the red pill subreddit to repeat it. Don't feel bad- it's pretty pervasive.

What they won't tell you is this: Their sexual strategy is cold. Not enough comfort? Not enough attraction? Women will stand you up on a date and not even call. This won't even strike them as wrong. Are you a man who makes a woman feel good? Do you compliment her? Do you supplicate her? Do you validate her? Click like on her facebook photos? You are officially a beta-orbiter. She will never have sex with you, but she will make you believe she would.

The feminine imperative ensures selectivity by spreading misinformation. The more people who succumb to it, the easier it is for females to identify alpha males.

The best way to do that is to loudly denounce alpha's sexual strategy, to ensure only the brazen will continue forward.

Eschewing masturbation is clearly a strong habit to increase desire for pro-social sexual behavior.

If you're literally unable to leave your basement because you can't stop jacking it- like I said, masturbation isn't your problem. Obsessive addictive personality disorder, perhaps.

But for most people, jacking it now and again isn't the cause of or solution to any of your problems.

And yeah, I'm mocking the all-or-nothing crowd. Because sometimes the spergs need a little jolt to wake up.

You can fap and go out and meet women, or you can not fap and go out and meet women. Using this behavior as an excuse is just that, making excuses.

I don't care if you decide personally to stop fapping. I really don't. But when you hinge your motivation (or delusion of it) on an activity like that as a proxy for success- it's easy to use falling off the wagon as an excuse for failure and then just go back to what you were doing.

All or nothing is the quickest way to burn out.

Women are kinda like adrenaline junkies in that sense. Constantly seeking out the biggest rush or sensation they can find, then leaving once it subsides and they grow a tolerance.

Which explains the thousand cock stare after they get off the cock carousel. They've seen it all, and now they're left emotionless, without anything left to give them that buzz. No guy measures up to all the guys she's fucked. So now she's a cat lady.

Question 3: "What's the matter? You look so sad."

I was just remembering my turkey sandwich from lunch today. God, he just went so quickly...

Question 4: How many girls have you slept with?"

Two thousand, seven hundred-twelve and one half. But who's counting?

Question 5: "Are you seeing anyone else?"

Not in the next ten minutes...

Intermediate

Question 6: "Are you gay?"

Why, do you have a penis? wink

Question 7: "Wow. Your friend Chad is hot."

Yes, and he's all mine, you can't have him.

Question 8: "I have a boyfriend."

Well, don't tell him about us! Awkward!

Question 9: "I don't date little boys/old men"

That's what Jared said, too...

Question 10: "Sorry, I don't just give out my number."

I'll give it back when I'm done!

Advanced

Question 11: "I'm looking for someone who's not afraid to wait."

Thank god, every girl I've been with always comes so early.

Question 12: "...and just so you know, we aren't having sex."

And we're definitely not having pancakes for breakfast afterwards.

Question 13: "Sorry. I need to get to know you first."

Ok, well I think it all started when I was just a wee little baby, and I had just gone outside for the first time. I thought, gosh the world sure is a great, beautiful place full of opportunities. But, that optimism didn't last long, it all changed on my first day of kindergarden...

Question 14: "Stop, stop. This is moving too fast. Let's take things slow."

Ok, I'll go slower, but don't blame me if slower kissing gets drool on your blouse.

Question 15: "What kind of girl do you think I am?! I'm not some whore!"

Of course not, I wasn't planning on paying you.

Fantastic writing, I enjoyed the problem glasses article.

Generally speaking, I believe the rape culture to be just this- a false rape accusation culture. I don't believe rape to be nearly as common as they make it seem, and I absolutely don't believe the cringey ways it's portrayed in gaga's video.

The more fuss they put up about it, the less I'm inclined to believe any of it's true.

Which is probably bad news for real victims.

Agreed. Women are given the latitude to act like perpetual victims, so they do.

You know what happens for men when something terrible happens? They either learn to snap the fuck out of it, or they become homeless.

There's a pretty strong motivator to keep men from being perpetual victims, and the ones that get pushed too far have a serious mental break. (And make up a majority of the homeless population, and are mostly suffering from PTSD from war)

10 upvotes · 13 July 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

The way I see it, shit happens and it really really sucks when somebody is a victim of something as terrible as rape. I wouldn't want to hold that against them.

However, I do have an expectation that despite whatever bad things happen, their behavior towards me still needs to be positive. That is, if you were to define a relationship, it is nothing more than the culmination of interactions between two people. If they decide to treat their partner poorly, due to victim-hood or malice, it still means that the relationship is not good. I don't care what's going on in your life, you control you and you decide how you're going to behave towards me.

Be mad, be sad, be depressed, be whatever you need to help recover. But do not treat me poorly, because that's a choice and I'm out if you do.

Talking is my game. I don't embrace stoicism or silence at all in my game. You gotta do what works for you. In my case, it's just not my style at all.

As long as your conversation doesn't come from a place of neediness (such as requiring validation) you're golden. For instance, my game is goofy chatting and forcing people into funny hypothetical situations and talking their way out. As long as you're not trying to prove yourself via speech.

Examples of bad talk:

- Talking about your profession, money, or anything that looks like you're qualifying.
- Asking about emotional states or whether they are enjoying said conversation.
- Self deprecation.

My game usually includes me asking funny, pointed questions, and dismissing their answers as if they were completely lying.

10 upvotes · 29 July 2014 · /r/MensRights

Some excerpts:

Feminism was the ideology that spurred millions of women to divorce and break up their families, and many of us carry the scars of that decision. Feminism made men fearful to even speak to women, much less relate to them in a professional manner. While you may see the resulting domination of women in corporate positions of power as gratifying, understand that it was done at a price.

Feminism's unequal treatment of gender issues across the board has grown so egregious that protecting the virtue of 200 little African girls results in a global awareness campaign, while the brutal deaths of hundreds of boys in the same conflict earned no attention by feminism.

You've attacked male sexuality with bloodthirsty abandon, belittling the "male gaze" and objecting to "objectification" - without understanding that objectification is as important to male sexuality as emotional context is to female sexuality. Your relentless fight against "rape culture" has put you at odds with every heterosexual man in the country, as you rampage for the right to only be approached by attractive men, and demonize unattractive men by their "misogyny".

From biological functionality, there may actually be an advantage to bisexuality or homosexuality. For instance, a family that includes homosexuals may result in more care takers and less children (so more resources per child).

I don't agree with your definition of Feminism. I think giving woman equal agency just allows for an equal number of "assertive, aggressive and dominating personalities" across both sexes.

True femininity: that which distinguishes (to the male mind) a difference between men and women. Just like boobs and vaginae are feminine, we think certain behaviors and traits are feminine.

We don't think women have to be feminine, but they do if they want to be attractive. Just like men don't have to be fit, but man it helps if you want a date.

it's the attempt to make men and women equal

Equal in opportunity or outcome?

For instance in a physical fight- men and women are not equal. No amount of legislation can change the fact that if a woman decided to fight me, it wouldn't turn out well for her, not me. Should you just pretend you can legislate equality like that where there surely is none?

Well here's the outcome of something like VAWA (violence against women, not violence against people act - that's feminism). A woman can get in your face, she can instigate a fight, she can punch you, she can hurt you, but god damn if men want to avoid jail don't fucking touch her!

That's not equality. That's the law giving carte blanche to women, a law that can now be abused easily to remove men from their homes, even when they're the victims of domestic violence.

A woman is naturally hypergamous - that is, she wants to maximize her mating strategy by finding the best mate she can. That means constantly looking and evaluating potential mates for somebody higher value, while simultaneously evaluating and reevaluating her current mate for fitness.

A woman with many partners shows she is more likely to give in to hypergamy than to work on a relationship. It demonstrates few traditional values, which are important in a potential wife/mother. (Look at the divorce rates today).

Men simply have different mating strategies. Women are attracted to men who other women like. The more mates, the more attractive.

A quick breakdown of what's going on here:

As is common, the discussion of rape and the red pill came back up. I attempt to clear the air by explaining the question of one's own right to contractually surrender bodily autonomy- which from a thinking perspective is an interesting question- one that I think requires some real thinking to really come to any conclusions, and one that has interesting implications in other examples of surrendering bodily autonomy.

My contribution is purely theoretical and detached. Who I am in relation to the subject has zero bearing on it. Yet, those who want to disagree with the red pill find it within themselves to use the very existence of a conversation about rape as an endorsement thereof.

This is a classic example of what is taught in today's schools as acceptable debate. The insults and mischaracterizations of me are their only weapon, as logic or reason were simply left out of their educations.

Their only hope is to say "rape" louder and longer than any voice of reason can come back with.

In modern debate, using insult and ad hominem is the mark of the loser of a debate.

In postmodern debate, whoever is offended first is decidedly the winner.

There is no Red Pill Movement

10 upvotes · 3 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It's not a centralized, organized movement, but neither was/is feminism -- and that's still moving.

The subreddit is growing in numbers, which means more people are being exposed to ideas here. I dare say we're opening eyes to the manosphere quicker here than many other masculine resources.

But no, nobody's running the movement. Much like nobody's really running feminism. But the movement is having an effect.

You can see the news every day- less men are getting married. Men are dropping out of school. Men are underperforming economically.

Whether or not we were organized, we all came to similar conclusions, that shit's not working for us. So we withdrew, and people are noticing.

The mistake you're making is thinking we won't have an effect.

Of course what I write isn't going to be front page of Time Magazine tomorrow. (That said, I was invited to BBC World Newshour, so it's not that ridiculous). But what we are doing is bringing knowledge to men everywhere, and letting them open their eyes and make decisions based on that knowledge. And with that knowledge, their decisions will likely create a statistic. As that statistic grows- eventually the public will have to take notice.

I'm not saying we can control the outcome, or even predict it. But I am saying that social change is happening, and we're at the forefront in ways that feminism and even men's rights have no idea.

What some people call a lack of empathy could just be a lack of in-group belonging. We, as people, depend on identifying similarities to determine who deserves our empathy. Which is why we don't cry about our enemies dying, but have a problem with people in our own country. It explains why a tragedy in another state might be upsetting, but a tragedy in your family is devastating. It also allows us to eat animals (as we do not identify with them), of course barring some overly empathetic women and womanly men.

But imagine never having the group to be in. If you do not identify with a group, you cannot find empathy for them. I feel more empathy for the men fucked over in divorce rape than I do for most people I know personally. I've learned that I have empathy, just not for those I'm told I should.

10 upvotes · 22 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I wouldn't say that's the prime example of hypergamy, just the loudest example on our sub. Unfortunately, people upvoted the most scandalous examples because they're entertaining.

Hypergamy can just as much present itself in a loveless marriage without divorce, in a long term relationship that ends without cheating, in emotional cheating (with no physical contact), and in relationships that are working perfectly (the man has sufficient value to counter-balance her hypergamy).

The question we're asking here is about the mechanism that encourages a woman's behavior. Statistics are an important aspect of psychology on any level, but only when testing a particular mechanism. The divorce and cheating statistics would be more valuable if we knew the story behind it and the values of the male and female involved.

That's why we keep collecting so many stories. It may not be a scientific study, but it's enough data to at least posit a hypothesis.

In an era when Hypergamy has been given free reign, it is no longer men's provisioning that dictates her predisposition to want to be a submissive partner in their relationships. To an increasingly larger degree women no longer depend upon men for the provisioning, security and emotional support that used to insure against their innate Hypergamous impulses. What's left is a society of women using the satisfaction of Hypergamy as their only benchmark for relational gratification.

A feminist takes off gloves and debates "sexual objectification" with me. Interesting read.

10 upvotes · 16 April 2013 · /r/askTRP

1. Objectification by denying intrinsic value

A. "Women are only valuable for their pussies" [x[4]] "The value a woman has beyond the sexual only becomes relevant after she's been sexual." [x[5]]

Nobody denies that women have intrinsic value to themselves or society. The poster corrected what he said later in that post, which was "they are only valuable to me in that capacity. This could span men and women. If you, as a man, do not provide something of value (friendship, laughter, goods, services) I also see no value in you. It just happens my value for men is different for women. But if you are to say that value judgement is objectifying, then let's be honest- all human interaction is objectifying (and therefore the term is meaningless under this context).

B. Women cannot bring "masculine" value (ie, all other value except for pussy) to a marriage/relationship

It's not that men would deny them the right- it's that once we do, we find quickly we are no longer able to do so. Being the stay at home dad as the mother brings home the bacon is the quickest way to lose her attraction. Mind you- her value to us as men is access to the womb, so a stay at home dad wouldn't be in the same position of losing attraction.

C. Women and social value: [they should not vote and cannot contribute to society]. Men can inherit value from the historical accomplishments of their gender; women do not.

Historically women did not contribute, but that doesn't mean we view they cannot now. A more realistic view would be simple: Women can contribute, but understand that with a shorter window of opportunity for mating, they may have to chose between social contribution and familial. (Life ain't fair, is it).

As for voting, the only argument you'll get from me is not one of value. Women shouldn't have been given the vote without the responsibility attached to it (conscription). Neither should any group be given the right (illegal immigrants) if they do not share our responsibilities to our country.

1. TRP denies the agency of women

A. Spousal rape

Consent to sex during marriage is in the bible. Women have all the agency in the world, and can choose not to get married. This does not deny the agency of women any more than a man who joins the army voluntarily is denying the agency of men, despite the fact that he will be kept in service, sometimes forcibly, until his contract is finished. He may lose bodily autonomy via this contract, he may even lose his life.

B. Date rape, and the Shotgun Wedding

Sexual Utopia in power is a masterpiece at helping us understand the social and legal climate we live in today. Not by any means a guidebook.

C. Evolutionary psychology

Paraphrased: "Women are programmed, by genetics (evolutionary psychology) and culture (feminism). They cannot rise above this programming. Men receive programming from the same sources, but can rise above it to change their behavior." [x[10]

First of all, I'm not going to comment on content that's not on the red pill, but I will say that anybody who believes this would get an argument from me. Both men and women have a certain programming, yes. The difference here is whether men or women have the necessary pressures to need to adapt. Everybody has the ability to override their lizard brain. The question is, what causes people to do so, and are those pressures at work in certain scenarios?

By and large your questions/arguments are a mischaracterization of the general values here. And I do speak on behalf of the red pill, as one of the main curators I ensure we stay on focus in these ways.

"Women Have No Value Beyond Their Pussies" - Repost?

10 upvotes · 6 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I think personally that it is more along the lines of having a vagina does not make women inherently valuable. That women who provide no value besides their pussies are not good for anything besides sex.

I think that's the wrong angle. To consider it differently:

Women's vaginas have so much value, that they rarely find need to develop other skills society finds valuable. Men have such an instinctual drive for the womb, that women can get provisions, validation, and everything they need simply by having one.

From the economists view, this means there are no pressures on her to develop other skills. Social skills, intelligence, or trade skills are usually severely lacking in women, and therefore most women provide no additional value beyond their vaginas.

Of course, this is a gradient. You'll find that a lot of ugly women actually do develop skills and personality. But that's because their vagina doesn't bring much to the table.

The greatest Threat to the Feminine Imperative is men becoming self-aware of their own sexual market value and the dissemination of information about how the imperative uses this lack of awareness to perpetuate itself.

The first recourse to prevent this is male-specific ridicule and derision for even attempting to explain the social constructs of the feminine imperative.

You don't have to have sex with everybody, no. But you have to appear as though you do for status. Spinning plates is the number one defense against female hypergamy. If you believe that being a good person will somehow cause the women you're seeing to see your value and fall in line, you're setting yourself up for failure.

It's not that the advice here is extreme, it's that the world works entirely differently than most people think. No woman will be an exception. The sooner you realize this, the better.

I can't recommend these guys stay off of seddit, since most of them (including me) are subscribed to seddit. But furthermore, because they genuinely want to help men with seduction.

Sure they'd be differing techniques (now). But I think the guys on seddit deserve to hear alternate opinions.

How is it not creepy to use obviously offensive nomenclature in reference to the very people you're trying to attract? This is stupid.

You have to look at the context. We are on reddit to talk about successful strategies for having sex. At the end of the day there's no denying it- women aren't a big fan of conversation about sexual strategy.

There is no way around this except for one specific point: We are not on reddit to meet girls on reddit. We're on reddit to better meet girls in real life.

Context is everything. I'll use my shitting example because I'm in a craptastic mood: If you take a shit in a public place, that's creepy. If you do so in front of a woman, it's super creepy. If you do so in your bathroom, it's normal.

So context can affect reception of behavior. It's pretty well accepted that reddit isn't exactly the place for women. I see no reason to modify my speech to appease women who will never like pickup no matter what.

Creep is a word women use to describe someone who's creepy, i.e. you.

Ad hominem.

Uh, how is that uncalled for, but it's okay for you to use whatever terms you want to describe women? What kind of crap double standard is that?

I am advocating for the nomenclature that has already existed on this subreddit- true to the spirit of this sub. I am defending against somebody using shaming tactics to stifle conversation. The two are not the same, and it's clear to anybody who reads it.

He wasn't passing judgment on your number of sex partners. He was passing judgment on you calling women numbers instead of people, which is fucking creepy.

My response to this

Subjectively labeling me creepy continues your pattern of ad hominem attacks. You are attempting to shame me into submission? Please!

You're obviously not very good at this, otherwise you'd know that approaching women is the same whether she's a 10 or a 5.

If you're familiar with seduction you'd understand calibration. I think it's in the FAQ, read up.

Except it's creepy.

I'm upset you're not using other fallacious arguments. This is tiring.

Um, because at the very least you're trying to bang them? Many of us want to actually have relationships with them? Would you go down to a black neighborhood and call every girl there a nigger while expecting them to date you? This is just obvious.

Would you open a girl with, "my plan is to marry you and have kids.."

No? Why not?

Because strategy is choosing what you say and how you say it. Might be your plan to attract a woman and marry her, but you know full well if you just blurt your entire strategy, you'll get nowhere. That's why reddit is a forum on the internet and not the bar where you pick up girls.

Oh, unless you're trying to shame me for wanting sex. I say, sir, you are on the wrong subreddit.

Women read this subreddit too, idiot.

And?

You've obviously never read Randian's other posts. The guy's got more game on his little finger than you have in your entire body. So how about you shut up and read, maybe you might actually learn something?

I'm incredibly proud of this moderation.

1. He was concern trolling, making a long video explaining how we need to rephrase our stuff, and that game doesn't work.
2. I voiced disagreement, but left his post up for the benefit of the doubt.
3. He accused me of overly controlling moderation, which I had not exercised at this point.
4. I explained clearly and concisely why I took the stance I did, and how my job works.
5. I gave him a warning.
6. I banned him, but did not remove any of his material and let the moderation stand up to scrutiny.

That is why I'm proud of it. I am entirely candid and transparent. He attempted to derail the way many feminists before him and after him have, and I dealt with him the way I will continue to deal with feminists on our sub who concern troll.

Edit: Here's the post with his deletions, not mine.

http://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/16n9jw/re_how_to_break_in_a_woman_youtube/

Please keep note that one of my jobs is to keep us on track as a forum moderator. That includes dealing with trolls. The more effective trolls try to keep a guise of plausible deniability (like this guy).

I will let most debate ride out, but there are some key points: Do not become flippant and disrespectful towards the moderators. Yes, maybe I'll flag some well-intentioned stuff while taking out the trash, but it's not an easy job when there are people literally plotting to destroy our subreddit.

Edit 2: It reminds me of somebody I recently banned. He kept bringing up racism and declared me "not open for real discussion." The reason that he was banned, which I explained multiple times, was that he refused to listen to me, not because discussion on genetics was banned. He still claims I banned him because I labeled him a racist, and he still claims we're censoring "true red pill discussion." This serves as nothing but validation for me as to why he was banned. Even now he's ignoring the conversation I tried to have with him.

Men not marrying? How deep does "the problem" go?

10 upvotes · 16 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It's a common misunderstanding of what we're doing.

Think of it this way: Ever notice how really hot women ignore ugly guys? Ever notice how really rich guys end up with really hot women? Ever notice how even modestly attractive hollywood actors have a plethora of female fans?

Women will only engage with men they see value in. They will not engage with a man they don't see value in. This is a basic tenet that you can test yourself. Go to a bar, watch how men and women interact.

There is no shame in this behavior. In fact, you're probably thinking, well good for women, they shouldn't be forced to go out with a guy they find unattractive!

And you'd be right!

So all we're doing is painting the other side. Women have zero mercy for guys they find unattractive. On the evolutionary scale, that means that guys who are really unattractive never pass on genes. They die without kids.

We're saying nothing more than the fact that we should not be shamed into going out with women we do not find attractive or see value in.

I'm not going to marry a woman who is past her childbearing years, because she cannot have my children. It's sad for her, sure, but the reality is I do not see value in it.

We all make value judgments about people around us. You keep friends that bring value into your life. You get rid of friends that cause trouble, drama, or that make you miserable.

Why wouldn't we do the same with women?

The idea that we're dehumanizing is a misnomer. You're trying to attribute more value to somebody than they inherently have. If a woman does not appeal to me, should I marry her out of duty nevertheless?

Furthermore, we are speaking in generalizations. When analyzing large populations, we will speak of average behaviors and preferences. This is not a comment on their feelings or humanity. It is impossible to dehumanize a group of people, because the group is not a human.

Men not marrying? How deep does "the problem" go?

10 upvotes · 16 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Sure, they're people.. but that's a meaningless distinction. For instance, criminals are people, but you are obviously going to have value judgments. What value does a criminal provide you? There's a good chance if you're raising children, you're not inviting a convicted felon to your thanksgiving dinner.

Why would you marry a woman but not a man? Because you're heterosexual and not gay? So you see value in women that you do not see in men? If you do not, why would you not then marry a man? They are both people!

Society pressures men to initiate sexual relationships, yet punishes them when they express their sexual needs.

10 upvotes · 8 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Ah- I think you've stumbled on a good point here. No, it's not fair.

And that is the core of the reason feminists disagree with us. Because we embrace the unfairness. (and good on us for doing so- it's actually stacked against men!)

There's an old saying. "All's fair in love and war."

What it means is, you can try to play by rules, but at the end of the day, who ever wins... wins.

Stigmatizing sluts is part of male sexual strategy. It's a small drop in the bucket when you consider both genders' strategies, but it was effective for a long time until recently. Of course the idea was that men wanted to be sure that their child was their own!

The social stigmas are a representation of latent gender imperatives that are generated by the unconscious part of the brain. The one that causes the feelings of attraction. (the one that you can't control!) Many people in evo psych call it the lizard brain. Call it what you want.

Frankly, as somebody who understands modern birth control, I don't see chastity as as important of a characteristic, though I will argue that women who have sex with a lot of men gain other characteristics I find unattractive. I actually just choose not to know how many partners a woman has had in her past. That keeps me from ever being turned off by it.

Please understand that if she tells me 30, my boner vanishes. And it's not a response I control. It's an unconscious physiological response. That's why I just take the high road and make sure never to ask!

Now of course, mating is imbalanced. As I mentioned it's a bit stacked against men. While they do have slut shaming (which is losing traction), women have many tools in their chest.

At the end of the day, women are the selective gender, which is to say men approach multiple women and hope to be accepted by at least one, whereas women are approached by multiple potential suitors and can select among them. (Not to say women get the guy of their dreams, but that they turn down sex with a majority of their potential suitors, whereas men suggest sex with a majority of their potential mates).

It's unfair that women are turned on by tall men. Many short guys lament this. They'll even call it superficial if a woman has a preference.

Which is the same as women getting mad at men for having a chastity preference. No it's not fair, but mating isn't fair. Women can no more negotiate attraction than can men. If a short man isn't attractive, it's not like you can just change your mind about it!

So, looking for a politically correct equality answer isn't helping anybody. In fact, it's just really confusing most guys and a lot of girls.

The experience is sink or swim. The guys down the street at the park play basketball. I might ask to join. They'll probably let me. As a man I know if I suck I should gracefully bow out, not complain and ask them to be nicer.

Women don't understand this is our experience too and they assume then that it's easy for us and we're only doing it to them via the big bad patriarchy.

The Arguments against the Red Pill

10 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

You can't generalize people, they are all different.

My common response to this is: Let's say you ask every person on the planet one question: Would you like to live, or can I stab you to death right now? What would the answer be?

Almost 100% would answer, "I would like to live." So we can all agree that there are predictable behaviors. In this case, self-preservation is one of them.

Now that we can agree that behavior isn't random, we can now work towards more complex systems. Thank you.

Women are just living their lives. They are not strategizing, or gaming, men.

My response: Correct.

How a man expects to be loved

10 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

That's what we are taught. Not necessarily that we want "mothers." But for unconditional love, that's all we know. That nurturing, caring woman that we could be weak around. When we got a cut or a bruise, who did we run to? Mom!

Then we learn that relationships are about mutual respect and love. And marriage is about unconditional love. We're taught that true love is loving you for you.

Parents teach us this. Culture teaches us this. Media teaches us this.

"The greatest thing you'll ever learn is to love and to be loved in return."

We expect that this means that we can finally let down our guard. The world is a tough place, and just because I'm a man doesn't mean I don't have insecurities. I have fears. I worry about things. Sometimes I obsess. If anybody could understand these things, wouldn't it be my life-long partner?

And if I can confide these things in her, who else have I been able to do this with and still receive unconditional love? My mother.

The emotional supplication I seek is the very same that I sought from my mom.

We were completely left in the dark about the fact that we cannot actually pursue this emotional support. In a way, you can say we were fatherless. Though my dad was there, he never taught me to be a man. He never taught me that these things were not to be shared with women. He never taught me that this cannot be the nature of a relationship with a women.

The biggest lesson in becoming a man is becoming your own source of emotional stability. You will be the source other people draw from, not the other way around.

Older generations taught that to their boys as they grew up. I'm learning it much later in life.

Materialist

If you're suggesting that physical matter is what makes up our reality? Then yes.

If you're talking about a value system of material wealth and objectives? Then no, that does not follow.

Hedonist

Once again- you're mixing up a presupposition and a prescription. We presuppose that evolution programmed people to act in selfish ways. We do not however agree that hedonism is the prescription. It does not follow.

Biological Essentialist

Looking past that you just snuck this one in last minute, I would again take exception to this description. Would you describe me as a biological essentialist? Perhaps so. I believe that everything in existence has some level of cause and effect even if we live in a non-deterministic chaos. Would I describe myself as one? No, I think there is chaos and therefore some level of free will - even if only imaginary.

My favorite reaction to this analogy is when bloopers go:

Women aren't fucking padlocks bro. You don't get it. A shapener that sharpens many pencils is a good sharpener.. etc. SEE? MISSSSSOGINI!

Bloopers don't understand metaphors. You can't debunk an analogy as a way of debunking what the metaphor was describing. That's not how that works.

Is it mindless though? I mean, I would enjoy a broader analysis, but I think it's important to take note of how popular media frames sexual dynamics in a way to normalize unnatural behavior. I think that's an important data point to record. I'd love to see an analysis between the marketability of "normalization" media verses media that mirrors reality but does nothing to push the social envelope. I think there's a lot to be discussed here.

For instance, I've noticed more gay and lesbian couples showing up in tv shows recently, far more than what naturally occurs in real life. If you believed the television, you'd think 50% of the population is gay with how represented they are on tv. This is essentially trying to normalize a behavior.

Anger is okay. Anger is normal when you've been presented lies. And when it's the collective of every woman in your life who has been lying to you? It's healthy to distrust and point your anger at them.

I'd rather men never get over the anger than never have it to begin with. Denouncing the anger in itself does as much damage as the lies they were told to begin with.

It's like saying, "oh I robbed your house and now you shouldn't feel angry because anger is so bad.." No, you don't get to decide that. Only in this liberal dystopia would anger be considered a negative emotion.

I think you miss the point- first of all, I think that humans are self-serving, selfish, and manipulative by nature. Not just women.

The best magic trick of all time was society convincing us that women were above that.

Yes, I think women have all of the worst qualities of humans, given the right circumstances. Same as I do men.

You don't like our analogies and terms, but that just means you don't understand analogies and terms. For instance, we don't think women are literal hamsters. We call it the rationalization hamster- and we use it to refer to woman and men who are rationalizing bad behavior.

Either it's random, or there's a reason.

The way I see it, there's a few entrance points for TRP.

Some can never get laid, and start seeing women for what they are.

Some get fucked in court, and start seeing women for what they are.

Some get fucked over by the one they love, and they start seeing women for what they are.

And some just do a combo of all three.

Let me see if I can break it down to make sense.

There's sex - male and female. Refers to which giggly bits you have.

Then there's gender - totally unrelated. We use the terms "male" and "female" to denote genders because the male gender is the archetype of behaviors and preferences typically present in the male sex. The female gender is the archetype of behaviors and preferences typically present in the female sex.

Gender is totally a social construct, which means that you could be male sex (have penis) but a female gender (feel like a woman). To feel like a woman you must then identify as the archetype of the people who commonly have vaginas. In order for that archetype to even exist and own the name "female" as a gender, however, it basically needs to be assumed that while gender is a social construct, the construct itself is so well ingrained in society that the female gender will always correlate to the typical behaviors of those who have vaginas, even though they are completely unlinked qualities.

But gender doesn't actually indicate sexual preference. You can be a sex-female gender-male who likes men, so the gender doesn't indicate sexual preference, so why we used sexes as basis for the archetype actually makes no sense, since sexual preference tends to be the point of sexual dimorphism in the first place.

So why don't they just say that instead of gender, you have hobby clubs? I'm a sex-male, but I enjoy knitting, which people with vaginas tend to do. I also enjoy having sex with women, but that isn't a core component of gender, so it's unrelated, therefore I must be gender female- unless, of course you could better describe me as gender-knitter. As it does just as much (if not more) to describe precisely what traits I am to derive from a gender unlinked to my sex with no bearing on sexual preference.

If I'm sex-male with heterosexual preferences, but I identify as gender female, what data have I actually gained by defining my gender outside the norm? I cannot link my sexual orientation to my gender, and I cannot link my physical qualities to my gender. The only thing left to include would be hobbies? Or perhaps a predilection to cry often?

When you believe in this nonsense while simultaneously believing that the genders are equal and therefore crying isn't an inherently male or female thing to do, then you take away any wind the gender construct's sails have, and what you've got are meaningless words.

You can't just use the children as an excuse to ruin a man's life. The fact is, a woman who knowingly brings a

The term "entitled" is just another thought terminating cliché. It presupposes to know what's in the hearts of others and then criticizes them for it. Much like misogyny, only those experiencing such preferences or emotions are at liberty to decide if they would describe themselves that way. It is not up to others to know if I hate women or if I feel entitled to anything. If I do, that's for me to say, and nobody else.

NOW Calls on The Wall Street Journal to Fire James Taranto: Taranto Believes Drunk Sexual Assault Victims are Equally to Blame

In his Monday Wall Street Journal column, James Taranto stated that in sexual assault cases where both the victim and rapist are drunk -- both parties are equally to blame for the attack.

James Taranto doesn't need a national platform for demeaning women and condoning rape. He has demonstrated how out of touch he is; now he needs to be out of a job.

What did he say?

Winerip notes that between 2005 and 2010, "more than 60 percent of claims involving sexual violence handled by United Educators"--an insurance company owned by member schools--"involved young women who were so drunk they had no clear memory of the assault." We know from Sgt. Cournoyer that the accused young men typically are drinking to excess, too. What is called the problem of "sexual assault" on campus is in large part a problem of reckless alcohol consumption, by men and women alike. (Based on our reporting, the same is true in the military, at least in the enlisted and company-grade officer ranks.)

Which points to a limitation of the drunk-driving analogy. If two drunk drivers are in a collision, one doesn't determine fault on the basis of demographic details such as each driver's sex. But when two drunken college students "collide," the male one is almost always presumed to be at fault. His diminished capacity owing to alcohol is not a mitigating factor, but her diminished capacity is an aggravating factor for him.

It appears a major feminist organization is leading a war against men, and redefining rape to hurt men. I will not agree that feminism isn't endangering society.

TRP has advocated not taking women seriously over anything they say, including LTR, rape, experiencing gender-based discrimination, and so on. It goes far beyond just advice about approaching women. Again, a core tenant of TRP is dismissing women and their opinions and experiences, which includes the dynamics of courtship.

In the context of trying to gain their attraction. If your boss at work is a woman, I don't think anybody is suggesting to ignore them.

You believe TRP is truth, and that you know what women want better than they do.

I am capable of observing how women act, and I believe that to be the truth. When a woman says I want X but then only goes after Y, you realize to watch what she does, not what she says.

So you're new to the Red Pill & think that we hate women? Think again...

9 upvotes · 11 December 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Really, the way I see it is femininity, at least for our purposes here, refers to traits and behaviors that distinguish women from men. Similarly, masculinity refers to traits and behaviors that distinguish men from women.

So it's kinda subjective, but I think there's a collective and perhaps cultural component to it, for instance, our group tends to find more traditionally feminine traits attractive, and I think the traditional traits mirror their biology more closely than others.

For instance, I prefer women who aren't overly muscular. Since men are typically more muscular than women, it's not a far throw to assume that this preference is likely instinctual, as evidenced by evolution's preference for less muscular women.

Now some stuff is admittedly subjective and hard to say where it came from, and we all disagree on specifics.. but most of us have reached a consensus that aggressive, arrogant or dominating personalities are basically turn-offs and it's something we see feminism promotes greatly.

It's not really about intrinsic values, but about their value in certain contexts and to certain people.

So you're new to the Red Pill & think that we hate women? Think again...

This isn't anything new. Every couple of days somebody who thinks their preferences define what's acceptable content gets their panties in a bunch because of some content supposedly driving the sub downhill. Men's rights is a segment of the red pill and always will be. We obviously have a more unique approach to these issues, whereas the actual men's rights sub would rather bitch and moan and ineffectively attempt to change laws, we are focused on real life strategies and decision making. Men's rights will continue to be acceptable content on this point, since the men's rights sub is hardly a substitute for quality discussion.

As always, we have anticipated your complaint and have spent countless hours categorizing posts so if you don't like particular content you can simply filter it out and go about your reading. Please do use the filter links at the top to see the content you prefer, and do not concern troll. Thanks.

It could be pulled off if you're cocky enough doing so, but making your opener a compliment isn't a great way to start if you're not good at pickup. I would still recommend avoiding direct compliments. Girls already know they're pretty.

Edit: You could use "we should have sex" as a direct game opener and I think I'd have a higher success rate with it.

Female Solipsism: Older Married Woman asks AskMen Why Dating is Hard

9 upvotes · 4 September 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Original Text:

This is more of a PSA than an actual question. I see so many posts here and elsewhere from men who beat themselves up because they think they have some flaw like being short or having a small penis that makes them unattractive to the other sex.

It makes me sad that so many wonderful guys beat themselves up like that. I am attached, not looking just to make that clear. I also want to share some rules of attraction from an average woman who isn't completely crazy ;) and isn't shallow or a gold digger.

The first guy I kissed was 5' 4" and I was 5' 7" at the time. He was quite a ladies man too. It was high school so can't give you any pointers about that. I was naïve and had that intense crush thing going on. I never even once thought about his height until much later in life.

My ex had a small penis. It was probably 4 ½ " fully erect. When flaccid it would actually curl up and withdraw to the point of looking like a nubbin of skin wrinkle. I never cared. He is an ex because he treated me like garbage and I finally grew up enough to realize I deserved better. I never once cared about his penis. My ex was also pretty unattractive and below my "league". I never knew until much later.

After him I dated a guy purely based on spite for my ex and raw physical attraction. He was a blue eyed ginger. (my favorite) He was 6' 2", was 240 lb of raw sinew and muscle, zero fat. He had like 20" + biceps and could bench press more than I thought possible. He was also dumb as a box of rocks, vain and had a personality that resembles a dial tone. His appeal wore off quickly, very quickly.

Down the road I found a new job. At first glance my boss was meh... He was also married so that would have killed any cute factor anyway. He was probably 5'5" and very balding. We became good friends (nothing happened, ever) and eventually once I got to know him he became incredibly sexy. He was bright, had that dark distant tortured soul thing going on and was well traveled. I'm almost 40 and have to say that he is still in the top 10 of the sexiest men I have ever known. It must have been his level of intensity.

My current husband is the poster child for the nerdy type that gets overlooked by women. When I first saw him I thought...ewww. He isn't very tall, has noticeably large ears, a receding hairline, imperfect teeth, was wearing the dorkiest glasses possible and was painfully shy. Today when I look at him I see an incredibly handsome man, I mean that sincerely. I still steal glances at him and have dirty thoughts. Somewhere between first glance and today I got to know him. He is the single most intelligent person I have ever met, freakishly brilliant. The sexiest thing about him is that he challenges me and keeps me engaged. He also has hundreds of other wonderful qualities. I couldn't ask for more. I am genuinely happy and proud to be with him and seen in public with him.

My husband was also dirt poor when I met him. He had a hard work ethic and a dream. Today, 7 years after we met, with some feminine encouragement, he saw something in himself, expected more and makes over 3 times his original salary.

Just the other day I asked a clerk at a major book retailer a question about something. He was below average height and easily 50 to 100 lbs. overweight. The kind of guy that not only doesn't get a second glance but much worse, the kind that is invisible IYKWIM. Within 5 minutes of talking to him I could have turned into a stalker if I weren't married already. This guy had such a brightness behind his eyes, was passionate when he spoke and just had an indescribable charisma. There are a lot of incredibly attractive corn fed farmboys where I live. They all have perfect teeth, hair and chiseled faces with thick muscular 6' 4" frames. In spite of herds of eye candy week in and week out this short obese guy is one of the sexiest men I have encountered in years.

Moral of the story, don't judge your own book by the cover. The RIGHT kind of woman will be attracted to you. Any bitch that judges you on a first impression is doing you a favor by removing herself from your life.

Every man on here has something wonderful about him even if he doesn't see it.

but isn't voting pretty much the point of reddit?

And therein lies the issue I have with the admin here. The rules are inconsistent, and from what I can figure, serve no purpose but to give them a plausible excuse to do away with anybody they don't like.

Yes, the point of reddit is discussion and voting. And they're trying to out-law certain types of that without any clear boundaries of what defines this.

So, I messaged the admin and asked, "for the sake of my community, can you clarify the rules that might get our users banned or community in trouble?"

The short, curt non-answer I got was: "Follow the rules, that's pretty clear."

Things couldn't be less clear.

the second guy is going to wonder why the price for sex went up. What you have to do is have a reason, be able to let them know that the price went up because now you are of higher value.

This is very true. I have walked because a girl who was previously very promiscuous (and proud of it) decided it was now time to settle down.

She said to me "the days of hookups are over for me, I need commitment."

She literally wouldn't have sex with me unless I committed to her. Needless to say we didn't have sex, and I walked.

She asked me why, and I just told her, "because you're charging me for something you've been giving away freely. I'm not an idiot."

She's post-wall age but still looks good for her age. She's really depressed that she can't find anybody who will commit, but she's still quite disillusioned by the fact that she gets so much male attention.

the long term goal isn't (or at least shouldn't be) to just have sex with girls.

Speak for yourself. While I don't judge MGTOW or people in relationships for the choices they make after taking the pill, the personal decision to just have sex with girls is just that- a decision.

I'd argue that after taking the red pill, there's a value/risk assesment that must be made.

Some men see the risk too high and the value too low. They become MGTOW.

Some men see sex with girls value giving, but anything further too risky. To them, I say, congrats on your restraint.

Some men see a harem as the perfect balance of value/risk. One could even describe this as a loving setup minizing risk.

You decided marriage was of high value and low enough risk. I disagree that the risk is worth it. Most people here do. But as long as you make an informed decision- it is your choice.

9 upvotes · 25 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

A one track mind I see.

Read my last line "There is the basic building block of game."

This is proof that game can be effective, not the total description of game. Game also includes counter-balancing women with ridiculous egos, learning to deal with shit tests, and dealing with self doubt.

So what I call basic common sense in interacting with any human being you call game?

No. The reason I picked a "common sense" item was to demonstrate using a common language we can both agree with. It's obvious, so obvious, you'd say it's self-evident. Once we agree on the self evident truth, you can build on that.

Hence really the advice 'be yourself' and 'talk to them like another human being.' does work wouldn't you agree?

Take one look at /r/creepypms and tell me that "be yourself" is working.

As someone who studied lots of science I disagree with that characterisation.

I just go the sense that the OP was writing this for women, in order to prove to them that he's smart and logical and rational (all great things btw). Not literally as he's posting it here obviously, but almost by proxy.

But why?

Seems like a huge circle-jerk to me.

There's a lot of good stuff in this sub-reddit but I question this kind of self-congratulatory behaviour.

Out there in the real world this won't get you anywhere, IMO.

Ok, time for you.

"Does it feel good to show women how smart you are? That's what you get out it right? You don't think you're actually changing anyone's mind?"

To represent these questions as anything but disingenuous, patronizing, and condescending rhetorical questions is dishonest and passive aggressive.

You lack intellectual rigor. I can point this out using supplicating evidence like this: Not one of your three questions directly addresses the points in my letter, but instead serve the purpose of attacking the character and nature of the author. That's what we call ad hominem.

See how I supported my argument? That's how we intellectuals debate.

But instead, you go the passive aggressive route. What do I mean by that?

You ask three condescending questions which serve no purpose other than attempt to shame the author (me) for having put forth effort, dismissing the article as a waste, even as a work of ego- and then when called on it, you use plausible deniability to defend yourself.

- "Oh no, man, I really just wanted to know if writing this makes you feel good.. cause, I'm like.. looking for ways to feel good and was considering doing it myself!"*

Of course, we know that's not true, which is why we know you're being passive aggressive. This wasn't an honest question, it was pointed and rhetorical.

Seems like a huge circle-jerk to me.

If I had a dollar every time I dismissed the "circle-jerk" argument, I'd be a rich man.

In any forum which focuses on a small subset of topics, you will indeed have a concentration of those topics.

To dismiss an argument because it's on topic is by far the stupidest fallacious argument I've ever heard. Too many people talking about something, therefore it must be dismissed?

Of course, you've got zero interest in intellectual debate, or you'd have made assertions and contributed supplicating points and arguments to support your assertions. Instead you've just come here and typed your knee-jerk emotional reaction which has literally zero logical basis and is indefensible because it doesn't even address the points.

Notice your entire reframe of the discussion, instead of speaking about the merits of feminism, or objectification theory, you derail conversation into useless rhetoric and emotionally-driven drivel about circle-jerking. You, sir, are a troll, and a shameful one at that.

Luckily, I am fucking brilliant and can outpace your brain like rocket ship carrying Jesus Christ passing right over a pile of shit. That's an analogy, son. You see, I'm fast and righteous and you're a pile of shit.

Why do men need better jobs? To sustain a family, to produce more than they consume.

If men no longer want to get married, there's no need for better jobs.

If men no longer see value in marriage because they lose all their money in divorce, men will stop marrying.

"Women need no fault divorce to avoid the horrible fate of being trapped in marriage"

That one really gets me.

Though they'd like you to think the reason women are trapped and not men, is because men have money and jobs and they can leave whenever they want.

But I think we know better.

Very public and obvious example of the feminine imperative in action.

Women's sexual partners

9 upvotes · 18 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I find girls with higher counts tend to act more like men. They become more brazen in their interactions, care less about femininity, they're have more manly behaviors that they don't care about, and they're often bitchier because they think they've learned a lot and are more experienced.

It's strange this faux wisdom they think they gain from having many sexual partners. It's like they see older gentlemen who have lots of sex and they assume if they have lots of sex, they get all the other qualities too.

The sluttiest chicks are usually the worst to be around. And because they're so certain of their attractiveness because a few years ago they scored with a hot guy, they have the highest and least realistic expectations. Nothing down to earth about them.

Avoid them.

This is why I rarely date older than 20, 21 is the drinking age and once they get to a bar, they begin this bitch transformation.

Creeps are typically defined as anybody who causes mild discomfort in a woman.

The trope that there are guys who think they are "entitled" to girls or sex is a common one I hear women use, but I think misses the mark entirely.

No guy feels entitled. Guys want sex. They don't expect it. They want it.

I suppose you could say that the guy who really feels entitled just takes it. But that'd be a rapist.

I agree that no topic is out-of-bounds in the redpill. There are ugly truths that need to be found, and that can only be done so by discarding the thin veil of political correctness.

That said, it's important to make a distinction between racism and sexism.

Race is a subgroup of different genetic makeups that occur when a group of people become isolated from other people. Mutations in genes during evolution is bound to go in different directions, and when different groups of people never co-mingle, you wouldn't find those mutations to homogenize, thus races.

Now consider the development of the human mind. There are unconscious bits that trigger emotional reactions. We lovingly refer to it as our lizard brain, but basically it's a left-over from before we were cognizant. As we evolved, more bits were added on. We eventually were able to think abstractly, to use tools, to communicate using language. Understand that these are very late additions in the totality of our evolution (i.e. homo sapien vs the entire chain of evolution.. from when we were, say, lizards!)

Now the part that's important is this: Our brains evolved over a much longer period of time with gender differences and gender roles than during the time that races evolved. Gender differences and gender psychology is a very deep and well ingrained programming in us as a species.

Race, while somewhat genetically diverse, is for the most part superficial. There are differences, of course, some of the most obvious being skin color, bone structure, and so on. And yes, there are behavioral differences. This is to be expected when a subset of humans become isolated over enough generations.

But the differences between races is minuscule compared to the evolved differences between the genders. It's VERY important to note that a lot of racial observations are wrong. Or at least understanding the order of causal links.

There is a difference between being black and black culture. The only reason we have a "black culture" is because the culture itself exists and comes from black people. But it is not because they are black that their culture exists.

Because of this, I'm going to say that we will not tolerate racism on this subreddit. We will absolutely encourage talk about different cultures and their effects. I have no problem with scientifically bounded talk about genetic differences between races. But you're going to find less information about behavioral differences and more about natural immunities (say a group of people are immune to aids, this exists because of their genetic diversity).

But talk like "a white woman deserves what she gets if she hangs out with a black guy" is just plainly racist. I'm happy if you say "a girl deserves what she gets if she hangs out with ghetto folk." There is a distinction, because there are plenty of terrible white guys, and being black does not make you part of that culture.

For the record, on this note I don't really consider us sexists nor misogynists.

Need some redpill advice.

A true cold shower

9 upvotes · 14 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

But I do know if it were true it would make me sad. I have been raised with values which place men and women on equal footing. Loving a woman and being loved in return is a concept I deemed my right, and something which was only acquired through honesty and emotional submission.

It can be hard at first to realize it.

Often, people give us a lot of resistance because it seems like we're anti-love. But truthfully, I love love. I miss love. At least I miss what I understood was love.

But no amount of pining over something that doesn't exist will help. I hope you read the side bar, the psots "Women in Love," "Men in love," and "Of love and war" are crucial reading.

Do you enjoy treating women as children?

It's not exactly as though I treat women as I would children. I don't send them to bed, nor do I pick out their dinners for them. It's that I have to discipline their outbursts with negative re-enforcement, and give them positive when they do something good.

Sometimes women will act out (whereas a man will just approach you and say, "hey bro, is there a problem?"). Women won't do that, women will act out a scene when they think something is wrong.

By not putting up with their temper tantrum, you are establishing that communication is ok, but not like that. This is basically what we call shit-testing. I won't go into it more here, there's plenty written about shit tests elsewhere.

Is it not a pain always being in command, always controlling?

It's not as comforting knowing that you can never be vulnerable. But you do learn to accept that. You learn that you are the man and it's your job.

I don't consider myself controlling. I consider it being direct. If I want my current squeeze to sit next to me, I grab her by the waist and place her next to me. It's not controlling, she likes it in fact.

Is that pain (if you experience it at all) worth the rewards?

Opposed to being beta? Yes.

and MOST importantly: is there a way to compromise? Treat them partly as they want to be treated, and partly as you want to treat them? What is your take on this, redpill community?

I think this is where you're a little off. The red pill way to treat them is the way they want to be treated. They just won't spell it out for you. They don't really understand it. They just know what makes their vaginas tingle (and what doesn't).

Scorekeeping the Chores, and the Dumb Shit I Used to Do

8 upvotes · 21 May 2025 · /r/TheRedPill

This is a reply to both you and /u/KapiteinPiet

I get the critique, and honestly, that's part of the point. The nuance here is subtle, which is exactly why guys like me overshot it in the first place.

What I'm describing isn't some clever reframing of choreplay. It's just dead stupid normal adult behavior that I got ego-invested in not doing. I wasn't above it, I was performing in reverse. I had convinced myself that not doing basic adult stuff was somehow holding frame, when really I was still playing to the same scoreboard that choreplay guys are using, just from the other side. They overperform hoping for sex; I underperformed hoping for status. Same covert contract, different costume.

Of course she's not getting wet from the chores. That's the point. If you're doing it for points or praise, because she has to ask you or on her timetable, you've already lost. If you're doing it because it reflects how you run your life, whether she's there or not, you're showing leadership and stability. You're not asking her to be your mom or trying to earn intimacy through merit badges. You're just owning your space.

And no, this isn't a free pass for her to get lazy either. My mental model is simple: I act how I would if I lived alone. I want a clean, functional space, so I take care of it. And fortunately, she's solid. She does her share. But if she ever stopped contributing, that's not something I tolerate long-term. There's no guarantee of future association. I'm not beholden or bargaining, I'm choosing.

This isn't about rationalizing chores. It's about not being a reactive man-child. You stop keeping score, not because you're submitting, but because you're done playing stupid games entirely.

If you read the post in question, it's quite clear that his intention was to upset normies and spark.. basically this reaction. Given my role in the fight for free speech, it's a great way for me to test who is pro/anti-free speech.

You see, speech that everybody agrees with doesn't need protection. The only way to test free speech is to use speech that you know people won't like. And that post, well, that's a whopper. It's a litmus test for people who get free speech as an ideal, and people who are still stuck on the authoritarian censorship train.

second I wouldn't say the Manosphere is flourishing.

There seems to be a pattern.

First there was a great growing of TRP with forbidden topics and huge growth from the discussion, then there was censorship and simultaneously a watering down of the idea as different groups co-opt the message to fit inside the overton window.

The next move are smaller but more numerous groups with more distilled ideas. For instance, your telegram. Trp.red. etc.

Ultimately the powers that be are concerned with fragmenting communities. What we do with that is up to us.

8 upvotes · 21 August 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

And finally, does today's cultural climate allow for this father to exist?

Not really a "father" issue, but generally a "man" issue.

The reason I pose the question is that there are a lot of forces at play here, some worse than others. In-laws and relatives may have their own feelings on family structure, constantly trying to undermine you. But also, the legal system. Preventing you from physical discipline of your child- or even women using the legal system against you if they decide they don't like the decisions you make as head of the family.

The reason there's a head of the family is because hard decisions need to get made. If they were easy, nobody would disagree on them. But since they're hard and there's disagreement, women remember threatpoint and can use it against you the minute they think they know better.

It's years of TV and family whispering into her ear. You don't see it coming because for the first few years of parenthood, you didn't have that hard decision to make. Suddenly, when push comes to shove, they remember all the stuff they were poisoned with. Your power is now neutered.

It's a strange dichotomy in the manosphere right now. I personally still follow Rollo and find a lot of value in what he writes as a basic framework. But I don't think things are nearly as absolute as he makes them out to be.

I think that once you've managed to get a good amount of red pill knowledge under your belt, there's no reason why you shouldn't consider long term relationships and try to cultivate some of the things you couldn't do spinning plates.

I keep in mind the old "awalt" and Briffault's law, but they don't play a large role in the day-to-day. And I certainly don't expect to always be on the verge of losing everything the way Rollo would describe.

I think there are really two categories for MGTOW- Guys who went through it all and have been through the wringer and have nothing left to give. Those are the guys paying alimony and child support and struggle just to see their kids enough. I don't blame them for checking out of the system.

But there's another group- they don't call themselves MGTOW anymore, they call themselves incels and brag about it. They haven't gotten laid, they stopped trying and they assume they could never so why bother. It's not that they feel Rollo's predictions would most certainly come true so why bother, it's that they've never experienced the intoxication of the mating game to begin with, and so let's play video games and talk about how ugly we are.

We're hard on the incel crowd because they're defeatist and don't try to improve. But part of me realizes that with the state of the sexual market today there will have to be losers to some degree. My only solace is the fact that if you're driven enough to seek out this information, you're probably not so far gone that you couldn't take the advice and move up in life.

But I guess not everybody has the same drive for success.

I got banned for my previous comment (the one before this one in my history) being "trolling" because I said Red Pill is imposing our will on females. Thankfully redpillschool is a good guy and reviewed my case. I think we all know what actually caused one of the mods to drop the hammer from that comment.

Misogyny Alert: Men's Brains Are Significantly Larger Than Women's Brains

8 upvotes · 11 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Where am I trying to preserve the notion of equality? I explicitly said that this results in differences between areas of the brain.

Ask yourself this question:

When presented with some simple facts like men's brains are larger than women's and that men make up larger percentages of higher IQ individuals... why do you feel the need to rush to women's defense?

What gave you that urge?

Let's try some tests. Let's see how you react to the following statements:

- Black people are better at both basketball and football than white people.
- Women are better at birthing babies than men: Not one single male human has birthed one yet.
- The average cheetah has measurably higher intelligence and stamina than North American wolves.

I think that your post is of low quality. You only posted some link to an article that is about this topic and had some clickbaity title.

Fascinating. For somebody who has supposedly read the sidebar, you missed the second link:

I'm not necessarily addressing your version of compassion, or disagreeing with you. I'm arguing against the endgame and methods our culture has taken in their attempt at "compassion," and why I'm so resistant.

If the general population's response to someone having cancer was to punch them in the face, that would be reprehensible.

Not interacting with a trans person and not dating them isn't punching them in the face. I don't even need to talk to them if they don't want.

But if they come at me and demand I start lying on their behalf or there will be legal penalties. Well, society has failed.

Same with depression. You don't help people with mental illnesses by mocking them and making jokes about them. I'm not asking you to go out of your way to do anything. For the reference, my goal isn't to blend trp with a political movement.

My ultimate goal right now is to empower and enable men to coordinate with each other to build their own networks and power, and to succeed in ways that our culture is trying to discourage / disable.

Though I do touch on politics, it's not, to say, join a political movement, nor is it to encourage us to rally behind social changes.

It's to be used as an example for why personal growth and personal change is necessary in light of our political climate.

We can't ignore our culture in our paths to personal success.

We also can't ignore our need for networks of men in our own lives. Both for social fulfillment, but also for the economic strength networks of men can build.

TRP is a collection of people who choose to open their eyes. This is a unique self-selection. You will find no better place to connect and network with men. And when you do, what you can build will be so much larger and greater than anything an individual can do.

And that is what makes men great.

The Monetization of the Manosphere

8 upvotes · 28 November 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

The natural progression from figuring out how to gain self respect and to get laid is to get money. Many of those who follow this path will destroy TRP from the inside. Here, it is a closed area, on twitter, there is nothing we can do. The only thing that occurs to me to influence this in any way is to not follow and engage in those fake TRP guys who appeal to the masses with PurplePill nonsense.

I think the trick is to work with other men to make money in our society. Not work individually to make money off the other men.

That is where the manosphere marketers are going wrong.

I am good friends with a network of men abused by the family courts. This is literally their solution to it.

We have built the damned world with the model we have, one man and one woman and the labor and kids they produce, and 50 years of memories once you get close to death.

I know it kinda sucks, thinking that we're willfully walking away from our culture, economy be damned. But you don't beat the dog until it becomes vicious and hope to train it again.

Becoming Very Confused as to What it Even Means to be a Red Pill Woman?

8 upvotes · 1 May 2016 · /r/RedPillWomen

So anything women choose to do is a Red Pill strategy now?

I think you're confusing the phrase red pill with "good."

The Red Pill refers to seeing reality for what it is. If you swallow the red pill, that means you accept this reality. That means if you decide to jump on the CC and catch BB at 30, you understand it's a shit strategy for long term happiness, as reality dictates.

What you do is up to you. But if you take a sub optimal route, you can't say we didn't warn you.

About Whisper's post, was he banned from RPW for criticizing RPW in the askTRP sub, or did he also comment something here?

My understanding of the timeline of events, is that he started being critical on askTRP after having the dispute with RPW mods and being banned. I suspect he lost his faith in what this sub could achieve. I would love /u/whisper to come comment on this if he can.

Also, I would welcome more open discussion. The only way to improve is to continually challenge your beliefs. I don't mean that we have to argue the fundamentals over and over again, but it would be productive, for instance, if we could discuss some alternatives to the Captain/First mate dynamic without fear of being banned.

I agree with this wholeheartedly, feel free to speak freely.

I also hope that we can speak more openly about being selfish. We are selfish creatures. We are here to satisfy our female imperative. I disliked how this was brushed under the rug as "My happiness comes from making my husband happy!". I never believed this, and I'd rather just be honest about it.

I prefer real talk over comfortable lies. I'd love to hear more about what you're saying here.

Exactly. It has to remain covert. Ultimatums are just another form of trying to negotiate attraction.

That said, subtle ultimatums do have a place in a proper relationship, but from a different perspective. It should not be deployed to achieve or try to regain attraction, but it should be used for discipline.

For instance, when your girl acts out or throws a shit test, you can say calmly that you won't be tolerating that behavior. That's an implied ultimatum. But this isn't negotiating attraction, this is the other side of the coin. You know your value and you are enforcing it.

8 upvotes · 14 April 2015 · /r/MensRights

This is how feminists control the message of groups they oppose. First they try to curb the speech to appease them- to be more socially acceptable and friendly to the masses. I don't think you need to look elsewhere. This is something I've witnessed with all women. Sometimes I will genuinely jam up their minds.

I tend to be a fast talker, and I build quick logical constructions easily. When demonstrating why a certain behavior will not be tolerated, I can often reason very quickly to the point where they don't respond-

I'll ask "do you understand what I'm saying?" and I'll get the lack of response.

One thing I've done in the past is hold her hand and keep going with the full lecture. She'll eventually come back to earth and I'll ask her if she understands. It's a firm but friendly approach.

Traditionally married women with a few respectful questions about TRP.

8 upvotes · 18 August 2014 · /r/RedPillWomen

One reason TRP might scare a relationship-minded woman (such as yourself) is that a lot of our strategies revolve around promiscuity and avoiding commitment to women. And we do speak disparagingly about our options for mates. The reality is, the well-groomed husband of yesteryear is being shit on wholesale by women and society. You just can't expect men to take it for very long.

The guys there, including myself, all had the fantasy of a long life with the perfect wife, family and kids. It was forcibly torn from our hands by reality and feminism, and from what I can see, there's no bringing it back... The cat's out of the bag, so to speak. The damage is done. The gears are in motion now, we just get to sit back and watch the gender war play out now. I suspect this is the future of any civilization that eventually experiences prosperity in excess.

My two cents.

Conference for men will have to hire police protection, organizer says

8 upvotes · 3 June 2014 · /r/MensRights

Because when two or more men gather together, only bad conversations can take place. This is the pervasive misogyny that they've been trying to stamp out.

For instance- is the issue of criminal sentencing going to come up? Any discussion about how women get lighter sentences than men? The fact that this conversation may even take place is misogyny, and here's why:

Two guys get together and start talking. Both have had experiences being removed from their homes and families because of an abusive ex-wife. They talk about how women get lighter sentencing and how men are considered the aggressor in these situations regardless of truth.

One guy looks at the other and goes- "well with that sort of blank check, it's no wonder that women are abusing this system. There's no consequence for doing so.."

They both chuckle at the ridiculousness of it, and have a small laugh at their decision to "stay away from women altogether if they know what's good for them." They say this mostly in jest, since both have new girlfriends.

MISOGYNY ALERT!!

What this person did:

- Commented on female behavior. This is not for males to discuss, critique or criticize.
- Did not use qualifier "some" in generalization, clearly meaning this man thinks ALL women abuse the system.
- Made an unqualified joke that could be overheard by others and understood as misogyny. Nobody swears off women without hating the entire gender literally for having boobs.
- Spoke in a vernacular most commonly understood and used by men, leaving out qualifiers that keep over-sensitive people from interpreting them all wrong, since nobody else was listening.
- Jokes these men shared are a sign of the burgeoning misogyny threat. They display a deep-seated anger that only cold-blooded killers can have.

As you can see, this is how it happens- the misinterpretation.

Doing it for yourself, the pervasive hamster

8 upvotes · 21 April 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

So basically telling somebody to do it for himself isn't that wrong.

Part of the disconnect here on TRP is that some of the platitudes are useful to an extent. Not caring at first is a great way to falsely boost confidence until you've got it. Gotta fake it till you make it.

But I still feel that these platitudes are mostly detrimental, and belong in seddit. I think being honest with yourself and persevering is more useful than lying to yourself to get a desired goal.

I completely disagree about the morals though. There is of course a good and a bad way. The light side and the dark side. You can either choose to always act selfish and create win-lose situations or you can create win-win situations.

Choosing dark enlightenment doesn't require you to shortsightedly choose short term success to the detriment of your long term success. Just because it's dark doesn't make it more greedy, it's just more honest about the greed.

On reading comprehension and literal interpretations

8 upvotes · 26 March 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

After watching my argument get twisted, misconstrued, and mangled entirely by blue pillers, it was impossible not to believe they were not debating honestly, but instead trolling.

As was pointed out elsewhere in this thread by whisper-

Someone who assumes you are sane, tries to understand your argument in the most compelling interpretation he can, and then tries to refute it, is a debater.

Someone who assumes you are insane, or tries to find weak interpretations of your arguments that will be easy to refute, or reifies metaphors, is a troll.

Now, obviously after a month or so, I did give up and the quality of my contributions went downwards, but look at it from my perspective- I was regularly confronted, no, inundated, by trolls using method two here, finding weak interpretations of my arguments or outright misrepresenting them, and they hid under the guise of honest debate because they were "just asking a question" and if I called them out on it- it was me that would be chastised. The rules were that we couldn't accuse each other of debating dishonestly, but that's exactly what was taking place.

Alphabetmod even jumped in here and there to try to put the spousal rape topic to bed, but the willful misrepresentation of my position continued unhindered, the request was instead given to me to "let it drop" instead of what any normal person would do, defend themselves against such a ridiculous accusation.

The fact that your wet blanket mod team decided the best way to deal with this level of trolling was to tell me to just not interact with soulcake instead of outright ban and delete the fucking thing- that told me just how much effort to put in, and the signal was loud and clear to other red pillers.

The problem is that you have attempted to give a level playing field but you're not moderating a debate, instead you're taking a hands-off approach limited mostly to removing insults or very obvious pointed questions. In essence, you have a group with some theories that are being challenged, and a group with nothing better to do but troll the fuck out of everybody.

I have noticed the debates have gotten calmer more recently, and that's good for you, but this is in spite of your moderation team, not because of it.

Yeah there's a bit of an implied context to our text. For instance, it's pretty well accepted that our description of women here is strictly women of equal or higher sexual value to your own. In fact, a man who's a 7 could see a woman who is a 5 acting completely differently than a man who is a 4 would see of the same woman.

That's what utterly confuses other people- thinking "well things don't look that way to me.."

Quick Nitpickery: Attraction vs. Arousal

8 upvotes · 17 January 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Beta game isn't strictly attraction, but I really like where you're going with this.

Maybe we need more granular terms or descriptors, because I see this spectrum:

1. Pushover, submissive men who lose women's respect and women hate them. We usually call this beta, and many providers fit the bill, but surely women are not attracted to this, let alone aroused.
2. Men who provide, or go out of their way to be romantic, but are not pushovers. Women will eventually look for this sort of man at one point in their dual mating strategy. This man, absent alpha qualities, will be passed over or cuckolded if a sufficient alpha comes into play.
3. Men who are a perfect combo of alpha cockiness, confidence, looks to invoke arousal, but also satiate the needs of a woman to be provided for.
4. Men who are purely alpha, want to fuck but won't pay for dinner. If you get pregnant, good luck chasing him down to be a father. He won't remember your birthday, but holy shit vagina tingles. Women will fuck this man, and try to lock him down. When they fail at this, they will settle for anybody 1-3 by the time they're 40.

This is how feminism works, with censorship. It's a slippery slope.

First they say, "surely we can remove this content, we all agree it's offensive?" and we comply because it's not a ridiculous request. Then they do it again, and slowly chisel away at what is being discussed until their version of politically correct becomes our standard.

It's not about return of kings, and it has nothing to do with how extreme soft harem or I are, it has to do with not kowtowing to the demands of those who deem something offensive.

dismissing female experiences and opinions

We dismiss female opinions on how men should approach women because we see that women don't actually respond to their own advice. But beyond that we don't dismiss female experiences- in fact, we acknowledge that the only way to succeed is to cater to it.

What makes you think your perspective is any more valid and righteous than women's?

I just don't like the Isn't something we care to help with. Sometimes our topics aren't very friendly.

fact that this community puts themselves above women and acts enlightened in a sense.

Then I just don't think you understand what we're doing here.

that "enlightened" attitude that follows is just oversimplifying complex gender roles.

At the end of the day, everybody takes mental short cuts to take actions. Let's say you approach a girl at a bar. You think, most people like humor, but you truly do not know every detail of her life. Nor could you. Even if you lived with her for years there are details we simply cannot know. So we build a model that gives us probabilistic information about how people tend to act and react. Perhaps some women don't like humor, but I don't know that until I approach them and try. So, I use my model to give me a more reliably predictable result.

Of course, some of the relationship dynamics we discuss are more in depth than that, and go far deeper than initial interactions, but ultimately we found that our previous models weren't giving us reliably predictable results and couldn't figure it out. Left to common-knowledge or what mothers taught sons, it almost seemed as if women were random mysteries, never to be understood. And you know, I think women take advantage of that.

But we consider our probabilistic models to be far more accurate. And the proof is in the pudding. A lot of guys reported more success after adopting these models.

So you might not like it, but that really doesn't have any bearing on our process of how and why we've developed and adopted certain models. And while things may seem politically incorrect to you, think about this for a second:

How much of our theory are you allowed to consider, test, or reason through if you're blinded by "but that seems wrong" or "but everybody is special." At the end of the day, these are thought terminating cliches, designed to keep you from really considering what we're saying here.

If you honestly think women can't be leaders, independent, or competitive without cutting their hair short and growing a mustache then you're seriously shortsighted.

Nobody's saying this. What we're saying is that there are certain traits or decisions women make and assume they'll still be attractive, but they aren't. We embrace that as men, this isn't true. If I sit on the couch, get fat, and work at a pizza place, my prospects are slim. Women are doing something different. Their value is largely in looks, and when they approach life the way a prudent man does- wastes her twenties on a career, she finds herself alone at 35 with her career figured out, and no guys who will marry her (or no guys that meet her ridiculous criteria).

Just google "where have all the good men gone" to realize it's an epidemic. Look at marriage rates. Women are waiting until older and older to get married. It's in the US census data, don't take my word for it.

The problem is assuming that my comment on women making bad decisions is somehow a judgement that women are worse than men. Because feminist culture group-think has programmed you to assume anything we say as critical towards women is suspect, and must be based in hatred or misogyny.

So you're new to the Red Pill & think that we hate women? Think again...

Red pillers: do any of you want to grow old with a woman?

8 upvotes · 9 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I always thought I'd get married and have a family.

Then I watched every single one of my friends end up divorced, most of them against their will.

Originally I asked how marriage got so broken, but eventually I started wondering how it even worked in the first place. Seems to me the high divorce rate really mirrors more accurately normal human behavior, and that life long commitments are the rarity.

So I ask myself, is this a realistic goal? Seems like even if I were dedicated to a life-long commitment, I would have a hard time finding a woman with the same enthusiasm. That's if I even stuck with it. From what I can see, there's a high chance I'd become just as bored or unhappy as everybody else. Is that fair to my future wife?

The fact that "I'm not happy" is a common excuse for women divorcing men (and it really is majorly women doing it) tells us that they enjoy being attracted to you more than they are willing to commit despite attraction (i.e. loyalty & unconditional love).

Men can exhibit this, and frankly this really doesn't have to be gender exclusive. At the end of the day, we aren't studying male tendencies. You could probably make a very compelling argument that this is a human behavior if all else is made equal. But I'd say since there are less incentives (alimony goes overwhelmingly one way) for women to maintain commitments beyond how it feels to them, it's currently a majorly female problem.

First question:

I've seen you admit in several places that there are problems with the wording of your advice or that it could be misused, but what a lot of people are arguing is that the advice, even if used exactly how you intended it, is harmful. Are you willing to admit that?

It's a complex question fallacy (as in either answer endorses the presupposition that the advice is harmful). This wasn't a question, it was a demand for compliance. Feminine imperative takes no prisoners. And why should it? He already crumbled this far...

This is also why seddit had become such a hell hole, he failed the biggest shit test there is.

That's an apt analysis. The idea that a woman would be expected to do anything, regardless of the social context, just drives them nuts. In a relationship? You can't expect sex!

Which is why the spousal rape thing was such a controversy. Before 1972, marriage included consent to sex. Feminists hated the idea that they would be held to a commitment they made, they wanted to prerogative to change their minds at any time.

Leaving the question, can you consent to surrender bodily autonomy for a period of time?

The law and feminists say: No if you're a woman.

But, an enthusiastic YES if you're a man being drafted into the army.

TRP actually agrees with some of the core tenets of serious feminist philosophy: agency, autonomy, freedom to choose. THIS IS why it pissess off feminists so much.

Women desire to be taken consensually. There is an argument that the female psyche is well adept at coping with scenarios where they are forced into a new clan/raped. When an invading tribe killed all the men and took all the women, women historically had to learn to cope and survive.

So there's an argument for rape fantasies. But I don't think that means they desire to be raped. I just think it means they can emotionally cope with it when their husband dies and she gets taken.

How many comments does it take before any question on /r/askwomen turns into a post about how women are all victims of the "rape culture"?

Except rape has a definition (as much as feminists are trying to blur that definition): P in the V when they don't want it. Whereas misogyny is a completely subjective and meaningless term that holds only value in the eyes of those using it. There is no way to be objectively misogynist, but you sure can rape somebody.

If I do, I mean, good for me! But let's face it, it's very unlikely my strategy will net me a family.

8 Misconceptions of the "Alpha Male"

8 upvotes · 15 March 2013 · /r/seduction

That's a very bold statement, that you don't believe in the term alpha.

As you are aware, alpha is an abstract concept used to describe a certain selection of traits. Or maybe you're not aware.

Either way, alpha, as a concept is very much useful and having role models in your life that demonstrate "alpha" is a great way to learn.

You'll notice most airplane pilots don't learn by jumping in an airplane and learning as they go- they have training and simulators to get them ready.

I'm assuming you think "alpha" and "beta" are useless terms because we're complex animals and can't possible have evolutionarily programmed triggers, attractions, and emotions. That's an argument you'll have to take up with science, not seduction.

Beta traits are those which do not arouse female attraction. Alpha traits are those that do. You could call them "salt" and "pepper" for all I care, doesn't mean the evolutionary roots of psychology have somehow changed because you happen to think your luck on the field translates to other people just being lazy if they lack your success.

Not very helpful or constructive.

Woman Admits To “Alpha Fux, Beta Bux” Dating Strategy

8 upvotes · 14 March 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

If you've been around the manosphere, then you're familiar with the two different effects here:

Women used to marry young, giving their sexual innocence and best years in trade for security and provisions. Marrying at the highest point of their SMV gave them the best run for their money.

Now, women are using their SMV to fuck as much as possible until they decide to try to get married at the low point of their SMV.

Men, on the other hand would like to marry at a woman's high SMV. He cannot do so anymore until he maximizes his SMV (around 30-35).

Once a man maximizes his SMV, he will quickly find that women throw themselves at him. He no longer has a reason to settle down.

Two different things happening here, two different motivations. Very different outcomes and mechanisms.

"Weight loss attempts don't work"

Let's talk about this, because this is the causally broken bullshit I hear with dieting all the time.

Have you seen the reports that keep happening once or twice a year that say "diet soda does not help with weight loss" or "weight gain found among diet soda drinkers?"

Well you look at the facts- diet soda has no calories and has no direct effect on weight gain. Some of the studies concluded that people were either more likely to eat more because they thought diet soda would offset their calories, or some thought the insulin response was similar to sugar, causing people to be hungrier (and therefore eat more).

But at the end of the day, the mechanism by which diet soda supposedly made you fat was that the participants of the studies kept eating too much food.

So the study concluded that diet soda was the source of the problem.

That's the worst kind of science, because now we've got studies saying weight loss attempts don't work.

Let's break this down for a second.

Let's say 9 out of every 10 people who attempt a diet fall off the bandwagon within 1 month. If we measure weight loss among 100 people over 6 months, you'll have 90 people who didn't lose weight. (because they fell off the wagon.)

The conclusion that weight loss attempts don't work is errant and shoddy statistics. If we conclude that weight loss attempts don't work, then the natural course of action is to stop attempting.

But the truth is, the attempts are only 10% successful because some are not strong willed. The conclusion should be to try harder, not give up.

Two conclusions, one dataset. Shoddy statistics and bad reporting.

I'm assuming screencaps are an exception?

Images aren't outright banned, but if you want to post one, please do it in a text post along with your analysis.

No Direct Video Links.

The goal is to make the content easily accessible at a glance, and more in depth if you decide to dive deeper. The mods don't have a lot of time to dig through and watch every video and read every article. I usually skim each one that comes in to make sure it's not a troll post and then let the masses decide.

This gets difficult with videos, as we're not always in a place that can review videos. We decided it would best benefit the community if we made the submitter give an analysis or overview with the video. It's fine if it's brief, but the current trend of ambiguously titled videos will need to come to an end (even if they were good videos).

Edit: Mind you, this is in the interest of keeping our quality top notch. We don't want to devolve like other known subs.

Women want men who are more successful than them. Now, if you've got enough value in other categories to make up for your lack of success, you can still pull it off. For instance, being a male model will probably make up for your lack of intelligence. Being rich can make up for your relative ugliness. Being funny and good looking can make up for being rich, and so on and so forth.

But if you're dating a woman more successful than you, it's going to be an uphill battle taming her hypergamy.

8 upvotes · 16 February 2013 · /r/askTRP

See you're still failing to understand the core principles of a debate.

Somebody introduced you to the red pill, to which you responded negatively dismissing the entire sub, arguing that we're stewing in bitterness, tricking people into having sex, and misogynists.

I'm going to give you a small lesson in debate and logic. You are very bad at this.

You've made the assertions, and have done absolutely zero to defend your assertions.

You've made subjective value judgments, such as calling what we're doing "stewing in bitterness" which only holds context if your value judgement is the frame we're operating under. That's a logical fallacy. That's the straw man I'm talking about.

Of course you've linked to examples of why you think we're stewing in bitterness. But you have not understood whatsoever how presenting your conclusion as your argument doesn't work. I have not agreed to a presupposition that in fact what you're describing is bitter or stewing. How do you expect that argument to play out? It doesn't, because this moral direction you've taken is undefendable. I cannot argue how you feel about something. If you say you think chicken is gross and you won't eat it, I cannot argue that chicken is delicious!

Instead, I was hoping for an enlightened debate where you say, "hey you presented theory xyz, but it differs from results of experiment w. Or, you've interpreted such results this way, but couldn't it be said that this is caused by this instead?"

But instead you went the cheap ploy. You're betting it works. I bet you argue with your friends that way too. You've got literally no idea how much I've just run laps around you.

You've then colored our view as misogyny, and presented it as a just-so story. Roosh's view on the end game of feminism is misogyny? Well, I suppose you'll tell me your taste for beef is also absent and I should defend meat eaters everywhere!

What did I do here? This is called an analogy. I've compared your subjective commentary to that of food preference. In this context, you have not substantiated your claims, and instead jumped ahead to your value judgments as your argument. Fallacious, yes. But worse, terrible debate. This won't even be entertaining to readers because you haven't made a good point to defend.

The only bit I can really pull out of your un-argument was this:

trying to trick people into having sex[5]

If you believe tricking women into having sex is non-consensual, then that's rape. We do not advocate rape. If you believe that it is consensual, then are you denying women as agents? Are you saying no woman is capable of making the decision to have sex? Wouldn't that be rape? If I perform a literal magic trick and she's impressed enough to sleep with me, that's her prerogative isn't it? Or are women objects? Have I forced her to fuck me? Which is it? Women are agents and can make decisions? Or they're objects? Seems to me you've just committed another poor bout of logic.

But that's ok, I'm here to help.

You see, at the end of the day, every interaction we have with other people is a form of communication, to enable us to better get what we need. I ask the butcher to give me 2 chicken breasts (I'm sorry if you still hate chicken), and he gets it to me. Was this manipulation? I suppose, he did it under the duress of me offering him money. I know he needs to feed his children, so it's cruel of me to offer money when he's in that predicament.

Maximizing your attractiveness to women is nothing more than communicating what it is that women want to have sex with. It's not that difficult. Men body build to be more attractive. Men learn not to be pushovers to be more attractive. And men learn jokes to be more attractive. In other news, women wear pushup bras and wear makeup.

You've done absolutely nothing to even formulate an argument let alone destroy a percentage of our theories. The best you have is a poor grasp and a mischaracterization of our views, which you've attempted to argue with your value judgments and not sound reason. Congratulations you're terrible at this.

Next, you're going to ask me to present my unified theory if I think I'm so right. I'll stop you in your tracks. There is no unified theory. There's a lot to the red pill, and it's not all ironed out yet, and it may never be. But one thing's for sure, when a new idea or phenomenon comes around, we test and scrutinize it. Is this something that makes sense? Does it check out? Does it give us predictable results?

If you truly had an issue with something actually present in our sub, you'd show us where our reasoning went faulty. But, no, instead you've levied the tired "misogynist" trope. Bringing literally nothing to the debate table. Absolutely nothing. You've made a dubious claim that we are absolutely wrong, yet you are relying on me to explain our theory so you can substantiate your claim? This is debate 101.

Hypergamy

No, it's just a counter intuitive way to look at it.

Why would somebody act so immature?

Because you're asking the wrong question. She would only be acting immature if she were a man doing this. By man standards, this is terrible behavior.

By women's standards, she's acting how women do. This is how women think, this is how it works. We don't have to like it, but putting a judgement on the wrong scale will leave you frustrated everytime.

She's a women, not a man. She acts like how women act.

I'll answer his questions in order to show you what I mean.

Lack of confidence?

No, she has plenty of confidence from the validation of men.

Is it cowardliness?

No, women cannot be cowards because the concept of cowardliness requires an expectation that one would face certain things. Men can be cowards, women depend on men for strength and integrity.

Extreme selfishness?

Obviously it's selfish behavior. That doesn't mean it isn't normal for women.

What is the root of this childish behavior?

It's the rationalization hamster. Female psychology is the root of this behavior. It's only childish if you attempt to use the man-scale to judge her.

More so, is this an isolated incident or she lives through her life using this crazy approach of facing the reality in every aspect of her life?

This is how women approach decision making, not isolated.

If so how she managed to survive 30 years?

At the end of the day, women lack accountability because they will never have to know the consequences for their actions. The rationalization hamster allows them to carry on (where I'd self destruct trying to resolve some of that behavior!), and men carry them through their lives.

Anything you can do, I can do better...

It's interesting, in my opinion, what happens when you have a group of people (in this case women) who grow up with the understanding that there will be little to no repercussions to their actions.

She was goading him. And yes, she deserved to be hit.

When I see stats about domestic abuse and somebody brings up "what did she do?" You have to understand, situations like this happen a lot.

When girls can act however they want with impunity, you shouldn't be surprised that they push the boundaries.

I've had girls act like this to me before. She knew she could get on his nerves because he can't hit a girl.

She wanted him to hit her so she could claim to be the victim.

In my opinion, saying "hit me" is invitation. You're no longer a victim.

And then at the end, white knight steps in. BULLSHIT.

What's your take on Ladies Nights?

8 upvotes · 30 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It certainly feeds to female entitlement. The real question I've always had is this: Understanding women are the selective gender- why is the social scene so often 10:1 men to women in the first place?

Lady's nights surely get women into the club. But the problem is how special they think they are for it. I don't think ladies night increases your chances of getting laid, even if it ups the ratio to 2:1.

Edit: It is interesting to see the feminine imperative rationalize it though- ladies need some advantages since men already have all the advantages! WAT?

Rejection Therapy: A Hundred Days of 'No'

8 upvotes · 10 January 2013 · /r/seduction

You know, as somebody who approaches a lot, I have to say, it's very rare to get a "no." Worst case, you chat and have a good time and walk away empty handed, but I have very rarely gotten a girl who just didn't at least entertain a short conversation.

The real therapy is a hundred flakes. Flaking is the new no. Women stopped saying no, now they just flake.

Today's Reality Check: Women have boyfriends and girlfriends. If you're not fucking her, you're her girlfriend.

"Capable" does not mean physical, in fact in today's world, physical prowess becomes less and less important. In the business and research world it is basically irrelevant. I do not want people judging my capability to do my business job based on my gender which is totally unrelated.

Ok, well nobody here is arguing that women can't do their jobs, so you've rendered your point moot.

I disagree that nobody here hates...

Neither advocating hating women. Both advocate treating women the way women reward. You don't like it? Talk to your gender. Convince them to reward the nice guy. Believe it or not, most of the guys here used to be really nice guys. They just never could figure out why women weren't attracted to them. That is, until now.

Most people who argue against TRP on this sub literally do not understand the definitions of the words they use/read.

The core of the argument for/against has always been that nobody will agree on the presuppositions or even definitions of words to get started.

That, and there's a stark analogy illiteracy on reddit, causing people to argue against the analog rather than the point.

Feminist approved enthusiastic affirmative consent vs pragmatic consent

7 upvotes · 17 June 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

If you study the words carefully, there is no legal consent that you can defend.

That is- a woman can revoke consent at any time without warning and without even saying it- hell she can revoke it retroactively the next day.

The changing of words and definitions is a common play by feminists (and the left in general). The goal here is to make all interaction with women a liability for a man, and then selectively enforce as they see fit.

As it stands now, all it takes is a false accusation and a man's life is basically ruined anyway. So who cares what the real rules are regarding consent. Women certainly don't follow them.

Two points on loneliness, family, and evolutionary biology : "Suicide rates for [...] older guys have been going up for a long time[...] Younger guys can learn game and get laid (the way is hard but it can be done), while older guys without families don't have that source of meaning."

I don't think science, as a field, is safe from cultural biases. Scientists risk careers suggesting things such as racial differences, sexual differences, problems in "trans theory," or even climate change.

So for that reason alone I'm skeptical that even if RP was 100% true, that the scientific community would agree.

Couple that with the fact that I consider psychology and sociology very soft black-box type sciences, that often wander into the realm of unprovable and non-falsifiable, you really don't have much to lean on for or against TRP.

In the heat of an argument it's useful to post stats but we all know you can get stats to say anything. I'm sure I'm guilty of doing just this.

On the other hand, stats can help inform us of cultural shifts and such.

My measure of whether a particular facet of TRP theory is true is whether or not it matches my experiences, whether others have similar experiences, and whether the conclusions and predictions made from it work / come true.

You can use things like divorce rates and average marriage ages to fill in the gaps, but I don't think it would pass as a scientific journal.

I think TRP is more men comparing notes than it is double-blind studies.

This can appear to others as simply confirmation bias- we ignore reports that disagree with us and discuss the reports that support us. But I don't think that's what it is.

When a report is so counter to our theories that it's a complete contradiction, I think most of us think - well you can tell me women don't respond to XYZ but .. they do when I do it so I'm going to keep doing it and safely ignore this bit of science.

Women will prove AWALT out of nowhere.

I'm not saying that everybody there would necessarily agree on points- for instance, the pro-life/pro-choice debate seems like one with no discernible ending, only differing opinions. But I think the discussion of it can still be had.

At the end of the day, it is a personal decision which way you want to go. I agree that GLO acting as a mentor will provide a good role model in many guys' lives. Essentially, these guys who want success in the sexual market need somebody to look up to, to tell them to stop making stupid ass excuses and just get busy. On that front, GLO serves an important purpose.

But the truth is, not everybody is going to have the same goals. I know that I personally would not be able to realize happiness if I wasn't getting my dick wet on the usual. And I strongly suspect anybody who says they can find happiness without it to be rationalizing failure.

But if somebody wants to be completely honest with themselves and find a way to be happy outside of biological programming (or perhaps he has lower testosterone than the rest of us), then I do say fair play. The truth is, testosterone is a double edged sword.

While it was the fire that drove men to accomplish great things, it was also the downfall of many great men. Men who lose everything to women, because of their devious natures. Men who lose their lives, their families, and everything. These men know what happens when your happiness is dependent on women.

Would society collapse if all men went their own way? Sure would.

I don't think you need to give up sex to go your own way, we have a culture of men here who simply want to fuck but give 0% to the economy growth of their civilization. I applaud those efforts as well.

But if you wanted to move to the woods and enjoy hunting every day by yourself, and you think you can find happiness that way, who the fuck am I to say it couldn't work. I am somewhat envious of that level of freedom.

I don't consider myself a "slave" to pussy the way MGTOW would describe it. I know how to play the game, and I make the pussy work for me. But at the end of the day, I know that I am biologically dependent on sticking my dick in them. Good thing it feels good.

I can understand why they would promote marriage because it's about women who possess red pill knowledge. Knowing what they do about male and female interaction and dynamics it still makes sense that a woman would want to secure that ultimate level of commitment from her man because it ensures that she and any offspring they have will be taken care of in the event the relationship does not work. For a woman marriage is all benefit and no cost so it would be foolish for women not to promote the idea that they should get married.

Agreed- and this is actually still very much the view of RPW. It was the point geared towards men that they were making that I was addressing. For women, they'd be insane not to want marriage.

I think you misunderstand: this is discussion of all female sexual strategy. Not just your conclusion of it.

the whole sidebar of RPW discusses the pros and cons. Everyone knows the consequences of sleeping around and everyone knows the consequences of being post-wall etc. It was always discussed.

Then you're welcome not to participate when you think the outcome is already decided. That said, I will never be so foolish to think there isn't something new under the sun, and I won't be removing a discussion that is made in earnest nor banning the user who made it.

I've got a good grasp of the red pill, but if I simply suggested everything had been discovered and there's nothing left to discuss, I'd be wrong. I get new perspectives I hadn't thought of before all the time.

No problem. I'm trying to be as transparent as possible without crossing into gossip territory. I think the community here deserves to know what was going on. I was working very closely with the RPW mod team during the past week to resolve the differences, so it did come as a shock to me when they all left. Apparently they were planning this secretly behind my back the entire time. So they were not working with me in good faith at all. Which is very disappointing to me.

I had a lot of respect for the amount of work the team put in here, and I'm quite disheartened that they chose this path despite our long histories of working together.

But they all gave me the freeze-out and left without a word. Just not how you treat somebody you've been working with for years.

7 upvotes · 25 January 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

will also yield the result of "high chance of sex" which /u/redpillschool describes as the key aim of TRP discussions.

Making yourself as effective as possible doesn't mean necessarily having lots of sex or even having lots of sex with strangers. It just means putting yourself into a position where you have the most options to choose from.

If your choice is sex with strangers daily, or to settle down with a woman you like, that's your prerogative. But step one is to increase your chances so that you can have what you want rather than be shut down.

Any girl who you've bedded using "classical" TRP sexual strategies is no longer a good girl.

That takes a simplistic view that there's such a thing as a "good girl" rather than accepting that all women have human instincts. If your goal is a LTR, then finding a woman who doesn't have a giant ego and a thousand cock stare is important, but understand it will only be effective if you make her lust for you the way she would had she been a slut. Essentially, you want her to be your slut.

[REPOST] We Cannot Override the AutoMod, and We Wouldn't Even If We Could

like to think the true purpose of the automod is to prevent the noobs from posting.

Like RPWT says, it was originally to deal with trolls. The problem was that bans would be immediately evaded by people making new accounts. Now, when we ban, people immediately try to come back to troll us only to have their comments silently removed.

But I designed the automod rules to keep you from participating for about as long as it should take to read the sidebar the first time. So it does help.

Further, you can't actually post new threads right away, even after you're "voiced." You still have to participate in conversation and get positive karma before your new posts aren't auto deleted.

Seriously the signal-to-noise ratio on this sub is getting worse and worse as it grows: too much anger, too much hate.

First of all, the charge of worsening quality has been levied against this sub since we had 100 subscribers. It's a completely nebulous charge with no real parameters, and it's impossible to quantify. I am going to argue that in fact, the average quality of conversation in each thread is quite high, and I'm happy to see the quality remain more or less constant.

Now regarding your comment on anger and hate, I disagree with you entirely. We don't just allow anger, we embrace it. Anger is an appropriate response when faced with injustice and cultural lies. Anger is a normal reaction, and the rest of our society is so hellbent on telling men that anger is bad and they shouldn't have an outlet for their emotions, that eventually guys just get so fed up they kill themselves (or worse).

We are the one of the few places where guys can be guys and they can be real with each other. Fuck yeah there's anger. God damned right there's anger. I will ban 130,000 subscribers who want to stifle male emotions before I ban anger.

First of all, self-improvement is important, and that's mostly what it's about, but it implies a goal that you're improving to-

For instance, I consider reading on TRP to be just as important as working out. I am improving myself.

But what am I improving myself towards?

One could say, having the maximum number of future options for whatever plans or goals you might make in the future.

I ultimately would argue that everything- job, hobbies, status, fitness, everything comes back to sexual strategy. We exist for that cause.

Now if we simply call this board "self-improvement" we fall into the trap of discussing anything that pleases the feminine imperative as good. We aren't looking to become better cogs in the machine, we're looking to best effect our own goals and desires.

I think the BDSM and Kink communities are more explicit because of the nature of how kinks work- that is, unless I tell you I want something, you'd never guess I would want it. I mean, you probably wouldn't even bring a cake to bed let alone shove your tits in it unless I told you I was into that sort of thing.

My general feeling is that these people are pushing their sexual boundaries to get their kicks, and are harder to please with fewer options for people who could please them, therefore they must be less discriminating and more up front. It would make sense that they're not waiting around for the mating dance to commence when the end goal is, "will you be into stringing me up and pretending I'm a little school girl.."

I don't think the question of consent really arose because of this, the question of limits and boundaries came up. Some people like it really extreme, but you need to know who likes what.

This still has no place in the lives of people who prefer the mating dance, which is in diametric opposition to explicitness.

Perhaps you don't understand it's usefulness, but I believe religion to be invented by man as a control over man and specifically hypergamy.

Think about it- it helped level the playing field with marriage and sexual morality (being mostly controls on women, not men). Whether or not it is actually moral, it helped build civilization as we know it (although there are/were a lot of side effects).

Just because you don't believe in god doesn't mean there wasn't religion, nor a purpose for it to be created.

right, but we all agree (as do feminists) that the set of social expectations for women tends to cripple them to some degree. there are indeed biological factors, but there isn't much use in overstating things.

The lack of expectations from women, I believe, is what causes them lack certain qualities like personal responsibility.

I think that relative beauty is likely the source of lack of responsibility. Girl who is hot doesn't have to suffer petty things like consequences.

The evolution of The Red Pill

7 upvotes · 17 March 2014 · /r/AlreadyRed

Granted you have to look past a bit more comments, but high quality ones still float to the top, at the end of the day, TRP has always been full of new guys who didn't understand the theory. Back in the day it was up to me and a few other mods to illustrate red pill theory each and every time it was asked, it was tiring and far less dense or on topic as it is today.

I find that there are either older users like /u/whisper who really take the time to help out new users, or there are some friggin kids who showed up for a month, think they've become experts on the topic without contributing any quality content, and then come here complaining that there isn't any quality content.

The content, as has always been the case, is entirely user submitted. I can delete bad content- but nothing can make the content better if experienced users don't contribute.

There are often good posts that aren't getting enough attention. I regularly sticky them.

Remember folks, it's our job to pass down the knowledge our fathers didn't give us. You don't have to take up the torch, but it's unfair to complain while others do.

All women are red pill in their actions, no matter what they say. I just recently went out with a self-proclaimed feminist, a clear social justice warrior, who is an activist to an extreme (works on global campaigns, doesn't have a real job because she is so busy with activism, so on and so forth)..

She mentioned that she hasn't had much real romance in her life but she felt a surprising connection to me, then we fucked like bunnies. She liked it rough and mentioned that no guy has ever done that during sex before (taking control and doing it the way I wanted). I asked her who she usually dates. "Guys from her campaign offices."

Edit: I suspect she's well aware of the manosphere, if not the redpill itself. The reason I don't believe the other thread "bluepill: how was your sex life with red pillers?" is going to be honest, is because if done right, nobody's going to know you subscribe to red pill philosophy. If I had told her my participation here, she'd probably not be too happy, and likely she'd be trying to doxx me everywhere she could.

But, she didn't. Instead she had a blast, enjoyed herself, and we will likely see each other again. Because she likes the red pill when it's not called that.

A salesman's job is to convince you that you want to buy something. If you say "no, I don't want this tv" and he keeps telling you more details about it, "but it's 1080p, and it has netflix built in!" and you change your mind, "you know what, you've sold me. I'll take it.."

Was that theft?

The final word on rape (in my mind) is this: If you're going to rape somebody, seems to me it doesn't matter what they say or what their opinion is. So why would you spend so much time trying to push through last minute resistance? If you were going to rape her, you wouldn't spend so much time trying to turn a 'no' into a 'yes.'

At the end of the day, seduction is sales. Rape doesn't bother with sales.

Talking about sex is insulting to women! They have sensitive ears! What were you thinking??

You're speaking as if the only people who matter in this discussion are men, and implying that the only use women have is to be "picked up."

If I don't instantly bring up every positive quality of women every time it comes up that I like sex, then I am discounting the entire gender for lacking those qualities...??

Have you ever had an actual conversation with a woman? Not to try and get into her pants, just for the sake of speaking with her as a human being? I'm thinking not.

Shame, right on cue. Nice.

Everybody here pretty well covered it, but I wanted to add that red pill theory isn't based on evo psych, it's based on observation. Evo psych is one way to attempt to formulate a cohesive theory out of our observations, and attempt to explain our observations. The worst part about having herpes is what people think about herpes. It's a completely manageable disease with very few symptoms (when on anti-viral). A huge number of people have it and don't realize it. Tons of people have cold sores, and there's no social stigma from it, so nobody really cares. But when you consider genital herpes (which can be transmitted via oral sex with cold sores), people only go crazy because of the stigma, not the disease.

Because of this, most doctors don't even check for herpes in their standard STD test, citing "knowing you have herpes is worse than having herpes."

It's a social disease.

I haven't gotten it yet, but I suspect I probably will eventually. They say in the next 50-100 or so years, pretty much the entire population will have it.

Best bet is to come to terms with the reality: if you are sexually active, you will catch a few things. It happens. Don't fear it, just deal with it. Stop by the doc, get yourself some drugs, and keep on keeping on.

Your statement conspicuously avoids making any kind of value judgment about spousal rape by stating a bald fact, which is that it is illegal, and now you've disowned the concept of marriage itself. To me that comes across as being evasive.

Having an abstract conversation that does not have anything to do with my personal morals does not require me to divulge my morals, and avoiding divulging my morals cannot be considered evasive unless the rules of discussion are changed.

Unlike SRS or the like, we're not pulling up examples of men doing something wrong because we hate them or think they disagree with us fundamentally. Instead we pull them up as a learning experience. Most of us were like that at one point or another.

Whereas SRS would mock and say the guy is a shitlord, we mock and say "this guy needs a best friend to punch him in the arm and tell him he's being a dolt."

You've been here a while, concern trolling, but your statements are absolutely and completely devoid of any material substance. You want to complain that we claim truth, criticizing us that truth cannot be found, but I haven't seen you actually address any of our theory.

Saying that sexual strategy is amoral is all well and good from an evolutionary perspective, but from a personal perspective it simply isn't a good philosophy.

Obviously you need to make these value judgements for yourself, I certainly don't disagree. I think I made that clear- some people consider strategies that I have deemed harmful to myself. For instance, I personally don't steal things because I think it's a poor strategy. Obviously somebody who does thinks it's a good one. We differ.

Sex is not the same as survival. Sex is nice but it's not worth living out of alignment with your values just to get some, because there will be emotional consequences, unless you really are a psychopath. Your emotional wellbeing is more important than getting laid.

I won't argue that you can't have values. I'm only arguing that the red pill is a good reason to think long and hard which ones you should hold on to and which ones you shouldn't.

My goal in making these points is to do away with this pervasive idea: that any competitive edge a man can get in the sexual market place is somehow evil.

At the end of the day, I think not raping is a good value to hold on to. But let's look at the older man dating a younger woman concept-

If we followed what society advocates under the banner of morality, a 35 year old man should not date an 18 year old girl because of the power imbalance. Obviously this is a value that if internalized unexamined will only boost the 18 year old's options, because somebody will date her if it's not you, and minimizes yours (artificial restraints).

"Feminism is a collection of movements and ideologies aimed at defining, establishing, and defending equal political, economic, and social rights for women."

Slutwalk is a movement aimed at defining, establishing, and defending equal political, economic, and social rights for women. Specifically rebelling against the officer who said "women should avoid dressing like sluts."

And believe it or not, they are not the same thing! You can't judge feminism in general based on what certain feminists do. It would be like judging the Norwegian nation based on what Breivik did. Feminism is a broad term, and unless you're arguing against a flavour of feminism that supports Slut Walks, that argument isn't valid. It's a logical fallacy.

It's true, based on what you just said here, not one single feminist could ever be held to the fire because no one feminist represents true feminism. No true scotsman! Whoops, that's a logical fallacy!

Which, concretely, definition. By which, concretely, feminist. How can a definition that is conceptual be falsifiable?

It's simple. Let's say I tell you that all women perform an action X. You ask, what's the definition of X? I tell you, why, it's what all women do! It's indefensible because of its circular reasoning. All men objectify because men are attracted to women. Therefore men objectify women!

An online dictionary gave me this definition.

Degrade to the status of a mere object.

By that definition, objectifying anyone is completely wrong, pretty much regardless of circumstances.

Indeed, I explained in great detail what that means. Removing or ignoring agency. Shaming based on agency. That is a falsifiable definition. (and therefore can be argued) You should read my letter. The OP..

The argument you gave was that women objectify men as well (they go after a man based on their careers, not looking at him as a person but instead as an object to be attained).

Nope, I didn't!

Based on my original definition of objectification, I argued that feminists are objectifying women.

Based on the terribly ill defined version of objectification I stated:

Let's say I flirt with a woman at a bar. She seems into me. She asks what I do for a living. I tell her I'm between jobs, and living in my mother's basement. Much to my surprise, her interest vanishes immediately and she walks away. What just happened here? Was I objectified? .. Has she denied my value to other people and other endeavors? No! Of course not!

...female profiles that have the "Must be 6' tall, athletic, please no losers thx" checklist at the bottom. But you know what- I defend their right to do so. Because nobody should tell them who to mate with and for what reasons. They're free to do what they want. It's only feminism telling them their checklists are evil and objectifying.

Clearly my argument was that feminist's definition of objectification is a misnomer because it's cyclical. I used women as an example of why their definition is nonsensical. My original definition of objectification which has a falsifiable definition was shown that neither women nor men are "objectifying" as a standard course of action, instead feminism is making a big stink about it.

To which you argue "no true feminist."

This is a common argument technique by feminists, moving the goal posts. How can I possibly make a point when you're busy ensuring no point can stick because true feminism .. can never be defined! "You can't judge feminism in general based on what certain feminists do." Therefore feminism is above reproach.

It is your right and liberty to objectify women as much as you want, just like it's in their right to objectify them as much as they want to. It is not in your right to repress anybody, nor should it be in their right to repress them. This is what at its core feminism is supposed to argue for, which to me is not an ideology in itself, it's a view on a specific issue.

Ignoring the logical argument that I just made that feminist's definition of objectification is nonsensical, classic moving of goalposts.

Only white knights, women and feminists objectify women.

It's not that the niceness need be contrived to fail. I was a genuinely nice guy, I just did stuff for everybody that asked. I figured, people like nice. I like to be liked. Therefore I'll be nice.

And I let people take advantage of me. But this wasn't contrived niceness. It was naivety. I was taught from an early age, share, be nice, respect people and they'll respect you. What really happened was nobody respected me and everybody took advantage of me.

And I think that's why I dislike the recent reframe of the nice-guy problem. They're not typically disingenuous. They're simply misinformed. They can be as genuinely nice as anybody can be.

I see a common argument that you don't have to be an asshole to be confident. I disagree. Part of having good game (for men) is conveying (not explicitly) that you have options. The only way to do that is to send signals that you have options. These signals must act counter to what would be expected from somebody following the "rules."

You text me, sometimes I don't text back.

I cancel dates 1/3 of the time.

I make plans with multiple people and only go to the one that I'm most interested in that day.

I won't buy you a birthday gift.

I won't buy you drinks.

You'll try to get me to open up, and I'm not going to.

These are all not just confidence traits, but decidedly anti-social traits that we learn from youth are what "assholes" do.

And it drives you wild.

You mention you like the combo of ass & gentleman. I agree that's the most attractive way to go about life for a man. But don't forget, to be both, you have to be an ass at least some of the time.

You can't define what men find attractive! I'll tell you what men find attractive!

It's not that we wouldn't love equality. It's that we already tried to be the perfect husbands and boyfriends. My wife wanted a career, so I said I'd take care of the kids. No problem!

At the end of the day, it's not that we pushed for gender roles. We actually were very enabling of the feminist movement. Few people looked at women's desires and said "hey these are unreasonable!"

Instead, we enabled feminism over the past hundred years to the point where they've gotten just about everything they fought for.

The problem is that the wife didn't respect the stay at home dad. She "loved" him, but fell out of love. He was no longer the provider. He was operating in a role that stopped attracting her, despite their mutual agreement for these decisions.

We recognized that while feminism was pushing to do away with gender roles, women were still rewarding men who held onto them.

And while you'd say not all women are like that, my rebuttal is that enough are.

It's programmed into our heads. It's the reason men don't like other men. We're programmed to like women!.

Of course not all men are like that- but enough are.

If you accept that men display a preference for women, then you must accept that the preference hinges on there being a difference between men and women. If you agree then that there is a preference hinging on a difference between the genders- the only question left is to what degree?

And you and I could argue about degrees and still be on a similar page.

 I say very few because at the end of the day, feminism was successful. There were always dissenting voices, but they were ineffectual ones.

"The dynamics in a group like this are subtle. Whether the group suddenly saw a shift in power is unlikely. What had taken place was not allowing another alpha to usurp my position. It was a quiet battle, one that was had without blatant words, and was determined by a silent judge. Ultimately I was able to walk away with no less respect from the girl I was attempting to impress. She subconsciously picked up on the vibe and her attraction to me was stronger. Though she'd be unable to pinpoint why, this silent battle has a real effect on people's feeling of who you are as a person."

There were some complaints when this was first posted that he was over-analyzing, but I don't think they understood, most of this thinking happens very quickly and allows for normal conversation flow. His writing

I'm not talking about equal pay for different jobs, I'm talking about equal pay for the exact same job, with the same qualifications.

Show me evidence of this. The pay gap myth only exists when you take women's median income and compare it to men's. Not when you compare number of hours worked and what job.

I support paid parental leave, for both parents, for 6 weeks.

Feminism doesn't. Your position is irrelevant.

Also, there are a lot of men with successful careers, and children. I don't see why women can't be parents and successful in their careers too.

Men don't gestate for 9 months and pop out kids. It's biologically unfair, I know. But men seemed to do a good job making up the gap by risking their lives protecting women while it happened. Only now, women are angry about the arrangement. That's fine- go to work, but don't expect me to compensate for your sorry ass in the workplace when you disappear to have kids. If you can't compete, you're not going to get paid what I do. It's a dog-eat-dog world. Sorry.

I am opposed to selective service in general.

That's unrealistic. If there were an attack on US soil and we needed more soldiers, do you think we should just roll over and die as a country? No! Conscription is a necessary evil.

Men do make up a majority of workplace deaths, because men tend to pursue more dangerous careers.

And women don't make as much because they don't. Or.. is it - women aren't encouraged to do it because they're objects with no will, and men aren't objects so they get to choose their careers?

I have never seen any statistics that men are raped as much as women, though.

Them: Ok.

My response: Do you agree that after you meet a woman, sending her 1,000 texts will turn her off?

Them: Well, yeah, that's ridiculous.

But do you mean any woman is guaranteed to eventually cheat on me, because.. Female Hypergamy?

I'll put it this way. Would I trust a child in a room with cookies not to eat one? No, I wouldn't. Does every child break the rules? No. but enough will that it's prudent for me not to invest heavily in the idea that children won't break the rules. Instead, you treat children in a manner consistent with who they are: children.

You don't expect them to not break the rules, and you do what you can to avoid giving them a scenario where they could (Don't leave them in a room with cookies). When they do break the rules, you shouldn't be surprised, just disappointed.

Do you believe there are some women out there who would actually live up to man standards?

Categorically, no. Right off the bat, some men don't even live up to man standards.

For me that would mean something like, liking (sexing) and valuing me for who I am as a human being, instead of how I tickle her biological-attraction-impulse-buttons. In other words, are there (high quality) women out there who make mating decisions the way society had us believe?

No. At least not in ways you'll be attracted to. If you find a girl with low enough value in the sexual market place (read: below you) you can probably find the qualities you're looking for and be as beta as you want. But there's a catch, by definition you won't be attracted to her. If she's attractive to you, it stands to reason she will be equal or higher value in the sexual marketplace and therefore will not put up with your beta tendencies. She will not value you for who you are, she will only value you for how you make her feel.

I've still been holding on to some hope of that. But.. who knows.

I know how it feels. The sooner you let go of that hope, the better.

The idea that women are just some kind of "wild animals" that need to be tamed/handled in a specific way kind of bothers me. That they'd require constant "handling" all through a relationship bothers me too.

You can't negotiate attraction. The women who realize that their mating habits weren't successful might try dating the nice guy. She'll tell herself the asshole didn't work, they need a real nice guy. And they'll go for it. But make no mistake, no matter how hard she tries, she cannot negotiate attraction. There are things that turn her on, and things that don't, and she has NO SAY in what they are.

So you have two choices: 1. Acknowledge that you must appeal to what attracts her, knowing full well she cannot control it (and you can't control what attracts you either!), or 2. Be alone.

Basically, it boils down to women being biologically hard-wired to be Irrational. Can they really "all" be like that?

They just have different motivations. For them, immediate personal happiness is what must be maximized. They will determine what actions to take and which actions worked or not based on how they make them feel. If they no longer feel the "spark" they would rationalize that they must not be with the right guy, because if she was, the spark would be there. Whereas a man would say if something missing, there needs to be a goal set and they would actively work towards fixing it.

Do you see how that works? It's not irrational per se, it's just a very different way of thinking. It's called the rationalization hamster around these parts, because it's not pragmatic problem solving, it's retroactive rationalization based on current emotions. It's not immoral, it's just reality.

Is this related to what you were talking about? How do you find it endearing/cute? Something like "Oh look! I feed her this impulse, and she responds just like every other woman-creature would! Hihhihi that's so cute!" .. ? :)

No, instead you find her feminine traits endearing. When she doesn't understand something that most men would, you appreciate that instead of learning about electronics, she learned how to cook or put on makeup. It's about acknowledging there's a difference and appreciating her for her feminine traits. Hypergamy sucks when you're on the wrong end- but appreciate that she's hypergamous because now she's with you because of it.

They are actually complaining about a gender gap... on a completely open, free to edit, voluntary site. Want to know why there's a gender gap? Apparently women don't give a shit about wikipedia.

The Wikimedia Foundation says it's committed to working on the Wikipedia gender gap, as it realizes it's best for the site as a whole. Lack of diversity hurts Wikipedia and it shows on the site, in its content and design. A culture that's centered around people who are all very similar lacks depth, introspection, and ultimately, growth.

Let's be clear here, wikipedia strives for objective documentation of real things based on real sources. Why would diversity of the editors have an effect unless the plan was to color that information with bias?

So much good stuff in here.

A lot of freshly unplugged guys have trouble accepting Game as being anything more than an act – a series of behaviors meant to elicit a response in a woman, and once she's been attracted they can go back to their regularly scheduled personality. They rely on rote memorization instead of learning and internalizing Game. What a lot more don't understand is that even in their blue pill Beta Game days they also followed a similar 'acting'.

This acting is encouraged in much the same way as Ann was attempting to distort her own reality. As with most women, they fall in love with a dichotomy; they want a sweet guy, who's tough and gets shit done. If one of these aspects is out of balance her rationalization engine (i.e. Hamster) will make subconscious attempts to compensate for it in her words and beliefs. "I want a sweet guy with a good heart" is boilerplate for the feminine imperative because it 'sounds right'. Men hear this and 'act' on it in the deductive belief that it will endear him to women in general.

I think this in particular highlights the overwhelmingly solipsistic nature of the female mind. While guys would look for causes of their problems and be at least introspective enough to consider themselves as a source of the problem, women do the opposite. Women have a hard time considering that other people may have different mental states than them, so when a guy doesn't ask her out, it doesn't really come across as rational to her.

The Ironies Of Female Empowerment - Like a child, the anti-male feminist sees the end result of this male effort and ignores all that came before it... Her mind is too limited to see what goes into providing all of that, and so she instead attacks those responsible for providing it.

The Arguments against the Red Pill

7 upvotes · 10 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

1. No, the advice isn't malicious. In fact, they don't know they do it. Your argument that anybody hates for it is entirely in your mind. <http://dalrock.wordpress.com/2012/12/26/how-the-feminine-imperative-just-happens/>
2. You obviously do not understand the male sexual strategy. Your lack of understanding fuels your inability to form a coherent argument. A guy's perfect mate is a virgin who only wants sex from him. Realistic? Probably not. Doesn't change what turns him on though. Just like women, men don't control what they like.

3. That's right. Men are driven to acquire knowledge as part of developing their sexuality (women are attracted to smart men). Women have no such compulsion, and as such are less likely to have worldly knowledge. Look at the stereotypical super model. She doesn't know that Chicken of the sea is tuna.
http://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/1695i4/never_listen_to_a_woman/
4. What's your argument against this? That it feels bad to think it's true? You know what else feels bad? Gravity. Doesn't make it less true.
5. In the sexual marketplace, physical appearance is the largest factor for women by far.
6. Answering the question "will being a misogynist help you get laid?" If this upsets you, there's nothing you can do. As you mentioned, there is no female collective, so you can't possibly stop all your sisters from fucking misogynists. They just keep doing it.
7. No-fault divorce favors women and makes marriage a lose-lose situation for men. Rape accusations from women can ruin lives. Nuff said.

The problem here is that you look at these things from your perspective. If somebody told me I was dumb, sure I'd be upset. But what if it were true? You know, just because it upsets you doesn't make it false. And that's why nobody here wants to keep arguing with you. Because your entire argument hinges on the fact that you don't like our arguments, not that our arguments aren't valid.

Define what constitutes "real". If by real you mean a mutual unconditionally loving relationship that suffers all ills, I hate to break it to you, but she's already long gone.

You have to continue gaming because otherwise she leaves. It's not even that you have to want to, it's that she enforces this behavior. You cannot do otherwise or she will leave.

My response: Correct.

The reason this is correct is because females are the selective gender. It sucks, makes more work for men, but it is what it is.

But can we make a topic about the JQ?

I don't personally care about it. I don't think particularly poorly about them for acting as a successful economic bloc. I'm not opposed to the discussion taking place. But I do know that if we were to take on this topic it would put a larger target on our backs than most topics, so it's one I approach with apprehension.

First, I have yet to see a cohesive discussion about the JQ that doesn't simply devolve into name calling and slurs. You can't read a thread on Voat without somebody putting their retarded (((brackets))) around everything as if that is the same as making a cogent point.

My approach to many subjects is not simply the mere discussion but also the practical approaches to these problems.

Take TRP for instance- we recognize that mating is a zero sum game and then modify our strategies to better counter women's strategies. To the outside it appears as though our critique is hatred, but from the inside it's clear our goal is to understand their strategies to counter them (and ultimately have sex with them). Obviously our discussion delves deeper into society's natural predisposition to favoring women, and how that effects both our sexual advantages and how that branches into the rest of our lives. But most importantly our focus is learning how to counter the strategies. It's constructive, not prescriptive.

The JQ discussions I've seen do not follow this path. And while anybody here knows I'm the last person to start labeling things I disagree with hate-speech, there is a line in which people abandon reason and all intellectual value vanishes.

For instance, what is the answer to the JQ?

There are a few ways that can end... My personal opinion is that men of any background should attempt to band together into economic units and form small communities to protect against the tyranny of the larger culture, whomever that might entail.

I have been talking about this in our "building power" flair for a while now. Whether it's the Jews, Liberals, Conservatives, Globalists, or feminists causing my relative lack of financial and sexual security is almost unimportant on that front, as the solution to it remains entirely the same.

But this personal growth topic never arises in JQ threads. Instead it's simply a point-and-blame game with no real answers. This is why it is quickly given the hate-speech title. It's acknowledging the Jews' participation in the unfair world and then being upset about it.

Where does that lead? What are your options then?

Well we know there are many societies that decided the answer to the Jews is to expell or murder them via mass genocide. You can imaging why it's such a sore subject and one nobody wants to get near.

That you ask me about National Socialism in the same comment discourages me. If there were any merits to National Socialism, they'd be adopted into an ideology of a different name, not one famous for killing Jews. Anybody still going for it after that is intellectually dishonest at best, and brain dead stupid or evil at worst. The Nazi "brand," as it were, is dead. And the Nazis killed it.

But here we have a prime example of a group who decided to answer the JQ with mass murder. To me, that's not only morally wrong, it's intellectually bankrupt. If your ideology simply cannot function without murder and tyranny, then you don't function under a social contract that allows and protects for other things such as free speech.

On our new site, our main priority is ensuring TRP has a safe haven. We will manually approve additional topics as we see fit.

To elaborate on my position of protecting against censorship, I think I should clarify that the false justification for censorship is a qualifying factor for me.

When conspiracy nuts discuss 9/11 "truths" are censored because they're "dangerous," or conservatives who dislike taxes are called "alt right" or "Nazi" and silenced to protect the world from hate speech, to me this is a travesty and crime against free speech. Because these people are being silenced as though they were active nazis but for simply disagreeing with the status quo.

Actual Nazis are actually shit people. And while I think they should be protected by free speech in the USA, I am not certain they feel the same about others having the same protections. I really don't trust most people who engage in that sort of conversation to self-moderate. I don't trust the group known for murder not to cross the line from discussion to crime. Because they're not interested in practical, constructive answers, and they have a proven track record for genocide.

If I had unlimited time and money we could open the gates and start reddit 2.0 and let the lawyers sort it all out.

But we're a smaller group with a tighter focus and less resources.

What makes TRP so great is that, while we talk about ideas that are outside the overton window, we are also very selective about what ideas we discuss and entertain. We want the best, most intellectually rigorous discussions. And that flies somewhat counter to free-speech as a concept, because we have to moderate this discussion to keep it intellectual. If you start posting racist jokes in TRP you will be removed. Not because we are anti-free-speech but because it doesn't serve our topic or add to our discussion, which under attack enough for its own reasons.

I want to apply this selectivity to Forums.Red. I want to engender other topics that have been run out of the other towns because of their position outside the current overton window - thus the tagline "Forbidden Ideas." But I want to select the ones with intellectual rigor, because I want to attract the smart people, I want to have the smart conversations.

Is this truly free speech? No, it's not. But I think everybody will be able to understand that this undertaking is going to be a fight. It will be work and will cost time and money to protect. So if I'm going up to bat for discussion groups, it better be ones I find value in and can defend from an intellectual standpoint - even if I disagree with them entirely.

Woman: The Most Responsible Teenager In The House | The child refers to his parents' things as "ours" while those he purchased are "his." Even my own parents, my father worked his whole life to pay bills, when the kids were gone, my mom took up working - money she earned was "her money."

She is not ready for something that serious, because she does not know her worth. You are objectively a good catch, but because she has not "earned" you (aquired you by means of hypergamy) she has no backdrop to compare you to. She has not put in the work. Picking you would have meant for her to kill the fictional chad of her dreams that resides in her subconscious. Most women are unable to do that, so the wall does it for them.

Stay away from the BPD - Even if she is your daughter

6 upvotes · 14 December 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

The biggest problem is to distinguish between regular female mood swings and BPD.

I really don't think guys here get it.

It's not mood swings. It's periods of dissociation.

It's subconscious gas-lighting.

It's manipulations.

People close to them starting to question their own realities.

Those afflicted will have periods of Dr Jekyll mania (much like bi-polar), but when they turn into Mr Hyde, it's not just a mood swing. They remember conversations that never took place, threaten you with blackmail and demand recompense for crimes that have never been committed. They forget real conversations and facts and substitute them with their own versions of events or completely fabricated days- weeks- even months.

They lie to their friends about you, and they lie about their friends to you. They never tell the same story twice, and can never be nailed down on a single accounting of events.

If confronted with any inconsistencies in their story or behaviors they can and will become violent. Physically violent.

And god help you if you defend yourself. You will be arrested on the false claims they make.

They don't feel bad or guilt. They don't know they're dissociating. They believe in their world, even though it changes from minute to minute.

Absolutely do not think you can tame one. You can't.

Having BDP requires years of cognitive behavioral therapy. And that is just to function in society. They will never be healed. They are broken.

The Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde reference is actually one of the most common ways to describe BPD.

Do yourself a favor and learn this list:

6 upvotes · 14 December 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

I feel I've gotten the better part of the deal here. But, fuck socialism, right?

The issue is that you're buying a variable liability. Sure, you can calculate your immediate taxes when you buy the land. But what happens when those socialists decide that land owners owe them another hand out. (Don't pretend socialists aren't trying to increase these programs. The push for socialized healthcare is proof that the ratchet of taxes goes one way in their mind.)

That land that I bought to raise my family sees an increase in taxes. One I can't predict. One that I can't change (thanks to the tyranny of the masses). And now if I don't pay up you steal my land.

Arguing that you're simply paying for the sheriff is disingenuous. You're not. You're paying for an ever-increasing list of handouts.

If it was just the sheriff, roads, and the firehouse, we wouldn't see an increase in property taxes every year.

But in a lot of places, we do.

Unlike a use tax, property tax says you pay money perpetually to the government or you cannot live. No matter how much or little you make. No matter how much or little of the govt resources you use.

Would you show up at my door and steal my property at gun point? How could you defend such a thing?

You'll start keto as soon as you deplete your glycogen stores. You can accelerate this by simply getting into (or close to) keto before you fast, giving you maximum benefit while you're fasting.

I do 20 + 4 intermittent fasting with keto meals during my 4. It does wonders, and you stay in keto the entire time so you're not wasting time burning off last night's spaghetti.

Never feels low energy. Actually, you start to feel really energetic and sometimes decide to skip or delay a meal. You can definitely work out with no loss of energy after adaptation.

It has been my experience that a woman that exists in a relationship without any boundaries and plentiful resources will act in a way that is indistinct from a women diagnosed with BPD.

Very similar. Women are like water, they take the shape of the container they're in.

But don't mistake this with the idea that all women are just BPD waiting for the right container. True BPD is a crippling mental disorder that transcends princess-ism. If you stumble upon a BPD you turn around and run. You don't look back. No matter how good the sex might be.

I'm not saying women can't be adults. I'm saying that it's still from that perspective. She will always have a history of knowing what advantages tits give her. She'll still never know the true sacrifices of men.

This does not mean I ignore her, or belittle what she says, or make fun of her, or treat her "mean." Seriously you miss the point if that is what you think! Is THAT how you would treat a "child?" Of course not!

MRP and the ProMarriage Stance- Can Someone Explain the Schism in relation to TRP?

6 upvotes · 9 May 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

To answer your question directly, the problem is any old schmo can slap the name "red pill" in front of their sub and try to glean some subscribership from the popularity of TheRedPill. But that doesn't necessarily make it red pill in orientation.

One of the reasons TRP has been so wildly successful is our dedication to truth about all else. Anybody lying to themselves or rationalizing poor decisions rightly gets torn apart. That's our purpose.

We're not anti-personal decision. Many men either got married before they knew about TRP or decided based on the evidence that they were willing to take the risk. That's always going to be a personal decision. For our purposes, we see a LTR and a marriage to be very similar in function and form (just one invites uncle sam to be a party to your contract, not cool). We've always had the LTR flair, and now more specifically we have a married red pill flair.

The reason I felt the need to point out that our mod team doesn't stand behind the married red pill sub is that there is no such dedication to truth on that side of the fence, and rather, they had not only been quite welcoming to blue pill trolls, many of them entertain the trolling of our community itself. (Including witch hunting one of our users, which their mods have decided not removed.)

I can't endorse such a subreddit if their goals are in direct opposition to our own. Mocking and demoralizing younger red pillers as though married red pill was some sort of high mountain they looked down upon other men from was the final straw.

All of these guys who come to TRP do so because they needed help and guidance in a culture that lacks a positive identity for men. And all I've seen from married red pill is more catty behavior that drove men to TRP in the first place: shaming guys on TRP as "boys." Either from age (many younger people on TRP) or by decision (these are just boys, they haven't stepped into manhood known as marriage).

Had the sub been properly red pill, the mods would recognize immediately that shaming other people for their marital status is giving way to the feminine imperative, that operates on shame. The mantra that a boy must serve women to be considered a man is a strong and dark underlying current in our culture, and marriedredpill was propagating it by using such language against us.

To me, the combination of disparaging TRP, trolling TRP, and discussing the pros of marriage all reek of ego protection and rationalization for what amounts to collectively the worst decision these men could have made.

They do it to protect themselves from the truth. That's not Red Pill.

Anyone here believe in RedPill theory but don't apply it? What are your reasons?

Apparently we can't even determine the motives of the moderators of this forum.

I have no idea what you're going on about. Read my introduction to RPW. It's been on the sidebar for two years.

It seems to me that the former moderators of this forum were doing exactly what you're describing their job to be

I have always been a moderator of RPW, I founded this subreddit two years ago on these principles. A lot of the moderating policies of the previous mods were by my design up until things went sour.

-- enforcing the content to be in the interests of women. In this case they happened to disagree with a contributing member (or members?) and that's what caused the split. Of course women want marriage 2.0, it's in their best interests when it comes to their own sexual strategy. I'm just saying that if you didn't choose to enforce certain opinions this wouldn't have happened.

Let's be very clear here. They didn't just think marriage 2.0 was a goal, they thought it was the only goal that could be discussed and that any theory discussion that deviated from that discussion was worthy of ban. Let's not mince words here, they were using moderation to rationalize their own life choices, and silencing anybody who was curious or on the fence.

If we do our jobs right, the discussion of marriage will not change. But now curious onlookers can engage in a conversation that might bring them to the same conclusions rather than have a pissing contest in mod mail after they get banned for asking about it.

Whatever, it is what it is. This is your forum so you can do with it what you wish. For me though, TRP has lost two main selling points from this: one, the fact that there are women who agree with the theory.

You haven't lost that.

and two that this was a place where one can voice their opinions without worrying about being banned over it.

That's literally what we just gained. We've stopped the censorship and banning, not started it.

This is the second time you've done this, getting the facts entirely reversed. I recommend you take some time to read what I'm writing before going off on me.

The focus was the happiness of their husbands, which sounds nice and amazing and wonderful, but it's not really true.

I think it originally started as a way to deprogram. The truth is, we're all selfish beings, yes. But the nature of woman is that if she were to simply follow her selfish interests, she would find it was a poor long term strategy.

Attempting to make a husband happy is a good investment in long term happiness for somebody who has a hard time making goals with delayed gratification.

I agree, though, it did slowly morph away from that and into a just-so story for good behavior.

"My happiness comes from making my husband happy" is just virtue signalling.

That's very well put.

I resented the assumption that these values were indisputably correct and not open for discussion. Yet I see the same thing happening here on RPW. Certain traditionalist values are pushed, and any dissenters are promptly punished.

I agree, I've seen the push back in this very post. There is a lot of ego tied to the investment some women have in these strategies.

Imagine if I were to punish the MGTOW on TRP for simply not sharing my goals. It wouldn't be effective at all.

The Direction of RPW.

6 upvotes · 4 April 2016 · /r/RedPillWomen

This is not my conclusion. Biologically, females are hardwired to reproduce and have a family. It hits you in your mid to late twenties at least. Not every single female, but the majority. Commitment from a male with a good balance of alpha/beta traits is the best way to produce and rear offspring. Even Richard Dawkins goes into this in The Selfish Gene.

You are implying that it's okay for women to be plates, have open relationships, and forego acquiring any commitment from a man just to attain a high value male who won't look after their offspring.

That puts women in a position that compromises their happiness, their goals, and simply doesn't work for the majority of family-rearing.

You have found the purpose of having a forum to discuss sexual strategies.

RPW deserve their own space for that too.

And they do, it's here.

There's nothing wrong with using controversy to get exposure. There's also nothing wrong with making some money on your life's work.

If Roosh gets his message across and is able to build a brand out of doing so, I say fair game to him. He's done a lot for men, and it would make sense that he'd need to earn a living.

Now, I won't argue the quality of ROK or the work he's doing, but simply making money isn't evil. And he's hardly throwing us under the bus. I rather enjoy watching the controversy unfold.

He's done a lot to try to distance himself from us and MRAs. If he said "yeah that there red pill is all about rape," then I'd have words to say to him. But right now he's throwing himself under the bus.

My suspicion is that his strategy is that people who have rape hysteria will hate him no matter what, but people who have been skeptical of the rape hysteria as of late will look deeper into it and realize that he's got some points.

If the syntax for the bot did complex evaluation statements, we could do it. But it can't. So your only option is regex, except it doesn't support any lookaround expressions.

Trust me when I say, with the current automod, it can't be done. Unless the reddit dev who created him has made more changes in the past two months that I'm unaware of, he's incapable of this particular set of rules.

Mind you, we don't run the automod daemon, so we can't just modify it. I'd use TRPBot, but we don't have dedicated hosting for him and he goes down more than he stays up.

The short answer is, no, it can't be done. Automod doesn't support regexes with lookarounds. After a lengthy conversation with the dev it was concluded that we couldn't find a way as the bot stands.

Can spinning plates or even LTR provide a lasting kind of satisfaction?

6 upvotes · 29 July 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

I've spun plates for the better part of the past 5 years, and have transitioned into a LTR this year. Here was my rationale and experience so far.

- I started my late teens/early twenties in long term relationships. (they failed).
- I transitioned to plates to learn game, perfect game, and learn how to interact better with women. You don't realize how counter-intuitive actions like being an asshole or pushing women to their limits actually works in your favor until you try spinning plates and realize that women are attracted to this careless behavior.
- I kept a rotating soft harem of approximately 3 women for about 3 years, always rotating in new women when old ones left. Eventually it became tiring, too much effort to keep plates spinning, and too much effort to constantly replenish.
- Over this past winter, I let all three of my summer plates drop, and took a good look at what I was doing. Made the decision to try long-term game.

- Long term game is incredibly different, requires a whole lot of beta attributes I had trained myself out of. Long term is definitely very pleasant in the sense that you can build a lasting relationship rather than expect to drop them quickly.
- LTR after spinning plates gives me a sense of purpose. I realize that this woman I'm with is because I want to be with her, I've chosen to be with her exclusively, and most importantly, I know what color the grass is on the other side, so I can focus on what I want to do intentionally.

The Rational Male – Trophies

6 upvotes · 1 July 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

As always, fantastic work from Rollo:

I may ruffle some feathers with this proposition, but I can't ignore the prospect that, for some women, this 'detonation' may have been part of, or became, their long-term security strategy once she'd 'settled' on her post-Wall Beta male provider. Even for women with whom this wasn't a conscious plan the failsafe of post-divorce social and financial support represents is always present.

Whereas the Trophy Wife convention primarily revolved around elite men with the capacity, status and affluence (if not the intent) to discard their wives depended on suppressing the Apex Fallacy (only men of extraordinary means could entertain it), for women the Eat Pray Love schema can be realized by virtually any western woman – and statistically we see this played out in reality.

We've been discussing what we're going to do with seddit-level game discussion and I think we're going to ban it out-right, seddit still happens to be a good source for game tips and techniques.

But, that said, one big failure of a sub like this is if every contributor who gets an endorsement leaves once they've derived any value they thought they could get from it.

You're at a bar, and there's men and women.

Women get approached by men, men who are trying to flirt, maybe get lucky, or start a relationship.

Women obviously turn down some guys, and depending on how popular they are, they may turn down a lot of guys.

But women don't do the approach.

Women select out of the guys who present themselves.

Whereas men are selected- a guy might approach 10, 15, even 20 women and get turned down by all but 1. He's trying to get selected.

Women are the selective gender.

Theory is that it's because of the increased cost of childbearing.

Is it possible to be TOO alpha/jerkish?

6 upvotes · 5 February 2014 · /r/askTRP

Yes, you can be too alpha. There is a level of calibration that needs to be taken into account. That said, I recommend to err on the side of alpha rather than too beta. I do think that women tend to shit test about you being too alpha, so don't drop it just because you were called on it- but you may consider re-calibrating to take it a bit easier if she is clearly turned off.

I haven't experienced the too-alpha problem in hookups, but in LTRs you may need to scale it down a bit.

I don't know why you're trying to engage me when you haven't provided an ounce of data showing my position is that women are malicious or machines.

Instead, you've just taken my life views and called them unreasonable, nothing but a subjective judgement.

Women don't love men the way men love women. This neither implies machinery nor malice, I believe this to be the nature of women and not a conscious decision. It's no more machine or malice than having tits is. (Which it is decidedly not).

Getting married: Never do it. Great advice for anybody who understands the legal system and doesn't want the state involved in their romantic lives. Implies nothing of the sort towards women, their alleged malice, nor any inner workings that implies metal and gears.

Women will try to cheat men out of their money at the first opportunity.

Women can cheat men out of money, which is why you never leave yourself in a place with zero options. Mind you I'd give the same advice to a gay guy considering marriage.

I just established for a second time that I do not view women as malicious or machinery. It appears it is you who is unable to offer the common ground, and instead you spend much time attempting to give me a position instead of allowing me to take a position, which as rule #7 states, is against subreddit policy.

attack-defend and withdraw, which are predictive of earlier and later divorcing, respectively, may have a basis in specific forms of failed bids everyday interactions in which couple's are seeking emotional connection with one another.

In other words, this type of unhealthy relationship dynamic is influenced by a pattern of every-day interactions in which one partner responds to the other partner's perceived negative behavior by withdrawing affection and denying opportunities for emotion connections.

That's not dread game.

Dread game is covertly communicating that you have options. It can be as subtle as working out, losing weight, or as obvious as flirting with other chicks. Welcome!

Game does not exist.

6 upvotes · 13 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I think that naturally, most people do things that hurt their game.

Let's say there's an attractiveness scale. We don't have to agree what it means for this example, but let's do 1 to 10.

A man might be an average of a 7 if he's well groomed and properly dressed.

He can hurt his attractiveness maybe 1 or 2 points by not being well groomed and dressed.

He can help his attractiveness by maybe 1 or 2 points by working out and building muscle.

He can hurt his attractiveness by making simple mistakes that show lack of confidence.

Let's say a 7 shows a lack of confidence. Might drop him down to a 6 or a 5. Let's say a woman was interested in him as a 5 anyhow- then it would appear game is not necessary. Yet he could possibly date better looking girls if he tightened up his game and presented himself as a 7.

That is what game is. Everybody has some fluidity upwards or downwards a few points. Very few people are taking advantage of their potential value.

So no, it's not as simple as learning social cues. But, yes, learning social cues helps.

Some people who have had a lot of luck with women can still improve themselves.

Game does not exist.

[Mod] New Reddit X-Link Policy - No More of that

6 upvotes · 10 September 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Ultimately, the decision to stop linking altogether was mine, though some of the moderation team here agreed with me (not unanimously).

The drama was related to the admin stepping in, taking action, and reprimanding us for not properly controlling the situation.

Upon hearing this, I explained how we literally have zero control over what took place, and have no actual features as moderators to enforce their rules. Furthermore, I asked what the rules actually were, since these aren't "theredpill" members, they're reddit members, and ultimately can post and vote anywhere anyway.

The admin went silent. This is the second time I've asked for clarification and/or help, and they've blown me off wholesale.

Yes, they're looking for reasons to can us anyway. But they tend to do so by stretching their rule book. It is my opinion that we should remove all doubt entirely. If somebody is voting on a thread somewhere, it is on their own volition and without even the vaguest whiff of endorsement from theredpill.

They may still remove us, and it is not my intention to further erode our sub in the mean time, but I'm forcing their hand. If they do so, they will have to admit it's because they don't like us, not because we broke rules.

We will never modify the type of content here. This was an important rule to enact to remove any doubt that we are breaking the TOS.

The idea of "vote manipulation" is so broad they could apply it to anything. But ultimately, it is their site and their choice. So we follow their rules.

That doesn't mean we'll change our content or message when it's not PC enough.

I typically define "maturity" as ability to assess potential future consequences, and ability to deal with them responsibly should they occur.

An immature person acts out and does not recognize their actions have consequences, often blaming others for the unforeseen consequences.

A mature person makes informed decisions to help shape and mitigate consequences, and recognizes their own role in unforeseen consequences.

There's a strange trend in our culture that basically boils down to this: Sensitivity is most important point in any discussion.

Things like "everybody's different" and "why don't you just do what makes you happy?" are completely nonsense, disregarding the notions that trends can be found and noticed, similarities and differences can be explored, and that thinking about a strategy for happiness can lead to happiness.

Left to the postmodernists, nothing can ever be known, everybody is entirely unique so discussion is meaningless, and criticism is insulting therefore even asking for advice is inviting people to oppress you.

6 upvotes · 31 May 2013 · /r/askTRP

Objectively, the idea that a marriage contract is equivalent in logical terms to a contract binding a person into the military for a period of time doesn't hold water, in the US.

I don't disagree in a legal sense. I do disagree in the sense that both are willful surrenders of autonomy.

In the military, you accept the risk that death is a possibility upon entering into the contract, along with all the other terms.

In order for spousal rape to be equivalent to death in the army... rape would have to be understood as an acceptable possibility in a marriage.

Incorrect. The definition of rape would be based on lack of consent. In order for them to be equivalent, one would say that risking one's life is consented to in the army, and having sex is consented to in marriage. Once that consent is given, death or sex may happen, and you already consented to the activities. Sex with consent would not be considered rape.

Understanding that in other contracts you cannot withdraw consent without breaking the contract.

Prime example of postmodern discourse and it's inability to cope with rational debate. This is why we talk right past our detractors.

Facebook to review policy on "hate" content

6 upvotes · 29 May 2013 · /r/MensRights

"Hate speech" is a descriptor used in postmodern discourse to refer to the discussion of ideas that does not make sensitivity it's priority. Reality, objectivity, and truth not only take the back seat in postmodern discourse, but they rarely even get on the bus.

In order to discuss curing HIV/AIDS, one of the harsh realities is that researches must know and discuss the effects of HIV/AIDS and how it kills people. Left to postmodernists, the discussion could only be had by people who either have HIV or personally know somebody with HIV, and the small detail about death would be left out of the discussion altogether, as offense or confrontation (read: discomfort) must be avoided at all times.

In this discourse, the only acceptable speech is the one that caters to the lowest common denominator, assuming all individuals are solipsistic and can only take offense to abstract ideas instead of entertain them for the sake of debate. They must assume that discussion of a group as a whole must describe themselves as an individual who resides in the subset of this group, and further, any discussion of the whole is a covert targeted attack on the individual.

If one's relation to the subject matter is the only authority on the subject, then discussing the subject directly reflects on those debating them. Therefore, indicating that AIDS patients often die from aids is a direct threat to any AIDS patient discussing a possible cure.

Because equality is the goal, no individual should ever suffer a conversation so insensitive as to subject and threaten somebody with their own mortality.

And there you have it- the postmodernists find themselves face to face with mortality and are blinded by it because they know not how to think and discuss abstractly. The term "hate speech" becomes their label of that which breaks these rules, because breaking the rules of postmodernists is a direct offense to those utilizing postmodern thought, because they know no other way to internalize a separate worldview without linking themselves emotionally to it - including the very conversation about postmodernism.

6 upvotes · 22 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

So my question is, what are women supposed to do? What would be a good 'path' that women could take upon hitting their twenties where their pussy value is the highest? Should they live a conservative life and search for the alpha they can tie down, or should they live a life of hooking up with many men?

It's up to them. But no fair wasting your twenties to learn that you're no longer attractive and cry "where have all the good men gone?"

I don't think there is a good path for women today. But I put the blame squarely on women's shoulders for breaking the social contracts they are now upset aren't working. You can only disenfranchise men for so long before they stop caring.

You're arguing that we've somehow set up impossible obstacles for women and shame them for failing. But the reality is, they set up impossible obstacles for us, and now they're failing. And yes, we shame them for it, not that it does any good.

I am entirely denying that this is an effect that can be falsified. A subreddit on arithmetic will never conclude $1+2=4$, and can just as easily be labeled as a "circle jerk" for agreeing on that, or even worse- focusing conversation around this simple concept.

A subreddit has one function: To narrow the scope of discussion. So long as the discussion has some level of objectivity (or even previously agreed upon subjectivity), it's wrong to call it a circle jerk just because it matches this definition.

Worse still, those who make the accusation cannot be falsified, because all content limited in scope will always fall victim to this broad definition.

Therefore I will not entertain the concept. Anything referencing circlejerks on this sub will be deleted. Repeat offenders will be banned.

I've been hanging out here for months... not fully agreeing with everything, but far from disagreeing. There's a lot that can be said about the this sub-reddit. But never once, anywhere, have I seen anyone advocate rape or any kind of physical harm to a woman. I really don't understand where this mindset comes from... it's an interesting property of "the hive mind".

Makes me wonder if people just write this sub off without actually doing any critical thinking about its content... or worse... without reading any of its content at all.

I think that's just about it.

A discussion regarding "nice guys" in r/trmblinaction

6 upvotes · 7 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I don't remember who originally posed this theory, but not too long ago somebody was considering that since women are solipsistic by nature, and they generally manipulate to get what they want (provisions and such), that they cannot internalize a mental state of somebody else who would be nice who isn't being manipulative. They can't even comprehend the idea.

All of the systems, every moral rule, every major religion, ever economic force, every advancement, every last bit of the evolution of the mind is completely and utterly inextricably linked to sex.

Why do you crave success? Because success was a way to increase the odds of your offspring's survival, so women grew to be attracted to success, and your mind evolved to reward you with happiness for being successful.

EVERYTHING IS ALWAYS ABOUT SEX.

Every time your mind rewards you with a shot of dopamine, every time you feel good about something, it's because of the sexual success your ancestors had.

The things that don't feel good, the things that bring you misery? Those are the things that did not reward your ancestors- in fact those are the things that did not contribute to human survival.

I'm simplifying, of course, but understand sexual strategy is a very large encompassing topic.

Women have made it clear what they want. They want to ride the carousel, and they want to settle down after hitting the wall.

No amount of nobility will somehow convince them that you'll be the one to change this when society as a whole tells them to be different. You know what society tells the girl thinking about getting married at 21? Don't do it! You're too young to know what you like! Travel, see the world, get experience before you settle down.

And eventually every woman hears the calling. It's hypergamy to the rescue- with it's best pal the feminine imperative, there to pave the way with rationalizations and false promises.

You won't change her. You won't change society. Your honor means nothing to people who do not recognize honor.

Honor is a trait for men, by men, and only recognized by men. No woman will ever fall in love with your honor.

They do make one decent point though; there's a certain amount of "bitter boys" in here. That's going to be this philosophy's Achilles' heal.

How bitter people become when they read these theories will have no effect on the philosophy.

I've said this before, and I'll say it again: Try and focus less on "feminism sucks", and more on constructive TRP analysis. (There's MRA subs for feminism bashing, if you are so inclined!)

Feminism is one of the loudest facets of the feminine imperative. To ignore it would be unwise.

Frankly, the only thing we need to avoid in the future is concern trolling. Anybody who comes here with the idea of "making the movement better" by silencing any part of it is a detriment to the theory.

Luckily, I'm in charge and we won't see that happening.

If you believe bitter is the wrong way to go- I encourage you to try to help the bitter users.

Some of the deeper beliefs can appear misogynistic to the uninitiated.

Like the view that women shouldn't vote.

Or the view that women don't contribute to society.

Or the view that women are just over grown teenagers.

But these don't muddy the waters, these are views that have very well thought out reasons.

Some of the guys, upon first waking up, might appear angry. And I think that's ok. Eventually most guys settle down. I don't think that's bad. I think it's good that there's a place to do that.

We won't be changing that nomenclature because they're words that mean what we need them to mean.

People like to think that because we're conscious, we're somehow completely exempt from the very evolutionary psychology that we observe from other animals on the planet.

It's theorized that for much of our evolution, we were not exactly cognizant. We still have evolutionary left overs showing our reflexive brains - (also known as the lizard brain). This causes most of our reflexive emotions and often governs the sort of behavior that our conscious mind has to play catch-up figuring out what happened/why we feel the way we do/why we reacted the way we did.

Alpha and beta traits specifically appeal to the lizard brain portion of a woman. Although we're all thinking conscious individuals, the war between evolutionary psychology's lizard brain and our conscious will is a huge chunk of why the red pill exists today.

Alpha & Beta are descriptors for animals that exhibit behaviors that affect mating. Typically these are driven by external circumstances. An alpha chimp can beat the shit out of other chimps, that's what makes him alpha and that's why betas rarely challenge him.

But in our culture, consciousness gave us the ability to fight these wars in a more metaphorical and abstract sense. That means alpha/beta are not as intrinsic, and certain behaviors are completely at the whim of the behaving one's will.

The female, not the male, determines all the conditions of the animal family. Where the female can derive no benefit from association with the male, no such association takes place.

There are a few corollaries I would add:

1. Past benefit provided by the male does not provide for continued or future association.
2. Any agreement where the male provides a current benefit in return for a promise of future association is null and void as soon as the male has provided the benefit (see corollary 1)
3. A promise of future benefit has limited influence on current/future association, with the influence inversely proportionate to the length of time until the benefit will be given and directly proportionate to the degree to which the female trusts the male (which is not bloody likely).

Man affections vs boy affections

a while back i finally figured out what makes a good relationship.

most of the gamey talk is all focused on getting laid. getting laid is the easiest thing in the world, after you do it for a while. what's not nearly as simple is to maintain an excellent relationship. i'm going to venture out on a limb and say that MOST relationships are crap. and yet it's really just two fundamental principles, that determine the success of any relationship. it's ridiculous that it took me so long to figure this out.

my relationships used to be sort of average. have a girlfriend, sometimes you get along, sometimes you don't. sometimes she's a cunt, sometimes she's nice. sooner or later there are the annoying bits of jealousy and wondering if she's cheating, and then all the arguments and breakups. standard shit.

to figure out why most relationships suck, eventually you have to look at the type of emotional connection you are seeking:

- emotional validation from your partner
- being able to 'trust' your partner
- support from your partner
- sort of, almost unconditional love from your partner, 'as you are'
- seeking approval from your partner there's more aspects, but that's probably enough to make the point we're getting to.

we are simple creatures. we are programmed to have an emotional connection to the opposite sex. to get a little weird about it for a second though, think about how this programming expresses itself:

there are only two types of man-love our brain is wired for.

one, the love you got, wanted to get, hoped for, maybe experienced – from you mother, as a child. that's a key kind of emotional connection to the female. and, as much as that sounds fucked up, it's the type of connection most men are trying to find again in their adult life – from a girlfriend / wife.

seriously consider this. look at the few bullet points above. what kind of 'love' is that? let's not judge it, just look at it objectively. that's how most men view love. they don't think about it consciously, but that's the love they got to experience as a child.

here's some news: no girl will ever love you like your mom did.

before we get a bit more into that, let's look at the other type of man-love our brain has wiring for:

the love a father has for his daughter.

again, we have to remove all the incestuous, sexualized, weird bits of it, and just look at the emotional components that drive the type of interaction, expectation, dependence, and outcome. how does a father love his daughter?

- giving emotional validation to the child
- rationing trust, with having 'hand' – control
- providing support
- molding her in his image
- giving approval, as long as the child does at it is supposed to compare these bullets to the ones above. how do you feel about that? take out the mother / daughter thing. just look at the giving & taking ratios, look at where the control lies.

there is always control in a relationship. question is just – who has it?

there is no other emotional romantic connection wiring in our brain. it's either seeking the love you got from your mother as a child, or creating the love you get from your offspring.

everything manosphere talks about fits into this model. the whole concept of 'beta' is embodied in how men deal with women who they want maternal love from. they are the weak ones, seeking approval, expecting this ocean of support, putting a woman on a pedestal. and guess what – it works for shit. mom love is done after you are grown up. realizing that means having to step away from that, coming to terms with the fact that this kind of emotional bond is DONE. being a man means being at the top of the social hierarchy. on the flip side, relationships suddenly work incredibly well when you treat a girl not like an adult that you look up to, an adult that you seek validation from – but like a child.

think about it. shit tests? from an adult, maybe. but a child? how do you treat a child who shit tests you? well ... a lot of men haven't grown up enough to be called men, so they still wouldn't know. but for some of us, all that's missing is this conscious realization. you don't seek the validation of a child, do you? you don't ask a child if it's ok for you to go out, do you? when you want a child to do something, how do you address it?

i'm not saying, 'be a dick'. you still game children, a lot. you want to reward them for good behavior. dealing with kids isn't easy, either. but if you figure that out, then you also figure out a healthy relationship with a girl. i don't really believe that the 'asshole game' is a fully evolved strategy. it's just better than wanting a replacement mom. so when a girl has the choice between a grown up (who is an asshole) vs a sniveling boy who wants a mother – she will of course pick the asshole.

but give her the choice between a father figure, an asshole, and a sniveling boy and the father figure will win, every time. part of that is giving validation, creating boundaries, being clearly in control.

if you want a great relationship, start reading parenting psychology books (not the new age feminist ones). and dog training books. you can take this however far you want, once you get comfortable. xsplat likes to go full on daddy. it's a genius move. a bit depraved? maybe. but better than the advocates of game stuff who act like children themselves – basically saying 'treat girls like you are 12 and in a sandbox with a girl'. and better than mainstream culture which puts out disney shit and romantic comedies that all emulate maternal love relationships (which don't exist).

my relationships have become something entirely different since i started taking the father figure approach. girls love it. they are willing to do anything and everything, and the general bullshit from girls is maybe 5% of what it used to be – before i figured this out.

Is sex the ultimate goal?

6 upvotes · 25 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

The whole point of this is, I get a bigger kick out of screwing with girl's emotions than I do actually screwing them.

I can't say I advocate intentionally hurting people. Learning game and taking the red pill gives you more power over your life than ever before, but with that power comes responsibility. What you do is your choice, but it should be said that your activities are not the goal of this subreddit.

The Arguments against the Red Pill

6 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I will say this once, but it will always remain true. No matter how much it bothers you, no matter how much anybody complains, we will never reframe our argument to appease the feminine viewpoint.

Parts of this will make you uncomfortable. I'm sorry that is your reaction. There is nothing we can do to dumb down reality for you.

The feminine imperative attempts to regularly hijack and modify other movements.

But when you allow sexist (and not just pointing out differences, actively putting on gender below the other) messages to mingle with what you're trying to say, you cheapen and blacken your entire movement.

The only thing trying to cheapen or blacken this movement is you.

A Feminist's Meltdown: Cognitive Dissonance 101

6 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

You are the ones strategizing - they are just trying to live their lives

That is the luxury of the selective gender, they don't have to strategize.

Simply because we attempt to create a model of this world with rules, principles and truths, doesn't make them any less valid. Insanity would be the exact opposite in fact, repeating the same process and expecting a different outcome.

Good point. AND, I think, it's important to note that if we were unable to model reality through theory, we would observe the opposite of predictability; we would be in total chaos! Reactions happening before actions, chains of events violating causality, and only random behaviors that had no discernible purpose. So, given that point, I think it's safe to say there's at least some order to the universe.

Your actions and words have real consequences and when you CHOOSE to de-humanize and treat women like sub-human, or unworthy of respect, or like children or robots, you are doing all people a disservice. Hope someone doesn't do the same to you one day, when they think less of you.

This is a classic defense mechanism feminists use. If you outlaw thought, if you make ideas immoral, you can control the discourse. This was an attempt to stifle thought, ideas, and innovation, not debate them.

Plus, who said wanting to have sex with women was dehumanizing?

Will Being A Misogynist Help You Get Laid?

6 upvotes · 7 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

From a blue pill perspective, we all look terribly cynical and sad, don't we? We look filled to the brim with hatred and appear to look unhappy and unfulfilled. This is not an uncommon sentiment, so don't feel alone in thinking this.

It isn't until you embrace the viewpoint that a new level of satisfaction comes over you.

Of course it's us vs them. It's mating, which is strategical. You've heard the quote "all is fair in love and war." There's a reason love and war are grouped together. Because both are battles of strategy.

Once you remove the morality of decisions that men and women make in mating, you can reveal that what we're talking about isn't negative. Instead, it's neutral. In fact- if you're worried about the red pill, consider this: The blue pill nice guys were our natural state. We literally only embrace this behavior because it is WOMEN who enforce that this behavior be the only one that works!

How backwards is that?

I don't consider the views cynical, but there was a time in my life that I most certainly would've considered these views negative and cynical.

Now I see it for what it is. Neither negative nor positive. Just strategy, and reality.

Women won't think twice (or even once) about throwing shit tests your way and luring you into beta orbiter status for their own gratification and validation. They have no problem embracing their sexual strategy. Why should we be concerned with how our sexual strategy "appears" if they don't! That seems to give them quite the upper hand if we do!

Again, I'm not demonizing the fact that they do it. Instead, I recognize it and use this information to my advantage.

Again, I am not in favor of repealing women's voting rights. I'm merely pointing out that women will counter-intuitively respond with vagina tingles if you happen to maintain that view.

We've always employed our own focus-based moderation which is a form of self-censorship. That is, if the quality doesn't meet our requirements, or if the content is misleading or too soft, we remove it at our own discretion.

Censorship from within a community helps it grow and helps polish the message and keep things on topic. For instance- what would a forum dedicated to cats be if the moderators couldn't remove dog pictures?

The problem here isn't that we've got a quality based or even topic-based censor. The problem here is that the number of ideas we're "allowed" to express is shrinking. Fewer and fewer ideas, words, and phrases are being granted to us.

You might think this is a perfectly workable way to refine your language skills. Perhaps helps you blend in with the normies better.

I've been leading a fight for men and against censorship for close to a decade, which I believe is why the mods here chose forums.red as a safe landing spot.

As people have asked me, why do we have our own platform instead of joining the many alternatives, my answer is always this: I'm not keen to change one boss for another.

Over the years people have asked, why not join site x or y. One of those sites was Voat, which eventually shut down.

While I applaud the efforts of other sites and wish them all the best, the risks of censorship from a new overlord or simply a new platform failing is too high for me.

My interest has always been aligned with facilitating communication and speech for men. This is something I hold dear to my heart and find it important to invest time, energy, and money into.

If you lower sugar, up your fiber, you will definitely lose weight.

/u/kenpachitz I recommend you look into how insulin affects your hunger and the way your body uses and stores fat, what foods affect insulin, and why high fiber foods are so good for losing weight.

You're onto something with satiety. But it's not specifically the weight, it's the proportions of foods that satiate.

You don't have to be a keto cultist to see why your diet and keto have similar results.

Iv seen a lot of hedonism perscriptions on TRP specifically: Fuck more bitches bro

You're missing the point. Of course there are people making prescrtions and many match this criteria. But one is a subset of the other, not the other way around. TRP as a foundation of ideas does not require hedonism.

What is The Red Pill?

5 upvotes · 13 June 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

So yes the Red Pill is an ideology because it presupposes a lot of things like materialism, Atheism, Hedonism, Self help ideology, each of which are Ideological on their own and continue to be Ideological when combined in an ideology strew.

At the core of it, TRP presupposes that humans act in their own selfish interest (or at least what their lizard brain tells them is in their best interest) in sometimes paradoxical ways.

What you are talking about is the prescription.

internet internet internet internet.

In fact, the earliest use of the word, cited in the Oxford English Dictionary from 1974, was with a lowercase i. Initially, there were many internets—the word was used to refer to any computer network comprising or connecting a number of smaller networks; it later came to refer specifically to the global network we know today, which was distinguished as “the Internet” as opposed to “an internet”. It isn’t uncommon for words to take on a capitalized form in a particular meaning regarded as a proper noun (for instance, Americans style the foundational document of their federal government as “the Constitution”); however, in the case of “the Internet”, by the mid-1990s the original need for disambiguation was largely obsolete, and the capitalization convention began to strike some writers and editors as unnecessary, dated, and aesthetically unappealing.

Secondly, it's a social activity. This is literally where you're supposed to meet people.

My goal in preventing censorship is to allow open communication on all fronts- high quality content such as books, and low-quality such as twitter conversations. Blockchain isn't the right technology for one of those.

You know, while I'm not thrilled with a lot of the rhetoric on /r/theredpill... to suggest that contemporary feminism/social justice played no role despite continuously antagonizing men is pretty ridiculous.

Obviously they were going to check out, and since no male space was ever permitted unless it adopted all of feminism's tenets hook, line, and sinker... well, be shocked that it turned out the way that it did.

Perhaps you understand why TRP adopts such rhetoric. It's the antidote to feminism's tenets.

Are there nicer ways to say things? Is there a ton of hyperbole on TRP? Of course. But if we tamper that to appease feminism, well then that breaks the purpose.

Actually, most men I know making $250K+ a year want to marry a woman capable of making $150K+ a year. Those women sometimes quit, slow down, or adapt their careers after getting married, of course, but it's important for them to have reached those career landmarks.

The vast majority of American men in the top 1% marry women in the top 1% (note, I said 1%, not .001%, so we're talking the average multi-millionaire).

Most men want to marry a hot young wife that puts out and can cook.

Disappointment in the Lack of Critical Thinking

5 upvotes · 30 July 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

Oh man, I already banned you for doing exactly what this post was warning about.. but man you really have a lot to unpack here.

However, just because women may use men as a means to an end doesn't make it necessarily okay for us to do the same.

Of course- women can maximize their strategy, but we must appeal to a nebulous higher authority that coincidentally limits our ability to maximize our strategy.

It is immoral to use another human being as simply a means to an end. Essentially, you shouldn't go to a bar and try to use women solely to get sexual pleasure for yourself.

Why?

I personally think that there are ways to approach women while not simply using them as a means for sex or whatever else you want.

But that isn't really the point, is it? The point is before you move to step 2 (whether that be sex, relationships, or whatever) you first need to succeed at step 1. Which is being selected by a woman (that is, being attractive enough to be selected).

So what happens when the first woman you approach turns you down? You gotta approach another woman. How many times do you get rejected before you become immoral?

He is saying that you shouldn't just go up to any woman at a bar simply because she's a woman at a bar and you happen to know she has a vagina you might be able to shove your dick into. You should go up to a woman because you are attracted to her, you're interested in possibly having some fun flirting, possibly having sex — i.e. various possibilities — but that you're also not going to throw your individuality out the window in pursuit of some pussy.

I don't think many PUAs were in the habit of approaching women they weren't attracted to.

You're pretending that banter or other connections are somehow more meaningful than sex. That operates within the frame of the feminine imperative that works hard to make this about the individual and about special soul magic, all in an attempt to knock down your sexual strategy a few pegs.

When you make an appeal to morality, you gotta wonder, whose fucking morality are we appealing to? The one society has conditioned us to believe in?

And yes, I banned you for the personal attack on a post specifically outlining why we're going to ban people for personal attacks. Clever move.

5 upvotes · 26 July 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

The climate debate is mostly off topic for this forum, but I will say that I've read enough on the subject that I don't think it's conclusively decided to be anthropogenic. I think I've heard enough lies from environmentalists that I'm skeptical on all fronts:

We're losing the rain forest. Actually we're gaining more forested area than we're losing.

We're losing the ice caps. Actually we're gaining more ice. Actually we're not sure.

The polar bears are facing extinction because of man-made global warming. Actually polar bear populations are on the rise.

We lose 150 species to extinction every day due to man. Actually we've recorded about 800 extinctions over the past 400 years, any number higher than that is a made-up computer model with zero actual proof.

Man causes global warming: actually, carbon dioxide appears to have much less effect than predicted, also carbon dioxide is good for plants, also we're not anywhere close to peak carbon in the history of the planet, etc.

I'm not saying I know the answers. But I do know when I hear somebody tell me something with absolute certainty but they can't actually prove it, and it's supposed to make me feel bad/guilty/spend more money/vote a certain way that I am being manipulated and therefore I will be skeptical.

I think one of the major failings of some of these projects is how hard some of them are to adopt. Signal exists, and yet facebook is people's messenger of choice.

As for security, our small tribe infrastructure should limit how damaging leaks will be. They will be based on small networks of trust which will be harder to infiltrate with very little upside for doing so.

Keeping a narrow focus was and is still crucial to the community. The reason people are here and not any other manosphere site is because we keep things on the topic of what works. As is the nature of a sexual arms race, what worked today won't necessarily work again tomorrow. This new development can be seen as a response to a changing marketplace.

Can mastery of many different topics be pursued at the same time?

5 upvotes · 20 March 2017 · /r/TheRedPill

I tend to go from one pursuit to another in about 1 - 2 month cycles. I have about 30 started projects, many of which I return to for a month at a time.

Some of those projects are learning and practice. Some of them are a grind that you have to push to do to get good. Ignore the lack of immediate feedback and just push. (Music, fitness, writing, etc)

Doing it in cycles helps because you don't have to switch gears as quickly or often. But it keeps you from burning out on any individual item.

One needs to draw the line between those who are too lazy to try (voluntary), and those who don't know what to do (involuntary).

It should be noted that a lot of people who are lazy do so to avoid failure. If they never try, they never have to fail. It's likely they did try at one point (highschool) and eventually learned it hurt less not to try than to try and fail.

Without a clear path to success (such as TRP), I can't say I blame the guys for giving up and not trying. They didn't see how matters could be different. Even though most people know step one is to get rid of the gut.

CMV: TRP is concerned with probability, while the TBP is concerned with possibility.

5 upvotes · 10 May 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

There's more to it than just the fact that TBP fundamentally misunderstands generalizations (as you describe it, they're concerned with the possibility rather than the probability).

TBP disagrees that reality can be known, taking exception to the idea that probability itself can be determined. Rather than take a stab at understanding why people exhibit certain behaviors, TBP would rather take the stance that "everybody's different" and that no overarching theory can be found.

Of course, if no patterns can be found, that means everything is effectively random. This is something that BPer's will also deny, as though there's some magical middle grey area.

I am of the belief that understanding enough variables, most behavior can be either somewhat predicted or at the very least, understood in context.

MRP and the ProMarriage Stance- Can Someone Explain the Schism in relation to TRP?

5 upvotes · 9 May 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

It seems like MRP are generally older, and actually in marriages. I think it's more conducive to developing game plans that don't include nexting your wife.

I think that's incorrect. While the average age on TRP is younger because we include younger folk, that doesn't mean the older people aren't also on TRP.

We've always had a LTR flair and now the MRP flair to discuss game plans that go beyond the simple 'next' advice you'd get on askTRP.

The problem is that the subreddit MRP became a place to justify poor actions rather than understand what they were.

You can tell by their negative attitudes towards the so-called "boys" on TRP that these guys are doing everything they can to feel better about their actions.

I'm selling nothing. It was a question that was asked, and I simply wanted to see the debate play out.

It's fascinating to me, though, that so many see simply asking the question as some sort of de facto endorsement of some demented offshoot possible conclusion. That's not a principle the red pill was founded on. Where I come from, questions can be asked and discussed. Especially when the discussion is on topic for the forum.

The Final Exam

5 upvotes · 27 April 2016 · /r/RedPillWomen

If a woman wants to keep her n-count low, the way to do that isn't "hold out for a promise", it's "immediately and permanently reject any man you're capable of holding out on".

Whisper, this is an incredibly fascinating approach to this, and I'll be honest I'm really not sure what I think about it yet.

The two camps are currently- hold out until he proves he's going to stick around, or lose anybody you can hold out on.

Which ends with longer relationships?

Which ends in a lower N count?

Which ends in more happiness?

There's a lot of negative reactions in the comments here, I hope - for their sake- they understand their negative comments are welcome and their critiques important, so they don't think they're taking crazy pills. Your ideas have merit, but I'm not sure they're conclusive.

What's the worst that could happen? Visit my kids and pay some cash? I'd still do my thing. The reward - I keep those kids and that woman to the end of my days. There is reward there.

No, the worst that can happen is not being able to visit your kids and paying alimony and child support. And giving them the lifestyle that they've grown accustomed to. And losing your job but not being able to get a court order to change your payments soon enough, so you fall behind and get placed in prison for contempt of court. Not being able to find a job and the court finding you're under performing for what you should be able to make so you go endlessly into debt.

Does not being married protect you from this? Well, at least protects you from losing half of your stuff and an alimony payment before being raked over the coals. (Prenup be damned).

There seems to be this notion that 'RedPill' men don't get married. Who the fuck said we were 'redpill' men? Choosing the 'RedPill' means choosing the harsh truth of reality over the comfort of the lie. Did Neo become a 'RedPill' when he chose the truth? Fuck no – he just embraced the reality of who he was and what he was capable of. Choosing the truth means choosing to embrace your masculine nature over remaining what you have been told to be.

The red pill simply being the term for accepting reality for what it is, it's true, red pill men don't do anything in particular.

However, handing a loaded gun to a woman and asking her to point it at you is typically something most men don't do when they realize that's what marriage is.

'Marriage 2.0' certainly favors women in the event of divorce, but marriage itself favors the man.

I disagree in every respect. Marriage 2.0 invokes a threatpoint, which gives the woman unilateral control over nuking a marriage with cash prizes for her while simultaneously asking her to respect the man she has this control over. Learning to master game in spite of this is a feat, and certainly an honorable notion for those who took the vows before recognizing what a bad deal it is.

But make no mistake, honor is a male trait, and women have no such understanding or desire. She will nuke the marriage well before it gets as hard for her as it got for you to get to this point. She will never operate with honor. Your sacrifices to keep the marriage together will never be recognized.

It's nice that you want to follow through on your vows, even in light of the fact that this will always be a one-sided agreement. But I think it's misleading to suggest that it's an optimal strategy for somebody knowing what you know now.

I see these weak husbands and sad wives – I'm in the 'married man' category so they are in a way making me look bad – fuck that.

I agree that weak men are a problem onto themselves. Marriage 2.0 made it easier for women to leave weak men once married. But weak men don't make marriage the bad deal, women will leave them married or not. Marriage is the bad deal irrespective of this.

A woman might accept what she learns from TRP and think, given my circumstances and options I'm not going to be able to lock down a really high quality man, so my best strategy is to provide comfort to several low value men, providing love in exchange for emotional and financial support. She will be a spinster, but she won't necessarily be unhappy, if she is staying true to what is authentic to her.

Yes, I suppose I should rephrase, nobody should hope to avoid spinsterhood by succumbing to hypergamy. But if a woman wants to do the equivalent of MGTOW on RPW, that is a personal choice and one that can and should be able to be discussed.

I intend on running this sub with a very similar thought process as TRP- MGTOW, Plate spinning, and LTR are all valid goals and strategies, even though they differ. And a discussion on the individual merits should always be welcome.

If this sub is going to be arguing back and forth as to whether to give in to hypergamy or not, I am not convinced anything useful will come of it. While rationally I agree it makes sense to discuss theory without value judgements, I am not sure personally whether I will be able to engage much or not, as I am looking to improve my marriage, not be reminded that I could leave with half his money.

I agree that giving into hypergamy would be a bad long term strategy, in fact, that's what this sub was built on- resisting the natural tendencies for better long term strategies.

Nobody here should be making the claim that spinsterhood is a desired long term outcome...

Those called out as idiots were the newcomers who talked out of their asses.

If anything, call it contradictory. Call a mod or a TRP Endorsed an idiot (and back it with logical and critical reasoning) and be prepared for hell. Because it doesn't matter what you say, it matters who you're saying it to. It's the nature of groupthink to gang up on the weak and the isolated. Try attacking those in power (regardless of actual right or wrong, correct or incorrect) and you'll find yourself as the isolated target.

Don't forget that the endorsed contributors are here on merit and nothing more. We endorse people who have proven a history of quality contributions.

And they bring a lot of good content, that bring this subreddit value. If some new kid shows up and beats his chest and starts calling an EC an idiot, damn right we're going to give him hell. Because he did nothing to prove himself or bring quality to our users, and we sure as hell not going to just leave our actual contributors out to dry while noobs who believe this is freedom america and that justice on the red pill forum must be upheld can run amok and make noise and remove value from our readers.

it doesn't matter what you say, it matters who you're saying it to. It's the nature of groupthink to gang up on the weak and the isolated

Calm your tits, there's no giant secret conspiracy where a group of guys who give up countless hours of their time trying to keep order on the most trolled subreddit (known as moderators) are here to keep the little man down or horde power like we're able to just take it down to the bank laughing our way about the new kid we gave a verbal lashing to.

I mean for fucks sake, here you are, making a ridiculous argument, accusing the mods of impropriety, who literally do this out of the kindness of their hearts, and you're not banned, not removed, just getting a response from a mod who has given years of his life to ensuring this place works and stays on top of its subject.

But really, what have you brought to this sub? Why should we let you sit around and fling accusations that require us to continuously defend ourselves rather than do our actual job? Do you have a good defense for why your garbage of a comment is better content here than what our ECs bring to the table?

Of course you don't.

5 upvotes · 8 October 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

Very good points. I'll add:

A big portion of SJW infiltration is about normalization of new/different ideas and concepts in order to subtly steer conversation. Some obvious examples:

- Can we tone down the anger? Too many angry people. Surely we would be okay if we got rid of some of the anger!
- We would look better if we didn't use that language, then the people calling us misogynists wouldn't have anything to complain about!

And from your example:

Focus on edge cases within the cultural spectrum

This is a very clever form of infiltration because what it does is first make you accept the premise (well, yes, some women have done xyz), and then make you modify your tone to make exceptions in your speech:

Instead of "All women will xyz" they want you to say:

"Some women, and some men as well, might do xyz, but it's important to note that both genders do it and it's not uniquely feminine."

That's a race to the bottom, attempting to correct all speech politically based on a few outliers, essentially lowering the bandwidth and effectiveness of our communication.

But our mod team is good, we won't have it.

he rise of women in the workforce is often provided as one of the reasons for increasing divorce rates also - women with incomes are much freer to pursue divorce, and indeed a lot of unemployed women in low-income families stay in bad/abusive marriages out of necessity.

I think the adoption of no-fault divorce was the real player here- since divorce meant cash and prizes for women.

You see, men will very readily cater their physical sexual “preferences” in accordance with what has proven sexually successful for them in past experiences. In other words, men tend to return to the same watering hole they found to be plentiful in the past. These preferences of convenience manifest themselves as ‘fetishes’ for men. And you don’t even need all that extensive research to prove this. All one need do is search the vast variety of porn available catering to the physical attributes that men will fetishize. Big boobs, small boobs, big ass, small ass, every hair color of the rainbow, shaved snatch, hairy snatch, teen girls to MILFs and older, tan, pale, ultra-thin to the ubiquitous BBWs (Big Beautiful women). Ladies, name the physical attribute(s), and there’s a fan-group just waiting to bang you. Rule 34 was never more provable than in men’s willingness to fuck damn near any physical demographic of women – just ask the female midgets catering to that fetish of porn.

Best Way to Find a Plate?

5 upvotes · 12 December 2014 · /r/askTRP

Finding plates is limited to how well you can find women in general. That's actually sometimes the hard part.

As for plate spinning, here's how I get it to happen.

First, you start seeing a girl casually. You don't discuss exclusivity. Don't bring it up. Keep it casual.

Do this for as many girls as you want to spin at a time.

Eventually, a plate will bring it up (that's what they want). My strategy has always been to play tortured soul.

"I'm sorry, I'm just really not in a place in my life where I am ready to do take on that commitment. I thought maybe I would be, but I'm not. I understand if you want to stop seeing me, but I really like seeing you."

Right there, ball's in their court, and they actually feel bad for you. I've never had a plate leave angry with this line.

Now some do leave at that point (usually about 3 months in is when this conversation happens). The ones that don't leave now implicitly understand the rules of the game. They will assume you have other plates, but you don't bring them up, and you don't tell them. They'll likely figure it out on their own. Especially if you have the misfortune of being facebook friends. They'll know who else you're spinning.

But that doesn't make them angry, it makes them try harder.

I've also noticed some plates become very proactive (bring dinner and beer regularly) because they want to try to monopolize your time away from other plates.

Occasionally, when a plate has been seasoned, I will get a lot less cautious, knowing I have them on the hook, that's when you can start getting bold.

I would regularly bring one plate out with me while picking up women at a bar. She provided good social proof, and didn't do anything about it. She knew the rules.

Sometimes I'd introduce two plates in social settings. I wouldn't spell it out, but they knew, and would start getting aggressive about who "owned" me.

The key is, having them hooked before ever letting it on overtly that they're plate status. Before it's known, make sure it's just a threat of plate status. They should assume you're doing other chicks because you're happening, but it should be entirely in their minds, and therefore they can use plausible deniability to pursue you.

/u/FleetingWish,

I think most here would agree with me when I say that you've been a very positive part of /r/redpillwomen, and /r/fpua as well. I know we don't chat too often, but I recall the days when /r/fpua was just starting to get going again, and I really admired the advice and commentary you provided over there.

Stay strong, and remember that melanoma, when caught in the first few stages, is incredibly survivable and has a great prognosis, even in later stages you have very good odds. I realize how scary it can be, as I've had melanoma strike personally in my family as well as myself. But don't let that get you down. Modern medical science has come a long way!

Looking forward to your contributions for many years to come.

I think that women might follow the red pill because it does help them effectively with a purposeful strategy.

For instance, women have an upper hand in our culture, but only tend to unwittingly to serve their innate hypergamy. This isn't actually advantageous per se, as many women hitting the wall find out they've been lied to about optimizing the second portion of their strategy (beta bucks).

Now, they are free to do what ever they want to optimize their strategy, which still gives them the upper hand.

Some women choose red pill because they want a relationship/family/husband and they realize this is the best way to effect these goals.

I don't care about fair or unfair, but when the very thing that made the place "attractive" was the last generation of experienced users, handing off the baton is indeed the veteran's responsibility.

It doesn't matter in the long run, we have plenty of high quality contributors, and we add new ECs weekly. But it is a disappointment. (They aren't women afterall :P)

That said, I've taken a lot of these complaints to heart, and have been moving the sub in a more positive direction (see latest sticky).

Couple that with the fact that they really do spend a lot of time antagonizing and trolling, it was no surprise to me that they tried to get me banned as quickly as possible.

How to handle a 'flaky' girl.

5 upvotes · 20 February 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

Well, on one side, you gotta know when the game is up. If she's not interested, she's not interested. But... I find that if I can manage one-on-one with somebody, I can usually get them interested.

I've been trying to perfect my online game- it's not the easiest- and one thing I've noticed is that girls who will be flaky in general will immediately warm up after you first meet them, and never be flaky again.

So, make sure you've given it an adequate chance to let her become interested before you declare disinterest.

Of course, this is one of the biggest hurdles women put up, which is limiting how much face time you can actually get! It's almost as if they know it makes them susceptible to people like me... I'm not the most attractive person in the room, but if I can get chatting with them it doesn't take long to spark attraction.

So hurdle one: get a captive audience before nexting a flake.

Now, if you met this chick one-on-one already and she's flaking, her interest waned over time. There's no real cure to that other than to rush the bang to the day you meet.

I personally try to get plates- so my game is meet once, start spinning and bang next time. It's rather effective, but the flake rate of chicks at bars is close to 80%- they won't even remember you tomorrow if they were drinking.

I attempt for multiple exposures. Building comfort, and flirting. Bars aren't my cup of tea.

Accidentally had Tinder set to both men AND women and didn't notice for awhile because I just right-swipe w/o even looking. The response I got made me seriously consider that it might be easier to just go gay.

John Gottman's relationship research, and the inefficacy of "dread game"

5 upvotes · 19 December 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Ok, so your girlfriend/wife has lost interest in you. You realize she may not be attracted to you any more. Maybe she saw a movie that reminded her what love was, or there's a new guy at the office who seems charming. Or _____ maybe you got fat. She might not even know what it is, but she just isn't "feeling it" right now. She may not have communicated this, but most guys will at least subliminally notice when a woman is losing interest in them.

Now, one option is to plead and bargain with her. This is the wrong way to go. Things like "how can I make this better?" or "how can I make you love me again?" This is an attempt at negotiating attraction, something I strongly feel doesn't work. When a girl loses interest, she may list off rational reasons why "you never take out the trash, I don't feel like you care, and it's just not working for me anymore" but a man mistakenly thinks that he can fix it: "ok! I will fix it, I'll take out the trash! I will take you out to dinner more often!"

He's still trying to navigate this relationship rationally, but he doesn't understand that her attraction to him isn't rational, and although these aspects of the relationship may have contributed to her declining interest, they cannot simply be addressed rationally and flip the attraction light switch back on.

Enter dread game. First and foremost, it's important not to suddenly do a 180 and shower her with attention, even if that was one of her complaints. It's important not to try to "fix" what she says is broken, but instead you work on your own game and improve your standing in the sexual market.

Now ultimately, we call it dread game because it covertly signals to your partner that you have options and can accomplish a few different things:

- It can make your mate try harder. If she sees you getting skinnier at the gym, she may realize she needs to get herself into shape to keep you around.
- It can make her anxious, she may become more aware of the fragile nature of the relationship, where security was actually a cause in her boredom or waning interest.
- It relies partially on the concept "you never know what you have until you've lost it" and allows her to enter into a mind-set that considers life without you. This may help re-energize her attraction to you.

In the words of Rollo Tomassi:

The idea isn't to instill terror from fear of loss, but rather to demonstrate higher value; particularly when a woman's attention is straying into comfortable, routine familiarity and she begins seeking indignation from other sources.

Sometimes all that's necessary to provoke that imagination is to get to the gym, dress better, get a raise, travel for work, change your routine, adopt a Game mentality, hang out with a new (or old) friend, be cocky & funny with her – risk to offend her sensibilities.

Lets be clear, the vast majority of women are secure enough not to allow this condition to get the better of them, and it's in the extreme cases I've used above that real neuroticism flourishes. Contrary to popular belief I'm not an advocate of the Dark Triad methodologies of Game. Not because I think they're ineffective, but rather because, with the right art of Game they're not even needed. Only in extreme cases are the dark arts to be employed, and if a situation necessitates their use it's important for a guy to understand that a line has been crossed with a woman who necessitated their use.

So basically, dread game is normal game within the context of a relationship. We call it dread because it has the effect of instilling some amount of dread that you could leave because now you have more options, which can be an effective tool for re-energizing a relationship. But you could just as simply avoid the term and give advice like "go to the gym" and be none the wiser why it worked.

JustThrewUp nails it below. You don't have to hide your emotions. You still have emotions, but you become intentional on how you use them. Don't lie to yourself, that won't get you anywhere. Make intentional decisions based on them.

Are you feeling sad or depressed? Realize it and make a choice to do something about it. Stoicism is more geared towards not pouring your heart out to a woman you're trying to attract. For better or worse, women don't like depressed men. Either you realize it and succeed, or you deny it and fail.

Emotional stonewalling: the core burden of masculinity

5 upvotes · 5 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I therefore think a lot of red pillers' frustrations aren't truly the result of feminism or women, but rather those social expectations, which they end up doubling down on.

The realization is that women are attracted to this stoicism, and the the thing we fault feminists for in this matter is teaching young boys that emotions are the language of dating.

We double down because it's highly effective.

Now you can blame society for not following feminism's ideals, but I'd rather blame feminism's ideals for not being realistic. It is feminism who is not in line with reality, not the other way around.

Not only does feminism not address these issues, it labels anybody who focus on these issues as shallow or misogynist, and then continues to absolutely hate on women by labeling any woman who would dare have sex with a man like us as insecure, daddy-issue having young immature girls. It's literally been suggested here by blue pillers that the only people who would "fall" for my tricks (i.e. somebody who would ever be attracted to me) must be insecure so I took advantage of them.

When they disagree with somebody they try like hell to label them a rapist. When the truth comes out that we're not rapists, what do they do? They attack our definition of consent. It can't be right- BECAUSE WE'RE RAPISTS!

So then we use the defense- the women we have sex with enjoy the sex and have never accused us of rape.

Well they just don't know they were raped! They are clearly wrong for enjoying the rape, because you raped them because you're rapists!

Nobody hates women more than feminists. They wish to remove all of women's agency and autonomy.

Traditionally, sexual access. And it would be naive not to give weight to this, there's a high price tag on sexual access. Look at any country with legalized (or not legalized) prostitution. Women have what men want, and they'll do a lot for it.

Not saying it's right, and it certainly flies in the face of what feminists propose, but if we want to really look at why and how the market works, it would be wise to realize that yes, sex runs the world.

A lot of us started as the beta-bucks part of that phrase, including myself. It's not really an us-vs-them discussion, more of a reminder not to fall for the trap again.

A lot of those people in /r/relationships threads that we critiqued eventually came over and we explained why we were critiquing. It's not because we hate betas. Instead, we sympathize. We also understand that his failings really are his fault and nobody else's.

Personal responsibility for one's well being is a strong pillar of red pill philosophy. Sometimes a little tough love is what's necessary. I wish my dad had been tougher on me when I was a kid, but growing up with my feminist mother, I learned only the ways of a beta.

Game does not exist.

5 upvotes · 13 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

That's basically it. There is no specific definition of game other than actions that increase your chances.

There are some crazy ideas. Like peacocking. Wear a funny hat or a nice suit. Some people try it and it works, some people fail at it. Honestly, this one doesn't really boost your value (or it shows ridiculous confidence and does a little), but it might get more people talking to you- and that increases your chances.

There are certainly a lot of gimmicks. It's really trial and error. But at the core of it, game is basically what I described.

TRP isn't reddit, we don't have a texting guide with what words to say. I would say that certain phrasing demonstrates low value, so there are things you can text that would be bad. But there's no magic button here, it's just normal advice that a lot of guys didn't get from their fathers.

Let's all talk about how women are financial drains on masculine society." The facts are what they are, it's what you do with those facts that determines whether you're a misogynist.

So instead of putting your perspective about the differences of the genders in this context, you assume the subtext that if we point out the differences, we must be bashing women.

The agreement among every major biologist is that evolution shaped us as a species, and that our minds were shaped via evolution. The debate is how much and what content was shaped by evolution, what was shaped by environment on an individual basis, and how much does culture shape us to condition us (and therefore continue driving culture in a similar fashion).

So, no, evo-psych has not been discredited.

Furthermore, we don't rest our philosophy on evo-psych. We rest it on observation. We attempt to explain our findings using evo-psych. And yes, a lot are just-so stories. But that's OK. We're just trying to sketch-in plausible reasons for what we observe, not make predictions based on evo psych.

The observations allow us to create our hypotheses, which we can then use and make predictions and test them. Evo psych is just a way of trying to put all of our ideas together in one theory. It's certainly not making or breaking the theories.

I've read the fucking sidebar. Again, the idea that there is an absolute nature of women is absurd. You can't break down the entire nature of women across every culture and generation into 10,000 words. Everything in the sidebar deals in extreme generalities. Which is fine for an introduction. But you've yet to point out what's wrong with what I said, which can't be dismissed by one person's cursory overview of what they feel the nature of women is.

You haven't read the sidebar. Because if you did, you'd understand that the theories are not deterministic, but instead probabilistic. Nobody here has claimed an absolute nature of women. Instead what we have here is a framework for understanding women's predispositions in light of evolutionary theory and the history of mating. What we have here are a collection of experiences, some insight on these, and some understandings of the nature of the reactions you get from certain stimuli.

What you've done here is come in claiming NAWALT. Which you'd know why we don't really give a shit about that. If you read the sidebar. Which you didn't.

Yes, we generalize. With good reason. What if I said all women have a vagina? Quite a generalization isn't it? But it's also true! Aside from some weird birth defects or surgeries, women have vaginas. But how could I possibly have extrapolated on anything to arrive at this conclusion if I haven't met every woman??

You see, exceptions exist to every rule. The problem is when everybody thinks they'll be the exception. You absolutely didn't read the sidebar.

My cursory overview of what I feel the nature of women isn't cursory at all. It's the sidebar. Which I curated myself.

Men's rights often turns around and passes forward that same judgement to us, without even blinking an eye.

Their hearts are in the right place, but their brains are a bit behind the curve. They purport to be trying to undo feminism's tyranny while simultaneously swallowing and trumpeting wholesale the feminist party line of equality.

When somebody doesn't like something they try to rationalize it.

Be honest with yourself. I don't want to be a narcissist, and I will likely be less successful with women for it.

If you say that to yourself, I respect your decision.

It's the people who say, "well narcissists are bad so.." who are rationalizing. At the end of the day, it doesn't matter what you think of them, if they get the girls, you have to accept that they get the girls.

The only difference between food and sex for most healthy men is that without food they will die, and without sex they might feel like dying.

There is nothing simplified about my point, nor ridiculous. Sexual drive and the emotional turmoil for nothing being able to appease it is one of the foremost items in a lot of men's minds- exemplified by the continuation of the human species. Exemplified by every amazing major human achievement in history. Exemplified simply by the existence of the human brain- which developed to think abstractly beyond what was necessary to survive purely because of sexual selection.

There was no ridiculous simplification. Just an informed one that you didn't catch on to.

Read "the mating mind" by Geoffrey Miller for an understanding at just how much sex influences literally everything.

All that shows is that the women specifically in this one study received more messages than men and the reason behind that is because gender roles dictate that men are the aggressors when it comes to sex. You've done nothing to demonstrate women can just get any man they want or to demonstrate that people somehow fit into the little boxes you put them in and aren't individuals.

So, no the question wasn't misguided you just can't answer it. Being bombarded by messages from guys who are only interested in sex isn't somehow the best thing to ever happen to you and that only happens if you happen to be very attractive anyway and it doesn't make finding a successful relationship inherently any more easier.

Usually, they do this before they have committed to any one man with the broken seal of their vagina

This made me laugh though. Furthers the fact that this entire subreddit just seems one long exercise in treating women like video games that you insert coins into to get a prize out at the end followed by shaming her and all women if you don't get that prize.

It does answer a question. Just not the misguided one you pose.

I don't presuppose that women can access the man they want. In fact, a large reason we have "where have all the good men gone" articles in the media is because a lot of women are finding out they cannot access the men they so desire.

The problem here is the difference between men and women's mating strategy. I recommend you start by reading the side bar:

Women in Love

Men in Love

Of Love and War

Schedules of Mating

These really outline the differences between the gender's mating strategies.

So what question did I answer?

That women have choices, far more than men. Women are the selective gender, men are the selected. Since you seem to believe that just because men are selected they are on equal footing as women as far as options go, I'll explain- hypergamy states that a majority of women will go for a small minority of men. Since men are the selected, a large portion of men may go without, while a small portion of men will act.. well, hypergamous themselves! Although for men with no strict need for monogamy, instead of swinging from branch to branch you'd more likely see a prevalence of harems (historically as well as present day in some cultures).

So, no the question wasn't misguided you just can't answer it.

You act like you're the first person to challenge me. You want a debate? I'll run laps around you. But don't waste my time. If you're not going to so much as read our sidebar material, what on earth makes you think you're qualified to comment on it?

"Chris Brown can beat me up any time"

5 upvotes · 1 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Being an asshole is a signal of status. Which is why guys without status can fake it.. by being assholes.

The concept here is that it's a signal of excess. If I can take a risk and be rude to a woman, it means I must have other women already lining up (the opposite behavior you'd witness if I were desperate).

Therefore if I'm an asshole, I can afford not to attract the woman I'm being an asshole to, which is in itself a signal that I'm attractive to other women, which makes me attractive to that woman.

Chris Brown being attractive is about fame and status for sure. The interesting point to make here is that he's attractive in spite of his beating women, not because of it. His status lends him such allowances.

That said, beating women, taking other social risks, being Charles Manson, or the kid who shot up the movie theater, adds a bad-boy aspect that is in itself somewhat attractive to women on a primal level.

I think men would prefer paper pushing over risking death every day defending the village.

We've worked towards safer societies, men are responsible for this.

The major change is that now we're relatively safe, women don't think they need men, so they do away with marriage.

Without marriage, men don't have any need to over-produce.

You're over-estimating the quality of the work. Men have done all the jobs all along. Scooping poop in stables, collecting taxes at the top. Men still took care of women, that was what drove society forward.

Defend my assertions against what, you fucking dumbass?

In order to make an argument, you present an assertion and then present evidence building a frame for your assertion. You do so by presenting each supposition, one at a time, and ensuring your opponent accepts your suppositions.

Once you've done that, you can arrive at your conclusion, which is logically inescapable. That is, if you actually argued. Which you didn't.

You are sidestepping everything.

You haven't presented an argument.

See: wall of text telling me I am bad at debating.

You didn't give me much other material to work with.

A method for regulating your text response times so she won't perceive you as needy, desperate, or too available. Anything but completely false?

If you respond eagerly and text multiple times in a row, it appears needy. Let me use an extreme example: If you met somebody and they started texting you 1,000 times without you having a chance to respond. You'd think something's up. Well, how about 500? Still extreme?

Ok, so we agree on the basic premise that there are ways to damage your chances via text.

There is no definitive guide to good texting, but the general rule of thumb is, don't be eager about it.

These tips, it's like you have a whole secret life dedicated to picking up girls for one night stands. It's fucking creepy is what it is.

You just can't stay away from making these emotional arguments! You've lead with your conclusion once again. Remember earlier when you were mad I was only critiquing your debate style? That's because you have no idea what you're doing.

You've added "one night stand" to try to conflate sex with a moral judgement. If a woman wants a one night stand, is she not allowed such freedom? Perhaps, then you shouldn't judge so.

And then you label it creepy. Because in a debate, that right there's some logic. How would one falsify the "creepy" label? Oh, no, I checked the rule book, it's decidedly not creepy! What you've got there is a bad argument, and you're trying to prop it up by assuming I will be dissuaded from debating because my behavior has been branded creepy. You've now tried to distract my argument by assuming I will now defend myself against the assailable creepy label. But I won't, because it's meaningless.

My sound technique to get her phone number without even asking for it. It works because you never give her the opportunity to say "no"—it's a naturally implied "yes." This one actually does sound rapey

At what point did the penis enter the vagina? Or, do you trivialize rape? Do you know there are real rape victims who wouldn't like your joke?

I was going to address the next two points you attempted to make, but I have nothing but the same criticism of those that I do of your first. You have failed miserably to bring forth a coherent argument debunking any red pill theories, and you quit!

You've attempted to even color my argument as misdirection because I actually used my argument to point out your original misdirection! The irony! No trick too low in your book, huh?

I was so looking forward to having a nice debate with somebody who has a different view. But what happened here is a travesty of logic and common sense.

You need to go back to school.

Society pressures men to initiate sexual relationships, yet punishes them when they express their sexual needs.

5 upvotes · 8 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

What do you mean by this?

Well let's say women want the right to vote, which they have, then they should have all the responsibilities that come with that right. Men have to sign up for the selective service at age 18.

Yes women should vote, but you can't have rights without responsibility. Right now women rock the vote and have a huge voice. They could easily vote us into a war that men will fight. That's rights without responsibilities.

I think it is a bit of an insult to women if you patronize them and say they should stay off the front line.

I would say you need to pass a fitness test to get to the front line. If women can't pass the test, that's just how you're build. Not an insult at all. I'm sure some women would pass. But a majority would not. That's not sexism - that's just prudence!

Do elaborate, I don't know what you mean.

Well here's an example: a common feminist trope is that most major CEOs today are men. Of course the problem here is that right now there is no system keeping women from doing this. Women have all the same rights as men right now, and all the tools. Sometimes a group that was previously oppressed doesn't realize that with the freedom, there's still hard work to be done. It wasn't easy for those CEOs. Heck- most men aren't CEOs either!

You have the right to pursue that path. But nobody owes you a multi-million dollar company!

Woman asking out man is desperate, says wise woman. Reddit's TL;DR? Blame men.

I don't wanna start a huge debate about this, but I find it hard to believe that the most evolved species we know of in the universe cannot possibly find a reason to continue living except to reproduce. What about just enjoying life?

The question you need to ask yourself is this: What is happiness?

Happiness is the reward your brain gives you when you fulfill something that is evolutionarily advantageous. It's the drive that kept the species going. Hungry? Unhappy. Eating high calorie food? Addictive because it makes you so so so happy.

The problem is, without the reward system of your brain, there is no "enjoying life" because you need the context of a reward system to experience happiness.

Whether you like it or not- the goals that evolution set in your mind are ones that maximize your sexual potential.

Of course, you don't have to have sex to experience the feedback. That's why men are then given another drive- a sexual drive. I would argue that most men have a hard time reaching happiness without fulfilling this drive because if they could - the human race would go extinct.

The Arguments against the Red Pill

I'm glad you think that sex is the only reward worth seeking in life. I'm sure you will live a long, happy, fulfilling life.

This is evidence of your solipsism. You can't imagine that things that don't make you happy could make other people happy. How on earth do you cope with the number of people who enjoy different foods than you? Do you label them haters too?

The golden irony of the feminist opposition

5 upvotes · 9 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It's rhetorical. Though I'd love to dissect answers, I don't suspect anyone will take it seriously.

The real question it's asking is this- how introspective have you been with your own life?

I've had men and women alike tell me point-blank things that do not hold true in their own lives.

I suspect a blue-piller vs red-piller would have vastly different interpretations given the answer to those questions.

other things here that scare me,

Of course this stuff scares you, it completely counteracts your sexual strategy.

like that women are less intelligent, that they are less capable.

From a physical standpoint, they are less capable. From an intelligence standpoint, consider instead of the word intelligence you replace it with "rational."

"She will never have sex with you, but she will make you believe she would." That's the part that I just don't agree with. Absolutely, there are women that act that way. But most women are just trying to navigate the very difficult and complex social webs that make up our lives, which sexual attraction makes infinitely more complex.

How can you purport to argue with us if you don't even have your own strategy understood?

But taking that and saying that it's somehow the women's fault - that's the crazy part. Teach confidence, teach independence, teach happiness - Some of you get it right, some of you get it horribly wrong... it's the same thing in every PUA society.

Women are the selective gender, so in essence, they do get to set the rules. I wouldn't use the word "fault," that is entirely your addition to this argument from square one. Nobody's blaming but you.

not sexism, not hate.

You've conflated the two. Nobody here hates. Everybody here is sexist. Unless you have a penis and I have a vagina, there are differences in the sexes.

As a moderator of this subreddit, here's my take:

Giving voting rights to women gave them a much larger say in our economic policies than they had actually produced in our economy (Representation without taxation). I feel that this, the destruction of marriage, and a few other feminist things have given rise to our current economic predicament. (as well as global issues and minimum wage, but that's another subreddit).

Women gaining the right to vote was inevitable, and I support it. I do believe in equal rights to the extent that all humans deserve the same legal opportunity to pursue their own happiness.

Would life be easier today if they didn't? Yes. But that's neither here nor there.

Here's the irony of the feminine imperative. They pushed for these rights- and white knight men fought along side. In fact, it was easy to eventually get voting rights for women, because nobody could think of a good argument against it. We all allowed it to happen. But the irony is- and this is the red pill- that what women say and what women do are vastly different.

At no point would I actually vote for removing voting rights. But if I said I was in favor of removing these rights, you'd be damned sure women would paradoxically gain more respect for me. Blame women for that stupid bit.

So I hope this clears up the issue for you. We also do not condone rape, but explain to me why women have rape fantasies?

It's been a while since I've read the post, and I forgot how direct and to the point this is:

he's an idiot who is so thirsty he'll take any woman he can get, and he'll accept her self-proclaimed handicaps as features.

You need look no farther than this sentence as an explanation for almost everything you see in modern culture today.

Thirsty dudes with preferences for obesity (they call it curvy) and terrible attitudes (they call it independence or spunk).

And now you've got decades of Hollywood movies dedicated to women displaying these handicaps as badges of honor. And the thirsty dudes just keep giving them positive feedback.

Meanwhile, people are having less sex today than ever before.

I think there are some apt connections- beta males sick of being taken advantage of by women start to realize they also pay a majority of the taxes for a system that really quite hates them- men are a necessary evil, one that society is trying their best to keep in the corner, just slaving away.

But the problem is that opening your third eye so-to-speak really I think leads men down a path of classic liberalism or libertarianism.

The reason it's so scary to the system is that this leads outside the system. We're not alt-right, we're not "radical." We're slaves realizing the shackles aren't real and have been self-imposed through clever propaganda and a fake 2-party system.

Misogyny Alert: Men's Brains Are Significantly Larger Than Women's Brains

4 upvotes · 11 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

It's called Tabula Rasa theory, and it's taught in colleges as well as grade schools in many places. Gender is a social construct, therefore there are no measurable biological differences. Any minor observable differences are superficial at worst and have zero effect on behavior, decision making, and skill.

There is no scientific basis for it, but they've taken over academia.

That is why saying something like this is controversial, and why a sub like ours is quarantined.

You can use the phrase "men have larger brains" as a litmus test for how plugged-in somebody might be.

Without making any value judgement (such as men are therefore superior) or even presenting an argument that women have no biological advantages (They quite obviously do), people instantly get worked up by a completely benign and 100% fact.

It's sometimes useful to challenge internal biases by looking at the visceral reaction to statements such as this.

"Well, in the future I'd like something serious, just not right now."

4 upvotes · 29 January 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I've said this before so it may seem like I repeat myself a lot...

Career and education is neither sufficient for attraction, nor required.

For instance:

- A college degree will not make a fat, ugly woman attractive to most men.
- A hot, skinny, hb10 blonde will attract most men with or without a college degree.

The test is this, would you rather date an ugly woman with a degree that you are not attracted to vs hot woman with no degree that gets you going?

10 times out of 10, men choose physical characteristics over meaningless traits like career, education, etc.

To compound the issue, women prefer men they consider "above" them. That means if you have a power-earner top-exec woman, there's a good chance she won't respect most guys who don't earn at least as much as she does. Men have an innate sense for that and know that if women reach these high levels they become impossible to please.

Men have no such disposition.

Now I know you say that career and education is important in an LTR, and you're not entirely wrong on that level in the sense that all else being equal a man will opt for somebody who is closer to them on these matters.

But that puts career and education at the very, very bottom of the priority list.

Because before something like that was ever taken into account, you would first have to be on equal footing with other women in the looks and personality department.

If a woman was looking to improve her chances at a decent LTR I would focus on the things that matter most: Looks and Personality.

Before somebody like atlas chimes in here pretending that there's some higher echelon of society that you can only reach if you make half a million and have eighteen masters degrees, I give you this: Rich men marry young dumb hot chicks all the time.

Cute.

No, what I said was, we have around 400,000 members between all red pill subreddits. So I will not track down users when they aren't in my subreddits where I have no moderation authority or duty.

I reviewed his recent content on RPW and saw no problems.

I then offered to review offending posts that you allege exist. But clearly, they don't. You have made them up entirely. You refuse to provide proof of your allegations. A clear signal that you are lying.

Sounds like you're bitter about some exchange you had with him somewhere. You should take it up with him.

Right, women should go to RPW and listen to lonelinenss-inc and bewaretheoldman and the rest of "RPW men" tell them how to attract high-quality, marriage-minded men.

You keep repeating yourself. And yet the post I just linked you was written by a woman explicitly debunking your initial assertion, "hear from "the men of RPW" about how to become a plate."

If you seriously think that it is possible to RPW as a single woman, then you do not know and have never understood what it was about.

Why don't you indulge me. What do you think our redpillwomen strategy is for single women?

A bit of a same question/statement to you. How does this kind of dissing help our cause? Especially when it comes from a sort of authority?

What are you talking about? What I mentioned is a serious limitation of block chain technology. Right now, if you want to use bitcoin, it will take you over a month and 200 gb of storage space to participate. Which is why everybody uses lite-wallets.

Imagine how big the current internet is. Now put that into blockchain format. Nobody's home computer could hold that.

The shit Roosh is talking about is actually serious and mods use their time to put down (maybe somewhat naive) commenters. No fucking clue how to lead or inspire.

A Reminder of Reddit's Definition of "positive" male content

4 upvotes · 22 January 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

If it were all about fragile egos, we could skip the women and just sit on our thumbs signalling all day.

Your stupid comment doesn't even crack plausible.

There are plenty of sources in the world telling men what that should not be. What should men be? Rather than constantly explaining what makes men shit, what is admirable in men?

4 upvotes · 22 January 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Most red pillars just run for the hills when you start talking about the merits of being a good, responsible, positive influence on your environment.

Because the terms good, responsible, and positive have all been defined in the context of the feminine imperative.

Think about it this way- a man "stepping up" and raising another man's child with the baby mama is generally considered good, responsible, and a positive influence on your environment. It's a behavior encouraged by society and considered the bigger-man approach to life.

But why is it good? Who is it good for?

You could say the woman has an easier life. The child has an easier life. But why is it this particular man's job to make the child have an easier life?

Is it really a net positive when the child might be in a fatherless position due to mom's choices in the first place?

In essence, what is framed as good, responsible, and positive is nothing more than women being self-serving at cost to men.

It's so well ingrained into our society that what I'm saying sounds good even to me- and I'm thoroughly unplugged.

So, yes, TRP men tend to be wary when somebody uses shame or "merit" language to convince him to sacrifice something to benefit others.

Nobody cares that Reddit arbitrarily enforces vague policies or whether Reddit does or doesn't honor some kind of appeals process they say they have. People outside of TRP and its detractors don't give a shit.

Normal Reddit users posting in normal, non-controversial subreddits don't care. Nobody on the internet is going to rally behind TRP over this issue. TRP users will piss and moan in threads like this. TRP's detractors will laugh at TRP. Nobody else cares.

I disagree. People were outraged when fatpeoplehate was removed. Not because they supported hating fat people, but because they didn't like the precedent it set.

Recent Quarantine: The Reddit Administration Tacitly Endorses Male Abuse and Denies its Victims

4 upvotes · 1 October 2018 · /r/MensRights

Using biology in place of morality leads to immorality.

According to whom? Why do you assume your version of morality is correct?

According to some religions, they believe it to be morally correct to stone a woman for being raped. I think that's wrong. Thank goodness I don't have to abide by their version of morality. I wonder what hidden pitfalls hide in yours?

It openly encourages sexual assault

There is no such suggestion for sexual assault on TRP. The link you just gave me is to a place that is not TRP. If somebody on TRP suggested pushing through last minute resistance, they would be rightly banned. Because not only is it assault to continue if a woman says no, but the correct red pill approach is not only to stop but leave the entire situation and if she continues to show interest, try again at a later point.

Something you'd know if you bothered reading the thing you're attempting to critique.

You know what takes away power from men?

When an entire ideology dedicates itself to redefining words to make being critical of women or analyzing the sexual market place as hatred. To simply take something they either dislike or don't understand, label it with a quick misogyny sticker and move on.

My take on our theories is that men and women are both selfish in mating. This is not a moral position, but an observational one.

We discuss how women act in these circumstances. And we discuss how best to counter it.

There is no hatred involved.

But you know where men's rights does come into play?

When a company as large as reddit decides to label something on a whim as hatred, and then use Michael Kimmel as their ideological basis. Somebody who essentially denies mens rights.

This should be a big red flag to you. Sure, you don't have to agree with all men. You don't have to agree with me. But you should be wary of saying only men you agree with deserve rights.

Let me be clear, I am not asserting that reddit is violating our rights. I am asserting that they are ideologically aligned with denying men rights.

If you're at a bar and your goal is immediate gratification...don't send ANY beta signals. If they ask what you do for a living, give them shit "Whoa there, I don't even know you."

Having a balance of alpha/beta traits isn't ideal in most situations other than LTR/marriage...or to occasionally dangle in front of a plate, if need be.

Dangling beta traits as a response to a shit test is simply how to fail a shit test, whether you plan to marry the woman or have a one night stand.

Once again, Rollo would normally chime in here and say the only good balance is 100% alpha traits.

In practice this is effective.

He would also describe the optimal mating strategy (albeit an unconscious one) for a woman as:

"For a female of any species to facilitate a methodology for breeding with the best genetic partner she's able to attract AND to ensure her own and her offspring's survival with the best provisioning partner; this is an evolutionary jackpot."

To be fair, not only did social media allow for this to happen at a much larger scale than before, but it wouldn't be an effective form of validation if women simply didn't love it. It ruined women and placated betas.

Agreed on the advice not to give free validation. This will assist your personal game. But I think the broader implications of social media will trudge forward, even absent a few guys privy to the game.

The concerted effort to make little boys into little girls while making little girls into ball busting entitled princesses is the antitheses of Red Pill thought.

Though I think that most of us don't care if anybody decides to "feel" like they're something else, I think we all take exception to the idea that we, as a culture, are encouraging young boys to want to be girls (and vice versa). It becomes a problem when the culture glorifies something and it expands beyond your normal rate of different people.

I think the new sub should be heavily moderated and a place for REAL and serious political discussion from a Red Pill Right perspective.

And that it shall be, in fact we've focused on deleting a lot of pro-trump content, not because I disagree, but because it doesn't make an argument at all, but rather fluff's him up.

My goal is to have a place that we can finally have a serious discussion that limits trolling and goalpost moving, and gets to the real motivations behind political moves. I don't care what side you're on, left or right. You should be examined under a microscope.

The sub itself was handed over to me early on, I had had a lot of long conversations with the founder who went on to bigger and better things and he trusted I would run the forum well.

I stumbled upon the manosphere itself after going through a bad breakup and trying to get back into the dating world a little bit, and noticing that women's attitudes were getting worse and worse. (noticeable differences from when I started dating).

After a while I started noticing trends, like how god awful women were to begin with. What was the point of dating when women weren't fun to be around, had bad attitudes, and were generally unpleasant?

Those questions still sit in the back of my head today, they haven't really been answered. There was no magic pill to divert the shitty attitudes of women. But there was a way to understand it.

I sat down on google one day and typed in "why are women so narcissistic?"

It wasn't directly here, but it did put me in touch with a fellow on seddit who eventually would get the ball rolling for TRP and what you see here.

I had no issue with Obama's statement until he said "do it better".

Let's be honest here, even saying they can do anything a man can do is objectively false. Women are not as strong, on average, as men. They are not as fast, on average, as men. They objectively are less able to do some physical tasks as men. Likewise men cannot do everything a woman can do (giving birth is a big one).

Equality of the genders is the biggest myth of all.

In a relationship, you keep it in perspective so you're not caught off guard. It's easy for men to forget and expect their woman to be equals.

On a bigger scale- in our culture and politics, it's a bad thing when others' fail the collective shit test and pass things like VAWA.

MRP and the ProMarriage Stance- Can Someone Explain the Schism in relation to TRP?

4 upvotes · 9 May 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

For the record, a lot of our contributors are much older than some of MRP's married couples. TheFamilyAlpha is younger than most of our mods, and he's been preaching about how successful his marriage has been, and how he'd do it all over again. If that's your example of the wise-old-men of MRP knowing better than the youth of TRP....

I think the problem here is that assuming since one is married, that makes him older (either in age or maturity). I just see a bunch of rationalizations for poor decisions, and a pat on one's own back by pretending it's okay because "we're older.."

Of course I'm going to hold moderators to higher standards than your normal subscribers. Their job is to steer the discussion.

Women Do NOT Like Competition

4 upvotes · 26 April 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

It's not that an 18 year old gets uglier from year to year, it's that the potential to fill her inner self with ugliness increases over time, and many, many girls heed it's siren call.

Though an 18 year old does get uglier. Sun damaged skin, older looking face- If you took any women's 18 year old version, and a 30 year old version of her same self, and let a high SMV man choose between the two, you know which one they'd take. (Provided she was in as good of shape at 18 as she is at 30).

Youth is attractive, there's no sense in denying it.

My suspicion is that the chart uses what men go after on okcupid, which, let's face it, men will go after what they think they have a shot with. Many guys will self-reject and only approach older women to not seem creepy.

All they want is power with no responsibility.

She wants to make all of the decisions. She wants to be in control, to have everyone do what she says. She wants to feel powerful.

This is why women attach themselves to powerful, alpha men. They will assume the power that their man holds, regardless of their merits or beliefs.

The military is a prime example of this. If you've ever been on a base and taken a stop at a BX (base exchange), you will see this type of woman. Usually they are the wife of a colonel or other high ranking officer. They will talk to enlisted men, or lower ranking officers, as if they themselves can pull rank.

What they want is power. The power to ruin anyone that disagrees with them. They also want there to be no recourse for any of those people.

4 upvotes · 16 February 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

[–]LeftShark86 Nuke! N H 1 point just now Prohibiting posts stemming from fiction and literature is incredibly short-sighted. To argue that valuable lessons cannot be learned from these sources is decidedly ignorant to say the least. Though not many posts directly pertain to fictional works, there have been some excellent discussions within threads which often use literary sources to illustrate points.

We didn't ban allegories and parables. We banned the endless posts of "Hey guys, isn't the bald guy from breaking bad alpha?"

Furthermore, lyrics from current songs are a great way to view current thinking about any topic; trp included.

Cue every hip hop song called women sluts. It's just not quality discussion.

Artists' work reflects culture.

Indeed, if you read the entire rule: "Discussion of overarching popular culture themes, however, is on-topic and makes for an interesting analysis of the shifts in cultural thinking."

Also, the moralizing rule has been stated before, but it's entirely unnecessary. Again, we want to avoid discussion based solely on individuals' morals, but to outright ban it shows weakness.

Weakness against what? That's garbage. Morals are relative, nobody shares an exact moral framework.

If we allow moralizing here, then we entertain the morons who jump on accusing people of misogyny-- not because there's a well reasoned argument for or against what they're saying, rather because people reason backwards from morality. If it's misogynistic, then it's wrong. Who cares to dig deeper than that?

Anybody who starts an argument with "That's evil therefore," is arguing from an unexamined perspective. Somebody who has not started from square one to deduce a consistent world view, but instead has simply picked up things he's heard other people say and takes the short cut of morality.

Arguing from morality is what keeps Religious nuts from considering that there might not be a god. If the very act of considering something outside the realm of the religion is sinful, then we keep ourselves trapped in the box.

Morality serves as a thought terminating cliché, nothing more.

If a redditor has an argument relating to trp, moral or not, he should be free to discuss it.

It seems like I can't make these rules any shorter, and yet people like you are quick to the draw to click submit on your uninformed opinion of them. Did you read the damn rule? Be honest here, did you?

Decidedly, you did not.

You're welcome to discuss why certain morals or values might exist, or their benefit in the context of strategy, however arguments that stem from morality (i.e. this is evil, therefore) are strictly prohibited.

I usually flair about 10 - 15 posts a day because people are lazy.

Field reports and AWALT reports, if they demonstrate the principles and don't appear to be false, are always welcome. Most of us who have been around might consider them redundant or unnecessary, and that's one of the reason we have flairs, so you can skip them. But for new comers or those who haven't quite swallowed the pill, it works well to help demonstrate that our theories have real life applications, that they happen, even in small ways.

I think it's important we keep an inquisitive approach to what we read here and elsewhere. If we want to handle in truths and reality there can't be any poisoners information stream. There are plenty of respected posters and intelligently written posts. I'm not talking about those, rather the shady/zero effort posts.

We do our best to remove anything zero effort, but there just aren't that many mods and there's a lot of people posting. Click report when you see something low quality. It helps a lot.

I would fully expect married men in the RP community to play the maturity card. Because that's how you reframe how fucked you are into a sense of superiority.

That's exactly what I'm reading here.

Obviously there's a middle ground between nexting every girl (which, let's face it, it advice for beginners who would tie themselves to a cinder block on a sinking ship), and sacrificing everything (including your dignity) to keep a relationship going.

Attempting to take the red pill while married is a lot like learning to use condoms after you get a chick pregnant. You can certainly learn to avoid future bad decisions, and you might be able to improve your prospects better than if you hadn't taken the pill, but let's face it- she's pregnant and you're royally fucked. The question is just how fucked will you be?

I'm not against LTR game in principle, in fact that's why there's an LTR flair on the main sub. I'm in a LTR and I am in the beginning stages of planning my own family. So characterizing us all as immature teenagers in the "anger stage" is just projection and nothing more.

Anger is an appropriate reaction to injustice.

These types of women simply lack any experience with personal accountability and self-reliance, so they have no frame of reference when someone points out how spoiled and self-entitled they reveal themselves to be when they take to activism over such incredibly insignificant first-world problems.

This is exactly it- when you aren't held accountable for literally anything you do, it's no wonder you grow up totally delusional about how the world works.

Most of the girls I've met tend to rely on everybody around them to bail them out of emergency type situations (i'm broke, i'm stranded, I need xyz and didn't plan for it)...

And when they do something wrong, they always get off pretty much unscathed (/r/pussypass).

Even a terrible attitude and lack of talents, hobbies or skills won't stop a hot woman from receiving validation and attention.

It should be no wonder that their heads are completely in the stratosphere.

You don't need morality to determine what's beneficial.

Eating isn't moral or immoral, but it keeps you alive. You could debate what you eat, but you wouldn't debate that eating is beneficial.

"is surfing porn beneficial"?

Does it give you immediate release, help you with frustration? Yes? Beneficial?

Does it cause ED later in life? Maybe? Perhaps not beneficial.

Does pent up sexual frustration make you try harder? Yes? Then don't fap.

None of this is a question of morality.

Red Pill is really about maturity... growing up into manhood and out of Beta.

The red pill is about shedding society's version of what "maturity and growing up" really is. If we allowed simple shaming tactics like "grow up" control our lives, we have certainly not learned anything.

The fact is- maturing in the eyes of our culture is about appeasing women and self-sacrifice. This does us no good.

The puerarchy is a response to our withdraw from society.

If the syntax for the bot did complex evaluation statements, we could do it. But it can't. So your only option is regex, except it doesn't support any lookahead expressions.

Mind you, we don't run the automod daemon, so we can't just modify it.

In case you're wondering, the correct function to whitelist theredpill while blacklisting all of reddit is:

$regex = '/https?:\\:\\/[^\"] ]+/i'; preg_match_all($regex, $string, $matches); foreach($matches as $url) { if((strpos($url, 'reddit.com') & !strpos($url,
'/r/theredpill')) { $failcheck = true; } }

You can do all of this logic in a single regex with lookahead too (though I'm lazy to figure it out right now) but automod does not support lookarounds.

I became shallow, theres more to life. Seriously learn from me.

I was always under the impression that the self-improvement movement (heh) that TRP pushes was just for making yourself a better man in general, such that more people will be attracted to you/look to you as a leader, a real man.

Indeed, this is it. So you read SMV and internalized it.

That's fine.

But that's not the case for everybody, and so I've written it explicitly.

The fact is, there's a common theme that self-improvement is the goal and it becomes just another platitude.

4 upvotes · 16 April 2014 · /r/TheRedPill

I'm not saying it doesn't happen, but I'd say it's more likely in older women. They have this strange desire to prove to everybody that they're old and experienced. I spun a 42-year old once, (she was incredibly hot for her age), and one thing that kept her from ever being a serious contender (aside from her age) was that she thought her age gave validity to her faulty knowledge.

Her response to everything was "this isn't my first time around the block" as though this lended her credence and didn't just kill my attraction to her.

She had a fine ass though, I've seen girls in their twenties in worse shape than her.

I'll have to dig it up again but there was a study, I think on Bonobos or something else, that showed that females would grant occasional sexual access to betas to keep them around to take care of otherwise alpha spawn. This would mean that sometimes betas have kids.

Edit: It was Robert Sapolsky's work on Human sexuality, he spoke specifically about female Baboons' sexual behaviors rewarding betas for the benefits that come with provisions of a beta. Check out his Human sexuality talks if you get a chance.

It was a question leading to a simple point in regards to this quote. I realize I skip steps in my logic sometimes that people don't follow, but that doesn't mean it wasn't there. The question was simple: am I allowed to have a preference for what type of woman I date? The accusation here was that we call women sluts or have ridiculous conflicting advice for women that they can't possibly follow. My point was that these weren't advice for women, but instead preferences for men.

Surely you can understand that, it's in no way a new made up point, even if you didn't follow it.

That's outrageous. I think sabotaging contraceptive is more likely the "male counterpart", whatever that means, simply by the nature that it actually happens. Rape is illegal for reasons other than reproductive coercion, obviously.

How is that outrageous? It is a means to impregnate somebody against their will. Extensibly you could assume consenting to sex with somebody accepts the inherent risk that one might get pregnant if contraception were to fail.

Modifying the contraceptive would be one way to "sneak" it in, but hardly the only.

it doesn't mean pressure to abort.

Violating somebody's reproductive rights can mean abortion when they don't want to, or keeping the child if they don't want to.

Blue pill is interesting to me. I could understand a group of people being so angry at us they start a sub to talk about it, but nothing will make me understand people willingly hanging around and contributing in a sub of people talking like children, using fake words, and calling themselves a circle jerk. It's unproductive and something you'd only take part in if you've got nothing else to do with your life.

PPD is a guilty pleasure of mine, but amounts to nothing more than arguing with idiots. I had a thread there the other day asking if they understood men have a harder time getting laid than women, and they wouldn't quite acknowledge that. I'm not sure how you can get anywhere in a debate if they're starting at such a poor understanding.

Let's pretend the word "feminine" is subjective to mean "things I find attractive". Not an unfair assessment since the word feminine basically translates to "things that differentiate women from men". Now let's say we get a group that has similar taste. And we all agree that we don't want to force the stereotype that women doing what we like is inherently bad, as most feminists do.

We don't care if they cut their hair short and grow a mustache, we just don't find it attractive, and won't date them.

I just think you're entitled and full of shit.

Really what you're saying is that because we have preferences, we're entitled. Would you tell a woman she has to date short fat men or she's entitled and full of shit? Of course not.

Most of the advice here is pretty spot on, they're challenging you to do what it takes to achieve your own happiness and that's good.

One place I disagree with most people here about: It's ok to understand a lack of sex is making you depressed. There's no shame in realizing this. Most guys here are trying to help you re-set your goals so you can side-step this.. but I say don't.

I get miserable without women in my life. It's just programmed into my brain. I need women. I need sex. I can't live without either.

That is by far the most motivating thing in my life. It's the reason I strive for greatness in every endeavor. Because I love women, and won't accept anything less than the best.

Some might say I'm basing my happiness on other people, but I'm going to argue that it's not a choice. I didn't choose to love women, I just do. Instead of ignoring it and making bird houses or whatever.. I embrace my love for women. I go to the gym and work on my hobbies because at the end of the day I enjoy them and they're one step closer to getting more pussy.

This brings up an interesting note- in order for the feminist utopia of equality to come about, eventually women will have to betray their own preferences, suck it up, and start marrying poor men. Literal interpretation of TRP

If I say that women are stupider than men, you would call it misogyny. What if I found a even a 1 point difference in average intelligence via study? I think it would be fair.

We may not have a fully formed set of theories but instead a working set of theories. You call it misogyny because it's critical of women, and in your mind- since some of this hasn't been proven- then it must be misogyny just to talk about it unless it becomes proven. How would one discover new ideas if we were to ban any discussion of them until they're proven?!

Misogyny requires one thing: the subjective idea that we literally hate women. That is something that you can't prove, and using your logic makes you misandrist to boot! I like women, and I surmise a lot of men who spend this much time trying to become attractive to women also like women.

You can say that in our hearts we're the blackest of evils, but that's just not something you can really objectively say. So how could anybody objectively defend against it. It's a shaming tactic and nothing more.

Impossible, I often open wine when I bring a woman home. Am I raping her by offering her a drink?

4 Ask your partner/one nighter/FWB, whatever, for consent. If consent is given, pay attention to them. Are they crying? Are they just lying there while you do sex to them rather than them having sex with you? Are they avoiding eye contact or tensed up? Are you looking at their face because you care enough about them on a basic human level to even glance at their face during sex? If so, you should be able to see if they are doing any of the things listed here. If they are, stop what you are doing. That person does not want to have sex with you. 4 upvotes · 18 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Most guys are afraid of projecting themselves as sexual beings because our culture errs on the side of caution (he may be a predator!)

So most guys take the least aggressive route. Compliance. When a woman gives a command, men take it and believe it to be truth.

For instance imagine this scenario with two different guys but the same girl:

Guy one: Hey, I was wondering if you would like to get a drink?

Girl: You know, I'm really just not looking to date right now. How about just as friends?

Guy one: Oh, yeah, that's what I meant, friends. Of course!

- This guy was compliant and did what he could to hide his sexuality. He was interested and took a small leap, but he aimed for friends and got himself friends.

Guy two: Hey, I was wondering if you would like to get a drink?

Girl: You know, I'm really just not looking to date right now. How about just as friends?

Guy two: Don't worry, I won't ask you to marry me. Not yet. wink

Girl: You know how I feel about it. I don't think it's a good idea.

I wanted an equal example where both guys get rejected. One presented himself as a sexual being (and attempted to pass her shit test), the other was afraid that stepping out of his comfort zone would jeopardize his friendship, so he downplayed his sexuality.

Women are sexual, and their sexuality isn't something to be ashamed of. This, of course, isn't really as big of a fear because they are the selective gender. They present themselves with makeup and hair, all very sexual things. But it is men who embrace the plausible deniability of friendship.

Obviously exceptions exist. But this example is more than plausible, I know a ton of people with these problems.

Coercion requires consequences that wouldn't naturally happen.

Telling somebody that "come on! It'll feel soooo good, let's do it." isn't coercion.

Telling somebody "if you don't feed your baby, it will die." isn't coercion.

Telling somebody "if you don't fuck me I'll tell people you're a slut" is coercion.

Edit: Lying doesn't immediately become coercion either. "I'll get into a relationship with you if you have sex with me." It's a shitty thing to do, but promising reward and reneging is not a "consequence." Depending on where you are, reneging a payment or promise could be considered breach of contract. However, feminists did ensure that around these parts (most of the USA) sex is not considered performance under contract law...

... which by the way kinda puts a stick in the spokes of the concept that "consent" following contract law. Instead, there's a whole new set of criminal consent laws they just kinda invent when it benefits them. Drunk? Eh.. no consent. Coercion? Well, not technically, but hey this consent has no meaning anyway. Can't sign a contract consenting to sex! Can't prove consent ! It's basically up to a judge's discretion at any point.

women are designed to rear children, and this brings them happiness, then it would also make sense that men intuitively gain happiness by providing for women / children.

Great insight, something that I've always kinda thought about but never articulated. Well done.

We can easily equate our innate desire to provide with women's innate desire to have children. It makes a lot of sense.

Most women don't really realize how strong the urge is for men- it's our number one weakest trait! It's basically our very own betatizing hamster.

Hey thanks!

This is the best explanation for the Mens Rights Movement that I have ever seen.
/u/NeuroticIntrovert attended the Warren Farrell lecture that was protested and decides to lay out why feminism is not the answer to mens issues and why the MRM is needed.

4 upvotes · 7 August 2013 · /r/MensRights

Especially in reference to TRP, but often in reference to MR, I see criticisms talking about how our "thinking is problematic."

Whenever I see the word "problematic" it instantly says social justice warrior. It's nebulous and meaningless. It doesn't address any specific crimes or errors, it only suggests that there's a particular chain of logic that apparently doesn't arrive at a feminist conclusion.

They want to make sure the thinking never takes place, because when people come to their own conclusions, they're not likely to just take everything you say wholesale afterwards.

I see it time and time again, they're upset with the thinking process and logical debate that takes place in men's spaces. For example, a common thread we see here and trp is that we analyze relationship decisions in cost/benefit terms. They all huddle together and say, "well that sort of thinking is a problem, can't they see we're humans and should be treated as human?"

And it's easy for them to think that makes us wrong. If we follow the cost/benefit analysis of relationships, we might conclude that marriage is a higher risk than it is a benefit today.

That's a reality that they simply never even have to consider. From an economics standpoint, there are no market forces causing women/feminists to really really think long and hard about whether marriage is a good deal-- because they're not the ones suffering from alimony.

So it's easy for them to say, well that's not how I approach relationships, so they must be broken to think that way.

And that our conclusion is that marriage is too risky- well, that means our reasoning is problematic.

Will /r/askTRP be as sensitively moderated as /r/theredpill?

It's absolutely retarded. It's less common on this sub as it is other subs talking about us. If they were really alphas, they wouldn't have a forum to talk about it, because that's not alpha!!!

Completely fails to understand that alpha traits need not apply in all contexts or situations. I'm not going to complain to a woman in a bar about social inequality because it's stupid, but it's a topic I like to discuss here.

whether you have a problem with what's currently legally defined as marital rape in contexts where it isn't defined as rape

Rape is a description of a crime that can only define itself- i.e. if there is an event that happens that does not meet the criteria of rape, it is not rape.

Currently, nonconsensual sex in marriage is considered rape. That sounds reasonable based on the understanding that since 1975, there was a removal of implied consent on the marriage contract.

and whether you would prefer that that was the case here and now in the Western world.

I've explained a multitude of times, my preference is not to get married. I have absolutely no opinion on what private contracts other people get into with eachother. This means- since you need me to spell it out- that in my romantic relationships, consent is acquired on a per instance basis.

Your evasiveness and clumsy attempts to reframe the issue as though I'm asking you about what you believe is factually true (which even a cursory glance at the questions I've asked shows to be not at all the point) are incredibly disingenuous.

Your inability to understand what I'm saying doesn't make me disingenuous. I'm explaining to you how contracts work, and why my opinion doesn't make fuck all of a difference beside the idea that I wouldn't enter a relationship contract.

Prime example of postmodern discourse and it's inability to cope with rational debate. This is why we talk right past our detractors.

4 upvotes · 31 May 2013 · /r/askTRP

Because:

Having an abstract conversation that does not have anything to do with my personal morals does not require me to divulge my morals, and avoiding divulging my morals cannot be considered evasive unless the rules of discussion are changed.

This isn't about rape, in case you haven't noticed. This is about modern vs postmodern debate.

Prime example of postmodern discourse and it's inability to cope with rational debate. This is why we talk right past our detractors.

4 upvotes · 31 May 2013 · /r/askTRP

Another such example: <http://i.imgur.com/x2WTqau.png>

"He made a post to bitch about you"

"because his feelings got hurt when I called him on feigning superiority and for being cowardly when discussing his own morals."

Again, unable to even cope with the subject matter, the ego protection mechanism resorts to knee-jerk insults and judgments that completely lack context. For instance, reading the few comments on this thread will show I don't care much for the topic of rape, and am far more intrigued by the communication barrier.

Of course, anybody familiar with rational debate would understand that being unable to even describe the oppositions position is a real detriment to their credibility. That they can only grapple with insults that do not reflect reality shows yet again another disconnect between modern and postmodern discourse.

Exploiting people is wrong in all contexts

There's so much you just said that you don't understand.

Exploiting People

Defining anything as exploitation is entirely subjective, and in this case, I assume you're saying that embracing game is somehow exploitative. Being more attractive just means you have more access to sex. Unless you see hot women as exploitative as well for getting guys to have sex with them by being hot.

This indicates a moral system in which we must agree. Morality is relative, which I explained thoroughly in that post above.

Let's say I have two options and a time machine.

My first option is to take the "moral" route. I meet a girl and I give her flowers. On our first date, we kiss. Months later I propose. We're in love. Or so I thought. She eventually gets bored, moves on. Says she doesn't feel the spark like she does with this other guy she just met. Jack. He's one helluva guy.

I jump in my time machine and go back to the beginning. I see past me doing this terrible bullshit. I can see what I'm doing wrong as I do it. Her interest in me wanes every time I come home and dote over her. She's lost interest and old me doesn't even realize it. So I start working out, I cut my hair, start looking trim, and I realize that there are ways to appeal to female psychology. One night she's out, and old me is at home doing dishes. I approach her. I'm so jacked she doesn't even realize I'm the same person. My personality is unpredictable and enchanting, she finds herself magically drawn to me, but she couldn't explain exactly why.

Eventually she tells me she's going to divorce her husband for me because I'm perfect for her.

I don't think there's enough research to say otherwise. I look at ugly women, developing skills, personality, and a sense of humor. Women will only develop as far as necessary. For men, who don't get by on looks, we develop these things. For pretty women, at 16, they just kinda stop caring about these things. You probably wouldn't believe me unless I stated my case. You know, made points and backed them up.

You're just stated your opinion and pretending it's an argument... under the guise that you've actually read our material. You clearly haven't since you have yet to actually refute anything in particular other than you think generally our stuff isn't fact. But I mean, one of our theories is that women have vaginas. I'm going to assume you

Ah, good! I wanted to clarify that equal rights doesn't include equal opportunity outcome- a mistake men's rights sometimes makes for assuming that men should take feminine roles and wonder why women don't like them for it!

Edit: wrong word! LOL

What on Earth is r/TheRedPill?

4 upvotes · 9 April 2013 · /r/MensRights

The gender roles aren't bound by biology. Anybody can choose to do what they want. But my point is that adherence to biological gender roles does have an effect on attractiveness to potential mates.

we are also capable of changing it through conditioning.

I disagree entirely. No matter what social conditioning we've done to our society, the prevalence of men being attracted to men hasn't changed! Only our acceptance of men who are already attracted to men. Women are still attracted to men who exhibit hunting prowess even if they are not indeed hunters. Women will still select for strength! We cannot change women's desire for such things simply by telling them meek men are now attractive! (In fact- we tried, we've feminized men and women aren't interested!).

What on Earth is r/TheRedPill?

4 upvotes · 9 April 2013 · /r/MensRights

Gender roles are mostly conditioned

This is a common misconception. Gender roles are borne of biology. For instance, why would it be a social condition for men to protect women? This gender role isn't societal, it's biological! Women have a 9-month handicap of childbearing. Men evolved to be bigger and stronger to protect women so they could bear children.

These aren't society gender roles. Society often mirrors biology.

Now of course we're not entirely bound by our instincts, but let me ask you this: Do you find a man attractive? Why not? Can you force yourself to find a man attractive? What about a dog? Or a tree?

There are some biological imperatives that we cannot change. What you find attractive is beyond your control.

The same lies in women.

the decent thing to do

According to who?

Of course a feminized culture would advocate this defense as "the decent thing to do." Look who stands to profit! Women!

You know what the decent thing to do would be? For the same women calling for decent men.. to date decent men.

But they don't! They just don't like them! Every day I read essays and posts about how a woman will break up with a guy who's technically perfect but she doesn't feel it. She wants a guy who makes her vagina tingle.

What's this subreddit about? Realizing that doing the "decent thing" as we were taught will end you poor and lonely. Marginalized. Dying in a war over seas. While in the mean time, the asshole, the guy who breaks the rules, who doesn't do the "decent thing" cleans up and gets the girl.

4 upvotes · 2 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Alpha and beta are just terms to describe very real traits. They're a dichotomy because they're mutually exclusive (as in an alpha trait of confidence supplants a beta trait of non-confidence.)

However, they are not specific or intrinsic to a person. They're relative terms in the sense like a certain action is alpha or beta not that you're an alpha or beta. When somebody says somebody is an alpha or beta, they mean a majority of their traits are either alpha or beta traits.

It's statistically impossible for the entire manosphere to be incels, but they don't care. Shaming men is the number one weapon they have at their disposals. The only way they know how to shame men is to somehow demonstrate that they're not wanted by women.

Most women know the power to do so is so great, all they need to do is publicly say they feel creeped out by a man. The insinuation is that if she's creeped out, no woman wouldn't be. Reverse social proof.

But we know better. It's nonsensical to just sit around and wonder if an entire segment of the male gender are actually celibate and lying. Just doesn't even make sense.

Most of us are here because we had moderate luck with women, only to be left outside like yesterday's trash. The people who still think women are goddesses and should be treated as such, those are the virgins.

Men take out large insurance policies so their wives and children will be well taken care of should they die. Even if the wife is making (nearly) as much money as the husband, she will not have insurance. She sees no reason to reduce her current ability to spend to take care of others after she is dead. She could care less what happens to the husband, and doesn't want the husband to be able to spend money on some young bimbo, after she dies. The life insurance gender statistics are well known, and widely available. None of this should be a shocking revelation. When my second wife died, her mandatory insurance (free) provided by her teacher's union covered her funeral expenses. It would have made life much easier if her insurance had paid the over $350,000 my life insurance would have paid.

There are a lot of misconceptions about feminism and it all starts at the definition. That's why a lot of feminists now prefer the term gender egalitarian (check subreddits genderegalitarian or equality)

I think that's a smart move on their part if they truly are for equality.

I don't think stigmatizing sluts is only part of male strategy, females are pretty good at it too. It seems like a lot of women too are a bit misogynous, but that is because of the way society portrays women. Proof: How many times did you hear a girl say 'i'm not like most girls'? Yes, you heard it a lot.

You're spot on, women do it too.

Unless girls avoid you because you obviously not seeing them as persons :p

Hey now.

I am a bit worried about your cavemen views on women and the 'mating process'.

Consider this. Humans have evolved consciousness over the past 15,000 - 25,000 years. The human brain, however, has been evolving over millions of years. Part of how we work as a species is our drive to reproduce. It's ingrained in us. What we find attractive is actually outside of our conscious control! Ever hear a woman go "he's everything I'm looking for, I just wish I were into him!" You cannot negotiate attraction.

Using the term "caveman" is trying to tie a poor stigma to our viewpoint, but it's not too far from the truth. If you want to get closer, we're going to call it the "lizard view" of mating. Our lizard brain does the attraction! (It also gives us a jolt of adrenaline when there's a surprise or senses danger!) We spend a lot of time with our frontal cortex trying to figure out what our lizard brain is going on about. That's why visceral reactions happen before you understand what's going on.

Modern women are hunters, as well as men.

This is somewhat true. But don't conflate what women do to what men find attractive. Men actually don't find masculine behavior attractive.

If you would go to a bar, and approach multiple women, you will go home alone. A woman wants to feel special.

I'm going to assume at this point in the discussion that you are a woman, or an incredibly mislead man. When I am with other women, it's called preselection: women find me more attractive because of it. I don't go home alone very often at all.

A woman will tell you she wants to feel special, but if you do the nice-guy thing, you will quickly find yourself the one who is alone.

And be honest, when you are talking about women, you are only talking about the attractive women.

The rules of attraction don't change with levels of attraction. Only success rates and strategies. Ever notice how cool female nerds are? Ever notice how super models don't care about video games? There's a correlation here.

You call it unfair that women are turned on by tall men? Well, try being a fat girl. Or a non-pretty girl.

Yes, it's unfair- but I embrace it because that's what mating is. And yes, being fat puts you at a disadvantage (of course losing weight is an option. Not being pretty is definitely unfair. Life is unfair.

Most guys that complain about not getting the girl or are being friendzoned, have unrealistic views on their 'marketvalue'.

I would agree with this.

They don't count the ugly girls in, because they don't notice them

They don't count anybody that doesn't attract them in the same when women don't count guys that don't attract them. Why would women complain all the good men are gone when there's a plethora of very good men just looking for love? (hint: the attraction isn't there).

I know a lot of women that prefer smaller guys.

I know women that tolerate it if he's good in other categories. But a preference? There is no significant portion of the female populace that prefers smaller shorter men. However, looking for taller is a common desire.

Please drop the cavemen logic. I am sooo over that.

Of course anything that improves a man's standing in mating is offensive to women. Why would I stop though, when it's so very successful?

Women are independent and can look out for themselves.

Our strategy is not for the protection of women.

If men want to be a part of their life (grown up life that is, not high school life), they should respect that women are persons with opinions, dreams and goals.

Most guys here used to believe that. Most guys here have been dumped or trampled on or never loved because of it. One guy (sidebar Confessions of a reformed incel) thought that was the way to love. Treat women with utmost respect. He was involuntarily celibate for a decade.

No, what women want are men who turn them on, who make them wet. They want masculine men. They want MEN. Shaming our approach isn't going to change anything because we know what it was like following your version of the rules. No woman rewards that. Women friendzone that.

Society pressures men to initiate sexual relationships, yet punishes them when they express their sexual needs.

I agree that men and women deserve equal opportunities, and equal rights to the extent that equal rights only be extended when the responsibilities for those rights can be met.

The problem is that we are not biologically equal. For instance, strength alone- men are stronger, faster, and can endure more than women. It's not an insult to women to say that maybe women should stay off the front line because of it.

I'd rather do away with terms like equal and focus on what I consider true human rights: Does this person have the legal ability to attempt to do what they want? Nobody has the right to success, but everybody should have the right to try.

The thing about evolution is that it drives us and makes us strive for certain things. The reason you might crave resources and power... is because of this. At the end of the day, maximizing your potential doesn't even make sense outside the context of sex.

Hamsters going in askWomen - "I like doctors because they HELP people!" - a lie that always hits me on a personal note

4 upvotes · 1 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I don't think I'd find gaming a doctor to be any more successful. She'll have a heck of an ego for accomplishing what she has, and she'll think very little of you if she thinks she's of higher status. Don't matter if you're courting or just fucking. There will likely be some bitch shield.

Given an equally hot blond at hooters, I'd go for the hooters chick. 10/10 times.

Actually, no. If she's successful by any man standard, there's a good chance she's got very high expectations, and is likely bitchy. The more successful, the less datable. Women don't like dating down. So if you're dating a doctor, you sure as hell better at least be a doctor or the president of the united states will do.

Questions/Critiques of manosphere conceptions of the male sexual market value

4 upvotes · 28 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

It is the product of over a decade of work.

This can be true. But women will be attracted to that age bracket with or without the work because it represents a category of men who are usually as successful as they will become in their lives.

Second, value for what?

Sexual market value. Consider this: take two identical males, but one has a higher paying job, who will win the girl? The one with a higher sexual market value- the one with more money.

It's not today. And it's probably not tomorrow. But at some point we will face a problem. That problem is that their discourse is the one adopted by society. And ours is one being portrayed as hate-filled.

At some point, and I don't suspect it's too far in the future, we will need to deal with the clash.

I would like to be prepared.

One of the surest indicators of an AFC-beta mindset is the automatic presumption that anything remotely critical a man would say about women, or the feminine, is by default, equated with misogyny.

4 upvotes · 24 January 2013 · /r/askTRP

I've been seeing this more and more lately, where anything that doesn't directly serve the feminine imperative is labeled misogyny. I realize some of the stuff we say on the red pill is shocking if you haven't gotten used to it. I even understand how seddit's vibe can seem a bit off (relative to traditional courting).

But when they describe Men's Rights as misogyny, you realize there's something going on. How, exactly, is wanting rights hating women?

Oh, it's not.

It just isn't directly serving the feminine imperative.

Day 8 - Hobby Time

It's ok to do hobbies that make yourself happy. In fact, I think having a hobby that only makes you happy is kind of alpha in itself. You literally don't care who else is happy but you.

At the end of the day, a masculine man has many hobbies, with many experiences he can draw upon to enter almost any conversation with at least a working knowledge of any topic.

Getting caught off-guard at an event you weren't expecting and knowing how to do the dance with confidence can instantly turn heads.

Make no mistake, if her interest in you is low, she will move on quickly. That said, ignoring her will only earn you a least a bump in attraction from a girl who is used to previously getting attention from you.

If you're a "backup guy" in the sense that she plans on having sex with you, her attraction in you is sufficient.

If you're a "backup guy" in the sense that she plans on using you as an emotional tampon, her attraction to you is minimal. Ignoring her in this case won't insult her, but she will be incredulous.

True, my argument with Jack was one of definitions rather than reason.

The key that unites RPW and TRP is a single shared worldview that describes how man and women act and react to the economic forces and people in the world around them.

But that's where the shared concept ends.

Because the strategy for women will always be at odds with the strategy for men.

I have found some value in not having negative energy or animus towards women, which is something I see often on this subreddit.

Since you've graduated (congrats) it's important for you to understand why people have negative emotions and feelings, and why, as a forum, we've elected to allow it wholesale with no restrictions.

There is no where else to vent for men, this is the only place. And for guys just discovering the red pill, venting is important. Knowing you're not alone and that other guys share your experience is important.

As you internalize TRP, you're right, the bitterness should subside and you should find proactive ways to reach your goals and find balance and peace in your life.

If that means not reading the sub, then that's fine.

However, if you did find value with what you read here then pay it forward and remember not everybody is at the same stage in life as you. There is value in everything here, just not for everybody at the same time.

It's a difficult concept for a lot of dudes to grasp- even on our side- because people don't like to accept there are unconscious biases in our lives.

The phrase "neither sufficient nor required" comes up a lot to try to cut through the fluffy language of pretend preferences.

The truth is, most guys would fuck a tree if it had nice enough tits.

FDS, and by extension, TRP, is a cult that traps you into alt-right thinking patterns. That's the thought terminating cliché they use to couch learning critical thinking skills.

3 upvotes · 30 December 2021 · /r/TheRedPill

I think this stems from the fact that a prudent man is a well informed man. Seeing TRP as simply a sex toolkit is short sighted. Men everywhere are waking up to the slave culture they lived in. Marriage was a sham, alimony is modern day slavery, etc.

Once you open your eyes to it, how can you then close them again when pretending your penis exists in a vacuum?

The world is political. A prudent man must know the landscape to make rational, informed decisions. A red pill man knows how to separate the hard truths from the convenient lies.

It's an innocent question because in their day, that's just how it worked. Even dorky guys could nab a wife and get started.

Times have changed.

Now women have a huge selection of men at their finger tips, why would they select anything but the best stuff if there's no scarcity?

Ultimately that means the competition for men is getting more fierce. Looks have been upgraded to one of your most important qualities because you can't rely on humor, personality, or confidence when her only exposure to you is a headshot and a 5 word bio.

I will note that I wouldn't go so far as to say "so therefore give up if you're ugly." Ultimately, it's what you choose to do in the face of adversity that will help you benefit in a competitive market. I acknowledge it's way harder than 10 years ago. I acknowledge that it's getting more superficial because of technology. But, if that causes more guys to give up, you still have a shot where others aren't taking it.

I have some ideas for posts coming up soon, but ultimately it comes down to captive audiences. You can still game the old way, but you need permission-based exposure through captive audiences.

"The website is awful" isn't constructive or helpful.

The "general consensus" as you put it, is from people who don't contribute to trp, such as yourself. Not a single post from you, and you think we're going to miss you on the new site when you didn't provide value to begin with?

Anybody who prefers to stay on the platform that is actively censoring this discussion and removing members for using plain language (regardless of context) deserves what they get out of it.

It's not a personal website, it's an expensive, time-intensive labor that our team put together to protect our communication lines from censor-happy commies who are trying to silence men throughout the internet.

So yeah, if somebody who has no history on TRP and hasn't done jack shit to help make this what it is today, comes along and insults our efforts with nothing more than a petty insult like "The website is awful." then, yeah, see ya!

Q4BP: Do you expect TRP men to shoot themselves in the foot?

3 upvotes · 5 July 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

In the blue pill world, your motivation behind your actions is what makes it manipulation.

For instance, Mr Chaddington is so slick, he can say or do anything and he gets women. He's not manipulating anybody, he's just being himself.

Now, Mr. Chaddington's nephew sees this cavalier attitude and how it works on women, so he decides to try out the same attitude.

Whoops, Nephew just took a deliberate, calculated step to attract women by changing his behavior. Manipulative. He's modifying his behavior to effect an outcome that wouldn't naturally arise.

See the difference?

It's a word used to discourage men from improving.

Discussion about the fundamentals of MRP

3 upvotes · 26 June 2019 · /r/askMRP

I think every EC would admit TRP is basically dead.

I would heartily disagree. This week alone there have been plenty of quality posts, and plenty of high quality comments that I've enjoyed immensely.

Of course with the quarantine there are fewer posts and fewer comments but I'm quite happy with the quality of most of the posts- save a few trolls which are being handled.

You could only come to that conclusion if you focus on the negatives and ignore the positives. It discourages others if an EC give a public vote of no confidence, because that would lead to others deciding not to contribute. The effect snowballs.

But an EC wouldn't do that.

Ideally we could press reset

I have some ideas for forums.red to bring higher quality members over during a longer-term migration.

Discussion: Do you want children? What is the best way to have children?

3 upvotes · 5 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

I think /u/Whisper probably hit the nail on the head there but I can share some insight into my experience coming to the conclusion.

In my early and mid twenties I think I spent most of that time abhorring the idea of children. My parents did a good job putting the fear of god in me regarding accidental pregnancies and I think I let that bleed into my opinion of having children at all.

It was scary- this idea that a creature could exist that rules over you and your wallet for eighteen years, and scarier still- force you to stay in contact with a woman for that time. At the time I understood how relationships dissolve, nothing is permanent no matter how stable things seemed. Kids were something to be avoided at all costs.

But as I aged two things happened: #1 I became considerably more financially secure to the point where taking care of a child was no longer a lifestyle-threatening problem but instead was more of a disposable income item. I think this put my mind at ease on the subject. #2. I found a woman who meets my criteria for good mother and has been well vetted. This is something that I could not have accomplished without the red pill- simply because without it I didn't even know what I was looking for.

Once those two things lined up, my mind was able to consider the option of having kids. It is no longer taboo in my mind.

Still there are some things that I want to ensure before making the decision of having kids. For instance, it can't be a lifestyle changing event.

Many people I know who have even one child become un-people. They disappear off the map, close off to their friends, ditch their hobbies and become zombies.

I recognize that kids are time consuming but I think letting them take over your life is a choice. Part of it is finding a mother who recognizes her role in parenting and dividing the tasks as traditional mothers and fathers would do.

If having kids means I give up my mission, then I think we as parents both lose. So we both have to share the goal that this does not happen.

For her, it's much easier for her to keep her mission because her goal is to be a mother. It's a match you have to find before even considering the ordeal in my opinion. If you find yourself a woman who wants to get her PhD and lead the world into new realms of science... you're going to find yourself the one sacrificing dreams to have kids.

Anyhow, like whisper says, it's a primal urge and I think that, at least for me, the key is discovering and overcoming the hangups preventing me from realizing it.

I'm not entirely sure if these hangups are a product of my own imagination, over-protective parents, or if there's a bigger force at work here trying to convince my generation to slow down. But I will say my sentiments are shared by most of the smart people I know.

The stupid people I know, well, they make babies by the dozen without a care in the world.

I suspect that's why those who try to quit fapping are also the most likely to be trying to quit videogames as well.

Side Rant: I always laugh when I see a thread on here about quitting video games.

I think to myself, when was the last time a game good enough to get addicted came out?

Maybe it's because I have a busy life and no time, but I simply cannot get into a game these days, let alone end up addicted.

Most games have no actual game mechanism, instead relying on some shitty ass story to drive interest. I have yet to see one that the story is so compelling I want to sit there and grind for hours on end to see it unfold. If I want to watch a movie I'll do that.

The games that interest me are ones with strategy involved. Ones that you can improve on and fail. And frankly, aside from the early Sim City days or the good old RTS games, I haven't seen anything of the sort in a long, long time (aside from minecraft which was very engaging for a time).

Why don't you draft us up a new book on the subtleties of pedantry and the definition of the word science.

Because I haven't seen anything this fresh in years. This stuff is definitely going to get us laid. Can't wait to read it.

I think I did answer it, just not within your false dilemma.

It wasn't really a yes or no question.

Do I think that we're performing double blind studies on TRP? No.

Do I think the scientific community would consider our work to meet their standards of proof? No.

But-

Do I think the scientific community in this social climate could come to our conclusions even if they were 100% true and easily testable? No.

We're men comparing notes.

Do I think our theories have predictive power? Yes. To a very large degree. And most guys here agree.

Is there a chance that all 300,000 users here experience flukes on a daily basis and we're actually 100% wrong? Well, yes, but that seems unlikely.

Is there a chance that what we do works but not for the reasons we think? Sure.

Does that make it science? Not in the way that a university would acknowledge, but I would say in the way that all great thinkers in history have managed to function in this crazy place we call earth - it's pragmatism, hypothesizing, and testing.

Are some things wrong? Probably. Can a lot can be improved on? Sure. And we'll keep updating and iterating as we go.

What exactly is your argument, you say there is no "blackpill" then prove there is by suggesting everyone to lift because looks matter. It's like i have to treat you like a woman

Apparently you have to act like a woman and turn to insults because you didn't bother comprehending my point (nevermind rebutting it).

Yes, looks matter. That's already baked into the red pill. There is no "black pill" because you all took that and decided that looks don't just matter, they are all that matters. That's a convenient excuse to stop trying.

Shit, very few people become millionaires. Should we all just quit our jobs or what?

So your counter "evidence" to "blackpill" is an anecdote, despite the overwhelming actual evidence against you?

Sure some ugly people may not have much luck with women. But you know who definitely has zero luck with women? Guys who convince themselves there's zero chance so they don't even try.

You are doing the exact things like incels, you just word it differently and think you are better than them.

No, incels are doing what we already coined, but worse than us. We realized looks matter and the biggest way we can change it is getting into shape. Y'all just decided weights are too heavy so fuck it why go outside?

I am not terribly concerned with what people write on subs I don't moderate. I could start reading and never sleep again and I'd never catch up with what 400,000+ users across every red pill sub say elsewhere on reddit. From what I've seen, his contributions on RPW are helpful and useful. The mod team believes him to be good, and I see no reason to doubt them.

What happened to the "men of RPW should be TRP posters" rule, though? He exclusively posts on MGTOW subs, then comes in to give marriage advice to women. Do the rules not apply to him?

The mod team does what it sees fit.

I Just Archived The Entire Subreddit To TheRedArchive

I know this place isn't endorsed by TRP subreddit, but since the admin redpillschool decided to remove my post about my archive website (aka my personal contribution to his subreddit), I got disappointed.

So there aren't any rumors flying around the reason is simple:

He recovered deleted posts and comments.

Content can be removed because it's breaking reddit TOS, or because the original author decided to remove their own content. This self-removal is often doxxing and privacy related. We have always worked with our members to assist with privacy issues whenever they arise.

Our mod team recognizes that the deleted content may be out there, and we have no control over that. However we made the decision that we would not assist in disseminating content that might make it easier for people looking to doxx our users.

Furthermore, because some of the content may be deleted for breaking reddit TOS (death threats, etc), we came to the conclusion that posting the archive of deleted material likewise could be considered breaking reddit TOS. While this might seem overly cautious to some, I don't think anybody would argue that TRP isn't under a microscope right now. Reddit admin are looking for any reason to remove us - per the quarantine.

Dream-hunter was offered a chance to de-list the deleted content and he refused.

Almost exactly what I wrote back in 2013:

How Pre-Selection Affects Your Online Dating Profile

Excerpt:

The Problem of Online Dating and Pre-Selection

The problem with online dating is that it signals something very anti-pre-selection: You do not have a mate or options, so you are going online to find one. Even if it's not true, there is an undertone that being online means you are unable to attract mates elsewhere.

Naturally, the tendency of game-savvy men is to still attempt to game on their profiles. But it's difficult if you don't recognize the disadvantages of pre-selection in this context.

Exploiting pre-selection for pickup only works (and is really more necessary) because you lack the original qualities that cause pre-selection. You are "faking-it-till-you-make-it." An online profile reveals your bluff on pre-selection, which means exploiting abundance mentality or confidence will be difficult if not impossible.

This leads to people making extreme profiles, because standard levels of confidence and abundance mentality are canceled out by the reveal of being online in the first place.

So in the end, after all is said and done teaching men how to game and attract mates, the best strategy for online dating is to be attractive. Online dating is the anti-game. Ironically, the best way to succeed at online dating is if you already possess the traits that would be effective at offline dating.

I just think that any aim to systematize interaction between blocks of people, particularly in a context within which such respective blocks have competing motives, is both a little dehumanizing and dispiriting to read through.

You have to eventually come to a conclusion: Either patterns emerge and can be studied, or everybody is effectively random.

People like to say, everybody is an individual and makes their own special choices in their own special ways. But what you're describing is effectively randomness.

Ask yourself, why are you uncomfortable with the notion that groups of people behave in statistically predictable ways?

3 upvotes · 14 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

This is a fine example of the hamster going nuts and a failure to comprehend what TRP discusses.

If you read TRP (which you clearly don't) the point isn't that all women should bow down to your shitty self, but rather that men should improve in as many ways as possible in order to strengthen their chances of meeting a woman who does want to defer and prioritize to them.

It does not teach that men simply deserve it by virtue of being men, but that a man shouldn't tolerate a woman who won't. That isn't to say she should.. if he's a dingus who can't lead, he's responsible for the failure of that relationship.

Well RP advocates an amoral sexual strategy as your best long term chance at happiness. That is a value system. Saying it can't be criticized reminds me of other ideologies I gave up on.

But I'm not saying that. You're more than welcome to criticize goals. In fact that's one of the reasons we have a MGTOW flair.

Recommending different strategies to realize different goals is perfectly on topic. Making an appeal to a larger morality or authority without reason is where it crosses the line.

For instance, I have no problem with religious people or atheists. But don't tell me not to spin plates because it's immoral. You know?

The Beta provides out of fear and weakness, ex. bribes and covert contracts. An Alpha provides out of benevolent strength. Bottom line, it's all about the frame.

This only works if you use the words to define a person instead of behaviors.

Consider Elon Musk- he's got a lot going for him. He takes charge, he's one of the richest men in the world and undoubtedly he could walk into a bar and get laid on cred alone.

But he married and got divorced from the same woman twice.

Self actualization comes from being proud as a man and not settling for less than best in your body mind spirit and surroundings.

If a rock thinks he is a tree, does that make a rock intro a tree?

Every man has intrinsic value.

Show me where this is written in the stars. If an asteroid took out the entire species, in which court do we hold the asteroid accountable?

Also intrinsic means value from within. WITHIN.

Valuing yourself does not change anything about objective reality. You can love yourself to death but if you're a fat ugly loser, you still haven't won the right of anybody's respect let alone attraction.

So trp is about "the tone" not about the Truth?

The tone here is the truth. A bit of nuance you've missed.

Im a pragmatic person.

You're a pragmatic person who doesn't understand the difference between functional advice and the nature of things. One can be optimistic without lying to oneself about the nature of things.

The blue pill is nothing more than convenient lies to tell yourself to avoid harsh realities. Some blue pill lies aren't as bad as others, but they are still lies.

Hell, some people believe that the alignment of the stars gave them great fortune rather than persistence and hard work. That doesn't mean astrology is now a good way to make predictions. Astrology fails to illustrate a mechanism by which it works. Likewise, loving yourself fails to address any sort of mechanism by which demonstrable results can be achieved. That is what makes it a de facto platitude.

It's not that loving yourself is wrong, it's that your advice is not actionable and is entirely fluff. Useless for the discussion at hand here.

You dont have any real arguments in your favor, just feel-bad platitudes, since that seems to be the word of the day. I welcome something you can offer that can truly destroy the points I made.

You think you're the first person in here dick-in-hand flashing some JAQ-off blue pill points thinking you're going to take down the entire purpose of a very popular forum? You must really love yourself. Nightly.

Why do critics of the manosphere always like to claim the only people on these sites are sexual failures?

It actually validates TRP's point, which is that sexual validation is how men prove their worth to women.

I want to see dead women in equal numbers to men. Only then will there be equality.

Lets discuss "women are children"

3 upvotes · 7 September 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Here's how I could see this Responsibility Gap shrinking:

- If women were drafted and put on the front lines in equal numbers. I don't think I'm happy until 50% of those killed in war are women.
- If women served equal sentences for the same crimes as men.
- If men could financially "abort" (or parental surrender) a child like women legally can.
- If we forced women to work in coal mines until we have equal numbers there.
- If we ensured that women's average lifespan were a few years lower, to be equal with men's. (Maybe if we just add some stress to their lives).
- If women went to prison for abusing/assaulting men. Like, at all.

Wishful thinking I suppose.

I rarely use either terms unless it helps me communicate a specific point about a behavior or trait. Even then, I try to communicate it without those terms. Only because idiots saying "alpha as fuck" ruined it.

Most men who show up at TRP cannot do this. So most TRP men who marry cannot be high value. But a man who is all of these things -- astute, has some business savvy, understands the nature of men, women, marriage, and the environment, and in general has his shit together -- he can marry and not lose his value.

But how astute, or business savvy is a man who willingly takes a contract which has two ending conditions: 1. Everything turned out as well as it could have in a LTR without marriage, or 2. Everything turned out worse?

restricting male sexuality while liberating female sexuality.

People here call it a conspiracy theory when I use the phrase "feminine imperative," but that's just what it is.

Female sexual strategies are applauded, expected, and considered right, or normal. Male strategies are almost entirely derided unless they serve the female's strategy.

Watch a movie where a man hooks up with a woman without committing and the theme of the movie is that it's time for him to grow up and commit. This serves the woman.

Men want to avoid marriage and they're commitment-phobes. They are described as perpetual man-children. Peter-pans. This serves the woman.

Women want to hook up and they're liberated, strong, and independent. This serves the woman.

Man wants to give up all his options and tie himself down to one woman. Honorable. This serves the woman.

Man sacrifices his life for a woman. Honorable. This serves the woman.

Man waits on the sidelines while woman bangs a bunch of dudes through her twenties, for her to finally fall in love with him after she's in her late thirties: honorable and romantic. This serves the woman.

I didn't get married. You're the victim. Using insults as a proxy for a good argument doesn't work with me. If you have a point, let it stand on merit.

lets assume the contrapositive of the premise of your post - marriages can be beneficial and positive given a specific set of conditions. would you agree with that statement? that there are certain cases marriage can work?

Relationships can be beneficial. I see absolutely no additional value in having a piece of paper with an insurance policy against myself on it. That doesn't mean I think all marriages fail, it means that the marriage contract is not designed to help a relationship, and at best will simply not do anything at all.

I'm not suggesting that the purpose of the conversation change. Marriage, at the moment, is the best possible outcome for a woman.

So what exactly are you planning to accomplish with more open discussion, besides creating a space where TRP can be discussed further and women can hamster over their futures more?

Because the culture is changing, and the options may be limited. And simply ignoring it isn't red pill.

Obviously if somebody is hijacking conversations with unrelated subjects, they'll be asked to make their own discussion about it. We're not just opening the flood gates. FR I just f*cked my beta friend's wife. I'm the Chad now." I would be critical of this post.

And you can be, as long as you're not simply taking a moral approach, but instead a logical and rational approach.

I'd argue that sleeping with your friend's wife tells me you can't get any of the myriad of single-ish girls at your local bar and that she didn't sleep with you because you just made her gushing at the sight of a real alpha. I feel like it'd be easy to dismiss this argument or any dissenting argument as moral-based.

That's not a moral argument. It's a valid opinion. You didn't call him evil at any point.

Did you think this write-up was a masterpiece of literature; free from error and mistakes?

No, and I'll correct mistakes as they come. However your critique is not one I'd consider to be valid, as most of your complaints are addressed in the text of the rules themselves, had they been read thoroughly.

All arguments stem from some sort of morality.

They don't, and shouldn't. If you think something's "wrong" you better have a good rationale why people of different moral systems should agree with you.

Otherwise, you're as good as the christian telling the atheist he's going to hell for sinning. The point passes right by the atheist because he doesn't share your value of heaven, hell, or sin. Why would he agree on any points you build upon such premises?

There's obviously a lot of self improvement among people here...men wishing to better themselves in one way or another. Anyone can see that. I think something that we all have in common more so than anything else is our knowledge that something is amiss. Something in the (western) world is very wrong right now. Even people that have no clue about TRP and similar ideologies, etc can start to see it. Look at everything going on recently.

So it's like you missed the entire point.

3 upvotes · 26 January 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

the strategy for cultivating a strong relationship (within which lots of fun and high quality sex can occur) is qualitatively different from the strategy for cultivating tingles.

I disagree.

The latter can be approached through what I'm calling "classical TRP strategies." For the sake of clarity, I mean to point at strategies which promote confidence, power, stoicism, outcome-independence and other self-centered "become an alpha" strategies.

The former (a strong relationship) must be approached through an understanding of the dynamics underlying inter-personal communication and connection.

I would argue that they do not exist independent of each other. All the information in the world on interpersonal communication means jack shit if you don't give her the tingles.

You're right that there's no such thing as an objectively "good girl" and that all women have human instincts. But if the basis of your connection with another human being is rooted in the loins, then those roots are shallow, and there is little reason to trust that there is any foundation for an enduring relationship.

If a relationship with sexual attraction won't last very long, imagine how much shorter it is without it.

How do we authentically connect with other human beings, specifically women, for the purpose of engaging in a sexual relationship?

You drop the mystical word "authentic" and realize that the world is a rough place where nothing is fair and those that win get to win, and those that lose, lose.

There is no fairy tale ending, only that which you have built for yourself. You must get past the notion that there is a deeper connection, rather that women will always require you to be on the ball. You must learn that the deeper connection comes from your satisfaction of accepting what is, rather than trying to dictate what should be.

I feel it's worth looking beyond the typical answer that "women have a dualistic mating strategy, so be more alpha and you'll lay plenty of chicks." That only looks at one prong of the dualism.

If you read my posting history you'll see that I emphasize satisfying the beta requirements if you look into LTRs. But make no mistake, you mustn't forget the alpha traits and tingles first, or there is no relationship to speak of.

Removal rules supersede approval rules, so we can't simply pre-approve theredpill posts and then scan for deletable phrases.

Further, we cannot preapprove posts that include reddit.com AND the redpill because we won't know if both apply to the same link.

You need regex lookarounds, and they're simply not supported.

For instance, look at how they rewrote history to paint women as categorically oppressed throughout all of history, rather than the most privileged class humanity has ever known.

The Empress is Naked

3 upvotes · 10 December 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

Well, you're familiar with the old tale of the emperor's new clothes?

A vain Emperor who cares about nothing except wearing and displaying clothes hires two weavers who promise him the finest, best suit of clothes from a fabric invisible to anyone who is unfit for his position or "hopelessly stupid". The Emperor's ministers cannot see the clothes themselves, but pretend that they can for fear of appearing unfit for their positions and the Emperor does the same. Finally the weavers report that the suit is finished, they mime dressing him and the Emperor marches in procession before his subjects. The townsfolk play along with the pretense, not wanting to appear unfit for their positions or stupid. Then a child in the crowd, too young to understand the desirability of keeping up the pretense, blurts out that the Emperor is wearing nothing at all and the cry is taken up by others. The Emperor suspects the assertion is true, but continues the procession.

This book exposes a similar charade: the myth of female oppression, and the misconceptions of the war of the sexes.

The problem, as I see it, is that there are very few women worth while to get into a relationship. In at least American culture, women see it as an insult to do nice things for their man. They focus on being "strong" and "independent" which are total opposites from what we naturally find attractive. Would I have sex with a strong independent woman who don't need no man? Well, yes, I would. Would I commit to her? No fucking way.

So add that to the increased risk- financial and legal- of being around women, let alone having children with them, and you can see why guys are wary of relationships and writing off marriage.

But what's interesting is when you come to terms with the fact that you will never get married, you start wondering if there was a point to a life-long relationship in the first place.

Coming back to an LTR after that journey of discovery is like looking into the abyss and deciding to jump anyhow.

We do critique guys when they're at their lowest. Guys on /r/relationships or deadbedrooms talking about how their wife/girlfriend/lover did something terrible and they don't know how to deal with it- and on TRP we call it like it is. The guy should've moved on long ago, and he's a chump for putting up with 4 years of sexless marriage.

But we don't do this because we want him to feel bad. Or at least not directly (we don't usually do it to make sure the person we're talking about even sees it).

We do it as a reminder to ourselves that these are mistakes that are easy to make, and mistakes we've made. (and mistakes not to make any more).

In a way it seems cruel if one of these men stumbles across our discussion. It does seem like we're kicking a man when he's down. But from my experience, it's only at rock bottom will most men really start seeking out new answers and really open their minds to new ideas.

Why don't women want to all just get pregnant like constantly and have like 20+ kids though? That is their only option for maximizing the spread of their genes isn't it?

I don't think having 20 kids was a good way to ensure reproductive success, since that would be hard to manage, therefore reducing their likelihood of survival.

Women want the best genes, because they best genes tend to survive. Their taste (shaped by sexual selection) was for men who were naturally successful, maximizing the chance that they'd make babies with the same advantages.

Babies and pregnancy have high reproductive cost (it's expensive in calories and risk to get pregnant and have kids), so women concentrated not on numbers, but instead quality.

3 upvotes · 5 March 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

How does that work exactly? Surely the kid is much less likely to survive if the father, you know, the main resource-provider, just peaces out? Not being attacking, genuinely curious how that is supposed to work out.

One's sexual strategy does not necessarily imply a positive outcome for offspring. Some men just wanna get their rocks off.

3 upvotes · 5 March 2015 · /r/TheRedPill

Men and women's reproductive strategies can be at odds- for instance, if men want to have a raise children, a woman may find it better to trick a man to raise another man's child. Or a man who wants to spread his seed as much as possible may leave a women holding the bag without support or a father for the child.

There are scenarios (such as a red pill family) which I think satisfy both male and female strategies- many men are perfectly content I think with a quality woman, and the woman would be content if you manage to entertain her hypergamous nature well enough while simultaneously being beta enough for her security.

It's just not a common pairing.

I mean that's a question only you could answer. The fact is, I find myself more analytical than most people. In fact, most people would say I over-think. The common trope I hear is that I'm "thinking too much" and I'm "getting in my own way" that I should just stop thinking and do things.

I couldn't disagree more. My analytic skills are my best quality. I process things in my head all the time, until I am satisfied I have found the best answer or course of action. And it's brought me a great amount of success, despite what the haters say.

At the end of the day, you have to do what works for you. You can't just change who you are. You need to learn to accept who you are and use it to your advantage. I am logical and I think everything through. I usually like to plan out situations in my head three or four moves in advance- including anticipating other people's actions and reactions. It's just how I am. Some people may think it's ineffective or inefficient, but fuck 'em. I get what I want out of life, and I'm sure as hell not going to leave my fate up to chance. I'm going to do what I need.

Now acting logically, I tend to embrace Machiavellianism, because I may betray my own thoughts and feelings with my actions, but I do so to get specifically what I want from those around me. I think I've come to the conclusion that people like me simply have to embrace this, because it's something that most people do naturally anyway (without thinking about it).

Its meant to be that way, they're meant not to know their own innate desires so as to externalize and counteract them. The institution of marriage was for that, to marry them off in their prime so that they could mold the putty like minds of young men into stable LTRs for Matriarchal society(feminist society). Feminism has effectively sent female hypergamy into overdrive, meaning they're not respecting 80% of the male populous and no matter how hard the blue pill is, it'll eventually translate into an exodus of blue pill men from LTR relationships which is helping to tear down the institution of marriage which is presently raping the boomers. Generation X+ is smarter with regards to female disrespect, and every generation after will continue thanks to the information highway that's the internet.

Quality stuff so far down the comment chain. ♂

Classical feminine qualities, especially submissiveness, are what I'm referring to when I claim "women are easily manipulatable". Most women still fall within a classical feminine conditioning. Feminism has tried to "help" women act more like men and deal with man's chauvinist tendencies. Feminism has also help men "get in touch with their emotions", meaning feminism feminizes men to act and think more like women, which is more emotional based than logic based.

The other day Rollo posted an article regarding teaching our sons well, and addressing the nature of our feminine-primary culture.

I think it's an interesting thing to consider. I suggest for the next week, subscribers here take a look around at our cultures through the lens of the feminine primary, and analyze just how much of our actions, thoughts, or behaviors are affected by the feminine primacy of our culture.

An excerpt:

[Our] modern normative social consciousness is one that is defined by a female-correct, female-beneficial experience. Bear in mind that this projection is from the collected, learned experiences of a group of 9 year old boys who have been conditioned to a self-loathing of masculinity in a feminine-correct social order.

The question, "What I don't like about being a boy" seems fairly innocuous, but in a feminine-correct social awareness it becomes a litmus test to gauge how well these boys have internalized feminine-correct, conditioned beliefs. Read the list of offending grievances:

- Not being able to be a mother
- Not supposed to cry
- Not allowed to be a cheerleader
- Supposed to do all the work
- Supposed to like violence
- Supposed to play football
- Boys smell bad
- Having an automatic bad reputation
- Grow hair everywhere

It's a bit reactive- you got annoyed (and rightfully so) but you can't let her think she got to you.

A better plan would be to not contact her after she ignores the "when and where" and then just go do other plans. If she contacts you after, just say "oh, shoot, I'm at drinks. Come out to bar xyz."

Frankly, flakes happen a lot, so don't over analyze it. You can work on your text game till the end of time and there still won't be rhyme or reason.

Ultimately it comes down to attraction and luck with tinder. If a girl just happens to have plans canceled on her, she might take a risk (and mind you, the risk might pay off, but girls hate the risk itself). But girls in general try to avoid risks at all costs. So, you just keep grinding away.

Women run dread on themselves sometimes.

This is exactly how dread should work. Don't say anything explicit- let her imagination do the work for you. She will worry that you're attracted to other women and she could lose you. If you have to say it out loud, you're not doing it right.

Men are programmed to bend to the whim of the female cry- of course they have a social advantage. They're so important, men sacrifice themselves willingly for "honor" and to protect the women and children at home.

Real equality would totally take women down a lot of notches.

If you look up "rape" there's around as many posts about deriding or judging women as there are "why women do this" kind of posts.

If a woman takes a bunch of drugs and goes home with a total stranger and then get rapes- who is at fault?

Obviously the rapist is ALWAYS responsible for rape.

But to pretend that somehow this woman's actions are now above scrutiny is just trying to give vaginas a free pass because you live in a world where women can do no wrong.

She's fucking stupid for having done what she did, and that rape was avoidable.

A woman gets assaulted and is upset that no one helped her and the top comments are basically "Well, if feminism wasn't around and I wasn't scared that chick would accuse me of attacking her this wouldn't have happened now would it? Enjoy that freedom, gurl!".

It sucks, does it? That we live in a culture where men have learned that any interaction with women is a liability, and helping might do more personal damage than its worth.

We're not on a forum dedicating to calling victims on the phone and telling them they're stupid. We're on a forum dedicated to discussing strategies in the sexual market. You may not understand that we see feminism as a strategy, but let's face it- women get provisions and protection from men as one of the benefits to relationships with them. If feminism hampers this, then feminism has unwittingly affected the sexual market, and in this case, we think it's devalued women at least enough that nobody was helping that woman.

We are here to analyze real trends. It sucks that there are crimes out there and people getting hurt, but you can't just will it away, and pretending they don't exist is just willful ignorance. These things happen, and we discuss them.

Enlightened opinion tells us not to do that with gender non-conforming children; but surely it is just as misguided to do it with kids who conform to the conventions of their sex.

Despite this, the term "toxic masculinity" exists, and I have yet to see any credible or popular source use the alternative "toxic femininity."

We live in a women's world, men. Are we going to fix it? Can it be fixed?

Feminism is what happens when you let a privileged group off the leash. They've got the rights, the privileges, and as many here have noticed, very few of the responsibilities. Men, we hold civilization on our shoulders still.

Do you think a protest is going to fix this?

How many more penises need to be cut?

How many more men will die?

How many more men imprisoned?

The only way to wake up civilization is to remove the privilege. Let it collapse. Because as long as the king is a 10 year old with no rules, he will do as he pleases and know not of responsibility.

So long as women do not know the true struggles and ramifications of their actions, they will do as they please and know not of responsibility.

Yes, you can provide it custom expressions, but it's a limited set (excluding lookarounds specifically). They do it to keep random mods from accidentally (or purposefully) crashing the bot.

Here's a list of google's supported syntax:

<https://code.google.com/p/re2/wiki/Syntax>

Here's automod's:

<https://github.com/Deimos/AutoModerator/wiki/Wiki-Configuration>

It's been almost half a year since I configured it, but basically the main problem was that whitelisted domains couldn't work since we'd have to whitelist the entire internet, blacklist couldn't work, since we'd have to blacklist each subreddit of reddit (save a few), and a regex whitelist wouldn't work, because you can't do lookarounds and there were limited if any complex comparison expressions.

More power to you if you figure it out, or if they've made changes recently that I'm not aware of. I spent some time with Deimorz and we came to the conclusion it couldn't be done.

Ah there it is- Robert Sapolsky was the one who did Baboon study and found that females would occasionally offer betas sex (not often) to .. basically keep them placated and providing care for the young.

Check it out- beta doesn't mean no sex.

The problem that confounds hypergamy is that the arousing Alpha and the attractive Beta rarely exist in the same male, at the same time and at the most opportune time for women to appreciate and capitalize on it. By this I mean that as women proceed through their peak SMV years, they place higher priorities and higher mating value upon predominately Alpha traits. These are the 'fuck me now' party years, and Alpha seed far out-values Beta need. As I wrote in Schedules of Mating, on a macro level this translates into a proactive form of cuckoldry. Even if it doesn't result in a pregnancy, the latent urgency in a woman's peak is to 'get the seed first, find the provider later' (i.e. protracted cuckoldry).

The fantasy for women of course is to 'tame the savage Alpha' and convert him into a parentally invested partner by encouraging Beta traits in him as he matures, and hopefully prospers. Many a thwarted single mommy knows the unfortunate outcome of attempting to 'fix' their Bad Boy Alpha into the Good Dad Father, but this is the emphasis assuming a woman pauses long enough to invest in one particular Alpha during her peak years. The base schema is to maintain that hot Alpha arousal, while developing him into a more attractive Beta provider.

Re: Your edit:

In nature betas get ZERO woman.

That's simply not true- women have a pluralistic mating strategy- they have need for alpha, but also a need for provisions. She wants both, and will give a beta occasional sexual access (if necessary) to keep him providing. Women will crave more aggressive men during certain parts of her cycle that she is most fertile. It's no coincidence that concealed ovulation has allowed her to get beta men to provide for other men's children- he may not even know they're not his!

You know the old trope- that sex stops when you get married?

That's not because they simply lose attraction (I mean, it does happen...), but instead because the woman may find she no longer needs to offer the token occasional sex for the provisions! (That or her alpha lost his alpha!)

Which probably explains why long term relationships tend to stay sexier if they don't get married.

Except the way I see it, is that women will eventually realize they were pricing themselves out of the market, but only after they start losing attractiveness. What good is it to have some realistic old hags?

I find similar post-modern reasoning when debating redditors on other subs about having a few drinks and having sex- they won't agree with what could or should constitute consent because "you can't consent while being raped." They use the word in the definition!

Askwomen went on a banning rampage banning posters in /r/theredpill who had never contributed to askwomen. When I contacted their mod team to see how I could help prevent brigades (which I'm still not entirely convinced we were causing, so much as SRD's links were), I got a mixture of "kill yourself" and "Just don't talk about us ever."

I suggested a few solutions to keep brigading happening, including screenshots, but they insisted that I was lying about wanting to reduce brigades and demanded that if I was serious I would "remove any posts that talks about askwomen at all," in any contexts, screenshots, redditlogs or otherwise.

I explained that while I wanted to pursue cooperation, straight out censorship would not be a solution I would entertain, they then accused me of offering a fake olive branch, and returned to juvenile insults.

The female subreddits would like to be above reproach. They don't want a discussion taking place at all, it has nothing to do with brigading. At the core of it, women cannot stand and do not like men talking critically about their sexual strategy. And we've got some theories as to why.

Of course there's no definitive proof that the repeated attempts at censoring us are part of their sexual strategy, but you gotta wonder why they're so quick to try. And it's not just TRP, who lots of people think are just plain misogynists. They said the same about mensrights and seddit.

It's not an isolated case. There are some truths that we are exposing that women do not like and do not want seen or discussed.

It describes the awkward college boy and the inexperienced college girl engaging in less than stellar first-time awkward sex, and why social pressures put into place helped create the situation, and why social pressures cause the girl to consider the situation regretful and potentially date rape. It puts literally the entire chapter into context because it defines his situation being mislabeled as rape.

When he talks about shotgun marriage, he juxtaposes this to a culture that had different values that wouldn't have been causing regret-rape to occur or the crime to be considered. Anybody with two brain cells doesn't walk away from this reading thinking it was a serious suggestion.

One commonality between TRP and SJ

3 upvotes · 14 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Distaste implies that we have graded them second on a scale of preferable partners. They are still preferred (over men), so distaste is entirely a misnomer. It's like saying that cats can bite.. it's a reality to deal with, doesn't mean I have a distaste for cats.

I know that some people have a hard time looking past ideas they disagree with, so they assume it must be rooted in hatred, but that's simply not the goal here.

Further, calling it unhealthy is purely subjective, and purely from your perspective. Just because you disagree with it doesn't mean it's unhealthy.

Again, your insistence that our goals are different than what they are is purely speculative and unfounded. You can disagree with its efficacy, but attempting to ascribe moral values and intentions to us for our views is akin to mind reading and is wholly impossible for you to prove and impossible for us to disprove.

You must be trolling. Horror films are scary specifically because they present stuff that isn't acceptable, and they make no attempt to make it appear acceptable.

This is a talking point that feminists use a lot and I happen to agree with them, you can use media to help integrate new ideas (and in their opinion bad ideas as well) into a culture. For instance, more liberal views on gay acceptance and gay marriage in movies is helping our culture normalize to accept these values.

As for the rest of your comment, I'm not even going to bother, you're going to see whatever you want to see, there's really no point. It's like starving man who is hungry and angry that people told him "just be yourself and food will come," you'd say he's entitled to food too?

You apparently can't make a division in your head between somebody who wants something as simple as human physical interaction (which is something everybody wants), not being able to get it, getting poor advice, and then realizing he is in control and bettering himself and eventually getting what he wants, verses "entitlement" which is little more than a thought terminating cliché, well there's nothing I can say to fix your broken thinking.

TRP: what is an example of misogyny?

3 upvotes · 12 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Well luckily we don't have an active draft right now, so hopefully it remains this way. But it's naive and unrealistic to say we may never need it, so let's abolish it.

TRP: what is an example of misogyny?

3 upvotes · 12 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I understand that conscription is a necessary evil and want to ensure equality between the genders while simultaneously recognizing that women are weaker than men.

It seems that you don't see any benefit.. I have to assume it's because you don't believe in equality.

TRP: what is an example of misogyny?

3 upvotes · 12 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Conscription isn't fair or nice. It's to defend the country against threats in a case where an all volunteer army wouldn't make the cut. It's not to benefit the women.

Mark Manson critiques and breaks down RP mindset on "manipulative women"

3 upvotes · 6 November 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

The red pill forum is a subset of the manosphere, and there aren't really many fine lines drawn. I direct the discussion a bit with the particular manosphere bloggers I link to, but this doesn't limit it from other red pill authors. For instance, Mark Manson gets brought up a lot even if he has denounced the term "red pill." Hell, some people (Roosh) have declared the manosphere dead. Doesn't really change that these communities share a lot of members and interests. There's a lot you can learn from a lot of manosphere writers. I consider the term manosphere to be on par with the term "red pill" but understand that the forum itself is a subset. Obviously others may disagree with me on the nomenclature, but I don't really care, the name is the least important part.

This might be difficult for you to grasp, but it seems everybody over there isn't really having any trouble with it.

As I explain over and over- it's blue pillers who can't seem to grasp our grouping. And they think somehow making the claim that the red pill is nonsensical or cannot exist because it's too confusing or isn't completely homogeneous with the rest of the manosphere... well, that's their problem, not ours. We seem to be getting along quite nicely.

- in this context I refer to the forum dwellers of the blue pill as blue pillers.

What is your view on r/theredpill?

3 upvotes · 31 October 2013 · /r/MensRights

I believe it to be an accurate analogy. You think that red pill philosophy isn't as strong or brave as creating a new reality to operate in. The red pill philosophy basically says "accept reality for what it is if you want maximum success."

You can do what you want, but it won't necessarily reward you with what we're looking for: higher quality relationships and/or more quality sex.

I think your goals are perfectly valid and I support them. No reason to use shaming language against your fellow men.

Feminism helps men to be happier with themselves.

The language we use is a fraternal "man-up" which says, "we build respect in this community by embracing our values as men."

At no point do we look at the chump whose wife left him and took his family as not a man. We see him as a victim who needs help. Who needed a father to explain these life lessons. We see ourselves, because that's who we were.

"Women tend to decide who's attractive as a collective."

3 upvotes · 23 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

I think he misses the point. Women tend to be more attracted to guys who have the attention of women. It's called preselection.

I don't think men respond to the same stimuli. Most men will go after hot women because they're hot. But if you have a hot woman with no male attention, this does not affect his level of attraction, it might even increase his willingness to approach.

To the blue pillers, what alternative to TRP would you recommend for me?

3 upvotes · 18 September 2013 · /r/PurplePillDebate

"Short guys are not attractive to us" WTF, woman? How is this healthy? Espousing this viewpoint isn't going to help women get better with men.

See why this doesn't work?

Then you go on to suggest that our preferences are borne out of insecurity? If our preference is misogyny, then that right there is misandry.

Are you arguing that slut-shaming isn't misogynistic? It's a blatant double standard directed towards women.

Again, you're missing the point. I don't care if women have sex with every person on the planet. It's a free country, and they're people who make their own decisions. That's not a double standard. I'm just not going to marry somebody who does, because I don't prefer it. I'm also not going to marry somebody who doesn't work out. Doesn't mean I think fat people aren't people.

To the blue pillers, what alternative to TRP would you recommend for me?

I think it's easy to see analysis of women's behavior and mistake it for blame.

No doubt, we do hold women accountable for their actions. But at the heart of things, we hold our own happiness as our own responsibility. First part of swallowing the red pill is understanding it was in our control the whole time.

3 upvotes · 16 August 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

The reason nobody takes their criticism seriously is because nobody identifies with their version of us. Insecure, rapists, manipulative, sociopaths, abusive...

Every time they try to knock down one of our points, they first have to set up a false point to do so. That's why arguing with them is futile- because they refuse to even acknowledge properly our position long enough to debate it.

When somebody makes the claim that we're wrong, and then refuses to even accept a clarification of the point we're arguing, then you know they've got a different agenda- and honest debate isn't it.

Like when they label me a rapist. I've never been for rape. That's absurd. Yet, when somebody tries to misquote me, and I clarify what my position is, they say, "wait, you can't just say that's your position, because you're a rapist! Clearly you're lying!"

When they can't even acknowledge you define your position, nobody else, how can they engage in honest debate? They can't.

The book, Mating Mind: How Sexual Choice Shaped the Evolution, suggests a sort of feedback loop: Between two men of equal physical fitness/looks, one of them can gain an advantage through intelligence- either by gaining more resources via intelligence, or by displaying higher intelligence which signals the likelihood of being able to access more resources.

This advantage turned into a preference for intelligence.

One would argue that displaying prowess in the arts is peacocking of the brain. The book suggests that this competition was inevitable, and lead to the development of human intelligence.

Don't let her change you. She doesn't know what she wants.

3 upvotes · 18 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

you provide for your wife because she is the boss, or because you have made the decision to take responsibility for her well-being, as you do for all of your family?

You're speaking of ideals of inner game. Truly, you want to assume you're the boss, and when you provide for your wife, you do so as a boss. But that's inner game, and unrelated.

The most alpha of alphas is a man who fucks as many women as he can, and never settles down- and certainly concedes absolutely nothing.

Not that you want to strive for that- you probably don't. That's because the word alpha doesn't translate to "any quality you must want entirely."

The most beta of men gives all his resources to women in the mistaken hope of getting sex.

You also don't want to strive for that.

Anything in between is a mix of alpha and beta qualities.

Don't let her change you. She doesn't know what she wants.

3 upvotes · 18 July 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Beta more-or-less translates to provider. Somebody who exhibits more beta traits than alpha traits is going to be unattractive, but useful. Somebody who exhibits a good balance should be good and would make a good long-lasting marriage. Somebody who exhibits solely alpha traits is good for the fucking, but no good for much more.

Warning: Women shame women that don't support feminism

That's all there is to it.

I will never get married, and I think that two adults should fulfill their contractual obligations within a contract (provided they are legal). Currently, it is not legal to contractually consent to sex, but the time-limit on that contract is not defined anywhere in law, and currently can be withdrawn even after the fact.

I actually have commented that I don't think anybody should be forced into having sex against their will, because I believe it to be morally wrong. I do believe sex after consent is ok.

Hilary Clinton is a cunt.

Women have always been the primary victims of war. Women lose their husbands, their fathers, their sons in combat. Women often have to flee from the only homes they have ever known. Women are often the refugees from conflict and sometimes, more frequently in today's warfare, victims. Women are often left with the responsibility, alone, of raising the children.

We've debated a blue-pill flair just to see what would happen. We'll have to revisit the idea.

Typically we don't ban anybody unless they appear to not want to put in effort. The problem is we don't see many criticisms that aren't coupled with, "and this is why you guys are all..." or some mention of how nobody takes us seriously.

You want to voice an opinion that is different, that's fine. But if you're here with a blue-pill mindset already made up, and your goal here is to lead with your conclusion, you aren't adding to conversation, you're just making shit worse. Banned.

Furthermore, while I enjoy the science we discuss here, this place is first and foremost an evidence based subreddit that discusses our shared experiences. Find me a scientific article that proves or disproves our theories, and I'll show you how stats can do a lot to prove or disprove anything. But at the end of the day, we all know how women act and react, a scientific study that shows women prefer sex with betas isn't changing my mind because I know it's not true in practice.

3 upvotes · 18 June 2013 · /r/RedPillWomen

If sex is off the table because of something out of her control, that's not a reason to run dread. In another world without no fault divorce, the converse would be true, but men are afraid of commitment because that's no longer true for a lot of marriages.

Dread is only necessary if you've lost her respect. If she still adores you, no problemo.

What's the point if women are going to hit the wall anyway?

3 upvotes · 17 June 2013 · /r/RedPillWomen

Nobody said cheat.

We've entertained you for a while, but if you have no purpose here but to try to nit pick, and not engage in meaningful conversation then I suggest you leave.

Edit: To clarify, dread game might not be pretty, but when you take a vow for marriage, divorce should be the very last option- and trying anything that might rekindle your flame should be worth a try.

MissCherry is here to try make a point that doing what makes you happy is somehow anti-women or evil because it doesn't fit the narrative that feminism has drummed for the past half a century. We already know relationships are hard work, and MissCherry shows her hand by suggesting the first option in a failing marriage should be "being honest about his needs and then following through with a divorce."

Of course we understand that communication in a marriage is not always overt- but instead covert. Being "honest" is a great way to ensure what he wants (a saved marriage) will never take place. Because his wife doesn't want somebody to explain to her why she should be in love- she wants to just be in love. She wants the guy to be somebody worth loving.

Thanks to psychology, sometimes the best way to rekindle those feelings happens to be dread game. Well, it sure ain't divorce. But thanks, misscherry, for being an advocate of increasing our national statistics.

A relationship has give and take. Most people don't like to look at it from an economics standpoint, because they think the concept of personal transaction is dehumanizing and cheapens it.

But, that's irrelevant. We all participate in this economy and we all give and take. We make judgment calls regularly to decide what's worth our time and what's not. Time and body are our currency.

I can work for you with my body for 6 hours. You will pay me cash, which I can exchange for somebody else's time/body, a farmer growing wheat and baking bread.

Men and women have similar transactions to satisfy biological imperatives. We are driven to perform certain actions that we feel would best pass on our genes. It's programmed in a neat way- what is evolutionarily advantageous (or supposedly advantageous) makes us happy.

What men want and what women want are at odds with eachother, but a deal can usually be struck. Women needed resources and good genes. Often they would trade lifetime sexual access for provisions to raise the children. Men would trade provisions for sexual access.

Both could satisfy their biological impulses to a good extent.

Now imagine if one side- we'll say the sellers (women in this scenario) start giving away their goods for pretty much free. That's today's market. Men see little reason to settle down, because what satisfies their primal urges are now free.

Now imagine in order to satisfy a woman's primal urge, you had to appear to be smart and not desperate. If you ever appeared desperate, she would lose respect for you. She may try to extract resources (or validation) without holding her end of the bargain.

Any guy who demonstrates that he is willing to pay over market price demonstrates he is desperate or not very smart. That means she can extract what she wants while not performing her end of the bargain. She may even look elsewhere, since her respect for a man who's willing to put up with above-market prices will dwindle.

Withholding sex was a way to artificially inflate the market. We are in a deflationary market world wide (though some areas are better than others).

Maybe you've interpreted this wrong- when a woman demands monogamy from a man, it is her attempt at monopolizing his resources. That is her end goal. If he is not monogamous, there is a risk his resources will be split among other offspring from other women.

It's not that they all cheat, or would all cheat- it's built into the psychology of females- we call it the feminine imperative.

Their mating strategy has always depended on a certain amount of ambiguity. Concealed ovulation, the schedule of mating (alpha fucks, beta bucks).

The feminine imperative does a good job of trying to disguise what is it- they say "I would be offended by the implication of impropriety!"

But the translation isn't so friendly: "We reserve the shroud of secrecy because consciously or not, our mating strategy depends on it."

Nobody thinks game will fix the problem. I think most people who embrace game already realize the problems are too far gone to fix. Most of the guys on the red pill have the motto "enjoy the decline."

Game is just a natural market reaction to the current forces. From the book review, I have to assume the author was lauding the rise of game as a sign that there have been market changes and that men are going their own way because of it. Not because the author felt this was a strategy to bring back marriage. I think we've gone over the dam on that one.

We won't stagnate entirely, no. But stagnation is occurring right now!

Due to this marriage strike, less and less men are seeing any reason to pursue normal future-dad things. With no incentive of marriage, little incentive for a family, men are literally just dropping out of the race. The number of male college degree earners is dropping, the economic output of men is dropping... men are no longer seeing any value to produce much more than they consume, because there is no economic force at work now.

During what time span? The only organisms I know of that reproduce asexually are not very smart.

Or do you mean that if a generation of men found themselves stranded with no women, they would still be smart and innovative?

I don't disagree that men will be smart without a woman present, but you understand that the drive to invent, explore, and to make things better is based on the primal instinct to amass resources (to eventually land a mate).

Taking women out of one generation doesn't change the biological urges of that species.

3 upvotes · 22 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

So you're saying that great scientists and inventors were doing their thing to impress women? I rather doubt it. People like Einstein are intrinsically driven by their curiosity, not by the desire to impress a woman. Intelligence & curiosity and desire to develop science & technology may have evolved as a kind of peacock's tail to impress a partner, but that doesn't mean that when there are no women the results of this evolution suddenly disappear.

Beyond basic survival, which basically all animals already have, the human brain evolved basically entirely out of sexual selection.

Your understanding of evolution is a bit off. It's not that people got smart because they wanted to impress women, it's that women were attracted to those who were smart (and were able to gain access to more resources/friends/security).

Read: The mating mind by Geoffrey Miller. It's a great book about how sexual selection shaped our human brains.

The red pill isn't a "theory" but more a set of theories and understandings that attempt to better model the world we live in, in order to make better decisions for oneself.

This question comes up often, and I don't really care to entertain it over and over every time somebody doesn't want to do the legwork of reading for themselves.

3 upvotes · 3 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

This person was trolling, not disagreeing. I call out trolls. Well, actually, I rarely call anybody out, but this was a particularly common new troll we're getting, so I wanted to illustrate publicly why they were considered a troll. Otherwise, without a loud public declaration from a mod, their lie that they are only here for honest debate would otherwise be believed.

Then we'd have morons wondering why the big bad moderators are deleting dissent! We don't want this to become a "circle jerk" they'd say. And what's a circle jerk? Well it's an indefensible unfalsifiable position when one concern troll starts spouting off bullshit like "hey you guys are talking about one topic too much-- and deleting the dissent!"

They were trolling. I was banning them in a transparent manner.

I do like this subreddit, but I don't want to exist in an echo chamber, so I saw a mod calling someone out that was disagreeing and I became concerned.

What you're doing is concern trolling. Whether or not you know it- you are doing just as much damage to the quality here as any other troll.

3 upvotes · 2 May 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

The reason we don't generally murder each other isn't because of a social contract, it's because we have a part of our brain that seems to be based on Kantian deontological ethics, the concept that there are rules and you do not break these rules no matter what. This area is located in the ventromedial prefrontal cortex and contemplates the emotional implications of a moral choice. The rules against your examples of murder, theft, rape are actually hardwired into our brains. unless you're a psychopath, in which case this area of the brain has significantly lower activity than in non-psychopaths.

But we do murder eachother, just typically not within our own tribe. We even honor some killing!

Obviously an aversion to the actual act of killing is instinctual, and it's true, as a cooperative species, we were able to excel because of this empathy.

Now I did use some short hand to explain how social contracts affected our development as people, but you've decided to delve in, so believe it or not, we're not really talking about two different things!

My shorthand was the logical basis for why a system like this would evolve.

Obviously evolution states that only those who survived that pass on genes. The idea here is that that a non-cooperative brand of humans apparently were unable to outlast cooperative groups. Over generations, yes, we adapt biologically. Due to the systems that allowed the species to survive.

We're really not saying two different things here.

I don't think that evolution has selected for this disconnect - that's why I say it's not part of the imperative. Rather, it's just not something that is selected against.

The disconnect of the feminine imperative is certainly selected for, it allows women to deal with the cognitive dissonance that would otherwise cripple a human between their two mating strategies.

Creep Shaming discussion

3 upvotes · 25 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Creep is a manipulative tool to use men's programmed aversion to "creeping" women out, and to help women avoid other men who are being creepy.

When women realized they can use it any time they want, they started labeling normal men as creeps. I've heard it myself, while opening two girls at a bar. "Um, you're creepy go away."

It's a subtle manipulation and they'll use it all they want, because if there's one thing I've learned, it's that girls between the ages of 15 - 30 know nothing of moderation.

The value of being an asshole: Some thoughts I had this morning on why it can be so attractive

3 upvotes · 24 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Let's say you were incredibly good looking and naturally attractive to women. You date my sister. I'm feeling devious and I lie to my sister, and convince her you're a pickup artist.

If she loses attraction towards you on a lie, does that mean the concept suggests any inherent properties of the person in question? Or is it completely psychological on the end of the woman?

Let me explain it another way. If you fart in front of a woman on the first date, she will likely be quite turned off by you. So most men would stifle it and wait for the bathroom. Does that mean she's falling in love with a lie?

It's exposure to the knowledge that's damaging. Neither suggest any intrinsic properties of a man. A man who does not fart in front of a lady isn't incapable of farts.

This is why nobody here takes our critics seriously. Feminists take note.

Indeed. I suppose I'm talking more about after swallowing, some people don't want the new goals. MGTOW decided that if blue pill marriage isn't a reality, they'll have no part in mating.

At a certain point, the bitterness is less a reaction, and more a choice not to change your goals.

And that choice is one each person will have to make for themselves.

Obviously people's goals will have to change to meet the new information they learn here, if they don't want to be bitter.

I consider myself somewhat bitter. The conditions of my life are currently ones I cannot change (at the moment), and because of this, the goal posts for me might include going my own way (or fucking fat feminists). I choose not to resign to a life of celibacy, so instead I remain bitter until the day I can change the variables. (Expatriate)

It's Their Game (Rational Male)

3 upvotes · 3 April 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Oh, well I agree on that. There was a post not too long ago that really put it in smart terms..

Something along the line of this:

The reason women think that nice guys are just manipulative and trying to get sex is because women are inherently solipsistic. When women are overly nice, they are trying to get something, so they cannot internalize the idea that most nice-guy men were just raised to be pushovers and were told that would lead to relationships.

In the argument of the nice-guy debacle, the women's version of nice-guys doesn't really exist. The only guys manipulating women into sex aren't being all that nice.

The solipsism argument is also why I think women call us misogynists. The feminism movement is based in hatred of men. They can't fathom that we would start our own movement subverting their strategy that isn't based in hatred.

Yesterday I decided I was ready to cheat because my wife is fat. Tonight I cockblocked myself.

We don't plan on leaving the funds in bitcoin for long. The value is mildly steady for our purposes at the moment, I'll be exchanging it to USD as quickly as possible.

There are a few private exchanges in my area that have assured me they will buy bit coin without personal information- but rest assured, even if the exchanges hold on to your information, I'm exchanging it to USD and cashier's check, it will be untraceable back to you!

We decided this was the only way to maintain anonymity, though the correct way to do this would be making a non-profit and paying the proper taxes, we don't think we'll be dealing with much cash in the first place, and secondly, that would compromise our ability to do this anonymously.

The feminists' biggest weapon is public shame. The victims of which we aim to help. We don't want to become victims ourselves!

The question you have to ask yourself is, who defines what being a dick is?

Because at the end of the day if women pass over the non-dick for the guy who's a dick, you really gotta wonder who the bad guy is here. Is it pasta?

I would argue that if a girl fucks the guy that makes her cry, he's giving her what she wants. Drama, the dick, and everything else. She's fulfilled.

(Obviously I'm not advocating abuse, but let's face it, women do a lot of crying for less-than-necessary reasons)

This is true, except one point: sugar and carbs raise your insulin level to regulate blood sugar. This turns the excess energy into fat. (normal behavior). So once it's removed excess energy, you're hungry again.

That's why you can eat at a Chinese buffet and be hungry half an hour later.

Satiation is an important component to eating. High fat & protein foods will not raise your blood sugar, and instead rely on gluconeogenesis to regulate blood sugar. This will keep you from having the sugar-spike-immediately-hungry loop.

Low carb diets are the key to weight loss.

It seems like you approach ten times more girls than what it's worth. It almost seems like it's not worth the effort.

But you want to get laid.

Here's the problem women set themselves up for.

By acting like they do, and making me go through all the legwork to find mates and hookup, I no longer care much about any individual one. I couldn't give half a shit about any particular one. Which means, if any of these chicks think they'd eventually like to settle down with a guy they find attractive (like me) they've got something else coming..

3 upvotes · 5 March 2013 · /r/seduction

You're trying to create a system of metrics in a part of life that operates outside of metrics. People are people, not statistics. That is why it's dehumanizing.

You're making the argument that personal interactions are unknowable and therefore have no rhyme, reason and can therefore not be causally determined. (Even probabalistically).

See the thing is, people are predictable on a large enough scale. That's what seduction is all about. Determining behaviors that work, and ones that don't.

Now some of the stuff that appears on seddit might be a gray area, might not work, or isn't proven to work, but to claim that knowing what works and what doesn't is impossible to know because people are people is just ridiculous.

If I go up to a woman and throw poop in her face, we can all agree that will be a big turn off to about 99.999% of people. Does that mean I've just dehumanized 99.999% of women by predicting their reactions? Hell no!

I used to be so blue pill, that I came to hate women.

3 upvotes · 5 March 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I couldn't understand how women could just stop loving men, I got dumped three times by women I loved dearly, all of them promised me to never leave me and I fell for it everytime.

I know what that's like. I think it's astounding how it happens. In my blue pill days I'd rack my brain for hours trying to figure out how they could just turn off the "love switch." I had a girlfriend of a couple years who changed over night! We were intimate, sexy, laughing, having good times. Then one day her behavior was different. She was distant. Not interested. She eventually said, "I have been out-of-love with you for a while now."

Frankly that hit like a ton of bricks. I didn't really understand women at the time. I wondered how she could just fall out of love. I mean, I loved her dearly!

What I didn't understand was that her telling me that was a moment of strength for her. She was on the deep end of a rationalization journey, trying to make sense of what her friends were whispering in her ear. They wanted me out of her life, because of a few arguments I must've been a no-good asshole. I think deep down she was still attracted but didn't know how to process both her attraction and what her friends goaded her to do.

At the end she just kinda turtled into her brain and devised the easiest way out for herself.

Anyway, long story short- check out Women in love, and men in love on the sidebar. These both discuss this in detail.

How the feminine imperative hurts teenage women...

3 upvotes · 2 March 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

If you find a nice chaste woman who is religious and will respect you as the head of the household, I think that's a great find. I think they're less common in today's age, but if you find one that's great. Religion is one great way to put external pressure on a woman to suppress her hypergamous tendencies.

Having spent a lot of time at churches throughout my life- my only warning is this, these women are not common and even in church rarely exist. Furthermore, the church is succumbing to the liberal feminist bias-

<http://dalrock.wordpress.com/2012/05/11/reframing-christian-marriage/>

<http://dalrock.wordpress.com/2012/05/20/reframing-christian-marriage-part-5-sex-as-a-weapon/>

I'm saying that marriage itself is a risk that probably won't work out for you in the end. If you decide to take the plunge- which I really don't think you should- then religion is one good place to get started.

That said, I don't think religion helps your odds much more than 10-15%, and I really don't think you're going to "fix" women in church who have already succumb to western feminism.

Sure, there are the snowflakes. But believing in them and holding out for them is detrimental thinking and won't help. Just like how somebody wins the lottery every day, doesn't mean I'll teach my son to play the lottery instead of invest in a career.

It's pretty well stacked against you if you're looking for a traditional marriage today. Unless you expatriate (which is a real option, btw) I'd recommend doing away with the traditional notions. Wishful thinking isn't realistic- and is essentially blue pill. The perfect family is a lie they're marketing to you. It no longer exists in any way that's practical.

Tragedy of the commons. Unfortunately, let's say you take the honorable way out. Doesn't fix society because there will always be that guy who will fuck a woman.

I think you're looking at this backwards. Mating and sexual strategy are amoral.

You are implying that having copious amounts of sex with women is somehow irresponsible of a red-pillar because they are effectively making the landscape harder for other men.

The problem is this: mating has always been a zero-sum game. This will never change. There will be the haves and the have-nots.

The landscape changed, and the have-nots are growing. You can stick by honor all you want, but that doesn't change these fundamental realities.

How the feminine imperative hurts teenage women...

3 upvotes · 2 March 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

To start. I am naive. I admit that. It gives me hope. I still want a great wife.

I know some guys here will call me jaded to say it, but holding on to that hope in the United States may be a fool's errand. Some guys here still want to get married, but unless the legal landscape changes considerably, it's taking a bet that has no possibility of winning.

Marriage is a bad idea, legally. With many incentives for her to leave you and get a cash prize, you're better off in a long term non-marriage scenario if you find "the one."

Secondly, I think from a practical standpoint "the one" is a misnomer. Women in American culture are not predisposed to commitment, and it doesn't matter how you feel about marriage or love, women don't share that with you.

If you do want to keep a girl around long term, you need to game her, and never stop. I really recommend reading the sidebar under Required reading. The first 4 are good for this scenario.

Yep I'm not the type that sleeps around. I might be at complete odds with you. But I don't think that the Red Pill "lifestyle" demands that you live like a lot of men on here do.

No, you don't need to sleep around. There's a whole movement called Men Going Their Own Way in which a sub-culture of them are "ghosting." They are voluntarily celibate. I don't agree with them per se, but they're certainly red pillers, and I respect them for it.

I don't really see how that applies at all to what you quoted. My entire post was about trying to help young women avoid the trap of the feminine imperative. The end result of this is a hopeful resurgence of great wives. Yeah I think its an honorable goal. Do I think I'll get laid by being honorable? Absolutely not. But I think I can help raise up some good wives for my sons and other men that will come after me.

The problem with your honorable goal is that there is zero reward for honor, and worse- I don't think you'll have the effect you're looking for. Our culture is pretty far out. Now if you had a daughter, maybe you could help her. Maybe you could have a direct influence on your offspring... but these girls at church, by your own account, have already americanized and started on the cock carousel.

I don't want to break your spirit, but these girls are lost. You can't save them.

I'm not saying don't try to be a positive influence in their lives.

I'm not even saying you need to become a male slut.

What I'm saying is your honorable intentions will leave you alone with nothing to show for them.

As long as you understand that in twenty years you won't have a medal for your bravery. Women won't line up to reward this behavior. As you've already seen, what women are doing is having sex- and these are the church goers.

I've always considered church to be the last refuge of good women (or at least not terrible women). I think if you're going to find wife material, that's certainly where you're going to find it. That said, I wouldn't hold my breath. Our culture has infiltrated even the church. Look at the catholic church, now accepting divorce!

That doesn't mean that I wouldn't get married if I was lucky enough to find a woman who would make a great wife. I don't think I have the conflicting beliefs you are alluding to. I think that I more so live and use the knowledge I've gained from the red pill differently that many on this sub do. Like I said above. I'm still doing what I want. Its just that what I want just so happens to be raising a family.

I'm reading your optimism as a false hope. I really don't mean to discourage you from being optimistic. Lord knows we could all use more of that around here. I just don't want to see your optimism turn into an alimony check.

Read these words and then do what you want, nobody will stop you: EVERY SINGLE MAN WHO WAS UNEXPECTEDLY DIVORCED THOUGHT THEY WERE MARRYING THE ONE.

The conflicting beliefs I allude to here is the fact that you imagine these church goers as wife material, and explain how most of the youth there are already on the cock carousel. Be careful.

I certainly hope I am wrong and I wish you find the wife of your dreams. But the idea of the "wife of your dreams" is the lie that they sell you to rope you into the blue pill lifestyle in the first place. Be wary.

If there was an attack on US soil, people would volunteer to sign up.

That's not reliable. WWI, WWII, Vietnam, Cold war, these are all recent times when the volunteer army wasn't sufficient.

But let's say we had enough people in the army. Who are those people making up a majority of them? Men.

But the dangerous jobs are not always the highest paying jobs.

Dangerous jobs usually pay much higher than most non-dangerous jobs.

Most multimillionaire CEOs, for example, aren't really putting their lives at risk every day.

Most men aren't CEOs or multimillionaires. Apex fallacy.

As for rape:

The reason he's commenting on this is simple: Saying it saddens and offends you is a shaming technique. In public discourse, nobody wants to be that guy. Around these parts, we've learned to stop giving a shit.

Saying you're offended doesn't mean anything to us when women use faux offense to manipulate men all the time.

Edit: For example: Men here are learning how to be more successful with women. You say you're offended as a way to dissuade guys from doing this... how disingenuous does this make you? Saying you're offended that we've actually learned how to be successful makes you appear just as manipulative as the lot of them.

Signs of emotional abuse - copied from r/psychology. Some of the stuff in here is familiar red pill behavior... what do you guys think?

3 upvotes · 21 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

The abuser projects their words, attitudes or actions onto an unsuspecting victim usually because they themselves have not dealt with childhood wounds that are now causing them to harm others.

I have to say, I was sometimes unpleasant in my past relationships. But you know what I think the cause was? Having unrealistic expectations set by my parents and society telling me I should expect a woman to live up to man's standards. I was constantly surprised by the dumb-as-shit decisions my girlfriends would make. Being emotionally manipulative and everything like that.

At the end of the day, learning how reality really works has given me peace and eased my temper considerably. I feel like just labeling all this shit as emotional abuse is really ignoring the real problem here. My frustration stemmed from the constant re-enforcement that things were supposed to work a certain way, but women never did follow the rules.

Call me abusive, but setting up a rule system for men to live by that women disregard wholesale is just setting up for some goddamned angry men.

Humiliation, degradation, discounting, negating, judging, criticizing:

One should never be critical no matter what. Remember, honey, your opinions are just as valid as my educated opinion.

Do you feel that the person treats you like a child? Do they constantly correct or chastise you because your behavior is "inappropriate?"

I think the question that should be asked is, did you have a temper tantrum in public and act like a child? Because for fucks sake that's what my girlfriend would do. Of course I treated her like a child.

Accusing and blaming, trivial and unreasonable demands or expectations, denies own shortcomings:

Again, I think this is completely attributable to the subtle frustrations caused by the discrepancy between what we were told to expect and what happened.

When your girlfriend subtly manipulates you or cries when she doesn't get her own way.. it certainly makes you look like the bad guy for getting mad that she's doing it. That's the nature of plausible deniability- a woman's number one weapon is passive aggression.

At the end of the day, you can't pinpoint what it is about her behavior that's driving you nuts, so it just looks like you're nitpicking.

Emotional distancing and the "silent treatment," isolation, emotional abandonment or neglect:

You've tried everything else, to no avail. So you walk away. Maybe she'll learn this time. No?

....

At the end of the day, these certainly are symptoms.. but they're symptoms of a different problem.

Ensuring genetically diverse children is a huge portion of the survival of our species. The women who had children with multiple partners were less likely to lose all their children to any single cause. Those would be our ancestors.

It's even better enforced by the fact that in Bonobo chimps, the alpha would be supplanted regularly, and the women would just follow along.

Selective service? What country do you live in? But yes, women should sign up for the same as men, even if it is not for the same work.

USA.

And about that war, that's highly unlikely, women rarely are into war. It's even proven that if there are women in politics, the chance that country goes to war is lower.

Conjecture at best. That hasn't been proven. But let's just say it were true- that doesn't change the dynamics here. If women have the right to vote us into a war, they have to have the responsibility to fight in it. Not some vague promise "oh no we would never--trust us!"

I would say men and women should pass a fitness test, but only (!!!) if it is relevant to their job. If a man/woman is a deminer, I don't see why he/she should be able to run a marathon.

I agree. Front lines requires fitness. That's what we're discussing here. I have no problem with non-athletic people running computers and driving ships.

True, there still needs to be work done in the work floor for women and I think a lot of nice things have been done. When feminists say that there are not enough women in management, they don't blame men.

You haven't been to jezzebell then. They do blame men. They call it the patriarchy. Right now more women go to college than men. Whether that's institutionalized sexism or not, women are definitely in place to pursue their dreams.

Let me give you some examples why it is a bit harder for women. - Expectations. A woman is expected to do administration or a 'feminin' job, they are rarely thought how to do business management and are disencouraged.

A woman is expected to do no more than she is qualified. There are women doing the hardest jobs today- like doctors! They are taught anything they decide to take in school.

Not only literally, but by the stereotypes in society. - When a woman goes for her career and she has kids, she will ALWAYS get the question: and what about your kids?

I'm a business owner. It's a bad decision to hire somebody who will be a bad worker because her kids interrupt her schedule. I also cannot afford my employees to go on maternity leave. These are realities, not sexism. I do hire women, by the way. But I do ask if they plan on having children in the next five years first.

- A woman is not ego driven

Women and men are both ego driven. Have you ever seen a girl on facebook post pictures of herself?

and is not always welcome at certain typically male network opportunities.

And men are not welcome at certain female network opportunities. I won't argue that old boys clubs don't exist. Only that they do exist because men made them. do you know how hard it is to get into one? I'm a man, I can't get into one without doing something spectacular. If a woman runs for office, you'd be sure those guys pay attention to her. Follow the money.

If she is and she is young, men will take an interest to get her in their bed.

This can be used as an advantage. She doesn't have to sleep with them.

She will not be regarded as a 'person'.

This is a common trope that I don't think holds much meaning. I like sex with women, they are people. Women and men have different values for eachother, it's true. But assuming a man's value for a woman must be the same as a woman's value of a woman to qualify as a "person" is misguided.

If she is older, she will become invisible and uninteresting. -

It's called the wall. In most settings if a woman is qualified for a position, how she looks is not taken into account.

It has been proven that managers/CEO's promote people that remind them of themselves, women should be pretty butch if they want to remind a man of himself.

Nothing compels a CEO to make a choice he doesn't like. Women are free to build empires the way men do, and run it the way they'd like.

In the quota discussion (x% of the board should be women) the first thing people cry out is 'but we need capable people, not women'. That seems a little bit odd if you think about it, dont you? Especially since companies with women on their board thrive.

What if women weren't capable? I agree people should be considered on merit, but let's look at this: I work in technology. 99% of applicants are men. Sexist hiring? Or gender differences? I won't turn down qualified men to fill a woman quota. And I won't hire a woman who isn't qualified. I do hire women occasionally. In general their stay at my company is shorter (on their terms) and less productive.

Men are terrified of the idea of working for a women.

That's projection. Men aren't terrified of anything of the sort. It's like the old trope "you're just intimidated by a strong woman." No, I'm turned off by strong women, because they're not feminine.

I have so many other arguments, but as long as women need to put an effort in defending their right to be somewhere instead of putting that energy in actually doing stuff, there is always going to be a feminist complaining.

That's wrong. Women don't have a right to be somewhere. They have a right to attempt. I can no more barge into the boardroom of microsoft as any woman who isn't on the board. If she wants to be on the board, she's going to have to do something amazing. The same way I would.

Oh, and women work at least as hard as men. I think it's a little bit insulting you would state that women do not and then complain they don't achieve their goals.

I didn't say women don't work hard. I said they don't expect it to be hard work because it looks easy to be a man in power. It's called the apex fallacy. Yes most CEOs are men, but most men are not CEOs.

The New N-Word

3 upvotes · 8 February 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

On a similar note:

The fact that many guys put in an effort to build that attraction and become that better man kills the ideal of organic attraction that most women want to maintain. The fact that something like "game" exists at all is even more damaging because it implies that there are some concrete formulas and methods that produce better results than others, killing the notion of "magical love" that they'd much prefer to cling to.

In the end, this all comes down to feelings. Women "feel" uncomfortable with inorganic models of sexual attraction. Game promotes an inorganic model of attraction by telling them that there is a formula that can increase a man's appeal and that a woman can be drawn more reliably with practice and perfection of this formula. Therefore, game makes women feel uncomfortable.

"Creepy" is the catch-all label used by women for that which makes them feel uncomfortable. Hence, game is creepy.

Physical appearance helps with instant attraction. Especially cold approaches.

But in different environments with captive audiences, (say work, school, office, church) where people are forced to interact when they wouldn't normally (not super attractive so wouldn't talk at a bar, but at a church, sure!) you can build attraction via other traits. You can display high value by being funny, confident, and from social proof (commanding a group!). This environment allows you to build rapport and attraction and can easily enable far less physically attractive men to build attraction.

The idea of a shit test is women will pose an impossible test to sort whether or not you're alpha or beta.

Like, "Does this dress make me look fat?"

The wrong answer is "no, honey, you look beautiful."

The right answer is a playful alpha response: "So big you're getting bigger by the minute!"

Basically saying you don't jump her hoops. Keeps the frame that you're in charge. Once women realize they're in charge, they lose respect for you.

I think Workthrow was pointing out that feminism in a way is a shit test. By making the demands they do, they quickly weed out betas by seeing which guys adopt their imperative. The ones that don't are the alphas.

For sure, men and women have different items that they find more or less attractive.

The difference is in mating strategy.

Men's strategy is maximize approaches and be selected.

Women's strategy is to maximize rejections and to select the best. (Hypergamy)

At the end of the day, it is women who do the selecting. Hypergamy left unchecked is a big problem that we discuss on theredpill because even after she has selected, the desire for "upgrading" doesn't necessarily vanish.

What follows is continuous fitness testing to either ensure her selection or to begin the emotional separation from him.

I almost deleted this post, it looks like a misdirection. Frankly, all of the things you asked are exactly what a troll would ask. I looked at your post history, and it's hard to tell if you're just confused, or trolling.

Here's my advice:

Women are people. They are no more objects than anybody else. They are people with the capacity to bring you happiness.

Women do not internalize the same responsibilities men do. In this case, we must treat our relationship with them more like we would between a father and child. No they are not children, but no they do not have the same sense of responsibility of men. This is not a judgement of morality. This is just an observation of reality.

Do I view them as little hamsters trying to accomplish goals they invent for themselves, all the while not realizing they'll never be good enough?

You will only view women as not good enough if you think women are men. Women are great at being women. Just as men would be "not good enough" if you were judging by women's standards.

I gotta admit, after swallowing the red pill, I've been having a difficult time acclimating to this new reality. I've accepted it fully, but how do I adjust myself?

Stick around, it's not as bleak as it might appear when you first start discovering this stuff.

Edit: Actually, on second thought, I'm deleting this. Please don't be offended, and take my advice if you will. Lurk a bit, you'll see things aren't so bad.

This is a good question, and perhaps others are better to answer it. I don't think women are consciously aware that this is what they're doing to their own kids. In fact, women aren't consciously aware of the imperative at all.

I think the reason women do it is simple: It's the best way to affect a generation.

For the most part, boys with fathers wouldn't be affected anyway.

Female hypergamy hinges on the idea that they maximize rejections in order to find the highest quality male (highest value on the sexual market).

One such way to do it is to feed the culture with a narrative that men adopt themselves, and will then self-identify as betas, and disqualify themselves.

This is a very apt analysis. Especially all this hate pickup keeps getting.

Women have no problem discussing new hairdos and dresses, which are essential in making oneself more attractive. So to shame men for doing the male equivalent is ridiculous. Of course, we see it as a thinly veiled attempt at continuing to propagate the feminine imperative, but from within the viewpoint of society, where this is already expected, it just serves to further disincentivize those who are already blue pill.

It's like car commercials. I read somewhere that car commercials aren't there to sell you a car, they're there to make sure those who already bought them feel like they have value.

3 upvotes · 12 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I've read from a few places that anti-depressants are widely used in the female populace. A few things to consider:

1. Misdiagnosis or over-prescription. Women are more likely to recognize an emotional dilemma and seek help. It's possible it's the amount they seek help that gets them to use more anti-depressants, not necessarily the rate of depression.

2. The daily mail is a terrible source.

Does she think that whole "fuck you" bit is attractive? Oh, no, because she feels entitled. She decides the response to anybody who does not share the attitude that she should be entitled is to curse, mock, and be bitchy.

And that right there is my problem with american women. They don't mind that the entitlement mentality isn't attractive, because they don't care about being attractive. And good news, they've done a great job. I am not attracted. Was that their end goal?

Hear their collective cries. Where have all the good men gone?

Never Listen To A Woman

3 upvotes · 9 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

Well consider this- what's the motivation for a woman to know things?

Obviously for both men and women, knowledge is a means to a job, for a career. Sure.

But it extends slightly further than that.

For men, knowledge is about sexual selection. Hobbies, conversation topics and skills, accomplishments, these are all things that attract women.

For women, knowledge can likewise exist, but without the same motivator. Which is to say men are not specifically attracted to women because they are more knowledgeable than others. Women, themselves, are rarely attracted to men they perceive to be less knowledgeable.

From these two factors alone, you can see that there is a difference in motivation for attaining knowledge.

Neither gender is prohibited, and many girls we'd call nerds happen to do a lot of general reading and study. But for the woman who is attractive, knowledge is neither necessary nor advantageous for her goals.

I don't know how you can argue that there aren't many examples here of people insulting, misleading and demonizing women in a way that undermines your perception of them as thinking/feeling beings.

Here's the best point I can make. All is fair in love and war.

Why do I say that?

Because hypergamy doesn't care.

Repeat with me. Hypergamy doesn't care.

Women want what they want. You can never change that. You can ignore it, you can use it, but you cannot change it.

What does this mean? Hypergamy doesn't care means that at the end of the day, even after years, if you haven't properly maintained an alpha state, if you haven't recognized her shit tests and put down your foot, she loses interest in you. This thinking, feeling being loses interest in you, no matter how much investment you've got in her.

Turns out, hypergamy doesn't care.

We do not demonize women. We understand women. If your interpretation of what we say looks evil, ask yourself this: Under whose imperative does it look evil?

If I tell you that I'm rude to women and they desire to have sex with me because of it... whose running the show?

How a man expects to be loved

3 upvotes · 8 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

You've alluded to it but I think missed the point..

The issue is the motivation. Is she doing this to see if he fails, that he not really "a man"? This is crap in a relationship; it is self-sabotage.

This is ignoring the instinctual hypergamous nature of the female psyche. You're close, in the fact that it is self-sabotage, but not in the way I think you're suggesting.

Women will shit test, they do it when they meet you, they do it in relationships, they will continue to do it forever. This is part of female hypergamy.

Their job isn't just to vet you for fitness in a relationship, it's to continuously test to make sure you're a high enough quality male, and- here's the part your missing, its goal is to emotionally prepare women to jump ship when they meet a higher status male.

That's basically it. The whole "falling out of love" feeling is simply the hypergamous tendency to test the fitness of the male and if he fails, to begin the emotional reaction that will force her to seek out a higher status male, and have no problem jumping ship as soon as he arrives.

In some more extreme cases, it will cause her to jump ship even without a higher status male present. But that's usually only if a woman perceives options (which in our society, most do).

So yes, it's not just self sabotage, it is specifically made to be sabotage.

Do not expect a woman to combat this hypergamous behavior. If she wants to be happy, she will do it.

That said, I do agree that becoming aware of the red pill means she should temper her disappointment. Most importantly, understand that "falling out of love" is a direct result of this behavior if he does not pass the shit tests, but the commitment of marriage should over-ride that.

In fact, wifey, you should be fully prepared to spend the rest of your life with somebody you fall out of love with. This should be your starting point. Take every day that you're attracted to him as a blessing, not an expectation. Marriage is a contract, a promise, not an expression of feelings.

Eventually, some of the farther out things start to make sense, some things click, and some of it might just be terrible- but that's why we have discussion. Never be afraid to ask- there are a lot of knowledgeable people here.

An article on the Necessity of Domestic Violence

3 upvotes · 7 January 2013 · /r/TheRedPill

I do NOT recommend you start hitting the girls in your rotation, mainly because the risks are too great. For every one girl who'll pounce on your dick after a good backhand, there are three more who'll dial 911 without a second thought. I got lucky. But unless you exclusively fuck single moms, cougars and spinsters, you've likely had girls either try to physically hurt you or bait you into hitting them. Young women (teens to early twenties), sexually voracious girls, and high-T (check the digit ratio!) girls are all more likely to be abusive.

I don't like that this post has been down-vote censored. I know that domestic violence is a hot topic, and worse- the title of this post might as well read "Why we should be hitting girls more.."

But this article really does take a look at this stuff realistically. Needless to say, in my own life, I try not to hit anybody. But by dismissing any talk of slapping or hitting, a lot of the mens rights movement really misses the point, which is this: Whether or not violence is ever "morally" acceptable, women DO demand it, and, in fact, will often act out- seeking boundaries from her man. A good slap can actually appease her... and that's not just a man saying he wants to slap women. It's women who test boundaries and have no respect for those who don't maintain them.

I think you can be successful at maintaining an alpha position without violence, and I want to recommend to everybody here that you never attempt to hit a woman (for at the very least, legal reasons). But the theory behind this post is still very much worth reading.

A little extra exposure won't hurt. We'll still be here cleaning up after the trolls.

My personal reflections on why open relationship is superior to exclusive dating , even when your ideal relationship is exclusive

2 upvotes · 29 May 2024 · /r/TheRedPill

Preselection is a helluva drug.

That's one of the reasons we recommend spinning plates.

As for an "open" relationship, I'm not really sure that works long-term (or even medium term) but really it's just spinning plates with extra steps. A relationship usually implies some level of exclusivity.

Women will be okay with it, until they're not. That's why you spin multiple plates.

So one of the things you need to be working on is building rapport. You've got the opens down, but some of these situations aren't optimal for building rapport. Chicks aren't going to follow you around the square unless you already have some rapport. Which is hard to do if you catch somebody walking or as a bar closes.

Your best bet for building rapport is finding situations in which you can either have a longer interaction or repeated interactions.

For instance, if you're both at the same club and you bump into her multiple times, you can use things like a running joke and callbacks to strengthen your rapport.

Or if you're sitting at a bar near somebody, you can strike up a conversation that doesn't have to end right away. Don't try to segue that into bouncing right away. Let the night burn a little.

Of course, there's my favorite RPS brand of tried and true rapport building. And I'll give it to you if you join my course for $399 / year.

Just kidding. It's having a captive audience. Here's my writeup on it:

Here's how I know you're a troll. Because nobody here is giving "valuable feedback."

You know who IS giving valuable feedback? The current userbase who use both sites daily and give constructive feedback.

I'm a women that's an avid supporter of men's rights.. but some discussion here is concerning...

2 upvotes · 9 February 2023 · /r/MensRights

It does concern me, I've been a subscriber and contributor here for at least a decade.

And, as somebody with experience with concern trolls, I can say that concern trolls do hurt communities. Another poster put it well:

[...] a concern troll pretends to be part of the community ("I'm a woman that's an avid supporter of men's rights") who posts that they appreciate what's happening, but that they have some 'concerns'. [...] then other concern trolls, usually from the same group as the original troll (in this case, other concerned women), post replies like 'yeah I agree' and try to paint the subreddit as being bad and full of bad people, in an attempt to get them to agree.

Then finally they can use the leverage of the post to force out people that disagree because they've taken over the narrative.

It happens a lot and the only correct response is an immediate ban because it's toxic as hell.

He's right, it's extremely effective.

More than that, the discourse on this subreddit has changed since MGTOW, TRP and Incel communities have been banned.

Once again, TRP wasn't banned. We're still here, having a positive effect on men learning how to value themselves in a society that doesn't value them.

For the reference, TRP is about establishing yourself as a man, that includes generating opportunities rather than shutting doors. But we are end-goal agnostic. You can use the toolkit to reach a family life, just as you can use it to stay single indefinitely.

But you need to learn the toolkit to be successful at any endeavor (in my humble opinion).

Most guys who show up to TRP already wanted a family. It was only after they realized there's pee in the soup that they took a second to think about whether they wanted to eat it.

Thanks for taking the time. Better sort for forums.red is planned, along with an improved search. We're self funded so we can only go as fast as the patreon can afford.

As for the sort on trp.red, we've experimented with a number of different sorts, and workshopped it with the userbase there. Something you might not be familiar with is how Twitter lines up its feed. We've experimented with Twitter's sorting (hot at top, and new replies at top) and right now the current default sort is the one members responded the most positively towards. The members there are very vocal about changes and preferences.

We actually have a new layout for trp.red in the works that blends forums.red content with trp.red content and shows parent statuses by default with threaded chains below them.

If you want to join the dev tribe you can always give your feedback.

I see you time and time again getting users in here complain to you about the new site. Instead of trying to figure out what their issues are, you snark back at them and tell them they're wrong and you're right.

No, I don't think you've got the big picture at all. We have a dedicated community who are regularly providing feedback and we are tweaking the layout, UI, and different settings regularly. What we see here at the top of this thread are the low-effort guys who dismiss a hell of a lot of effort with 2-bit phrases like "garbage", and when I post screen shots side-by-side with reddit and actually ask "so what would you change" I get crickets. So forgive my attitude but it gets old after a while, especially when the critique is similar to "but why don't you have a multi-million dollar website?" or "I hate the twitter layout and post ordering" which- I feel you, twitter takes some getting used to. If you want an invite into the bug/feature tracker, you'll find that bringing greater context to the sort is actually on our list.

I had one of the senior members (I won't mention his name but he'll know if he reads this) actually approach me with a similar complaint- it's "clunky" and "I don't understand it." I said, what part don't you like, and he said, "well hang on let me register an account."

Yeah, that's right, he hadn't used the site. 15 minutes later he came back to me and said, "well it wasn't immediately intuitive, once I understood how it worked I actually quite like it!" We have spent the better part of the last 2 years making adjustments that he feels makes it more user friendly.

It's not that criticism isn't useful per se, and it's not like we're perfect or can't improve. It's that drive-by comments that dismiss the entire effort (such as calling it "half-baked" or "garbage") is an insult - not to me- but to the countless devs and community members who put YEARS of energy and money into the project.

You're trying to get widespread adoption but you're not listening to feedback.

I listen to actionable feedback.

If my dev team released something this half-baked without any real UAT and then gave my users attitude when they didn't like it, they wouldn't be my dev team anymore.

Do you pay your dev team? I can show you where the patreon is that funds ours... (hint hint)

Then gave my users attitude when they didn't like it

By the way, my suggestion to check out forums.red isn't attitude, it's genuine. If you don't like twitter, we made forums.red as a reddit clone. We've been doing this a long time. I know what genuine criticism is. The Op's note was that the site was "garbage and bloat" and when I posted screenshots and asked "what would be done differently" he vanished into the night.

I'll continue listening to the very active community who uses it, as they have a vested interest in how it comes out. If you want to join up and give some ideas, you're welcome to do so. But leave the non-constructive shit at the door. It's the only rule.

Introduction

2 upvotes · 4 July 2021 · /r/newTRP

No it's not the JQ- My post about the JQ is here: <https://trp.red/p/trp/885> but the short version is that we aim not to devolve into the (((conspiratard))) nonsense and won't be hosting it.

What makes TRP so great is that, while we talk about ideas that are outside the overton window, we are also very selective about what ideas we discuss and entertain. We want the best, most intellectually rigorous discussions. And that flies somewhat counter to free-speech as a concept, because we have to moderate this discussion to keep it intellectual. If you start posting racist jokes in TRP you will be removed. Not because we are anti-free-speech but because it doesn't serve our topic or add to our discussion, which under attack enough for its own reasons.

I want to apply this selectivity to Forums.Red. I want to engender other topics that have been run out of the other towns because of their position outside the current overton window - thus the tagline "Forbidden Ideas." But I want to select the ones with intellectual rigor, because I want to attract the smart people, I want to have the smart conversations.

Is this truly free speech? No, it's not. But I think everybody will be able to understand that this undertaking is going to be a fight. It will be work and will cost time and money to protect. So if I'm going up to bat for discussion groups, it better be ones I find value in and can defend from an intellectual standpoint - even if I disagree with them entirely.

The government doesn't like tax money

The govt spends regardless of income. Short-term pain is worth long term gain, whatever that gain might be. Individual actors in govt != govt.

Republicans are the party of personal freedom and the most likely to lead a revolution, rather than being an impressionable, gullible group that regularly spits out pro-government militias

Republicans are another side to the same coin. Uniparty.

Theory Tuesday Megathread: Is Mating a Zero Sum Game?

2 upvotes · 2 November 2020 · /r/TheRedPill

Missing a world of nuance.

If a man and woman have a one night stand, but he never calls her back and she was hoping to start a family, who wins?

If a woman gets pregnant and manages to get child support from a one night stand, who wins?

There is a level of detail here you're wholesale ignoring.

"win-win" suggests that sex is the same utility and value for both sides of the equation. It isn't. If sex were equally valuable to women, they'd never turn down sex again.

Meanwhile, men rarely turn down an opportunity for it, even if she's far below his standards.

Clearly both genders have differing value systems and therefore conduct their strategies differently.

No, because then all of human history would've been equally femcentric. It emerges in some, but not other, societies, depending on what those societies are like. And that's a complex topic.

I have to take exception to this. Just because feminism was late in the game, doesn't mean women haven't always been given some level of preferential treatment in the history of mankind...

Think about this- the weaker sex. The sex that can't do a lot to feed themselves when they're pregnant. They are the ones given preferential treatment by almost any society in the history of man. When tribes attacked each other, they killed the children and men.. but who did they keep? Women.

Women were a resource that was to be preserved. Women learned how to hack male psychology to get what they wanted. Provisions, safety, and eventually the right to vote, etc.

What makes something better (or worse)? On what grounds? Why? Are there criteria that are completely neutral, beyond ideology?

That's basically the point of my argument. If you argue for tradition, make your point.

However it may be, a lost boy developing a belief system that makes him love life and that fills him with vigour and euphoria, makes him more likely to get laid.

I know of some seriously avid comic book kids who would disagree with you there.

What's unattainable today?

Learning social skills after being deprived of that opportunity for the first 20 years of your life. Maybe you live in a bubble, but I see these guys daily.

No, it's the exact opposite. Riding a tiger means that life has meaning to you, or else you'd dismount.

Who said that enjoying a decline doesn't have meaning to somebody?

I understand that Evola's point was not only Dionysian but Apollonian. So, find whatever meaning you want.

Learn the rules of the decline. Use it to your advantage. You're saying the same thing over and over, thinking that Evola's words somehow carry more meaning.

Hypothetically, if one were omniscient, one wouldn't need a to-do list, for anything. And as one approaches omniscience, the need for to-do lists decreases.

Nobody is, so, that's pointless.

To not be Beta, one should approach omniscience. And I believe that convincing you that Beta is bad is unnecessary.

An utter misapplication of the terms.

I do, thanks. Right now we are trying to find the best balance for an outward facing feed that isn't full of trolls / scare new users off.

The original architecture was this: The "Daily Prescription" is a curated feed with only members you choose to "follow" and a handful of pre-programmed EC users (which you can unfollow if you want).

The "All Updates" feed was a mishmash of everybody on the site. Most people gravitated to this feed, and then got offended when trolls abounded.

Our goal was to separate groups that don't necessarily like each other using tribes. For instance, MGTOW and TRP probably don't get along very well, but I wanted our life raft to be big enough for both. So tribes is a fix for that.

Right now, however, people are trying to battle for the full platform on the all-users feed.

I am still working on the best way to resolve it. We won't be turning to censorship for anything that isn't rule breaking (which is basically illegal shit).

The questions forums.red and trp.red plan to answer I've discussed in a few places but I'll summarize here:

We wish to host forums with topics that:

- Do not have a safe haven elsewhere,

- Are grounded in reason with intellectual rigor (that is, it's a discussion of persuasion rather than simply a fan-club)
- Are forbidden ideas outside the overton window.
- Would not find a home elsewhere.

That means we don't care for porn, kitten pictures, or the flat earth society, because most of those are safe elsewhere.

I discuss this further in my response to whether or not we would entertain the "JQ" here:

<https://www.trp.red/p/trp/885>

What makes TRP so great is that, while we talk about ideas that are outside the overton window, we are also very selective about what ideas we discuss and entertain. We want the best, most intellectually rigorous discussions. And that flies somewhat counter to free-speech as a concept, because we have to moderate this discussion to keep it intellectual. If you start posting racist jokes in TRP you will be removed. Not because we are anti-free-speech but because it doesn't serve our topic or add to our discussion, which under attack enough for its own reasons.

I want to apply this selectivity to Forums.Red. I want to engender conversations on other topics that have been run out of the other towns because of their position outside the current overton window - thus the tagline "Forbidden Ideas." But I want to select the ones with intellectual rigor, because I want to attract the smart people, I want to have the smart conversations.

Is this truly free speech? No, it's not. But I think everybody will be able to understand that this undertaking is going to be a fight. It will be work and will cost time and money to protect. So if I'm going up to bat for discussion groups, it better be ones I find value in and can defend from an intellectual standpoint - even if I disagree with them entirely.

I hear ya on that one. Took me a while to really get into the twitter model myself.

I don't particularly care for it, but I recognize that there is a need for it as a lot of people do like this form of broadcast-type social media.

There are some settings in each tribe that lets you nest replies underneath parent posts so it's not just a big listing of out-of-order posts. But most don't opt for that.

In the meantime I can say we are fully committed to old-style threaded comments forums just like old reddit used to. Launch will be before you know it! Looking forward to that.

Reddit CEO Steve Huffman justifies censorship, controlling the narrative, and banning people who disagree with him or who are outside of his own personal Overton window (podcast)

2 upvotes · 1 August 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Sure can!

Our TRP.RED network was set up very much like a facebook / twitter type site. You can "follow" certain people which customizes your home feed.

Tribes are a twist on that.

One of the biggest issues facing men today is the inability for men to be able to band together to create their own power structures, operate as economic units, or simply have a place to hang out and chat without the language police coming in. Any way you look at it, there's no safe place for men to communicate. Even private facebook groups are monitored for wrongthink.

So the Tribes feature is our multi-prong solution to this problem.

Tribes lets you create private (or public) discussion groups for any topic or any purpose. If you want to organize meetups or discuss business ideas privately with your friends you can do that. If you want to start a public group dedicated to lean gains, you can do that.

This also solves the issue of the "topic problem" which made trp.red's home page strictly TRP related content. Now we have a TRP tribe, but we can have other tribes as well.

There is also the option of starting a Tribe as a branding broadcast platform. You can open a public facing tribe but only approved submitters are allowed to contribute (you can elect for subscribers to be able to reply to new posts or not as well). This is a good way to have a meeting place for your brand that's more organized than, say, twitter. And more anonymous and less SJW than facebook.

Our eventual goal is to create a network of platforms that allows men to freely communicate, collaborate, and discuss without the social justice police trying to crack down on all male-centric communication.

Sometimes dumb comments like "Bill is a beta" is a great opportunity to watch members who do know they're talking about correct them.

Some people (maybe you) are confused about how to persuade people.

One moderating principal I operated with since I took over here was that incorrect, partially correct, or low effort posts are sometimes a catalyst to other people posting corrections.

Instead of removing the mistake, we let it stay corrected so other users can follow the thought process and learn to reason it out themselves.

No, the sub hasn't gone to shit until somebody posts a blue pill and goes uncorrected.

There's truth that the numbers will not grow as quickly as before. Though we do have a decent number of daily subscribers despite the quarantine, it's a slow growth compared to our old days. But all is not lost on that front. I'll reach out to tell you more on this one.

There's an old meme that's been on TRP almost as long as I've been on TRP:

Quality is going down.

People have been saying that since I took over the sub with a sub count in the triple digits. It's funny because it's such a nebulous idea that it's impossible to refute, but verily it must be true.

I actually enjoy browsing our archives and sorting by old. It serves as a good reminder of what used to be considered good content.

Turns out, nostalgia is a helluva drug. Posts have always been this way, it was just new to us back then.

* Note forums.red is undergoing database move and it's not loading comments right now.

edit:

with the new generation

I should note that part of the generational gap that we're about to witness is because we've moved the overton window and now what was news to us will be common sense to them.

2 upvotes · 27 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

If you're riding the carousel during your twenties, then what aren't you doing? Locking down a long term mate. Yes it's about time, but it's also about what you do with your time.

Rollo notes that this meets the alpha fucks/beta bucks strategy, but it does fly in the face of a traditional mating scheme of yesteryear, in which women rewarded beta servitude with their sexual capital (youth).

As this discussion continues to observe: mating is a zero sum game. The optimization of one's strategy is at the cost of another's. Traditional (young) marriage was the sacrifice of the female "alpha fucks" for a man getting the maximum capital from her (youth, therefore more babies).

So what is Dalrock suggesting?

That by spending that capital (youth) without getting an LTR in trade and betting big on being able to snag Mr Moneybucks at the last minute, she is expecting guys not to wake up to this strategy and say "hey, no way, I'm not getting anything out of this deal."

If she wants to maximize her strategy, she would look at the rising tide and get off the carousel a bit earlier than her peers. If enough men wise up, a generation of future cat ladies may be passed over. (marriage rates have been decreasing steadily)

2 upvotes · 22 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

something mostly about sexual strategy to being about not going out and working really hard

Depends on who you're reading. The problem is once you get laid, then what? Your strategy doesn't end there.

For many of us the question becomes- okay i can get laid by some girls, now how to I get the family I want or the woman I want?

And that requires more ground work than hitting up every girl at a club.

I mean what why bit misogynistic in the headline?

Do you really need me to spoon feed you this one?

Most posts that I saw in this Sub reddit weren't just some headline and a link but had their own thoughts written below it in the post.

You have to click the link to read the post. The horror. Chateau Heartiste has been spitting red pill truths since well before TRP. We're not in the business of sniping his material.

My main gripe (and I think that I made that clear) is how your post is made. I'm not saying anything against the content of the article but how your post is presented.

That is TEXTBOOK concern trolling. Been against the rules as long as I've been here. (and before!)

You had nothing to say about the content. Why did you bother saying anything at all?

I haven't posted anything... Nonetheless I think that I can give some criticism.

Maybe in grade school where everybody gets a gold star for participation regardless of effort. But on TRP, we are a male hierarchy built on respect and seniority. If your goal in participating on TRP was to better understand the way of men you'd do well to learn how male hierarchies work.

See, here, you don't get to bitch and moan about the content when you're not the one building the content. You have no stake in the quality here, you haven't put in the time or effort to build this. So in this hierarchy, you have no voice or standing to criticize the work others are putting forward.

Now- had you made an argument or rebuttal about the topic- that would have been fine.

But instead you bitched and moaned. About effort you expect out of others that you, yourself, are unwilling to exert.

Women Are A Reflection

2 upvotes · 7 March 2019 · /r/TheRedPill

Everyone has free will.

What is free will?

A meaningless term.

The only way to define free will is to admit that it amounts to randomness.

Do you choose door A or door B? If you do not know which leads where, it's up to chance. The only way to define free will is to go back in time and relive the exact same moment and have the ability to choose a different door.

But if you know that one leads to life and one leads to death, which do you choose? Free will only exists in the context that you could make a different choice if you want. But suddenly you find yourself understanding that the situation around you has conspired to force your choice. You do not want death, and therefore you make the best possible choice.

Repeat that choice a thousand times and you will find that you never had a choice because you cannot choose anything except the best choice given the circumstances. (or at least what your brain perceives as the best choice)

If you were to choose death any % of the time, then we're really looking at functional randomness rather than free will. Why would you want a sub-optimal choice?

There is no such thing as free will.

TRP Debate - Debrief Thread

2 upvotes · 19 February 2019 · /r/PurplePillDebate

Sure, I'll weigh in.

TGP is lying about almost every point on this thread. Even after being presented proof of his lies, he continues to spew them.

Here are the facts:

- The name of the event was determined in PPD's modmail on Feb 6th. AMA-TRP DAY FEB 13th. PPD Mods were well aware it was one day only.
- TGP is mistaken because I said "in the style of PPD's purge week." My intent was to copy the lawlessness in spirit, not in length.
- We announced a week ahead of schedule with the phrase "AMA-TRP DAY" making it quite clear this was a single day event. You can review this evidence here.
- If PPD mods were at all confused about this, they had a full week to address their concerns. They did not.
- Neither of the threads were "pulled" as TGP misrepresents. We unstickied and locked them after the event was over. Here and Here
- Our agreement was to host a rules-free thread and we did just that. No content was removed except for reddit rule-breaking or top level comments that weren't questions for TRP.
- On the day-of, we decided to offer a Civil Debate thread (Sea of Civility) in conjunction with the lawless thread (Lion's Den), to address concerns some PPD users had that we would simply sling insults at them. The civil thread was launched with the rules that you must be civil to participate, "PARTICIPATION IN THIS THREAD MUST INCLUDE GOOD-FAITH ARGUMENTS AND REBUTTALS," that your participation would not result in a TRP-wide ban but that your comments can be removed if you break the rules.
- TGP went into the civil debate thread and started goading users who took too long to respond:

"Certainly, just yesterday, all the mods and ECs were just bursting to tell me TRP was an error correcting system (going so far as to describe it as "science", the best such system in existence).

Could you answer these questions for me ? Or do you decline to do so because you are unable or unwilling to do so today ? (Although this seems weird given your willingness yesterday)."

The mod team let it slide for a while, but we recognized that GOADING users wasn't acting in good faith, which requires generous interpretations of the opposition and requires you to assume the others are also acting in good faith. This did not occur with much of TGP's comments.

The Next Day

The next day I messaged the PPD mods and thanked them for their cooperation. Thought it was a pretty fun event, myself. A lot of interesting topics and for the most part no big rule breakers (except for one dude who went straight for doxxing).

Since the event was over, one of my mods banned TGP. Their instructions were to keep the event live for one day only.

The PPD mods responded that they thought it was supposed to last longer, I said that I'd let the threads stay up until they burn out on their own. Reading the conversation that took place gives you a much different perspective than what TGP would have you believe.

At that point I unbanned TGP and apologized for the confusion, and told him we were extending the ban amnesty until the threads die out.

The Civil Thread

We had to remove a few comments from this thread for being uncivil, such as /u/littleknownfacts saying:

I am thoroughly convinced sado is retarded. Like short bus, helmet, the whole 9 yards.

And one of our own (Metalgear222) saying:

How bout I answer with my big important shiny dick and say he very clearly states his stance is that TRP can't be proven scientifically because of all the nuance and grey area related to it.

But most of the comments were just fine and didn't break any rules. And most of the comments that were removed were self-deleted by the authors. I do not know why, we do not have control over that.

The final straw on the camel's back was when TGP decided to get into this dumb spat with some guy. Neither were making good faith arguments, neither were being civil. Both could have been fine in the Lion's Den, but they were both removed from the Civil thread. Yes, that guy was being a dick, but TGP egged him on.

We told TGP to stop participating in the Civil thread and told him he's more than welcome to post to his heart's desire in the Lion's Den. Which he clearly declined, and opted instead to come here and tell everybody we reneged on our deal and that we all ran away scared of his awesome debating techniques. The Lion's Den was always available to him, he just didn't want to.

Closing Time

After the posts died down to fewer than 3 comments within the past few hours, we locked them and removed sticky. According to our MOD LOGS HERE IS WHEN:

Fri Feb 15 22:47:09 2019 UTC

They were live for about 2 and a half days. TGP lies again when he suggests they happened in the middle of the night. Not from the USA they didn't.

TGP knew that the posts would be locked after it died down. Our mod team wasn't certain we could really keep an eye on it over the weekend anyhow. Looking through 1,000+ comments in a single thread for any new possible rule-breaking comments is hard work and we aren't exactly on great terms with reddit admin anyway. So better safe than sorry.

In conclusion:

Almost every detail of this event has been falsified by TGP.

That said I think almost everybody except TGP had a fun time and we'd invite you all back for another round some time.

You know those words at the top of the page, called rules? Those are my word. And I stuck to it.

You broke the rules in the only thread with rules so you're out. Enjoy the Lion's Den, where there are no rules.

Of course, you know you're not banned, you're just putting on a show now. Why aren't you in the Lion's den asking your questions? Because you'd rather make a show on the thread that's reserved for civility. Wait a second.. does that seem civil? Whoops, you've done it AGAIN!

It is, it's not something that would get your comment removed on PPD, or draw a warning or a ban. It's not being uncivil.

Our rules were listed. Good faith arguments and rebuttals were a requirement for the civil thread.

I am sorry that you have failed.

I can just point it out on the PPD thread again

Is that a threat to tattle on us? Very childish. A real man knows how to admit when he's wrong.

While I don't want to guess as to his intentions

I will!

His plan was to present bad-faith loaded questions disguised as "just a question" which, of course, any answer you give is a trap, and he's got a dozen or so pedantic arguments he can make that don't address the spirit of the argument. (This is how we know they're bad faith.)

Then, when people finally give up because no good faith was found, he can declare himself the winner, thus positioning him as "better than all those red pill guys" to his purple fan club on PPD.

For instance, the science argument- he wouldn't accept that there are many common uses of the word science. Even after I refused to call it science (calling it 'men comparing notes' and 'trial and error') he continued to argue with me as though I did call it science.

Bad faith, bad faith all around.

And the funny thing is, we implemented the civil debate thread at PPD's behest because they were afraid TRP would present bad faith arguments like this.

RFE said it best:

You played word games with some other people who were thinking out loud and eventually honed their thoughts into something that made sense. I wouldn't start chest beating because it didn't ring 100% on the first draft

We took his initial question as good faith but instead he started dancing around various definitions of the word science and when even he couldn't decide which definition to use, went back to his cave to declare himself a winner.

But now he's goading. Not good faith. He's outta here.

We were told TRP was very much looking forward to a debate on any questions we thought to bring.

It's not that you've suddenly brought a bunch of gotchas that made us realize that we've done our whole lives wrong-

It's that nobody here cares about your pedantry or attempts at presenting false dilemmas to pigeonhole us because everybody else is focused on actionable advice that gets people laid.

Why do you think you have to resort to being uncivil to get a response? You're baiting and trolling but you're not doing anything in good faith.

Certainly, just yesterday, all the mods and ECs were just bursting to tell me TRP was an error correcting system (going so far as to describe it as "science", the best such system in existence).

I am a little disappointed that what was sold to us as a week long event appears to have been abandoned by the ECs and Mods after less than 24 hrs.

I think there was a miscommunication here- we billed it as an AMA day, in the style of your purge week.

We decided to leave them going as long as they're still active, but that was a last minute decision.

- Comments that were removed from the civility thread were removed for not being civil.
- Comments removed from the main thread either broke reddit rules, weren't top-level questions for TRP, or were snagged by automod for something like crosslinking.
- We have been actively re-approving comments that were wrongfully snagged.

As for the "pout" I know you like using charged language to convince others here you're king shit, but you were removed for breaking CIVILITY rules in another thread. I don't think anybody on the mod team is as emotionally invested in this as you are.

Then you broke civility in an edit to that comment which got it removed as well.

The irony here is, we weren't planning a civility thread, we added it for the softies over here complaining that TRP wouldn't be civil.

It is very much a yes or no answer. If you apply and use some form of the scientific method you are a scientist, and your results are science.

If I test a hypothesis and analyze the results, am I a scientist? I guess by your definition I am. I don't think all scientists would agree with your definition.

Do you (crucially) do something Popperian Falsification ? No.

I would argue our theories are very falsifiable. Did acting this way make things better? Yes / No

Did you get laid tonight? Yes / No

Is there a chance that all 300,000 users here experience flukes on a daily basis and we're actually 100% wrong? Well, yes, but that seems unlikely.

To be scientists you have to eliminate that unlikely thing, have to want to do so.

I'm sure you understand that no matter how many tests scientists do on gravity, there's a chance that every single test has been a fluke.

We have a forum collecting experiences from men. Every day longer we participate and every new member that joins pushes us closer to "not a fluke."

I'm really not sure what you're on about to be honest.

I've told you my view. We're guys sharing notes, coming up with ideas, testing them and revising them. I don't think any scientist would call it science, but I don't think the well respected fields of psychology or sociology would arrive at red pill theory even if we knew it to be 100% true (in a hypothetical situation where we had a phone call with god or something).

So you seem really stuck on this mechanic metaphor. I don't know what to tell you. If that makes you happier you can think of us like grease monkeys. Just oiling up so we do our sex better.

But make sure you fit into this metaphor that not only are we mechanics fixing men's sex lives- we're doing so in a culture that claims mechanics don't know how to and cannot get laid. And yet we're able to figure out how to "fix" men's problems without a manual or school to teach us.

And how do you come upon such knowledge? Trial and error. Test and revise. I think that's something you'd classify as science. But I mean I don't know why you're so obsessed with words.

After something like this happens, you'll fucking take it from anybody willing to give it. Just a shred of human decency to tell you that you're right and she's wrong.

You need to let go of this. Scorched earth policy is the only way forward. Keeping this wound open will only take it longer to heal and trust me when I say this you won't get closure so it's time to stop thinking about it.

The best thing you can do is go fucking dark on her and her family and her friends. The closest you will ever get to closure is knowing that the less you have contact with her and her family, the more she'll realize how easily you're moving on.

That is the only justice you get. It's not sweet but keep that in your mind.

If she can still get you on the phone, or get you to respond to texts or her parents tell her you've been in contact with them, or you volunteer to bring her her keys- all you do is communicate that you're still there waiting for her.

Your continued involvement with her and her family will give her the confidence to fuck other men without worrying.

It sounds hard but it's time to delete your texts with her, delete her number, block her everywhere and remove her name from your vocabulary.

Women marry down more, apparently.

Your point is not well supported by your sources. In one breath you tell me that "College Graduates Marry Other College Graduates Most of the Time" but then tell me that women marry down more...

We know that women outnumber men in college today. If like marrying like was the gold standard, then women are doing themselves a disservice in becoming educated, are they not?

Lets dissect your BLS source.

First of all, On average, women married at younger ages than men. This immediately negates the idea that women were "marrying down" as age is directly correlated with higher earning potential and higher education even when compared to other members in the same educational path. Not a great start for defending your argument.

About equal proportions of men and women who received a college degree married by age 46, 88 percent for men and 90 percent for women.

Recognize that this was for people born between 1957-1964.

In 1957 until 1980, almost double the number of college graduates were male

Though on the surface it might appear that since 90% of the college educated women were able to get married during that time, it therefore shows that college education was in fact the key to such marriage.

This is not shown, however. Since this number of women was almost half the number of educated men, there were still plenty of men for them to date up (or even).

Looking at how marriage trends continued- they fall. What's the correlation? More educated women in total, and more in relation to the number of men.

Okay, so we've established that career and education isn't sufficient for attraction. Will it make an ugly woman hot? The answer: No. Check.

Next, is it required ? Will the lack of it make a hot woman ugly? The answer, decidedly No.

But your contention is that they will not be utilized for LTR.

Well let's look at the facts we do know.

Women don't like men at a lower social status than themselves. Both education and monetarily.

<http://jonbirger.com/date-onomics/>

Birger shows how this unequal ratio explains the college and post-college hookup culture; the decline in marriage rates; even the seemingly paradoxical problem that the more attractive the woman is, the more difficult it can be for her to find a partner.

Ironically, he uses education as criteria for attractiveness and then ponders why more attractive people can't find mates.

His conclusion is that college educated women don't want to date uneducated men, and this is one of the big reasons for the decline in marriage rates.

Now putting aside the obvious question (why was the marriage rate higher when the shoe was on the other foot?), what does this say about male strategy in general?

It should be pretty glaringly obvious to you at this point that the LTR actually hinges on men being of higher status than a woman.

So the question that's left is, where do you draw the line?

You say women still need to be college educated to find the LTR. But indeed, the numbers prove that lessens your chances of finding a mate.

So we know she must be lower than him for a successful LTR/marriage, how much lower on the socioeconomic scale is too low for a man to LTR a woman?

That's not rhetorical, I'm curious where you would draw the line.

Sorry if you're tired of it. It's the first time I've made it. Not sure what you're referencing.

The mod team hears it in modmail every time we remove a shitty post.

I know of a couple of dudes who have legit taken down their shit to avoid doxxing. I can understand how you would be sensitive to that. I think that 99.99 percent of the stuff that gets deleted, post -moderation, by users, which is the dataset we're talking about, is taken down because fuck it I'm out, not shit I don't want to be doxxed. Make that 99.999 percent.

The mod team and I get a lot of requests for help with potential doxxings. You pulled that number out of your ass. In the first 100 posts made to this sub, almost every single one has a removed user related to potential doxxings. I was made aware when I took over.

If a decision is made to specifically to protect Heathcliff or whomever from doxxing, as an exception, it would smack of reasonability. Saying this dataset is off limits because it contains shit people don't want published.. not so much.

I don't know about you but I'm not about to sort through millions of comments to see which are and which aren't related to potential doxxings. I do not know the exhaustive list and I'm not about to start guessing at it.

I did not request that he remove the entire data set. Only the posts and comments that have since been deleted.

I think that the position you're taking here flies directly in the face of the stance you consistently advocate pretty much everywhere else.

Then you don't know me or this problem very well.

I will always back our long-standing members' requests to be anonymous and assist them with disappearing as best as I can if they request it.

Posting an archive of deleted material flies in the face of this.

This is not, nor has ever been, akin to systemic censorship which I oppose.

If you do not like this stance, I support your right to make your voice heard on your own forum. I'll let you know what you're up against if you try this, however. Because if you do make a new forum and post this archive, reddit admins will remove you on 2 counts: #1, posting rule-breaking content to reddit, and #2, quarantine evasion.

Maybe now you're understanding the politics at play here? We can't post this information. This is not even an option because if we do, we will find that we are no longer able to do so.

However, I feel pretty strongly that it would be to the benefit of other TRP readers if there were an archive available that were more or less complete.

I have no problem with archives. In fact, based on your direction I was able to harvest the full reddit id list and am now filling in the missing gaps on forums.red.

But the deleted content gets to stay deleted.

If dream-hunter wants to comply I will re-instate his post. I have no beef with him.

Maybe I'm wrong. I personally have found the pushshift.io backups to be very valuable in understanding the origins of TRP and where it's going. I'm glad you can't delete that.

Once again, I have no control over how the internet handles archives. However I can say that these archives have already contributed to much personal and political damage to users of our forum. And they have not yet claimed their last victim. We will continue to see people destroyed by the culture war and doxxing.

And while it saddens me to know it will keep happening, I consider it my ethical and moral duty not to contribute to that situation.

You'll note the founder of this very subreddit had deleted all of his posts. You might consider that to be a shame. You might consider it to be censorship. Maybe you don't remember what happened to him. A lot of us do.

You know since he comes up so much I decided to read some of his books. I'm not finished yet but... I don't know how else to say this.. the man doesn't form complete sentences let alone thoughts.

The heroic tendency - the archetypal savior - is an eternal spirit, which is to say, a central and permanent aspect of human being. The same is true, precisely, of the "adversarial" tendency: the capacity for endless denial, and the desire to make everything suffer for the outrage of its existence, is an ineradicable intrapsychic element of the individual. The great dramatists and religious thinkers of the world have been able to grasp this fact, at least implicitly, and to transmit it in story and image; modern analytic thinkers and existential theorists have attempted to abstract these ideas upward into "higher consciousness," and to present them in logical and purely semantic form. Sufficient material has been gathered to present a compelling portrait of evil.

A spurious argument. Property taxes are levied by square footage, not interior improvements like painting.

Perhaps not where you are, but for the majority of the USA, property taxes include the value of the building as well in most jurisdictions. In many cities, if you've applied for an interior building permit, a tax assessor will want a walk-through to adjust their assessed value.

You don't even need a city permit for this type of work.

You might be familiar with your own jurisdiction- but again- interior work does require permits in almost every major city. And while painting does not- improving the building by painting does have a measurable effect in property assessment.

My tax rate on my ranch property is 1.12%, perfectly reasonable for the services the county renders.

Believe it or not, that's low. I can see why you don't care as much.

Top 10 worst states for property taxes:

- New Jersey: 1.89 percent
- New Hampshire: 1.86 percent
- Texas: 1.86 percent

- Nebraska: 1.76 percent
- Wisconsin: 1.76 percent
- Illinois: 1.73 percent
- Connecticut: 1.63 percent
- Michigan: 1.62 percent
- Vermont: 1.59 percent
- North Dakota: 1.42 percent

Even a modest house in New Jersey is paying nearly $4k a year in state property taxes.

And that's not even touching on county and city taxes.

In some towns/cities in NJ, county and city taxes put that up over 4%.

Average property tax bill in Pennsville Township: $6,188 a year. Still think that's perfectly reasonable?

Arguing this is unreasonable while ignoring situations like the Wal-Marts of the world greasing a few palms to shift millions of dollars of tax burdens from them to the local citizens is "part of the problem, not part of the solution."

There's no reason why you can't attack individual problems individually. Otherwise it's just a race to the bottom, because something, someone, or somewhere is always worse.

I'm the owner and I pay taxes? Nope. I'm a mere subscriber.

2 upvotes · 14 December 2018 · /r/TheRedPill

Cutting out waste, fraud, and abuse is an effective direction toward a solution to the issue of unreasonably increased taxes. Most people fail to make a dent in the problem because they're only willing to attack mostly straw man caricatures of "other sportsball team's" priorities, while completely ignoring and even actively defending their own sacred cows' contribution to the problem.

But that's just it- look at tax increases over the past 50 years, and then look at what we have to show for it.

I'm not anti-tax by any stretch. But I have watched many hand-out programs increase taxes federally, as well as locally where I live. And I can tell you, they're not for the simple necessities that a civilized society requires like school, roads, police, and fire.

Some of these boondoggles are hand-out projects, noncompetitive union deals that would never exist in a free market if it weren't the taxpayers backing the deal. Insurance scams. Illegal (in my opinion) business bailouts. Etc.

Every single time my property tax goes up even a fraction of a percentage, I ask myself- did I get more police protection? The answer is invariably no.

The schools are worse than ever. The roads are total shit (and why do I pay for tolls?). Drugs are rampant everywhere.

And we have people like you hand-waving it away.

Property taxes are unlike any other tax in that they get to keep collecting on the same "asset" over and over again. Unlike income or sales tax, when you buy property, you sign up for every future rate increase on this asset until you sell it (at a loss thanks to taxes). You sign up for an unknown.. not to mention the valuation is controlled by bureaucrats with highly subjective opinions on what a property might be worth. Want to paint your house and fix up the kitchen? Say hello to MORE TAXES.

In many places I've been, those property taxes are so much larger than gains made in the housing market that there simply is no way not to always be upside down on your house. You should see what happens to those markets. It's not pretty.

Yes, I get it, the free-market libertarians have very poorly examined views.

But that doesn't make property taxes a good or defensible thing.

Maybe at this point you can't smell your crap anymore? I've known of the Manosphere for a good 2? months and after handful of visits and lurking around I've found examples of some really disturbed guys on there who definitely come off as "rape apologists."

Wouldn't you say it's easier just to rape women than work out and improve one's self? Why would we go through so much effort to become attractive to them if there was such a simple option to bypass all that work?

Your 2 months have nothing on my years of moderating.

Are there trolls? Sure. There are trolls here too. We do our best to remove them. Trolls exist.

But the topic of TRP is to become attractive to women. So you're objectively wrong.

There is no reason to remove wrong think unless it either offends someone (legitimately) or it benefits them in some other way. Given a lack of elaboration on the latter, what you're saying makes no sense at all.

So if it benefits me to remove all of your content from the internet, it's justified? What if I'm legitimately offended that you just falsely said my subreddit harbors rape apologists? You should be removed from the internet, in respect to your own terms.

The Role Stupid People Should Play in Society

I can't speak to his actual intelligence quotient, I don't know him. And I agree he is very forthcoming with his opinion of himself (it's his entire brand if you follow him), but I've always wondered this:

If being smart is something you're not allowed to talk about, and every time somebody talks about it is an indication that they must not be smart, then can a conversation about being smart ever take place?

Surely there exists at least two people on the planet who must be?

I've always noticed people shut down talk like this in a very similar way you did, and while I don't consider myself to be anything of a genius, I always wonder- if it can't be spoken about, then what people are really saying is they don't think it can happen (or don't like the idea that it can happen).

But surely, there are geniuses out there.

No. I would be depersonalizing the waiter if I met up him in a social situation, assumed he was a lost-creative-type/socialist/chain-smoker due to that being a general impression I had of waiters, and launched into an attack on Freidrich Engels before he uttered a word.

But you do assume he wants to take your order. And you've only just met him. You've used contextual information and personal heuristics to guide you in your interactions with this man to get what you want. And it is transactional, this is true.

I dont think sexual strategy necessitates depersonalization.

Of course it doesn't. I don't even believe in the phrase. It's your suggestion, not mine.

Your idea is that using probabilistic strategies to attract women somehow dehumanizes or depersonalizes them is nonsense. And it hurts a man's strategy.

Any guy will tell you he's had to approach many, many women before finding one that's receptive to him. Should he spend a year getting to know each one just to land in failure? Where would that leave him?

Using these shortcuts lets you minimize wasted time. Because at the end of the day, you can't know everybody.

This doesn't preclude or exclude meaningful or meaningless sex.

I am less uncomfortable with the fact that humans behave in statistically predictable so much as I am uncomfortable with strategizing interpersonal interaction per those macro trends.

Do you know why you have this visceral negative reaction to the idea of applying this info to personal interactions?

Because there's a pervasive cultural meme (we call it the feminine imperative, but the name is not important) that makes sure that men improving their success in sex is considered wrong. Icky. Gross. Creepy.

What you just said, if you boil it down, is this: Applying strategy that would net more success is "depersonalizing" and therefore should be avoided.

To whose advantage is it for us to ignore successful strategies to avoid this depersonalization? Surely not our own.

I think there's more to it though. Yes, part of it is that they forgot- when you've got abundance, keeping track isn't a priority. But I think you misunderstand who the lies serve, especially when anonymous.

That "reasonable" number she comes up with isn't an accident. She's going to use the one that makes her feel like less of a slut. She isn't lying per se, she's just telling herself (and by extension, everybody else) a story that fits her ego-invested world-view. That she isn't a slut. So that's why it's probably like, uh, 10-13 people. That's not bad.

Even if it's missing a zero after it in some cases.

She'll rationalize any memories she has as "well that one doesn't count because xyz..."

Before you suggest that women don't sit there thinking through this grand conspiracy- consider it more of a instantaneous happening. An evolutionary protection mechanism of the mind.

In some cases this mechanism is to protect her image in the eyes of potential suitors. But the protection mechanisms also act to give her mind consistency. She has to believe her own delusions. She won't tell the truth anonymously because that means she has to be aware of and be able to analyze the truth.

My point was that there's some pretty clear hate on this sub and it doesn't feel conducive to a conversation anyway. So why allow it?

I disagree on both the qualification of hate and the rationale for its removal.

Why remove it? Because those who are offended get offended by it? People always find something to be offended by. When do we stop? When there's nothing left?

but I just think you're being kind of close-minded about it and taking a hard stance against censorship just for the sake of "censor" being a bad word.

On the contrary. We remove low-quality and off-topic junk all the time. Censorship is one of my duties and I do a lot of it.

But the hard line in the sand that we drew was that as long as there are forces in existence who wish to subvert us and remove us, we will not modify ourselves to appease them.

In fact, it's not just in speech- the red pill is about learning not to appease women in all facets of life. There is no point more central to our thesis than this. If you modify yourself to appease the feminine imperative, you lose.

I just hate to see the goldmine of information here gone forever because the sub wasn't willing to get rid of those few that ruin it for everyone.

I believe you mean this in earnest, so don't be insulted when I say this- but this is exactly the line feminists use to destroy male spaces.

We take a very hard line against it. The reason TRP is successful and has such value is because of this hard line. Without it, we are nothing.

Just remember that. A mistake too often made is men looking for best friends. Women should and do satisfy a different need and desire. You can share hobbies and interests with your best friend.

For women, if you're looking long-term or possibly starting a family, what you want is somebody kind, graceful, willing to submit to a man, and of course, she must pass the boner test.

The Myth of the Alpha Female

2 upvotes · 16 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

Bit confused. Again, VERY few Americans attending top 100 colleges marry while they're in school. Virtually all of them graduate at age 21 and begin their careers at age 21.

I'm speaking of higher educations, the kinds that get you into those 6-figure jobs.

It is not a SEXUALLY attractive trait, no. I would never claim that. It is a trait that helps attract COMMITMENT, which is usually a RATIONAL decision for men.

If there were anything rational about commitment, men would quickly recognize the bum deal and completely abandon the idea of marriage and relationships for something with far greater return. There is very little rational about commitment. And once again, the few buttons you need to press to get commitment have to do with how you make him feel. Does he feel comfortable around you? Does he feel challenged or at ease? Does he feel like you're a good caretaker? Does he feel like you're pleasant? Is he turned on by you?

You have to answer those questions before you even suggest that he's going to go through your sock drawer and start weeding out women based on nonsense like the color of socks and what degree you have.

I don't know why so many threads in these forums constantly try to deny the existence of class in modern American life.

There's two conversations going on here. Class is almost entirely a matter for women and takes up far less brain-space for men. Women spend a lot of time hoping and dreaming to marry "up." No doubt - classes exist, men are born into classes and occasionally are able to migrate between them. But class mobility is primarily a female phenomenon via marriage.

Nobody here is denying that class exists. But I am denying that a woman needs to occupy the same class to marry. Marriage has historically been how women migrate classes.

I'm talking about a 35 year old, highly educated professional living in probably a coastal urban environment, deciding who to marry and raise children with.

And I'm talking about the things that attract men, and it's not her purse and it's not her degree. A 6-figure salary isn't sufficient nor required for marriage. Staying fit, being pleasant, and knowing how to compliment your man is.

This obsession with class is almost entirely inconsequential at best, and a red herring at worst.

The Myth of the Alpha Female

2 upvotes · 15 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

Sure, if there's a bunch to choose from he won't mind it at all. They don't have to be 40. But often times, if a woman doesn't marry during school, she can find herself on the wrong side of her twenties before she even begins her career, which limits her options considerably.

It's still neither required nor sufficient for male attraction. It does not make ugly girls attractive and is not required for pretty girls to have it to be successful in mating and marriage.

I'm not making the argument that you shouldn't earn money or be productive in your lives. Don't get me wrong.

I'm simply saying that the idea that your college education and earning potential are sexually attractive traits in women is wrong. It is the opposite. Women look for this in men. Which is likely why many women are confused when they think they should don the same traits.

Again, even if a millionaire bachelor was to suggest that he really wants a driven young woman who is strong, independent and makes at least six figures, that doesn't mean he actually knows what's statistically attractive to men. Even if he has a fetish for it, I wouldn't put money down on that being a decent sexual strategy for other women.

Somewhere out there is a woman who likes fat men. But I'm not going to test my luck.

I suspect there is a high correlation to income and marriage, but not for the reasons you think. Often it is the social circles themselves that dictate who you meet and therefore who you marry. A high status man will likely not be rubbing elbows with college dropouts. But that isn't to say that the young and pretty don't manage to clean up despite this.

If he should meet a kind, young, beautiful woman who turns him on, there's a 99% chance that her checkbook isn't on his list of qualities that causes him to turn her away. She just needs to be in the places men like that are.

Women on the other hand will often lead dates with "what do you do" and "how much do you make." This, I think, would be one disqualifier that might select for at least higher than average earning capacities. Because nobody wants a gold digger. But you can be poor and simply not a gold digger, it's easy enough to do.

The Myth of the Alpha Female

2 upvotes · 14 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

Once again, you're not wrong per se. It's just the attitude I'm wary of. If I hear a woman proclaim how she's strong and independent and she doesn't need a man if they don't fit her narrow requirements list, I usually just walk away from that future spinster case.

Not because you should need somebody. But the attitude is indicative of something deeper. And most men want nothing to do with it. (Suckers excluded of course)

The Myth of the Alpha Female

2 upvotes · 14 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

I won't disagree that a man who has two options of equal beauty and youth, he might choose the more ambitious one with higher earning capacity.

But if you put a 2 point disparity between them, I'm willing to bet the dude will go for the hot one if she has the right attitude. And like I said, it's not required. If a rich man stumbles across a loving, friendly hottie who is 24 but doesn't have much in the way of earnings or career, he won't pass her up waiting for one with a degree.

It's worth mentioning that since most men are thirsty to some degree, they will often proclaim to have preferences for things that are statistically not male preferences. Often they'll do it to signal virtue. "I like a woman who isn't super skinny" or "I like for her to be strong and independent."

If they had luck with a fat blond once, they might even proclaim to have a type.

But the truth still remains that when push comes to shove, men want youth, fertility and compliance. They can't have sex with your college degree, and your 6-figure salary isn't going to make babies.

There's a reason the old trope is the man running off with his hot secretary, not his older, higher-earning female boss.

The Myth of the Alpha Female

2 upvotes · 14 August 2018 · /r/RedPillWomen

You are suggesting I stunt my own growth as a human being in order to more easily find a man. No man is worth that. I would not hinder my own development for anyone on earth.

You're not wrong but your attitude betrays more beneath the surface than this. His point wasn't that you should give up growth and development, but that the attitude of "I don't need no man" is exactly what men find unattractive.

It's true, you don't need no man. And no man needs you.

I'm not making the argument that you can't. I'm making the argument that men with testosterone in their veins are more than likely going to suffer long term psychological consequences for denying their nature.

That isn't to say some guys don't genuinely end up happier going their own way.

That's to say that some people (like me) would be absolutely miserable pretending sex isn't important.

They know their bat shit crazy emotions aren't built for riding the carousel but the endless stream of validation is too intoxicating for them to do anything else while they are in their prime. They all WANT to lock a Chad down. Giving glimpses of the potential in you for anything other than Chad on a ONS is what makes them want to come over and clean your house, fold your laundry.

Yes, I agree with this. I would say that's the point of this entire post. Women have a dualistic mating strategy. Alpha fucks, beta bucks. If they can get beta bucks from a chad, that's their jackpot.

That's why we can't use the term "alpha" or "beta" as simply descriptors of people.

But you and I both agree, she won't see you as a chad if you start failing shit tests.

It's a shitty summary, especially using an example of a responsible father as an example of beta traits.

I admit I grabbed hundreds in 2016 and early 2017 (and some in late 2017) thinking maybe one would get big. A short list of the bigger ones I hold:

Monero, Litecoin, Ripple, Doge (because why not), Whitecoin, Lomocoin, Siacoin.

Many of these I got under a penny. Doge has seen explosive growth (bubble though, don't expect long term). It hit $0.018 USD this weekend and I saw my $5 investment top off at $200!

Whitecoin I got at 2 cents, and it's been idling around a quarter.

Ripple I grabbed at 25 cents and it's been between $2 & $3 over the past week.

I really didn't invest much money into each one. I figure if I own a few hundred of every coin when it's small, it doesn't matter if 99% of them tank. I'll own the ones that got big. So far, I'm up quite a bit.

To claim that there are no outliers in such a large sample group (all women) is just not to understand confidence intervals. I have no evidence to question Mandi's veracity; If I ever do I will dislocate Cathy's hips. Until then I will be a man, because a real Alpha keeps his fucking word, and a real blue-pill bitch lies.

It's not a question of whether literally all women will cheat. That's a misapplication of the acronym, and is provably false. It means that given the right circumstances, all women are like that.

I happen to agree there's a risk/benefit calculation to be made, and some women are clearly a better bet than others. But the lesson to learn here is to keep your guard up at all times.

Dangerous Times – Part 1

As due process is removed and the female is default-believed, there is even less pressure on women themselves to speak the truth and the whole truth.

Women have always used their fickle emotional states to define reality around them. Society as a whole has never before been so stupid to simply believe it. There has never been pressure on a woman to speak the truth, just an understanding that they won't.

Loss of excitement: eventually the excitement will fade away. You don't quite get the butterflies that you get when you meet a new girl. If you are in a relationship longer than 5 years and are still experiencing butterflies, that girl sounds fantastic. Please post in the comments some of the strategies you use to keep the excitement burning.

I think you've got the wrong attitude here. Long term relationships aren't Disney movies, nor are they like you see in the movies.

Marriages used to work because there were such large consequences from leaving marriages. That didn't even keep people from straying, but it did tend to keep people together after infidelities that wouldn't be together today.

Relationships are hard, and they're not there to give you tingles. My opinion is that long term relationships are for starting families. You aren't there to receive good feelings, you're there to work hard and make it work for you.

That isn't to say it can't be pleasurable, or rewarding. But any positive returns you get from your relationship are going to be from work you put into it.

Of course strange is going to be more exciting. And if you're not ready to start a family, I recommend you keep going with strange. Only when you get bored of strange would I recommend shifting your sights higher.

Don't expect every day to be awesome in a LTR. Expect to facilitate romance to create those feelings.

Let's follow your logic for just a minute.

- You're arguing "above me" but can't get figure out what it is I'm doing. I think you and I have different definitions of "above." Perhaps you mean on an autism spectrum.
- I wrote something hinting what is to come. Correct.
- You have a feeling where the argument is going. Okay.

3) In spite of that, you did not finish your post or even bother to spend 5 minutes summarizing where you intend to go. Would have been easy. You intentionally left a teaser, getting the audience to guess and speculate. You didn't need to do this. It was a conscious choice in how you presented your piece.

- I didn't draw the conclusions for the reader. Agreed.

4) I'm criticizing you for that choice, for probing people to speculate after devoting so many paragraphs to the importance of evidence over just believing other people and speculation. i.e. your own argument discredits the approach you chose to take in presenting your post

My argument has an apparent contradiction, but doesn't discredit anything if my approach has a goal that you can't see. It's a little daft to think that your interpretation is the only possible one.

Why do that, in spite of the hypocrisy in choice of presentation?

If my goal had more to do with learning to draw conclusions or leave ego investment out while drawing conclusions, then the lesson is well taught with a subject that creates a visceral reaction and posting that gives long-time spans in between where people have the opportunity to do thinking and hypothesize between posts.

Or, like you, skip the thinking and go straight for calling it click-bait. Either way, your interpretation is lacking and assumes me a troll rather than somebody who puts energy into helping men.

That is a different and irrelevant measure of intoxication, I guess you have found something to do with driving.

No, most states have a BAC limit to define intoxication for driving. Instead, they use these "reasonable person" standards to determine things like drunk in public, over-serving at bars, and (we can assume) any other non-driving intoxication offenses.

There's no reason to believe that courts would be reasonable about a new type of intoxication that voids consent, but is "more drunk than normal drunk."

I suspect is a defensive response for your fear of them. I could be wrong, 100%.

That's just it- this is why we remove junk like that. We analyze the merits of an argument rather than personal attacks (or analyses) of the person. I don't really know why everybody on MRP has a hardon for trying to psycho analyze everybody, but i couldn't give half a shit about it. Sure, I hate women, live in a cave, have never touched a boobie and I'm afraid I'm in love with my mother. There, now we can get past this nonsense.

You want to debate the merits of women's actions. Go for it.

I write a "women are children" post, which - by the way - is hyperbole, every year. Seriously. With the same title and everything. Look it up.

It helps us understand perspectives and find people who aren't quite in the right mindset, gets a lively discussion going.

Your takeaway from this shouldn't be "oh, women are literally babies." It should be that women are from a different perspective and experience, and their decisions will reflect this.

Even when you appear to be on the same highway going in the same direction, always be aware, she's got a different GPS.

Exactly, that's why crushing LMR isn't really rapey like a lot of people want to make it seem. To crush LMR, you call her bluff. If she's truly not interested, then good, you left. If she is interested, she'll get you back.

MRP and the ProMarriage Stance- Can Someone Explain the Schism in relation to TRP?

2 upvotes · 9 May 2016 · /r/PurplePillDebate

This post illustrates the difference between MRP and TRP.

As we see here, MRP adds a subtle does of shaming with its "advice". It seems MRP wants to convince younger men to make the same bad deal they did. This is bowing to the female imperative; this is selling out your fellow men.

No such thing at TRP. Marriage is a bad deal for men and there's no sugar-coating it there.

I always say, "whatever you have to tell yourself," but I personally draw the line at trying to sell a bad idea to others simply to make yourself feel better about your own bad choice.

This, exactly.

I'm sure by now people must have understood we have a policy whereby ECs who contact mods before they delete their old accounts can get their flair back on their new account. We don't speak about who they are for anonymity's sake, obviously if they deleted an account, there's a reason for it.

Instead of trashing the sub on TRP, I would have preferred that we made a go at this together.

I really wish there had been more working together too. I did try to reach out, but the general attitude over there really, really wasn't conducive to my goals: helping men. I know there are some members there who are for helping men. And they're here right now having a calm, rational conversation with me. And I appreciate that.

There are some quality posters on MRP who I do not mean to trash. But the trolling that's happening even now tells me that the sub itself was never up to par for our side bar.

Good luck, and I sincerely hope that your MRP flair actually helps family men get their shit together, unplugged, and their lives back on track.

Is it possible for women to "go their own way"?

2 upvotes · 3 May 2016 · /r/RedPillWomen

I think if we look at MGTOW realistically, there's little chance they're going to end up happy either. I think both men and women want companionship. We entertain MGTOW because it is an option given the sexual market today. But I personally wouldn't do it because I don't think it'd make me happy. Likewise if a woman wanted to go her own way, she may decide to buck the trend- but I don't think there's sufficient reason to since the market is still quite good for women, and I don't think she'll be happy in the long run.

From a low value female side, sure, they'll eliminate high value suitors. But women who have no problem attracting high value men? Not an issue.

I think that's a good point. For women who can compete, there will always be a market that they can demand a high price in. For women who can't compete well, should they settle for lower-value men who will commit?

Sexual strategy is amoral

2 upvotes · 22 April 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

I am the universe. And so are you. Minimize suffering maximize life enjoyment/satisfaction. It's pretty simple tbh.

Why?

Sexual strategy is amoral

2 upvotes · 22 April 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

According to whom? I don't think there's anything immoral about persuasion. Persuasion is not coercion. Nothing you've said actually gives any tangible reason for why morality doesn't apply to sex.

If you had read the fucking article, you wouldn't be asking these questions...

So you agree with me. Using force, coercion, lies, or theft to achieve sex is a no-no.

No, you agree with me. That was copied and pasted from the article you just didn't read.

And you now you get a time out.

Sexual strategy is amoral

2 upvotes · 22 April 2016 · /r/TheRedPill

I did read it.

But you didn't. I'll just copy and paste from the article to rebut.

Don't want to be lied to? Don't lie. Don't want to be stolen from? Don't steal.

FTFA:

Murder, stealing, rape, these were all concepts that most people entering into the social contract said, I don't want these things, my best strategy is to cooperate, therefore I should not do them. And the basic framework of morality was built.

Killing Nazis? Moral. Killing your neighbor? Immoral. A simple code to pass on the social contract that enables society and really helped us as a species!

I think you and I agree when I say that we've both signed on to this concept. I don't want to be murdered, and I willingly take part in a social contract of not murdering. Most people have this concept built in evolutionarily- it's called empathy! Empathy helped groups to survive. Empathy follows this model, as most felt righteous or indifferent towards the killing of enemies and food.

So, yes, there is a framework we're calling morality, but understand what gave rise to it and how/why it works. Also understand that morality is not a constant nor objective, and some people have determined a different set of rules will best maximize their success or happiness. If they break our rules, we determine it to be detrimental to our own survival, because we depend on the social contract to exist ourselves!

These same concepts apply to the sexual market.

FTFA:

But what happens if this framework isn't based on a contract that benefits all who participate?

What if you signed a contract that said you will pay me $40/month, but I will provide nothing in return?

Eventually you realize that the contract makes no sense!

[W]e're also told that an older man courting a young impressionable 19 year old is immoral because of the age gap- he's too influential, it would be coercion. Tell me, if we avoid doing this out of our sake for morality- where is our benefit in this social contract? It's the feminine imperative you are seeing.

Do not exploit common psychology to build attraction because it is immoral.

This is a prime example of why sexual strategy is amoral. Because at the end of the day, their mating strategy is contingent on beta's failures, and our strategy is based on theirs to fail! Therefore there is no common social contract that we can commit to that benefits both genders. Only men are so easily fooled into entering into these social contracts because they work well for society in general, that they forgot to look at the feminine imperative and ask, but how does that benefit me?

If anything involving sex were immoral, there shouldn't be any qualms about me raping women, or castrating/killing other men to reduce competition.

Once again, FTFA:

Obviously understanding that we are operating within other frames we believe do benefit us. Obviously rape is a poor decision because it goes against the personal freedom social contract we currently live by. And I support that ideal.

women's willingness to 'be caught'

Perhaps a forum of 140,000 people would convince you. These guys know that women are hard to catch, if they weren't, we wouldn't need to discuss strategy. Not the behavior of one who wants to be caught.

Women put up shit tests, last minute resistance, and every other hurdle you can think of to prevent being caught by anybody except the most skilled of fishers. That's not because they actively want to be caught, but rather, they spend most of their active efforts trying not to be caught.

Sexual selection works because the best fishers do eventually catch them.

It is possible that starting a business will lead to financial ruin - are you afraid of that as well?

It's funny you should mention that. You know how to plan a business? You limit your liability, you know how much money to put in, how much liability you're taking on.. but you know what the absolutely most important part is?

When you sign a contract with a business partner, there's no clause saying they have unilateral discretion to dissolve the business at any time, take half your stuff including future profits from you.

No, no blinders here. Just you, publicly rationalizing making a bad decision because so far it's worked out for you, giving false hope to anybody reading that maybe a marriage contract is a good idea.

I would do it again.

I'm curious what your counter-argument would be to all the research that shows higher quality of life among married men. Do you think it's skewed by the unmarriageable guys at the bottom of the barrel?

It's not just skewed by that. It's skewed by the fact that most people, when unhappy in marriage, will dissolve the marriage.

Not to mention, if we're comparing happy married couples to everybody else, everybody else includes divorcees.

Your entire argument is based on the notion that divorce is inevitable.

No my entire argument is based on the notion that getting the state involved in a private contract is unnecessary for happiness.

You can get married, and at best your marriage contract won't fuck you. Why would you want your best-case scenario to be "I didn't die?" rather than "I lived!"

When I see a discussion that sparks my interest, I upvote it, and comb through comments. A lot of the comments are extraneous or pointless, and they do tend to get buried at the bottom under a good real-talk post correcting everything (by an EC usually).

The outrage posts (which I unofficially try to limit to 1 on the home page at a time) are usually anger fests (how on earth does she get away with that??). You can avoid them if you're looking for tips on getting better.

I actually like getting a small shot in the arm to remind me the state of the gender wars. It's easy to forget the world isn't on your side when you have a LTR and it's going well.

The guys who will never help themselves, they don't make that much of a splash, since they aren't exactly posting many topics.

The 80/20 rule still applies, no matter where you go. Once you get big enough.

I think a lot of people enjoy going back because you can vent/discuss things without a filter. I'm not learning all that much from the sub at this point, but it's nice to be able to say "man, fuck that bitch" without worrying about my job.

[META](RPW purge... ouch!)

2 upvotes · 5 April 2016 · /r/MarriedRedPill

The minute we curb anger is the minute we've lost all meaning.

Everywhere men go, the common refrain is "stop being angry."

Anger is an appropriate response to injustice. And I won't call it a phase, though a bulk of the anger should vanish as you learn more about the red pill.

But it would be serving only the feminine imperative to try to tone down anger. Remember, who says anger is a bad thing?

The reason feminists are scared of anger is because it represents a lack of control they have over men.

[META](RPW purge... ouch!)

Standard SJW practice, really. Enter positions of influence (not power, influence) Bring in as many like minded as you can under guise of standards of conduct, policies etc, proceed to create subjective rules that can enforce groupthink

And then slowly modify the tone to something slightly more reasonable.

One of the reasons I prefer the anger and vitriol is because I use it to make sure we didn't slip.

Ah, sorry I think I misread, I understand you were referring to the old team.

one could make the argument that they were drawing said line by doing such.

Yes, they were. But when I tried to course correct and have them move that line a little bit back to the red, they didn't like it. They had a lot of ego invested in their marriage-only conversation and wouldn't tolerate any open discussion.

Now, you could say you're worried about where we'll draw the line as new mods, and that's fair to say. Right now we're calibrating to allow more discussion without it going totally off course. The good news is, I've instructed the mod team here and the new mods on which direction we want things to go, and they're rather good at keeping their own emotional investment in these strategies separate.

The best hard line we have is ensuring that if there's iffy content that skirts the line, the person contributing should be doing so in earnest to further women's goals not men's. As long as they are being earnest, a conversation can take place.

I've seen some serious dolts on asktrp think they can stroll over here and vomit up some "hard truths" they just read for the first time last week. We can usually sniff them out pretty quickly and get them back to asktrp where they belong.

Oh, yay! Return to the discussion of what constitutes alpha vs. beta qualities in men.

2 upvotes · 5 April 2016 · /r/RedPillWomen

On TRP we discuss having a healthy balance of both Alpha and Beta qualities. The idea being that if you're _____ looking for an LTR, women want to satisfy both mating strategies.

But I do want to divorce the dislike of Roosh with his desire to make a living.

I think he does truly believe in his worldview and what he says. I don't think he's being disingenuous.

I think it was hasty of him to create a divide between TRP and his upper echelon of neomasculinists, from both a brand perspective, as well as from a message perspective (this affects all men, right?).

But I don't think he's so terrible he deserves half the shit people here give him.

You're right that young men need positive role models. And maybe he helps, or maybe he doesn't. He certainly treats his purpose as more important than the people he purports to help. But, maybe society needs a radical guy like that to start adjusting views.

No doubt, he has brought a lot of people to the red pill, even if his views are a little wonky.

Everyone gets down every now and then. No one can be on top of their game all the time. Ensuring that she is strongly connected to you and your states ensures that when you're not on your game, not only will she not leave you, but she will be able to understand what you're feeling and be there to support you.

It would be nice to be able to relax, to feel comfort and security in your bond rather than feel like a source of comfort and security. I recommend, if you haven't, reading the side bar- specifically:

Women in Love

Men in Love

Of Love and War

An excerpt from the last one:

We want to relax. We want to be open and honest. We want to have a safe haven in which struggle has no place, where we gain strength and rest instead of having it pulled from us. We want to stop being on guard all the time, and have a chance to simply be with someone who can understand our basic humanity without begrudging it. To stop fighting, to stop playing the game, just for a while.

We want to, so badly.

If we do, we soon are no longer able to.

Your desire for such a bond is deep rooted in the fairy tale you've been taught can be human relationship.

Don't get me wrong, you can derive happiness and pleasure from a relationship. But that happiness and pleasure needs to be rooted in reality and what women and men truly bring to the table.

While the balance is in the process of tilting towards income equality, the truth remains that in families, what the man makes is ours and what the woman makes is hers.

when somebody says "I'm alpha" it instantly makes me think they're not.

Agreed. Show it, don't say it.

I say if he wants to sell his shirts, then so be it. But I wouldn't personally advertise TRP.

lying unnecessarily is not Machiavellian at all and it's much better to just be honest when you stand to lose nothing.

I find the easiest way to keep frame is to be brutally and unabashedly honest as much as possible, because it sets the expectations of those around you that you won't be tiptoeing around their feelings and won't be afraid of their reactions.

It seems as though someone's ego is being stepped on

No ego involved, the entire post was inspired by a post by tempest and it's encouraging to content creators when they're recognized for their work. My goal, as always, is to encourage positive quality content.

Everybody else here corrected you, but I'll add my two cents:

Hitting the wall doesn't mean she becomes a cat lady. Yes, they can "have it all" in the sense of alpha fucks and then after the wall, grab her beta. But remember that she isn't getting the tingles from the beta, and she might marry rich but she probably won't be marrying happy.

It's not a movement. I think making triggering stickers is funny. Most of the people are only here because we did something controversial and it made news somewhere else.

GLO is an agent of chaos, either you embrace him for that or you don't, but I'm not stupid enough to try to control him.

Will stickers be funny? Yes.

Will stickers bring more people and make it more difficult to moderate? Undoubtely, but we've gotten good at that.

Will stickers spread our message? Probably not, they're mostly just to piss people off.

Will stickers wake more men up? It might.

Will the eventual ensuing drama cause reddit to take a good look at us and consider shutting us down? It's a possibility. But I typically embrace chaos.

It's not a movement, do what you want with TRP. But I personally moderate this board specifically to help guys looking for it. You don't market it "wake up," but if you make feminists do something stupid and make people think, "Wait, that doesn't make sense," then I say fair game to you.

I don't condone outreach "programs," but I do condone anything that makes feminists angry so it's a toss up.

It is though right?

If you consider a bunch of 13 year old kids telling each other to "do it faggot" actual encouragement to do bad things...

4chan doesn't facilitate these things, it just happens that people that do these things go to 4chan.

This is really damn interesting. It's too bad it's really very paranoid sounding to investigate it, I'd love to see somebody do research on it.

Anger-phase coffeeshop owners anonymously discuss TRP concepts and brag about "conquests", get identified, kicking off a growing media firestorm about TRP/PUA/Manosphere.

They didn't sound angry to me. Don't play them off like they were just anger-phase red pillers to distance yourself.

They were normal guys talking about normal guy stuff.
